Atomic vets fight public indifference

Robert H. Farmer, above, told a Lawson Hall audience Thursday that atomic weapons tests caused genetic damage to eight of his nine children, while Joseph Cavins, right, of the National Association of Atomic Veterans, said the "largest manhunt in American history" is the search for more potential victims.

ROBERT H. FARMER feels he is fighting a losing battle against the effects of radiation exposure — and against the U.S. government.

He says he is one of about 250,000 military and civilian personnel who took part in nuclear weapons tests since the first atomic bomb was exploded in Alamogordo, N.M., 37 years ago.

His exposure to radiation in two atomic tests in 1946 in the Marshall Islands, he says, has damaged his health and caused genetic birth defects in eight of his nine children.

Farmer, of Chester, told his story Thursday to about 20 people at Lawson Hall at a meeting arranged by the National Association of Atomic Veterans.

The fact that only 20 people were there angered Joseph Cavins, the Central and Southern Illinois director of the NAAV, which has embarked on what he calls "the largest manhunt in American history" to find the people exposed to radiation in U.S. atomic tests. The U.S. government, he says, has turned its back on them.

FARMER IS ONE of 22 test witnesses whom Cavins says have turned up in Southern Illinois.

Farmer believes that his heart condition — he had a heart attack in 1967 and says that he suffers from an irregular heartbeat — and the genetic defects that have occurred in his children are the direct result of being exposed to radiation during atomic testing. Farmer said that during the time he spent in the Marshall Islands in 1946, he played in the sands and took a dip in the ocean, but no one warned him that he would be exposed to potentially harmful radiation. In fact, he said, no one even told him that he would be witnessing an atomic bomb test until he was on his way to the test site.

"We didn't know we were going to be involved in the testing of an atomic bomb until we were out to sea, en route to the test," he said.

Farmer said he was aboard the USS Courland to view the blast from a distance that he estimates was about eight miles away. Farmer was told that his ship was not close enough to the blast to warrant any real danger.

"BUT WHEN WE returned to port after the testing, we scraped and repainted the entire ship's deck to cover over the radiation," he said. Farmer said that he had been repeatedly assured that the ship was outside contamination range, but after the blast the crew was ordered to throw all fresh food overboard. "It seemed like a strange thing to do after they told us we hadn't been contaminated," he said.

Farmer's troubles began soon after he received his naval discharge in 1947. Returning home to Chester, Farmer found work as a truck driver and joined the Teamsters union. The pay was good, he said, and he liked his job.

Things seemed to be going pretty well for about six months, he said, until he started having fainting spells. Farmer said he went to a pathologist in Chicago who told him that his fainting spells were related to a heart condition. He was only 20 years old at the time.

But for Bob Farmer, the nights are had only just begun. Eight of his children, he said, were born with genetic birth defects. Son Steven was born with his knee joined to his hip, he said. Complex surgery performed at Shriner's hospital in St. Louis, he said, has enabled Steven to walk with the aid of an expensive and uncomfortable artificial leg.

ANOTHER CHILD, he said, developed breathing problems and tests discovered a lung deformity. Another child, he said, was born with a skull deformity which caused severe and frequent headaches. Another had an 8-pound tumor removed at age 15. Yet another child, he said, has a severe

SIU prepares for lean budget with contingency layoff plan

By Steve Metcalf
Staff Writer

The SIU-C administration, in an effort to prepare for possible budget cuts in fiscal 1984, has or will soon send notifications of non-renewal of contracts to all of SIU-C's term appointees. About 200 employees may lose their jobs on July 1, 1983.

"We're doing this as a precautionary move. We're doing it to be prepared, if we have to be prepared, for 1984 cuts. This helps preserve our options," said John Baker, President Albert Somli's special assistant for budgeting and planning.

The Illinois House passed the SIU System's fiscal 1983 budget last week and sent it to Gov. Thompson for his approval.

Baker said the University "should get a good feel" about the number of term appointees whose contracts will not be renewed for fiscal 1984 sometime next spring.

SIU-C plans to leave 120 positions unfilled this fall because of fiscal 1983 budget cuts. John Guyon, vice president for academic affairs and research, said that none of the term appointees being sent non-renewal notifications are included in the fall total.

The notices are being sent out now because term appointees require a year's notice before being let go, according to Baker.

The practice of sending term appointees non-renewal notifications is not new and is done on an annual basis, said Guyon.

Term appointees are faculty, administrative and professional employees with contracts that "have a specific beginning and ending date," according to Guyon. Some terms may end at different times of the year, said

Guyon, but July 1, 1983, has been set for the non-renewal date since that is the start of fiscal 1984.

Some of the term appointees could be rehired, but Guyon said he couldn't predict how many term appointees would retain their jobs until the fiscal 1984 budget was decided.

Guyon said that by notifying the term appointees now, the University will have more options to take should fiscal 1984 call for budget cuts.

"A notification of non-renewal means we have the option to offer the same employee at a later date the chance to be re-employed," Guyon said. "We're trying to maximize our budget flexibility."

"Most of the term appointees are used to getting notified each year," Baker said. "We give them notice in case the budget situation doesn't work out."

White House rebuts Haig's allegation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House rejected on Monday the claim of outgoing Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. that President Reagan has strayed from a mutually agreed "careful course" for foreign policy. Meanwhile, there were signs that Haig may leave before his successor takes over.

"I can assure you the president's foreign policy will continue on the same course he's charted," said Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary.

Haig was giving a farewell reception for his key aides Monday night and department spokesman Dean Fischer couldn't say for sure that Haig would remain in office past "most of the week."

Meanwhile, the State Department's foreign policy machinery began gearing up for George P. Shultz, the man Reagan picked to replace Haig. He was assigned a temporary office near Haig on the department's seventh floor and the beginning of a personal staff.

An official said Shultz was being briefed "on the Middle East and other hot spots," and the incoming secretary was cut in on a meeting of the National Security Council at the White House on Monday.

In the resignation statement he read to reporters Friday, Haig complained to the president that the administration "was shifting from that careful course which we laid out." The shift, he said, was away from a policy of "consistency, clarity and steadiness of purpose."

While Speakes said he didn't want to debate Haig's complaint, he also made clear the White House doesn't accept it.

"We have stressed continuity," Speakes said. "The president makes foreign policy and you will see as we proceed in the coming weeks and months a strong pattern of continuity that will continue because we set the tone from Jan. 20 (1981) forward."

Speakes said Haig will remain in his post while Shultz prepares to take over the job.

Fischer said it was up to Haig, Shultz and Reagan to decide how long he should remain.

