SIUC workers on active duty will be paid

Edgar signs order guaranteeing full-time state employees salaries, benefits

By Donita Polly
DE Politics Editor

Three full-time SIUC employees called to active duty to support the Bosnia-Herzegovina peace-keeping mission will continue to receive state salaries and benefits, state and University officials say.

Judy Pardonnet, spokeswoman for the Department of Central Management Services, said Gov. Jim Edgar signed an executive order that guarantees full-time state employees in agencies, boards, universities and commissions under his control to continue receiving their salaries and benefits while on active duty.

Pardonnet said the benefits offered to the state employees while on active duty are there to insure that the people do not receive less money because they are serving their country. She said the added salaries and benefits will not surpass what the employee would have made at their state job. But she said the additions will make up the difference in salary amounts as if the employees were still working their state job.

"State employees won't be denied any benefits while serving their country," Pardonnet said. "The benefits offered make up the difference if they were still here working."

SIUC Chancellor John Guyon said the issue of protecting University employees' salaries and benefits for up to one year is also on the SIUC Board of Trustees agenda for February.

Guyon said during Desert Storm, the board passed a resolution protecting its employees' salaries and benefits. He said the resolution resembles the governor's executive order for the Bosnia-Herzegovina mission and that SIUC would have taken care of its own employees

Amtrak supporters join USG letter-writing drive

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

More than 100 students voiced their support to Illinois legislators Thursday for the Chicago to Carbondale Amtrak route in an Undergraduate Student Government letter-writing campaign.

USG set up tables in the Student Center Hall of Fame, where students and administrators could go and, by computer, write letters in support of Amtrak to send to their state officials.

Scott Pfeiffer, USG chief of staff, said the first day of the computer-assisted mailing went better than expected.

"Between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., we sent 148 letters to Illinois government legislators," Pfeiffer said. "I believe we can and will do better when we increase the hours."

Today the operating hours are from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Pfeiffer said on Monday USG will extend the hours from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. He said the mailing program will run until Feb. 8.

The computerized mailing system gives students and administrators a chance to sit down and find their home county on a computer. When the person chooses the county, the computer will give the names of the representatives and the state senator. The person will then receive three printouts of the letter to sign, and USG members will send those letters off to the three state officials indicated, Pfeiffer said.

USG President Kim Clemens said things could have gone better Thursday, but the outcome was strong.

"Things did get off to a slow start because the computers were a little late getting there (Student Center)," Clemens said. "But once everything got going, it was a steady stream. If it (the mailing) continues to go this well, we will have a strong voice at the Capitol."

Pfeiffer said the computer mailing is part three of a four-part plan by USG to voice support to save the Amtrak Carbondale route.

"The first part was the resolution USG passed and sent to Rep. Mike Bost (R-Murphysboro), Sen. David Luechtefeld (R-Okawille), Kirk Brown (Director of Illinois Department of Transportation), and Gov. Jim Edgar," Pfeiffer said. "The second are the petitions the USG senators are passing around campus and collecting. The third is this computerized mailing, and the fourth should be finished soon. But it is a petition that is being signed by each of the student government presidents affected by the Amtrak cut."

USG senators are still collecting names for the petitions they initiated, Pfeiffer said.

On-campus day care center gives parents opportunity to attend classes at University

By Melissa Jakubowski
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Dorothy Kates says she had no plans to go to college until she became pregnant.

"I hated high school," she said. "I would not have gone to college if it wasn't for my circumstance. I wasn't headed in that direction at all."

Kates, a senior in plant biology from Oak Park, decided to attend SIUC and enroll her son Rane in on-campus day care. Kates said even though she had to wait six months for an opening at the SIUC Child Development Laboratories, it was worth the wait.

"I can walk to CDL any time of the day and check on how he is doing," she said. "If I had to drive from one place to another I could never do it."

According to the child-care survey taken in 1990, Kates belongs to a group of 994,000 single parents who attend school in the nation. Fifteen percent of these parents rely on day-care

CAIRO'S POPULACE ENFORCES RAMADAN'S RULES — CAIRO — Earlier this week, Egypt's highest religious authority demanded that Muslims caught eating, drinking or smoking in public during Ramadan be subjected to formal punishment. "The sinners in public are bad examples, and they influence others to follow suit," Gad Haq Ali Gad Haq, grand sheik of Al Azhar University, the Arab world's leading seat of Islamic learning, told the Egyptian weekly Akher Saa. "I demand punishment for those who eat and drink in public during Ramadan be subjected to formal punishment. The sheik's recommendation does not have the force of law, on the other hand, they probably do not have to. In keeping with the growth of conservative Islamic values here, most Cairo residents already heed the sheik's injunction, either out of genuine religious conviction or simply because it has become socially unacceptable to do otherwise.

NEW $100 BILL DESIGN WRACKS RUSSIA'S NERVES — MOSCOW — When the U.S. Treasury Department said it would introduce a redesigned $100 bill in February, the announcement — hardly a blockbuster in Washington — created a storm here. Millions of Russians suddenly got very nervous. After all, if there's anywhere in the world where the dollar is still almighty, it's Russia. More than $100 million comes into the country each day, and there is something on the order of $20 billion in greenbacks in circulation, more than any country outside the United States itself. That comes to $400 for every family in Russia, probably as much or more than the value of Russian rubles in circulation.

PRIME MINISTER RESIGNS AMID SPY CHARGES — WARSAW, Poland — Polish Prime Minister Jozef Oleksy, accused by his political enemies of spying for Moscow, resigned Wednesday after a military prosecutor concluded that evidence against him warranted a formal espionage investigation. Oleksy, a former Communist official who became prime minister last March, delivered a somber defense of his actions in a televised address Wednesday night. He characterized himself as a victim of a "brutal fight for power" and welcomed the investigation as an opportunity to clear his name.

HIGH-RANKING CLINTON APPOINTEE RESIGNS — WASHINGTON — General Services Administrator Roger W. Johnson, the highest-ranking Republican appointed to the Clinton administration, ended months of frustration with the cut-throat politics of Washington, D.C., by disclosing Wednesday that he has resigned, effective March 1. Johnson, the former Orange County corporate executive who broke ranks with fellow Republicans when he endorsed Bill Clinton during the 1992 presidential campaign, also revealed that he has formally joined the Democratic Party. In a resignation letter to President Clinton dated Jan. 17, Johnson stated that after leading a dramatic downsizing of the agency that manages everything from the government's car fleet buildings to its car fleet and computers, his contribution had "reached a point of diminishing returns. In the letter, Johnson did not disguise his distaste for Washington's political culture where he was viewed by Democrats as an outsider and by Republicans as a traitor.

CANADIANS TO REPLACE U.S. FORCES IN HAITI — WASHINGTON — A secret deal engineered by President Clinton will send Canadian soldiers to maintain stability in Haiti after U.S. troops withdraw from the island next month, Newsday has learned. The arrangement, worked out in the past week by aides to the president and Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien, would commit the United States to provide logistical support troops for the Canadians and to dispatch U.S. reinforcements in an emergency. The move has major domestic political implications for Clinton, who is expected to make peace in Haiti and other countries a hallmark of his re-election campaign. The Canadian troops will provide some insurance against a resumption of chaos that could trigger another exodus of Haitians to Florida.

Local police chief: Safeguard against violence

By Kendra Helmer
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Regardless of a ruling in Central Illinois last month, existing procedures within Jackson County safeguard against many potential cases of domestic violence, law enforcement officials say.

In December, the Illinois Supreme Court held that Helen Calloway, a Central Illinois woman, has a right to sue Effingham County and its sheriff in accordance with the Illinois Domestic Violence Act of 1986. Calloway's complaint alleged that the sheriff failed to recognize an order of protection by not shielding her from her husband, who allegedly abducted her at gunpoint from her workplace in 1991. Calloway's husband later committed suicide, and she escaped unharmed.

"It's very important that law enforcement and all of the key players in the community recognize that domestic violence is a crime and we are taking it very seriously," Rebecca Payne, executive director of Women's Center, said. "And people who do not treat it as such are liable."

"We have a good relationship with the Carbondale Police Department."

Carbondale Police officers take domestic violence cases very seriously, Don Strom, Carbondale Police chief said.

"Our policy is pro-arrest," Strom said. "If we have probable cause to believe violence is occurring, by policy, we will make an arrest."

Carbondale Police officers do not try to mediate domestic violence situations, Pam Green, Carbondale Police crime victim advocate, said. She said the police just make arrests when women are faced with potential harm.

"Our officers are concerned with the woman's safety," she said.

Domestic violence cases are referred to Green, who does

Vegetable crops may have new life with mineral

By Erik Bush
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC researchers are currently working on a project that will use a mineral left over after cleaning coal-fired boilers, which they say may aid in growing corn and soybean crops by helping the soil absorb and retain more water.

Charles L. Hooks, an SIUC Reclamation Station researcher, a branch of the plant and soil science department, is overseeing a two-year project funded by the Illinois Clean Coal Institute.

Hooks said the purpose of the project will be to explore the possibilities in using the mineral, gypsum, for different types of soil treatments and improvements.

"Gypsum dissolves easily into the ground," he said. "This opens up the soil, allowing plants to root deeper and become more drought-resistant."

Gypsum, a colorless, porous mineral in its pure state, is produced during the process of

SIUC registered in 24-hour cyberspace documentary

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC professor is encouraging students to participate in an upcoming multimedia Internet documentary about the effects of online technology on individuals all over the planet.

Fern Logan, assistant professor in cinema and photography, has registered SIUC as one of more than 100 schools across the country participating in "24 Hours In Cyberspace," which will go online Feb. 8. Logan said this is an opportunity to represent the College of Mass Communications and Media Arts to the University and the world as an excellent communications school.

Fern Logan

Logan said the documentary will include stories and photographs by hundreds of students and journalists. She said she wants SIUC students and faculty to participate to let the world know how SIUC is affected by cyberspace.

"Especially in a college of mass communications and media arts, we need to set an example of what can be done," she said. "This gives us a chance to utilize our resources — to stretch our capabilities and talents."

