USG freeze on funding unofficial

By Jonathan Sentf
General Assignment Writer

The Student Government bill that froze funds to student organizations was declared unconstitutional Wednesday, when officials found that the summer Senate did not have enough members to conduct business.

Last week, the student senate approved a controversial bill that would freeze the funding for all SIUC Registered Student Organizations for 60 days, excluding day-to-day expenses. But according to the constitution, the senate did not have enough senators to pass the bill.

Mike Spiwak, USG president, said because there was no quorum at the meeting, the bill can only advise the RSO's to stop spending.

Harvey Welch, vice-president of student affairs, said that although the senate probably did not have enough senators to conduct business, he did not think Spiwak or the Senate intended to interfere with legitimate RSO spending activity.

Welch said he met with Spiwak, however they only discussed the validity of the summer Senate, not the validity of the RSO funding freeze bill.

Spiwak said his reason for setting up the summer Senate, which has not been in session for years, was because he felt it would be good if the senators received some experience before fall semester.

Agriculture college selects new dean

By Candace Samolinski
Administration Writer

SIUC's new dean of the College of Agriculture, James McGuire, plans to bring in more research dollars and expand the public service activities of the College.

Budget constraints have resulted to cuts in the College but McGuire said he is unaware of any future cuts under the Priorities Quality Productivity program initiated by the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

"There has been a lot of work done by the faculty of the College of Agriculture," McGuire said. "I don't foresee anymore programs cuts in the College, what we are concerned with now is the ways in which we can generate research funds."

Robert Wolff, chair of the agriculture education and mechanization department and head of the dean search committee for the College, said he is pleased McGuire took the job.

"McGuire has strong support from the faculty and staff and he came highly recommended to Benjamin Shepherd, SIUC vice president and provost," Wolff said. "We are pleased he accepted the position," he said. "We have a lot of work to do with the PQP program and feel he will be a great asset in the process."

McGuire said he has always placed an emphasis on providing a quality education and engaging in research designed to solve problems.

"Throughout my career I have always been concerned with maintaining a high standard of education," he said. "I believe in promoting research that relates to solving problems. I want to continue this practice at SIUC."

Emergency officials discuss flooding problems

By Shawna Donovan
Special Assignment Writer

With the Mississippi River only a few blocks away, local and state Emergency Management officials met Wednesday at Grand Tower to update communities on potential flooding problems.

Jackson County Emergency Management officials wanted to calm public concerns about the possibility of the river overflowing the downstate leveys.

Mark Alvey, a geotechnical engineer from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, said there is nothing to worry about.

Clinton visits Midwest, pledges $2.5 billion in aid for victims

Newsday

DES MOINES, Iowa—After touring submerged farmlands and talking to citizens lined up for drinking water, President Clinton Wednesday announced the administration is seeking an additional $2.5 billion to help the victims of the historic floods that have devastated the upper Mississippi watershed.

In Washington, Budget Director Leon Panetta said he would not "be surprised" if federal relief to Midwestern flood victims eventually reached $5 billion. Panetta, speaking on the Public Broadcasting Service's "MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour," emphasized that the final aid figure cannot be determined until the flood recedes and its damage is assessed.

Excess rains have flooded the river causing extensive damage in cities in Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri and upstate Illinois for the past several weeks.

The river flooded Chester, a town thirty miles from Carbondale, last week and it is expected to crest again at 45 feet on July 19; flood stage is at 27 feet.

Alvey said the river should crest at 45 feet above flood level this week, shy of the 53 foot levy at Grand Tower. The river stages have been rising and falling slightly in the last week.

State and federal agencies have been planning for the possible flood for several weeks by coordinating agencies and communities to prepare for the worst.

Illinois Army National Guard has 600 soldiers in Southern Illinois to bag sandbags, and secure and monitor levee areas.

SIUC triathlete to compete in London

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

Laura knows biking. Laura knows swimming. Laura knows running. Laura Powers, an SIUC medical student and member of the SIUC triathlon team, recently qualified for the amateur championships in Manchester, London.

Powers' eighth place finish in the 20-24 age group in Leons triathlon in Hammond, Indiana, earned her one of 12 spots on the U.S. National Amateur Team.

The Leons race consisted of about 1,000 of the best amateurs in the country.

Powers time over the .9-mile swim, 24.8-mile bike route and 6.2-mile run was 2 hours, 19 minutes and thirty-two seconds.

Powers said even though she was happy to be going to the World Championships, it was not her main goal.