Gus says Haig should have known that vicars don't dispute Holy Writ with archbishops.

U.S. challenges Soviet Union to make drastic weapons cuts

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Chief U.S. negotiator Edward L. Rowny challenged the Soviet Union on Monday to push beyond mere limitations on the world's most destructive nuclear weapons to drastic cutbacks in the arsenals amassed by the two superpowers.

Pledging a sincere negotiating effort, Rowny declined to accept the Soviet definition of the sessions opening here on Tuesday as "arms limitation and reduction talks."

"We're not simply going to limit arms in this new agreement," the former lieutenant general said in a brief news conference outside the U.S. diplomatic mission in Geneva. "Our proposal is to have reductions in arms."

Arriving here Sunday, the chief Soviet negotiator, Viktor P. Karpov, underscored the Kremlin's policy of leaving the door open to more modest reductions than the one-third slash in long-range ballistic missile warheads proposed by President Reagan.

Karpov also took a subtle swing at the U.S. plan to develop the MX and Trident II missiles and new strategic bombers while negotiations continue over several months and, possibly, years.

The Soviet goal on strategic weapons, Karpov said, is to "set effective limitations on their qualitative improvement."

Karpov also reiterated the Soviet offer to the United States to join in its pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, a pledge that the Reagan administration has rejected as cosmetic.

American officials said the no-first-use pledge would not be on the agenda for these negotiations. And, they said there would be no change in the administration's plan to develop new weapons to make up for what it perceives as the American failure to keep pace with the Soviets in the 1970s.

At the same time, Rowny said he was pleased that Karpov was taking a serious approach to the negotiations.

The talks seem destined to be protracted.

It took the Reagan administration 17 months to formulate its proposals and get to the bargaining table. The Soviets, meanwhile, are stating more limited goals while holding back on a treaty proposal of their own.

PLO begins secret surrender talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization opened intensive secret negotiations Monday on details of their proposed "honorable retreat" from encircled west Beirut, Lebanese officials reported.

Reliable informants and most Lebanese newspapers reported that the guerrillas, trapped by Israel's invasion army, had accepted the "principle" of their withdrawal from the embattled city. They were said to favor an evacuation to another Arab state by passenger ships flying the PLO flag.

A key Lebanese negotiator said Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat "is ready to do it" — to leave Beirut. Israel radio quoted an unidentified senior Israeli government official as saying there was "good hope" an agreement would be worked out soon.

The current cease-fire, engineered by special U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib, is the longest standoff yet in the Lebanese fighting.

Arafat and several of his top aides conferred until the early hours of the morning Monday with Prime Minister Shefik Wazzan and former Prime Minister Saeb Salam. Official sources said the Lebanese negotiators later informed President Elias Sarkis and Habib of the results of the bargaining session.

The PLO, nevertheless, continued issuing statements defiantly pledging to fight on in Beirut "until victory or mar-

The cease-fire entered its fourth day with only one violation reported. The Israeli military command said Palestinian guerrillas fired mortars against Israeli troops at Damour, 11 miles south of Beirut, wounding three Israelis.

An extensive deployment of Israeli tanks, artillery, motorized troops and naval gunboats maintained a tight siege on the Palestinian-dominated western half of the Lebanese capital. The Israelis kept up their psychological pressure as well.

For the second straight day, their planes dropped leaflets on Beirut that were calculated to undermine the morale of the 600,000 inhabitants of the besieged western sector.

Illinois Democrats prefer Mondale

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Illinois Democrats would likely turn to former Vice President Walter Mondale for the 1984 presidential nomination if they had to choose right now, several state party leaders say.

Their comments came as Democrats wound up their weekend National Conference, where Mondale, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and several other potential candidates spoke.

"I got the sense from our group that more people are leaning toward Mondale than any other candidate," said Grace Mary Stern, Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor.

Ex-UMW head announces candidacy

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Arnold Miller said Monday that he has regained his health and will try to regain the presidency of the 160,000-member United Mine Workers union.

Miller, who led the union from 1973 until 1979, announced his candidacy for the union's top spot during a news conference in Charleston. He said he is not impressed with any of the other candidates, including incumbent Sam Church, who succeeded him as president after Miller resigned in November 1979 due to poor health.

Belfast bomb damages 300 homes

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A 1,000-pound bomb, one of the largest ever reported in Northern Ireland, exploded Monday in a Roman Catholic area as British soldiers tried to remove it, damaging 300 homes and blowing a huge crater in the street, police reported.

The blast hurled shrapnel "the size of garbage cans" up to 500 yards, a police spokesman said.

A second bomb exploded in a Roman Catholic church in Belfast. There were no casualties in either blast.

The predominantly Catholic Irish Republican Army acknowledged that the 1,000 pounds of explosives belonged to the IRA.

Donovan case dropped; lack of evidence, says prosecutor

WASHINGTON (AP) — A special prosecutor concluded Monday there was insufficient evidence to charge Raymond J. Donovan with any offense despite "a disturbing number" of allegations that the labor secretary had links to organized crime.

With that, attorney Leon Silverman closed out a six-month investigation of Donovan, though he told a news conference in New York City later in the day that the allegations "by their sheer numerosity, must occasion a raised eyebrow."

A White House spokesman declared that President Reagan was pleased to know "there is no basis for prosecution" of the Cabinet officer.

Asked whether Reagan would keep Donovan in his post, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said "I have not heard him indicate otherwise."

Silverman noted in his 1,025-page report that a federal grand jury in Brooklyn "declined to indict the secretary with respect to every allegation it considered," including charges that Donovan witnessed a payoff from his construction company to a union official and engaged in bid-rigging.

The allegations focused on Donovan's activities as executive vice president of Schiavone Construction Co. of Seacaucus, N.J., in the late 1960s and 1970s. He was confirmed as labor secretary on Feb. 3, 1981, a few days after the FBI assured the Senate Labor Committee it had no corroboration for damaging allegations against Donovan.

Donovan, who had steadfastly denied the allegations against him, planned to issue a brief statement at the Labor Department later Monday.

Speakes said Reagan was "pleased to receive word of the conclusions of the special prosecutor, which say there is no basis for prosecution."

The controversy surrounding Donovan reached a crescendo several weeks ago when it became known that the FBI failed to provide the Senate panel with all the details of allegations by bureau informants.

Court rules against deaf student aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday that America's four million handicapped children have no legal right to receive the quality of special help they would require to achieve their full potential in public schools.

Instead, the court said, the federal law in question was intended to require school systems to provide a level of assistance that — in the instance of a handicapped child attending class with non-handicapped youngsters. — would allow the handicapped child to keep up.

