Jennifer Cooper, a sophomore in automotive technology from Lansing, presses the bearing off of a pinion gear during her lab at the Carterville campus Wednesday.

A woman's early childhood interest with engines matures into an SIUC automotive degree

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

As Jenny Cooper watched her uncle tinker with a car engine, the gears in her head started to turn, and she decided she would try to make a career out of the skill she was picking up.

"He started talking about it (the engine), and of course I didn't know what he was talking about," Cooper, a sophomore in automotive technology from Lansing, said. "But I signed up for auto tech in high school and decided to go into it."

Cooper is one of five women in the automotive technology division of the College of Applied Arts and Sciences. There are 160 men.

With her petite stature and clean T-shirt, she does not look like many of the students walking around the Carterville campus. But then again, she has not started lab.

"People are shocked when I tell them my major," she said. "They automatically think I want to be a mechanic. But I think I want to get into the business aspect of it."

Cooper said she does not get too much special treatment in her classes.

"The only complaint I have is that the guys treat me like a girl," she said. "They say, 'She shouldn't carry that,' or 'She doesn't understand.' Don't treat me like a girl, treat me like one of the guys."

Technical careers are expanding with the enrollment of women in their colleges. According to SIUC admission records, in 1976 the College of Engineering had only 33 women enrolled and 1,003 men. Today, there are 131 women and 1,042 men.

Jennifer Rzepka, a junior in civil engineering from Lockport, said she has seen more women in her classes throughout the years.

"There definitely has been an increase, but there is still less than 10 percent of girls in my class," she said.

She said the men in her classes assume she is some type of genius because she is a female and is in engineering.

"I've always been good in math and science, but I'm not a genius," she said. "They think because I'm a girl, and I'm doing this, I must be really smart."

One of Cooper's classmates, Tim Eenigenburg, a senior from Lansing, said he is glad to see more women interested in technical fields.

"Women bring in good diversity," he said. "They bring different opinions and views to the field. But, as far as I'm concerned, it doesn't make a difference who is doing the job."

Regardless of the hiring statistics that show women in technical careers are in high demand, Rzepka said she does not think her gender will help her after she graduates.

"I don't think being a female will matter," she said.

Students campaign for Dole, Clinton

Political science enthusiasts show support for favorite candidates.

By Shawna Donovan
DE Government/Politics Editor

Darrik Williams says he has found an alternative for the usual drinking scene on the weekends — campaigning for presidential candidate Bob Dole.

Williams, a senior in political science from West Frankfort, said he will spend his weekends, at least for the next few months, passing out literature, sticking signs in strangers' yards and being a diligent campaign worker for Dole.

For many students, the election season finally has begun as the presidential campaigns have come to campus.

Both the College Democrats and College Republicans already are passing out buttons, literature and bumper stickers for state and local campaigns to potential voters.

Williams, who is the campus coordinator for Dole/Kemp '96, said supplies and campaign resources did not come in until after the Republican National Convention two weeks ago.

"It (supplies) was pretty scarce," he said.

"The funds were not there until after the convention."

"The campaign is picking up speed now.

We will be doing even more after Labor Day."

Williams, who has been working for Dole since February, said he enjoys campaigning for his candidate.

"Campaigning on a state and local level is the key to winning national and presidential campaigns," he said.

Hamilton Arendsen, College Democrats president, said members of his group will be working on the Clinton/Gore campaign after President Bill Clinton accepts the nomination tonight.

Arendsen said some members are traveling to Cairo, Ill., Friday to support the president as he makes a campaign stop with First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and his wife Tipper.

Friday, Clinton will be in Cape Girardeau, Mo., at 1 p.m., Cairo at 5:45 p.m., and in Paducah, Ky., later in the evening as part of his post-convention bus tour.

The tour will end Saturday in Memphis, Tenn.

"We are ready to go as soon as we get some supplies and literature," Arendsen said.

Sarah McGhee, a senior in geography from Lawrenceville, Ga., said she has worked to support Clinton ever since he took office.

"There is a saying in politics," McGhee said.

"The day a politician takes office is the first day of his reelection campaign."

"If there is a good Democrat in office that we supported, we will never stop campaigning for that person." Williams said he supports Dole because he is conservative on the economy.

But McGhee supports Clinton because he is a liberal on social issues.

Body Art

Self-piercing can be uncomfortable, infectious, pro says

By Angie Gallinger
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two months after having her body pierced for the third time, Jamie Giller decided to take her piercing out because she did not have the patience to let her body heal.

"Piercing usually takes between six months to a year to heal, and I didn't want to wait that long. So I took my piercing out," Giller, a junior in art and design from Highland Park, said. She declined to comment on which part of her body was pierced in this case, but she also has a pierced nose and a double piercing on her right ear.

Giller is one of the many students at SIUC with various body piercings.

Cougar, the body piercer at Golgotha Tattoos, 8609 Giant City Road (formerly Ladyhawk Ink Tattoos), said that more and more students this year are getting parts of their body pierced.

Cougar said that she performs an average three to six piercings a day. She said that the most common piercing this year for SIUC students is piercing of the navel and tongue. Cougar's prices range from $15 to $75, depending on what part of the body is pierced.

Even though the original piercing Giller had was uncomfortable, she decided to chance piercing

Two student organizations debated with University Housing officials Tuesday about recent changes in food service across campus that student leaders say have some of their constituents upset.

Residence Hall Association and

Undergraduate Student Government members said their constituents have problems with the residence hall dining changes that were made at the beginning of the semester.

Association President Ray Owezarszak said students approached him with complaints about the food served in the dining halls, specifically students who believe they do not have a choice in food with the new system. The new service serves the same food for both lunch and dinner.

"I've heard from a lot of people that are really annoyed they don't have much of a choice in food unless they walk across campus (to another cafeteria)," he said. "And a lot of people are faced with only 20 minutes to eat and don't have the time to walk across campus."

Residence Hall cafeterias have different options that students can choose from:

Welfare reform bill ignores individual, focuses on figures

President Bill Clinton signed a bill last Thursday which would eliminate the Aid to Families with Dependent Children. As a result, the welfare program in this country could change drastically, setting a limit of five years for people who receive benefits. It also states that those same people must be working within two years of receiving aid.

While this seems like a good idea in theory, it may turn out to be one of those situations where the numbers look better than what they actually represent. Moving recipients off of welfare and into the workforce is a good idea, but this type of program leaves no middle ground for people with special circumstances.

Sometimes one person's situation does not apply to another, but this type of program doesn't see that. This new reform places everyone into the same category, telling them they now have five years of benefits left, regardless of the situation. This may not be enough time for some, but it seems that no longer matters.

The new law will provide block grants to the different states, and each state will decide how the money is to be spent. This bill also calls for cuts in food stamps, the amount of aid legal immigrants receive who are not yet citizens as well as aid to disabled children.