Logan said students should contact her if they are interested in writing or taking photos to be published in the project, a multimedia online documentary on the effects of cyberspace in the lives of people throughout the world.

Rick Smolan, head of Against All Odds Productions, the producers of documentaries including "A Day in the Life of America" and "A Passage to Vietnam," said in an online introduction to the program that this documentary is unique in its scope.

"It is the participatory aspect of (the documentary) that sets it apart from our previous projects," he said. "For us, cyberspace is another culture and a place to visit, but this time around, because of the nature of the new medium itself, people around the world can take part in the project and respond with their own point of view."

According to an information packet provided by the program, journalists and students around the world are covering stories for the documentary, including:

Enrollment task force looks for more consumers

A COLLEGE IS A BUSINESS. THE COLLEGE produces a product that is then distributed to the market. If the product has quality and is affordable, it is usually successful.

The colleges product is education. Students — the consumers — shop around, visit the colleges and view the product as it is being assembled, then make their decision to purchase or go elsewhere. Since 1991, SIUC's product has not been selling as well as it did previously. The University's enrollment has dropped from 23,954 in 1993 to 21,811 in the spring of 1995. As any business would do when it loses a share of the market, In Dec. 1995, the University initiated the Enrollment Management Task Force to develop short and long range strategies for University recruitment to win back students.

This initiative is a welcome response to a problem that affects all SIUC students. With a dwindling student population, cuts in federal and state education assistance and cutbacks in research money available, the University faces either cutbacks in programs or higher tuition rates.

The task force has two components, one to examine recruiting strategies from now until this fall. The other examines strategies to be used beyond 1996. The task force's co-chairmen are Benjamin Shepherd, vice chancellor of Academic Affairs, and Roland Keim, director of Admissions and Records.

One strategy the task force is pursuing is a larger role for colleges and departments in recruiting potential students. Shepherd said the University does not have the funds to increase the staff of recruiters at Admissions and Records, the department with the primary recruiting task for the University. The task force is requesting from each college and school a recruitment plan that includes the involvement of staff to achieve that plan.

WHILE THE IDEA OF INDIVIDUAL COLLEGE and school recruiting plans is not new, the Daily Egyptian feels the task force is to be commended for attempting to synchronize all of the various school's plans into one comprehensive plan.

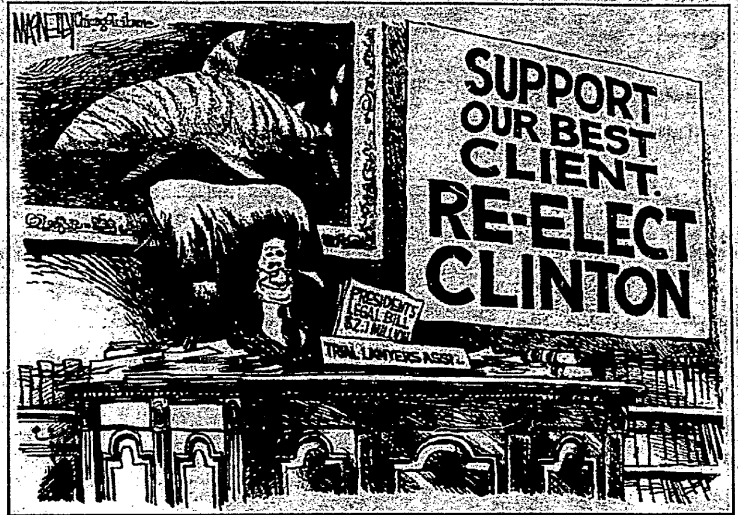

This comprehensive recruiting plan will also help one of the task force's short-range goals, increasing the number of registering freshmen from the pool of accepted applicants the University receives each year. Thirty percent of the applicants accepted to the University register each year.

A coordinated recruitment message presents a University as a single entity instead of a jumble of individual messages. The end result, if the task force operates as planned, is a single vision of the University for the prospective student.

The DE is disappointed that there is currently no student representation on the task force, but Shepherd said the task force will ask the Undergraduate Student Government for a representative to join the task force.

The final analysis of this task force will be seen in the student population at SIUC in four to five years, but the task force has tools to gauge progress of the individual colleges and school plans. With each plan, the department must also include an accountability statement detailing who is in charge of achieving those goals. And the task force and Shepherd's office will monitor the enrollments to determine if a department's plan needs to be altered.

THE UNIVERSITY IS PROCEEDING ON A problem that has needed attention and focus. There is an argument whether this action should have come sooner, but the University has a good start and focus. And the DE encourages all the voices on campus to be heard. While strategies are important, the University's number-one recruitment tool is satisfied consumers.

Commentary

Fire alarm systems not all the same

The following letter to the Editor was published in Thursday's Daily Egyptian with some text omitted. The DE editorial staff apologizes for the error.

Finding value when shopping for housing is difficult because we pay not only for what we can see, but also for the unseen decisions and policies of the building's management. Consider a student concerned because of the tragic fires in recent years who leases a building with fire pull stations under the assumption that maximum safety is provided. Due to "grandfathering" or legal loopholes this may not be the case.

Even when a building has a fire alarm system, they are not all the same. Some old fire alarm systems have horns that require AC electricity to operate. In the event of an electrical fire, they may not operate to alert the students. Newer systems have an alternate source of power to allow the horns to operate if this happened. Another problem is that all the circuits provided with the alarm may not be operational and yet be in compliance with the fire code.

Many fire alarms have safety circuits in addition to the main system. One such circuit is provided on a "supervised" system. The supervision circuit has a light that signals when the system's integrity is lost. Think of this as a "brake fail" light on a car. If it was intentionally bypassed, the car could still run but it isn't recommended. When many lives depend on safety equipment, shouldn't all the circuits of the system be required to function? Isn't that why they were provided?

Since the fire department cannot accept the liability involved in performing extensive electrical tests, a written inspection is required by a certifies inspector. If management does not request a complete inspection, repair costs can be eliminated. If the additional circuits are not tested, the building may be in compliance, given that the system was inspected and it operates under the ideal conditions during a fire drill.

Since it is not mandatory that certified alarm inspectors verify the integrity of the complete system, whether or not students get the fire protection they expect depends on luck and the ethics of the building owner(s). I believe that cheap prices are often at the expense of safety or other hidden value that students cannot see or often overlook. When profit becomes the sole motivation of a business, the law leaves us with "caveat emptor." Shop wisely and good luck.

Recliners: Your own throne at home

The Washington Post

A recliner is often more than just a chair. It is somebody's exclusive property. More than any other piece of furniture, it is often part of someone's personal space. Your grandfather's creaky green recliner, cigarette burns and all, may be the chair you most fondly remember him in.

Like a favorite loafer, this best seat in the house can become almost molded to the owner's body. Sometimes, recliners inspire an emotional attachment and are even handed down from father to son, and perhaps from mother to daughter.

Because the chair is used so frequently and often is a place where meals are eaten and entire books are read, it is subject to a lot of wear and tear. Because recliners are positioned to offer an unobstructed view of the TV set, they are the favorite of ESPN addicts and GNN junkies.

"Recliners are among the 'most replaced' pieces of furniture in the home."

Beemer's Charleston consumer poll

"Why do you buy a recliner?" asks Britt Beemer, director of research at America's Research Group. "Comfort. Comfort. Comfort."

Beemer's Charleston, S.C.-based company polls about 5,000 furniture consumers monthly for the industry. In the findings, Recliners are among the "most replaced pieces of furniture in the home."

And why do you replace a recliner?

"It is no longer comfortable, and the fabric is worn," says Beemer. "Historically, consumers have replaced recliners at almost a 50 percent higher rate than any other piece of furniture in their home."

But can anyone explain why last fall, one suburban Virginia La-Z-Boy store sold and delivered 50 recliners to the CIA's McLean, Va., offices?

A spokesman for the Central Intelligence Agency confirmed the purchase. They are "primarily for our TV viewing rooms at our conference and training facility," he said. "There was nothing covert or clandestine about it."

Ken Luchs, marketing director for La-Z-Boy Furniture Galleries in the Washington area, speculated, "These people are involved in many secret things. They have to do a lot of thinking. And maybe they find it's more comfortable to think in a reclining position."

Plenty of Bosnia on the Net

The Los Angeles Times

If you ever need evidence that information does not equate to understanding, do a search on "Bosnia" on the Internet's World Wide Web. You'll come up with scores of sites, hundreds of pages of information and enough links to keep you busy for weeks to come.

But the volumes of information do little to truly explain how that corner of the world got into such a mess in the first place.

The information can go only so far in explaining the conflict, given its confusing historical context, the depth of the hatred of those involved, the massive amounts of propaganda coming from the area and the unimaginable suffering by many whose only crime was that they were living in a particular area.

Just as Vietnam was the first television war, Bosnia is the first of the Internet Age and in a way reflects it — sprawling, churning with divisiveness, information-laden and yet largely unfaithful.

But if you take the admirable position that one should at least attempt to grasp the issues involved and keep current on what is going on in Bosnia and nearby states, here is a guide to some of the sites you can check out on the World Wide Web.

For starters, there are several sites on the Web where you can find historical information, but perhaps the best is <http://www.acs.supernet.net/manu/briefhi.htm>, where there is an essay by Andras Riedlmayer of Harvard University. His "A Brief History of Bosnia-Herzegovina" is not, like the most Web-friendly documents, interactive in any way. It's just plain old text — about eight single-spaced pages worth.

But if you want a bit more than the thumbnail sketch of history offered on some other sites, this is the place to go (Another essay by Riedlmayer on the "Destruction of Libraries in Bosnia-Herzegovina" is at <http://www.cua.edu/www/mes/abul/bosnia.htm>).

Another good text essay is the "Sarajevo Survival Guide," Miroslav Prostejovic's firsthand account of daily life two years ago in the besieged city, offered in a straight-forward, descriptive manner tinged with humor.

"Basements and staircases are special territories," he writes, because those places provide a bit of shelter during attacks. "In the beginning of the war, a new social category emerged: owners of staircases. They established office hours...."

His piece is at <http://macabsynt1.informatik...Idenburg.DE/Pages/War/Survival/>.