"It was something I had thought about, but it was not something I put a whole lot of emphasis on," Powers said. "My main goal is having fun."

Powers was not having fun on April 28th, when she broke her collarbone in a bicycle accident. Powers said she set a time-table for recovery, but came back even faster than she expected.

"I wanted to get back to racing by the start of July, but things went well and I came back in mid-June," Powers said.

Powers has been a triathlete for five years and trains 2 1/2 hours every day to stay sharp.

While she said the sport is a lot of fun, Powers also mentioned the cost of competing can be a burden.

"The bigger races have entry fees costing around $60 to $75," Powers said. "And travel expenses like hotels and food get pretty high."

Tom Jackson, vice-president of the SIUC triathlon team, said the team benefits from being a Student Registered Organization.

Baseball has bursting talent despite materialistic image

The Sporting News

As the season hits the All-Star break, the image being perpetuated by baseball's leadership is one of crisis — imminent labor problems, reduced TV revenues, overpaid players, franchises in trouble, no commissioner and on and on.

But when you look at the field, which many owners and players' union types often forget is where the game lives, you see a sport bursting with great individual performances, talented young stars, exciting pennant races and booming attendance in many cities.

What to believe? Well, until the season is over and we can retreat to dreary boardroom conversation, focus between the lines, where a season to remember continues to unfold.

Amid the gloom and doom, baseball could be on the verge of an exciting new age.

For years, we've heard scouts and baseball executives worry that baseball was losing too many good, young athletes to other sports. But perhaps those fears were overblown. Maybe these assessments did not take into account that there are simply more good, young athletes in the population today. So, every sport will get its share. And maybe those assessments did not consider the improved conditioning and strength programs available to players beginning in their high school years.

Sure, expansion has created a game in which a lesser skill level is necessary for major league success. But there is no question that baseball has a new generation of stars, a large group of exciting young players that rivals any of the major sports.

Start with impressive young players such as John Olerud, Mike Piazza, Ken Griffey Jr., Tim Lincecum, Gary Sheffield, Carlos Baerga, Kenny Lofton, Mike Mussina, Juan Gonzalez, Jeff Bagwell, Darryl Kile, Marquis Grissom, Reggie Sanders, Moises Alou, Brian McRae and Pat Hentgen. Alou is 27, and Lofton and Grissom are 26; none of the others is older than 25.

Add established stars such as Barry Bonds, Matt Williams, Cecil Fielder, Ron Gant, Mark Grace, Frank Thomas and Fred

McGriff, who are just entering their primes.

Mix in younger players emerging as potentially dominant players such as Travis Fryman, Greg Vaughn, David Justice, Tommy Greene, Dave Hollins, Gregg Jefferies, Orlando Merced, Larry Walker, Bobby Kelly, Kevin Appier, Chad Curtis, Jay Buhner, Randy Johnson, Dean Palmer, Ed Sprague, Alex Fernandez and Chris Hoiles.

For good measure, look to a promising next wave just starting in the majors or on the way, including Jeffrey Hammonds, Allen Watson, Brent Gates, Jeremy Burnitz, Ryan Klesko, Chipper Jones, Cliff Floyd and the rest of the up-and-coming crop from the minor leagues (which, incidentally, enjoys an ongoing boom in attendance).

If a game is only as good as its stars, then baseball is sitting on the threshold of a potentially bountiful age. And if parity is good for anything, it's that most of these young players will be in the middle of pennant races, where their skills will be displayed in the spotlight of meaningful games.

So, while the lawyers, owners, accountants and marketing shills wring their hands, baseball fans should just sit back and enjoy The Show.

As usual, there was much gnashing of teeth over deserving players being overlooked in the All-Star selections.

But there are ways to reduce such oversights without diluting what traditionally has been the best of the All-Star games.

One is to eliminate the rule that requires every team to be represented. With 28 teams, the rule ensures that deserving players will be left out. Would anyone interested in the game not watch simply because a couple of teams might not be represented? Hardly.

Another possibility is to expand rosters to, say, 32 players. The extra four picks per league would go a long way toward ensuring equitable selections, even if the every-team rule remains.

Plus, it would allow a couple of sentimental picks each year.

Disabled athletes deserve ordinary stares

I never thought I'd make it. The hill seemed endless in front of Lewis Park. After running five miles that night in Carbondale, all I wanted to do was finish that sixth mile and collapse at home. My legs hurt slightly, my shoulder was aching, and sweat was stinging my eyes.