This bill also states that unmarried teenage parents will no longer be eligible for benefits unless they live at home and are enrolled in school. On the same token, more than 16,000 children will no longer be able to receive benefits until they have undergone a review process next year.

Why then, if so many under-privileged people are affected, would Clinton, an elected Democrat, sign a bill like this into law? Because, as stated above, the numbers look too good to pass up.

The new program will be saving the federal government more than $55 billion over the next six years, and requires the states to find jobs for half of the recipients by the year 2002. It also will provide more than $4 billion in childcare funding to parents who were previously on welfare, which is more than the old system would have provided.

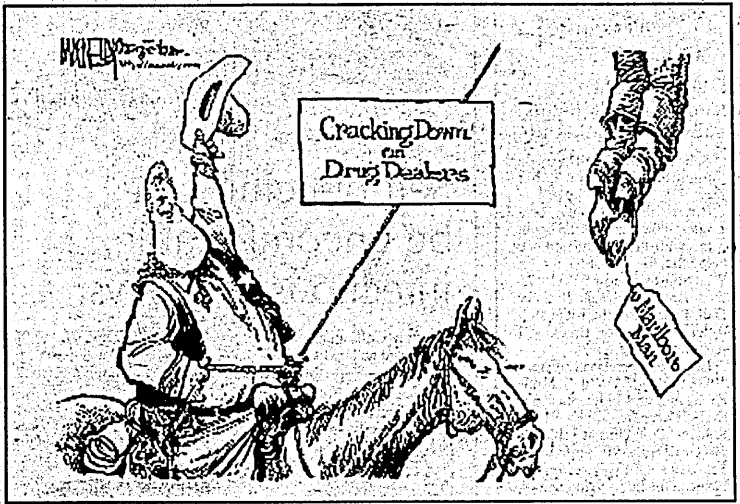

So, once someone takes a look at the figures, it doesn't seem like such a bad reform after all. But sometimes the numbers can be very deceiving.

While someone perusing the figures may agree that providing jobs for half the recipients is a good thing, some may fail to see how broad of a group that encompasses.

More than 660,000 people received aid in Illinois in July alone. All of those 660,000 plus are now, perhaps just as they always have been, placed into the same category with a five-year deadline. Even though each situation may be different, the outcome is not. Every one must now find work within two years, finding another way to care for the children they may have or else lose support from the government.

The theory behind this law is a good one in that it wants to get people off of welfare and provide them with the means to provide for themselves. But the government is taking many things for granted by imposing such a strict deadline on those that it affects. Five years may not be enough time for some people to become financially independent, but this program doesn't recognize that.

Scare tactics may be a good way to make a person do something they wouldn't normally do, but this kind of situation is taking money away from families who really need it. Telling someone to get a job is easy enough, but now the government is telling everyone to get a job, or else. One has to wonder whether the solution is actually worse than the problem.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Student wants new channel

TCI Cable offers a wide variety of television entertainment. Unfortunately, this does not include the "Comedy Central" network.

This is surprising to me because I think most of the shows would attract a college audience. Where else can you see good episodes of "Saturday Night Live"? What other station airs episodes of "Kids in the Hall", "Mystery Science Theater 3000", "SCTV", "Dr. Katz", "The Critic", "Politically Incorrect", and "The Ben Stiller Show"? No wonder people used to feel the need to riot in Carbondale; they were (and still are) missing out on some of the greatest comedy shows that have ever been made.

When I talked to a TCI employee, I was told that "Comedy Central" was not an "a la carte channel." This term is used when four channels offer a package deal of channels for TCI. Because "Comedy Central" does not offer a package deal such as this, TCI is hesitant to add it to their lineup.

There is hope though. An average of two channels are added to TCI's lineup every year, and it is doubtful that "Comedy Central" will be one of them. If you often drown while surfing through the sea of channels, or end up watching some other station that is not "Comedy Central", I encourage you to put the remote down and pick up the phone.

Call TCI and request that "Comedy Central be one of the new channels offered.

Records capture a different sound

I must protest the suggestions and implications that people who listen to recordings on a vinyl LP as opposed to a CD are musical dinosaurs. The CD medium is as successful as it is not because of superior sound quality, but rather due to its convenience, perceived indestructibility (relative to vinyl), and myriad of other uses. The debate between CD and LP sound quality only continues in the mainstream press and among novices who are unaware of the not so subtle differences in methodology.

Although CDs have quantitative superiority in characteristics, such as dynamic range (the perceived difference between quiet and loud passages) and signal-to-noise ratio, the reason for this quantitative superiority is due primarily to the fact digital recording techniques "sample" signals. "Unwanted" sounds can therefore be edited out. However, what is lost in the process of sampling is the "infinite" resolution that comes from the analog recording process. Digital recording only takes "bits" of the musical sound, whereas analog recording records the whole sound. The difference is a warm, sweet sound as opposed to the harsh, bright sound of digital.

The high-end audio and underground press have decried 44.1 kHz digital standard from the very beginning. The standard was imposed in order to make digital recording techniques and the medium itself marketable.

It is not that CDs sound bad, and in order to get the full effect of quality audio analog sound, the listener has to utilize a well-tuned system. However, in the audio press, expensive digital systems are consistently compared to the "standard analog sound."

Even audio manufacturers have recognized this as they attempt to "upgrade" the digital sound with new audio standards for the DVD format which is soon to replace the CD format (which is even addressed in the June issue Scientific American, a non-audio publication).

We could argue the finer points of psycho-acoustics until the cows come home, but if you really want to which format sounds better (despite theoretical evidence supporting analog), I suggest you listen to any well-engineered recording in both CD and LP formats back-to-back.

Moseley-Brauns visit no big deal

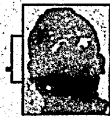

Much has been said about Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun's trip to Nigeria. Let me state from the inception of this article that I support democracy in Nigeria and deplore dictatorship wherever it may exist.

Moseley-Braun, D-Ill., has taken much criticism for ignoring protocol and visiting Nigeria in what she described as a vacation/diplomatic mission. I fail to understand why everyone has become a critic. I believe that the senator was simply exercising her inalienable right when she visited Nigeria earlier this month.

We should note that she went to Nigeria on her own time and money. As the only African American in the Senate, she felt compelled to probe further into the Nigerian situation and explore the possibility of better relations between the United States and Nigeria. I do not believe anyone would have problems with such an objective. If that is the case, why is there so much uproar being made about this trip? Some have criticized her for legitimizing the illegal and brutal regime in Nigeria.

