USG candidate resigns from SRA position

Presidential candidate, Bill Archer, plans to keep clean campaign

KAREN BLATTER GOVERNMENT EDITOR

Undergraduate Student Government presidential candidate Bill Archer resigned from his student resident assistant position for what he calls a rumor about his possible violation of the student conduct code.

Archer met with Coordinator of Resident Life at Thompson Point Teri Schaefer and Felts Hall head resident Kefren Greenstreet on Tuesday night about the status of his position. He said at that time he was given the option to either be fired or resign from his position in University Housing.

Archer, Felts Hall first floor SRA, said a circulating rumor that he was "arrested or busted for smoking marijuana in his dorm room" had no truth, and that the rumor caused Housing officials to offer him the ultimatum.

Archer said he has does not use marijuana, and University Police Lt. Todd Sigler said no criminal charges against Archer were reported concerning the alleged incident. Some situations in Housing are handled internally, however, and may be referred to Student Judicial Affairs for review.

He said Schaefer and Greenstreet came to the decision because of the bad image he would give to University Housing.

"Because I am such a figure on campus and this rumor was bringing too much bad P.R. to Housing," Archer said.

Bender drops out of vice chancellor race

Two "viable" candidates left for Institutional Advancement

BRUNN SCOTT DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

One of the three candidates for vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement withdrew from the race this week, according to interim Chancellor John Jackson.

Jackson said Bud Bender, associate vice president for development at Western Michigan University-Kalamazoo, withdrew from the race because of time constraints in his career.

Bender did not return phone calls left at his office and home Wednesday.

"As far as I know, it wasn't a good time and this job wasn't a fit for him and his career right now," Jackson said. "But we do have two viable candidates left."

The other two candidates are Ronda Johnson, vice chancellor

searching for LEADERSHIP

for Institutional Advancement at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, and Rickey McCurry, associate vice chancellor for Development and Alumni Affairs at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

Johnson would bring more than 22 years of fundraising experience with her and McCurry successfully completed a $175 million campaign with more than $235 million in gifts and pledges.

Bender directed three mini-campaigns at the university and launched a $125 million capital campaign.

University leaders have voiced informal votes of confidence in all three candidates so far and their positive feedback may have not been denied by Bender's withdrawal.

GPSC discusses organizing a union for graduate assistants

Council wants student opinions before making a decision

ANNE MARIE TAVELLA DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Graduate and Professional Student Council will start speaking with graduate assistants about the possibility of unionization of graduate assistants at SIUC.

Because of frustration with what it sees as a lack of concern from the administration for graduate assistants, GPSC voted Tuesday to speak with its constituents to see if there is a consensus for or against unionization.

If the majority of graduate assistants support unionization, the GPSC plans to form a committee to look into the possibility of unionizing. Amy Sileven, a representative from the English Department and a member of the Graduate Council, said the committee would look into the benefits and ramifications of unionizing and present the information to the graduate student body.

During the meeting representatives decided the committee would research the possibility of unionizing, but GPSC has no plans to take action to begin a union at SIUC.

"It would mostly be informational at this stage," Sileven said.

Sileven said graduate students worked for several years to convince the administration and the Board of Trustees that graduate student ideas should be taken seriously and respected.

"Repeated refusals in that area, I think, have really sparked graduate student concerns," Sileven said.

On April 3, a regional director for the National Labor Relations Board ruled that graduate research and teaching assistants have the right to unionize. The ruling,

SIUC paving its way into accessibility

The Americans with Disabilities Act will celebrate 10 years of providing opportunities to capable people this July, and SIUC officials have chosen a fitting way to embark on another decade of accessibility.

The sidewalks throughout campus reflect their age and their lost war against the weight of University and service vehicles. In the coming months, the worst of the cracked and eroded steps will receive a $640,000 makeover. As the first step in a five-part plan, the sidewalk renovations keep SIUC's historic legacy of disability accommodations alive.

By the time the ADA passed in 1990, or even its predecessor, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, SIUC had programs and resources in place to accommodate disabled students and faculty. Now that the ADA requires that "reasonable accommodations" be made by the University, Disabled Support Services and the vice chancellor for Student Affairs have continued to use technology and creativity to set an example for other institutions.

In addition to the construction to be undertaken this summer, the purchase of an "open-book system" this semester allows students unable to read printed text a convenient avenue to study for their classes. The value of these efforts to our University cannot be diminished. The responsive manner in which DSS performs day-to-day operations reflect positively of the whole University, both as an example to other segments of SIUC and a visible component to draw in future students and faculty.

But Kathleen Plesko, director of DSS, told the DAILY EGYPTIAN her efforts to continually improve accommodations for disabled students could hardly be characterized as a struggle. She said the administration has been remarkably proactive in making sure SIUC facilities are equipped for students of all kinds. Most disabled adults can confirm, it sometimes takes the threat of a lawsuit to persuade institutions and workplaces to make even obvious accommodations.

We wait for the day every single program and department at SIUC is thought of in this way. In the mean time, we must give credit where it's due. Congratulations, DSS and SIUC, for a smoother path for all of us.

Star Wars action figures teach meaning of friendship

I once heard that a good salesman could "sell an ice machine to an Eskimo." If that's true, hand me a Popsicle.

Just like every other George Lucas fan in the galaxy, I waited anxiously last May for the arrival of "Star Wars: Episode I" in theaters. After some buddies camped outside 17 hours to get our tickets to the midnight premiere, we clad ourselves in full costume and headed for the cinema. Giddy with fantastic expectations of the long-awaited movie, we were soon disappointed by the film's glaring loopholes. In the week that followed, we watched the movie seven more times.