And worse yet, my asthma was in full form.

But my stubbornness is about as strong as my asthma, so wheezing like a broken furnace, I pushed myself up that hill with each agonizing step. And when I did reach the top of that hill, I about cried with happiness. Gasping for air, I whipped out my inhaler that gave me back my breath.

It was then that I saw a girl in the car parked next to me. I watched her as she stared at me, and I felt good because of the look of admiration in her eyes. But at the sight of that little contraption called an inhaler — a saving grace for asthmatics — hit my mouth, the look changed to one of pity just before she looked away.

I was furious. All I could think was if I didn't have that inhaler, if I didn't have this disease, she wouldn't have given me that pity look, a look anyone with any type of disability gets. And for a disabled athlete, those looks can cut to the bone.

Those looks take me back to my grade school days, when no one wanted the weak kid carrying an inhaler on their team. For a lot of kids in my situation, you either get depressed, or you get angry like me.

That's a choice disabled athletes have to make, and anyone with a

Worldwide athletic competitions controlled by international politics

The Washington Post

BUFFALO, N.Y.—South African swimmer Brenda Webb was a westerer when she initially stepped into the swimming venue at the World University Games. This was her first international competition, something she trained for and dreamed of and something her countrymen in years past never experienced.

This is South Africa's first World Games in just the second year the country has been allowed to compete internationally. South Africa was allowed to take part in the 1992 Olympics after a 32-year ban by the International Olympic Committee because of the country's policy of racial segregation, called apartheid.

While South Africa has been accepted back into the world of sports, politics are keeping other athletes from realizing their dreams of competing internationally. Libyan athletes were denied entry visas to these Games because of a U.S.

UNTIMELY TSUNAMIS BEATS WARNING SYSTEMS — Tsunamis that surged up to 16 feet high within 15 minutes of a magnitude 7.8 earthquake on the bed of the Sea of Japan off Hokkaido Island were blamed Tuesday for most of up to 80 deaths and 167 missing in Japan's latest seismic disaster. Even though Japan is known to have the best warning system for the seismic sea waves, scientists said there was not enough time after the quake at 10:17 p.m. local time Monday to adequately warn the populace.

State senator proposes new majority procedure

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

State Sen. Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin, is proposing a measure to remove the three-fifths majority requirement needed to pass legislation after June 30.

Dunn said lawmakers owe it to the taxpayers to get the job done on time, and that the last few weeks were a perfect example of why the rules needed to be changed.

"After June 30, more votes are needed to pass legislation and, unfortunately, as we have seen this year, some legislators use that to their own advantage instead of for the overall good of the state," he said.

Widespread criticism was directed toward state lawmakers this year because of the legislature's inability to pass a state budget by the end of the fiscal year.

A budget was passed earlier this week, 13 days after the June 30 deadline.

Senate Joint Resolution 81 proposes to amend the Illinois

Constitution and help stop the political maneuvering that occurs after the deadline passes.

David Kenney, a political science professor at SIUC, was on the constitutional convention of 1970 that enacted the three-fifths majority vote rule after the June 30 deadline.

Kenney said despite the original intention of the three-fifths rule, minority legislation takes advantage of it when the time comes to pass a budget.

"The convention intended that requirement to be so foreboding that it would compel the General Assembly to finish its work and be out of Springfield by July 1 each year," Kenney said.

State lawmakers said they wanted to avoid going past the fiscal year deadline, but needed to work out compromises in the budget.

Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, said he likes the idea of removing the three-fifths majority rule.

"I think it is a good idea and I will support it," Hawkins said.

Prison reform package could save taxpayers money

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

A new reform package, passed Tuesday in the Illinois State Senate, could mean a substantial savings for taxpayers, said a spokesperson for the Department of Corrections.

The reform package, which authorizes the construction of a maximum security prison and reduces the prison population in state prisons, is the culmination of a year-long study by the Illinois Task Force on Crime and Corrections.

The task force, appointed by Gov. Jim Edgar in spring 1992, included individuals from police agencies, legislators and members of the judiciary.

Nick Howell, spokesperson for the Department of Corrections, said it costs $16 million a year to run a traditional prison, but with this package it will only cost the taxpayers $3,000 a year for electronic detention.

"Electronic detention involves a device attached to prisoners' ankles that allows them to get out in the community, get a job, be with their family, be a prisoner and be a taxpayer again," Howell said.

