Council to vote on liquor ordinance

By Rob Neff
DE Government/Politics Editor

The proposed entertainment license ordinance has been amended to more closely parallel the Liquor Code and is expected to be voted on at the City Council meeting tonight.

The proposed ordinance would create a license for non-alcoholic entertainment clubs, giving the city the right to periodically inspect such clubs.

Councilman Michael Neill said the changes address concerns he had about holding non-alcoholic bars to higher standards than alcoholic bars.

"I wanted to make sure that the language in the ordinance was identical to the language in the Liquor Code," he said. "I have not checked every word myself, but I think that has happened. I support it now."

At the council meeting last Tuesday, Beach Bumz owner Roland Davis raised objections to the proposed law. He objected to regulations that would require club owners to clean up litter in a two-block radius around the club, control any crowd outside the premises and eject any patrons under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

None of these regulations are in the Liquor Code, and they have been deleted in the amended version of the ordinance the Council will review tonight.

the liquor license at Beach Bumz and has announced plans to reopen the bar as an alcohol-free dance club. He had originally planned to keep the establishment open until 5 a.m., but if the amended ordinance is passed, he will be required to close at 2 a.m., when the alcoholic bars close.

Davis could not be reached for comment on the amended proposal, but has said that while the 2 a.m. closing time would not affect his decision to re-open as a juice bar, he believes it would affect his bottom line.

"I'm not going to give up one way or the other," he said. "But staying open later is a key component of my operation."

Davis said he would like to cater to the 21-and-over crowd after the bars close to give them the opportunity to sober up before driving home.

However, Neill has said he does not agree with this argument and has concerns about allowing an alcohol-free club to remain open to cater to drunks.

"What I have in mind for a non-alcoholic place is somewhere I would send my kids," he said. "If people who have been drinking are allowed in the establishment, that would change the atmosphere."

Davis disagreed with this argument, pointing out that the ordinance only would allow an entertainment club to cater to those between 13 and 18 years of age, those 18 and over or those 21 and over at any given time.

"Is the intoxication going to transfer magically to the sober person?" he asked. "The 21-and-over crowd won't be coming in contact with the teenagers anyway."

Hot Rod City, Gear Head Gangland, or Rev'em Up Johnnyville all could describe the 19th Annual Street Machine Nationals in Du Quoin last weekend.

Almost 107,000 people attended the three-day event, according to Rachel Atimann, a Special Events coordinator. It drew in folks from many states including Oklahoma, Kentucky, Mississippi, Kansas, Florida, California, Iowa, Wisconsin, Georgia and Ohio.

Steve Pierson, director of operations for Special Events, said there were 3,712 participants that came out to the Nationals in Du Quoin.

No serious incidents were encountered by the Illinois State Police, who were patrolling in numbers.

Park district warns Sunset patrons to clean up act

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Carbondale park district officials say if people want to see the summer sunset concert tradition continue they had better improve their behavior.

Sandy Bartelsmeyer, president of the Park District Board of Commissioners, said last Thursday's 5,000-plus crowd was fairly well behaved, but improvement is needed.

"In general, it was a very well-behaved crowd, but it only takes a few people to ruin it for everyone," Bartelsmeyer said.

Bartelsmeyer said the board has not made any decisions yet, but will decide the future of Turley Park after the concerts are over.

Bartelsmeyer said some of the problems at the sunset concerts are underage drinking, public urination and pets.

Cindy Gimse, who lives a block away from Turley Park, said she stopped attending the concerts because of the large amount of underage drinking, littering, public urination and public display of affection she has seen in recent

SIUC professors recount Burger's impact on University

By Donita Polly
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Retired Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, whose criticism of law schools has had a positive impact on SIUC, died Sunday of congestive heart failure at 87.

Burger was appointed to the federal appellate bench by President Eisenhower in 1956 and was named Chief Justice in 1969 by President Nixon.

Law and political professors alike agree that Burger's push on professionalism and his important impact on research have helped students and researchers at SIUC.

Keith Beyer, associate professor of law at SIUC, said Burger challenged law schools and the bar association, because they weren't doing a good job training trial and appellate lawyers.

"His very pointed criticism has had a positive effect on what we do today," Beyer said.

Burger's criticism resulted in the teaching of trial advocacy and pre-trial advocacy, and also led to the creation of the National Institute for Trial Advocacy to better train trial lawyers, Beyer said.

AID FOR RWANDAN REFUGEES MAY DIMINISH — GOMA, Zaire—Rwanda's new Tutsi-led government has repeatedly urged Hutu refugees to return, denying rumors of widespread revenge killings. Its efforts suffered a major setback in April, when a reported 2,000 Hutus died at a refugee site in southern Rwanda after troops opened fire at camp inhabitants who had refused to go home. Relief agencies are warning dwindling aid could force camps to be shut by winter. Zairian officials threaten to throw them out soon. The prime minister accused leaders of Rwanda's former Hutu government army of intimidating refugees who want to return home.

MEXICAN BORDER CONTROL CHANGING GEARS — NOGALES, Ariz.—The source of change in border control is an unsightly, 4-mile-long, olive-drab fence composed of surplus runway mats that the Army Corps of Engineers started erecting through the center of Nogales last month. The 10-foot-high border fence already has dramatically illustrated the potential for deterring illegal crossings when the federal government is prepared to invest enough money and personnel in a particularly porous section of the country's 8,000 miles of international frontier.

FILIPINO WOMEN ABUSED BY EMPLOYMENT — MANILA, The Philippines—An unskilled clerk from the overcrowded barrios of Manila, Rosalina chafed at earning a meager $150 a month in a large department store. So, like millions of impoverished women before her, she left behind a husband and an infant daughter and went to find her fortune in the Middle East. Although a recruiter promised her a cashier's job paying $500 a month, the only available work was a servant's job for a family in Abu Dhabi. Her dismay turned to scalding anger when she read her contract and found she would earn only $147 a month after working free for six months to pay employment agency fees and air fare.

