Cease-fire holding in Sarajevo

U.S. officials unsure if Serbs will continue to honor peace plan

WASHINGTON--The U.N.-segregated cease-fire between Serb and Muslim factions in Sarajevo went into effect as scheduled Thursday, but U.S. officials said it remained unclear whether the Serbs plan to heed an ultimatum to remove their artillery from the area within 10 days. Although the Serbs have moved a handful of the 100+ heavy weapons they have placed near the city, a senior U.S. official said that there had "not been enough change" in the Serb deployment to "tell whether they (the Serbs) leaders have made a decision to -- or not to -- continue to withdraw their heavy artillery." Serb actions are being watched closely as an early indication of whether the new North Atlantic Treaty Organization ultimatum is likely to ease tensions in Bosnia or bring about the first allied military intervention there since the fighting began 22 months ago. Serb leaders gave conflicting signals. Radovan Karadzic, leader of Bosnia's Serbs, said that the artillery would be withdrawn soon. But Gen. Manojlo Milovanovic, head of the Serbs' army, called a pullback "out of the question" for the face of the ultimatum. Wire services reported that witnesses saw three heavy artillery shells crash into Sarajevo late Thursday night, followed by a heavy barrage of machine gun fire. But the White House and the Pentagon said the United States was seeking more information. It was not immediately clear whether the apparent breach, if it did occur, would trigger a military response from NATO. The Serbs have a limited national security adviser Anthony Lake had discussed the dilemma with Defense Secretary William J. Perry. Meanwhile, reaction in Russia took a more positive turn as the Russian Foreign Ministry moved to ease the effects of criticism by Russian nationalists that NATO's ultimatum would damage U.S.-Russian relations. At a briefing in Moscow, a Foreign Ministry spokesman told the news media that NATO's call for Serbs and Muslims to withdraw their heavy artillery, or place it under U.N. control, is "essentially close to" a Russian proposal to create a demilitarized zone around Sarajevo. A few hours later, Yeltsin's U.S. ambassador, called for an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council to revive the Russian proposal, which has been lying dormant for several months. The Russian proposal would not try to block NATO action. U.S. officials appeared to be encouraged by the Russian response. President Clinton told the news media that "we have no reason to believe at this point that there's a serious problem with our going forward with this plan." The developments came as the Clinton administration sought to dampen expectations that the air strikes would destroy the Serbs' artillery to assure the American public that the NATO action would not mark the start of an escalation of the conflict. At a briefing at the Pentagon, Deputy Undersecretary of Defense William H. Overton told the news media that the air strikes would be designed solely to reduce the threat of shelling on Sarajevo, not to knock out every Serb artillery emplacement.
QUESTIONS RISING OVER COMMUNE CONTROL — Who runs the Oak Park Commune International? Who owns it? — how much money do they raise and spend each year? Swam Sri Amrit, the commune’s chief public figure and the focal point of a tax evasion investigation (once known as Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh), telephoned with a prepared statement, saying the commune is not a billion-dollar development created by several public charitable trusts registered in India and audited by the competent authorities and, as such, accountable directly to the public.

GAZA STRIP DEPENDENT ON FINAL DEAL — Israel will not begin its withdrawal from Jericho and the Gaza Strip until all the details of the move are scrutinized by Palestinians, officials here said Thursday. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said that process may take “another month.” Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said in Amman, Jordan, that the work could be completed by “the end of the month.” Meanwhile, Israeli police said they suspected that more than 100 Palestinian workers from the peace plan are responsible for killing two Israelis Thursday.

CHINA REFUSES TO JOIN CALL FOR INSPECTIONS — China has refused a request to join the other four permanent Security Council members in calling North Korea diplomats that their country must allow international nuclear inspections, in a move that indicates an emerging split among the world’s powers over the volatile issue. In two recent meetings, U.S. diplomats in Britain and France proposed that, along with the United States, Russia, and China, should warn North Korean diplomats at the United Nations that the issue is almost certain to come to the Security Council this month. China refused to participate. In the delicate diplomacy surrounding North Korea’s refusal to allow inspections of its nuclear facilities, China signaled by its move that it will not close ranks with the West to impose sanctions on the isolated Communist government in Pyongyang even if it violates nuclear treaties.

MONEY WORRIES ADD TO NASA’S PROBLEMS — The release of President Clinton’s new budget for fiscal 1996 would have given NASA’s four-man budget team a $14.5 billion budget for its first year-to-year cut since the end of the Apollo moon program. Already on notice that the federal budget crunch would force Congress to chop even further, NASA Administrator Daniel S. Goldin warned Thursday that a budget statement this week, “This is it. We can’t get any closer to the bone.” Chevrolet in recent months for cost overruns and project failures, the agency has been reducing staff and changing management and procurement practices.

OFF-DUTY COPS GO ON SHOOTING RAMPAGE — Two off-duty Los Angeles police officers were arrested Tuesday after they went on a shooting spree, firing from the open windows of their pickup truck on the terrified passengers of a moving bus and a California Highway Patrolmatron, authorities said. Identified as Officers Michael Hernandez, 30, and Tim Collins, 32, the officers were arrested, each on charges of assault with a deadly weapon on a peace officer, and were being held on $25,000 bail each, said Deputy Rich Enclaire of the Los Angeles County Sheriff’s Department.

SCIENTISTS WINNERS IN BUDGET BATTLE — In a budget otherwise marked by cuts and caps, American scientists and research engineers emerged comparative winners this week. President Clinton’s proposed 1995 spending plan asks the Congress to boost support of research and development in the scientific and R&D, by 2.8 percent — or nearly $2 billion more than it is to spend this year. The budget proposal would reverse the situation of a year ago when the federal science budget was cut. During the last fiscal year the government spent $72.5 billion on all forms of science and engineering.

