Young at Heart

An energetic Simon finds that the hardest part of bypass surgery is the long road to recovery.

DANA DUBRIWNY
STUDENT AFFAIRS EDITOR

Reaching for his trademark bow tie and compiling academic syllabi, Paul Simon is returning from his recovery days of reading through junk mail, completing jigsaw puzzles and keeping tight tabs on the presidential impeachment trial.

Simon, director of the SIU Public Policy Institute and a classroom instructor in journalism, history and political science, is recuperating following an extensive heart bypass surgery Jan. 5 at St. John's Hospital in Springfield.

"At first I read the mail and did a little dictation," Simon said. "I did jigsaw puzzles. It must be 25 years since I last did a jigsaw puzzle, but you want something to occupy your time."

Doctors discovered the heart problem when Simon went in for testing after reading an article in Newsweek magazine.

"I thought, 'What the heck? It can't do any harm,'" Simon said. "It's something you wouldn't have done ordinarily unless there was some indication of a problem because it is a very slight risk, but a risk never the less. The doctor said, 'You have blockage, and sooner or later we are going to have to have a bypass operation,' and I said 'Let's do it tomorrow.'"

An instinctive Simon was supported by his wife Jeanne, who was astonished yet relieved his condition was detected before any complications arose. Although the decision to follow through with the procedure was in Simon's best health interests, Jeanne admitted time in the hospital was less than pleasant.

"He had tubes, respirators and full-time nurse attendants," Jeanne said. "It was sad to see him all tubed up — he didn't look like my husband

Paul Simon, former U.S. senator and director of the Public Policy Institute, is slowly working his way back into his daily routine following an extensive bypass surgery.

Early detection key to coronary health

FRANK KLIMAS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Early detection and prevention of heart disease is the best Valentine you can give to your heart.

Former U.S. Senator Paul Simon, professor and director of the Public Policy Institute, knows this after becoming interested in his own heart. Simon decided to have medical tests conducted that led to his recent coronary heart bypass surgery in January.

A coronary bypass is a surgical procedure that provides an alternate route for blood to flow into the heart when blood cannot flow through an artery because of a blockage.

According to Dr. Harry Wellons, the surgeon who performed Simon's coronary bypass, Simon had significant blockage. Two-thirds of people living in the United States will develop some kind of blockage, Wellons said.

"Most people die from this disease," Wellons said. "Coronary bypass surgery is more predictable and has better long term results than angioplasty — a 90 percent or better success rate."

Angioplasty is a widening of the blood vessels with a miniature balloon inserted into the artery. This can overstretch the blood vessel but may not be useful in severe cases. The plaque is normally not removed from the body — it remains in the blood vessel.

There are two methods of coronary bypasses according to Hurley Myers, a professor of physiology and internal medicine at the SIU School of Medicine. One method is to remove a vein in the patient's leg and use it to channel blood past the blockage and into the heart.

The other method is called an internal mammary artery graft. An artery in the chest is cut and moved to the heart where it is grafted, or attached, to the heart in a place past the blockage.

In Simon's case, he received both procedures.

Wellons said he used the internal thoracic artery from each side of the breast bone and attached it to the heart. He also used a vein from Simon's right leg.

The patient's heart needs to be stopped to perform the procedure. According to Myers, stopping the heart during this procedure is actually safer than letting it beat.

Simon's heart was stopped. He was kept alive with a heart and lung machine. Stopping the heart in a bypass is common practice, according to Wellons.

"It's safe to stop the heart for periods of up to two hours or so," said Wellons. "I've done this thousands of times. Each time the heart started right up."

Simon was released from St. John's Hospital in Springfield Jan. 9 — just four days after the operation.

"The Senator sailed right through it," said Dr. James T. Dove, a cardiologist who has known and offered medical advice to Simon for 10 years.

"He went into it with a good attitude and great family support. That's why his recovery process was so fast."

According to Dove, early detection of heart disease could get a person back to an active life quickly. The earlier the detection, the better. In Simon's case, he acted early before any serious problems could develop.

Campus issues warning after random knifing

STORY BY JAYETTE BOLINSKI

A campus safety alert was issued by University officials Wednesday in connection with an assault that occurred south of the Student Center Tuesday night.

An unidentified, 19-year-old campus employee, who is not an SIUC student, was in a crosswalk just south of the Student Center entrance about 8:15 p.m. Tuesday when he was approached by a dark gray or brown Honda compact vehicle.

A passenger in the vehicle jumped out, pulled a knife and grazed the victim's body.

The attacker then returned to the car, which had other passengers, and drove away.

The victim refused immediate medical treatment after running for safety and calling the police.