Nation

AMERICAN RED CROSS EXPERIENCING RED INK — WASHINGTON—The American Red Cross, caretaker of the nation's largest blood bank, is hemorrhaging red ink. Pressure to raise safety while cutting prices of the blood it sells, coupled with an outdated management system and a drop in blood donations, has caused the non-profit agency to project a $60 million deficit for the year that ends June 30. It will be its first loss since the Red Cross began keeping national records in 1980. The net effect, Lipton and other industry officials say, will be to make blood safer but scarcer and more expensive. No one has died for lack of blood supplies in an emergency, but during blood shortages, which often occur during holidays, non-emergency surgeries increasingly are being postponed, a trend they say will accelerate.

CARBON DIOXIDE RISE IS DISPROPORTIONATE — The threat of global warming depends largely on the amount of carbon dioxide in the air. For four decades, the rate of increase in CO<sub>2</sub>, the principal "greenhouse gas," has consistently followed the rise in industrial emissions from fossil fuel use. But in recent years, levels have shown two strange deviations from expected values: the rate of increase rose disproportionately even though industrial emissions declined; but from 1988 to 1993, it slowed faster than anticipated, then returned to expected levels in 1994.

U.S. SURGEON GENERAL POSITION QUESTIONED — WASHINGTON—Does America need a national "family doctor"? With the bitter battle over surgeon general nominee Henry W. Foster Jr. ending in defeat for President Clinton, Republicans on Capitol Hill are expected to escalate their efforts to do away with the job entirely, stirring fierce debate over the role of the nation's top doctor. Has the job of surgeon general become so ideological, so political and so divisive that it has outlived and diminished its usefulness? After all, a surgeon general has no real policy-making authority, and his or her effectiveness rests largely on strength of personality and determination to press public health issues.

Bugs, heat no obstacle for archaeological project

By Rebecca Hutchings
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Amidst poison ivy, ticks and chiggers, SIUC archaeological students are sweating it out this summer at a field school program in the Shawnee National Forest on a site called Dillow's Ridge in Union County.

Dillow's Ridge is the prehistoric site of a small Mississippian village that produced hoes and other large tools.

The hoes are made of Mill Creek chert, a rock found only in Southern Illinois, and were widely and intensely traded throughout the U.S. from 1200 to 1400, according to Charlie Cobb, program director.

Drew Jonas, a senior in chemistry from Chicago, said the poison ivy and bugs were not going to stop him from going to the site.

"The poison ivy, chiggers, and ticks are annoying but I'm going to stick it out," Jonas said. "It's not like it's going to stop me from going out there. It's too much fun."

Christopher Koepfel, assistant program director, said the goal of the program is to teach the digging, screening and lab work involved with archaeological excavation.

Brian G. Del Castillo, graduate assistant, said experience is vital for the students to learn these skills.

"This is the type of class you can't learn in lecture," Del Castillo said. "You have to be out doing the stuff. It's hands-on experience for everyone."

Students work eight hours or more Monday through Friday for eight weeks during the summer, and receive six credit hours.

They are expected to do hard work, carrying equipment while climbing hills just to reach the site, Koepfel said.

Marla Sweetin, a senior in anthropology with a minor in museum studies from Mt. Vernon, said the work is difficult but the experience is helpful in choosing her future career.

"It's hard physical work when you're out there, but it's good for me to decide what field I want to go into in anthropology," Sweetin said. "I like it a lot so far."

The Mississippian village are descendants of the Quapaw or Creek Indians but their exact heritage is unknown, according to Cobb.

Cobb said the site was never plowed and offers exceptional preservation of the Mississippian village.

"The site is in pristine condition. In eastern North America almost everything is plowed which ruins sites," Cobb said.

Michael J. Dessi — The Daily Egyptian

Charlie Cobb, SIUC archaeological program director, along with Christopher Koepfel, assistant program director and Brian Del Castillo, a graduate student in archaeology, uncover a site that is currently being worked on deep in the Shawnee National Forest.

"This site has never been plowed and is one of the best preserved Mississippian sites in all of Illinois, there are phenomenal remains."

Students are finding artifacts

600-800 years old, according to Cobb.

Jonas said the field school is hard work but worth the time for the knowledge he gains.

"It takes up a lot of time and energy," Jonas said. "I'm exhausted every day but I'm learning new things and asking lots of questions."

Doctoral student writes dissertation on 'Seinfeld'

By Christi C. Harber
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"Seinfeld," a sitcom popular with college-age viewers, is the subject of an international study being conducted by an SIUC graduate student.

Karen Smith, a graduate student in speech communication from Long Island, New York, is doing her doctoral dissertation on how we make sense of the hit NBC sitcom "Seinfeld."

"I chose 'Seinfeld' because I watch it every week, my friends and I have good discussions about it and because of my New York background," Smith said.

Smith conducted 45 interviews, including 35 on the Internet. She said the respondents on the Internet were between the ages of 20 and 60 and came from cities around the world.

"I have interviewed people from New Zealand, Mexico City, New York City, Chicago, London and Los Angeles," Smith said.

Smith received permission from the "Seinfeld" digest to post the results of her research on the Internet.

During the 10 face-to-face interviews, Smith asked 15 questions that led into free-flowing conversations about the show.

"I begin with asking them if they caught the last episode of 'Seinfeld,' what is your favorite scene, what you like about the show and what you dislike," she said.

SIUC professor verifying use of food label information by U.S. consumers

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC professor is researching the affect of nutritional information provided on food products, to see if requiring such information on packages is as effective as health experts say.