Beads beckon buyers in new mall shop

By John McCadd
Business Reporter

Beads are small and somewhat subtle, but for Carbondale resident Donna Stone, they also are a fashionable source of individuality. Stone, the owner of A Place to Bead in the University Mall, specializes in the sale of more than 4,500 varieties of beads.

She said her store provides an avenue for individual fashion freedom unlike any boutique, and often at a lower cost.

"A Place to Bead allows you to create your own necklaces, earrings, bracelets and other jewelry," Stone said. "(Beads) are empowering when you don't want to look exactly like everyone else." Stone opened the store in May after becoming inspired by similar bead stores in Chicago, Miami and St. Louis, she said.

The store offers many kinds of beads, including Jade, Onyx, Amethyst, bone and crystal glass. Beads can be spherical or rough-cut to resemble rocks, and are available in diameters that range from 2 mm to the size of a golf ball.

In addition to beads, the store sells everything necessary to create most kinds of jewelry, such as earring pins and necklace clasp.

Lincoln book celebrates history

By Jamie Madigan

Saturday is the anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birthday, and former SIUC professor George W. Smith's book, "When Lincoln Came to Egypt," may provide the perfect way to celebrate the holiday.

The book, first published in 1940, recounts Lincoln's travels through Southern Illinois and his famous debate with Congressman Stephen A. Douglas at Jonesboro in 1858. It was published again last year by Herrin's Crossfire Press, founded in 1989 by Gordon Press.

Smith, the first history professor of Southern Illinois Normal University in Carbondale, collected stories for his book for 50 years. George Simon was the founder of the history department in the 1890s, Pruitt said. "He was probably the only historian to track down legends and folklore — to determine what was true and what wasn't true (about Lincoln in Illinois)."

SIUC history professor John Y. Simon wrote the forward to this edition of the book.

Simon said he has been interested in both St. Louis Illinois history and Abraham Lincoln for many years. Simon said Lincoln is a fascinating figure in American history. "It's partly because of the rise from a log cabin to the White House," he said. "Even today we're not sure we understand him."

Muslim holiday explained: fasting, God become focus

By Angela Hyland
Religion Reporter

SIUC student Wan Kamal Wan Napi remembers begging his mother to let him take part in Ramadan celebrations when he was a child, but being forbidden because he was too young.

Ramadan is a month-long period in which Muslims fast from dawn until dusk as a way to become closer to Allah. Although sometimes children fast on weekends or part of a day, fasting during Ramadan is required only for adult Muslims who are free from sickness.

Although he was not allowed to fast for an entire day until he was 10, Wan Napi said he was permitted to fast just until the noon meal when he was younger.

"You cannot eat anything — no food, no water — you should only be focusing on God," Wan Napi, a senior in political science from Malaysia, said. "People who don't know (what it is like) say it is very hard."

"If you want to fast, you have to do it not only with food, but also with your eyes and your cars." Wan Napi said. "Everything must go together for one God."

Portions of the Koran are recited each night and by the end of the month, listeners have heard the whole text, he said.

At the end of Ramadan, Muslims celebrate with a large feast, where they exchange gifts, eat and visit friends, he said.

Academic programs serve SIUC mission

WHILE ADMINISTRATORS CONTEMPLATE
raising student fees in order to maintain the University’s athletics at their current level, three more Ph.D. programs in face termination this year. Once again, the Illinois Board of Higher Education is recommending that Liberal Arts Ph.D.’s in political science, sociology and physical education be eliminated.

Based on the results of the 1991 Doctoral review, the IBHE recommended eliminating 10 Ph.D. programs. This year SIUC has targeted the sociology, political science and physical education departments for review by the Graduate Council. In a meeting scheduled for later this month these departments will argue their respective cases before the council. This is the second year in a row that the sociology and political science departments have fought for these programs, in hopes of regaining the University’s confidence and support for the coming year.

The IBHE rates each of the programs as either poor or satisfactory, citing low graduate productivity, low entrance standards, and a lack of economic and educational justification. Most SIUC administrators argue that IBHE uses narrow slices of data in deciding the status of these core programs, and overlook their overall performance.

ELIMINATING THESE PH.D.'S IS NOT LIKELY to free revenue for other uses. Currently, departments such as sociology and political science have restructured the way they conduct graduate classes in teaching undergraduate classes. This saves money in the long run. Should programs be eliminated, the cost of replacing these doctoral students with faculty will likely to offset the potential savings. Also, elimination of such programs may represent a divergence from SIUC’s mission statement. The document supports the enhancement of undergraduate education and social development in Southern Illinois. The loss of doctoral programs eventually means a decrease in the quality of both instructors and students. These programs serve as magnets, attracting the best and brightest within a particular field.

SIUC IS NOT THE ONLY INSTITUTION FORCED to cut back on doctoral programs. The IBHE has recommended that each of Illinois’ five Ph.D-granting institutions eliminate four programs.

By previously eliminating doctoral programs in higher education, molecular science and communication disorders at the Carbondale campus, and one Ph.D. at the Edwardsville location, SIU has taken the lead in cutting programs in this area. Before considering further program cuts, the University should wait for other schools to make similar sacrifices. As of yet, the University of Illinois at Champagne-Urbana has axed only two of 16 programs recommended for elimination. In order to salvage doctoral programs, these schools have opted to decrease their scale or consolidate them with other programs.

SIUC ACADEMICS DESERVE FIRST PRIORITY. Even the least efficient doctoral program consumes far less University resources than athletics. These programs deserve the support needed to save them from elimination.

Letters to the Editor

Athletics help academics

This in response to the misguided opinion of Steve Estes in regards to the athletic fee. He wonders why we should finance the dreams of underprivileged students.