Every weekend we trekked across Southern Illinois, in search of all of the toys and action figures we still needed to complete our collection. One by one, the figurines lined my wall, each still wrapped neatly in its bubble package to preserve the value. All summer we hung out at the theater, always discussing more reasons the film was inferior to the original trilogy. So why the heck were we still blowing all of our cash on this stuff? Because we had to. It was our legacy. Every Jedi knows he must finish what he begins. And we had all begun our obsession with the first trilogy. It didn't matter if "Episode II" was going to star Scott Bakula as Anakin Skywalker, we all knew we would have to accept it and buy his poseable: doll and matching light saber.

Eventually, the movie left theaters. But still the toys kept coming. As we emptied our piggy banks, we prayed to Lucas to stop introducing new action figures. None of us could afford it, but we all found ourselves foregoing meals, gasoline and other expensive luxuries to feed our addictions. Finally, our prayers were answered. With time, the stores' surplus toys ended up on clearance racks. At last, we had caught up! We had conquered our addiction!

Until this Tuesday, when "Episode II" hit store shelves. Along with every other sucker in Carbondale, I stood in line to possess my very own copy on VHS. I popped it into my VCR, grinning as the opening theme music sounded.

Suddenly, that same nostalgic feeling hit me — I remembered how much fun we had at the theaters last summer. As the movie began, however, I looked up at my wall of plastic accessories and remembered how broke I was last summer, too. Still, my friends and I had spent so much time together, and had so much fun, because of that movie.

As I browsed Wal-Mart's aisles later that evening during a grocery run, I pushed the cart toward the ominous toy department. "Just a look," I said to myself as I slowly neared the Star Wars section, "to see if they've got anything new." Right before I reached the toys, however, I noticed the movie playing on a nearby television display. I overheard Qui-Gon Jinn's voice as he taught young Anakin the ways of the force. "Always remember," he said, "Your focus determines your reality."

Looking at the rows of action figures in front of me, it suddenly made sense. We hadn't had all that fun because of the movie or the toys. We were focusing on spending time with each other. I turned on my heel and walked out of the store with a smile. I realized I didn't need a bunch of plastic to make me happy. I already had everything I needed — friendship. And that's even better. Unlike those toys, the more we take our friendship out of the package and use it, the more valuable it gets.

Cameras in residence halls need to be top priority

DEAR EDITOR:

Being a resident and a student resident assistant of Nae Smith Hall, I am constantly frustrated at the fire alarms that seem to be in perpetual motion.

I know it is my job to help residents get out the building as quickly as possible just in case there is a real fire, but if there was a real fire that could possibly kill me, there is no way I would be checking 25 other rooms.

So I said all that to say this: I pray that housing puts the issue of cameras near fire alarms that students or visitors pull for a joke or any other irrelevant purpose at the top of their agenda. I don't think this is too much to ask. Getting up at 3 a.m. when I hear that awful sound, only to have a class five hours later, is something myself and all the residents and staff in Nae Smith can do without. Get the cameras.

Easter is a good time for student to have a break

DEAR EDITOR:

I am writing about the fact that we do not get any time off for the Easter holiday. I think that this is wrong. We get time off for practically every other major holiday. I think that we should get the Easter holiday off, too. It is a very important holiday to my family and to many of the families of the people that I have talked to. Some are even missing classes to be able to go home for the holiday.

Would it not make more sense to let us out for several days before Easter so that we can go home and be with our family for the holiday? It would also cut down on the amount of classes that are missed by students unnecessarily. Not only that — it would allow us students to have a very welcome, short break right before finals. I know what you are saying, that we had spring break not too long ago. The thing is, many people do not go home to their families at that time. It is used more for vacationing than anything else. So why not provide a break so that people can go home and relax that also surrounds a major holiday.

USG Candidates should make school come first

DEAR EDITOR:

I would like to comment on the grade point average issue that is concerning the eligibility of USG-top executives posts. Many candidates have had trouble meeting the minimum GPA requirement in the past. Students' priority in college is education and everything else comes second. If the candidates are struggling with their grades, they should concentrate on their studies first and run for USG offices when their GPA has improved. I also do not want incompetent candidates to represent the entire student communities. They have to be intelligent and not just barely meet the minimum GPA requirement. A GPA of 2.25 is almost a D average. I would suggest all the candidates to reconsider their priorities.

The Shawnee Green petitions to put Ralph Nader on the ballot

Shawnee Green Party hopes to gain support

JASON COKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Shawnee Green Party had a petition drive to put consumer advocate Ralph Nader on the Illinois ballot for the U.S. presidency.

More than a dozen people showed up Tuesday night at the Interfaith Center, 913 S. Illinois Ave., to sponsor an effort for a petition drive in Southern Illinois.

The goal is to acquire 5,000 signatures in Southern Illinois by June 12 and 25,000 names from throughout the state must be collected to put Nader on the ballot.

Rick Whitney, a member of the executive committee of the Shawnee Green Party, said the petition drive and the subsequent campaign will raise awareness for health and safety issues.

A petition effort will be made throughout Jackson and Williamson counties, Whitney said. Because April 22 is Earth Day, he said the Shawnee Green Party should be able to draw people to its cause to have a friendlier economy more in tune with the environment.

He is hoping Nader, or his vice-presidential candidate, environmental activist Winona LaDuke of Minnesota, will make an appearance in Carbondale in the near future. In 1996, Nader was an unofficial candidate for the presidency and spent only $5,000 on his campaign, yet received more than 700,000 votes in the general election nationwide.

Whitney said if Nader's success in 1996 is any indication, the 2000 election year could show a significant turnout for Nader.

"Nader is likely to surprise a lot of people," Whitney said.

According to a Zogby poll, a national poll associated with Reuters, Nader will have little chance for victory, but will likely beat Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan in the general election.

Nader is a consumer advocate, lawyer and author from Connecticut. His 1965 book, "Unsafe at Any Speed," was a national bestseller and alerted Americans to health, safety and environmental issues as they relate to the economy.

Mary O'Hara, SIUC graduate and sociology professor at John A. Logan Community College, first became interested in Nader many years ago and was involved in raising awareness about many consumer topics, such as the rising cost of medicine.