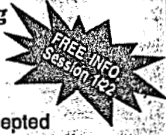

To get the official U.S. view of American troops' involvement in peace efforts, you can call up the Pentagon's "BosniaLINK" at <http://www.dtic.dla.mil/bosnia/find.ex.html>. There you can find maps, news updates, photos and biographies of the brass.

A California-designed site that is rich in links to places throughout the Web is the "Bosnia Homepage," maintained by students at Caltech. It can be reached at <http://www.cco.caltech.edu/~bosnia/bosnia.html>.

And if you want to contribute to a campaign that aids women, some of whom spent time in "rape camps" in the war area, you can access "Women for Women in Bosnia" at <http://www.embassy.or.gov/wvwbosnia.html>.

follow-up research and offers support to the victims, Green said. "I think the more information we give to them will help them make the decision to leave before great harm is done to them."

Green said she receives approximately 14 or 15 cases a month. Last year, 175 domestic battery cases were referred to her office. The number of battery cases does not include cases of harassment or criminal sexual assault by a spouse, Green said.

The Jackson County State's Attorney Office has also taken a strong stand against domestic violence, Green said.

"We believe that domestic violence is a crime and not a family matter," Mary Hughes, Jackson County State's Attorney victim witness advocate, said.

After a woman makes a complaint, the State's Attorney reviews the case and decides whether or not to file criminal charges on behalf of the people of the state, she said.

However, because the charges are filed on behalf of the state, the State's Attorney will not dismiss the charge solely on the basis of a victim's request, she said.

This unwritten philosophy is referred to as a "no-drop policy," Hughes said.

The victim is called to testify in the case, regardless of whether or not they want the alleged abuser to face prosecution, she said.

Many domestic violence victims in the area are referred to the Women's Center in Carbondale, Hughes said.

"Anyone fleeing from abuse can stay here," she said. "We help women work towards their goals, whether it be to find a place to live or find a job," Payne said. "We help them prepare for job interviews, and we have clothes they can wear to the interviews. We also get orders of protection for women."

Seuss

non-traditional services wanted to put on a program for the entire family.

"Everyone can relate to Dr. Seuss," he said. "People will call about the event, and they will ask me 'Is it for big kids, too?'"

His stories transcend all ages, and even though children enjoy them, they also have a very important message to get across."

One example van Rossum cited is "The Sneetches," which is about two different groups of characters that are segregated.

One of the groups has stars on their bodies and the other does not. When a man comes to town with a machine that can add or remove stars, the two groups begin to go back and forth between stars and no stars.

Eventually, everyone gets mixed up and they are unable to tell who was who in relation to the original groups.

"We all feel that as adults," van Rossum said. "That image of insiders/outside is very clear, and it makes us all seem a little foolish about how we separate different people into different groups."

"If you enjoy Dr. Seuss, and if you enjoy good storytelling, then this is the type of evening that would be a lot of fun for everyone," van Rossum said.

Beque said that even though the books may be geared toward children, Dr. Seuss wanted them to be read by people of all ages.

"Dr. Seuss referred to older people as 'obsolete children'," she said. "Some of the more interesting things about his books are how many adults buy them for older people."

"For example, the book 'Oh, The Places You'll Go,' is still a very big seller as a gift for someone graduating because it is a very optimistic look at a person's future."

Stephanie Chaney-Hartford, graduate assistant for Non-Traditional Student Services, said non-traditional services want this program to reach more people than just the students on campus.

"We want to reach out to the children and families of the community," she said. "There is going to be coloring activities, a chance to make different kinds of buttons as well as food and free bowling. "If at all possible we would like this to become an annual event. This is just a fun evening for everyone and their families."

"An Evening With Dr. Seuss" begins at 6 p.m. in the River Rooms on the second floor of the Student Center. Admission is free.

Gypsum

removing potentially environmentally damaging toxins from gases emitted by coal-firing boilers that are common to agricultural areas.

As toxic gases pass through crushed limestone, a mineral used to filter out toxins, certain properties of the gas combine with the limestone and break down to form gypsum.

Farel J. Olsen, SIUC professor of plant and soil science, said current methods of gypsum disposal are not cost-efficient for the manufacturing sites.

"We are looking to see if it will increase crop yield first," he said. Olsen said project findings could be important to local crops.

"One of the problems with Southern Illinois crops in midsummer is that the soil dries and plant roots have trouble getting water," he said.

Bradley C. Paul, professor of mining engineering, said gypsum used in research is of higher quality than gypsum normally retrieved from mining.

Paul, who has been conducting by-product recycling research for five years, said he found his inspiration for involvement in the project in an unusual place.

"I was watching my wife out in her flower garden one day and she was using gypsum on the soil," Paul said.

Rounding out the team of researchers on the project are the following instructors: S.K. Chong, professor of soil physics, and Edward C. Varsa, associate professor of soil fertility. All have been involved in various roles, from grant writing to soil sampling, since the project began.

again without the governor's executive order.

"I'm sure we would have done something to help the people who are serving our country," he said.

Lt. Col. William Patula, commander of the 347th Replacement Battalion out of Marion and an SIUC mathematics professor, said he and two other SIUC employees, Jonathan Newman from zoology and Ronald Cook from General Stores, were in units that were activated for the peace-keeping mission.

Patula said he, Newman and Cook are supporting the mission by processing the paperwork needed to send troops out of Fort Benning, Ga. to Bosnia.

"If army wages are less than University wages, the University makes up the difference," he said. "I do know the University will do all they can. The University's been very good to us."

Day care

services to help take care of their children, the survey said. SIUC provides two on-campus day care services.

Child Development Laboratories, a division of the Department of Curriculum and Instruction and Rainbow's End, a subsidiary of Student Development.

These programs are available to SIUC students, staff and faculty. Both have at least a year's waiting list.

Day care is a necessity for a single parent, Cherie Rummel, a junior in University studies from Xenia, said.

She said putting her five-year-old daughter Hannah in a day care program is the only way for her to finish her bachelor's degree.

"There is no way I could go to school if Hannah wasn't in day care," she said.

"I have no parents or grandparents in the area. I have no people here to rely on."

Sophia Gossett, a senior in business education from Chicago, said she came to SIUC in 1992 with her daughter Ashley.

Gossett said SIUC's day care program was the reason she attended the University.

"I wanted to attend college, and day care was my only route," she said.

"I had no choice. It was either that or not go to school at all."

Gossett said Ashley was the driving force behind her return to school.

She said her goals have changed since she has become a mother.

"Most of the time (child care) is too expensive in the community for a student to handle and still be a student."

Eva Murry
Director, Rainbow's End

"Before you have a child, you only have to think about yourself," she said. "Now there is someone else you have to take care of and provide for."

Rummel said she does not get to her homework until her five-year-old daughter Hannah goes to sleep.

She said she feels it is important to have a lot of contact with her child at night because she does not see her all day.

"We have a whole entire nighttime routine," Rummel said.

"Even if I'm only reading her a story, it's important to have that contact," she said.

Rummel said homework only conflicts with Hannah on the weekends.

"If I have papers on the weekend, I have to explain to her I have homework," Rummel said.

"But, you always get the questions like, 'Can I type on the computer?' or 'Will you hold me?' That makes studying a lot harder," she said.

Eva Murry, director of the Rainbow's End center, said the traditional student role is changing at colleges.

She said students are enrolling in colleges at older ages, and many have children.

"A lot of students now have children, and if there is no day care center associated with the school, nine times out of ten that student is not able to find child care because it is very expensive," Murry said.

"Most of the time it is too expensive in the community for a student to handle and still be a student," she said.

Rainbow's End receives funding through Student Development fees.

The assessment of tuition and fees for the parent is based on the number of hours the students' children are enrolled at the center.

Murry said the program is designed to serve 133 children and is close to capacity.

She said 90 percent of the children enrolled are children of students.

Murry said there is adequate day care on campus, but improvements could be made to meet the child-care demand.

"Day care is better than it used to be," Murry said.

"There was a time before we acquired the new facility in 1994 when we could only take but 50 children, but if there was adequate day care, we wouldn't have a waiting list," she said.

The primary goal for the Child Development Laboratories, is to provide education and training experiences for students majoring in Early Childhood, while offering child care services, Sara Starbuck, director of the program, said.

The staff includes a head teacher, student workers and student teachers.

They have an 80 child capacity and is currently at capacity.

The program is funded through parent fees and provides day care services to SIUC faculty, staff, students and the Carbondale community.

Starbuck, director of the program, said a University location is ideal for a day care center.

She said the day care can take advantage of the museums, music department and events for daily activities.

Starbuck said if a person is looking at day care services, he or she should put themselves on a list immediately.

"Spots are always opening up, but if you're pregnant, you probably won't get into the center until your child is between one and three," Starbuck said.

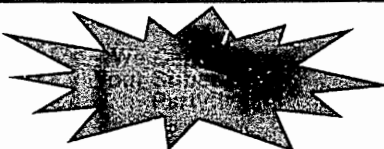

Kates said an on-campus day care is more convenient for her because she spends all her time at school.

She said she can take advantage of time between classes to visit Rane.

Kates said one of the best features of day care is the opportunity to have time for herself.

"When you're a single parent at a university there is no one to share responsibility with you," Kates said.

"If I had to stay at home for a full day, I would become bitter and probably end up neglecting him. Because I see him so little, I never take our time together for granted," she said.

AFL-CIO supports Rendleman in primary

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

John S. Rendleman, democratic candidate for state representative in the 115 district, will be endorsed by the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations during the primary race, a labor official says.

Chathrine Shannon, political director, said based on Rendleman's questionnaire and a recommendation from the Committee on Political Education, the AFL-CIO will endorse him as the best candidate for labor.

Rendleman said that he is pleased the AFL-CIO is backing him, and he said he will be the voice for labor.

"Republicans have ignored labor and shut them out of the bill-writing process in Springfield," he said.

Rendleman also said he was disturbed to hear that Gov. Jim Edgar had said early in January that the executive had not heard from down-state legislators regarding the possible elimination of the Chicago to Carbondale Amtrak route.