Congress passed the Nutritional Labeling and Education Act in May 1994, mandating manufacturers to display nutritional information on food products, and initiating a system of standardized measures.

Siva Balasubramanian, a professor in marketing from India, is researching how consumers use the nutritional information now provided.

"The government has some good intentions, but I am interested in if the consumers are really using this information," he said. "It's one thing to make the information available but are consumers really using it?"

Jan Sundberg, a registered dietitian from Carbondale, said she believes that displaying the nutritional facts on the back of food products will improve the health of the American people.

"I believe it will make it easier for people to compare products so that they can select a healthier choice," Sundberg said.

According to Sundberg this information is very beneficial for consumers.

"It is wonderful to find out so easily how much vitamins, nutrients and saturated fats are in a certain product," she said.

Balasubramanian said there are two attitudes that consumers will have toward the nutritional information being provided.

"Some consumers will look at the information and make intelligent decisions about which products to use," he said. "Others will take the attitude that 'since the government has gone through all this trouble there is no need for me to be concerned with the information.'"

According to Balasubramanian there has been a lot of money and effort spent to have this information for consumers — and it should be used.

"If consumers are not using it we need to find out what can be done to stimulate consumers to be concerned," he said.

Balasubramanian said he is still in the process of analyzing his study, and should have results in about a month.

"We are hoping people will use the information that the government has provided for them," he said.

Blood drive aims to beef up area's dwindling supply

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Coinciding with the warmer weather, adults and children will embark on their summer activities, increasing the possibility of bodily harm and loss of blood, said a Red Cross blood drive coordinator.

Vivian Ugent, the Southern Illinois coordinator for the American Red Cross, said a local blood watch has led to the 1995 summer blood drive that kicked off Sunday with a weekly goal set for 435 units.

"It's a very difficult time for us," she said. "The need for blood does not take a holiday, but people do."

Ugent said the Southern Illinois region depends heavily year round on the high school and college student population, which drops considerably in the summer, and without donors there is a shortage of blood.

Ugent said the normal blood requested by individual hospitals is a two to three day supply, but currently hospitals have less than a one day supply available.

KIM RAINES — The Daily Egyptian

Elaine Rueling, a donor care specialist with the American Red Cross, pricks the earlobe of blood donor Carol Mains, a secretary with the Alternative Dispute Resolution Clinic located in the Lesar Law Building. The earlobe may now be pricked instead of the finger to test the blood for sufficient iron content.

"Five of the eight blood types are less than the one day supply needed by hospitals," she said.

Ugent said the Red Cross is already going into the July 4th holiday weekend with a deficit because the need for blood is outpacing donations.

The last campus blood drive was in April and Ugent said that all of the blood units collected in that drive have already been used.

"All of our current supply was collected in April," she said. "That is all gone, we do not have one unit

Ugent said to donate one must be 16 years of age or older (16 needs a consent form) and weigh 110 pounds.

Carol Mains, a secretary for the Alternative Dispute Resolution clinic in the Law School, said she is not a frequent donor but decided to donate after a long hiatus.

"I had always had trouble in the past but I thought I'd give it a try," she said. "It's an important cause and I will do it again."

Ugent said summer incentives include baby-sitting and a variety of locations and hours to provide convenience to people on the go.

Vogler Ford is also providing free transportation to Friday's blood drive. Monty Smith, assistant sales manager for Vogler Ford said Uncle Sam will be on hand to provide free transportation for donors.

"Uncle Sam is our limo driver and we will provide a New Lincoln Town Car," he said.

Smith said Vogler Ford has been actively sponsoring blood drives twice yearly, providing the business a way to give back to the community.

Newt speaks out against Senate bill

BELIEVE IT OR NOT HOUSE SPEAKER NEWT Gingrich, R-Ga., recently spoke out on an issue many will support. Last week Gingrich rightfully condemned a Senate bill prohibiting the transmission of obscene material over computer on-line services. Granted, certain material should not be viewed by children. However, Gingrich's opposition to the bill is well justified because the bill clearly violates an adult's right to freedom of speech.

Gingrich, a long-time supporter of the First Amendment and family values claimed the bill violates adults' rights to communicate with one another without any restrictions involved.

THE SENATE'S BILL ESTABLISHES FINES OF UP TO $100,000 plus prison terms for people who "knowingly transmit" or "knowingly makes available" indecent content to someone under the age of 18. Fortunately the bill is not expected to pass the House.

On-line interactive media is a wealth of information, is highly popular in today's world and is expanding at an incredible rate. Restrictions on such valuable information and what a person can view should be the responsibility of the parents, not government officials who want to implement more restrictions on American citizens.

REPS. CHRISTOPHER COX, R-CALIF., AND RON Wyden, D-Ore., are taking a more sensible approach to the issue. Working with the Interactive Working Group, a coalition of more than 50 high-tech companies and civil liberties groups, the representatives are preparing to draft a House amendment which would allow industries to develop technology that would enable parents to control what children have access to over the Internet.

It seems as though the Senate has jumped the gun on an item that is still fairly new. The Senate has posed restrictions on an issue that is still being developed and a far greater issue than they realize. The government should allow the industries to work out all the kinks and implement restrictions where they are needed and keep their hands out of the whole affair.

The Senate's attack on the information highway is unwarranted at this point in time. The information highway is so new and developing at such a fast rate that in five years it will not be the same medium it is today. The medium should be allowed to develop at its own pace along with any restrictions it may carry along with it. The restrictions should not be imposed by a government too eager to jump on the obscenity bandwagon.