She said that environmental activism is a rising concern among young people.

"I think there's a lot of hunger for things like this," O'Hara said.

"I am not disappointed at all," Goldman said. "I think we had a really positive experience on campus interviewing the candidates."

"We still have two good candidates. But it's [Jackson's] choice."

Samuel Goldman, chairman of the search committee, said he has no plans to bring another candidate into the pool.

Goldman said Bender's withdrawal has not negatively affected the search process because all three candidates were suited for the job.

"As far as I know, we are going to keep on going with the search."

The vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement position is responsible for fund-raising, private funding, public relations and dealing with the SIUC Alumni Association.

After Jackson analyzes feedback from those who interviewed the three candidates, he will forward his recommendation to SIU interim President Frank Horton. Horton will then forward the recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

As far as I know, it wasn't a good time and this job wasn't a fit for him and his career right now. But we do have two viable candidates left.

Sharing problems and benefits of 'shared governance'

National education journal prompts today's discussion; former Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger to speak

BYRYN SCOTT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Distinguished scholars from the "Thought in Action" editorial board will join SIUC faculty members for an open discussion on shared governance in higher education at 2 p.m. today in the Student Center's Ohio Room.

The "Thought in Action," a National Education Association journal, board is having its annual university-visit meeting at SIUC today, Friday and Saturday.

Each year, the board meets on the campus of one of its member's institution to discuss issues concerning higher education and chooses articles for its biannual publication. Walter Jaehrig, journalism professor, is a member.

Jaehrig and Kay Carr, Faculty Association president, are panel members along with the editorial board members from other universities and colleges across the nation.

Former Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger will also be a featured speaker.

Jaehrig said Argersinger was asked to join the forum because she had experienced problems in shared governance among faculty members when she was chancellor. Shared governance refers to a process in which governmental processes are shared among all official representatives.

Argersinger will speak about the role of shared governance in academic communities and the recent challenges involved. She will conclude with reasoning for why shared governance is the best governing process for the University.

Jaehrig agreed that shared governance has not been at its best recently at various universities in the nation.

"What we are finding is that [shared governance among faculty and administration] is a topic of some controversy on many campuses, not just SIU's," Jaehrig said.

Jaehrig said information from the forum discussion may highly benefit University leaders.

"I'm not sure anything great is going to come out of this [except] open discussion with people from other universities and states," he said.

Online courses help librarians keep up with technology

Program sponsored by top research libraries in U.S. and Canada offers three more online courses this summer

WILLIAM ALONSO
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The office of Instructional Support Services is a place where librarians from across North America can continue their education in an ever-changing technological world.

Carolyn Snyder, dean of Library Affairs and a member of the Association of Research Libraries leadership, and management, has combined the efforts of the association with the resources of the ISS to develop distance learning, or the Online Lyceum.

The program offered four online courses this semester and will offer another three in the summer. The association is made up of the top research libraries in the United States and Canada.

Snyder, who will be retiring July 1, said it became apparent to her there was an organization within Morris Library that could do exactly what the association wanted.

"It was an opportunity for Southern Illinois University to contribute at a national level and in an area where we had real expertise and excellence in staff," Snyder said.

Susan Logue, Morris Library's director of ISS, is project manager and oversees the development team that creates the web technology. Logue said Snyder championed establishing the Lyceum at SIUC.

"She promoted us as an organization that could develop the technology," Logue said.

The association's efforts behind the Online Lyceum are to better prepare the library faculty for a diverse society.

"Libraries are changing," Snyder said. "We need to continue to help the staff in our libraries by updating their knowledge and updating their skills."

Of the 122 libraries within the association, only SIUC provides online courses to its members and others. In a world where the electronic global village has changed the way we live with on-line shopping and e-mail, Logue said education should be rearranged to match our changing lifestyles.

"The global electronic village has influenced the way we live. We need to find ways to provide education in times and manners that fit our lifestyles. The way we think and do business has changed and the way we provide education has to change," Logue said.

Campus-wide renovations get six million dollars

Changes will improve accessibility and aesthetics of SIUC

JENNIFER WIG

There's no doubt it is needed. Most of those spots will be repaired. They're hitting a lot of major and minor areas.

BRIAN GLASSER

SIUC will be getting a facelift this summer as more than $6 million is spent renovating buildings and sidewalks on campus.

SIUC will be spending about $650,000 of the money to repair more than 80,000 square feet of campus sidewalks. The rest of the funds are allotted to fix ramps and add automatic doors to several buildings on campus.

The repairs, which will begin at the end of May or early June, are part of an improvement project organized by Glenn Boshard, vice chancellor for Administration.

The project, aimed at updating SIUC's facilities to make them more compliant with the Americans with Disabilities Act, is funded by the Capitol Development Board, a state agency that oversees construction on college campuses.

Phil Gatton, SIUC's supervising architect and engineer, estimates the sidewalk repairs will be completed by the end of August and the building repairs in September.

The sidewalk repairs will be a massive project as the sidewalk is dug out and fully replaced in some areas, now marked with orange paint. The new sidewalks will use five inches of concrete to prevent more damage caused by SIUC's service vehicles. A regular sidewalk uses between three and four inches of concrete, a freeway uses eight.

"I'm trying to make this happen as quickly as possible," Gatton said, concerned about accessibility while the work is being completed. "Accessible routes—we've still got to provide them. People still have to get to their classes."

So far, the campus has updated most restrooms and doors to be compliant with ADA regulations. Phase five of the project, which will occur this winter, will change campus signs to add Braille for the blind.

Kathleen Plesko, director of Disability Support Services, said although these changes are only part of the $26 million needed to completely create an ADA-compliant facility at SIUC, these changes are the most important.

"They'll be substantial improvements by fall, but it's ongoing—it's not like we can say we're done," Plesko said.

Because the funds are limited, a committee, including Gatton, Plesko, Seymour Bryson, associate chancellor for diversity and ADA compliance officer, and students with disabilities, was assembled for feedback.