Sam Jordan, University Police chief, said as of Wednesday afternoon there are no suspects and no apparent motives in the attack, and police are unsure if this was an isolated incident.

Jean Paratore, associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs, said campus officials decided to issue a campus alert for this incident because it involved an assailant who was unknown to the victim.

Police said the suspect is a black male about 5 feet 5 inches tall and 120 pounds. He was last seen wearing a black T-shirt, black Adidas pants and white tennis shoes. He may have a tattoo or spot on his left forearm.

Anyone with information about this crime should call the SIUC Police Department at 453-2381 or the Crime Stoppers Tipline at 549-2677.

Almanac

THIS WEEK IN 1967:

- Movies appearing in Carbondale were Woody Allen's "Who's Up Tiger Lily?" and Federico Fellini's "La Dolce Vita."
- The Saluki men's basketball team was on the road looking for its ninth straight win. This ninth consecutive win would put the Salukis within three of the all-time SIUC winning streak of 12 games.
- A new electron microscope was introduced on campus and was situated in the Life Sciences Building, while another one was located in a building on South Marion St. An electron microscope can magnify structures two million times, which aided in research in a myriad of the science departments.
- This month was the first time ever that the Filet-O-Fish sandwich from McDonald's appeared on the menu. "A crisp golden Filet O' Fish served piping hot on a plump, toasted bun with plenty of zesty tart sauce to give you a real adventure in good eating!"

Professional staff calls for union vote

JAY SCHWAB
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC Professional Staff Association filed a petition with the Illinois Labor Relations Board Wednesday, taking the first step toward ending its status as the largest unrepresented group at SIUC.

Consequently, an election is expected to take place to determine whether the PSA will be the exclusive representative for all non-administrative, non-managerial professional staff at the University.

How quickly the election takes place is contingent upon the expedience of the Illinois

Educational Labor Relations Board in certifying the petition — a timeframe of which organizers are unsure.

The PSA, which is conducting a union-organizing drive to secure collective bargaining rights for 400 SIUC administrative and professional staff employees, operates in conjunction with the Illinois Education Association/National Education Association.

The IEA/NEA is an organization that unites more than 98,000 public education employees throughout the state.

GPSC gears up for next week's council meeting

DAN CRAFT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Graduate and Professional Student Council seized one final opportunity Tuesday night to review the landlord/tenant issue before the proposed ordinances go before the Carbondale City Council next Tuesday.

GPSC President Michael Speck told the council he had placed the landlord/tenant ordinances on the Carbondale City Council agenda for Tuesday because he was not able to get all six items on the Feb. 2 agenda as GPSC had planned.

He said each point was a separate ordinance. He expected some of the points, such as a 48-hour notice of a landlord's intent to enter, to pass easily, while others such as an ordinance that would allow tenants to perform some repairs without having to consult their landlords might be heavily opposed by landlords.

Each of the points came from the original landlord/tenant agreement written by GPSC member Terry Dodds. After receiving much opposition to the document from landlords and the council, GPSC narrowed it down to six points that were considered priority items.

GPSC, along with the Undergraduate Student Government, has been pushing for reform in the relationships between student tenants and landlords for about a year, beginning with a survey of Carbondale tenants last fall.

Speck also informed the council additional options had been suggested by USG and the landlords. One such plan being researched by USG President Jackie Smith would bring back a landlord/tenant union that folded several years ago, placing it under either student government or Student Development jurisdiction.

Student activist Rob Taylor also is trying to form a Registered Student Organization to deal with landlord/tenant problems.

The idea of a mediation program, which would handle landlord/tenant disputes through the SIU Law School, also was brought up. Under this program, landlords would volunteer to take all their disputes through the Law School and would in return receive an approval.

Speck stressed that such a program is only in the early planning stages and may not come about.

Both Dodds and Speck asked GPSC members to bring as many people to the City Council meeting as possible. Dodds said student support would be essential in persuading City Council members to vote in favor of the ordinances.

"The city still appears unwilling to listen to the concerns of SIUC student leaders," Dodds said. "The city clearly needs to do something about this situation. Students are the most important thing in this town. I don't understand why the landlords have so much influence. They're only one vote apiece."

Study links MBA students' ethics to prison inmates'

Companies looking for a few good hires may want to recruit from local prisons before heading over to local business schools, a new study suggests.

It's not that MBA students are sleazeballs, it's just that convicted felons enrolled in college courses are more honorable and ethical than you might expect, the study's authors said.

Marketing professors James Stearns of Miami University and Shabean Borna of Ball State University interviewed 300 inmates attending higher education programs at three minimum-security prisons in the Midwest. They compared the responses with those given by MBA students at 11 business schools.