GINGRICH'S DECISION IS A WELCOMED ONE because it comes at a time when the light of freedom is slowly dimming for the average American citizen. It seems as though everything has to have government approval today. No longer are American citizens allowed the right to make their own decisions concerning how to live their lives—on-line communications being a prime example.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Commentary

Baby Richard case shows need for new laws that prevent adoption tragedies

The Los Angeles Times

Baby Richard, ripped from the only parents he had known for four years, is now in a new home with his birth parents. He is there to stay because the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal by his adoptive parents. The high court's action ends this sad custody dispute, but it does nothing to discourage these harmful tugs of war.

Such harm can be prevented by new laws that protect the child while balancing the competing rights of the biological parents and the adoptive parents. Birth parents should be allowed to change their minds, but only within a reasonable time.

Babies need stable, permanent homes. Adoption disputes should be resolved in months, not years. Speed is needed to avoid the emotional trauma that can result when a child becomes attached to adoptive parents and then is given to biological parents who, to the child, are strangers.

A good model is the Uniform Adoption Act, which was developed by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. The act, though imperfect, puts the interest of the child first. It requires both birth parents to consent to adoption. Biological mothers would have eight days to change their minds; biological fathers would have 30 days.

Fathers who could not be found immediately would have six months to contest the adoption of their child. This section of the law would resolve disputes like the messy custody case of Baby Richard.

When Richard's mother was pregnant, she was abandoned by the man who fathered the baby and she was subsequently told by one of his relatives that he had married someone else. That proved to be untrue. When the baby was four days old, she willingly gave him up, falsely saying the father was unknown. Two months later when the father reappeared, she told him that his son had been born dead. Subsequently the man learned the truth and began seeking custody.

The adopted parents told no lies, broke no laws and did nothing wrong. They had no way of knowing of the birth mother's deceit. Like all loving parents, they fought for their child. They lost; so did Baby Richard.

Baby Richard's biological parents won, but what did they really win? They got the right to raise their child, but it is really theirs after spending four years with his adoptive family?

Adoption is supposed to provide a permanent and secure home for children whose parents chose not to raise them. Adoption provides an option to abortion. Birth mothers and fathers have their rights, but the well-being of the child must prevail.

Forfeiture injustices show law's absurdity

The Washington Post

The war on drugs has accelerated the government's use of forfeiture powers, which is a healthy development. Criminal forfeiture enables the government to confiscate property used by a convicted felon in furtherance of his crime, or purchased with the proceeds of crime. Hundreds of millions of dollars a year are made available to federal, state and local governments through this process.

However, the government also has the right to invoke civil forfeiture powers to seize property with only a showing of probable cause that a crime has been committed. In these cases there is room for terrible injustice, as Rep. Henry Hyde has pointed out in a recently published book. The forward to that volume begins with the sentence: "The stories in this book will make your blood boil," and that is no exaggeration. Completely innocent people have had property taken without a hearing of any kind and faced a long and expensive legal fight to get it back.

The owner of a landscaping business, for example, was stopped at an airport because he fit the profile of a drug courier—he had paid for his ticket with cash—and $9,600 in cash that he was carrying was seized. No drugs were found and no charges were brought against the man, but the burden was on him to hire a lawyer, put up a bond of 10 percent of the property taken and prove the seizure was not justified.

A Florida scientist acquitted of felonious assault on a policeman with his BMW nevertheless had his car confiscated. Valuable real estate has been seized on the word of a tipster, even though criminal charges were not filed. And in what may be the most egregious case, a Florida sheriff and his men stopped "suspicious" cars on I-95, assumed that anyone carrying more than $100 cash was a drug dealer and confiscated the money—more than $8 million in a three-year period. Three-quarters of these drivers were not arrested or charged with a crime, and only four recovered their money.

Rep. Hyde, who is now chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, introduced legislation on Thursday to reform civil forfeiture proceedings. He would put the burden of proof on the government, eliminate the 10 percent bond, provide attorneys for poor claimants, extend deadlines and in general make the process more fair. The problem needs attention, and the Hyde bill deserves support.

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Basketball injury teaches valuable lesson about ability most of us take for granted

It was my last day of vacation, and I headed to the court to shoot some hoops. The warm, late spring day invited such physical activity and even though I'm not an athlete, I warmed up with the enthusiasm of an NBA all-star.

The game began and I played the boards with the big guys in the middle, snatching down rebounds like a budding Dennis Rodman. I went up to grab my third, and came down with my left foot pinned beneath the foot of a teammate. The opposing center landed, pushing the three of us to the ground. My body fell over, but my foot remained standing flat on the pavement.

I hobbled over to the sideline, thinking about how I hadn't sprained my ankle since I was a kid. It throbbed in time with my contracting heart, and when I removed my shoe two hours later, my foot swelled up like an airbag.

The next day, I paid a visit to Health Services. The doctor prodded my gargantuan foot, eliciting a yelp from me. An X-ray was in order, the good doctor told me. It revealed what was possibly a hair-line fracture, but he was not sure. As a precaution, he mummified my lower leg and told me I'd probably be on crutches for a month.

Perspectives

"A month?" I thought as I clumsily maneuvered home, soaked in the sweat coaxed from my body by the 95-degree sun. My schedule for that month kept me busy from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., and I was not looking forward to operating with only three limbs.

Despite having to recount my tale over and over, while listening to piteous "aw's," both friends and strangers were very helpful. Doors were held open for me, and all I had to do to get a pop was cast my eyes puppy-dog style toward the distant vending machine.

"Four weeks, only four weeks" became my mantra as I tried to ignore the pain in my amputees. My hands, stiff and blistered, refused to be comforted by the thought.

I went to my follow-up visit a week later hoping the doctor's judgment was wrong. He removed the cast, revealing my still-swollen ankle painted yellow, black and blue by this point, and poked around some more.

"Does this hurt?" he asked, squeezing. I told him no. He assured me that if it was broken, I'd be screaming in pain. He told me to stay on the crutches for another week, while slowly adding more weight to my left foot.