Specifically, the justices ruled 6-3 that states and school districts do not have to provide sign-language interpreters to help with the classroom work of deaf children attending school with non-handicapped youngsters.

As the court raced toward the end of its nine-month term, it took these actions in other cases:

—Struck down as unconstitutional a bankruptcy law Congress enacted just four years ago.

The justices, by a 6-3 count, told Congress to go back to the legislative drawing board and give federal bankruptcy judges less sweeping powers.

—Said homeowners have no right to pass on their low-interest mortgage rates to prospective home buyers if their contract has a so-called "due-on-sale" clause. The ruling only affects mortgage money obtained from federally chartered savings and loan associations.

—Refused to disturb rulings that television networks and stations almost never can be held legally responsible when violence portrayed in broadcasts is imitated in real life.

Polish riot police quell pro-Solidarity youths at peaceful ceremony

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A brief clash Monday between Polish riot police and youths shouting pro-Solidarity slogans broke the quiet of a peaceful but tense commemoration of worker riots in Poznan 25 years ago.

Witnesses to the clash said about 300 youths fled from a group of about 4,000 people conducting an unauthorized ceremony at a giant stone cross commemorating the 1956 riots.

The march in Poznan, 200 miles west of Warsaw, began at the huge Cegielski heavy machinery works, where the 1956 protests originated.

The marchers, many of them workers from the factory, walked to the monument on sidewalks, staying out of traffic and avoiding any obstruction of normal movement through the city, the witnesses said. As they arrived at the monument, the clash with police occurred and the shouting youths fled.

Police surrounded the remaining marchers with a ring of trucks and water cannon. The police three times repeated orders to disperse, until the crowd began drifting away, the witnesses said.

The unauthorized ceremony followed several official weekend ceremonies around Poland this weekend commemorating worker upheavals in Poznan, Warsaw and Radom.

The Poznan rioting, from June 28-29 in 1956, began as a worker protest over tax laws, and grew into a three-day revolt that was put down by the Polish army with the loss of some 75 lives.

The stone cross, built by Solidarity last year and dedicated during an emotional ceremony attended by some 150,000 people, is their monument.

Monday's incident in Poznan, the first violence between police and demonstrators since June 16 rioting in Wroclaw, coincided with a declaration by the Roman Catholic church that, "This crisis cannot be overcome by overusing force and violence."

Polish television reported that the Vatican's special envoy, Archbishop Luigi Poggi, met Foreign Minister Jozef Czerwinski and Religious Affairs Minister Adam Lopatka, but provided no details.

The church's conciliatory communique appeared intended to try to assure the government that the church was not trying to pressure the authorities to agree to allow a visit to Poland by Pope John Paul II.

The pope has said he hopes to return to his native Poland in August to help celebrate the 600th anniversary of the arrival in the country of the portrait of Our Lady of Czestochowa. The icon is a revered symbol of Poland's religious faith and its patriotism.

Farewell, Al Haig; sorry to see you go

SO LONG, AL Haig. We may be sorry to see you go.

The secretary of state shocked the nation and the Reagan administration by resigning. He gave as his main reason for resigning the fact that the Reagan administration was straying from its originally planned course in foreign affairs.

Haig has been considered a hawk by most of the liberals in this country. Because of his military background, he was perceived as likely to be a warmonger. He was seen as a man on a power trip, hungering to take over the State Department and turn foreign policy in a hard-line direction.

But Haig may have been the lesser of two evils, at least in comparison with who will be setting foreign policy now that he has departed. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger appears to have his sights set on becoming the major policy influence in the Reagan administration, and it looks as though he may get his wish.

IN RETROSPECT, HAIG'S record as secretary of state is impressive. He was the moderating influence who tried to resolve the Falklands crisis before it became a full-fledged war. He opposed placing sanctions on Israel for their role in the Lebanon situation. He favored arms limitations talks with the Russians, and he also supported the Russia-Europe pipeline, which is also heavily favored by such European nations as West Germany and France.

Haig was also the only true statesman in the administration, the only one with any experience in dealing with heads of state. Both Weinberger and National Security Adviser William Clark have demonstrated their ignorance in dealing with foreign leaders.

In comparison, Weinberger has shown a more extremist attitude than Haig ever did. Weinberger favors placing heavy sanctions on Israel while increasing arms sales to Arab nations and has opposed both arms talks with the Russians and the Russian-European pipeline. He has shown that he is a man immune to reason — a "super-hawk" in an administration full of "little hawks."

THE NOMINATION OF George P. Schultz as Haig's replacement comes as no real surprise. Schultz has said he is a "team player," which means that he is sympathetic to the desires of the Reagan administration. Schultz will obviously not want to rock the State Department boat — he will go whatever direction Weinberger and Reagan want to take.

Schultz's lack of experience with foreign affairs raises some questions about his choice as secretary of state. In the Nixon administration, Schultz served in three different roles — all of which concerned business and finance.

Perhaps Schultz was chosen because of his ties with big business. American foreign policy has often been shaped by business concerns, and Reagan has expressed his interest in promoting big business' concerns, both domestically and abroad.

THOUGH HAIG'S HAWKISH image was difficult for many people to swallow, and though there was a general uproar in the liberal community when Reagan announced Haig's nomination for secretary of state, in hindsight it must be said that Haig was the dove of the Reagan administration.

Compared to Weinberger and Reagan, his performance ultimately showed he was the only hope for moderation in an administration of extremists.

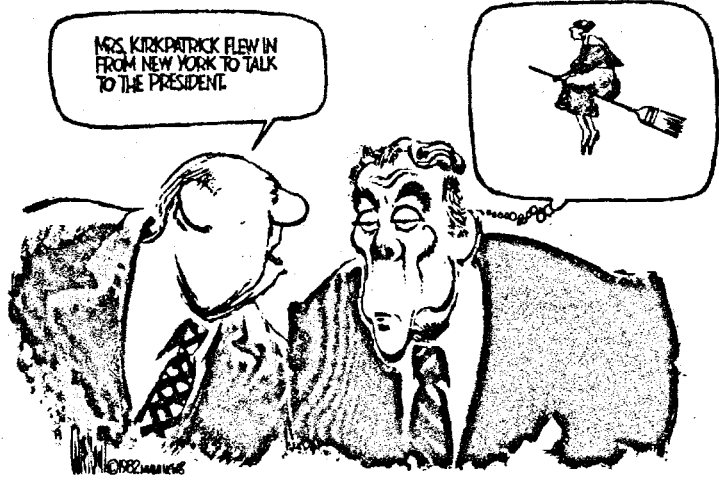

SO, SO LONG, AL Haig. They won't have you to kick around anymore.