He also tells us he won’t tell us where the money for this stipend comes. In fact, graduate assistantships come under graduate tuition. Yes, Mr. Estes, the 19,500 undergraduates including over 400 athletes, subsidize the 4,000 plus graduate students here at SIUC. Talk about a supposedly elite group of students!

You state that we are not Notre Dame, academically or athletically. Where do you think Notre Dame’s academic programs would be if selfish people like you attended their university and got rid of athletic fees? The millions of dollars generated by a nationally ranked football program and then given to academics would dry up as the school would be devastated.

Since you live in a glass house and decided to start throwing stones, we offer the students an alternative: act your part. Our graduate programs are not and will never be MIT or Harvard level; so, should we follow the IBHE’s recommendations and eliminate those programs? They feel deserved cutting? Then we (the 19,500 undergraduate majority) should make sure that not a single cent of undergraduate tuition goes to an elitist student like yourself. Then we can start to build a strong athletic program, culminating in the basketball Salukis reaching the Final Four and generating millions for our academic programs.

Your priorities are not in the best interest if SIUI. Mr. Estes, They are best for you and your elitist friends. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Kyle Barton, sophomore, physical education and Cameron Wright, junior, history.

Athletics benefit few, cost many

What's surprising is absent in the debate over whether student fees should be increased is support athletics is any questioning of why the $1.2 million needs to be made up at all. Even student leaders opposed to the $40 fee increase assume that the money MUST be found somewhere.

In fact, it's time SIUC and other universities establish other priorities. The athletics department should simply absorb the $1.2 million cut and not waste precious time and resources trying to solicit corporate sponsorship or other funds. Too much money is already allocated to athletics, and I haven't seen any figures to indicate academics receive less than one time the proceeds generated by sports. In fact, once all operating, capital and maintenance costs are included, I'd bet athletics budgets are a significant drain on financial resources at most universities and that athletic departments are a self-contained economic bonanza for a minute percentage of students and university employees.

Certainly athletic programs can be an integral part of university education. That's why we have the student recreation center, sports clubs and other athletic resources. But intercollegiate athletics at least as currently organized is nothing more than publicly funded entertainment software for the mass media and corporate sponsors. Their affiliation with academics grows more tenuous with each passing year, as indicated by recent talks among big football universities of splitting with the NCAA over such issues as player equality.

If the NFL and the NBA want mini-league systems, they should develop and pay for them, as does professional baseball. But it's time to stop burdening students and taxpayers with the cost of big-time "collegiate" athletics and acknowledge that the current system has gone horribly awry.

Students are being told that the University has to eliminate state funds from athletics because the Illinois Board of Higher Education has told us to do so, the statement read.

"The proposal on our table to replace state funds is a doubling of the student athlete fee.

Never mind that the BHE has also told us to use state funds to increases to replace those state funds. So, on one hand, we must accept the BHE recommendation to eliminate state funds from football, on the other hand, we can absolutely ignore its recommendation.

"Students are tired of paying housing costs for food they are not eating," she said.

Festival attendance causes expansion

The SIUC International Festival has expanded greatly since it began in the late 1960s, with more participants and more programs this year, according to the festival officials.

"We get more and more people to come to our festival activities every year," said Wan Napi, who also is vice president of internal affairs for the International Student Council, said the festival has expanded from about four major programs in 1984 to 11 this year.

"The festival is much bigger and much longer now than when it first started working with it," he said.

Diane Hodgson, international student adviser for international Programs and Services, said the annual festival was started about 25 years ago.

Wan Napi, who is also president of the International Student Council, said the kind of programs and their time have changed since last year.

"If we look at the programs for this year we the leadership workshop for student leaders of international student associations, and the global interdependence video teleconference by satellite," Wan Napi said.

Wan Napi said the council also has changed the times for some of its programs to accommodate more people. The fashion and cultural show will move to Saturday and Sunday respectively instead of Friday and Saturday.

He said the biggest overall attendance has come in the cultural show, the international buffet and the fashion show. The international cooking demonstration and the cultural show are the most popular with U.S. citizens.

"You don’t have to travel around the world to experience other cultures when you can just come here to SIUC," he said.

Abolaji said he first got involved in the festival in 1984, left SIUC in 1985 and returned in 1989 to help with the festival again.

In 1984, the cultural show, the fashion show and the art show were the only major programs in the festival, and about 2,000 people attended. Abolaji said he said the attendance went up to about 12,000 in 1992, with about 3,000 coming from area elementary and high schools.

He said some of the new programs in the festival include the musical concerts, which feature Arabic music this year, the tax seminars that have been going on for about 10 years now, and the international cooking demonstration, which was started this year.

He said the festival was only two days long in 1986, but is now one week long.

James Kaiserberry, director of International Programs and Services, said he has been faculty adviser for the International Student Council for about five years, and program quality also has improved.

He said his first impression of the festival came from attending the cultural show and fashion shows. He said they seemed to carry on too long at first, but the shows and the festival itself have become better organized and higher quality.

Abolaji, student council leader, said they expect higher attendance this year, but they gave different estimates.

Omar Al-Bishawi, president of the Palestinian Student Association, said he does not know how many people attended the festival in the past, but he expects about 500 people for this year.

Wan Napi said he expected all 1,200 of SIUC’s international students to attend, but he only expected about 500 U.S. citizens.

Abolaji said he expects about 15,000 people to attend based on the attendance of the last few years.

Simon Agbeola performs with his band, Ghanatta, during International Week. He plays the conga, percussion for the group.

Leaders promote ‘bridges’ between different cultures

The SIUC International Festival’s 1994 theme, "Building Bridges for a Better World," is students leaders’ hope that the celebration will promote cross-cultural understanding between people at SIUC and the surrounding community.