"We try to recognize everybody's needs as much as possible but still spend the money prudently," Gatton said. "It's basically taking a look at priorities."

Bruce Glasser, special populations representative for Undergraduate Student Government, said she has flipped her wheelchair in certain areas on campus. "There's no doubt it is needed," Glasser said. "Most of those spots will be repaired. They're hitting a lot of the major and minor areas."

Thompson Woods is one area that will not be renovated. Because of the great expense, that project will take years to reach the drawing board. Gatton said for this phase they are focusing solely on building accessibility and while the woods may be a shorter route, it is inconceivable at this time.

"We hope to receive supplemental funding to continue to deal with these deficiencies," Gatton said. "[The construction is] a win-win thing. It's important for the University for access reasons and appearance."

"A Table Before Me."

In this musical drama, Stevens conveys the terror her mother's family experienced during the Nazi takeover in Austria. Letters from the Secret Police to her grandfather come to life in chilling vocalizations. To her own accompaniment of period piano music, including excerpts from Janacek, Schonberg, and even cabaret riffs, Stevens enacts the roles of Nazi officials and of her increasingly desperate grandfather as he struggles to contend with crippling taxes, legal restrictions, and violence against Viennese Jewry.

SIUC medical students are ...

Learning by doing

Simulated patients help future doctors learn by examining cases

ANDREA DONALDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Imagine being a medical student. You walk into a small cubicle office. To your left is an examining bed. To the right is a sink, drawers and cabinets. It is your typical doctor's office.

Straight ahead is a patient. You have no idea what the problem is. It could be cardiovascular, gastrointestinal, reproductive, neurological or any other problem dealing with a major organ system.

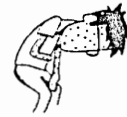

This scenario is one that medical students in the SIUC School of Medicine Problem Based Learning program are faced with numerous times throughout their years of study. It is referred to as the Standardized Patient Program.

The program

The SIUC program was developed by Howard S. Barrows, a neurologist now retired from the SIUC medical school faculty. It began in Springfield in the late 1970s as a program to help develop students' skills in diagnosis and bedside manner. The program expanded 10 years ago to be taught to first-year medical students at SIUC.

It works by hiring people from the community and University to act as patients. The patients are given instructions on how to display the symptoms of a particular case. They then act out these symptoms in an examining room for a medical student to evaluate. Patients are paid $12 an hour and generally work once or twice a year.

Gus Bode

Gus says:
It's acting.

"We pick people for specific cases based on interest, natural gift of acting and availability," said Linda Morrison, director of the Standardized Patient Program in Springfield.

Morrison has been training standardized patients in Springfield since 1988. She also trained Russ Wright, the coordinator of clinical medicine in Carbondale, to run the program here.

The Carbondale program has a pool of about 65 men and women ranging from 18 years old to 78 years old.

"Unit coordinators call me for patients with certain characteristics [age, gender] to act out certain things," Wright said. "We are constantly recruiting new simulated patients."

The patients

Recruited six years ago by word of mouth, Kris Wessel, an SIUC graduate student has enjoyed being a patient. She typically participates two to five times a year.

"It's a nice combo of things for me," Wessel said. "I enjoy teaching. I like all the medical stuff and it became the spring board for my thesis for my masters."

Wessel has played many roles. In each case, she has been given a written case study or videos to train her on what symptoms to act out. In some cases she has to show pain, different breathing rates, postures and even bruises. Some cases take more training than others, Wessel said.

"Part of being a [simulated patient] is being able to present yourself as another person," Wessel said.

After the examination, the simulated patient gives the medical students feedback on questioning and possible changes in procedure.

The medical students

In Carbondale, there are 36 students in the Problem Based Learning program. They are divided into six groups of six students to study each unit. Students encounter patients on computer programs, in book cases, in the field with physician mentors and through the Standardized Patient Program.

Amanda Mulch, a first-year medical student from Quincy, explained that the PBL program is self-directed learning. It helps people learn how to use both paper and human resources.

"I was lost in the first unit, but now I'm pretty confident with it," Mulch said. "I know what resources to use and which ones are."

During the unit studies, the group examines patients together, taking turns asking questions. At the end of each unit, students are

For individual assessment, the student does a half hour of examining, which is viewed by a physician through a mirror window. At the end of the half hour, the physician joins the student and patient in the room to evaluate the student.

This kind of curriculum helps student develop confidence with patients, Mulch said.

"I love it," Mulch said about the program. "It is an experience that most first-year students don't get. It is as close to a real setting as we can get in school."

Wright said there are five goals of the Standardized Patient Program. It develops students' physician skills, techniques in taking medical history and skills to build patient relationships. The program also helps build students' ability to write what is learned about a patient and present the information orally.

"Our patients learn by doing. And with this program, they learn in a controlled, safe setting," Wright said.

Diversity from a personal perspective

Discussion group tackles a big issue in small numbers

DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A small attendance did not stop the participants of Tuesday's race discussion at Lawson Hall from openly sharing their views on diversity at SIUC.

SIUC's third Campus Dialogue on Race is a project started by professor Robbie Lieberman and Jennifer Willis-Rivera to get the University community talking about race issues on campus.

Previous discussions have dealt with racial tensions at SIUC, and how to build bridges among different groups. Organizers wanted to focus on diversity this time around because of the University's multicultural student body.

The atmosphere at Lawson Hall also helped provide a more intimate setting for the group, which included students, faculty and community residents.

"They were more open and honest than anything we've heard before," said Lieberman.

A Campus Dialogue on Race began as one of President Clinton's race initiatives to promote racial awareness on college campuses in 1997. The organized race discussion groups have continued at SIUC with Lieberman and Willis-Rivera spearheading the effort. SIUC had the first race dialogue last October, followed by one in November.

The tone of Tuesday's discussion was less confrontational than in past events. Participants chose to share personal observations on diversity, rather than debating the topic.