Chronology disproves editorial

The Daily Egyptian editorial of June 23 was based on faulty data. Thus it was misleading. The chronology really ran as follows: Dec. 8, 1981 — Vice President's office approves position. Jan. 6, 1982 — Chronicle of Higher Education ad appears. Jan. 12 — Dr. Sonja Eveslage leaves Office. Feb. 1 — applications closed. Feb. 23 — staff picks top five applicants and interviews are requested with three applicants. March 26 — staff reviews interview results and recommends unanimously that the position be offered to Ms. (Nora) Post. Unfortunately, she resigned before beginning work with the Office. Until a new person is hired, Dr. Clifford Shisler — a former professional musician — will continue working with the creative arts as he has done since the death of Mrs. Helen Vergette, who was our original expert in that area. — Larry Hawso, Office of Research Development and Administration.

Nuclear protestors of 1980s need to increase their militance

WASHINGTON — IN THE ANNALS of downplaying, Caspar Weinberger's comment about the nuclear weapons protest that drew between 500,000 and 750,000 citizens to New York was punchless. He could only murmur that "I don't think that anybody rushes back and says, 'We have to change our policy'... or something because there was a rally."

Colman McCarthy

A mere rally? This was both the largest outpouring of people and the broadest coalition of anti-nuclear sentiment ever organized in the United States. If we look back on the August 1963 civil rights protest at the Lincoln Memorial as the peaking of the nation's awareness of its racism, and the beginning of the process to change it, then one day the New York weapons protest will likely be seen as the moment the shift from nuclearism began.

This was not the Bergigan brothers leading a lonely band of brave souls in a prayer vigil at the entrance to the Pentagon. Nor was it a romp of sophomores out for a weekend of military-baiting in the style that prompted Richard Nixon in 1970 to cynically dismiss student demonstrators: "You see these bums...blowing up the campuses...Get rid of the (Vietnam) war and there'll be another (issue)."

IN 1982, THE issue is not different. Now, as then, citizens are demanding accountability from a government perceived to be out of control in its military policies.

The peace movement of the late 1960s had strengths and weaknesses peculiar to the Vietnam War. It was strong because the disenchantment came in large part from returning survivors of the war who agreed with the peace protestors at home that the Johnsons, Westmorelands and Kissingers were obsessed men. It was weak because the fighting, dying and maiming were borne disproportionately by the children of the poor and lower classes, groups that are at the top of most other victimization lists. This weakness meant that the war would eventually end more because the public tired of a misguided policy that wasn't producing victory than because too many of the poor and lower classes were dying.

IN THE DISARMAMENT movement of the early 1980s, the strength is that everyone, the rich and the upper middle classes included, sees his life and possessions at stake when the nukes begin to fly and death covers Ground Zero. The establishment understands the political relevance of protesting. This includes mainline bishops to obscure conservatives in Congress like Rep. Larry J. Hopkins of Kentucky who said last week that "we are on the brink of nuclear insanity."

It's regrettable that the best thing about the burgeoning peace movement is the basest element of human nature, self-survival. But it wasn't until word spread (from the eloquent word in Jonathan Schell's "The Fate of the Earth" to the frightening word in the reports of Physicians for Social Responsibility) that the policymakers are putting everyone at risk that demonstrations between 500,000 and 750,000 were able to be organized. Everyone or everyone's representative came to New York on June 12.

THE WEAKNESS OF the movement is that it is not based on deep-rooted pacifism. A nuclear pacifist says, don't drop nuclear bombs because one might blow me up — but let's keep spending for bigger tanks, wider aircraft carriers and sneakier helicopters. Someone else can be ordered into war to risk his life manning them.

The nuclear pacifist still believes in violent force as the way for nations to settle their disputes. He is not necessarily supporting the young who refuse to cooperate with draft registration nor is he giving sympathy to tax resistors. It's only when Ground Zero overlaps his own property line that he begins to squirm.

ALREADY THE REAGAN administration shows signs that it understands this weakness. Contrary to what the unrushed Weinberger says, it has changed its policies: by changing the tone of its policies. Talk bordering on ranting is no longer heard about limited nuclear war not demonstration bombs.

Instead Ronald Reagan tells Europeans, straight from the heart not the hip, that he respects their peace marches and he would be leading them were he not the man who must stand up to the Russian bear. At home, Reagan writes a letter to Ann Landers. "I want you to know that I'll take second to none in my concern over the threat of nuclear war," he tells Ann who had received a letter from "Terrified in D.C."

THE NEXT CHALLENGE for the disarmament movement is to increase its militance while Reagan strives to decrease the appearance of his.

Cooperation is key to world's problems says new professor

By Ginny Lee
Staff Writer

"In this jet age, with its great ease of communication, it is time for all countries to cooperate with each other and discuss international problems, rather than remaining isolated or ignoring each other."

That is the view of Akira Takayama, an expert in national and international economics, who has been chosen to fill the SIU-C Vandevener Chair of economics, which was endowed in 1959 through a gift from the late W.W. Vandevener, a SIU-C alumnus.

Takayama is the author of two books on economics and holds master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Rochester in New York. He was chosen by a search committee to fill the seat of SIU-C's first Vandevener professor, C. Addison Hickman, who retired in June of 1980.

After a luncheon ceremony Monday, Takayama said that the United States cannot ignore countries like Japan, which has one-half the population of the United States.

"This means that Japan's economy is also one-half the size of the United States," said Takayama.

Responding to a question on whether or not the United States should impose higher tariffs on imports in order to concentrate more labor and manufacturing within this country, the Japanese professor said that with the high interest rates, which attract foreign dollars to this country, the U.S. dollar becomes more expensive. Therefore, he said, U.S. exporters will have a difficult time selling commodities.

Takayama also warned that tariffs are never the way to solve these kinds of problems because other countries will retaliate, which could make the plan a disadvantage rather than an advantage.

At the luncheon, SIU-C President Albert Somit said that this appointment exemplifies two of the University's major objectives.

"Number one is to bring to the University a number of scholars of truly international distinction," said Somit, "and number two is a greater concern on the part of the University with public policy."

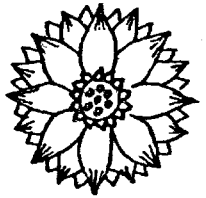

Somit said that Takayama's background is very attuned to this type of concern, and that as a major state institution, SIU-C has a responsibility to be concerned with these types of public questions.