He said the package programs will not be free, but it will be less expensive than the traditional method of prisoner confinement.

He said of the 4,000 already on the program, only 25 percent have failed.

Other facets of the package to slow the growth of prison population and increase safety include:

- Expansion of the use of boot camps and electronic detention to prevent more criminals from entering state prisons.
- Increasing time off for inmates who exhibit good behavior or who participate in literacy, vocational and drug treatment programs.
- Making it a felony to assault a correctional officer.

Steve Trossman, director of public affairs for the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, said the Federation's biggest concern was for the safety of its members who work in the prison.

The AFSCME is a union that represents state, county and municipal employees.

"This will definitely help the overcrowding problem in Illinois State prisons, which are now 50 percent above the designed capacity and getting worse," Trossman said.

Trossman said there have been about 1,000 attacks by inmates, on average, against prison staff in the last several years.

Trossman said the reform package will reduce the number of lockdowns, which have halted educational programs during violent prison incidents in the past.

State budget fiasco renews old gridlock

A $30 BILLION STATE BUDGET giving Illinois the authority to pay state employees and make payments to hospitals and nursing homes was finally agreed upon by state legislators Tuesday.

The agreement puts an end to the partisan bickering that went on for 13 days as it resolves such pressing issues as the state's fiscal crisis. Some of the most pressing issues decided were education financing, a tax surcharge and a controversial cigarette tax that replaces the granny tax.

The final agreement came as a relief to all. The untimely manner in which legislators resolved these issues, however, serves as a reminder that the same old gridlock in which legislators place partisan bickering above state concerns still remains omnipresent.

BECAUSE THE DELAY EXCEEDED the deadline, state legislators found themselves struggling even more to build a coalition. Because it is thought to encourage lawmakers to conclude business, legislation needs to be adopted by a three-fifths majority in both chambers after the deadline.

Legislators should consider whether the three-fifths requirement is necessary or whether it does the opposite of its objective.

One solution proposed by Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin, to give the taxpayer's concerns precedence over partisan division is to eliminate the three-fifths majority. In doing so, Dunn believes that the bargaining power gained by the minority parties who withhold their support on key issues will be eroded.

Regardless of whether or not such a solution will alleviate the political tactics used to further gridlock, such proposals illustrate the need for legislators to focus on the state instead of their own political agenda.

ISSUES THAT LAWMAKERS CONTINUED to debate and finally agreed upon Tuesday were restoring the state's income tax surcharge and increasing statewide education and welfare spending.

The most controversial bill to come under fire was the 14-cent-a-pack cigarette tax increase that would help pay Medicaid bills for the poor and replace the granny tax, also known as the nursing home tax.

Lawmakers were right to adopt this resolution instead of the granny tax, even though it raises the 30-cent-a-pack tax to 44 cents, the highest in the Midwest.

As Edgar pointed out, "We're taxing a product that is not a necessity and causes health problems."

THE STATE BUDGET AGREEMENT will not satisfy everyone, for the decisions being weighed have considerable impact for different groups.

It is because of this impact, however, that state lawmakers have a responsibility to put the taxpayer first and overcome their own partisan divisions.

Many of the decisions being made were arrived at early but were left unresolved because of lawmakers' inability to put these differences aside. Lawmakers are elected to further the well-being of the state's residents, not to entangle themselves in political gridlock.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

U.N. giving Iraq final chance to negotiate, avoid standoff

Los Angeles Times

Rolf Ekeus, who heads the U.N. commission that is trying to put Iraq out of the mass-destruction weapons business, emphasizes that he is going to Baghdad this week not to negotiate but to deliver a final warning from the Security Council.

If Iraq will not allow U.N. monitoring equipment to be installed at its missile testing facilities, it will invite the "serious consequences" threatened by the council last month.

That almost certainly means an attack from the air on the test facilities.

Iraq's government-controlled media already are preparing the populace for this kind of possibility.

Has President Saddam Hussein calculated that his best political move is to continue to defy the United Nations, whatever the possible cost in bombed military facilities?

His line to the world in recent days has been that his regime has complied with nearly all of the requirements set by the Security Council in 1991 in the wake of the Persian Gulf War, and that this cooperation deserves to be rewarded.

The question of test site monitoring, which aims to ensure that Iraq sticks to producing only short-range missiles, is presented by Baghdad as an intolerable infringement on Iraq's sovereignty.

It says it's willing to discuss the matter but it won't bow to a dictate.