Stearns and Borna found that when faced with tough business decisions the prisoners showed just as much integrity as the MBA students - and in some cases even more.

Among other specific findings:

- Inmates were more likely to follow orders in ethically difficult situations, regardless of whether the outcome would be positive or negative.

- Inmates were less likely than business school students to "pirate" workers with specific, valuable skills from competing companies.

- Companies were more interested in customer service than MBA students, who tended to focus more on pleasing stockholders.

The professors said they hope their findings will encourage more business owners to give former prisoners a chance in the workplace.

Andersen postponement a good idea

The University is immersed in a debate as to whether or not it should consolidate its purchasing and disbursement functions into one center operated out of one of the SIU campuses.

Basically, the issue comes back to two central questions — Can we operate more efficiently as a University and save money?

And if we can, what's the best way to do it? Arthur Andersen consulting representatives believe the University can best save money through consolidation. However, this belief has met with questions and concerns from the Faculty Senate and the City of Carbondale.

The DAILY EGYPTIAN believes these concerns are valid and urges the SIU Board of Trustees to come up with answers to these questions and concerns before proceeding with any move toward a Shared Service Center.

First of all, SIU committed $14 million to the Oracle project. This project in itself is supposed to provide some of the very same benefits Arthur Andersen claims the consolidation will, such as streamlining administrative tasks and alleviating much of the repetitive, costly paperwork of financial officers. In general, Oracle is supposed to make things run more efficiently. That sounds a lot like what the consolidation will do, so why not give Oracle a chance?

Many of the cost savings Arthur Andersen has in store for SIU come in the form of job cuts. Ignoring the humanity element, there is still the question of how much money the University will even save and the length of time it will take to "realize" these savings.

There are a total of 70 full-time employees performing the purchasing and disbursement function for SIU. The total current cost of purchasing and disbursement operations are $1.7 million. Or, are they $2.4 million? Maybe $2.2 million? Arthur Andersen doesn't seem to really know, as its report gives disparaging figures for these totals as well as its staff totals. This seems key to determining the consolidation's effectiveness, so it would be advantageous to get a concrete number for that total before moving ahead.

Then, Arthur Andersen says SIU won't actually begin seeing any of these purported savings until the year 2003, when the University will save a whopping $33,000. This gives rise to a more important overall question — Is it even worth it?

But let's not be selfish in our concerns. In this mix, Arthur Andersen also has recommended preferred vendor practice. There seems to be little argument about the real savings benefits of this recommendation. In fact, it seems to be the practice that would provide the best savings overall.

If SIU uses a prime vendor or vendors chosen from the lowest bidders, the savings will be there. But adoption of this practice ignores the all-important relationship between SIUC and Carbondale. More than likely, the University will receive the lowest bids from businesses located outside of Carbondale and perhaps even outside Illinois. Obviously, this isn't good news for Carbondale, and the City Council recognized it in a resolution urging SIU to delay the action in hopes the University won't turn it's back on the Carbondale "family."

So Arthur Andersen gets to conduct a regional economic impact study to see what damage the preferred vendor practice and shared service center would do to the area businesses.

The study has encountered some difficulty in finishing the reports, but these also would seem critical parts of any decision to pursue the Arthur Andersen recommendations.

To put all these considerations into one statement, there are simply too many questions at this juncture to make any commitments to change. Shared service, preferred vendors — any decision should only be made if the benefits outweigh the costs and it would be advantageous to the majority of people and organizations involved. The EGYPTIAN urges everyone involved to make their concerns heard widely and loudly and for action to be taken only after those concerns are considered.

Everyone wants to get the most out of their money, but sometimes decisions are made without considering everything and everyone involved. SIU, as a business, needs to operate at a certain level of monetary efficiency but shouldn't jump into a decision simply because a consulting firm says it's the best thing to do. There are business relationships and peoples' livelihoods to consider in this decision. Let's not be overly anxious to save a buck without having all the information.

Can Carhart revitalize underachieving SIU-Nokajo?

Dear Editor,
I was happy to hear SIU has finally chosen a permanent director for its Nakajo campus in Japan.

The fact that Dr. Carhart was chosen by a search committee consisting of faculty, graduate and undergraduate representatives is a welcome break from past practices on that campus and bodes well for the future. He certainly has his work cut out for him.

As glaringly pointed out by a recent cover story in the Chicago Tribune magazine ("Lost in the Translation," Dec. 20.), the Nakajo program is failing.