Robert Ellis, chairman of the SIU-C Department of Economics, said that Takayama's background is very relevant to the fact that Illinois is currently ranked third in the United States in terms of its involvement in international trade.

"Overall, he will greatly enhance the reputation of not only the Department of Economics and the College of Liberal Arts, but also the entire University," said Ellis.

Takayama's appointment will begin this fall semester, although he will be on an unpaid leave during the 1982-83 academic year.

Research bill before state Senate

A $1.4 million appropriation to fund a "Food for Century 3" program at SIU-C is now before the Senate, having passed the House last week, said Rep. Bruce Richmond, D-58th District, and is likely to go before a conference committee of the two bodies.

Richmond, who sponsored the measure in the House, said the appropriations for SIU-C and other agriculture institutions are to improve the ability to do more research.

The authorization of capital development funds for SIU-C would come in three phases to construct new facilities or remodel outdated ones, according to Richmond.

The appropriation, if passed, will allocate $552,600 under Phase 1 to, among other things, rebuild a dairy calf barn destroyed by fire and remodel beef confinement in the 1960s. $541,000 will be allocated under Phase 2 to construct critical units for beef facilities and renovate outdated facilities and, under Phase 3, $345,600 will be spent for a waste disposal unit that would comply with state regulations concerning waste disposal, said Richmond.

Talking Heads not just mindless fun

By Cynthia Recter
Staff Writer

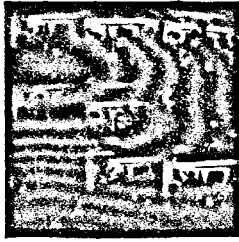

David Byrne doesn't have to prove he's creating, as he proclaims in the song "Artists Only." It's obvious, after one listen to "The Name of This Band is Talking Heads."

The new live album chronicles the group's progression from frantic four-piece band to nine-piece funk symphony. A double album, it's divided into four parts, representing each of the band's past four albums.

The original four members of the Talking Heads, who performed at SIU-C's Shryock Auditorium in 1979, are featured on the first two discs. They are David Byrne, lead vocalist and guitarist; Tina Weymouth, bass player; Jerry Harrison, on guitar, piano, and lead vocals and Chris Frantz on drums. Although the four pick up other instruments and responsibilities as time passes, these original skills seem to remain the focus.

The 1977 material, recorded in intimate surroundings, gives Byrne, in his frontman role, a chance to reveal the group's flavor when among friends. Cynicism and wit, always Talking Heads trademarks, seem especially strong in the small club atmosphere. Lyrically, "Don't Worry About the Government" stands out, offering a little of the Heads' ideology concerning America's pre-packaged lifestyle.

Album Review

There is less group vocal experimentation in the early songs, but Byrne's voice is showcased in all of its primal splendor, backed up by the spirited rhythm collaboration of Frantz-Weymouth.

The feeling on the later material has a funkier sound, perhaps due to the addition of three soul musicians. An example of this is "Take Me to the River," one of the group's earliest hits, which comes alive when the rich vocals of Nona Hendryx are added to the original sound. Tina Weymouth is freed from her bass long enough to play some synthesizer, and she combines with Hendryx for powerful female back-up vocals.

And some of these songs feature a peculiar whaling on the guitar. Is that a dolphin cry or a musical instrument of some sort?

It's Adrian Belew, well known for his recent work with "King Crimson." He's featured in the later Heads material as well. Belew, who toured for a short time with the Talking Heads, managed to get his picture on the album cover and his guitar into a few recordings. His raw yet directed licks combine with Byrne's paranoid utterances to provide an eerie effect on "Air," as well as in "Houses in Motion."

The Talking Heads are one of the most resourceful and intelligent studio bands around today. Luckily, they're able to reproduce an equal richness and intensity live, while adding a little improvisation to keep things interesting. Consequently, the live album should satisfy both the casual listener as a first album, and the hard-core fan, as a showcase of their music.

If you hear the album, listen carefully to Byrne's background comments. He'll tell you its okay to dance along. In fact, the Talking Heads are perfect to dance to. But they might disappoint some people. Unlike the B-52s, the Talking Heads aren't just mindless fun. They might teach you a few things about yourself while you burn up the carpet. It could prove disturbing.

Looking for fall dorm space? Better hurry, it's almost gone

By University News Service

With fall semester on its way, on-campus dormitory spaces are filling up, and, according to housing officials, most have been spoken for since June 1. Joseph Gasser, assistant director of University Housing, said only 56 of the university's 5,900 single student on-campus spaces were available as of June 21. And those vacancies are at University Park and for women only. All permanent spaces for men are filled but the office is still taking applications and putting students on waiting lists, he said.

Because of contract cancellations, the waiting list is usually reduced by the time classes begin, Gasser said. And the University has about 220 spaces on campus used to accommodate latecomers in temporary housing facilities.

"Although temporary facilities aren't the most desirable," he said, "we're usually able to place students in permanent rooms within the first couple of weeks of the semester."

The outlook at approved off-campus housing is much roomier, Gasser said.

Free trips to Daytona Beach luring leasers to trailer park

By Michele Inman
Staff Writer

John Barnes, manager of Carbondale Mobile Homes, has discovered a sure-fire way to attract tenants to his mobile home park. He's giving away free trips to Daytona Beach to the first 100 persons who sign fall leases.

"We're doing this to help promote our business," Barnes said. "We think it's better for us to give something back to the tenant than to continuously take like our competitors."

The first 50 trips have already been given away, he said. "They went quick. We had to purchase an additional 50," Barnes said that Carbondale Mobile Homes purchased the first 50 trips before the end of spring semester and an additional 50 before the beginning of summer semester.

Although transportation costs are not included in the package, just about everything else is. The trip pays 4 days and 3 nights lodging at Pirate's Cove or Surfside Inn at Daytona Beach, a free split (half-bottle) of champagne on arrival, a continental breakfast and $250 worth of discount coupons for restaurants, stores and attractions, Barnes said.

Barnes said that one trip is being given away per mobile home. The trip is for two persons. If a three-bedroom lease is signed, the third person may go on the trip for a nominal fee, he said. Persons may go on the trip any time after the gift certificate has been issued until April 1, 1983, he said.

The trips are funded by Carbondale Mobile Homes, he said. "That's just money out of our pocket," Barnes said. "It's costing us." Barnes declined to say how much the mobile home park paid for the trips. According to Rita Buck, administrative assistant for Media Marketing of Atlanta, Ga., Carbondale Mobile Homes bought the trips through their agency. If the certificates are not used, Barnes said that Carbondale Mobile Homes would have to absorb the cost. "We've already paid for the trips," Barnes said.