While this may be true, no one has addressed the fact that the senator was not acting on behalf of anyone but herself. I have not seen any laws (and protocols are not laws) which prohibit anyone from acting for themselves, even if they are a U.S. senator. I am sure no one would dispute that senators dealing with foreign policies have to travel abroad to evaluate situations for themselves in order to have an informed opinion.

I am well aware that visible officials, such as senators, must exercise caution in all their dealings and follow certain protocol. If Moseley-Braun had gone to Nigeria to simply visit Gen. Abacha without any diplomatic overtures in mind, I would have personally had problems with that. But she stated she went partly to assess the situation for herself. I see nothing foul about that, and that is the context from which we should assess this trip.

The senator may have used poor judgment for not consoling the families of the nine activists who were hanged by the military. But let us not be too hasty to deny her the right to visit whomsoever and wherever she wishes. That is the bottom line. When one becomes a senator, I do not believe that they abdicate the right to have a private life. We should be able to decipher the senator as a senator from the senator as a citizen. If the senator is amicable with the Nigerian leader, and his family, that is her prerogative. No one is in any position to choose friends for the senator.

Moseley-Braun is not the first U.S. official to visit a dictator as a private citizen. Former President Carter has taken several private missions to countries ruled by dictators as a mediator. Communist China, in spite of the despicable Tianamen Square slaughter of June 1989 and its continued human rights violations, still received the Most Favorable Nation status in trade from the Bush and Clinton administrations, and officials of both countries continue to engage in official and unofficial dialogues.

Similarly, does anyone have the count on how many high-level U.S. government officials who visited — as private citizens — and dialogued with the treacherous and murderous apartheid regime in South Africa before it became democratic? So why all the uproar about the senator's trip? Is it because the senator is a woman? Or is it because she is an African American? Or is it because the country involved is a black, African country?

I am only speaking in the interest of fairness, and I am not defending the senator or the regime in Nigeria. As a matter of fact, I categorically condemn it for its human rights excesses. But one thing should be made abundantly clear: If we are going to criticize, let us apply the criticism evenly. Let us not make Nigeria and the senator the sacrificial lambs. Let us be consistent in our outrage and not apply different sets of rules to different countries. If the senator's visit helps foster a better relationship between the United States and Nigeria, then I would assert that the senator's heart is in the right place, and the means justify the end.

The Chicago Tribune
Topic: Perot and Fulani

When people quote the old adage that politics makes strange bedfellows, they usually have in mind an alliance between two rivals with comparatively minor differences — say Ronald Reagan and George Bush. The political marriage of Ross Perot and Lenora Fulani, however, goes beyond to bizarre and dangerous.

Fulani, an African-American New Yorker, ran for president in 1988 and 1992 as the nominee of the New Alliance Party, a vaguely left-wing organization with a cultlike reputation and a history of association with dubious characters, from Lyndon LaRouche to Al Sharpton. But this year, she and her followers, now affiliated with the right-wing Patriot Party, are backing Perot.

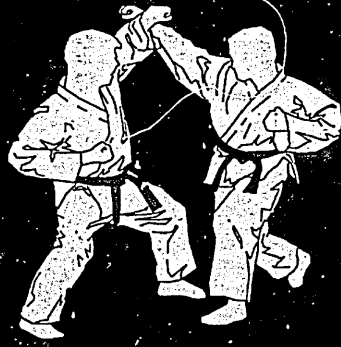

By welcoming the Newmannites, he is granting respectability to a group that is beyond the pale. For anyone considering a vote for Perot, he is also creating major doubts.

The Los Angeles Times
Topic: Tobacco industry

The tobacco industry is now being sued by 14 states that want to recover the public health costs associated with disabling and often fatal diseases linked to cigarette smoking, and more are likely to join the battle. The industry is also girding to legally challenge the finding by the Food and Drug Administration that cigarettes and chewing tobacco are the delivery systems for a powerfully addictive drug, nicotine.

Clinton, again displaying his profound political faith in the notion that nothing succeeds like excess, announced the new regulations amid typical Rose Garden hoopla and the expected cast of supporting players. Politicizing the issue of standing four-square against teenage smoking, while always a temptation, became inevitable when Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole, no doubt to his enduring regret, questioned what are by now smoking's inarguable health dangers.

Suicides may be inherent trait

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—The sad chain of suicides that has plagued the talented Hemingway family for three generations may be due to a genetic trait passed unwittingly through the clan, mental health experts say.

The Los Angeles County coroner's office recently ruled Margaux Hemingway's July 1 death a suicide by massive barbiturate overdose. The former model's suicide is the fifth among four generations of relatives.

Her famous grandfather, Ernest Hemingway, killed himself with a shotgun 35 years ago. The novelist's father, brother and sister also committed suicide.

But two or more suicides are not unusual in a family with a history. One in every four people who attempt suicide has a family member who also tried to commit suicide, according to a study of 2,304 Los Angeles residents completed several years ago by the National Institute of Mental Health.

"If you look at spectrum of suicide behavior — attempts and completions — the majority of completers have a family history."

It's the rule, not the exception, to have a history of suicidal behavior," says Dr. David Brent, a psychiatrist at the Western Psychiatric Institute in Pittsburgh and one of the nation's leading researchers on suicide.

of male classmates and few female role models, Ann Kawal, a senior in architecture from Farmington, said she convinced herself to stay in her major after the first day.

"I felt intimidated," she said. "I thought about quitting and changing my major right at the time."

Kawal said she originally wanted to go into interior design but decided she enjoyed architecture more. She said she was glad her family and classmates were supportive.

"I never had anyone saying, 'Why don't you be a teacher?'," she said. "I get a lot of support. It's great being the only girl."

As a career services specialist for the College of Applied Sciences and Arts, Debbi Joseph said she talks to a lot of women interested in technical careers. She said women have to keep an equal-opportunity mentality. "It's important to realize opportunities," she said. "If your skills match the job, you can be a success in that field. You can't look at it like that's a man's field."

Joseph said equal opportunity has helped women get into non-traditional fields.

"With equal opportunity, women have their foot in the door and are proving they are capable," she said.

"Improvements still need to be made in hiring."

As Couper's skin begins to get covered with grease, she begins to look more like "one of the boys." But Couper admits that she still hears little giggles from men when she is in class.

"I get jokes," she said. "But I just tell them that I'll be the one making all this money, and then I will be laughing."

infection by piercing their own bodies without the use of sterile equipment. Cougar said that many students are trying to pierce themselves with safety pins and other nonsterile household items.

"When people come in with an infected piercing that they did themselves, they want me to do something about it," she said. "All I can tell them is to take the ring out and let it heal."

Cougar said she only uses needles that are very sharp and hollow. She said that by using these needles, the healing process is much more effective than by using a piercing gun.

Cougar said she compares piercing with a gun to cutting cardboard with a dull knife.

"The carting stud used in a gun is not as sharp as the needles I use," she said.