Two and a half years ago, against the objections of the faculty, then-principal of SIU's Niigata campus Jared Dorn, who currently is SIU's director of international and economic development, appointed Wilma Wilcox to head the Intensive English Program (IEP). Wilcox instituted and enforced a "pass everybody" policy for student advancement.

This resulted in weak students being passed progressively into classes further and further above their true levels of ability. They never mastered the basics.

Instructors who protested this administrative policy were threatened with termination of employment.

The situation proved unworkable, and by May 1998, more than a dozen English as a Second Language (ESL) professionals had quit, been forced out or terminated, leaving only Wilcox to act as a mentor to inexperienced and untrained new hires.

As it takes about two years for students to work through the program, the shameful situation described by the Tribune article is merely the tip of the iceberg with which the home campus is about to collide — specifically, increasing numbers of Japanese transfer students who are unprepared for University coursework.

The day the Tribune article appeared in print, SIU-Niigata's Japanese language website boasted a campus with 50 faculty and staff, qualified ESL teachers with an average of 10 years teaching experience — half having experience on the home campus.

More than 20 clubs, the promise of American roommates, e-mail, Internet — all blatant lies or gross exaggerations, as I suspect is Dorn's quote for the Trib of a "100-percent graduation" rate for the "Nakajo students (who) have succeeded better than Americans." (Or if true, any other population of students.) True or otherwise, the implications of that statement alone beg an investigative piece.

How about it, DAILY EGYPTIAN? Recent practices at SIU-Niigata reflect poorly on the other American university programs in Japan.

Although SIU-Niigata is the antithesis of what an overseas program could and should be, it is my hope that Dr. Carhart will restore the integrity to what was once a fine program. SIU's international reputation rides on his ability to do so.

Dead students could boost enrollment

Enrollment is up at SIUC, and I couldn't be happier. Our graduation rate may not be the highest in Illinois, but at least there are a lot of us. I applaud this accomplishment but feel we can do even better with a little creative recruiting. One group that has been ignored by recruiting efforts stands out as having real potential. I think it's time SIUC took a bold step — let's enroll the dead.

I know what you're thinking. You say, "They smell bad; Dead people make me uncomfortable," or "I'm not sharing a bathroom with one of them." Don't be an insensitive Philistine. US pre-mortems aren't the only ones with a right to improve ourselves. Anyway, the existence-challenged student has a lot to offer this University.

Let's take a look at your prospective deceased roommate — we'll call him "Morty." Morty doesn't talk while you study or use your toothbrush. It's doubtful that he'll steal your date, and if he does it's probably your own fault. Wouldn't you like a roommate who is a sympathetic listener? Well, maybe not sympathetic but at least objective.

Both parking and transit problems would become a non-issue almost instantly. Few dead people drive, and if they did they could park as well as the average SIU student. We could even issue them black parking stickers and give them special lots. The number of buses in Saluki transit could be cut nearly in half by fitting more than 80 rich students, stacked head-to-toe, in a refurbished Schwann's ice cream truck.

Corpses are also unfailingly polite, well-behaved and punctual. No talking in class, no complaining about grades, and they won't tie up computers dumping their boyfriends back home via e-mail. I doubt they will interrupt class by coming in late because I have yet to go to a funeral where the guest of honor wasn't dressed and ready when I got there. Instructors, take heart — health-related excuses for missing class will be a thing of the past.

Rather than take the Strip on Halloween, they'll just hang around giving the place a little seasonal ambiance. We might have a few formaldehyde keggers that weekend, but cut them some slack — it's a special day for them.

We can't forget the classroom. Maybe inanimate students couldn't do some classwork, but we could give them extra credit for things like staying upright or propping the window open. Besides, they'll do wonders for a grading curve. Okay, so they would have an unfair advantage in mortuary sciences, but we should all go with our strengths. What about physical education classes, you ask? No problem. When I took tennis a few years ago, the instructor checked me for a pulse at least twice that I can recall. It won't be the first time they've seen a student who makes a better bowling pin than bowler.

Bottom line — living students are not only unruly but also expensive to keep up. A cadaver costs medical schools in Illinois approximately $500. Compare this with the thousands spent on the living every semester just for housing. The departed seem almost necessary to offset the costs — they're pure money. There's no physical for a Pell Grant, and even the IRS can't keep track of who is alive or dead. So what if "Morty" does no work and flunks out in a year or two? We not only brought in a little tuition, we also got a student with possible resale value.

The PSA includes a variety of counselors, field representatives, project specialists, researchers, coordinators and directors and other professional staff at SIUC. A simple majority of voters is needed to approve the measure for the PSA to become the University's official professional staff representative.