Barnes said, though, that the expense is worth it. "We believe we can get our money back now that the park is under new management, and we can treat the students and tenants the way they should be treated," he said.

Barnes, who has been with the park for 15 years, said a lot of students have mixed emotions about landlords. But, he said, "We encourage students to bring their parents out to our park to see what kind of operation we run and to see what kind of housing is available."

He said that business is going good and there has been a noticeable improvement since the promotion was started.

SIU-C energy conservation expert joins specialists in national study

Design professor Richard E. Archer left Carbondale Monday on a one-week trip, joining 16 other energy specialists on a national panel to develop strategic guidelines for the United States to use in the event of future world oil shortages. Archer, an SIU-C assistant professor in the Department of Comprehensive Planning and Design, was appointed to a one-year term on the study panel, which will be conducted by the Office of Technology Assessment, an advisory board to Congress. Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.) requested Archer's appointment.

This was the first of three to four meetings a year the panelists will have in Washington to review research progress and submit their findings to Congress, OTA officials said.

"I consider this a great honor," Archer said. "I think the OTA study is an indication that government is really taking alternative steps to curb our oil consumption. Maybe the next time an energy crisis arises we'll be better prepared."

Archer was appointed in 1980 to a presidential commission on the National Alcohol Fuels Project and last year addressed a panel of federal energy officials concerning the Reagan administration's initial national energy policy proposals.

Archer also helped develop a comprehensive energy plan for Carbondale and addressed federal and state hearings on energy conservation and use.

Physical plant precipitators start cleaning job next spring

by Dean Kirk
Staff Writer

Although the four particulate-removing electrostatic precipitators have been installed at SIU-C's physical plant, they won't be functional until spring 1983.

However, the scheduled completion date of March 1983 is in keeping with what the engineer set up in the first place," said Thomas Engram, utilities superintendent at the plant. The project engineers are Consoer, Townsend and Associates, Ltd. of Chicago, he said, while the Paragon Energy Corp. of Kansas City Mo. is the principal contractor.

The precipitators are housed in four metal structures called niches, said Engram. The penthouses have been placed around the physical plant smokestack, a pair on each side. There is also a precipitator for each of the plant's boilers, he said.

According to John Meister, SIU-C's pollution control director, the precipitators are needed by the University to meet U.S. Environmental Protection Agency standards. EPA standards, he said, are based on the amount of particulates that go up the smokestack of a coal-burning power plant such as SIU-C's.

The emissions result when coal is burned at the plant, Meister said. He also said that fly ash comprises 99 percent of the plant's emissions. The precipitators will remove four-tenths of a pound of fly ash per million British thermal unit's of heat. Meister said the precipitators remove fly ash particles from the smokestack by using static electricity. The process is similar to the way electronic filters remove dust from home air conditioning systems.

Fly ash is harmful mainly in areas with a lot of coal burning furnaces, Meister said, because of the bad visibility that results.

The EPA informed SIU-C that it needed electrostatic precipitators in 1968, said Clarence Dougherty, SIU-C's vice-president of campus services. He said the precipitators will cost $300,000 a year to operate.

Engram said that work done on the physical plant smokestack in connection with the installation of the precipitators was the reason for air conditioning being cut in some campus buildings during spring recess.

The project budget is $5,880,000, Dougherty said. Engram said the project was officially started Sept. 17, 1981.

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have any causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as sitting at a desk or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

It's smooth sailing for shuttle after unexplained turbulence

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The shuttle Columbia, testing a fuel-saving maneuver 186 miles above Earth, experienced "unexplained torque" Monday that caused a series of harmless pitch and roll movements. The phenomenon went away as mysteriously as it began and officials were curious, but not worried.

Otherwise, Day 2 of Flight 4, was routine as astronauts Ken Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield went about their business, conducting commercial and military experiments and checking out Columbia's systems.

"The crew's health is excellent, the guys are really jubilant," said Flight Director Harold Draughon.

On Earth, NASA directed recovery ships to mark the spot in the Atlantic Ocean where the shuttle's twin rocket boosters sank after launch on Sunday.

Le Cheval de Boskeydell? It's a horse stable, of course

By Michele Inman
Staff Writer

The name "LeCheval de Boskeydell" probably tongue-ties anybody who tries to pronounce it. But what it stands for may even be more baffling. Everyone knows that SIU-C has a football team, a baseball team and a basketball team. But did you know that SIU-C also has an equestrian team, and practices at LeCheval de Boskeydell?

The equestrian team is a club that competes in the age-old art of riding horses, and LeCheval de Boskeydell is a stable located on Boskeydell road.

Mark O'Donoghue, 31, who has owned the stables for three years, is the principal instructor and manager of LeCheval.

O'Donoghue came up with the name himself.

"I looked for a word that rhymed with Boskeydell and then I called the French Department," said the dark-haired instructor, who learned from the SIU-C Department of Foreign Languages that "le Cheval" stands for "the horse."

The facilities include an outdoor and an indoor arena. There are 20 horses that are privately owned and boarded at the stable. O'Donoghue owns

Computer facility
reopening fulltime
starting June 30

The computer facility in Paner Hall will reopen for full time operation on June 30, following restoration of budget cuts that had closed the facility on the third shift during the week.

After June 30, the facility will be in operation 24 hours a day, from 8 a.m. Monday to midnight Saturday, and from 1 to 9 p.m. Sunday.

Charles Campbell, associate director of computing affairs, said the budget cut was restored through the work of John Baker, special assistant to President Albert Somit and John Guyon, vice president for academic affairs and research.

"I'd like to thank Dr. Baker and Dr. Guyon for their help in keeping the facility open on the third shift," Campbell said. "Without their help, we wouldn't have been able to run full-time."

eight.

A native of Townsend, Md., O'Donoghue began riding at the age of 12.

"I went to a camp for dyslexic children in Union Town, Pa.," said O'Donoghue, who went to the camp to overcome a reading impairment.

"There was a summer program that had horses," he said. O'Donoghue's formal training, however, did not begin until he was 20. He had 2 and one-half years of private instruction with Jan H. Janssen, a retired horseman from Holland.

O'Donoghue related that his first impression of the stables wasn't good. He said that two friends who worked at SIU-C, Robert and Lenore Russell, informed him that there was a stable on the market in Carbondale.

"I thought it was lousy. I had great reservations about purchasing it because of the lack of acreage," O'Donoghue said. "I didn't have the money."