Cougar said that before she does each piercing, she washes her hands with anti-bacterial soap and always uses gloves. She said she never uses any of her equipment twice.

"All of my needles are new and sterile because I only use them once and then I throw them out," Cougar said.

After Cougar finishes piercing her customers, she said she gives her customers a lecture on the proper care for the piercing during the healing process.

"I recommend to my customers to use an anti-bacterial soap to clean their piercing and not to use peroxide or alcohol because it will only dry the piercing out and not help in the healing process," she said.

"As long as my customers clean and take care of their piercing like I tell them to, when I tell them to, they usually don't have a problem with it."

Even though Giller had problems with her piercing, she continues to get them done by a close friend. Giller said her friend uses a needle to give her piercings and is extra careful while the piercing is healing.

"I put Bacine on the piercing two times a day and clean it."

Announcing the NEW Entertainment Guide

GREAT
Advertising Opportunity?

• This is a weekly supplement to the Daily Egyptian that will contain TV listings for the entire week, not to mention stories and photographs about the upcoming week's hot entertainment spots.

So how can this increase your exposure to customers?

- An average person watches 20 hours of television a week.
- All types of people watch TV; so all kinds of products can be successfully advertised in the TV listings section.
- Since the listings will be for Sunday through Saturday programs, that means your ad will be around for an entire week!
- The D.E. is already the largest read paper in the local area— so it makes sense that the D.E. is the best choice to have the local cable listings.

New civic center expected to boost tourism, revenue

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"If there are more people working in tourism, it assures [that] people born and raised in Southern Illinois can stay here."

Bob Kustra, Lt. governor

Boosting area tourism dollars is an initiative one city official says she is banking on.

Debbie Moore, Carbondale Convention and Tourism Bureau executive director, discussed the city's coming events with Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra Wednesday.

Moore said the city needs events like the Cascade of Colors hot-air balloon festival, scheduled for Sept. 6 to Sept. 8, and the Lights Fantastic parade in December to boost area tourism.

Tourism brings about $32 million per year to Jackson County, Moore said. She said the Cascade of Colors alone will bring $4 million to the local economy.

Moore said the new civic center at the corner of South Illinois Avenue and East Walnut Street, which opens in September, also will boost the city's tourism revenue. About 70 conferences and 16 concerts, arts events and antique shows have been booked there for the coming year.

"The civic center will be something wonderful for Carbondale," Moore said. "It will give Carbondale residents a place to go, and it will allow more events to be scheduled here."

Moore said Carbondale's newest tourism event will be a powwow sponsored by the SIUC American Indian Association in April 1997 at the Arena.

She said 10,000 people are expected to come and sample

American cuisine, arts and entertainment.

Kustra said at a press conference at the Franklin County Country Club that the state's goal is to double Southern Illinois' tourism revenue within the next 12 years.

He said more state funding for tourism will give Southern Illinois residents more economic stability.

"If there are more people working in tourism, it assures people born and raised in Southern Illinois can stay here," Kustra said. "More than jobs, it reassures people that they are not going to have to pick up their stakes (and move)."

Steve Frattini, Southern Illinois Tourism Council executive director, said the tourism council plans to further develop its relationship with the University.

Frattini said one example of the cooperation between University and the council is the council's visitors' guide to Southern Illinois, which SIUC students in graphics and design help create.

potato bar.

■ Grinnell Cafeteria, located in University Park, now has a full-service deli, a soup bar, hamburgers and French fries, a grilled sandwich special everyday, pasta and homemade pizza.

■ Lentz Cafeteria, located in Thompson Point, has a rotation of soups, main entrees, vegetables, salads, desserts, a deli, low-fat vegetarian meals and every Friday night, homemade pizza.

Connie Howard, USG Thompson Point senator, said she will not walk across campus to other cafeterias to eat, and that time is a big concern with most of the students she has talked with.

"I won't walk across campus — it's too dangerous, especially at night," she said.

Howard also said University Housing should consider keeping later hours at a campus cafeteria for students who have to work at night.

"Working students are getting off work at midnight," she said. "And their meal plan isn't working for them."

Tony Earls, Thompson Point coordinator, said he is not sure of the feasibility of keeping a cafeteria or deli open later.

"Working students are getting off work at midnight, and their meal plan isn't working for them."

*Connie Howard,

"The problem with that is we have to keep people on to keep the building open and the people running the dining service," he said.

But not all student leaders voiced complaints about this year's food service.

Anglene Welton, RHA vice president, said she has heard a lot of students say they are happy with the new cappuccino machine and soft-serve yogurt machine in Grinnell Cafeteria.

Mary Morgan, assistant housing director, said residence hall councils can ask for student volunteers to serve on a food committee to discuss possible changes in the food service.

New club offers change in attitudes and scenery

By Bruce Lorenzana
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The word "alternative" in politically correct circles is used to indicate choice in everything these days, from fuels to lifestyles to three-chord garage bands. But an alternative bar, Daddy Warbucks, 213 E. Main St., is an alternative to the overcrowded bars of the Strip.

Dan Terry, Warbucks building owner, is finishing remodeling efforts since reacquiring the property from former tenant A.C. Reed, whose attempt to establish a blues and jazz club in Carbondale was thwarted by both indifferent crowds and financial woes.

"When this was Club Paradise, A.C. Reed was interested in buying the property. That is the main reason I agreed to lease it to him in the first place," Terry said. "Now, though, having divested myself of several other properties I own in other cities and states, I plan on moving to Carbondale and concentrating on the operation of Warbucks and my Coliseum Club, which I have owned for years in Springfield, Mo."

Terry, a Mt. Vernon native and 1975 SIUC student, has installed most of the sound system and finished the computerized, hydraulic lighting with special graphics and fog effects, all to be presented during the grand opening weekend beginning this Friday.

One patron, Carl Higgins of Belnap, drives more than 80 miles round-trip to visit Daddy Warbucks.

Under-21 crowd needs new place for entertainment

By Lisa Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Owners of a local bar say they are not only disappointed with the turnout at recent underage shows they have provided; they now say they have no sympathy for underage people who complain of having no social night life.

Richard Simpson and Sally Carter, co-owners of Hanger 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave., tried to accommodate underage people in their search for night entertainment by hosting three underage shows with live bands on Aug. 16 and last Friday and Saturday.

Simpson said the evenings were disastrous in attendance, as well as from a business aspect.

"We are finished with the underage shows," he said. "With all the extra planning we did, like having five extra employees on hand and not selling alcoholic drinks, we lost about an hour's worth of sales."

"We were prepared to lose some money, but when almost 70 percent of the people who came through the door (during the underage show) didn't purchase anything, that's a lot of potential sales lost."

Carter said she really wanted the evening to work and that she thought people would come.