To many Iraqis, but perhaps

If Iraq won't allow U.N. monitoring equipment to be installed at its missile testing facilities, it will invite the "serious consequences" threatened by the council last month.

even more to many Arabs outside Iraq, this negotiation no doubt seems completely reasonable and fair.

The Security Council sees it quite differently.

The requirement that Iraq open its weapons facilities to long-term inspections is a direct consequence of Iraq's aggression in 1990 and the profound suspicion — a conviction, really — that left unmonitored the Baghdad regime would very quickly rebuild its capability to wage aggressive war, again becoming a threat to its neighbors. It is precisely because Iraq has repeatedly demonstrated that it cannot be trusted that its behavior now requires close international scrutiny.

This is not something open to compromise, but a matter of basic principle.

However, along with a big stick Ekeus will be carrying a good-sized carrot when he goes to Baghdad.

Oil sales, Iraq's chief source of foreign exchange, have been virtually cut off since the war. The United Nations is conditionally willing to allow Iraq to sell up to $1.6 billion worth of oil, provided revenues are used to buy food and medicine and to pay compensation to Iraq's war victims.

Ekeus reportedly will make clear that no oil sales will take place unless Iraq agrees to the monitoring.

Here, then, is a extremely possible face-saving way out for Baghdad.

It can back down on the monitoring issue and claim in return that it won a major concession on oil sales, opening the way for expanded food imports.

But is Saddam Hussein looking for a way out, or for a confrontation?

By this weekend, the answer should be clear.

in funding for education, including a $52.4 million increase in higher education funding.

■ A $109 million, 19 percent, increase for Department of Children and Family Services.

■ A $64.7 million, 7.4 percent, increase for the Department of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities.

■ A $1.72 billion capital program to bolster the state's infrastructure, translating into 50,000 construction-related jobs.

■ $9.4 million for "Fresh Start" initiative, designed to move people from public aid rolls to payrolls.

■ $60 million approved for a Super Maximum Security Prison to house the most dangerous inmates in the system.

Rep. David Phelps, D-Eldorado, said the governor was partly to blame for the extended session this year.

"My support for this legislation was critical in order to meet the state payroll and avoid delayed payments to state employees," Phelps said.

"If this initiative had not passed at this time, I fear no end to the budget impasse could be predicted, costing the taxpayers more dollars than necessary."

State paychecks are not expected to be delayed, despite the 13-day delay in passing the budget.

Rep. Larry Woolard, D-Carterville, also was critical of Edgar, saying the governor should have shown more leadership during the budget crisis.

"I have said all along that we need a broader based source of revenue to fund essential state services," Woolard said. "But the governor has yet to show the kind of responsible leadership necessary to implement such a plan. This whole nursing home assessment battle might not have been waged if we had more activity and leadership from the Governor's Mansion."

Spiwak said in his interpretation of the constitution, 21 were needed for the Senate to exist, however a majority of those who showed up at the meeting was necessary to pass the RSO freeze bill.

Melanie Skeens, USG Senator, said that the clarification of the constitution has both good and bad ramifications.

"It is not good that the senate probably will not continue for the summer," she said. "However, this summer has been a strong learning experience as far as how the senate works."

Skeens said she thinks it will be unlikely that the RSO funding freeze bill will be re-introduced this fall. She said she felt the bill was designed to be implemented in the summer.

In his meeting with USG advisor, Jean Paratore, Spiwak said Paratore's opinion was that the 21 people who signed-up for the Senate were expected to show up for the meeting if it was going to pass business.

"Ultimately, it is my responsibility to enforce the constitution," Spiwak said. "We were acting in good faith."

Spiwak said that there has been no precedent for the RSO funding freeze issue.

"We didn't think we were in violation of the constitution," he said. "It was only our interpretation of the USG constitution."

Mississippi State University where he served as chairman of the department of plant pathology and wheat science.

McGuire has a long history of hands-on experience in the field of agriculture. He received his bachelors and masters degrees in plant pathology at the University of Arkansas. After obtaining his doctorate degree at North Carolina State University he returned to the University of Arkansas where he taught for 21 years.

McGuire said he is working with department heads and assistant deans within the College to gain an understanding of its interworkings.

"I have a personal goal of getting a total understanding of the thrusts of the programs in the College," he said. "Before deciding what specific changes need to be made, if any, I will have to take a look at where these programs are going now."

Mississippi State, where McGuire was a faculty member since 1984, is the land grant college for that state. He said this allowed him the opportunity to obtain funds for valuable research.