Judi Rossiter, chair of the PSA Steering Committee and academic adviser for the School of Journalism, delivered the official announcement of the petition's filing at the Student Center Wednesday.

Rossiter said the "time has come" for the SIUC professional staff to have more say about issues that affect them, including recruiting and retaining quality professional staff and having a role in determining conditions of employment and pay.

"The PSA will bring often-isolated professional staff into an effective network that will better fulfill the mission of the University," Rossiter said.

"She said the election will provide an exciting forum for improvements at SIUC.

"We are committed to Southern Illinois University. We feel it's a wonderful place to work, and we are committed to making it better," Rossiter said. "We are excited about the opportunities for communication and dialogue that this election campaign can provide for the professional staff."

PSA Steering Committee Vice-Chair Harvey Henson said the petition is not just beneficial to the SIUC professional staff.

"I hope that everyone sees this as something positive because it certainly is," Henson said. "It's a win-win situation for professionals, administration and the students, which is of course why we are all here."

He added that the PSA gaining a "place at the table" would make for fairer representation of the professional staff.

"I come from a big family, and when I wasn't at the table on time for dinner, I got leftovers," Henson said. "The [Administrative/ Professional staff] needs more than leftovers to do what's expected of us in our jobs."

Associate Vice Chancellor for Administration Bill Capie said the administration cannot comment on the petition until they are served with a copy from the labor relations board.

About one year ago, SIUC AP-staff employees enlisted the support of the Illinois Education Association/ National Education Association to obtain collective bargaining rights for AP staff.

Leaders of the PSA-IEA/NEA began a drive in August 1998 to formally request the Illinois Educational Labor Relations Board conduct a representation election on campus.

Paul. It was hard not to cry, but it was all right."

But Jeanne's distress was replaced with rapture when their son Martin walked into the waiting room unexpectedly.

"Because of the ice and snow, we knew it wouldn't be good travel but it was the biggest surprise when Martino, who lives in Washington, walked into the room at 7 a.m.," Jeanne said.

"To have our son there was such a surprise. He got a flight at the very last minute, all in a very short period of time."

Robert Gray, pastor at Our Savior Lutheran Church, 700 S. University Ave., which is Simon's parish, also made the pilgrimage to Springfield to wish the former senator a safe surgery.

"He's coming right along. I've almost asked him to start doing things for me, but not quite yet," Gray said with a laugh. "He's helped our congregation in our mission beyond ourselves and out into the community and the world, so we're glad to have him back."

Simon was released from the hospital Jan. 9 and has spent the last four weeks regaining his strength to restart his daily routine.

"Everyone apparently heals at a different rate," Simon said. "I would like to be teaching right now, carrying a full load, but I know the doctors say I shouldn't, and I can feel that I'm not quite there."

Simon was to begin teaching History 493 and Political Science 416 at the start of the semester, but the healing process has postponed his teaching until Feb. 18.

During Simon's recuperation, Associate Professor Kathryn Carr has led his history class, and his political science lecture has been headed by political science instructor Barbara Brown.

According to Jeanne, the response from the community and faculty has been more than a blessing.

"It's such a good feeling when friends came by," she said. "It's nice when people rally around. I love being in a small town; everyone seems to care more and more every day."

Mike Lawrence, associate director of the SIU Public Policy Institute, was updated daily on Simon's post-surgery condition while handling the affairs of the institute.

"I think Paul's doing well — he's keeping busy," Lawrence said. "The biggest change [was that] he was accustomed to being active almost every waking hour."

"My hunch is he's never been at home this long. It is hard for Paul to be anything but fully active."

Simon's experience has shed new light on the fireless life he once lived. Although he has longed to be in the classroom, a valuable lesson has kept him patient.

"I think it adds some perspective to things," Simon said. "In about 10 days I'll be teaching again, but you learn the importance of taking advantage of time."

"I think you come to appreciate the fragility of life — you're not going to live forever."

With the help of her father, Jim Blevins of Thompsonville, holding her up, Emily Blevins, 4, gets a peek at a bald eagle's nest off in the distance. People from all over Illinois came out to experience seeing the eagles in their natural habitat. Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge sponsors eight tours throughout the month of February.

Scanning the skies in anticipation, the group stood in the open field watching, waiting with objects in their hands loaded and ready to shoot. They had spent more than an hour hunting the majestic bird with no luck. The bird of prey was being stalked, but this did not account for its elusive nature.

There were just not many alive.

The group searched the sky for a sign, but it remained empty, except for a single airplane which flew overhead, seeming to mock them. The only enemies of the giant bird were silent, except for a young boy complaining of hunger. It was soon agreed the group would move on and search another area.