Mike Spivak, president of the Undergraduate Student Government, said many racial and ethnic crimes come from a lack of understanding of cultural differences.

"Prejudice and hatred come from ignorance, but if this festival helps to eliminate some of the ignorance it will definitely solve some of our problems," he said.

Nancy Hunter Pefi, director of SIUC Student Development, also said the festival can promote better understanding about other cultures and lead to less racial and ethnic violence on campus.

"We need to be afraid of the unknown — once we get to know each other and become familiar with each other, it is not so easy to hate each other," she said.

"Once we begin to understand each other we start to notice the similarities more than the differences," said Omar Al-Bishawi, president of the Palestinian Student Association, said each program will educate people about other cultures in a different way.

For example, many cultures have death and marriage dances as well as some religious dances, so a program like the cultural show can show how each culture views life and death.

He said many cultures also have unique apparel for special occasions such as courtship and marriage.

"By allowing people to see international students wearing these outfits, the fashion show can show people how different cultures value different aspects of life," he said. "Usually international students wear shirts and jeans, so this is one of the few chances for people to wear their own culture’s apparel."

Abolaji said the International Arts and Crafts Exhibition also is a good way for people to learn about the cultural values of the countries the arts and crafts come from. For example, the Chinese Student

Celebration impacts students

The 1994 SIUC International Festival, one of the biggest student-run international celebrations in the nation, is making a big impact on the campus environment, community leaders say.

James Kaiserberry, director of SIUC International Programs and Services, said the festival is one of the largest international festivals run by students at a U.S. university.

Kaiserberry, who also is faculty adviser for the SIUC International Student Council, said SIUC is the only university in Illinois with a week-long international festival.

"Governor Jim Edgar has proclaimed a week-wide International Week, the same week as SIUC’s International Festival for the third year.

John Corr, director of the Student Center, said the festival is one of the Student Center’s largest events of the year.

"This (upcoming weekend) is one of our busiest weekends of the year, along with other other families when we are Homecoming," he said. "International week are the primary events of this building."

Omar Al-Bishawi, president of the Palestinian Student Association, said U.S. participants can come more about other ways of viewing life.

"With so many international people here, it’s a good chance for Americans to learn about us," he said.

Al-Bishawi said he expects about 18 countries to participate in the festivities, including Bulgaria, China, Palestine, Africa and Latin America.

Student Loui Turkey, Cyprus, Greece, India, Europe, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Japan, Malaysia, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Korea and Nepal who are expected to take part in the festival.

Al-Bishawi said the number of countries participating in the celebration and the number of students expected to attend, costs for running the events are large, international student leaders said.

"All of the events run by the International Student Council are free, so none of them are fundraisers," Al-Bishawi said.
College life, hip style sets comic stage

By Jamie MacDugan
Entertainment Reporter

Kansas City comedian Elliot Threatt says the comedy club scene is going out of style, so he is "going back to college."

"A couple of years ago it was really popular," Threatt said. "Now comedy is shrinking back into its niche — it's downsized."

Threat is this week's comedian at SPCC's Last Laugh Comedy Series. He will perform at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Center's Big Muddy room. Admission is $1.

Threat once was the house comedian for Norwegians and Royal Cruise Lines, but he said now he concentrates more on college.

"I like doing colleges," he said. "Everyone is kind of hip — it is like the clubs.

Threat describes his style as observational.

"I just like to do stuff about everyday life — I don't use any props or anything," he said.

He describes his comedic style as similar to Gary Shandling's.

"My style is kind of close to him — he has a higher voice, I have a whiny voice," he said.

Although he was once a finalist in Showtime's "Funniest Man in America" contest, Threatt said he does not know what it takes to win such honors.

"Funny is different things to different people," he said. "Funny to me is Jerry Seinfeld — he's so clever," he said.

Threatt, who has performed comedy for 11 years, said he is on the road 35 weeks a year.

When he is not on the road, Threatt said he likes to play tennis and spend time with his family.

"I have a son — I teach him little jokes," he said. "A lot of people use their kids as material, but I try to stay away from that."

Threatt said comedy clubs are not popular anymore because of television.

"I want to do some comedy writing," he said. "Most of these comedians doing colleges — 10 years from now, if they're lucky, will be writing sitcoms."

THIS YEAR A LOT OF COLLEGE SENIORS WILL BE GRADUATING INTO DEBT.

Each year you serve on active duty reduces your indebtedness by one-third or $1,500, whichever amount is greater up to a $55,000 limit. The offer applies to Perkins Loans, Stafford Loans, and certain other federally insured loans, which are not included in the debt relief.

Songs, book educate kids about culture

By Jeff McIntire

SUIC international students will have a chance to teach U.S. elementary school students children's songs from their home countries, university officials say.

"Musical Connections: Children's Songs From Around the World" is a compilation being put together by Naseem Ahmed, research assistant specialist from International Programs and Services, Javan Nelson, an SUIC curriculum and instruction professor and Gary Ritcher, an assistant professor in the School of Music.

A hand said that once the compilation is assembled, they will send a proposal to the Association of International Educators for a sponsorship grant in order to distribute the cassette to elementary schools around the country to promote multicultural understanding.

"I feel that incorporating multicultural education at the elementary level is becoming very popular now," she said.

Both SUIC international students and U.S. students are encouraged to submit entries for the tape, Nelson said.

The deadline for submitting songs is April 15, and interested students should call 453-7670 for more details.

Ahmed said the tape is expected to complement a book of children's stories that also has been distributed to schools and sold to faculty contacts in several countries.

The book, entitled "Raindrops," has sold more than 700 copies in Canada, Belgium and all over the U.S., Ahmed said.