"The University of Illinois is the land grant college for Illinois," he said. "Even though SIUC does not have the access they do I believe we can make the most of the resources we have."

McGuire and his wife, Betty, are both interested in public service activities. He said they will work closely as a team in the community and at SIUC.

"My wife and I are both concerned with enhancing community services," he said. "She is very involved with providing good nutrition for the elderly and I believe in making information about agricultural issues available to the public."

Community service is already a part of the College's activities. The University Farms at Carbondale and the SIUC Research Center in Belleville provide educational, research and public service opportunities for people in the surrounding area.

McGuire said these activities will continue to be emphasized.

"It is our goal to enhance our public contacts and contributions in order to provide service to the people of Southern Illinois," he said.

Board chair, said the levy is secure. "The situation looks better than we expected and there is no need for alarm," Knupp said.

U.S. Army Corps of Engineer officials said levys in Jackson County are made with clay which provide stable slopes.

Alvrey said the levys have additional protection on them.

"There is 3 feet of free board on the levys," Alvrey said. "The levys have a compacted, and strong clay materials on them."

Alvrey said levys in St. Charles, Mo. and Quincy are not as strong because they are made with dumped compacted materials that are bulldozed over the top.

Corps officials said the Big Muddy River, located in between Carbondale and Murphysboro, will not flood but slopes should be covered with plastic sheeting to protect exposed soil.

Karl Bartelsmeyer, Illinois Department of Transportation southern district manager, said roads will stay open.

Bill Ripley, Jackson County Emergency Management coordinator, said the meeting was to quiet rumors of levys breaking around Gorham and Grand Tower.

"We are here to inform people of what is really going on," Ripley said. "We have agencies from all over the state to monitor the levys 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

More than 500,000 sandbags have been brought in from Texas to Jackson County as a precautionary measure.

Gopher Gets the Goods for You

In the last DAWG Bytes, we told you about the new Campus Wide Information System (CWIS) we're building to replace the current one. A benefit will be improved search capabilities on the Internet, the international computing network, via a program called Gopher.

The old CWIS used the Internet on a limited basis to reach a few libraries in LINKS (Library Information Networks). Thanks to Gopher, the new CWIS will make the most of SIUC's Internet connection, offering a beefed-up LINKS menu and word searches of information systems at hundreds of universities and colleges worldwide.

Developed by the University of Minnesota, Gopher is a fetching device that simultaneously builds menus for items as it locates them. In addition to doing international word searches through an option called "Veronica," Gopher can look for public software stored in Internet archives through "Archie." It also offers entry to the information systems of the National Science Foundation and nearly 1,000 universities worldwide.

You can access Gopher from the new CWIS menu. This is found by selecting the "Connect" option on the old CWIS menu and looking under NEWCWIS or typing CWIS at the CMS "ready" prompt.

From the new CWIS main menu, choose "Connections (Computers Here, There and Everywhere)" to get the Gopher menu of nine Internet and SIU information options, including "Archie" and "Veronica." Most CWIS users will want to explore the latter, which is accessed by selecting "Search Gopherspace with Veronica."

"Gopher is a fetching device that simultaneously builds menus for items as it locates them."

You'll be asked to enter key words for a search. When you do this, you'll get a list of every document Gopher located with your words in the title. For example, if you enter "tree," you'll get 26 screens of titles containing this word. Select one with the cursor and hit enter to view it. When you leave the document, you can dump, save or print a hard copy of it.

A note of caution: "Veronica" comes to us from the University of Nevada. For reasons beyond our control, sometimes you may not be able to access it from the "Connections" menu if you're on a mainframe terminal.

If so, try again another day and you may have luck. If not, you can always access "Veronica" if you skip the mainframe altogether. Just telnet to the new CWIS from a PC connected to the campus area network that has TCP/IP software (like the IBMs in the computer labs). This issue's "Gopher defined" tells you how to do this.

Gopher defined.

TCP/IP—Transfer Control Protocol/Internet Protocol, software that enables data to be transmitted across the Internet.

Telnet—A TCP/IP command used when setting up an Internet session to communicate with a remote host.

Remote host—A other machine on campus, across the country or world that operates as if you were directly connected to it. You can logon, transfer files, research databases and send or receive notes.