"I really feel that everybody had a sense of where we are going, and what needs to be done," said Scott Miller, a senior in speech communication from Pittsburg, Kan., who has attended all three campus dialogues on race.

Miller grew up in a small town and expressed the difficulty of coming to a University setting with so many people from different backgrounds. He agreed that a smaller group made the talk more beneficial, and said more dialogue like this is needed on campus.

"I think people are starting to realize that there are problems, and that action needs to be taken, but a lot of people don't know how. I think something like this gives people a better idea of what needs to be done," Miller said.

Hugh Muldoon, director of University Christian Ministries, was moved by the level of participation. Muldoon thinks people are slowly beginning to break down the barriers of fear when it comes to talking about race issues.

"The point that kept coming up was, 'What should we do?' Well, this is what we should do," said Muldoon, in terms of opening up the lines of communication. "The people here were listening, and that's the first step. People here were empowered to go out and do more."

An additional Campus Dialogue on Race was planned for the spring, but Willis-Rivera, a professor of speech communication, and Lieberman, a professor of history, could not commit the extra time to organize it. Only about two dozen people showed up Tuesday, but most in attendance agreed the discussion was the best of the three.

"I felt like it's the first time that we've actually had any really concrete dialogue," said Tricia James, a senior in social work from Chicago, and president of SIUC's Anti-Racist Action. "We got a lot of problem solving going on, and a lot of talk. That's really important."

One of the themes throughout was the need to continue the discussion outside of events such as this. One possible idea that may spawn from the race discussions is a Campus Unity Day.

Willis-Rivera said the event could incorporate all of the international student groups, in addition to other campus organizations, but the idea is only in the beginning stage. Willis-Rivera said she is committed to doing whatever she can to get SIUC talking.

"This is my way of giving back," she said. "This is a moral obligation to my children, my husband and my community."

The link to fighting sexual assault

Residence Hall Association is selling links for sexual abuse

CODELL RODRIGUEZ
 DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Chrissie Clow may not be able to forget the trauma she experienced a year ago, but she is able to do something to raise awareness about sexual assault.

As a part of Sexual Assault Awareness Month, Clow and the Residence Hall Association are selling paper links — small strips of paper glued together to form a chain — for 10 cents each. All of the money made will go the Carbondale Womens' Center. After they are sold, the links will be joined together at the housing honors banquet at 12:30 p.m. Sunday in Grinnel Cafeteria.

Clow, a junior in clothing and textile from Oakwood, is a representative of the Residence Hall Association. She got the idea for the links after she did a similar project at her high school to raise money for the YWCA.

The money will be donated to the Womens' Center because of its role in the fight against sexual assault. The center offers a rape crisis hot-line and provides shelter for battered women. Clow said sexual assault is something people should be aware of and residents should have the information they need to prevent it.

"It hits very close to home with me," Clow said. "And I feel people should be aware."

It has been 16 months since Clow was assaulted. In a stronger attempt to inform students about sexual assault, she addressed a group in the basement of Bowyer Hall Tuesday night.

Clow spoke about the incident and how she and her friends and family dealt with it. She attributed some of the blame on the fact that when she moved to Carbondale, she began drinking and going to parties more as well as becoming more open with guys. She said this led to her assault.

"Rape is like death," Clow said. "Except your friend doesn't die, a piece of yourself does."

UNION

limited to private universities in the New York region, is the first to allow graduate employees at private universities to unionize. Public universities are subject to state labor laws.

Graduate students at public universities in many states, including California, Oregon and Massachusetts, have established graduate assistant unions. In Illinois, the state labor board has ruled against recognizing negotiating units comprised of students. The Illinois Court of Appeals is evaluating the labor board's decision.

Lack of recognition proved to be a problem for the Graduate Employees Origination at the University of Illinois. The student union has been attempting to be recognized by the university for the past eight years. Although the group received support from graduate and undergraduate students, and most recently the History Department, the administration had not recognized the GEO as a collective bargaining unit.

Silveen said the GEO has made important progress, despite the lack of acknowledgment from the administration. If a committee is formed, the GEO will be a source of valuable information, she said.

Schaefer could not confirm or deny Archer's resignation or any incidents that might have occurred in the residence halls that involved Archer.

Steve Kirk, assistant director of resident life, also could not speak about the situation because of the student's right to privacy. Kirk said if an SRA is found in violation of the Student Conduct Code, the student would be asked to leave the position because of loss of trust and the aspect of enforcing rules the student broke.

Kirk said University Housing would investigate rumors, but would not fire or ask an SRA to resign if there was no proof of the rumor.

"We are not going to let someone go because of a rumor, but we would look into it," he said.

Archer said he is not aware of a Housing investigation into the rumor or a Student Judicial Affairs report being filed. Archer said he would take a drug test to disprove the rumors, but Housing did not want him to take part in a test. He added that the rumor was created to ruin his campaign for USG elections.

"I hope whoever started this rumor is satisfied," he said. "They haven't hurt USG, I just hope they are satisfied."

Archer said he found out about the rumor by noon on Monday, but will still campaign for president without mud-slinging. He has to be out of his resident hall by Saturday and said that he will live at his home in De Soto.

According to USG President Sean Henry, the only way one of the three presidential candidates could be disqualified at this point would be if they were put on probation by Student Judicial Affairs.

Archer said before this allegation he had a good working relationship with both Schaefer and Greenstreet and looked forward to doing more work as an SRA.

LINKS

* LINKS WILL BE AVAILABLE THROUGHOUT THE MONTH OF APRIL AND CAN BE PURCHASED FROM THE THOMPSON POINT EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, EAST SIDE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL AND RESIDENCE HALL ASSOCIATION OFFICE IN GRINNEL HALL.

At the presentation, Clow and Amanda Emmerich gave information on how to avoid sexual assault and how to deal with it if it happens. Emmerich said one in three women will be sexually assaulted and one in five males will be sexually abused. She said the majority of women who are sexually assaulted are college freshmen and will be assaulted before fall break.