That evening, I cast off my crutches like a faith-healed believer, preferring a discomfiting limp to the monotonous click-clack of the crutches. With a little rehabilitation, I'd be back on the court in no time.

Once again, I can freely open doors for myself and make the frequent trips to the machine for recaffeination. The walk-home has returned to a quick 20 minutes, half the time of my crutch-assisted gait.

If my ordeal has taught me anything, it makes me appreciate the common ability to get up and walk; an ability I used to take for granted. I'm just hoping that life doesn't have any other lessons in store for me any time soon.

Burger

Albert Melone, a professor of political science, said Burger's lobbying efforts in states and Congress helped fund two research centers, which have provided statistical information used by researchers and students.

The centers, one for state courts and one for federal courts, provide statistical information such as costs, dispositions, and cases the courts deal with.

"The statistics are helpful because we can compare data with other states," Melone said.

"They give us a better understanding of how the system works."

Melone said Burger was also very interested in the administration of justice, and lobbied for more judges.

Beyler said Burger's lobbying efforts have led to more federal judges in this area, helping to keep the number of federal judges in line with the case loads.

Among his other accomplishments, Burger wrote the opinions that legally defined obscenity, established busing as a means to end segregation and required President Nixon to release the Watergate tapes.

"I have nothing against college students, just the ones that get out of hand," Gimse said.

"I like the free concerts; I just wish people would be a little more courteous," Joel Krause, who lives near Turley park, said.

Carbondale Police Community Resource officer Don Priddy said he did not think there were any major problems at Thursday's Turley Park concert until he read about them in the paper.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said two officers were scheduled to work overtime at the Turley Park concert, and because of the crowd size three more had to be brought in.

"I think we have got some real concerns about the sunset concerts," Strom said.

Strom said seven people were arrested for underage drinking on Thursday, and he believes there could have been more.

Strom said the police also received complaints about public urination and residential driveways being blocked.

Bartelsmeyer said a possible explanation for the public urination is the shortage of portable restrooms in the park. She said the board is working on getting more, but did not know if they would be there for the next concert.

Strom stressed that traffic and parking has grown immensely on the side streets, increasing the potential for pedestrian/vehicle accidents.

Strom said he believes the crowd at the Sunset concerts has grown beyond the capacity of Turley Park, and is affecting the quality of life for the residents who live near the park.

However, he said he did not think the concert had a negative atmosphere.

"We interacted with many of the people there and overall it was a very friendly crowd," Strom said.

Both Strom and City manager Jeff Doherty said they think the concerts have outgrown Turley Park, and would like to see the series moved.

"The crowd for that event has exceeded the capacity of the park," Doherty said.

Gimse said she would like to see the Turley Park concerts moved to Evergreen Terrace.

Doherty said the Sunset concerts are popular and successful events, but problems have come up that the city is concerned about.

He said the city will be monitoring the Turley Park concerts throughout the rest of the summer.

Ordinance

While Neill affirmed his support for the proposal, he would not speculate on how the whole council would vote on it.

"I know how I feel, but that is about it," he said. "We are a pretty diverse group of people up there."

The other members of the council could not be reached for comment.

The 1995 Street Machine Nationals attracted over 100,000 people last weekend to the Du Quoin State Fairgrounds, where both spectators and participants were on hand to experience the motor madness.

Hot Rods

Nationals

Campbell, from District 11 in Collinsville, said participants faced lifetime expulsion from the event if they were caught speeding, being unruly or causing trouble.

"It's been lame this year on the Fairgrounds, although there's been some intoxication and fighting arrests in the evening," Campbell said. "It's too big a risk for them [participants] to cause trouble."

"It has mostly been the locals from the 50-mile radius who come up here just to drink."

Hot weather throughout the weekend kept paramedics busy treating people for exposure, overheating, and dehydration.

Ed Swaner, a paramedic with the Franklin County Ambulance Service, said his staff encouraged passers-by to sit down, rest and apply sunscreen.

"Everything has been pretty routine as compared to three years ago with people getting hit by lightning," Swaner said. "We're just treating minor hand injuries, sprained ankles and severe sunburns this weekend."

Raymond "Rayzor" Harvey, president of Blackhawk County Street Machines from Waterloo, Iowa, attended his first Street Machine National event with his wife.

The couple drove their "Smurf blue" street machine 400 miles to show it off at the Nationals. The 1967 Anglia, a.k.a. the "Smurf Mobile", features a 2600 Ford V-6 complete chrome engine with red hoses.

"I did most of the work on it myself," Harvey said. "And it still cost nearly $14,000 overall."

Harvey said they had to pull into a stranger's garage while the homeowner was not at home to escape a hail storm they ran into on the way to the Nationals.

"No bullets were fired, but the family dog met me at the door," Harvey said.

The Blackhawk County Street Machines club has been around for 19 years and consists of 50 families, Harvey said.

The grand champion of the Pro competition, or the cars with the big, fat tires and blowers, was a 1961 Olds owned by Rick Cox of Lansing, Michigan.

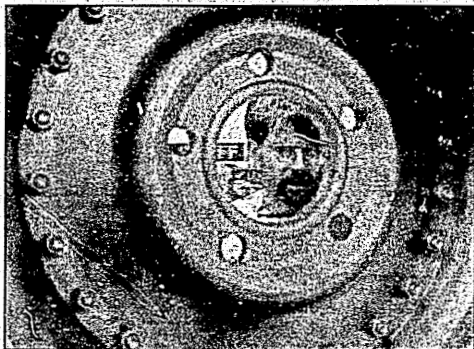

Street competition grand champion honors went to a red 1956 Ford pick-up owned by Brad Homer of Beech Bottom, W. Va.