How to telnet to the new CWIS:

1. Find a PC with TCP/IP software that is connected to the campus area network. In the computer labs, these are the IBM PCs. To open a telnet session, click on the telnet icon in the communications section of the Program Manager. Hit return to activate it.
2. Once in the session, you'll be asked to enter the Internet address of the host machine you want to reach. Type `gopher.c-wis.siu.edu` and hit enter. Then click on the "Okay" box on the screen.
3. A message about the FS/6000 computer will appear with a logon prompt. Type `gopher` and hit enter. You should see the new CWIS main menu.

*Telnet procedures may vary with other PCs on the network. If you don't know how to start a session on your machine, see your network administrator.

Computer Usage Facts...

The University exists to educate and enrich people's lives, and Information Technology strives to do its part by offering quality computing services. Below you'll see the breakdown of computer usage in terms of Central Processing Units (CPUs) of SIUC's two main operating systems—the Time Sharing System (also called VM, this runs applications like the Campus Wide Information System and Office Vision) and the Batch System (also called MVS, it features statistical programs like SPSS and Mark IV). The biggest users of both systems combined are graduate students, followed by faculty members. Individually, graduate students are, by far, the biggest fans of the Time Sharing system, and faculty take the lead in using the Batch system.

"Real Time" Super Computing

If your work involves research, plan to watch or record WSIU-TV (Ch. 8) at 2:30 p.m. this Saturday. You'll catch the fifth edition of the video series "RealTime" from the National Center for Supercomputing Applications (NCSA), a group promoting computational science and supercomputers in higher education.

It's worth your while to see this 30-minute video journal because supercomputers have become essential tools for conducting research and will be commonplace in the future. The show features four projects involving high performance computing and communications:

"Back to the Beginning": University researchers try to develop advanced computer codes to simulate cosmic evolution.

"SuperQuest: Beyond the Contest": An update on a segment from the third edition of "RealTime" on winners of a high school science competition who mastered computational science.

"Casting Without a Crack": A university researcher hopes to help a steel firm prevent costly steel mold cracks through high performance computing.

"A Cloud Upon the Forest": U.S. Environmental Protection Agency scientists combine field data with supercomputing models of tree physiology to quantify the link between acid rain and forest decline.

If this program excites your imagination, you can obtain videotapes of the first four editions of "RealTime" by calling Information Technology's Olga Weidner, the on-campus representative of NCSA's Academic Affiliate Program, at 453-2636.

In addition to research support, NCSA provides assistance to faculty members who want to use supercomputing in teaching through its Supercomputing Education Projects Program. You can get help for projects involving students in classes or independent studies as well as with course planning and materials.

For more information, contact the Computing Information Center at 453-5155. -Db

To Repair Or Not to Repair

Q. My office PC is five years old and needs repair work. Is it worth fixing?

A: Whether you work on a Macintosh, IBM or IBM-compatible machine, weigh the cost of repairs against age and current market value (check weekly computer magazines for prices). In an office situation, it may make more sense to "cannibalize" an aging computer for spare parts and purchase new equipment to replace the old machine.

Q. But I'd hate to junk a $2,000 investment

A: PCs only have life expectancies of about five years. Approach them the same way you would a car. If your auto is fairly new, you repair it at most any price, but if a 10-year-old car needs a new engine, you probably wouldn't sink more money into it.

Q. I never thought of it that way.

A: Also think twice before repairing things like the "motherboard" inside the computer's system unit. It's usually not worth it because they're so expensive. Although you might get another five years out of your machine if you replaced it, you'd be working on an obsolete PC. Because computers continue to improve technologically while dropping in price, it often isn't worth fixing things like monitors, keyboards and mouses even though they're cheap to repair. New IBM-compatible monitors cost $300-$450, but after a couple of years, they're worth half that price. Why pay $200 for a new tube when you can buy a new monitor for a little more? Similarly, IBM-compatible keyboards and mouses are so cheap that if repairs cost over $50 and $25 respectively, you're better off buying new.

Sunset concert to feature politically active rock

By Karen Ham
Entertainment Writer

The Sunset Concerts, usually a venue for carefree summer relaxation, will turn into a conscious-raising forum tonight as the politically active, folk-rock band Disappear Fear performs.

Andrea Lipps, SPC co-sorts chairman, said the Baltimore-based Disappear Fear is a band that makes people take notice.

"Basically, it's music that makes you think," Lipps said. "This band is politically informed, where as many people are not. Music is their medium to educate and inform the audiences."

Missy Baker, publicist for Disappear Fear, said although political opinions are obvious in the songs, the band should not be pigeon-holed as politically correct.