"Apparently we were mistaken," she said. "I hate to give up on this, and if we can think of a way around it, we may continue it. But, for right now, there's nothing we can do."

"If we were making some sales on the non-alcoholic drinks, we wouldn't be disappointed in the attendance. But with what happened, that just isn't the case."

Simpson said of the three underage shows, the highest attendance number was 85 people.

"We had 74 people the first time with St. Stephen's Blues, 85 with the Jungle Dogs and 68 with Jake's Leg," he said. "I thought more people would show up for Jake's Leg, because they are a Grateful Dead cover band."

"Maybe people just need time to learn who the bands are and what kind of music they play, but we can't afford to continue it (underage shows)."

Carter, also a Carbondale Liquor Advisory Board member, proposed the idea of allowing underage people into bars for a limited time if no alcohol is present. The idea was proposed when the bar-entry age was raised to 21 July 1.

Carter said she thought things went the exact opposite of what she expected.

"I thought getting the City Council to pass that (underage shows) would really be tough," she said. "But that was a piece of cake. Now the students are just not showing up like we expected."

Simpson said he has almost no sympathy for underage people who complain of a lack of nighttime entertainment.

"I feel a little stupid," he said. "Because for years, I've been listening to underage people say, 'We want to hear local bands.' So we gave them the opportunity. I just can't believe more people didn't get involved."

Glyph is coming

Beginning Thurs., Sept. 5, the Daily Egyptian will be informing the students of SIUC about the week's best bands, films and social events through a publication titled the "Glyph." Also contained in this publication will be a weekly feature story focusing on an issue students may find controversial, interesting, insightful, amusing and, at the very least, entertaining.

This section will carry a name, which many may pronounce incorrectly. The "Glyph," pronounced "glif," is short for hieroglyphics — writings used in ancient Egypt.

The DE hopes everyone enjoys this new and exciting archive of entertainment knowledge.

We welcome any questions and/or comments. Contact the Entertainment staff of the Daily Egyptian, at 536-3311, ext. 240.

Back-to-school bash gets low turnout

By Bruce Lorenzana
Daily Egyptian Reporter

If you book them, they will come. The promoters of the Murphysboro Park District must believe this is the formula for success.

Unfortunately, the people did not come, and the "Back to School Bash" Friday was not a success, leaving the park district with some rethinking to do.

In the park's recently refurbished acoustic band shell, a low-admission concert with the Jokers, Waxdolls, Natives, Nighthawk and Lil' Ed and the Imperial Flames probably seemed a sure thing.

The only thing missing was another 400 to 500 people to allow the Murphysboro Park District to at least break even.

With more gumption than gambling skills, the sparse crowd of less than 200, under darkening clouds and well protected by bemused police and ambulance personnel, knew a good deal when they heard it — five bands for five bucks.

Robbie Braddock, recreation director for the park district, had done the math and knew just how many admissions it would take for the park to show a profit.

"With the bands' cost and the police and ambulance personnel, we need about 700 people to break even," he said.

As the entertainment was provided by bands who either play the Strip regularly or were featured in this year's Murphysboro Blues Fest, fear of unknown performers should not have kept the expected crowds away.

Sound Core Music had arranged for shuttle buses, free of charge, departing the SIUC Student Center every 30 minutes.

"There's just a general lack of interest," Bob Husuin, a member of the SIUC Inter-Fraternity Council, said. "I think there was enough publicity, but Murphysboro is like another world. Even with the shuttle service, nobody came from Carbondale."

Murphysboro had middling success with a previous concert in the spring, Braddock said, and assumed this concert would be even better.

"When we had Blue Lava play here this spring we had over 200

see BASH, page 9

ANNETTE BAEZ — The Daily Egyptian

The Natives try to liven up the crowd during the Back to School Bash last Friday night in Murphysboro.

Bash

people, mostly adults, with few students," Braddock said. "We thought we would get those people back and the buses would bring a few hundred more from Carbondale."

For future years, Braddock said that he still plans to promote the "Back to School Bash." But he said he plans to make a few changes to attract a larger crowd, particularly SIUC students.

"It'll probably end up moving it back a few weeks, probably two or three," he said.

"I thought that was part of the problem, along with the weather. Moving it back will give the kids a chance to get settled in before we put on something like this again."

One college student who did attend the concert came because of this year's Blues Fest July 20 at Riverside Park.

"I heard Lil' Ed and the Imperial Flames this summer at the Blues Fest and really liked them,"

Sherwin Lacey, Carbondale native

Michelle McCalla, a senior in early childhood education from Makanda, said.

"When I heard that they were coming back, especially for $5, I had to see them again."

Some Southern Illinois residents said they believe the area does not provide enough in the way of entertainment events that feature things other than alcohol.

Sherwin Lacey, a Carbondale native, said he felt that the Carbondale/Murphysboro area needs to do more in the way of community events.

"I live near Metropolis, and while Paducah is a lot closer than Carbondale, Paducah is dead," he said. "I'd rather drive here and know that the music's hot, the drinks are cold and the atmosphere is comfortable. I came here before when it was Club Paradise just about every night."

Higgins said he strayed away from Carbondale while Reed occupied the building, but now that Terry has regained control, he'll once again be making his commute.

"This bar now, just like before, is a great place for everyone, no matter what your lifestyle or sexuality," Higgins said.

"This is a place to get together, have a drink, talk or dance without being bumped into or having a drink spilled on you by rowdy crowds."

Everyone feels comfortable here — straights, gays, the undecided, whatever."

>Welcome Back SIUC Students!

Students find perfect spots on campus

SIUC Student Center provides comfortable environment to study

By Dave Armstrong
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Sitting on a white metal bench just behind the Student Center, Brenda Kalb reads a newspaper and smokes a cigarette.

"This is where people come to smoke and eat their McDonald's," Kalb, a sophomore in political science from Springfield, said.

Most students like Kalb agree that the Student Center is the favorite place to hang out because they can watch television, get some food and laze about between classes.

Whether their reasons are relaxing between classes or merely catching up on their reading, many students spend part of their day alone in secluded campus spots.

Whether they use the spot for smoking, watching other students or contemplating the nature of all things, many students have a favorite place.

A short walk through Thompson woods from the patio behind the Student Center leads to a path.

After traveling down the trail past many people just "hanging out," the path opens to an area where side-walks, bicycles and students meet.

Under each tree, students gather. Under one tree, Mike Lamphere, a sophomore in cinema from Downer, Grove, sits on his skateboard watching everything go by.

"There are a lot of sidewalks here, so it's a good spot to people watch," Lamphere said.

"I think [hanging out] is kind of territorial. Everyday I come here I see the same people in the same places."

Lamphere points to a tree across the sidewalk.

"See? That's where the Deadheads (Grateful Dead fans) hang out."

