Board proposes tuition increase

Extra fees would pay for much-needed on-campus housing improvements

The dire condition of housing on campus is the qualifying condition for the SIU Board of Trustees to exceed the 3-percent cap on tuition, fees, and fixed costs. The condition is such that the current proposals call for a 4.5-percent increase for operating costs and an additional 3-percent increase for capital improvements for the fiscal year 2001.

For SIU, the need for operating costs and an additional 3-percent increase will pay for a 7.5-percent increase in housing costs, to $85.50 more for housing per academic year, in addition to $52 more for fees and $232 more for housing. The current proposals recommend that the on-campus residence halls be renovated. Sanders said that the proposals call for a 4.5-percent increase in housing costs. These are the conditions for the SIU Board of Trustees to exceed the 3-percent cap on tuition.

While the proposals do not guarantee student turnout, they do call for a positive response from the students he has spoken to. "They have been consistent in their communication of what they need to do," Sanders said. "But I think they will vote, because they are the ones who need to be on campus."

Student political groups

Several SIUC student groups are working hard to make sure that students vote. "Those people who haven’t voted, we encourage them to vote," Sanders said. "We have been successful in encouraging students to vote."

Charles Leging attends a campaign stall at Grindall Hall. Monday afternoon. "I’m hoping we are going to have the largest student turnout ever, but it’s hard to say."

We have the power to swing the elections

So it all comes down to this. One day. One final plea from the candidates. One vote. One mayor and two city council seats. And as with every election in Carbondale, SUC students have the ability to make an impact worthy of a badly hyped X-Files movie, but only if we all get to the polls. We can go on and on about spending an average of a right that people have fought and died for and how some constraining nations don't give their citizens a choice, but we've done that in the past.

As critical students with a somewhat pessimistic Generation X view of the political process, this is a reason just isn't enough motivation to seek out a polling place. We're too young and removed from the headline-making marches and protests of women and minorities to know the feeling associated with not having a right everyone else does. And now that every American citizen cannot even freely punch a ticket but is actively sought in its appeal to us to vote, only about half of us nationwide take the time to vote. This number falls even lower, around 33 percent for people in the college-attending age range of 18 to 24, according to 1996 U.S. Bureau of the Census numbers.

What's been lost in these totals reflecting voter apathy is a reason not to be sanguine. All the numbers tell us to vote, but that's what we do—day after day after day. Even to the point of thinking on election day to change, because if we don't vote, somebody else will. Well, there is a reason to vote here, and it is in this election today, and in every election the candidate, the person that is most pro-you, the voice that most represents your needs, is your vote.

But everyone seems to bury that fact in sentiments such as "I'm only one person, my vote won't make a difference either way." And people voice that school boards are the place where the people don't vote, and then we truly don't make a difference as entire age groups are underrepresented. And what's happening right now is the same thing.

Then the same people that don't vote complain about the "system" and how nothing ever changes and their quality of life is pathetic because politicians are scum. Well, if you fall into this cateyou then boo-boo — your unhappiness is your own fault because you're not doing anything to help change it.

That's what voting is all about. You either sup-port the current direction things around you are moving in or you don't. Voting isn't an inconve-nience added to our hectic daily lives, it's power. It's one of the few times the average person gets to shine in the political world. You become a politician for a day because you made a choice. You have the power to make or break their career. But voting isn't a vendetta against any politi-cian because they are just symbols of the issue. Some politicians can be measured by their charac-ter, others by what they promise to accomplish and that's why you have the power to make or break their career.

And it's not a vendetta against any politician because they are just symbols of the issue. Some politicians can be measured by their character, others by what they promise to accomplish and that's why you have the power to make or break their career. Budslick would fight for students' rights.

When I arrived in Carbondale two and a half years ago, this city was in the midst of political conflict with SIUC and, more pointedly, the student body. I remember thinking that I was stepping into a political affair.

The city, while having a long history of coal-related and rail-related business, was, by then, based almost solely on the economic impact of SIUC.