Mrs. Russell contacted a relative, Jim Dyer, who purchased the stables with O'Donoghue.

Dyer is still manager and director of stables, involved only in the financial aspects, said O'Donoghue. "He is a solid partner," O'Donoghue added.

The 6-foot, 160 pound casually-dressed instructor provides facilities and instruction for other groups besides the SIU-C team.

Among his clients are the YMCA, girl scouts, SIU-C staff, teachers and their dependents.

Presently, O'Donoghue and his wife, Jill, 25, are working with the Pegasus Center, a group of private individuals that formed a board to provide horseback-riding for the handicapped as a therapy.

O'Donoghue, who instructs in an easy-going, casual manner, claims that it is his philosophy that the riders must want to learn to ride and be aggressive and not be afraid to make the horse do what the rider wants, especially in show-jumping training.

Red Cross seeking type 'O' during blood drive this week

By Michele Inman
Staff Writer

If you're in need of type "O" blood this summer you may be out of luck — unless the Red Cross can come up with 500 extra pints.

Because a shortage of type "O" blood exists, an extra day, July 2, has been added to the scheduled June 30 and July 1 dates for the Red Cross blood drive at SIU-C, said Laurence Sherman, M.D., chief of blood service operations, St. Louis American Red Cross.

There is a shortage of type "O" blood in the eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois area, said Sherman, and the Red Cross is hoping to gain an additional 500 pints before the July 4 weekend.

Because of the holiday, the weekend will allow one day less for accepting donations, he said. Also, this weekend will mark the beginning of summer for most people and fewer donors are available during summer, he said.

The need for blood increases this weekend, Sherman said, because the likelihood of automobile accidents increases.

"They tell me the type 'O' shortage isn't bad enough to threaten anyone's life yet, but they're definitely getting worried," said Carlton Rasche, president of the SIU-C Annuitants Association, in a university news service release.

Blood donors may give blood from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on the given days in Ballroom D, Student Center.

Members of the SIU-C Annuitants Association will assist the Red Cross staffers during the blood drive, Rasche said. The 850-member club has provided assistance to the Red Cross since 1872, he added.

Cadets attend officer skill course

Four SIU-C Army ROTC cadets attended an officers basic training camp May 17 to June 24 at Fort Knox, Ky. Completion of the course is required before students can enroll in advanced ROTC classes at SIU-C.

Mildred A. Robinson, daughter of Mattie Brewer, is a senior majoring in aviation technologies. John K. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Smith, is a sophomore majoring in electronic data processing. Both are from Chicago.

From Murphysboro, Donald G. Caraway is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Caraway. He is a transfer student from John A. Logan College and will enroll at SIU-C in the fall.

Robert L. Werner, from Taylor Ridge, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Werner. He is a freshman majoring in automotive technologies.

The camp is designed to give ROTC students training in basic military skills such as leadership, weapons handling, land navigation and physical fitness.

Prof was nuclear test observer

By Mike Nelson
Staff Writer

One SIU-C professor says that he witnessed an atomic bomb test, but that he suffers no apparent ill effects from the blast.

Aristotel Pappelis, a faculty member in the Botany department, said that he witnessed an atomic bomb test in the Nevada desert in 1953. Pappelis, then a first lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force, said he was sent as an observer to Camp Desert Rock, Nev., where he spent several weeks with a team doing preliminary research at an atomic test site.

Pappelis said he thinks that "some of the people who were at the tests have legitimate complaints" about the effects of radiation on their health, but that "as far as I know, I have none."

Pappelis said that the U.S. government made a mistake by not accurately documenting what personnel were at the test sites and by not providing test witnesses with periodic check-ups and assistance.

"The government didn't make the provision that some people could be adversely affected by the testing," he said.

breathing problem, and Farmer's youngest child has developed small lumps just beneath the skin of his chest, arms and legs. Only one of his children, he said, appears to be perfectly healthy.

Because of his heart attack, Farmer said he had to retire from his job at age 40. He said his Teamsters insurance paid most of the medical bills, but that he is receiving no medical compensation from the Veterans Administration. He said he lives on a monthly government pension of $97.62, plus a small amount of Social Security disability benefits. Farmer said he has been trying to obtain compensation from the VA, but without success.

He said he heard about NAAV about two years ago while watching a television documentary on atomic test veterans. He now works with Cavins helping the NAAV to find other atomic veterans and to help them obtain medical compensation.

THE NAAV estimates that between 10,000 and 12,000 of the atomic test veterans live in Illinois. According to Cavins, 50 percent of the 22 veterans who were found in Southern Illinois have had serious medical problems. Two have since died.

The Defense Nuclear Agency and the Veterans Administration will not admit that exposure to radiation during testing is responsible for these illnesses, Cavins said. The NAAV is presently lobbying the federal government to have these diseases re-classified as service-related, even though the tests occurred during peacetime, he said.

Cavins said the biggest problem that he has encountered during his search for test witnesses has been apathy. "As I look out here tonight and see all of these empty seats, I can see that a lot of people just don't care," he said.

FARMER AND several other atomic test witnesses from the area met with Rep. Paul Simon, D-24th District, in March to discuss possible compensation for test veterans and their families. A spokesman for Simon said Monday that legislation is being planned that, if passed, would provide medical compensation for nuclear test participants and their children.

The proposed legislation would amend present VA statutes, making atomic test veterans eligible for disability compensation. Simon expects to introduce the legislation when the Congress reconvenes after the July 4 recess.

But Farmer said his troubles are far from over. His son Steven's artificial leg is broken, he said, and it will take approximately $2,500 to replace it. Farmer said that neither he nor his son can afford the money for another leg.

"I don't know what in the world I'm going to do," he said. "I need help from somebody."

Grade tampering fails to make mark

THE LETTER of Intent.

To a student athlete entering college, it is the key that opens the door to a free college education, free room and board, free textbooks and the glory bestowed upon college athletes.

For most of the athletes, returning a letter that says they will attend a university on an athletic scholarship means that dreams are no longer just rose-colored wishes, but realities spelled out in the black and white of that contract to play a sport for a university.

A high school athlete may commit to a university any time during his senior year. There is an official day in April when the athletes may return the written contract to the university. Athletes need to wait until the completion of their sport's season before making the decision about where to continue their career, but the trend the past few years has been to commit early to avoid the pressures of recruiting.

THE NCAA HAS a standard which requires an athlete to graduate from high school with a 2.0 grade point average - at least a "C" average - in order to be eligible for a scholarship. Recently, there has been a fullscale investigation by the Chicago Sun-Times into the grades of two highly-recruited basketball players from Chicago, Efreem Winters and Ken Colliers, who had signed to play at the University of Illinois.