"Amtrak is a labor issue. If the subsidy is not received, 350 people could lose their jobs," he said. "I think it is important that the issue not be ignored."

State Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, the incumbent Rendleman will face at the polls if he wins the primary, said the issue was not being ignored.

"That is not what he (Edgar) said. He said he had not heard from enough districts," Bost said. "I had been working on this three-and-a-half months before the governor had said that, and just last week I

"I am somewhat surprised to learn this. His law capacity has not been for the working people but for big business."

Elsie Speck

Candidate for state representative introduced legislation to continue the funding."

The other democratic candidates for State Representative for the 115 district, Elsie Speck and Karl Maple, were shocked to learn the AFL-CIO had chosen Rendleman.

"I am somewhat surprised to learn this," Speck said. "His law capacity has not been for the working people but for big business. (Don Johnson, president of the AFL-CIO) is looking for the candidate with well-oiled connections. I don't have money from Chicago Democrats. I have grassroots money."

Maple said he is surprised and dismayed the AFL-CIO chose Rendleman.

Maple said he has helped labor more than Rendleman.

"I am from a union family. I helped organize the faculty union at John A. Logan College (where Maple is a professor) and was the first chair," Maple said. "I helped negotiate the first contract under that. Rendleman has no union record."

All of the candidates said they agree the endorsement does not guarantee labor votes at the primary March 19.

"Rendleman is an attorney representing management. This is not the choice for the rank and file," Maple said.

"This happened in 1994 when I ran, but the local unions supported me because I am for labor," Bost said.

Rendleman said he is the candidate for labor.

"Part of my campaign is to build an infrastructure in Southern Illinois with school and road improvements, meaning jobs."

Accused cocaine kingpin turns in drug smugglers

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Juan Garcia Abrego, accused of heading a multi-billion-dollar drug trafficking empire that controlled a third of Mexico's cocaine smuggling, has begun assisting federal authorities in a wide-ranging investigation of narcotics smuggling across the U.S. southern border, sources familiar with the talks said.

Officials described Garcia Abrego's cooperation as a dramatic and potentially politically sensitive development because he could provide insight on corruption within recent Mexican federal administrations, including that of former President Carlos Salinas de Gortari which the Clinton administration lauded during the 1993 debate over the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

Garcia Abrego has provided information about his organization known as the "Gulf Cartel" in extended briefings with FBI agents, several sources said. The ongoing interviews were still underway yesterday a little more than a week after he was arrested by Mexican authorities and then flown to the United States to face charges brought by a federal grand jury.

While the talks were described as preliminary and fragile with no deal yet over a plea bargain, federal authorities expressed hope that Garcia Abrego's interrogations would prove a watershed in their knowledge of Mexican narcotics trafficking. "The matter is at a very sensitive stage, but the fact that there is an extended conversation and he is continuing to talk, does mean that something is going on," one source said. Telephone calls to his attorney's office Thursday were not returned.

"This man (Garcia Abrego) has tentacles that goes who knows where," said another federal official. "What he says could have a potentially devastating international impact."

Garcia Abrego, known to some as "El Director," "The Doll" and "The Engineer," was the first alleged international drug trafficker to be placed on the FBI's Most Wanted List. In 1993, a federal grand jury in Houston indicted him on a conspiracy to ship tons of cocaine into the United States in collaboration with Colombia's Cali Cartel.

Garcia Abrego is also suspected of involvement in dozens of murders in Mexico and the assassination of prominent Mexican politicians, including Luis Donaldo Colosio, the 1994 presidential candidate of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party. Officials are also investigating whether part of the $120 million fortune amassed by Raul Salinas, the jailed brother of former president Carlos Salinas, came from Garcia Abrego.

A law enforcement source said that Garcia Abrego had at first offered information that was of limited value, but that in recent days the content of the talks had improved.

Upon receiving information from Abrego, investigators were attempting to verify its accuracy, said a number of sources, who declined to described the substance of Garcia Abrego's statements.

Asked why Garcia Abrego would assist authorities, a law enforcement source noted that Garcia Abrego had few options and needed to be concerned about his protection, even in an American prison. The source said Garcia Abrego's stature within his organization had recently begun to "slide" and that he may have been a target for assassination even prior to his arrest.

Rather than fighting each other in the semi-annual Battle of the Bands, local acts Eutyechus Falls, The Visit, and Waxdolls are teaming up for a benefit to take on cerebral palsy at Detours tonight.

"Cerebral palsy is usually caused by prenatal brain defects and damage to the brain during birth. It is characterized by involuntary movements and a difficulty in controlling the voluntary muscles. Victims sometimes are not able to walk, talk, hold up their head or use their hands. An estimated 700,000 people have cerebral palsy in the U.S."

"It is a condition, not a disease," said Jamie Wall, the fundraising coordinator for the United Cerebral Palsy of Southern Illinois, a Centralia-based organization that serves 27 counties in Southern Illinois.

"People are under the impression that it is a disease, but it is really a condition that people suffer from and have very little control over," she said.

Tom Miller, drummer for Eutyechus Falls, is a physical therapist who has worked with people who have cerebral palsy.

"The show is kind of a cool one for me," Miller said. "It is a little personal because I have worked with people who suffer from cerebral palsy."

"Three good bands, only $2 and it is for a really good cause," Shawn Dawson, lead singer and guitarist for Waxdolls, said.

In addition to the concert, WCIL will broadcast and give away free T-shirts and CDs.

"It is a good cause, and it is something we are happy to get involved with," said Andrew Zepeda, program director at WCIL.

The bands are performing for free, and all the money from the cover will be donated to the United Cerebral Palsy of Southern Illinois, Frank Arkiyasamy, owner of Detours, said.

The United Cerebral Palsy of Southern Illinois helps those "needed get money for wheelchairs and other equipment they might need. The organization also provides a free clinic for cerebral palsy patients in Mt. Vernon.

"The clinic is really one of kind," Wall said. "It is the only one of its kind."

Eutyechus Falls, The Visit and Waxdolls play at 9:00 p.m. at Detours, 760 E. Grand Ave. Doors will open at 8:00 p.m. The cover is $2.

Gadhafi and Farrakhan join forces for U.S. Muslim causes

The Washington Post

CAIRO, Egypt—Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi said Thursday that he and Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan have agreed to work together to influence U.S. elections and foreign policy, building on a pledge to spend $1 billion on Muslim causes in the United States.

Gadhafi's remarks were quoted by the official Libyan news agency, JANA, after a meeting Tuesday in Libya between Gadhafi and Farrakhan, a leading advocate of black separatism in the United States. Gadhafi also called for creation of a separate black state in the United States with its own army manned by black soldiers from the U.S. armed forces, JANA said.

"Our confrontation with America was like a fight against a fortress from outside, and today we found a breach to enter into this fortress and confront it," JANA quoted Gadhafi as saying of his discussions with Farrakhan. "On this basis, we agreed with Louis Farrakhan and his delegation to mobilize in a legal and legitimate form the oppressed minorities, and at their forefront the blacks, Arabs, Muslims and red Indians, for they play an important role in American political life and have a weight in the U.S. elections."

The Libyan leader has been branded a pariah in the West and in some parts of the Arab world for his alleged role in sponsoring international terrorism. He long has cast himself as a champion of oppressed and Third World people and has funded revolutionary groups ranging from factions in neighboring Chad to the Irish Republican Army.

At the same time, Gadhafi is known for exaggerated and at times hallucinatory statements, such as his proposal last year that his son marry President Clinton's daughter, Chelsea, to patch up differences between the United States and Libya.

This is not the first meeting between Gadhafi and Farrakhan, nor the first time Gadhafi has discussed a black army fighting for the oppressed in America. Their relationship goes back at least to 1985, when Gadhafi loaned Farrakhan $5 million for various business projects associated with the Nation of Islam.

SIUC physiology professor seeks cure for growth-hormone disease

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC chairman says he is attempting to find a cure for a disease that causes growth in the hormones of the pituitary gland which interferes with the reproductive organs of men and women.

Andersen Bartke, chairman of the SIUC physiology department, said he is seeking to identify the mechanisms and the locations the hormone will affect.

Bartke started the research in 1986 and he said he wants to know how FSH and LH growth hormones function in the brain and reproductive organs and what trouble they can cause.

Bartke said data obtained from the research found acromegaly, a non-genetic disease in which the pituitary gland produces excessive amounts of growth in the hormone.

The growth interferes with fertility in both men and women, he said.

"Men will have problems with sexual functions and reduction of sexual abilities, and women will have irregular menstrual cycles or no cycle at all," Bartke said.

Mark Trelka, a neurologist in Carbondale, said the pituitary gland produces hormones that deal with reproduction.

"Tumors in the pituitary gland may affect the hormones in women that prepare the uterus for the fetus and the development of the fetus," Trelka said.

In the study, mice with genetically engineered hormones are compared with normal mice to determine the effects on reproductive functions.

The disease develops slowly, causing problems with diagnosis, he said. Some of the symptoms are swelling of the nose, fingers and toes and pain in joints, headaches and visual disturbances.

Bartke said if a person suspects they may have a tumor, he or she may undergo X-rays or have the growth of hormones in their blood measured.

Acromegaly can be surgically removed, or medication may be taken to reduce the secretion of the growth hormone he said.

However, there are some risks in having the tumor surgically removed, he said.

The risks depend upon the characteristics of the patient and the tumor, such as the size of the tumor and the age of the patient.

"If it is a large tumor or tumor that is causing damage to a nerve, it might be better to have surgery, but medication can be used for hormone problems," Trelka said.

Diet Coke deal could take fizz out of 'Friends'

Newsday

Three weeks ago, Coke launched a $15 million promotional campaign that will culminate Sunday night at the end of a special hour-long "Friends" episode airing after Super Bowl XXX.

The gist: Watch the commercials in the "rilly big shoe" (boasting cameos by Jean-Claude Van Damme, Brooke Shields and Julia Roberts), find out who sucked on the sacred bottle, and then, if you have the right bottle cap or game piece, win a trip to Los Angeles or watch a taping of guess-which-show.