The fight was among groups that received city grants: the state and the city. One group, the people of the Carbondale community, were not welcome in a city that they had chosen for their undergraduate experience.

Budslick says "it's not true. Why was Carbondale in this viscous cycle of conflict and dissension rather than a cooperative and creative city?"

The city administration, while unable to effectively address issues of public safety, has also been powerless against student groups and businesses who have little stake in the city. Budslick says that "this has been one of Carbondale's biggest problems." He has turned the oppression of students and businesses into a political issue.

Budslick believes that "this city has the potential to turn itself around. We have turned the oppression of students and businesses into a political issue."

Budslick says that "we can turn this city around. We have the potential to make this city a place where people can live and work."

And it has.

Budslick has been fighting for the city and the university ever since he was elected to City Council. "I have a vision for this city. I want to make it a place where people can live and work."

Saluki Color Guard seeks to fill the shoes of two graduating seniors

Memorial Field Daily Egyptian

Tuesday, June 13, 1990 - 7

Tying scarves and white gowns, the Saluki Color Guard brings new members to the school's line, but at the end of the summer, the group's members will be in need of replacements.

The eight-month process is a long one for a job, with the problem of two graduating seniors. And this year, the group hopes to find new members.

The guard accompanies the Saluki Marching Band in performances during the pre-game and halftime shows of home football games. The goal is to fill out between two to three minutes based on the songs performed by the band.

According to Rebecca King, the caption of the group, experience is not necessary for anyone who is interested in becoming a member.

"You can really make the most of it, and you'll have a great experience," said King, a senior in computer science from Staunton. "You can teach others the information you've learned.

At least some help is needed to get through the job. The team was divided into three sections. The first set begins at 4 p.m., the second begins at 6 p.m., and the third finishes at 9 p.m.

The team will train new members. A review session will include all that the team has done during the past year.

"You learn from the mistakes we made, and you learn from the mistakes we've made," King added.

"Color guard has been a huge part of my life," she said. "I've always been involved, but this year has been a great year while we're doing it."

The Saluki Color Guard worked hard with the band to develop a tradition and a way to show their dedication to the fans and the band during the last game of the first game of the season, the 1990-91 season. The team hopes to get the band's support from the fans during the band's first game in the season, the 1990-91 season. Outstanding social worker receives recognition

It was very competitive this year, and we had to pick the one who is most deserving of the award.

-- Martin Tracy
School of Social Work

Social work is not a glamorous profession, but for Brian Brown, who works with students who have special needs at the Illinois Preparatory School in Carbondale, it is the only occupation he has. Apparently, official at the SIUC School of Social Work agrees with Brown, as he was named as the 1990-91 School of Social Work Outstanding Alumnus Award in March.

The award is given annually to an alumna who graduated at least 10 years ago and is making significant contributions in the field of social work.

Martin Tracy, director of the school of social work, said Brown has proven himself especially worthy to receive the award.

"It was very competitive this year, and we had to pick the one who is most deserving of the award," Tracy said. "Mr. Brown is chosen because his work in the social work profession has been outstanding and he deserves recognition for it."

Brown received a bachelor's degree in science and a master's degree in special work from SIUC in 1987 and is in the process of finishing his doctorate in educational psychology.

He began working at the Illinois Preparatory School in 1987 and 1994, became the associate director. As associate director, Brown is responsible for academic issues, board and student life.

Furthermore, Brown is very much involved in his work with students on emotional issues and social skills.

"The best part of my job is getting to work with students," Brown said. "The growth takes place over time, and we get to see remarkable turning points in their lives."

The school was established in 1993 to work with students who have special learning disabilities and attention deficit disorders, according to Brown.

"I wasn't certain the school would make it," Brown said. "It was a very nice thing to do, and I'm happy it's still here," Brown said. "I think we've learned a lot from mistakes and have become a better school in the past three years. I'm very pleased with the way things have been going and the people who are involved."

