HOW THE DAILY EGYPTIAN BROUGHT ME OUT OF MY SHELL

DEREK ROBBINS
Daily Egyptian

Working at the Daily Egyptian has changed me. When I first started working at the DE, I was a cripplingly shy individual who lacked confidence in himself. Now I am totally different.

What changed me were the people I work with; they became a second family to me. Here are my thanks to some of them. I am sure I forgot some and to those I apologize. "Mr. Front Page" Jeff Englehardt, for the past year you have been like a brother to me. You were the guy responsible for my hiring and someone I see myself being friends with for years to come.

Ryan Voyles, I always viewed you as a rival and that helped me strive to become better at what I do. That Carterville connection is strong.

Nick Johnson, never have I been more pleased to be right about the talent of an individual. You are an insightful, charming individual who I feel has a bright future.

Lindsey Smith, thank you for believing in my abilities and always talking me up when I would doubt myself. You will make an amazing editor-in-chief.

Luis Medina, you were my first editor and I always strived to be like you.

Diana Sollwon, you made me an editor and allowed me to learn more than I ever thought possible this semester.

J.J. Plummer you help keep the mood light and are always a blast to be around.

Travis Bean, I could not have asked for anyone better to sit alongside with on the Features desk.

So ends my time as a writer for the Daily Egyptian. I am grateful for everything.

FINAL THOUGHTS

NICK QUIGLEY
Daily Egyptian

I'll have one bit of advice to any future journalism majors, it's this: work for the Daily Egyptian as many semesters as you can.

I transferred to SIUC from John A. Logan College in fall 2008, and despite the pleas of my friend and former DE staffer Christian Holt, didn't join the paper-right away. I had my reasons, mostly thinking that between my classes and job I wouldn't have time to take on additional responsibilities.

So it wasn't until this semester, my last chance before I graduated, I took the plunge and joined the DE staff. I chose to be a bit of a guinea pig, being the first student to substitute getting paid for class credit as a type of internship. At no point did I ever regret it. In fact, I found myself wishing I had joined the first semester I could.

It's been a wonderful learning experience these last five months working on the city desk. Despite occasional setbacks of sources not returning phone calls until after deadline and realizing how many businesses refer you to "corporate" for the most trivial of information, I've picked up on many methods of information gathering I'll be able to take to whatever job I might find.

That said, I don't want to work for a newspaper. I hope to someday find myself working for an automotive magazine or website, while doing side projects about urban exploration and industrial decay on the side.

I've learned more this semester, between the DE and J. Bruce Baumann's Journalism classes, than I probably have in all my other semesters combined. So to all those even considering working for the DE, I urge you to stop thinking about it and just do it. You won't regret it.

DEAR CARBONDALE

TRAVIS BEAN
Daily Egyptian

I instead of vaguely reflecting on my college experience, I feel I should use this column to thank some very special people.

Dear cafeteria,

Thank you for the fantastic food freshman year. Nothing in my college career beats the time I bit into my chicken sandwich, only to find it was fried on the outside and completely raw on the inside.

Dear Andrew,

You were an awesome roommate. I will not, however, apologize for stuffing your drawers with packing peanuts. That was too funny.

Dear Quatros Pizza,

Thank you for introducing me to the greatest food ever: your barbecue chicken pizza and beer.

Dear random house party from freshman year, thanks for NHL '97 for Nintendo 64. My roommate and I still play it.

Dear landlords, thanks for all the mold. It really added the touch of black and green to the apartment I was looking for.

Dear Justin, I know you will never read this, because it is a newspaper, so I will just say it: Nobody likes you.

Dear friend who's name will not be mentioned, thanks for drunkenly climbing in a dumpster and making me laugh.

Finally, dear Carbondale,

Thanks for sticking with me for four years. I look back on our relationship and breaking up feels right. While you taught me a lot and introduced me to the best friends ever, I am ready to move on. Despite getting on my nerves a lot, there is a twinge of sadness and regret on my part for leaving.

Best of luck Carbondale, I will miss you.

TRAVELING TO TOMORROW

JEFF ENGLEHARDT
Daily Egyptian

The best part of writing for a newspaper is there is always tomorrow's edition.

As a young journalist, it is important to learn that lesson early and not lose sight of it. We strive for perfection in our articles, but will inevitably see something we could have done better. Lucky for us, we can try harder and look to improve in tomorrow's edition.

It's a lesson that extends beyond the pages of a student newspaper and can be learned in a university, but not in a classroom. As some of you know, there are going to be roadblocks and hurdles during a four-year journey at SIUC. So the ability to make it to the finish line often relies on not losing sight of tomorrow.

The work at a daily newspaper can often become a grind, with days lasting many times from 9 a.m. or 10 a.m. to after 10 p.m. There were times where it seemed too much to handle with schoolwork and other pressures — quitting seemed like the only option.

But the more time I spent time at the paper and gained experience, the more I realized it was not about writing the perfect article or getting the perfect grade. An edition of a newspaper, like most things in life, is a team effort. It became important to strive for perfection not because of the fear of mistakes, but for the benefit of those I worked with.

The Daily Egyptian became about the photographers, writers and editors. It was easy to not lose sight of that as I walked past a small tree outside the Communication Building everyday that served as a reminder to do the best I could for my coworkers and not for the "perfect clip."

A lot has changed in my life during the four years here at SIUC. As I prepare to take the next step, it is the lesson of just trying to do better tomorrow and not losing sight of what is really important that I will carry.

So to all my fellow seniors at SIUC, try to keep the future tough times in perspective. There could be struggles to get a job, to afford a new apartment or to continue a relationship, but remember one lesson.

Try your best to write a better story for your tomorrow and good things will start to come.

In the Semester in photos edition of the DAILY EGYPTIAN, the outline for the following photo should have read as follows, the DAILY EGYPTIAN regrets this error.

Freshman thrower Kim Fortney practices discus May 6, behind Lew Hartzog Track. Throws coach John Smith said joining a nationally ranked team can sometimes be intimidating for freshmen athletes. Fortney, along with other freshmen track athletes, are on the brink of finishing their first collegiate season.