Saturday's burn out competition was won by Jeff Salvy of Empirical, Mo., with his 1990 Black Chevy.

Sunday's burn out competition winner was Scott Lowery of Festus, Mo., with his 1980 Chevy Malibu wagon.

Scott and John Kinley, both from Chicago, put their remote control Big Foot toy truck on display Saturday.

Street Machine National participant steers his Chevy through a crowd of people waiting to see all the vehicles.

Mike Traveisted helps out in one of the free beer tents in the fairgrounds.

Mitzi Horn, from Bloomington, sprays bleach water on Main Street Saturday night so cars burn rubber as they pass. Participants in the Street Machine Nationals cruised up and down the street in Carbondale where spectators lined up to check out the vehicles.

Hot rods roll down Carbondale streets after full day of events in Du Quoin

By Dustin Coleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the events of The Street Machine Nationals wound up Friday and Saturday, an overflow of hotrods and car enthusiasts traveled from the annual event in DuQuoin to Carbondale and created a car show of their own.

Both sides of Route 13 West, from Cedarview Street to Wall Street, were crowded with on-lookers, while muscle cars and other custom automobiles did burnouts or just cruised by.

Carbondale Community Research Officer Don Priddy said that for the event, the police department took extra precautions to dealing with the crowd by adding officers on foot and on bicycles.

Priddy said a crowd estimate was unavailable.

Most of the tickets given out through the weekend were for squealing tires, Priddy said.

In which twenty-one drivers were ticketed.

Other citations were given for reckless driving (5), city ordinance violations (9), and driving under the influence (2).

When compared to Halloween, Priddy said this event, which has become annual, is much different.

"Most people at this event just want to sit around and watch the cars," he said.

Don Troyer, guest service manager at Holiday Inn in Carbondale, said the Street Machine Nationals is the hotel's biggest weekend of the year.

Though Troyer and the other hotel employees were expecting the worst, he said there were very few problems and everything went well.

"The whole weekend went smoothly," he said.

We were expecting damage to the rooms but that didn't happen.

The only thing that did happen was the noise from everyone staying up late and doing burnouts."

Joe Bilyu, a senior in biological science from Mawaqua who went to DuQuoin early in the afternoon, said the reason he came to Carbondale instead of staying in DuQuoin was because of the chaotic circumstances there.

"It was getting a little too crazy in DuQuoin," he said.

The traffic was stopped, and it took us about an hour and fifteen minutes to make a lap around town."

Bilyu said he was 15 years old when he first went to the Street Machine Nationals and he has been addicted ever since.

"It's like a disease," he said. "It comes from a total love of cars."

But Bilyu said besides the car show, the atmosphere surrounding the event is just as entertaining.

"It is like a mini Mardi Gras, without all of the beads," he said.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police

Carbondale Police said Michael J. O'Brien, 31, of Carbondale, was the victim of aggravated battery that happened in the 100 block of East College Street at 1:30 a.m. June 24.

According to police, O'Brien identified Evanell Jeffro, 27, of Carbondale, as the assailant from a photo line up.

O'Brien said Jeffro offered to sell him a dime bag of crack, and when he refused the bag, Jeffro told him to give him a pen or he would knock his head off. O'Brien said Jeffro then reached for his wallet, at which time O'Brien ran away. Police said when Jeffro caught up to O'Brien, he hit him in the head with a tree branch.

O'Brien suffered lacerations to his right eyebrow and internal bleeding in his right eye, according to police.

O'Brien was admitted to Memorial Hospital, but has been released. Police said a warrant for Jeffro will be sought.

Carbondale Police said Moraiden Yahya, 29, of 1110 E. College St., reported a burglary at her residence.

Yahya said someone climbed in an open window on the west side of her residence and took a portable Sony stereo, several articles of clothing and $367. Police have no suspects.

Carbondale Police said Joel C. Berry, 19, of 413 N. Washington St., was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol and resisting arrest at 2:09 a.m. June 25.

Officers said that while on foot patrol, they observed Berry, who appeared to be under the influence of alcohol, enter his car in the 300 block of East College. Police said Berry was then clocked by radar for speeding on the 900 block of East College and stopped outside his residence.

Police said Berry was loud and abusive and drew a crowd that refused to move away from him.

Police said several officers kept the crowd back while others arrested Berry.

Berry posted bond and was released.

University Police

University Police said someone removed a lock from a locker in the men's locker room in the Student Recreation Center June 23. The victim reported his trousers missing, which contained keys and his wallet.

His wallet contained $300 cash, an assortment of credit cards and an uncashed check. No suspects have been identified.

University Police said Bradley W. Hoskins, of Carbondale, was arrested for driving under the influence at Pleasant Hill Road and Giant City Road at 1:19 a.m. June 25. Hoskins posted bond and was released.

Seinfeld

Smith said she is interested in what respondents have to say, but she is more concerned with how they say it, and what they identify with on the show.

"Some people don't talk during the show, and when it is done they can go wash the dishes," Smith said. "I listen to their reflections — what they do and who they speak to when they are watching."

Jason Reed, a junior in political science from Robinson, participated in the study.

He said he always watches the show because it makes him laugh. "We talked for over an hour about my favorite character, Kramer, and about different stories in the show and how the ideas come out of other shows," Reed said.

Smith said she is researching ways people make sense of television (ethnomethodology).

She said she is not trying to promote the show, although she is a fan.

"I started watching the show spring of 1992, but I did not go out of my way to watch it until I came here," Smith said. "Now I am a regular and I have to tape."

"People tell me I can't do my dissertation on Seinfeld. They downgrade it (because it) is not a part of the academic community," Smith said.

"They downgrade 'Seinfeld' because it is not part of the academic community."

In addition to examining the way people understand television, Smith said she is looking at research procedures, including the use of the Internet for conducting studies.