The promotion is amazing for a couple of reasons. First, slyboots Coke beat out Pepsi (which had cooked up exactly the same idea) to sign up the hottest cast in television. And even though it wasn't too hard to persuade the cast members to shill for Diet Coke (they each got $500,000 a pop for their troubles), no one can remember a similar gimmick exactly like this one. And what a gimmick: Coke, whose ads feature cast members in cutesy vignettes about the secret soda swillier, will get a massive post-Super Bowl audience without having to spend a single dime on Super Bowl advertising. (Our guess: "Friends" will get a 50 percent share of the viewing audience Sunday night.)

Second, Coke's promotion — even by Coke's practiced standards — is just a masterstroke because, like so much else in modern American culture, it has become a story unto itself.

"Friends" freaks are starting to speculate — almost reluctantly — about the closet Diet Coke drinker on Internet Usenet groups. (And yes, Coke has established a web site that's an extension of the promotion.)

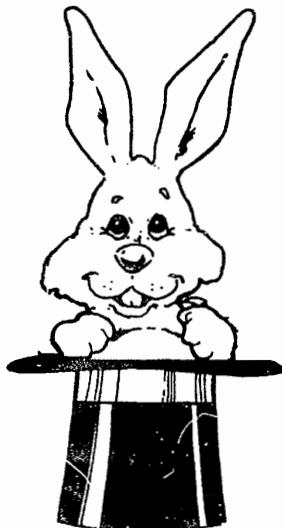

Headline in newspapers, day after the Super Bowl? "Joey Drinks the Bottle." (Slightly headline: "Pittsburgh Upsets Dallas.")

The American advertising industry has a peculiar genius for exploiting ephemera.

But this time, those clever rascals at Coke may have gone just a step too far.

Unwittingly, they may be contributing to the "Friends" backlash growing right before our eyes.

Makeshift memorial setup in Oklahoma City

The Washington Post

OKLAHOMA CITY—In the nine months since her two grandsons were killed in the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building here, Jannie Coverdale can hardly remember a day when she hasn't taken the long, difficult walk to the bomb site across the street from her apartment, where she was raising the boys alone.

There is not much there now but the hard, cold ground, waiting for an official memorial that could take years to build. Where an office building once stood, full of life in the heart of downtown, there remains only a desolate lot the size of a city block surrounded by a simple eight-foot-tall chain-link fence.

But for Coverdale and countless others, the site provides a special comfort as it speaks to the anguish of a nation. In the weeks and months following the April 19 blast that claimed 169 lives and injured hundreds more, thousands of people have made the pilgrimage here, turning the fence into a sorrowful makeshift memorial. Like those who have left 50,000 items from the heart at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, so too do visitors here feel compelled to leave something—crosses, letters, toys, clothes—and share a loss of unfathomable proportions.

"Sometimes when I'm sitting around the apartment and I get so that I just can't stop crying, I just have to get out and walk over here," said Coverdale, during a visit to the fence one recent frigid morning. "I like to read the notes and touch the teddy bears, and it somehow makes me feel a little better knowing that the boys haven't been forgotten. It's so important that no one forget."

It seems that few soon will. Hundreds of business cards from across the nation, signature T-shirts, huge laminated poster boards filled with soulful messages, baby shoes, endless bouquets, and dozens of teddy bears for the 19 children killed in the building's day-care center have been hung on the fence guarding the federal property. Others have fashioned nearly 200 stick-crosses from the debris and tucked them into the fence.

In the past few days, General Services Administration (GSA) workers have gently removed many items to archive them and to allow the fence to be moved closer to the recently sodded spot once occupied by the nine-story building. This will also offer visitors an opportunity to get even closer to what has become known here as the "sacred ground."

Jannie Coverdale Grandmother of bombing victims

Many come looking for answers, but there are none. Only shattered lives. A red felt Christmas stocking with a tiny teddy bear peeking out read: "Merry Christmas Ashley, Love, Momma, Daddy, Zack & David." There was a personal note dated Dec. 31 to Susan Ferrell, a Department of Housing and Urban Development employee who was 37 when she died in the blast: "The year ends, but our love for you never does. Sleep in heavenly peace. Neil, Deb, Kathryn, Thomas."

There was a white knit sweater, its wide-open arms secured in the fence's crevices: "If you are cold or need a sweater, take this one," a note pinned to it instructs. "My friend would want you to have it and be warm. At 9:02 a.m., April 19, she was working in the Social Security office. She was killed."

It wasn't until mid-December that the GSA, which manages the site, realized that the fence was turning into a shrine and that it was time to start preserving and archiving the memorabilia as is done at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Hundreds of weather-worn shirts, key chains, toys and notes now fill small storage rooms awaiting possible use at a monument to the victims.

To the survivors, all the planning and organizing seem, at times, like endless bureaucracy and hot air. They say they simply want a place to go and grieve where their loved ones will always be remembered. For now, they have that place.

Clinton nominates new spies

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration proposed Wednesday to appoint two senior military intelligence officials to supervise all U.S. eavesdropping on foreign governments and citizens and much of its spying related to military operations and requirements.

Secretary of Defense William J. Perry announced that Air Force Lt. Gen. Kenneth A. Minihan has been nominated to run the National Security Agency, which is responsible for providing U.S. officials with a steady stream of intercepted electronic data on foreign weapons and conversations involving foreign politicians.

Minihan, 52, has been director of the Defense Intelligence Agency since last July and spent his entire military career in the spy world, with postings in Vietnam, Panama, and Italy as well as a previous stint at NSA. In November, Perry placed him in charge of reviewing tainted information about Russian weapons systems passed to senior U.S. policy-makers and defense officials by the CIA.

An apparent natural for the hush-hush organization, Minihan has apparently given only one interview to the media in his lengthy military career. He told Jane's Defense Weekly this month that at DIA, he was anxious to help create a new computerized, intelligence system that will speed the dissemination of vital data to military commanders in the field.

The nominee to fill Minihan's position at DIA was Army Maj. Gen. Patrick M. Hughes, who has run intelligence operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff since August 1994 and had postings in Vietnam, Japan, Korea, and the Florida headquarters of the Central Command with responsibility for collecting intelligence on the Middle East.

Hughes, 53, has worked closely with Perry and CIA director John M. Deutch in setting up U.S. intelligence operations in Bosnia, drawing praise from other Pentagon officials for streamlining the transfer of intelligence from Washington to U.S. forces there.

End of Israeli conflict brings return of old foes

The Baltimore Sun

JERUSALEM—Peace is bringing some long-gone Palestinians back to Israel's doorstep, carrying with them some horrifying memories.

The bloody attacks that fused the terms "terrorist" and "Palestinian" in the minds of so many Israelis and much of the world are being recalled by the possible return from exile of many of Israel's old foes.

Israel has invited members of the old Palestinian parliament in exile to return to the West Bank and Gaza to ratify the peace process, a calculated move that is bringing scenes many Israelis never imagined. Scenes such as:

—Naif Hawatmeh, whose organization was responsible for the deaths of 20 hostage schoolchildren in northern Israel, calling Israeli reporters yesterday to say he wants to come to the West Bank.

—Sheik Abdel Hamid Sayagh, a stern preacher who favored the Nazis and rallied East Jerusalem Arabs against the Israelis, expected to return to Jerusalem soon after 29 years of exile.

—Bassam Abu Sharif, his face disfigured by a parcel bomb likely sent to him in Beirut by Israeli agents, striding across the Allenby Bridge from Jordan Tuesday and shaking the hand of an Israeli soldier.

"All of the sores that were in the process of healing have been reopened when we hear these terrorists want to come in," complained a bitter Shimon Maimon, who as a teen-ager survived the hostage-taking ordered by Hawatmeh in 1974 at a school in the northern Galilee town of Ma'alot.

"They talk about peace. They talk about love. But what is happening is they are talking about bringing murderers and erasing crimes of bloodletting when we were the ones that suffered," he said.

His complaints are joined by the Israeli opposition, which has

Shimon Maimon
Israeli survivor of terrorist attack expressed outrage at the decision.

Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres announced immediately after the Palestinians' first election Saturday that all members of the old Palestine National Council could return to the West Bank or Gaza.

Peres said the offer was necessary so that the Palestinians can fulfill their pledge to repeal portions of the PNC's 1968 charter that call for the destruction of Israel.

The secretive PNC, said to include about 480 members, includes hundreds of members who had been deported, banned or fled from the West Bank and Gaza Strip for opposing Israel's occupation. They are now scattered mostly in other countries of the Middle East, with the more radical members in Syria.

The offer is a calculated gamble that moderate members of the PNC would gratefully return, join the political process, and give Yasser Arafat the majority he needs to change the charter.

"From Israel's point of view, it's better if they're here and not in Syria," Peres told a parliament committee this week.

Abu-Sharif's return Tuesday was a reminder that violence came from both sides. In 1972—a year of horrific terrorism and retaliation between the Palestinians and Israel—Abu-Sharif was an editor of a newspaper for the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—a Marxist group responsible for some of the most violent acts of the time. A package bomb was sent to the PFLP office in Beirut. He opened it and the blast disfigured his face and cost him an eye and three fingers. It was widely attributed to Israeli agents, and never was denied by Israel.

But Abu-Sharif also is evidence of change. In 1986, he joined the more moderate wing of Fatah, and was spokesman for Mr. Arafat. On his reentry to the West Bank this week, he praised Peres and said he supported the change in the PNC charter.

"We want to live in peace, side by side with Israel," he said upon crossing the bridge from Jordan.

Serb families leaving villages

War survivors lose homes, become casualties of peace

Los Angeles Times

ZELINA, Bosnia-Herzegovina—After fighting successfully through almost four years of war to hold on to his ancestral home in a mountainous region near Bosnia's front line, Svjetko felt he had no choice but to abandon it this week because of peace.

His is one of hundreds of families in this Bosnian Serb village, and six similar villages nearby, who weathered the war but are now in the midst of a reluctant exodus because their land will become part of the territory of the Muslim-led Bosnian Federation under the peace accord forged in Dayton, Ohio.