"This is not just a storybook — this book tells children about other countries and other cultures through its stories," she said.

The books will sell at a 20-percent discount today at the IPS booth in the Student Center.

SIU students argue issues, native rights

By Marc Chase
Law School Reporter

A distinct SIUC law team that specializes in Native-American issues gained knowledge of a unique legal system during a recent moot court competition in Salt Lake City.

Participants in the Native American Law Student Association's competition included second-year law student Carol Willoughby, Paul Gada, Kimberly Pickens, and Wendy Goode. Although the participants are not Native Americans, they competed to gain knowledge of the unique legal system.

Coach Jill Adams said participants argued issues of sovereignty who own land within reservations.

"Our students (the law team) worked very hard on this topic," Adams, who also has done legal work and has taught on reservations, said. "This (Native American law) is a very intricate and complicated form of law, and our team handled it very well."

Adams said the Willoughby and Gada team made its way into quarter-finals and the Pickens and Goode team participated in the first round of competition. Willoughby said the competition was an example of enthusiasm that SIUC law school faculty put into extra-curricular programs.

Gada said the competition also provided an opportunity for students to confirm their abilities in the law.

"I found out that, personally, I could be a good trial attorney if I wanted to be," Gada said. "Two of the judges confirmed that."

Each participant wrote a 35-page argument and a brief for submission to the moot court, and then each two-people were spoke for 20 minutes attempting to convince the court of their case's validity.

The competition was judged by attorneys from tribal courts and reservations, Willoughby said. Adams said that kind of competition helps expand law students' knowledge of the legal field.

Both Willoughby and Gada said the competition helped prepare them for the many legal problems in modern society.

"It really stressed things you need to succeed in the real world," Gada said.

However, this does not include the International Buffet and Menu Week, both of which are run by Student Center Catering, he said.

Mohamed Ali Khan, vice president for institutional affairs for the council, said the festival costs about $15,000.

He said the council must pay about $9,000, and the rest will be paid by the Student Center, International Programs and Services, and local businesses.

Congress members solicit sponsorship donations from local banks and businesses, and the rest of the council's expenses are paid by student activity fee allocations, Khan said.

Nancy Hunter Pei, director of student development for SIUC, said the festivities will help create a positive campus environment.

"Anytime we are able to expose each other to different racial and ethnic backgrounds that's definitely a plus," she said.

Quarantine said the festival has a nationwide importance because of SIUC's national prominence in international student enrollment. SIUC ranks 11th in the nation for international enrollments, with 2,100 students from more than 100 countries, she said.

"The festival provides them with the opportunity to educate each other about their cultures," she said.

Perhaps they’ll even take a break around noon and strike up a conversation.

Harding: “Is that lunch? Jump you for it.”

Kerrigan: “Okay, triple Lutz, off the wall... through the good, coach the Northern Lights, land on your outside edge.”

Of all the outrageous and unbelievable things to come out of the Harding-Kerrigan story, this tops them all. Unless the Kerrigan came to figure skating with a 5-minute-reprieve, she will have to skate around, jump near and try to avoid the woman who lives with the man who has admitted and pleaded guilty to plotting to attack her. Although Harding herself has not been charged in the plot that led to the clubbing of Kerrigan’s right knee, she has admitted knowing about it all the fast, and she has not shown much concern about any of it. For instance, four days after the attack, on her arrival back in Portland, Ore., Harding said she would “trip Kerrigan’s butt” at the Olympics.

So now we’re at the Olympics. Tell me, if you’re Nancy Kerrigan, do you want to be anywhere near Tonya Harding? Especially when you’re both on skates?

Those practice sessions are not little skate-rounds for some pretty women who have skills and style. They are rigorous workouts, 45 minutes long, two times a day. Six or seven skaters comprise each of four practice groups and share the ice during a session, all fine-tuning their routines at the same time. Each gets a chance to perform her program, but, even then, the others don’t stop and watch. They just try to avoid the one whose music is playing.

Because they skate very fast and jump all the time, they constantly look over their shoulders to make sure no other skater isn’t in their path. Sometimes they see each other, sometimes they don’t. When they don’t, the collisions can be horrific. Just last month at the U.S. Olympic trials, ice dancer Renee Rouse fell into another skater during practice and broke her wrist, forcing her out of the competition.

Figure skating practices are as close as the sport comes to scambling hockey. At the 1992 Olympics in Albertville, gold-medal contender Midori Ito of Japan was caught in a fracas with Surya Bonaly of France during a practice session. Just as Ito was coming into her first jump, Bonaly cut in front of her and did a backflip, a move that is not allowed in competition.

Oversold by Bonaly’s bravado, he continued practicing, but missed seven of 10 attempts at her triple Axel. The next day, she took the triple Axel out of her technical program and replaced it with a triple Lutz, which is easier. But she fell on that jump, practically handing the gold medal to American Kristi Yamaguchi.

On Tuesday, the International Olympic Committee made a big deal about how the Kerrigan-Harding story absolutely, positively would not take over the Winter Games. At the same time, the ISU was denying a U.S. request to reconsider putting Kerrigan and Harding together in practice.

So, while one international group said it didn’t want the figure skaters to grab all the attention, another ensured that they will. If it was women’s figure skating competition is the biggest story of these Games, women’s figure skating practice Group 1 now has become the second-biggest. You can already see the cameras whirling as Kerrigan and Harding pass within a foot of each other in their first minute together on the ice. And if they happen to bump into one another, be sure there’s space on the front page of every newspaper in the w.25.

Dawgs’ fate rests with weekend game

Tulsa, Bradley still fighting to get back on top

By Dan Leahy
Sports Editor

The fight for the top spot in the Missouri Valley Conference begins this weekend with the SIUC-Tulsa clash.