Afterwards, Clow addressed questions from those attending and gave everyone a chance to buy links as well as pick up pamphlets with information about sexual assault. Clow said she has become stronger after the assault but added that being stronger does not make dealing with the past any easier.

"This rape is the hardest thing I've had to overcome," Clow said. "I hope I can someday."

"We're going to gather as much information as we can about the University of Illinois affiliate and learn about their approach," Silveen said.

At the meeting, James Staros, a representative from history, presented a resolution from the History Graduate Student Association in support of the GPSC looking into unionization at SIUC. Staros said the resolution came from many discussions concerning unionization and its need on campus.

"When the administration seems to be less than responsive time after time, the only way you can do it is to have some kind of collective action," Staros said.

CLEMSON, S.C.

The idea of Clemson' on the mind of its president

With a "combination of joy and humility," James F. Barker, Class of 1970, accepted the job as Clemson University's 14th president and praised what he called "the idea of Clemson."

"Clemson is at its very core an idea," Barker said before more than 2,000 onlookers last week, "a wonderful, bold, noble, powerful idea that has transcended time, war, devastation, loss and tragedy." It sprang, he said, from the loss of founder Thomas Green Clemson.

After the deaths of his two children,

Clemson established the university, proclaiming that it should be a "high seminary of learning" that would prepare both farmers and thinkers.

Barker accepted a copy of Clemson's will as his job description, and accepted the legislative act accepting the terms of the will as his covenant with the people of South Carolina.

"If we unite around the idea of Clemson," he said, "we have a future beyond our highest expectations."

Barker's most immediate "work" was shaking the hands of well-wishers gathered for tea and light refreshments on Bowman Field, across from the outdoor amphitheater in which the inauguration took place. He and his wife, Marsha, laughed and hugged people in line with Barker often addressing students by name.

"If he doesn't know you, he talks to you as well (as those he does know)," said Christine Smith, a junior from Deltona, Fla. "It's kind of hard to know 17,000 people."

Friday's ceremony took place in the green bowl of the amphitheater, in a light breeze and surrounded by budding trees and blooming azaleas.

It has only one hitch: Barker couldn't zip up his purple robe, though he struggled with it for several minutes, laughing to himself.

Later he said in jest that he'd done it on purpose — that things had been "getting too formal" and he needed to lighten up the proceedings.

That, said student body president Wil Brasington, is something Barker might be quite adept at doing since he has done everything from run road races to stay overnight in a student dorm to tear down the walls separating students and faculty from the president.

"I could not be more thrilled for the students or for the university," said Brasington, a senior from Greenville. "He is everywhere all the time. He's a visible individual on campus."

Barker can't know everyone, of course, Brasington said "but if anybody can do it, he can do it." Until he became president, Barker had been dean of the College of Architecture, Arts and Humanities.

Temple to name Dawn Staley coach

MIKE KEHN
KNIGHT-RIDDEN TRIBUNE

PHILADELPHIA — Former Dobbins Tech standout Dawn Staley is about to become the Temple women's basketball coach, sources familiar with the situation indicated. An announcement could come Wednesday afternoon.

Athletic director Dave O'Brien would not comment when reached Tuesday night. But those sources confirm Staley is scheduled to be on campus this morning to meet with university officials. If a deal can be worked out, a news conference could be held late this afternoon in the Liacouras Center.

Staley would replace Kristen

Foley, who resigned after five seasons in which she posted a 45-93 record.

Staley, who turns 30 next month, is a member of the WNBA's Charlotte Sting. She has another season on her contract, which does not appear to be a deal-breaker. The WNBA plays in the summer.

She's rehabbing a knee injury, but will play for the United States in the Summer Olympics in September in Sydney.

Former Connecticut guard Jennifer Rizzotti has set the precedent for playing and coaching. She plays for the WNBA's Houston Comets and coached the University of Hartford women's team last season.

by Brooks' numerous skills, Weber and his staff embraced the versatility.

"He's a real talented all-around kid and that was impressive to us," Weber said. "It's a positive I think, but it probably hurt him for getting recruited because he did too many things and he didn't get out to all the different (recruiting) events."

"We just felt he was too good to pass up."

Although he played inside part of the time in high school, the 6-foot-3-inch Brooks has guard skills and is expected to play at one of the perimeter spots for SIU. Regarded as a quality shooter and a smooth player, Brooks plays an efficient brand of basketball.

"The way he plays is very cool, calm — he's not an explosive type kid," Weber said. "He's under control and does the right thing."

Brooks, who was recruited by several solid programs including Missouri Valley Conference rival Southwest Missouri State University, credited the determination of Weber and his staff for his decision to become a Saluki.

"They called every week and came to my house," Brooks told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "It sounded like they wanted me more than the other schools. Everything went right with them."

Brooks is the fourth player to commit to SIU for the 2000-01 season, along with fall recruits Josh Warren, Stetson Hairston and Toshiy Harvey. Hairston's academic eligibility will likely be in question until the summer.

The Salukis are still dangling two open scholarships, and have yet to sign anyone to fill their two most pressing needs — a post-player to offset the losses of Chris Thunell and Derrick Tilmon or a ball-handler to support returning point guard Brandon Mells.

The Saluki fandom has been screaming for a monster in the middle to solidify SIU's returning talent at the guard and small forward spots, but Weber and his staff been banging their heads against the wall due to a shortage of available premium post-players.

"People want big kids and they're just not out there," Weber said. "We're competing for junior college (big) kids that we just think are OK with big-time schools."

Weber would likely sacrifice signing a more talented athlete to use one of the remaining scholarships on someone with size, in order to add much-needed depth behind Jermaine Dearman, Joshua Cross, Brad Korn, Sylvester Willis and Warren in the paint.

Of the five, Dearman is the only one with the needed size and experience to be counted upon to log minutes at the power forward or center spot.