Earlier this week, the 41-year-old carpenter-turned-soldier gathered clothes, furniture and family heirlooms and then visited the graves of his father and grandfather.

"According to the Orthodox custom, I lit candles on their graves," said Svjetko, a hulking man wearing camouflage fatigues and unable to fight back tears. "It was so hard to leave. It's the most painful thing that can happen in a man's life."

Svjetko said he was afraid to give his last name because he had no idea where he and his family would settle and he did not want to offend any authorities.

Many traditional Muslim areas will fall under Bosnian Serb control under the peace accord. But while the Serbs are fleeing, most of the Muslims are staying put; they have more confidence in the prospects for peace and in the international peace implementation force's ability to protect them, according to local officials and foreign observers.

The years of fierce warfare in Bosnia have left many ghost towns and as many as 2 million refugees. The Dayton agreement specifies that all the people of Bosnia should be allowed to remain in or return to their homes, whether in territory controlled by the Bosnian Federation or in the Bosnian-Serb-led Republika Srpska.

But many families like Svjetko's are worried that they will not be safe if they stay in areas controlled by their wartime enemies.

"No one is telling them to go," said U.S. Captain Robert Ivy, whose men patrol the former front-line area as part of the NATO-led peace implementation force. "But there is such deep distrust between the Serbs and Muslims that they don't think they can live together."

Ivy's troops have watched as hundreds of Serb families in the area stripped their houses of everything valuable—including kitchen sinks, windows and doors.

Some of the families appeared to have been in more of a hurry than others. While all that was left of some houses were the brick frames, at several homes in Zelina, laundry that had been left behind was covered with two-day-old snow.

Some people—mostly the elderly or especially poor—stayed behind because they had no choice. "I don't have anywhere to go," said Zora Milic, 37, whose family is one of the few remaining in Zelina. "We've always lived here."

Rival Super Bowl Web sites battle for attention of mouse-pad athletes

The Washington Post

This year's celebration of truth, justice and 300-pound men smashing into one another brings us the unprecedented spectacle of not one but two Super Bowl Web sites.

They're both in the finest tradition of Super Bowl advertising — gold-plated exercises in corporate ego expansion that are the only thing anyone can remember about the game two weeks later — right up there with Apple's "1984" commercial introducing the Macintosh during the Super Bowl 12 years ago.

The "official" Web site — a joint venture among the NFL, NBC and Microsoft — constitutes geek glitz at its over-engineered finest.

The pages, which require Microsoft's Internet Explorer browser to look their best, practically burst with design tricks such as scrolling headlines, enormous background graphics splattered across pages, live chat sessions and even background sound effects.

Microsoft, et al., also present a series of exhibits on Hall of Fame-type topics such as great Super Bowl plays.

After the first few screens full, however, the sense of History Being Made starts to seem a bit forced, as if we're expected to take notes for the quiz afterward.

If the concept of ubiquitous hype sounds familiar, it should.

"We started the on-line event-type thing with the launch of Windows

"I doubt that (the Arizona site) would have access to the depth and the richness of ours."

Steve Guggenheimer Internet Explorer product manager

95, the next logical extension of that is to apply it to other large events — what better large event than the Super Bowl?" said Steve Guggenheimer, Microsoft product manager for Internet Explorer.

The "unofficial" site, meanwhile — a partnership among Arizona State University, MCI, Sun Microsystems and Netscape Communications Corp. — takes a different approach. Instead of bleeding-edge multimedia design, the site strings together links like Polish sausage at a Pittsburgh market.

There are scads of virtual-reality exhibits, such as VRML (Virtual Reality Modeling Language) mock-ups of game venue Sun Devil Stadium and the Super Bowl host city of Tempe, allowing sleepless Net-heads with the right software to check out simulated views from various locations in each.

And these goofballs at ASU also included a series of "Gridiron Grudge Matches," inviting users to settle such contests as "Irresistible Force vs. Immovable Object" (Cowboys owner Jerry Jones's Texas-size ego vs. former Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson's bulletproof coffin).

So how did it come to happen that two such sites would grace the Web? The Arizona consortium was there first, and actually had the superbowl.com "domain name" registered to itself for a month or so.

The NFL arrived in time for Christmas, retaking that superbowl.com address — and bruising a few egos in Arizona in the process.

"There's been a lot of, let's say ... misunderstanding," said Bill Lewis, vice provost for information technology at ASU. "At first, I don't think the NFL thought there was anything in this toy called the Internet."

Lewis grumbles, "The young people we have here (working on the project) think theirs is really bland stuff."

Back at Microsoft, Guggenheimer responds, "I doubt that (the Arizona site) would have access to the depth and the richness of ours."

(Getting there: The official site is at <http://www.superbowl.com>. The Arizona site is at <http://www.azsuperbowl.com>.)

Web sites of the Week

■ Politics

<http://thomas.loc.gov>
Named in honor of Thomas Jefferson, this server provides a searchable library of Congress that includes the congressional record and text of all bills introduced in the 104th and 105th sessions. Great for keeping current or catching up on politics.

■ Science

<http://www.nasa.gov>
For those with the download capacity, there are enough pictures here to make stargazing a 24-hour-a-day pastime. NASA is one of those rare government institutions that knows who it's working for, and its home page programmers are pleasantly generous in its project updates. Check out the excellent pages on the current Galileo mission to Jupiter.

■ Sports

<http://www.nba.com>
There is no better time than the present to check out the NBA home page. As the Bulls continue their climb toward being the best of all-time, you can also get a commentary from Phil Jackson on how he feels the Unbeatable Bulls are doing up to this point. Plus, check out "The Rookie Report" on the NBA home page to find out how former Selukis Ashraf Amaya and Chris Carr are doing in the big leagues.

■ Entertainment

<http://Pathfinder.com>
Time Warner may be a little commercial for the fiercely independent web, but sites like these are only going to be more prolific in the future. "TIME", "People" and "LIFE" are just a few of the publications available, as well as photos and info on artists not available anywhere else.

'E-zines' hot in cyberspace

Smaller publishers find market for magazines designed specifically for Internet circulation.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Over the last year or so, publishers of all kinds have flocked to the Internet, drawn by its enormous potential as a distribution channel.

But while the big companies, wanting to attract advertisers and turn a profit, are still trying to find out what works, smaller publishers think they already know.

They're making a bewildering variety of "e-zines" available through the World Wide Web and e-mail.

Just how many? Nobody really knows, but John Labovitz' Ezine List (http://www.mccr.net/\(x\)john/ezine-list/index.htmljohn/ezine-list/index.html)) includes more than 750 electronic magazines, ranging from the Abraxas Reader to Zzone's Zmagazine.

It's impossible to scroll through the list — or the linked list that organizes e-zines by categories — without pausing to marvel at titles like Earfood, crude rom and 50 Greatest Conspiracies of All Time.

On and on it goes, encompassing the political, the personal, the practical and the perplexingly pointless.

Categories like paranoia, punk Marxism and self-absorption coexist with more prosaic ones: classical music, silent film and four-wheel-drive vehicles.

One reason there are so many e-zines is that it's comparatively easy to publish on the Internet, as Ray Heinrich, a McLean, Va., computer consultant, points out.

Heinrich began posting poems to the newsgroup rec.arts.poems about 18 months ago, and discovered he had a fan club.

People told him via e-mail they liked his work, so Heinrich asked if they'd like to receive Word Biscuit, his "poem e-letter."

He now sends Word Biscuit to about 60 subscribers and, as a result, enjoys something most writers who publish in traditional formats can only imagine — ongoing communication with his readers.

While Heinrich was looking for ways to share his work with others, Tim Riley of Boston was looking for a way to cut costs, and to get in on the cutting edge of electronic publishing.

Riley turned to the Internet after printing four issues of millennium pop, a journal of popular culture. Two-thirds of the subscribers have been getting the magazine via e-mail since last summer, and anyone can check out selected articles at its World Wide Web home page.

"The Internet is the most interesting thing happening these days, and the implications for the future of pop culture are vast," Riley said. "As a journal trying to be in the vanguard of pop culture while commenting on that culture, we thought it appropriate for us to lead the way into electronic publishing."

Riley, who has written books about the music of the Beatles and Bob Dylan, says the production costs of the electronic version of millennium pop are about one-fifth of the print version's.

E-mail is almost instantaneous and extremely reliable — issues are seldom lost in the mail.

There are other advantages as well. Visit Caffeine on the Web and you can listen to a poem by the late poet Charles Bukowski, as well as read about Bukowski himself.

Afterward, you can e-mail the editors — as you can with almost all e-zines — to tell them what you liked, or didn't like, about the issue.

Interest groups pay Dole's wife big bucks

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Elizabeth Hanford Dole, a former Cabinet secretary and the wife of Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, received speaking fees from 1991 through 1994 in excess of $875,000—much of it from groups with a stake in policy matters pending before Congress, records show.

The fees have enhanced substantially the couple's joint income, which totaled about $600,000 in 1994, according to income-tax returns and annual financial disclosure statements, Mrs. Dole, a national figure in her own right, last fall took a temporary leave as president of the American Red Cross to support her husband's campaign for the Republican presidential nomination.

Sen. Dole has filed income-disclosure statements with the Senate for the last four years saying all of Mrs. Dole's speaking fees were contributed to a Red Cross charity account—except for "taxes a contribution to a retirement fund and speech-writing expenses."

However, a Los Angeles Times analysis of the records shows the Doles have retained a substantial part of Mrs. Dole's speaking fees:

From 1991 through 1994, the Doles kept $147,663 in cash from Mrs. Dole's fees—after speech-writing costs and federal income taxes were paid.

An additional $243,830 was placed in Mrs. Dole's retirement account, as the senator stated in his financial disclosure forms. The couple contributed $405,513, or 46 percent, of the fees to the Red Cross charity account for troubled youths during 1991 through 1994. But only in 1993 did Mrs. Dole donate all her speaking fees to the charity—minus taxes, expenses and a contribution to her private retirement fund.

In 1994, the most recent year for which financial records are available, the Doles kept $47,421 in cash from Mrs. Dole's $184,775 in speaking fees and placed $63,505 into Mrs. Dole's retirement account.