Lenore Langsdorf, a speech communication professor, said she thinks Smith is at the forefront of a fascinating study.

"She is right in with a lot of our current research. The kind of work she is doing is interesting," Langsdorf said. "She talks about how we make sense of TV. There is an increasing amount of research on the influence of television experience and how it relates to everyday experiences."

Owner Davis' motive is just about winning

Los Angeles Times

They said he would never leave. They said he was merely negotiating through the press. They said he was simply greedy, seeking leverage for an ever richer deal.

They were wrong.

And now that the Raiders have left for Oakland, Calif., the same people who criticized the Rams for taking the money and running are criticizing Raider owner Al Davis for running away from the big money.

But most people don't understand Davis. Certainly not most people in Los Angeles. That's why he's taking his team elsewhere.

It is difficult to describe the essence of this man without resorting to all the time-worn clichés about winning. But, in the end, "Just win, baby," comes as it may sound, is not a cliché for Al Davis. It is the guiding principle of his life.

Above all else, it is the overriding reason he is going back to Oakland.

To all those who still snicker at such logic, explain the fact that Davis accepted the Oakland deal, rewarding to the Raiders as it is, over the far more lucrative Hollywood Park proposal, one that would have been one of the top two or three richest stadium deals in the National Football League. Explain the fact that Davis has willingly lowered the value of his franchise by moving it from large-market Los Angeles to small-market Oakland.

There are few, if any, owners who would have made such a move. But Davis has always been nothing more than a coach in owner's clothing.

While other owners spend their afternoons meeting with their accountants and lawyers, plotting the next increase in ticket prices, Davis prefers to spend his time on the sidelines at practice, yelling at a defensive back to keep his eye on the ball.

Davis would rather be in the locker room than the board room.

So while all his financial advisers patted him on the back in recent years and told him how much his franchise had grown in value by relocating to Los Angeles, Davis would look out at row after row of empty seats in Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum and frown.

Dominion University, there are houses even smaller.

"Jo-Jo," that's what they call him here—even now, with Smith expected to be one of the top three players selected in Wednesday's National Basketball Association draft.

When Smith is home, the phone never stops ringing. Last weekend, his relatives kept calling to coordinate travel plans.

Seventeen of them plan to attend the draft in Toronto.

Jay Johnson, the 7-year-old cousin of one of Smith's best friends, came over to play video games in Joe's room.

"He calls his name a hundred times a day," Letha said, laughing.

Inside, two large photographs Smith signed for his mother are displayed prominently in the living room, one wishing her happy birthday, the other merry Christmas.

And next to the dining-room table, dozens of plaques honoring Smith are piled up on the floor.

"When we get a new house, there's going to be a Joe Smith room," Letha said.

A new house.

It won't be long now.

Smith's first contract will be worth millions, even though the new NBA labor agreement is expected to include a rookie salary cap.

He plans to buy his mother a new home.

"It's time for her to sit back and relax," he said.

Letha bought this house when Joe was 2, bought it to escape the Norfolk projects. She raised seven children as a single parent. Joe, 19, is the youngest by 12 years, and the only one fathered by Joseph McFarland, with whom he is not close.

"It's been tough for me," Letha said. "After I was first separated (in the late 1960s), there were times when there was food for the kids, but there wasn't any for me. I never told anyone. No one ever knew about it. We just went on."

director Simon Gourdine, the players sent it back, saying they need "more time to review it," Smith said.

Nevertheless, Smith said, "The whole thing is over—the whole decertification thing is over."

Also gone, he said, is the idea put forth by the upstart players and their agents that they were agreeing to a bad deal. The major sticking point for the insurgent players was a luxury tax that, despite the raising of the salary cap and implementation of a rookie cap, would restrict payrolls and thus player movement.

"There are concerns from the players that we're now aware of, and that's why we're sending (the deal) back," Smith said.

Agents David Falk and Marc Fleisher are the prominent behind-the-scenes controllers of the movement. Among names on the petition were Michael Jordan, Patrick Ewing (both Falk clients) and Scottie Pippen. Falk also was one of the agents behind a similar player movement trying to halt a pre-pension player benefits program in 1990. Then, as now, Ewing and Jordan were among the players breaking rank with the union; then and now, union officials suspect, the agents are more concerned that player contracts, and thus their fees, will no longer keep rising.

Smith said he called "seven or eight players in a row" last week to find out why they had agreed to push for decertification. One, he said, contended that he had never signed such a petition. Another, he said, contended the union had agreed to a "messed-up" deal, and when Smith asked why he felt that way, he was told, "I don't know, my agent told me so." A few prominent names on the list, Smith said, have not been reached.

Salukis recruit six: Hairston leads crop

By Cynthia Sheets
DE Sports Editor

Saluki baseball has signed six recruits to the roster, including shortstop talent from Jerry Hairston, the son of former Pittsburgh Pirate and ChiSox player Jerry Hairston.

Three pitchers will also make contributions for the Dawgs, as right-hander Burns Mackey, left-hander Scott Schupp, and infielder/pitcher Jason Frasor also inked contracts.

Rounding out the battery and the signees is Eric Hager, a catcher from New Athens, Ill.

Hairston, a 5 feet 10 inch athlete from Naperville, Ill., was drafted in the 42nd round by the Baltimore Orioles. Hairston turned down the offer and signed with the Dawgs, a move SIUC baseball coach Dan Callahan said should be a good stepping stone.

"Jerry definitely has the ability to come in and possibly be an every-day player and contributor," Callahan said. "He has great past credentials that prove that."

Callahan said the Dawgs will need help on the mound this fall, and the three newest recruits should provide additional support.