From the Press Box

By Jackie Rodgers

The Sun-Times investigation revealed alleged changing of grades in the case of Winters. The 6-10 Martin Luther King High School student was considered to be the most sought after high school player in the country. The Sun-Times investigation showed that Winters' transcripts had been completely redone following his junior year, when it would have been impossible for Winters to achieve a 2.0 average by graduation.

Although the Chicago Public School system allows a prinicipal to change grades, the King principal denied having changed Winters' grades in order for him to meet the NCAA standards, despite the fact that the Sun-Times had statements from Winters' teachers which said the grades that appeared in the transcripts were not the same they had given Winters.

COLLIERS was graduated from Corlis High School although his GPA was 1.7. He was absent from class 56 percent of the time during the basketball season, according to the Chicago newspaper.

The Sun-Times said Colliers attended night class at Chicago Vocational School to make up courses, but the Chicago Board of Education does not allow night school credit for major courses. Colliers' principal at Corlis was also the principal at CVS night school.

These are only two cases of high school athletes who have been granted "favors" by their high school principals so that they could meet the NCAA rules to qualify for an athletic scholarship. While it is true that the only line of work many athletes pursue is a sports career, the educational systems should not be used as a minor leagues.

THE SIGNING of the magical letter of intent should be delayed until the athlete has graduated. Although the athletes have now been committing early to spare themselves the pressure of recruiting, they should commit later to spare themselves the humiliation of having their grades made public.

The NCAA should not allow athletes to sign commitment letters until they have graduated with a 2.0 GPA. This might then force an athlete to be a student first, an athlete second, thus preserving the purpose of education.

Big-time, big-money college athletics puts the pressure on the high schools to deliver the big-name athlete to the school.

It is almost as if the high school is afraid of denying the university the right to cash in on the athletes, or the athletes the right to cash in on the university.

IT IS A SHAME that the high school programs have become the minor leagues for the collegiate ranks. It is a shame that the educational institutions allow and even condone the practice of grade changing in order for an athlete to obtain an athletic scholarship.

I realize that for many athletes sports is a way out of the environment they live in, and the only chance they have to make a name for themselves. I also realize that being absent from class 56 percent of the time does not allow one to be the best of students. I realize that as a native of Chicago, I have paid school taxes to educate people who are not getting educated. And I realize that as a college student I have paid fees and admissions to fund athletic programs.

Somehow I get the feeling that I have paid so others may cash in. And the NCAA is cashing in. Big.

Westhead named Bulls' head coach

CHICAGO (AP) — Paul Westhead, an advocate of the fast-break, running game, who was fired by Los Angeles because of his restrictive offense, officially was named head coach of the Chicago Bulls Monday.

Westhead was signed to a four-year contract and replaces General Manager Rod Thorn, who filled in as interim coach last February after Jerry Sloan had been fired.

The terms of the contract were not revealed but Thorn said the Lakers will not be paying any of Westhead's salary.

Westhead had two years remaining on his $250,000 annual Laker contract when he was dismissed after 11 games of the past season following a confrontation with Earvin "Magic" Johnson, the Lakers' star guard.

"I have reached an understanding considering my contractual situation with the Lakers," said Westhead.

Johnson, who has a $25 million contract with Lakers' owner Jerry Buss, walked off the court after a game in Salt Lake City claiming he could no longer play under Westhead's system.

Westhead, who took over the head coaching job after Jack McKinney received a head injury in a freak bicycle accident, led the Lakers to the National Basketball Association championship in 1980.

Westhead, a 43-year-old Shakespearean scholar, coached nine years at LaSalle University before entering the pro ranks.

Saluki swimmer nabs three firsts

A current and a former SIU-C swimmer combined to take home a total of five first-place awards in the eighth annual Sugar Creek Swimming Invitational at St. Louis over the weekend.

Saluki Keith Armstrong took three firsts including the 11th best time in the world in the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 23.99. He also took first in the 200-yard freestyle in 1:59.71 and the 100-yard freestyle in 52.3, which was a Saluki record.

All-American Roger VonJouanne, a former Saluki, took firsts in the 100-yard backstroke in 59.97 and the 200-yard individual medley in 2:11.58. VonJouanne also had a second in the 200-yard butterfly in 2:06.5 and a third in the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:12.50.

Other Salukis who did well included Carlos Henao, Pam Ratcliffe, Rich Sues, John Fisher and Phil Wittry.

Henao had thirds in the 200-yard freestyle in 2:00.98, the 100-yard backstroke in 61.30, the 400-yard freestyle in 4:17.90 and a fourth in the 100-yard freestyle in 54.7.

Ratcliffe scored thirds in the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:20.37, the 100-yard freestyle in 1:01.4, fourth in the 200-yard individual medley in 2:44.64 and 10th in the 100-yard backstroke in 1:13.40.

Sues took a fourth in the 50-yard freestyle in 25.62, while Fisher placed eighth in the same event in 26.28. Wittry placed sixth in the 100-yard backstroke in 1:04.80.

All of the Saluki swimmers that participated in the meet are aiming at making the U.S. team at the world championships in Ecuador next month, except Henao, who has already made the Columbian team and Armstrong, who is trying to make the South African team.

George Iubelt, right, will be a consultant to Coach Cindy Scott next season.

Iubelt returns to Saluki bench

By Jackie Rodgers
Staff Writer

George Iubelt, who had been an assistant men's basketball coach at SIU-C for 18 years, will take his place on the bench again next season - as a part-time consultant to the women's basketball team.

"I'm extremely pleased that George will be joining us next year," said Head Coach Cindy Scott. "He will be a tremendous help to both me and Coach Beck. I believe that the man has one of the best basketball minds around."

Scott said Iubelt was hired on a one-year, part-time basis, which means he will assist with practices and home games. Scott said Iubelt's contract does not tie him to any travel commitments, recruiting or scouting.

Iubelt was an assistant with the men's program until 1978. Scott believes the 58-year-old Orient native will improve the team's community contacts because he is well liked in the area.

Iubelt said he was not hesitant about accepting the position, working with women, or having a woman for a boss.

"I haven't seen much women's basketball, so I'll have to play it by ear," Iubelt said. "I'm kind of looking forward to it all. Coach Scott has me convinced I can help her and her team."

Iubelt began his coaching career after his graduation from SIU-C in 1949 at Galatia High School. Iubelt then coached at West Franfort, posting a 115-63 record during his eight years there, before coming to SIU-C the first time.