Asked for comment, aides to Dole did not dispute The Times' findings. Reading from a prepared response Thursday night, Dole campaign spokeswoman Christina Martin said:

"We are not aware of a reason to amend the senator's (financial disclosure) statements at this time. Sen. Dole has filed amendments in the past and would do so again, should a review prove such a step is necessary. The senator is a firm believer in full disclosure, as is demonstrated by his release (last week) of tax returns dating back 29 years."

The annual disclosure forms signed by Sen. Dole warn that civil and criminal sanctions can be imposed if a senator "knowingly and willfully" makes a false statement.

Nelson Warfield, Dole's chief spokesman, said the senator is not influenced by Elizabeth Dole's acceptance of speaking fees from groups with business pending before Congress.

"Mrs. Dole has an extraordinary record of public service which spans over 20 years. This in itself is the reason so many people request her as a speaker."

Nelson Warfield
Spokesman for Sen. Bob Dole

Clearly, Mrs. Dole's career in Washington makes her a sought-after guest speaker. Before joining the Red Cross in 1991, she was an appointee of five presidents—serving as a member of the Federal Trade Commission in the 1970s and as secretary of labor and secretary of transportation in the 1980s. Mrs. Dole, a lawyer, has won praise for her leadership of the Red Cross—and she did not accept the $200,000 salary paid by the organization during her first year as president.

Yet in an election year when the past transactions of first Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton continue to loom as a problem for the president, attention also is focusing on the business dealings of the wife of the senator from Kansas, who polls show is the front-runner for the Republican nomination.

Mrs. Dole referred questions posed by The Times to Warfield, the presidential campaign spokesman.

"Mrs. Dole has an extraordinary record of public service which spans over 20 years," Warfield said. "This in itself is the reason so many people request her as a speaker."

Mrs. Dole, who married the senator in 1975, typically has accepted speaking engagements for fees ranging from $12,000 to $35,000. Now 59, she employs the services of a booking agency and often speaks on the need for volunteerism or the shape of America's labor force.

As a member of the executive branch during the '70s and '80s, Mrs. Dole did not accept speaking fees. She did receive $100,026 of the payments in 1988—when she temporarily left federal office to assist Sen. Dole's presidential campaign. Sen. Dole, meanwhile, accepted fees totaling $1.4 million from 1981-91. In addition to his Senate compensation, tax records show that Sen. Dole, during those years contributed $337,328 to a private pension plan—a nest egg paid for by his speaking fees.

Moreover, although Sen. Dole professes no knowledge of the groups to which his wife has spoken—many of them should be familiar to him.

At least 16 of the groups that retained Mrs. Dole to speak from 1991 through 1994 maintain lobbying offices in or near Washington and have business pending before the federal government. Records also show that four of the groups that paid to hear her earlier had hired Sen. Dole—before congressional rules in 1993 began cracking down on the controversial practice of senators and House members accepting such payments.

Representatives of most of the groups that hired Mrs. Dole said they chose her because of her experience. Some, however, also said they retained Mrs. Dole because of her connection to one of the most powerful figures in Washington—her husband.

"That certainly makes her a little more interesting, definitely," said Pat Areno, an executive for the Building Owners & Managers Association, which paid Mrs. Dole $20,000, plus expenses, to speak at a conference in San Diego in 1994. "You can't ignore that it's a factor."

A spokeswoman for the American Health Care Association, which lobbies Congress on behalf of nursing-home owners, said the group paid Mrs. Dole $20,000 to speak in 1991, irrespective of Sen. Dole's status.

"I suppose her connection with the senator helps create a visibility and makes her attractive, in that sense," said the spokeswoman.

New hepatitis virus discovered

Newsway

Scientists have discovered a new type of hepatitis virus they say may be infecting 1.7 percent of the U.S. blood supply, and is capable of causing severe, even fatal, disease.

In a report to be published in Friday's issue of the journal Science, researchers named the virus hepatitis G, and said that finding it was the result of an international effort to pin down the cause of the roughly 3 percent of all acute hepatitis cases that are not the result of infections with hepatitis viruses A through F.

The new virus was found using sensitive genetic techniques, researchers said, adding that there is no simple way to routinely screen blood samples for hepatitis G. This means that some level of contamination is inevitable.

"The reason this (finding) occurred is that when we look at acute hepatitis in the U.S. there's always a residual group we can't account for," said Dr. Harold Margolis, of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Margolis was part of the worldwide effort that included scientists from the San Francisco biotechnology company Genelabs Technologies, Stanford University and research centers in Australia, Germany, England, Greece and the U.S. National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

"Does this account for all the unexplained cases of hepatitis?" Margolis asked. "Probably not. Are there going to be other ... (viruses) out there? Yes. How far do we go? Will we someday hit hepatitis Z? Who knows?"

Hepatitis is a medical term that refers to severe infection of the liver.

All of the known hepatitis viruses have unique capacities to spread, and cause diseases that range from mild liver irritation to terminal cancer. All the hepatitis viruses — including newly discovered G — can be passed from one person to another via blood transfusions or products.

At issue now is just how dangerous hepatitis G contamination of the blood supply may be. It is possible that large doses of hepatitis G are required to pass the illness on to a blood recipient, or that the recipient must be vulnerable in some special way.

The CDC will be pursuing answers to those questions as a high priority in 1996, Margolis said. And Genelabs is trying to come up with a routine way to screen blood samples for contamination.

Currently, detection is only possible through PCR, or polymerase chain reaction, a difficult process.

released from the hospital. "I was out jumping four months later at Carbondale and from landing on the mat I did get dizzy, so I knew it was too soon for me to be landing on my head," he said. The 25 year-old Plab said the only thing that would stop him from accomplishing that goal would be his mind. "If I felt like physically I couldn't do it, I would probably quit tomorrow," Plab said. "I think physically I have it in me, it's just a matter of believing in myself and having the confidence to go out there and do it."

Winning an Olympic medal is a goal of his, but he said every time he goes out to a track meet he wants to feel good about his performance and he said that high expectations really motivate him.

"That (high expectations) is what kept me going for so many years," Plab said. "Expectations can sometimes tear me apart. When you don't meet your expectations it's frustrating. That's where I've been the last two years, with track because I haven't reached my goal."

Plab explained that it is hard to speculate about the Olympics and qualifying jumps because he said high jumpers "jump out of their minds" when it comes to the Olympic trials.

"Back in '92 everyone thought 7-6 1/2 would make the Olympic team for sure and it didn't make the team," Plab said. "You had to jump 7-7 1/4 just to make the Olympic team and that was third place."

The former Saluki standout offered a hint of what it would take for him to be an Olympian again.

"I might wake up one day and only jump 7 feet and then I could come back four days later and jump 7-6 or 7-8, and I've done it," Plab said. "I've got to be in the right frame of mind and that's going to be my key, no doubt about it."

"Back in '92 I had no pressure on me, I had everything to gain and nothing to lose. Now I've got everything to prove and everything to lose. Ever since I made the Olympic team, I've been a changed person mentally."

Plab said he would not be hanging his high jumping shoes up if he did not win a medal or even get to the trials.

"I'm only 25 and there are people high jumping at thirty years old, so I never count anything out," he said. "If I don't win a medal, there will be a spot in my heart that's left empty, but that's not the end of life."

Plab said he might consider coaching after his high jumping days are over, though.

"I think I could help a lot of kids," Plab said. "One thing about going to the Olympics is you have an up on other coaches because they (kids) respect the word Olympian. I'm not saying I know a lot more than other people, but I feel I have been through a little more than some coaches."

Plab gave credit to SIUC track and field coach Bill Cornell.

"Cornell has been real good to me. He's a good guy," he said.

Jerry Jones, track and field coach at Mascoutah High School said he learned the ins and outs of high jumping while coaching Plab.

"It (coaching Plab) helped me out a lot, and I learned right along with him," said Jones.

"I think he discovered that he had excellent jumping ability when he started playing basketball," Jones said. "He should be proud of what he's already accomplished."

Darrin Plab stands on the track in McAndrew stadium as a member of the Saluki track and field squad. Plab was also a member of the 1992 U.S. Olympic track and field squad, although he did not receive a medal.

Kevin Greene:
'It's gonna be a royal rumble'

The Washington Post

PHOENIX—I came to be standing underneath a portable heater in the tent devoted to the Pittsburgh Steelers' mass interview session Wednesday morning—and I came to be right next to Pittsburgh's Mane Man, Kevin Greene, he of the Custer-like golden locks. Greene also was looking to Find The Warmth. But at 6 feet 3 and 247 pounds, once Greene takes a position under the heater, there's not much left to share.

I thought Greene might be fun to talk to, since on Tuesday, his off day, he jetted to Las Vegas to be in Hulk Hogan's corner for one of those pro wrestling extravaganzas.

Sadly, these and other questions about The Hulkster were left unanswered, as Greene instructed everyone not to ask him about his wrestling experience.

This put somewhat of a damper on the fun part of the dialogue, as Greene launched into a heartfelt assessment of what he visualized himself doing against the Cowboys, including "exerting positive gap control." In the ensuing 15 minutes Greene managed to say the following things:

"This Sunday you'll see two juggernauts going head to head for 15 rounds; it's gonna be a royal rumble."

"You gotta keep plugging, keep chopping wood, never say die."

"This is the most important game in my life. If I never play another down, I could care less."

"I think the level of physical competition will be at its extreme. I want that. The Steelers are not a 'finessful' team."

Majority of high schools not drug testing

The Los Angeles Times

On June 26, 1995, the Supreme Court ruled that a high school in the logging town of Vernonia, Ore., could randomly and routinely test its athletes for use of illegal drugs.

The ruling was hailed by many, including former White House drug policy director Lee Brown, because it seemed to clear the way for widespread testing.

It hasn't. According to the National Federation of State High School Athletic Associations, fewer than 1 percent of the United States' nearly 16,000 public high schools take advantage of the court's ruling.

"I think there was a lot of commotion when the ruling first came out, but no one is eager to do it," said L.oyola (Calif.) Athletic Director Nick Wooler.