Some students said they are drawn to the Faner Hall computer lab by their preference for air conditioning.

Other students said they enjoy the steady hum of expensive electronics.

Inside the lab, Paul Khang, a senior in civil engineering from Chicago, is typing search commands while surfing the Internet.

"I just want to get some ideas to put my own computer system together," Khang said.

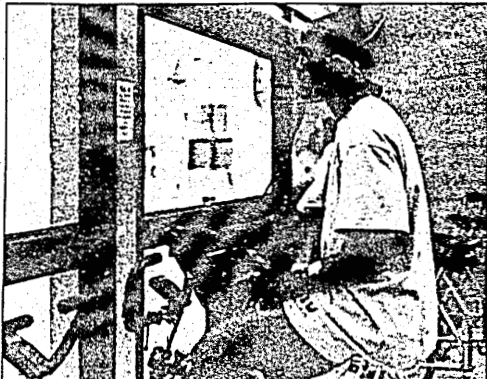

"What better place to collect the information?"

Students who want to relax in a physical way said that hanging out in the Recreation Center is the natural place.

Jennifer Thrailkill, a senior in education from Galesburg, sweats away her time on an exercise bike overlooking the pool area.

"I come here about three or five times a week, for about an hour," she said.

"I like to workout, so it's nice to come here."

Chair to improve international recognition

Engineering program has much to offer

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The new chairman for the Department of Mechanical Engineering and Engineering Processes says he would like to improve the department's international recognition.

Michael Khonsari, who took over as chairman of the department Aug. 16, said students should know that SIUC has a good engineering school.

"The reason I came here is because I was quite impressed with the quality of the faculty and their research," he said. "We also have the Friction Studies Center, which does research in tribology."

Khonsari said he does research in tribology, the study of friction, lubrication and wear.

"I have been involved with tribology for 16 years now," he said. "It started as part of my Ph.D. thesis. Then I worked for NASA, Ohio State and then the University of Pittsburgh for eight years before. I was nominated and contacted by the search committee here at SIUC."

Khonsari said he worked for

NASA and the United States Department of Energy before coming to SIUC.

He said international recognition is important to the department in order to increase the international enrollment.

"We have already started international research in various scientific areas with countries such as Romania and Sweden," he said.

Khonsari said other work has begun on international awareness as well. He said that soon, visitors from Germany will visit the college through an invitation from an SIUC student who was in Germany last June. He said he also will attend an international conference on tribology by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers this October.

"This will also help get the word out about SIU's Engineering College," he said. "This college has the potential to become one of the leading institutions [in the world]. I am not afraid to compete with any other colleges."

James Evers, associate dean for the College of Engineering, said it took six months to find a new chair. Khonsari replaced Albert Kent, who retired as the chairman for the Mechanical Engineering Department at the end of July.

Evers said Khonsari is the best person for the job.

"He has a good background in teaching and in his research."

International enrollment decrease prompts change

New ISC president offers fresh solution to problem

By Sheila Stowers
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The retention of international students at SIUC is what the new International Student Council president says is his major concern.

Berk Berkman, the new ISC president and a senior in economics from Ankara, Turkey, said there has been a sharp decrease in the number of international students at SIUC this semester.

Carla Coppi, director of International Students and Scholars, said that last fall there were 2,291 international students at SIUC.

She said enrollment is down this year, although the exact number is not yet known.

Berkman said he has some ideas on how to improve the declining international student population at SIUC.

One change he plans to propose this semester is the admission process of international students.

"We would like to work with the administration to make application forms available on the Internet so students can apply in their own language," Berkman said.

Berkman said that applying over the Internet would be more convenient for many international students, especially for those overseas.

"The international students here had to apply a long time ago," he

"We are just trying to limit the time it takes them to apply to the University."

*Berk Berkman,
ISC president*

said. "We are just trying to limit the time it takes them to apply to the University."

Evelyn Koine, assistant director of admissions, said the application process for overseas students takes about two weeks.

Berkman said he is concerned about the cost of putting application forms in all the languages represented at the University on the Internet because the ISC budget has been reduced this year.

"We're going to try to work with the administration," he said. "That's really all we can do."

Coppi said she is confident that the ISC, under Berkman's leadership, will be able to help with the declining international enrollment.

"I think any idea that he would have would be helpful," Coppi said. "I look forward to doing anything I can to help set it in motion."

Lyombe Eko, the former president of the African Student Council and a graduate student in journalism from Africa, said that he thinks Berkman will need the University's help to solve the international enrollment problem.

"The University needs to be more international student friendly," Eko said.

"By doing that, (the University) will help Berkman and the ISC do its job."

The former president of the International Student Council, Wan Kamal Wan Napi, said he also is confident that Berkman will do a good job as ISC president.

"He will try to increase the awareness between American and international students," Wan Napi said.

Eko said that the position of ISC president is extremely important because the ISC represents all of the international students on campus.

"The role of the ISC president is crucial because he or she is supposed to rise above the conflicts that exist in the world," he said.

"Berkman has an international outlook and can rise above the differences that exist between international students."

Berkman said he also would like to add a "problem box" outside his office so any international student could contribute suggestion letters.

Berkman said he has not yet discussed these proposals with the rest of the council.

University to add new computer lab

By Dylan Forley,
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A new computer learning center with at least 120 computers and four computer classrooms are slated for construction in Quigley Hall, University officials say.

The proposed center will have four classrooms attached that will service the colleges of Applied Arts and Sciences and Liberal Arts. C. Michael Williams, executive director for budgeting and information resources, said.

Williams said computer classrooms are desperately needed on campus.

The Board of Higher Education is calling these smart classrooms, which simply means that the facility will be there so that faculty can go in and conduct a class, Williams said.

And then when the class is not in session, those workstations will be open for all students from all colleges.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education recently earmarked $421,500 for this project out of a $10 million technology enhancement initiative approved by the Illinois General Assembly. Debra Smiley, IBHE associate director of public affairs, said.

Williams said computer classrooms are in demand by nearly all departments on campus.

"The students and faculty in art and design have been asking for such a facility for two years," Williams said. "It's needed desperately."

The computer learning center in Faneer Hall, which stays open until 3 a.m. Monday through Thursday, has the longest hours of any computer lab on campus.

Williams said the proposed Quigley lab may have equally late hours.

"This lab will be there based upon demand," he said. "If demand is such that it stays open late in the evenings, then we will accommodate it."

Four existing classrooms in Quigley Hall, as well as a portion of the open space in the center of the building, will be renovated to construct the new lab, Williams said.

Smiley said the project now awaits Gov. Jim Edgar's final release of the $421,500 earmarked by IBHE.

Williams said he is unsure when the governor will release the funds but hopes he will do so soon.