But as the group headed off, a headstrong scout who had lingered behind began frantically pointing to the sky.

"It's coming in, straight overhead!" she yelled. "It's coming in right toward us!"

Within seconds, the group aimed their cameras and began shooting pictures of the symbol of the nation — the bald eagle — as it glided over the heads of more than 50 visitors to the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge in Carbondale.

The group of spectators sighted four bald eagles during Eagle Watch Tours, an event sponsored by Crab Orchard refuge to educate and inform visitors on the eagles' nesting and migratory habits.

Visitors from ages five to 74 came from as near as Carbondale and as far as Champaign for the 2 1/2-hour tour to witness the eagles in their natural habitat.

Joan Slichenmyer, of Olney, limped with the aid of a crutch to various sites. She said her experience seeing the eagles soar was worth the effort.

"It's really neat to see them — I mean, I've never had the chance before now, and I'm just really glad I came," Slichenmyer said, her voice filled with emotion.

Jim Blevins, of Thompsonville, brought his 4-year-old daughter Emily and watched with pride as she gazed in awe at an eagle circling the sky.

"It gives her some knowledge," Blevins said. "I want her to be able to see them, and you don't see them very often, that's for sure."

Blevins said he wanted his daughter to be aware of the eagles' current status so she would understand the significance of protecting the species.

Although bald eagles are a rarity in Illinois, numbers have increased in recent years. The 1999 Illinois bald eagle survey documented a 50-percent increase, listing 2,056 bald eagles in Southern Illinois as opposed to 1,178 last year.

Bald eagles will be delisted from endangered status to the less-critical threatened status under the Illinois Endangered Species Act within a couple of months, according to Jim Herkert, the listing coordinator for the Illinois Endangered Species Protection Board.

Population growth has increased since the 1972 ban of DDT, a pesticide, that causes the eagle's egg shells to become frail and break before they can develop.

Two participants in the Eagle Watch Tour admire Lily, Lilly was found on a lily pad in the middle of a lake by park rangers. She is kept in captivity because she is unable to fly.

Rhonda Monroe, a member of the Southern Illinois Audubon Society and Eagle Watch tour guide, said she was glad numbers had increased, although she was hesitant about the delisting.

"If it was up to me, I'd keep them on the listing forever," Monroe said.

Killing, capturing or possessing parts of a bald eagle can result in a $100,000 fine and up to a year in jail, under the Bald Eagle Protection Act of 1940. Under this law, possessing an eagle's feather can result in the same punishment.

Today, Illinois is one of the premier states for bald eagle watching, especially along the Mississippi River. Thousands of visitors a year flock to unfrozen lakes and rivers to experience the thrill of viewing a bald eagle, according to Herkert.

The bald eagle migrates south during winter months because northern lakes and rivers freeze. They feed on fish in area rivers and lakes, including Crab Orchard Lake, which was established in 1947 by Congress for protection and enhancement of endangered species.

Crab Orchard sponsors a total of eight tours, which will continue this Saturday and Sunday at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Slichenmyer said she will treasure her experience for years to come.

"It was so much better than to see them on TV or in a book," Monroe said. "There's just such a graceful presence they have, I'd just love to do this again."

"Senator Simon takes good care of himself," Dove said. "He detected problems early before the onset of serious problems."

Simon became concerned about his cardiovascular health after reading an article in Newsweek.

"Many people have signs but ignore the signals," Myers said. "Acting on early signals of heart disease can result in little or no damage to the heart."

Although Simon did not feel any symptoms or suspect problems, he decided to get tested. His first step was a nuclear treadmill test, which determined that a blockage could be present. A CT scan confirmed the plaque blockage.

Finally, a heart catheter determined whether Simon would need a bypass operation or an angioplasty.

"Clearly, the operation was the better choice," Wellons said.

Myers explained the heart supplies blood to the body depending on how much activity the body is doing.

When the body becomes more active, such as running, working, or other physical activities, the body demands more blood. If the heart cannot supply enough blood during these activities, then chest pains will occur.

Although Simon is 70 years old, Dove said men in their 30s should become concerned about heart disease, especially if they exhibit any of the risk factors. These factors include smoking, high stress, a high-cholesterol diet, high blood pressure, a family history of heart disease or being overweight.

Dove, Myers and Wellons agree prevention is the best way to avoid or prolong suffering from heart disease; however, prevention can prevent the blockage from occurring early.

"If you want to avoid bypass surgery, you want to work on prevention early," Myers said.

Invitational fell just short of the conference record (2:04.27). No longer the tentative swimmer, in her ability, Radostits is ready to take her skills to the next level.