"I think after schools looked into it, they realized it wasn't as easy as just wanting to start a program."

Schools that looked into testing have found a major problem: It's expensive.

The national federation estimates it costs $20-$30 per standard drug screen, with the cost rising to well over $100 for a steroid test.

"We looked into it," Carson (Calif.) Athletic Director Saul Pacheco said.

"But it was sort of left up to us to raise the money, and our athletic budgets are cut enough already. It's just cost prohibitive right now."

Few schools can afford to completely subsidize drug programs, so the few that have them have looked to local hospitals, businesses and individuals for help.

Murrieta Valley (Calif.) High School's voluntary testing program was implemented in September and has quickly become a model. Schools from as far away as North Carolina have inquired about the program.

After conducting a survey of 100 male athletes, administrators realized a need for testing.

It began with students involved in extracurricular activities, but soon expanded school-wide.

The first, and perhaps most effective move by the Murrieta Valley school, was to hand the task of implementing a testing program over to the Substance Abuse Council, a nonprofit drug education and testing service unaffiliated with any school.

"That was vital because it let the students know that this would be completely random, that the school was not going to target any particular person," said Pam Barrett, director of Opt To Be Free, the program put on by the council.

Barrett and her team sent booklets to parents that gave the guidelines of the program, emphasizing the school's limited role.

Although samples would be collected on campus from among those students who had volunteered to be in the program, the five students tested each week would be identified only by number.

The school, which had no access to the numbers, could not know who was being tested or even what students volunteered for the program.

Also, only the parents and students were informed of a positive test, assuring students that the school could not penalize them.

The Substance Abuse Council, operating with a discount from a local laboratory that cut the cost to $14 per screening, then eliminated the school from the equation entirely by soliciting enough funds from local businesses and individuals to cover the cost of the program.

Students who have volunteered are also entered in a raffle each week and can win movie passes and gift certificates donated by local merchants.

Though many varsity athletes have not volunteered, many freshman and sophomore athletes have, leaving both the school and the council optimistic for future participation.

Solid first-half performances from Gilmore and Slater were key in winning the contest, Scott said.

"Gilmore had a great first half, and Slater had a great first half."

"And that probably was the difference in the game there," she said.

Gilmore said ISU's low score was due to a team defensive effort.

"I think as a team we played very hard on defense," she said.

"We usually don't get a lot of loose balls and whatever, and today we were up and down the court getting loose balls."

"I thought we played well the whole 40 minutes."

Gilmore also said now that the team has taken care of ISU, she hopes the winning will continue.

"I hope we get everybody else's number too."

Ditka's criticism 'ticks off' Sanders' mom, so Deion declines interview

The Baltimore Sun

TEMPE, Ariz.—There'll be no Prime Time on NBC-TV's Super Bowl pre-game show.

Deion Sanders of the Dallas Cowboys turned down an interview request from the network for a session with former Chicago Bears coach Mike Ditka because Ditka tacked off Sanders' mother with comments critical of Sanders.

Sanders said: "Ditka always speaks negatively of me. Why would I want to sit down (with him)? Why would I want to sit down and invite you to my home for dinner? I'm not with that. You got to keep it real."

"You don't like me, you don't like me. I'm not going to do nothing for ratings. I'm not going to help your station or your company."

How does he know Ditka knocks him?

"I have a mother who has a few different televisions in her fine, beautiful home. My momma lets me know who the player-haters are out there," he said.

man.' My mother is the culprit," he said.

On a conference call Wednesday, Ditka repeated his criticisms of Sanders.

"I haven't said that much negative about him, but I just can't justify in my mind anybody playing eight games a year making that kind of money. I'm sitting here looking at a TV and I've just seen three commercials with him in it. ... Those are three products I won't buy. Something's out of whack. You can say anything you want to. You can say I'm a dinosaur, but something's out of whack when a guy can show up for eight games a year, make more money than anybody on your football team and get all the limelight and publicity."

"I'm not sure I understand it. You guys can make heroes out of anybody you want to. You can make bums out of anybody you want to."

"Unfortunately, sometimes in our society, we pick the wrong guys for heroes and the wrong guys for bums."

"The game is more important than the players. The game deserves more dignity and more class than some of the guys in the game are giving it right now. I'm not beating around the bush. If guys can't take that or parents can't take that, they've got to understand they're wrong," Ditka said.

U.S. Baseball team to play Nicaragua, Cuba in Atlanta

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The U.S. baseball team will play Nicaragua on July 20 to lead off the opening rounds at the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta and take on the defending gold medal team from Cuba on July 28, according to the official schedule released Thursday.

In addition to those three teams, five other countries will compete in the baseball tournament.

They are: Japan, South Korea, Australia, Italy and the Netherlands. Cuba, which won the gold medal at the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, is considered the favorite.

The U.S. team received an automatic bid to the tournament because it is the host country, while the other teams were selected from qualifying tournaments.

Each team will play the other seven in a round-robin format at the Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. The top four teams will play in the medal rounds on August 1-2.

89-54 win puts SIUC one step closer to Valley lead

By Melanie Gray
DE Assistant Sports Editor

SIUC's women's basketball team stunned the Lady Redbirds of Illinois State University Thursday night, dominating all aspects of the game in an 89-54 rout at SIU Arena.

The victory bought the Salukis a share of second place in the Missouri Valley Conference. A 6-2 record ties SIUC for second in the MVC with ISU.

The flood gates opened in the opening minutes of the first half, with SIUC gaining control of the ball off the tip-off.

Quick scores from sophomore center Theia Hudson and senior guard Nikki Gilmore put the Salukis ahead 5-0, and balanced scoring inside from senior forward LaQuanda Chavours, senior forward Christel Jefferson and junior guard Kasia McClendon put SIUC out in front 11-6 just under six minutes into the contest.

The Lady Redbirds came within two points on buckets by forward Melanie Ward and center Kay Schroeder, but ISU's hopes of pulling ahead were ended by tough Saluki defense and aggressive offense.

Six-foot senior forward Heather Slater pounded the offensive boards while McClendon and Gilmore lit up the scoreboard.

Gilmore went two-for-three from three point range and scored 10 points in the half. She led SIUC in scoring with 17 points in the contest.

Slater scored 16 points and went eight-for-nine from the charity stripe. McClendon ended the game with 10 points and four assists.

SIUC's scoring frenzy continued as time expired and the Salukis stormed into the locker room with a commanding 48-27 lead.

The Lady Redbirds could only look on in wonder as the Saluki offensive attack remained unstoppable in the second half. McClendon, Hudson and Jefferson hit from inside the paint to stretch SIUC's lead to 25 points, 61-36.

Junior forward Nikki Washington, sophomore guard Beth Hasheider, freshman forward

O'Desha Proctor and freshman guard Heather Whalin came on strong, building the score to 85-48 with just over three minutes left in regulation.

The Salukis closed it out on a bucket by Hudson and two free throws by junior center Tiffany Spencer.

The victory marks SIUC's women's head coach Cindy Scott's 200th victory over an in-state

It's the lesser of two evils, folks, but Dallas has slightly more talent. And I'm not talking about Deion.

I'm tired of the Dallas Cowboys. Deion Sanders is highly overrated. Let's see if Leon Lett can fumble the ball one more time.

Dallas has too much experience in the Super Bowl for the Steelers to handle. With its powerful offensive line, Dallas will score early and not look back.

Former high jumper shows determination

Darrin Plab made it to the Olympic, but a serious injury almost cost him another shot.

By Jared Driskill
Daily Egyptian Reporter

It had been a dream of his since he was a sophomore in high school.

Darrin Plab not only wanted to go to the Olympic Games, he wanted to win a medal, but his dream for a medal was almost cut short by a near fatal accident.

Earning a spot to compete in the Olympic trials was an "athletic high" for Plab of Mascoutah, a former standout high jumper for SIUC.

Plab, whose best jump ever is 7-8 1/2, was playing baseball his freshman year in high school. He did not start participating in track and field until he was a sophomore at Mascoutah High School.

Plab went on to earn a position on the 1992 U. S. Olympic team as one of only three high jumpers—the best of the best.

He did not win a medal, however, something every Olympic athlete wants to win, but he did come home with the experience of having been a part of an event some people can only dream about.

"In 1992, I made the Olympic team and I really didn't walk away with my head held up high like I expected to," Plab said. "I expected to win a medal. There's a speck in my heart that's still open. I want to win a medal. I have the ability to do it, it's just a matter of finishing what I start."

Plab proved after the 1992 Olympics that the word quit was not in his vocabulary.

After the Olympics, Plab wanted to get away from track, so he started playing basketball to get his mind off track. Basketball wasn't very kind to Plab though, as he suffered a serious head injury during a game which landed him in the hospital for several days.

Plab suffered two skull fractures, a blood clot, and swelling of the brain.

"There was a period of four or five days where they (the doctors) didn't know which way I was going to go," Plab said. I could have died for all I know."

A quick recovery allowed him to start walking the day after he was

Between the Lines

The Salukis men's basketball team returns to Carbondale Saturday to take on the University of Evansville in SIU Arena.

The Salukis return home after suffering a pair of road losses against Drake and Northern Iowa.

The Dawgs are now 9-9 overall and 2-3 in conference action. Evansville posts a 4-3 conference record. Tipoff time is 11:05 a.m.

SIUC's Cameron Wright earned the Missouri Valley Conference Most Valuable Field Athlete of the week after clearing 7-2 1/4 in the high jump.

Wright, who will be heading to Atlanta in June to compete in the U.S. Olympic trials, has provisionally qualified for the NCAA Indoor championships.

The men's track and field team will travel to Johnston City, Tenn. this weekend to participate in the U.S. Air Invitational.

Over 100 teams will compete in the event, but athletes must meet certain guidelines to qualify for the competition.

Because of those guidelines, only 15 of 33 athletes will represent SIUC.

University of Massachusetts center Marcus Camby is expected to make his return to the hardwood Saturday when UMass plays host to St. Bonaventure.

Two weeks ago on Jan. 14, Camby collapsed after pre-game warmups before the top-ranked Minutemen's game at St. Bonaventure.