The Salukis will stand alone in first-place if they can pick up the tough road win, while Tulsa will either move into a first place tie (if Bradley wins) or stand alone at the top (if Bradley loses).

SIUC fans can watch the Bradley game develop via Saturday morning, as the Braves home game against Indiana St is on MVC-TV at 11:05.

The Bearcats have traveled enough road games to have a shot at the MVC title, though, as SIUC still has tough road games at Northern Iowa and Illinois State after the Tulsa battle.

But tough is how Mirko Pavlovic likes it.

"For me, it's much easier to play hard against good teams because you just come up when you're ready to play and you're motivated," Pavlovic said.

"Teams that are not that good, it's a little hard to motivate yourself." Pavlovic said.

The Salukis should not need much more motivation than the fact that Tulsa won at the SIUC Arena three weeks ago.

The loss still stands as the only home defeat for the Dawgs.

The Salukis should not need much more motivation than the fact that Tulsa won at the SIUC Arena three weeks ago.

The loss still stands as the only home defeat for the Dawgs.

SIUC head coach Rich Herrin said the Salukis will have to keep Tulsa out of its transition game.

"If you'll remember back to the game at the Arena, we got down by 10 or 11 points and came back to within three," Herrin said.

"Then they got a couple of quick run-out baskets on us because we wore out. So we have to stop that transition game." Pavlovic said.

The Salukis also will need senior guard Chris Lowery to step it up a bit, as Lowery has hit on just seven of his last 20 attempts from the field.

"Lowery has been tough on defense and a playmaker on offense, but his shots have to start falling for the Salukis to win the conference.

The SIUC bench will also have to step up for the Salukis to win, as Ian Stewart and Marcelo da Silva have played some limited minutes lately. Stewart needed seven stitches to close a gash on his right eye which occurred from a collision in Wednesday night's contest.

The Bearcats think Stewart will play, but will have to wait for the word from the trainer.

The action at the Tulsa Convention Center begins at 7 p.m. The game will be broadcast on 101.5 WCIL-FM radio.

Track teams hosting 5th Saluki Invitational

James J. Fares
Sports Reporter

The SIUC men's and women's track and field teams will be happy to be running in their own backyard as they host the Fifth Annual Saluki Invitational this weekend in the Student Recreation Center.

The Saluki men will be looking to team standouts Brian Miller, Neil Emberton and Garth Akei for top performances this weekend.

After the Salukis showed they could compete with the best last weekend in the Indiana Invitational by placing in six events, they should be ready for the tough competition this week under their own roof.

The Dawgs strong side of the team, middle-distance running and shot put, should make the difference this weekend.

Miller has been on a tear this season recording throws of well over 50 for most of his meets. He qualified for nationals two weeks ago.

Akei and Mark Russell help lead the Saluki attack in the middle and long distance running events, as they have churned out impressive times in recent competition.

Three-time All-American high jumper Cameron Wright is still looking to qualify for nationals this weekend in the Rec Center.

With a big meet from Wright the Salukis would be right where they want to be in the hunt for the Missouri Valley Conference Championships.

Emberton has shown plenty of improvement over the last couple of weeks as he has placed in the top five in the mile consistently week in and week out.

The women will also be participating in the Saluki Invitational as they look to freshen speedster Lesley Lashin to lead the team to two wins in the last four years.

The nine-team scored meet features Alabama-Birmingham, Memphis St., Murray St., Mississippi St., Southern Mississippi, Tennessee St., Vanderbilt, and MVC foe Indiana St.

Indiana St. will be the team to beat this weekend," SIUC Coach Don DeNoon said.

Indiana St. finished fifth in nationals last year and it boasts the premier sprinter in the college ranks today in Hellhi Hyche. She was the 55 meter and 200 meter National Collegiate Athletic Association indoor champion in 1993, and she set the SIUC Rec Center record in the 200 (33.72) last year at the Saluki Invitational.

DeNoon said the variety of competition will make this an interesting meet.

"However, other teams that are competing this weekend have solid athletes as well as those type of teams that can sneak up on you and take points away," DeNoon added.

"We believe we have a very exciting field of athletes coming in and these type of meets are the ones that the public should see.

Women hoopers take to the road

By Grant Deady
Sports Reporter

Who ever said getting there was half the fun never had to travel from: Carbodale to Omaha, Neb., and then to Des Moines, Iowa, in one weekend by bus.

That's the route the SIUC women's basketball team will follow on this weekends' two game road trip to battle Creighton and Drake.

The Salukis women will have a chance to redeem their loss to the Lady Bluejays, who nipped them at the Arena on Jan. 15. The task isn't going to be an easy one, though, since Creighton is atop the Missouri Valley Conference with an 8-1 record.

Kris Kulp leads the Jays along with fellow starters Shannon Struby and Tracy Landyutz. Creighton also boosts the 1993 MVC Newcomer and Freshman of the Year in Becky Flynn, who averages over 13 points per game this season.

A win in Omaha by the Salukis (5-3) would tighten things up in their run for a conference crown and create a crucial match-up with Southwest Missouri State on Feb. 26 at the Arena. SMSU is currently a game behind Creighton in the MVC standings.

SIUC and Creighton will tip off tonight at 7:30.

In the second leg of its trip, the Saluki women head to Des Moines (8-4) for a game with the Lady Bulldogs on Sunday afternoon.

Junior Kristi Kline is the key player to stop when facing Drake, as she averages better than 12 points per contest. Kinne and 5-foot-11 frontline teammate Kristin Lynch give the Bulldogs a potent inside attack.

Early indications that standout Saluki forward Rockey Ransom would be able to return from her knee injury this weekend, which he injured in the victory over Missouri State on Jan. 23.