"I definitely want to win in my events," Radostits said. "I want to take the conference records, too. Our team is ready, and we are looking awesome."

Last season, SIUC held off Illinois State University in a thriller 972-954 for the league crown. This season looks to be even more of a evenly-matched bout.

The Redbirds, the University of Evansville, Southwest Missouri State University, the University of Northern Iowa and Bradley University all are expected to contend.

"I guess in the last couple of years, it has been seen as a two-horse race between us and Illinois State," Klumper said. "But we are excited to see Evansville getting stronger and Southwest (Missouri State), which will be up there in a couple of years battling us — but that's good for the conference."

The Salukis, who have been resting for the last 10 days, have a lot to be excited about.

"This is exciting," freshman swimmer Courtney Corder said. "This is what it all boils down to. This is what we have trained for, this has been our big goal, and we have been priming ourselves to reach the MVC Championships."

Other Saluki swimmers hoping to make a big splash are sophomores Merry Smith, who won the 500-yard freestyle relay last year, Dana Morrell and Jenna Meckler.

But the swimmers are not the only ones who are having a successful season. The divers also have been tearing up the competition.

Led by freshman Kristin Kaylor, who has been named MVC Diver of the Week three times, SIUC is in prime gear to challenge the Redbird's Andrea Lovelle and Nicole Pesci for that top spot.

"They are both quality divers, and they have really good lifts. So yeah, it's going to be tough," Kaylor said.

Kaylor also has qualified for the NCAA Zone Diving meet set for March 12-13.

But along with Kaylor's success are two other talented sophomore divers in Lacey Pagett and Breanne Hay. These two divers have one advantage over the freshman Kaylor — experience.

"They know about the pressure," diving coach Dave Andrey said. "They know about the divers that are coming back, they know about the event. They know how to handle themselves, and I think they are a little more excited this time around. I think they are pretty sure of themselves right now, and I think that's good going into this meet."

will swim as Salukis in Carbondale. And they don't want to end on a sour note.

"All of us are really excited," Velez said. "Everything now is set in place. We just have to do it now."

Newcomers Herman Louw and Chris Papachrysanthou enter the realm of being defending champs. Louw, a junior from South Africa and a two-time MVC Swimmer of the Week, has anxiously awaited this chance since his arrival to the team in January.

"Since I got here everyone has been talking about the MVCs," Louw said. "It has been building up team spirit and we all are going into this together and trying to make the best of it."

Making the best of it. A term the swimming and diving teams have heard for the past few years.

But to win the most consecutive MVC crowns, the Salukis have a long way to go. The last Valley team to capture five consecutive titles was the University of Cincinnati who won nine from 1958-1968.

Lost within the success of the Saluki swimmers, the diving team led by newcomer Rhett Butler seeks to overcome their youthful roster this weekend.

"I'd rather be two years down the road with these same kids," diving coach Dave Andrey said, "and have two years of experience going into their third championship. On the up side of that, it will be enjoyable to see how they respond."

“All I can do is hope, pray and work hard.”

This year's competition could be the strongest and most entertaining in recent years, with three SIUC dives already qualifying for the NCAA Zone D Meet. The odds are in their favor, as three of eight divers competing are Salukis.

For Butler just performing well will be the biggest key.

"I think for me I'm not exactly where I want to be," he said. "Hopefully, I'll be ready. All I can do is hope, pray and work hard."

CLOSE GAME: Salukis tie game at end of regulation, but fall short in extra period.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
SPORTS EDITOR

The Salukis fell one break short Wednesday night in Springfield, Mo.

They got Southwest Missouri State University guard Kevin Ault, an 84-percent free throw shooter, to miss the front end of a one-and-one with his team ahead by three late in the game. They got a dramatic three-pointer from Saluki junior forward Chris Thunell with 2.3 seconds remaining to send the game to overtime.

Salukis	68
SW Missouri State	72

Then they got a clutch three-pointer from senior guard Monte Jenkins to pull the Salukis within two points with 8.7 seconds left in the extra frame. What they could not get is Bears guard Ryan Bettenhausen to miss a free throw in those remaining 8.7 ticks.

Bettenhausen nailed four free throws to enable SMSU to hang on for a thrilling 72-68 victory in front of 5,500 at the Hammond Center.

"The kids really battled tonight," SIUC coach Bruce Weber said in his postgame radio show. "Win or lose, all I wanted them to do was keep playing. They did that, and we made a couple plays. They just didn't do enough."

Jenkins led the Salukis (13-9, 8-6) with 21 points. Junior forward Derrick Tilmon also added 12 points and three blocks before fouling out with 1 minute and 42 seconds left to play.