Weber is also still in the market for a point guard, but will only take a player that he thinks will be productive. Otherwise, SIU will opt for the best available player.

But as the phone kept ringing in his office Wednesday, Weber knew better than to make any plans that are too firm.

"It changes every minute," Weber said. "Every phone call, something new happens."

Women's track and field sending members to different events

CHRISTINE BOLIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Caryn Poliquin was one of only six members on the SIU women's track and field team to be invited to one of the most prestigious track and field meets of the outdoor season, the 2000 Sea Ray Relays in Knoxville, Tenn.

Poliquin, a junior thrower, said she cannot wait to participate in the meet.

"Sea Ray is lot of fun to watch, not just compete in," Poliquin said. "It is just one of those meets that you look forward to."

The Sea Ray Relays is an unscored meet in which only select members of each team entered are invited to the meet. It lasts four days because so many college teams, Canadian teams and independent athletes want to compete.

"It's a prestigious meet in the respect that everybody in the country wants to be there to compete," SIU head coach Don DeNoon said.

The five Salukis that were chosen to make the trip to the University of Tennessee Thursday through Saturday are freshmen Katie Meehan, Rimma Turevsky and seniors Jenny Monaco, Erin Leahy and Joy Cutiano.

I would have liked to have gone to Sea Ray because it is a better meet than the Arkansas State meet, but I am glad I get to go to a meet because I get to throw again.

TALEA BELLE
SIU sophomore thrower

The rest of the Salukis are competing in the ASU Classic at Arkansas State University Saturday in Jonesboro, Ark.

Why two different meets? DeNoon thinks this weekend should not be wasted for those Salukis who were not selected to compete at the Sea Ray Relays. With the Salukis only competing once a week, DeNoon does not want to waste any time.

"The season goes by so quickly anyway that we lose opportunities for performance improvement for the kids to feel positive about themselves," DeNoon said. "The coaches think the athletes need to compete rather than sit at home."

Even though sophomore thrower Talea Belle is not going to Knoxville, she is glad to be competing somewhere this weekend. The ASU Classic will be Belle's first meet this season throwing the shot put.

"I would have liked to have gone to Sea Ray because it is a better meet than the Arkansas State meet, but I am glad I get to go to a meet because I get to throw again," Belle said. "I think I can [get a personal-best] because I threw better in practice [on Monday] than I ever have in my life. I think I can do something special."

"They don't try to butter you up too much," Craig said. "The scouts have shown interest, but they really won't tell you exactly what they think. They try to keep it pretty hush-hush."

As the draft nears, Craig has bumped into plenty of well-wishers around town, and said he appreciates the support.

Craig, whose father, Neal, played in the NFL for seven seasons, knows he cannot play football forever. If the NFL comes-a-calling, Craig would obviously jump at the opportunity. He also would be intrigued by the Canadian Football League as a viable Plan B.

If neither of those options pan out, Craig said he might just cast his football career aside.

SIU wide receivers coach Kevin Faulkner said Craig has plenty to be proud of, and is confident he will land in an attractive situation even if his name is not called during one of the seven rounds of the draft.

"Even being talked about in this vain should be a big honor for him," Faulkner said. "He's a pretty sharp kid — he'll do the right thing."

If he is not drafted, Craig, who has not signed with an agent yet, may be invited to an NFL camp as a free agent. Therefore, Faulkner has urged Craig to maintain a positive outlook regardless of what happens this weekend.

"You never know what can happen," Faulkner said. "It's going to be a big day for him whether it's [this weekend] or one of those days immediately afterward. Some NFL team is going to have a kid like him in their camp."

Until the draft concludes, it's all speculation. All Craig can do in the meantime is enjoy the moment and prepare to move on, one way or the other.

He plans to head home to Louisville to watch the draft with his family, and said this weekend will not come a moment too soon.

"I'm anxious for it to come and go," Craig said. "Sitting and waiting is the worst thing to do, and I've been doing that for a long time. There's a lot of questions with no answers."

At Carterville High School, Lovelace was a three-sport athlete in basketball, baseball and football. Saluki throwers assistant coach Kevin Robinson credits Lovelace's throwing talents with his all-around athleticism, especially in football.

"Being able to throw a football and being able to throw a javelin [are] two completely different things," Robinson said. "But he is a real good all-around athlete, and that helps."

The only obstacles preventing Lovelace from throwing farther are his ankle and foot, which prevent his technique from being perfected. He has a bone in his left foot that causes pain when he plants his foot.

Lovelace is not sure whether or not he wants to go through surgery during the summer on his foot. He is also considering having an operation on his right shoulder, which he said is over-used and loose.

Robinson said once Lovelace's injury woes are cured, his throwing should be stronger than ever. He would like to see Lovelace throw more than 200 feet by the end of the season.

"His ankle problem doesn't allow him to plant the way he should," Robinson said. "When he finally learns how to plant, I can see him throwing another 20-30 feet. I know he can throw a lot further, but I am happy with what he has done so far."

Lovelace's biggest competition may be one of his best friends, fellow javelin thrower senior Erik Olson, who has placed second every time Low-lace finished first, and vice-versa.

"He is one of my best friends, but on the day of the meet we are competitors," Olson said. "On the van ride [to away meets], we talk trash to each other. On the van rides home, we make fun of each other. On meet days, it is one for all — we are both out to win."

run in the eighth inning. The setback drops Winters record to 13-10 on the year.

Despite losing game one, Blaylock was much more pleased with her team's effort and play against the Lady Toppers as its defense, which committed five errors in an MVC loss to Southwest Missouri State University Monday, was flawless Wednesday.

"We played errorless ball and we hit the ball really well," Blaylock said. After an encouraging response to last weekend's 1-3 MVC weekend, the Salukis now make step one more ground in the Valley as they currently sit in a last-place tie with Drake University at 2-6.