"Their open views are accepted by the audiences," Baker said.

"They're singing what they truly feel and believe in — not to just jump on the bandwagon."

Singer Cindy Frank summed up the band's philosophy by explaining the band's name.

"Disappear Fear is not just the name of our band, it's how we live our lives," she said in a press release. "What comes between people is fear, and when fear is gone what you have is love. Disappear Fear is about living your life full out, fully expressed each minute, no holds barred, no matter what."

In living their lives, the band has tackled homophobia, most recently by playing at the National Gay March on Washington which was attended by nearly a million people. But the band is adamant to avoid generalizations about its music.

"It's not a righteous kind of, 'Think our way or you're wrong,' thing," Frank said. "People ask if we're feminists, and we're not. We're humanists. We play people music."

The band's music can be described as a cross between R.E.M. and Indigo Girls, Baker said, combining informed lyrics with folk rhythms. The band's sound has been compared to Indigo Girls, but she said they have a distinct sound.

Lipps said tonight's show will be just a sample of what the band is capable of.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see Disappear Fear become a very big name," Lipps said.

disability. You either sit and get down on yourself for what's happened to you, or you survive. It's not an easy choice to make.

It's much easier to give up and hate everything, including yourself.

But it's when you make that decision to go on with your life that the true battle begins. It's those months that grow into years when you change your life and adapt to what's happened, whether being diagnosed with a disease or an accident that has permanently injured you. There are thousands of forms.

Living with your disability every day isn't hard enough, for athletes there is a new avenue of difficulty to face.

When a pro-football player snaps his leg and is in a wheelchair for the rest of his life, his love for the sport doesn't break along with his leg.

He now faces the hardships of rehab, and then come those looks he's not used to.

The pity looks can easily break a spirit. Let's take a good basketball player who gets in an accident and ends up in a wheelchair. He goes through a year of rehab, gets support from friends and family, and finally gets the OK to get out onto the court in his chair.

Once there, he sees the other players out on the court. He wants so bad to play with them; he knows he can shoot as well as they can, but he doesn't expect them to ask him to play.

He just wants a friendly smile like he used to get. Instead, he gets silence as they awkwardly go back to playing their game on another court.

Sounds like the making for a good after school special. But unlike those specials, in which the kids often times realize the disabled kid is just as good as they are and welcome him into their group, the real story goes on. The story about how with every person one encounters, that look of pity could return.

As adults we are supposed to be able to handle situations like these. But with age doesn't always come strength to handle those pity looks.

This isn't a "let's all get along" lecture. This isn't even a "put yourself in their shoes" column.

We people just need to realize that the looks we give disabled individuals can be as harmful as any cruel joke we could make.

Often times it seems disabled people are thought of as a different breed of humans. In some aspects, that is true. But they still think as able-bodied individuals do, hope as others do, and hurt as everyone else.

Their disabilities are just like everyone else's problems. It's just something in which they learn to cope. The level of hardship all depends on the frame of mind of the person.

In fact, a disabled person could worry about his or her disability as much as another able bodied person worries about his or her hair.

I count myself lucky. My asthma isn't a big deal for me. I don't even consider it a disease, even though technically it is. After years of training, I can run a good amount of miles every night. I have full use of my limbs, and you can't easily see that sometimes I can't breathe. So those looks of pity are somewhat rare for me.

Those looks are especially bad for disabled athletes who have to overcome major obstacles to be happy with themselves again. Stare all you want at us. We don't mind, as long as those stares are only stares you would give any athlete who is enjoying his or her sport.

And to the girl in the car, I'll gladly race you any time.

embargo against the country following the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in December 1988.

The organizers of these Games and their governing body, Federation Internationale du Sport Universitaire, argued vehemently that politics be left out of sports and Libya be allowed to compete. An FISU protest was filed with the State Department to no avail.

The question of whether the 1996 Olympics and next year's World Cup soccer finals, both to be held in the United States, would be affected is still unanswered.

Despite hours of training and anticipation, the World Games almost didn't become a reality for the South Africans. Political unrest, Webb said, almost kept her delegation from coming here to compete.

"For us, it was actually a hell of a battle to come here," Webb said. "We very nearly didn't come due to political reasons, and money as well. We didn't know until a week before the competition that we were going. The sports dominated by blacks wanted to have acceptance."

"I don't know much about the politics involved, but we have been excluded for so long and we are so out of touch with international competition due to politics that it's a shame that those sort of things have to come in the way of sport," she said.