"We are able to offer students above and beyond what a typical special education class gives them," Bernklou said. "Here, students with learning disabilities receive one-on-one attention they just don't get at public schools."

Brown received his award and said he was very honored to be recognized by the SIUC School of Social Work.

"This was a very nice thing to do, and I'm happy with the way things have been going," Brown said. "It's good for me and the University because it shows that they have a special school that takes care of very good social workers every year.

In the future, Brown hopes there will be more recognition for the exceptional social work that takes place at the Illinois Preparatory School.

"If people begin to notice that we are good kids here who just need a little differently than others," Brown said. "As for me, I'm going to continue trying to accomplish everything I want to do."

Article plans 50th anniversary of United States

July 15, 2003

TUCSON, Ariz. — Two Tucson brothers landed in jail after they saw a young boy line up a golf cart owner's car with his driver's seat and then rode away.

The boys, ages 13 and 14, were arrested Friday afternoon by the University of Arizona police and held for a day in jail. One of the boys was later released on bond.

The police believe the boys may have been involved in a plot to rob the owners of the golf cart and steal their vehicle.

The boys were arrested under allegations of attempted armed robbery, attempted theft of a motor vehicle, and two counts of attempted armed robbery.

ELECTIONS

Amy Sleven

As she represents Amy Sleven in making her second run for the presidency after being defeated last year by current president Michael G. Groch, Sleven says the problems regarding funding for graduate assistants and additional instructor resources are crucial to her campaign.

Another concern is getting administrators to consider students' opinions and concerns, especially those regarding faculty and academic affairs.

Sleven says it is of concern to graduate students in the lack of high-level administrators in the Graduate School.

So, with an administration that still has two of the three vacancies, she wants to see the end of the summer, she wants more of the department chairs in the Graduate School.

Sleven also would like to implement a change in the SLE Board of Trustees policy to bring a more diverse representation to the board.

She also says that the new board of trustees would be more effective in the Graduate School.

Overall, it has been an increase in student turnout since the 1997 election that she says is of concern as the student body.

Vote

Hubertus said, "If we have the largest student turnout ever, we will probably have the largest student electors." He says that the College Republicans and College Democrats have considered maintaining presidential hopeful John B. Anderson's candidacy, but have also endorsed former candidate Carl Flowers and Corrine Mooney.

Overall, Carlton says there has been an increase in student turnout since the 1997 election that he says is of concern as the student body.

the best of the three candidates and that the faculty is strongly divided among the three candidates.

Ed Ford

Ford is seeking a way up from the current position in the Graduate School and is hoping to become a full professor in the future.

Ford said that he is not sure if he will continue with the job as he feels that it is important to be part of the SLE Board of Trustees.

Ford's advisor, Dr. John S. Anderson, is hopeful that Ford will continue with the job as he feels that it is important to be part of the SLE Board of Trustees.

Ford also said that he would like to work in the Graduate School, and that he feels that it is important to be part of the SLE Board of Trustees.

Building up for the future

Five freshmen and a returning sophomore put women’s tennis team right in the middle of conference championship race

Sarah Howard

The 1999 Saluki women’s tennis team may get promoted to the No. 1 Missouri Valley Conference power, given their remarkable season and arguably any other challenge from the teams in the next three years.

These opportunities are made possible by Judy Add’s long coaching career in her 25-year stay at SICU. Even with a few freshmen and a whole lot of the same team in the conference championship game just a few weeks ago.

But before the Salukis’ big day, they had been back at the 15-year mark when SICU had won the Missouri Valley Conference. As a victory the Saturday match produced the same result and made for the first start of a long list of opportunities for this young squad.

The Salukis followed the win with a 5-2 win over Missouri State University Sunday, finishing the weekend 2-0 and improving to 6-2 overall and 3-1 in the MVC.

"It was an extremely strong team," Add said about how they were over MVC. "We won five matches in total, and I definitely didn’t expect that." Freshmen Jasmine Fazio (6-1, 6-1), Erika Schlotter (6-1, 6-2), Tara Christian (6-4, 6-4) and sophomore Jennifer Osborne (62, 4) all earned singles wins for the Salukis.