With Illinois State University and Indiana State University coming to town Saturday and Sunday for a pair of MVC doubleheaders, Blaylock sees no better time to start playing catch-up than now.

"I don't want to make any predictions, but I was really proud of the way they responded [Wednesday]," Blaylock said. "I told them we need to use this as a springboard for this weekend." 15

Running down a dream

Craig waiting for one of the most anticipated phone call of his life — from the NFL

JAY SCHWAB
SPORTS EDITOR

Cornell Craig proved everything there was to prove throughout his remarkable football career at SIU. During the past few months, though, Craig has been faced with the challenge of proving himself all over again.

That's how it goes when you are striving to join the league featuring the best football players in the world.

With the National Football League draft set for this Saturday and Sunday, SIU's all-time top receiver will soon learn whether his dream of being selected in the NFL draft is in the cards.

Craig, who broke just about every Saluki record there was to break during his four years in Carbondale, has been doing everything in his power since SIU's season ended to make himself as marketable as possible.

"I've been running and lifting, trying to gain a little strength, a little size, a little speed, anything that I can improve on," Craig said.

As outstanding as his college career was, Craig does not have the blazing speed or towering size ideal to NFL scouts. Most observers are skeptical about the likelihood of Craig being selected.

The 6-foot-1-inch Craig is a realist and knows he may not be drafted. At the same time, he is not overwhelmed by competing with the dozens of distinguished receivers who will be available in the draft.

"It's a deep pool, it's probably one of the strongest positions in the draft," Craig said. "But I'm not too concerned about it because I feel like I can play with anybody."

This afternoon, Craig plans on working out for scouts from the Chicago Bears and Kansas City Chiefs. He worked out for the Green Bay Packers a couple weeks ago in Carbondale, and although he admitted he was a little nervous, Craig said the session went reasonably well.

"I didn't run as well as I wanted to, but overall it went fine," he said.

After going through the college recruiting process as a promising high school recruit from Louisville, Ky, Craig has noticed a distinct difference in the way NFL teams go about attracting talent. There are no promises, no attempts to impress and no ego-boosting plaudits from the professionals.

Scouts have told him areas he needs to work on and what he has done well, but are often evasive.

Throwing to NEW lengths

Lovelace make successful transition from football to track and field team

CHRISTINE BOLIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

As a freshman at SIU in 1997, Brock Lovelace had a hidden talent that even he did not know about.

He spent a year on the Saluki football squad as a walk-on quarterback, only to realize he was in the wrong sport.

It was during the middle of his sophomore year when he put down the football and picked up a scholarship as a javelin thrower for the SIU men's track and field team after his brother Ryan, a former pole vaulter, convinced him to give it a try.

It turned out that Lovelace, a junior in civil engineering from Carterville, enjoyed the javelin a little more than he expected.

"I ended up liking the javelin a lot better than football," Lovelace said. "I was always able to throw and I like to lift and run. That is basically what javelin is, and that is exactly what I wanted."

After quitting the football team, Lovelace's first two seasons as a member of the Saluki track and field team were successful. He finished fourth in both the 1998 and 1999 Missouri Valley Conference Outdoor Championships.

KERRY MALONEY - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Brock Lovelace, a junior javelin thrower from Carterville, is having a consistent season on the Saluki squad. He has yet to place lower than second overall in any of SIU's meets this season.

This season, Lovelace has been one of the most important factors for SIU — he has yet to place lower than second place in any of the three scored meets SIU has competed in.

He would like to see his success carry over to SIU's next meet, the 2000 Sea Ray Relays in Knoxville, Tenn., where only a few Salukis will be competing.

With a throw of 193-6, which he earned at the Florida State Relays during spring break, Lovelace thinks his personal-best throw came from the excitement of returning to competition.

Since he only throws the javelin, an exclusive outdoor event, Lovelace said getting back into competition after training during the fall and winter can be difficult.

"It is frustrating because you go 10 months working out and you compete only two months," Lovelace said. "Then again, you are also ready to throw. You get sick of working out and you are ready to do something."

"It is a lot different than what I was

The perfect cure

Stremsterfer stops softball's three-game skid tossing a perfect game against WKU

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Erin Stremsterfer found the perfect way to halt the SIU softball team's three-game losing skid.

The junior Saluki hurler tossed a perfect game in a 4-0 shutout in game two of a doubleheader at Western Kentucky University in Bowling Green, Ky., Wednesday. The Salukis split the doubleheader, losing the first game 2-1 in eight innings.

Stremsterfer commanded the Lady Toppers, to improve her record to 9-5 on the season.

"Erin dominated the game," Saluki head coach Kerri Blaylock said. "She really was on top of her game. It was her best performance I think all season."

The Manchester, Mo., native also hurt Western Kentucky with her bat, going 2-for-3, including hitting her sixth home run on the year.

Joining in offensively, junior Amanda Rexroat went 2-for-4 with two RBIs.

The Salukis (30-16, 2-6 MVC) had lost their previous three games before Stremsterfer put an end to the team's misfortunes.

In game one, the Salukis played much better than they did last weekend, but a costly wild pitch by senior southpaw Crissa Winters provided the Hilltoppers (21-17-1) with the game-winning

Saluki basketball recruit multi-talented

Darren Brooks is heading to SIU, but a big man is still elusive

JAY SCHWAB
SPORTS EDITOR

The SIU men's basketball team has landed another impressive talent, but is still scrambling to patch up a couple holes on its roster.

Darren Brooks, a three-sport standout from St. Louis, has committed to SIU head coach Bruce Weber and the Salukis.

Brooks averaged 25 points and 6.2 rebounds his senior season for Jennings High School, leading his Warriors to a fourth-place finish in Missouri's Class 3A state playoffs.

Brooks, SIU's first spring signee in the wake of the spring signing period that began Wednesday, was also recruited by the Saluki football program and is off to a sensational start in baseball this spring. He has not ruled out playing another sport in college, but will concentrate on basketball.