Editor's note:
When trying to capture the full impact of Valentine's Day on SIUC students, we here at the magazine wanted an honest, if brutal, personal experience story from a male and a female student. After two of our reporters were assigned this task, To try and fall in love in ten days in Carbondale, to see if it is even possible, we came back with some good stories. to tell, they came back with some new outlooks on the whole thing. for one, am just glad they came back alive.

Sports Assignment, Reporting

Words of love by live:
D: All the world is but a stage and we are merely the players in auditioning for act of love.
M: Let's, and the world lists with you, love, and you love alone.

D: When I get the assignment to fall in love by Valentine's Day "by any means necessary" I was not sure what it meant.
M: I don't know if it really can work that quick. Can it?
D: No, but you can sure have fun trying.
M: You can find love in ten days.
D: love?
M: I think you had an easier time simply because you are a guy, and guys are expected to have love.
D: I think girls are basically insecure, and aren't ready to pick up on the signals when a guy acts as if he is interested. Sometimes, you just can't help but be blantly.
M: Define blatant.
D: The key to seduction is eye contact, direct eye contact. You have to say with your eyes and your facial expression that there is initial, that special, that passion potential. That there isn't, there's no attraction.
M: I agree that eye contact is important, but it's hard to make eye contact with a guy that's staring at your chest.
D: So who was your first victim?
M: His name was "Tom" and while he was rather attractive, he was also rather drunk. I decided to "talk" to him Thursday night at Detrash's. I found him from the hospital because I had stumbled over him a couple of times.
D: I was always late for class and he sat on the aisle.
D: So what went down? Dancing, drinking, candlelight.
M: Unfortunately, no romance. We danced a hit, then he left with his buddies. Two nights later, I was at the Laundromat, hopping for a little smoothing in the wash. I met a guy who I thought was perfect, he had a girl that looked like "Little Orphan Annie" and he pretended not to know who I was. He was my first victim?
D: I meet her at a T楔day Night Tequila Feast at the Hangover. I was dancing with a friend and she motioned me over to her corner of the dance floor. She had seen me perform last semester at the Beach Ball.
M: Was she a crooked fan?
D: I remember after the show she told me "you're so good I almost cried." I did get a bit out of control, ripping strings off my guitar, swinging around on the floor like a freshly hit ball, and continuing the guitar solo all the while.
D: So she took me out to be "The One?"
M: She could have been, I guess. We went back to her place at Mac Smith and we immediately fell in love with each other. Atkinson of her friends. We shut off the lights and started at blackout posters while listening to some psychedelic rock and roll.
M: Any interesting conversation?
D: We did have a conversation in a darkened end lounge and watched the star. She was so genuinely honest, so naturally naive. She was also very much a girl that was long for me. I'll never forget when she said with total wonderment, "Wow, just like a few months ago I was like watching you perform on stage and now you're here with me, holding me." What if I never grew born? Who would be here with you then? Or would anybody be here at all? I'm not sure what was on her mind.

D: Sounds innocent, was her name Mary. Have you talked to her since then?
M: We danced to the Violent Femmes on Saturday night at Detrash. She left early without saying goodbye. She was a bit wasted, but called two people to find out my number so she could apologize. Finally.
M: I met a pretty nice guy Saturday night at the Hangover. There was an incredible steel band playing, and I was singing in my best Bob Marley imitation while pretending to be Obi - one guard dancing as me. I whirled and twirled, I suddenly slammed into an innocent bystander - who just happened to have a great set of teeth. Our eyes locked, and it was then I knew I had probably broken his arm when I danced into him.

M: "He was drunk and romantic at night and neither of those in the morning. He dropped me off with a 'See ya later.'Yeah, right, buddy."
D: "Romance, dancing and drinking can be a potentially dangerous combination. You end up going home at the end of the night with what seems like Cindy Crawford, but wake up in the morning next to something a bit closer to Rosanne Barr."

Student band blends ska sounds with Cajun flavors

BAND SPOTLIGHT

By Dan Perry

Student band blends ska sounds with Cajun flavors

We decided to call our Secret Cajun Band after listening to the songs of the the first band to play ska in the area. Their music was a fusion of traditional Cajun music with jazz, blues, and rockabilly influences. The band was formed in 1993 by a group of high school students who were interested in music and wanted to bring new sounds to their community.

One of the band members, John Hargrett, said, "We wanted to create something that was different from the usual rock and roll we were hearing around us. We wanted to bring in some of the unique sounds that come from Louisiana's rich musical heritage." He added that the band members were inspired by local musicians such as They Came In Drives, Suede Octaves, and the Coconuts.

The band's sound is a mix of upbeat ska beats with Cajun fiddle and accordion, creating a unique and entertaining experience for listeners. Drawing the line

Devilish dialogue distinguishes slapper from duff

By Beth Gellert and Katie Morrison

Load music, load, to shoulder people, and then you see. Your eyes meet, and then you look away. You look back and now she's looking at you, eye contact. Let the games begin.

You want to go out and talk to her. You smile and try your very best, your mouth is dry. What do you say?

Say something, say something about a common interest, for example, love. Looking for a Valentine's sweetheart, fear not. There is one sure-fire way to woo Mr. or Ms. Right — the pick-up line.

And, if said the right way, it can break the ice. Then again, alcohol sometimes has the same effect.

If the person on the receiving end of pick-up pack is been drinking, the lines sound quite different.

"SUU student Angel DeGallo, said, "If you are drunk, the lines sound телефон.

There is a method to this madness — a science if you will. Part of that science is known as body language. Body language can be bold, sweet, conversive, comical, or flirty.

Another part of the science is delivering the line with the right type of voice.