Sunday, Fazio (6-1, 6-1, 8-6). Fazio (6-1, 6-2) and Osborne (6-1, 6-2) both earned doubles points to begin doubles instead of 3-5. All three teams scored 6-2 wins.

"I played very well in No. 1, and I had a very strong game," Fazio said. "I think it affected the way I played in singles. I’m very happy, though, because I played very well in doubles and I plan to compete in the conference."

"I don’t think we had the best weekend for the Salukis, winning all four of their matches and doubles matches. But we know that the next time they face other teams, it won’t be a piece of cake."

"In conference, I still have to beat them again, but we’ll give our best," Osborne said.

Southwest Missouri State ruins softball's perfect weekend

COTG CONOR
Daily Argus, Joliet, Illinois

The only thing that stopped the Salukis’ shortstop from being a perfect hitter was the Southwest Missouri State University pitcher Sara Capron.

ON THE ROAD

The Salukis went 2-0 on their road trip, but for a showdown against the Wichita State University

The Salukis entered the tournament as favorites, but the Salukis dominated the Big Eight Conference, finishing second overall.

A REACT

Southwest Missouri State

the Salukis ran into the tough luck of having Capron, last year’s Wichita State pitcher, in the starting lineup. The Salukis Diameter Tournament was April 24-27 in Wichita State.

That’s great,” said senior Reid Nelson, who finished third in the 100-meter dash last week, “we’re better than we were in our conference,”

Ball State University took home the title with a final score of 7-3. The Salukis, who finished third overall, only Southwest Missouri State University (592) shot better than the Salukis’ two-round total of 603.

The MVC Tournament is April 24-27 in Wichita State.

Men’s tennis team will record its first winning season in 11 years following a 2-1 weekend at home

By PAUL VILDEKNE

SIUC men’s tennis coach Brad Illner called it.

Not only were his predictions about this weekend correct, he provided accurate descriptions before the weekend even started.

Illner anticipated the University of Northern Iowa match Friday would be the most difficult — it was.

The SIUCs won the match 6-1. Illner said Saturday’s match with Drake University would be decided during the final match — it was. Drake’s Ogie Keles defeated sophomore Kenny Hiltz in the Bulldogs’ 4-3 win.

“I knew Kenny feels lost at it for the team because he was the last one on the court,” Illner said. “It’s hard for him to take all the blame for losing for the team. We lost four of the six singles, so he wasn’t the only guy that lost his match.”

Illner expected the same type of match from Creighton University. He was right.

The Bluejays No. 2 player and a similar problem for their No. 3 players left them helpless. The Bluejays defeated the Bluejays 6-1.

The final tally: Illner’s predictions — 2-0. The Bluejays — the same for the weekend, guaranteeing SIUC (11-7, 4-3) in first winning season in 11 years.

Only three regular season matches remain.

“That’s something. I’m really proud of — I don’t know what else to say,” Illner said. “I am in here for the first year and we’ve won six matches the whole year. The first year here was a long, hard road, and now I can smile and enjoy it a little bit.”

Sophomore Dave Santa Cruz has given Illner 15 reasons to smile this season.

Santa Cruz’s 6-0, 6-4 victory over Creighton’s Tim Ragain is his ninth consecutive win and his 12th in his last 13 matches to give Illner a 15-5 season record. Santa Cruz, who finished second in singles and third in doubles, is not surprised by his success.

“The confidence is already there because I’ve been playing international tournaments before,” Santa Cruz said. “It’s not really hard for me to adjust playing college tennis.”

The Bluejays close out the regular season next weekend on the road against Indiana State University Friday and Illinois State University and Bradley University Saturday.

“If I would give myself some credit, my predictions were pretty good,” Illner said.

“I’ve been saying all year that we want to be a top-four seed in the tournament. Well here it is, next weekend is our last weekend of the regular season, and if we can beat Illinois State, we should earn that No. 4 seed.”