There are three computer learning centers on campus now: Faneer Hall, room 1025; Wren Hall, room 121; and College of Technical Careers Building, room 112.

CROSSCOUNTRY

Runner leads team, excels in classes

By Donna Collier
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Few students at SIUC can maintain a 4.0 grade point average, and even fewer of those students also are athletes.

Kim Koerner, a senior in physiology from Murrayville, has a 4.0 GPA while running on the SIUC cross country team.

Koerner travels to meets on about 20 weekends during the school year and trains all year, Coach Don DeNoon said.

"Kim does A-level work while training and gets it done in a timely manner," DeNoon said. "She is a bright young lady who is on a presidential scholarship while being on an athletic scholarship as well."

Koerner plans to enter a physical therapy school when she graduates from SIUC. She said she hopes to travel to the East to experience more in life but will go wherever she gets accepted.

"I have dreamed of going to physical therapy school for a long time," she said. "The schools are so competitive, so that has been my main motivation for getting a 4.0 GPA."

"I have applied to Northwestern University and Washington University in St. Louis. But my dream application is to Duke University."

Koerner said she does not have a lot of time to study because of her demanding running schedule, so the studying she does is very intense.

"I go to class and pay close attention," she said. "Since I can't study long hours, I take good notes and my studying is more efficient."

Koerner was named a third team GTE Academic All-American last year, which she said has been her biggest honor so far.

"I take pride in working hard and being recognized on the All-American level as a student athlete," she said.

for her academics, but is recognized as a leader and role model by many of her teammates.

Colleen Bouck, an undecided sophomore from Mokena, said Koerner is a dedicated runner.

"Kim has great leadership qualities," she said. "She gets the team together — including freshmen."

Teammate Alison Fleming, a sophomore in biology from Glenview, believes Koerner is a role model and someone the team can look up to.

"Kim is almost like a mother figure to this team," Fleming said. "She is a great leader and is the previous transfer the student athlete received a (discontinued/un-sponsored, sport) exception.

Because Smith transferred from Michigan to Oklahoma and now to SIUC, and neither of the previous two schools have discontinued their football programs, Smith may not meet that exception.

Coach Shawn Watson is expecting the NCAA to render its decision soon, and he said there are simply no clear indications on what that decision will be at this point.

"We actually don't know yet to be honest with you," he said. "Right now we are going through a process that could be long and drawn out."

"The hopes are slight hopes, but we'll see if there is anything that might be able to come about."

Smith said he left Oklahoma with bitter feelings toward Oklahoma's head Coach John Blake.

"I didn't feel that my coach supported me on an academic matter with the academic board that I feel he could've cleared up easily," Smith said.

Smith hopes to play in the Salukis season opener against Central Arkansas Saturday.

Watson said that is up to the NCAA to decide.

"It looks like it's pretty cut and dry on one sense and maybe some hope on another," Watson said.

"It's just one of those things with the NCAA rules that you go into, and you hope that there's something there that you don't know about."

member of her family.

"It's rare to find someone in the sports world with such dedication to women's sports as Mitch had," she said. "I'm excited that he is getting inducted because he had such a love for the Hall of Fame and did his job with great zeal."

Some of the SIUC elite members that Hart spoke of relied heavily on Parkinson's devotion to his job as sports information director.

SIUC women's softball coach Kay Brechtelsbauer and women's basketball coach Cindy Scott both worked directly with Parkinson. He served both of them in the sports information capacity. Parkinson had the pleasure of seeing them inducted into the Hall of Fame in fall 1994.

Now Scott and Brechtelsbauer have the pleasure of seeing their former sports information director inducted.

"I'm thankful for Mitch and his family," Scott said. "I think he is very deserving of the honor."

Parkinson became the University's first full-time women's sports information director the very same season Scott began her quest to put SIUC's basketball program on the map.

While Scott was working on her program, Parkinson was pioneering the women's sports information program.

"Mitch made SIUC women's sports his life," Scott said. "He was one of the first full-time women's sports information directors in the country. He was totally dedicated to his job."

Among his many accomplishments, Parkinson enacted the first press policy and sports hotline for SIUC women's sports.

Brechtelsbauer said she will be pleased to witness Saturday's event.

Included in the induction are former football coach Rey Dempsey, basketball, standout Steve Middleton, softball player Mary Jo Fimmbach, basketball player Amy Rakers, volleyball player Pat Nicholson and gymnast Tom Linder.

Saturday's ceremony will take place during half-time.

Aside from running and attending school, Koerner still has a few hobbies she likes to do when she has time.

"I guess I would call myself a hippie chick," she said. "I like to walk around in my bare feet, go hiking and mountain biking. Just like other students, I like to go out on the weekends, and having fun keeps me sane."

Koerner said she is seen in a different light when she is a student compared to when she is an athlete.

"In the classroom, people would think I was quiet and a student who makes pretty good grades," Koerner said. "But at practice, people could say I'm obnoxious."

"I would consider myself a team builder. I run because it is fun, so I like to keep practices as fun as possible."

Koerner was described as energetic and outgoing by teammate Kelly French, a junior in respiratory therapy and health care management from Barrie, Ontario.

"Kim is always laughing and making everyone feel better," she said. "I don't have a bad thing to say about her."

Raina Larsen, a junior in physiology from Waterloo, is a roommate and teammate of Koerner's.

She said Koerner is an all-around good person.

"Kim is a very motivational person," Larsen said. "She is considerate of others and listens to what they have to say. She is always helping the team feel positive about themselves."

Larsen also said Koerner means a lot to the team.

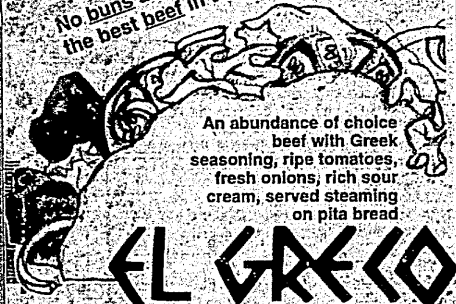

"Kim is a good team leader," she said. "She is always well organized in practice, following what the coach says and explaining it to the team."

Delfoof said he agrees with his team's feelings about Koerner.

"Kim is a positive person, always thinking of the good things that are out there, instead of the bad things," he said.

SPORTS TALK BY KEVIN DEFRIES

Webster's Dictionary lists my condition as being fat, corpulent, chubby, obese — and the one that scares me the most — overblown.

Weighing in at 195 pounds and standing only 5-foot-10-inches tall, I think it is safe to say that I am out of shape.

Not that being corpulently challenged, for lack of a more politically correct name for being fat, is a bad thing. I would just like to know what I have to do in order to see my feet without the use of a mirror.

My quest to see my feet again without the use of a couple of strategically-placed mirrors around the bathroom starts with one simple step — knowing what I have to do.