Frasor, a shortstop/pitcher from Oak Forest, joins the Salukis straight out of high school. His list of accomplishments include being selected to the Chicago Sun-Times All-Area Team and was the Chicago Tribune's May Athlete of the Month.

"Jason's high school coach and I coached against each other at the state tournament in 1985," Callahan said. "His coach has been keeping in contact with us for the past three or four months and has been pushing for Jason to sign with us."

A righty and a lefty will also take the mound for the Dawgs, as Mackey and Schupp are also expected to fill pitching roles in the fall.

Mackey gained experience from Southeastern Illinois College, compiling a 7-0 record in his two seasons at the junior college.

"Burns has the ability to be in our top four or five pitchers," Coach Callahan said. "We're hoping he will continue to progress here with the Salukis."

Southpaw Schupp is a finesse pitcher, according to Callahan.

"If you used the old adage 'crafty left hander', he'd fit the bill," Callahan said. "He's more of a control pitcher, throwing three strikes in almost any situation."

Infielder Strauser brings his talents from Mineral Area College, where he led his team in home runs and stolen bases.

"Bringing Jason to the squad brings three of the guys from MAC that we wanted," Coach Callahan said. "Brian Vogler and Brett Horace, both of whom have signed earlier, also come from MAC."

Catcher Hager completes the roster for the Salukis, making catcher No. 4 for the Dawgs.

Hager has been an all-conference selection from his New Athens high school for three years and was named all-St. Louis area by the Illinois High School Association's Baseball Coaches Association.

"We were thinking that we would only have three catchers coming into the fall season," Callahan said. "But Eric could learn the ropes, preparing himself to be good at this level."

"We will lose some power, especially from former Salukis Braden Gibbs, Pete Schlosser,

Campus Lake, SIUC site of area's annual fishing clinic

By Eric Helbig
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Despite the decline in student enrollment for the summer at SIUC, the population at Campus Lake may increase as the Illinois Department of Conservation releases several fish into the lake, coinciding with a free fishing clinic that will take place there June 27-Aug. 11.

Greg Conover, graduate student at SIUC and the clinic's only instructor, said fishing safely, different types of fish and the way fish behave will be taught at the clinic.

"I hope to instill an interest in fishing," Conover said.

I want kids to know that it's an option as recreation."

Bill McMinn, of the office of Intramural Sports, which runs the boat dock and picnic areas, said the clinic will not interfere with college students who want to use the lake for recreation.

While this is the first year the clinic will be offered at Campus Lake, it is not new to the area.

"Last year it was at Crab Orchard," Conover said.

It was moved to Campus Lake this year so it could be more accessible to kids in the Carbondale area.

The clinic is free to participants, and all equipment, including rods, reels and bait, will be provided by the IDOC.

While Conover admits there has not been much interest in the program yet, he is optimistic that kids will attend.

"We think it's going to take off," Conover said.

We recommend signing up early, because I can only watch 15 to 20 kids at a time at most."

Conover encouraged parents to attend with their children so he can watch more kids at a time.

Participants in the program will fish for channel catfish, bluegill, and hybrid sunfish, Conover said.

Conover, an avid fisherman, said he enjoys the escape that fishing offers.

"I've been fishing all my life. I grew up fishing," he said.

"I enjoy getting out and getting away from the job."

Conover said he will be running two clinics each day, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

He added that kids are encouraged to attend more than one session.

The free fishing clinics offered by the IDOC take place in several locations in the state, Conover said. The next closest one in Southern Illinois is in Mt. Vernon.

Smith ready to play big in pros

Baltimore Sun

NORFOLK, Va. — "Get your shoes on," Letha Smith told her son.

Joe Smith frowned. "My feet won't be in the picture," he said.

The photographer concurred, and Letha reluctantly, grudgingly.

Finally, the photo session could begin.

Joe Smith wrapped his long arms around his mother, once, twice, a dozen times. His mood was light, relaxed, comfortable. Every so often, laughter filled the room.

The photographer snapped away, then asked to stand on a chair for a better angle.

"You're going to do something I used to get in trouble for doing," Joe said.

The photographer offered to take his shoes off. Letha nodded in approval.

And the session resumed. Joe Smith pulling his mother close as naturally as if he were grabbing a rebound.

Can't find the Smith house? Just look for the air conditioner that says "Joe Smith" on it. Smith got stuck one day as a kid, and used his thumb to imprint his name on the grills of the air conditioner — outside the house, and inside, too.

Seeing where he grew up in Norfolk, listening to his mother describe her struggles, the question is not why Smith decided to leave Maryland after his sophomore year.

The question is why there was even a debate. "You have to stand in a guy's shoes before you can pass judgment," said Smith's agent, Len Elmore.

Letha Smith's home is compact — one story, with three bedrooms, 2 1/2 baths. In this working-class neighborhood in the shadows of Old

NBA union executive Smith sad, confused over labor talk

Newslay

NEW YORK — The decertification movement that has threatened to overtake the NBA Players Association and snarl the talks of a new collective-bargaining agreement has been averted, union first vice president Charles Smith said. But the aftermath has left him "disappointed by the whole process."

"I don't have any gripe against the agents, I don't have any gripe against players," said Smith, the New York Knicks forward, in a telephone interview Sunday from his Connecticut home. "I'm disappointed that the players didn't see two sides of the situation, and realize that the agents were acting totally out of self-interest. The players were listening to them and not talking to us to get the real side. All we (at the union) wanted was for them to look at both sides."

Smith claims the union is not fractured, as some characterized it after a long and often contentious players' meeting in Chicago Friday. At the meeting, were most of the 100 or so high-profile players who had signed a decertification petition last week with the National Labor Relations Board.

The result of the session wasn't exactly encouraging to those who thought long-term labor peace was on the horizon: rather than approve the six-year agreement reached by the NBA and union executive N.