This is crucial, because if you don't sound sincere, at least amusing, you will crash and burn, into a wall of human masturbation.

After extensive research, a list of least and most favorite lines has been composed.

Some times at your own risk.
The Daily Egyptian is not liable for the future.

Let's start simple with the conversive approach.
You might say:

- Hey, you sure have pretty eyes.
- What a nose you have.
- How about your mouth.
- How about your legs.

Let's take a reverse approach. Are these lines of the same mold? When you sweeter off of their feet

Maybe a bolder approach is in order —

Lonely souls find solace in tradition

Valentine's Day has a special significance for most people.

For the romantic, it is a time to show their feelings. For the single, it is a time to procure a few extra shares in the Hallmark and Tovia corporations.

Although many of us are perfectly content to be alone Valentine's Day is a time when no one is a single, man in love.

Lovers celebrate romance on the silver screen virtually every film from "Dr. Zevago" to "Addams Family Values." On the radio, Barbara Streisand proves it; "I am so very alone."

For women who are single by circumstance, rather than choice, commercial sensationalism can be a painful reminder of failed relationships or past rejection.

Valentine's Day does not have to be depressing.

One year when I was in high school, several of my friends and I found ourselves dateless for the annual 'Sweethearts' Dance. We were, we created a new tradition.

Instead of sitting at a table and feeling sorry for ourselves because our boyfriends were at work or away or simply nonexistent, we had a sort of female bonding party — bring your own Dove bars.

"In order to save my hard earned money I avoid buying anything for my girlfriend on Valentine's Day by getting into a fight with her on February 13th every year.

This is the advice of Blake Thill, an undecided sophomore from Naperville, given that love tends to be a very expensive proposition.

Valentine's day often can separate the student college student looking to spend $5 on flowers,

"We sell boxes of candy, bags of sweet treats for one day and mugs for one dollar a manager of the Dollar Tree.

"At Mall-Mart we have for under $5 fingerless gloves, plush bears with hearts for assistant manager Georgia George.

Although one can be cheap, Valentine's day, being respected by your loved one is often achieved by spending a large sum of money.

"Last year my boyfriend bought me a plastic cellophane bag with six candy hearts tied together by a red string. His explanation was that he didn't get into holidays," Kristine Miller, senior in psychology from Evanston said.

Going out to dinner is an alternative to the usual flowers and candy routine, but one must beware of not to feel a false sense of generosity just because one is buying dinner.

"We tend to go out to eat on Valentine's Day," September," Michelle River, from Wheelock said. "We haven't done it in a few years, but we did it in the past.

The group made plans to give their boyfriend a special Valentine's Day gift but were unable to make a plan at all.

Then you look a way. You look bad and now you look good. In the Hallmark and for your. People who are single.

The re isn't method to this madness — a science if you will. Of the many albums contain, wonderful love songs, but his latest album, "I Am in Love," is the best. It contains tunes of all types, from the upbeat "Recipe for Love" and the album's power single like "Darling." The New Orlean musician can put listeners in tune with his suave renditions of romance classics.

Personal favorite: "I'll Dream Of You Again."

R&B songs are the favorite. R.K.B artist on Braxton's 1993 self-titled album is perfect to listen to while cuddling with someone you love. Her S-Voices soothing voice can relax you.

Personal favorite: "How Many Ways."

Those who saw Whitney Houston's 1993 acting debut in "The Bodyguard" can find in the same magnitude on the 1992 soundtrack. Houston's remake of Dolly Parton's "I'll Always Love You," skrneketon No. 1 in a chart for weeks.

Personal favorite: "Run To You." R&B newcomers Shai, the young quartet that visited the SUU Arena last fall, create sweet sounds with their fresh, new harmony. The group made plans to give their with their debut album, "If I Ever Fall in Love," and their album's release tunes cause them to be compared to Beyoncé, the ultimate love song.

Personal favorite: "Together Forever."

Few singers have the grace and romanticism of artist Vanessa Williams. Her 1991 album, "The Comfort Zone," span off the No. 1 hit "Save The Best For Last," the ultimate love song.

Personal favorite: The jazz, nightclub tune. "What Will I Tell My Heart."

There are many other love songs waiting in the racks of local music stores, so if you plan a candlelight dinner at home Feb. 14, take the date complete with romantic songs from your favorite artist.
Unusual ideas replace traditional holiday gifts

A dozen roses, a heart-shaped box of candy, a note that says "I'll love you till Valentine's Day!" from a secret admirer.

Sweet — Yes. Unique — No. Traditional — Yes. To break away from the conformity of love in mind, the Hauptman said. "We lock our heart shapes, heart-shaped candies and other items." Hauptman said. He and his wife also give the gift shop manager, said these items run under $7 and make great gifts.

You can find boxes all over the world, including heart-shaped candles, necklaces and rings, which run from $1 to $5.

Ron Bruce, who co-owns the Shri-Dan Hallmark Center at the Mundale Shopping Center, with wife Tina, said the week before Valentines is the busiest time of the year for the store.

"Items may not move well, but on the other hand, they are nice, gifts that are unique," Hauptman said. "We also have little wooden necklaces that say 'I love you' and these make nice gifts for children." Diana Walker, store manager for Pier 1 Imports, 140 E. Main, said the store has a wide range of items for sale that incorporate the traditional Valentine's Day motif.

"Unusual gift that we have is the 'Choc-o-lot,'" Walker said. These are heart-shaped tortillas with caramel and chocolate over the top.

The unusual gift, the chocolate spoon, mulls when it is used to stir beverages giving it a thick chocolate flavor. Walker said. "We also have heart-shaped Daisy baskets, champagne glasses, and bath beads and other items that will appeal to Valentine Day enthusiasts," Walker said.