The Bears (17-7, 9-5), who played without standout Danny Moore for most of the first half, were paced by an uncharacteristic 19 points from Ken Stringer. Stringer only averages four points per game.

"You've got to play off of somebody, and he made some shots," Weber said. "He steps up and hits a three, and then he'll go to the basket. That was key."

The Salukis were in front for the majority of the game and actually led by eight at 45-37 early in the second half. The Bears clawed their way back into the game behind the play of Ault and Stringer. A Stringer three-pointer and back-to-back baskets from Ault brought the Bears within 46-44. But it wasn't until Moore — who only played one minute in the first half due to foul trouble — scored his first points of the game on a jumper with under seven minutes remaining that the Bears could regain the lead 52-51.

Ault then hit a three to give his team a three-point lead at 61-58 with 33 seconds left. He then missed the key free throw to set the stage for Thunell's heroics.

"We kind of did a misdirection is what we like to call it," Weber said. "Ricky just turns and screens for Chris and Monte made a perfect pass. Chris got his feet set and made a big shot."

In the first half, Collum — who played with a protective mask on his face after suffering an eye injury against Illinois State University — showed no signs of the mask causing problems. He scored 12 points, connecting on four three-point field goals. His final try of the half gave the Salukis their largest lead of eight points, 37-29, before Southwest guard Kevin Ault drilled a three of his own to make the score 37-32 at the break.

Despite being without their big man, senior center Moore, the Bears were a mouthful to handle. Stringer picked up the scoring void left by Moore, scoring in a variety of ways on his way to 11 first-half points. And after the Salukis opened up a 12-7 advantage courtesy of a Jenkins three-pointer, SMSU went on a 14-2 run to open a 21-14 midway through the first half.

Then the masked man struck again, hitting two consecutive threes to give SIUC a 22-21 advantage with 7:31 left in the half. Southwest regained the lead once more on a Scott Brakebill layup before Collum's final three-point barrage. Both teams combined for 11 threes in the opening 20 minutes.

Men look for fifth crown

There is a certain aura that surrounds the SIUC men's swimming and diving team's around the same time each year.

The enthusiasm is so loud and distinct that it can be heard from several miles away. It comes from winning four consecutive Missouri Valley Conference championships, placing them amongst the elite in the country. The objective is no different for Salukis starting today at the Recreation Center and ending on Sunday—taking home the crown one more time.

Unlike the Chicago Bulls and Florida Marlins, the Salukis are not so willing to break up a good thing.

"I say our guys are looking good," Saluki coach Rick Walker said. "I think they are ready and I think they are hungry. They are hungry to keep it, rather than getting themselves in a dog fight. But if they get in a dog fight, they'll come out scrapping."

Since the revival of the conference championships in 1994, the men have won 65 out of 80 (81.3 percent) individual titles. After posting a "W" at their last dual home meet against MVC rival Southwest Missouri State University (169-70) Jan. 30, the Salukis had 10 days of rest to prepare for this moment. The moment to defend their throne in their own castle.

"It's kind of something we feel we own," Walker said. "If it's mine, you can't have it. Obviously, we are also aware that we can possibly lose, and that's a reality in any type of competition. That's the gamble you have to take."

For senior swimmers Jasson Velez, Liam Weseloh and Trevor Peterson, the MVC Championships will mark the last time they

Women seek second straight

Mix three championships in four years, six seasoned veterans and eight sizzling freshmen and what you make is one potent team.

The ingredients may not be the same as last season's Missouri Valley Conference champions; but, the SIUC women's swimming and diving team has the perfect combination needed to defend its MVC title starting at 11 a.m. today in the Student Recreation Center.

But what has transpired hardly could have been predicted. Eight freshmen have come out of their shells and taken the Salukis to unthinkable levels early in their collegiate careers.

"There are a couple of them that maybe are ahead than where I thought they would be," said coach Mark Kluemper. "But that's the goal, to get them ready to really go at the end of the year. Some of them just got a little faster and contributed a little more during the season."

Led by newcomer Brooke Radostis and sophomore Beth Ann-Erickson, who is the defending league champion in the 100- and 200-yard butterfly, one can understand why SIUC has been picked again by the circuit coaches to win the Missouri Valley Conference Championships starting today at the Recreation Center.

"I think if we swim the way we are capable of swimming, we should be able to win the meet," Kluemper said.

Radostis, who has won two MVC Swimmer of the Week honors, holds first place in the MVC this season in the 100- and 200-yard backstroke. Radostis' time of 2:05.47 in the 200 Nov. 21 at the UIC