And that requires the help of a fitness evaluation at Sports Medicine located in the Recreation Center.

It is a big step for me because I fear the worst. What if I am so out of shape that they want to use my photo to encourage people to join Weight Watchers? What if they start yelling and say there is no hope for me? Or the worst: What if they send me to the injury evaluation department because they think I was hit by a bus and my entire body swelled?

But I will not let my fears stand in the way of getting in shape.

In the waning hours before the actual fitness evaluation test, I have to follow five simple rules a few hours before the test so it can be accurate:

■ No smoking. I have to put off the one thing that keeps me from inventing a meal between brunch and lunch.

■ No caffeine. So I will skip my first three classes and sleep until noon so I can feel alive without the use of Mountain Dew.

■ No eating. No eating?! I am only human. And anyway, how can a super-sized Big Mac extra value meal with a shake and a chunk of sugar-coated baker's chocolate throw the test off killer?

■ No exercise six hours prior. I started preparing for this when I was a little tike in the third grade.

■ Wear comfortable clothing for activity. I think I'll wear my blue muumuu with the red pumps (Reebok pumps).

The test was a little strenuous, but not enough to force me into the hospital for exhaustion. And the people were very considerate to my condition. There were no snickers — not the candy bar — even though they are always on my mind from behind closed curtains. And there were no fingers pointing at me during the test. I was at ease as each assessment test took place.

The evaluation was made up of a few simple tests that only lasted a few minutes apiece. I had to ride a bicycle for 10 minutes while the attendant checked my heart rate and blood pressure.

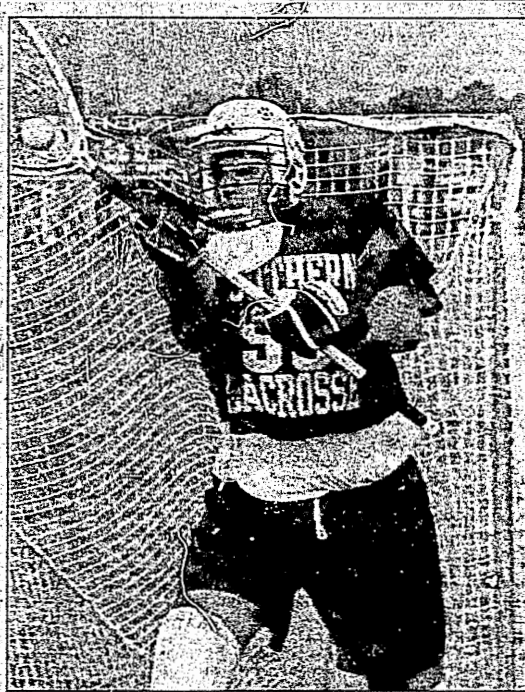

I also had to do pushups, sit-ups and test my flexibility by sitting on the ground and reaching forward. Those results, as well as my percent body fat, were all plugged into the computer, and I officially became a statistic in the health conscious '90s.

Once the test was finished, the attendant went over the results with me and told me what to do to improve on my overall rating of fair — not a good rating and certainly not an excellent rating.

I think that it was a just score for a guy who was scarfing down cheeseburgers for arm exercises just a week ago. We set goals that could be attainable in a few months — as long as I am committed.

For the next few months, I will attempt to become physically fit. That means no more beef sandwiches. And I definitely have to stop buying bags of donuts. They might as well be labeled as killers because of their fat count!

I will have to make changes in my life in order to change my fitness. Life is full of changes, as I learned this week. And if you don't move, you die. Or in my case, you get fat and out of shape. Excuse me, I mean corpulently challenged.

FOOTBALL

Eligibility uncertain

Smith's Saluki football eligibility questionable, may not be able to play until next season

By Michael DeFord
DE Sports Editor

Former Carbondale High School football standout Seth Smith may be a bigger question mark for the football Salukis than was reported by local media Wednesday.

Smith, a wide receiver who recently transferred from the University of Oklahoma, spent time on the Salukis' practice field Tuesday afternoon. But his visit to the team may be short lived — at least this year, anyway. Smith has two years of eligibility remaining on the collegiate level.

However, Smith's eligibility to play football at SIUC this fall is under NCAA scrutiny because he is a "double transfer."

Saluki senior tight end Damon Jones was able to successfully transfer to SIUC from Michigan in fall 1994 and play immediately during his sophomore year because he met the one-time transfer exception.

That exception allows a football player from a Division I-A school to transfer and play immediately at a Division I-AA school if certain conditions are met.

Smith signed with the University of Michigan out of high school but injured his shoulder during the fall 1993.

Following the 1994 season with Michigan, Smith left the Wolverines for Oklahoma but was forced to sit out the 1995 season under NCAA rules. After one year at Norman, Smith transferred to SIUC.

Hence the "double transfer." Under NCAA rules, "A transfer student from a four-year institution shall not be eligible for intercollegiate competition at a Division I, II or III institution until the student has fulfilled a residence requirement of one full academic year."

There are exceptions or waivers to the rule, but Smith failed to meet them at Oklahoma.

What may keep Smith from playing at SIUC is the one-time transfer exception, NCAA rule No. 14.5.5.3.11, which states that the athlete must meet all of five conditions.

One of those conditions requires that the student has not transferred previously from one four-year institution to another four-year institution unless in

Parkinson to be inducted into Hall of Fame Saturday

By Michael DeFord
DE Sports Editor

For six years, Mitchell Parkinson served as a liaison for the Athletics Department to the SIUC Hall of Fame. He will now share a space on the wall next to the athletes he once served.

Parkinson, who dedicated 18-plus years of his life as SIUC's women's sports information director, died at his home Aug. 21 at the age of 46.

Parkinson, along with six former Salukis, will be inducted into the Hall of Fame Saturday at McAndrew Stadium during SIUC's football game against Central Arkansas.

SIUC Athletics Director Jim Hart said little time putting Parkinson's name up for induction.

He said the selection committee raised no questions about naming Parkinson to the Hall of Fame.

"Mitch was the leader in the Hall of Fame festivities," Hart said. "It's only fitting for him to be included with the names that grace the walls of the Hall of Fame."

Mitch Parkinson

There was no question about it. It was a no brainer."

Hart said Parkinson took great pride in his role with the Hall of Fame and was equally honored to be a part of it.

He said Parkinson would be even more proud knowing he is now among SIUC's greatest sports figures.

"First of all, Mitch was the Hall of Fame — from top to bottom," Hart said. "If you had a question concerning the Hall of Fame, you asked Mitch."

"He would be honored and touched to have been a part of being inducted with such a successful group."

Associate Athletics Director Charlotte West hired Parkinson in 1978, following his graduation from the University of Tennessee.

She said losing him was like losing a
