Manager to boost business

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The first Carbondale Main Street downtown manager says he plans to tap the city's diverse population to boost business and encourage historical preservation.

Though he arrived in town just two weeks ago, Joel Fritzier said he is impressed with Carbondale and its residents.

Joel Fritzier

"There's a lot of diversity here — every range of political thought," he said. "There seems to be community spirit and partnerships between government, business owners, private citizens and civic organizations."

The Carbondale City Council voted March 19 to create a downtown manager position in an effort to give the city's business district a facelift.

Fritzier is now finishing his master's thesis in rural community development from Illinois State University at Normal. His thesis is based on his development work in the Northern Illinois communities of Washburn, Wenona and Lacon.

The first community event Fritzier is planning is September Nights on Sept. 26-27, an arts festival co-sponsored by Carbondale Community Arts. South Illinois Avenue merchants will have a sidewalk sale during the festival, he said.

Linda White, Carbondale Main Street president, said Fritzier will manage the business facade loan program, which allows business owners to improve their storefronts and the downtown flower gardens. She said Fritzier also will coordinate Carbondale Main Street's four committees. Main Street has committees on membership and organization, promotions, economic restructuring and design.

The Illinois Main Street program was started in 1993 by Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra to revitalize towns with populations under 50,000. Fritzier said there are 23 towns now participating. Carbondale pays for its Main Street projects with program dues, donations and fundraisers and with its Special Service Area property tax that the City Council approved in March.

An extra 56 cents per $100 of assessed value is added to the taxes of those owning property along South Illinois Avenue, White said. The area is bordered by Grand Avenue to the south and Oak Street to the north. Owner-occupied, single-family homes are exempt.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said if Carbondale Main Street is successful, citizens will see things happening downtown.

Max Austin, a junior in administration of justice from Bolingbrook, practices his volunteer firefighting skills at the Makanda Township Fire Department.

Student balances school with job as volunteer fireman

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

Sitting in class listening to his professor, Max Austin tries to concentrate on the lecture. But the silence in class is shattered when a loud beep comes from his pager, and he runs out of class.

As a volunteer firefighter for Makanda and Carbondale townships, this is a regular occurrence for Austin, a junior in administration of justice from Bolingbrook.

"My beeper is pretty loud," he said. "If it goes off in class, I try to quiet it, and then I have to run out of class to listen to it. Students start to look at you, and the professor is mad because you took attention away from the lecture."

Austin laughs at the idea of being considered a hero, but as a volunteer and a full-time student with 18 credit hours, some might say he fits the stereotype of Superman. But to his close friends, he tries to be a regular guy.

"A lot of people think what I do is cool and I'm some sort of Superman, but I'm just a firefighter and a student," he said. "I'm an ordinary person with a special knowledge about something."

Austin has volunteered at the Makanda Township Fire

Department for three years. He joined the Carbondale Township Fire Department nine months ago.

Jim Bilderback, a volunteer firefighter in Makanda, said Austin fit in as soon as he walked into the department.

"He was so enthusiastic," Bilderback said. "He even brought his own bunker gear. He fits in like a piece to a puzzle."

Looking around the fire house, Austin does seem to fit perfectly like that piece. He owns his own fire gear and hangs his backpack next to the row of helmets in the house.

Austin, whose father and brother are also firefighters, said he does not have trouble separating his volunteer work, his school and his college lifestyle.

"Other people use their extra time to watch television," he said. "During that extra time, I am a firefighter. I have a bad habit of taking on more than I can handle, but I try to sort it out. I know what I'm going to do, and that's why I am in school."

As a volunteer, Austin is required to carry a beeper that informs him of fire calls. He said he has to use careful judgment before he decides to leave class.

"If I'm taking a test, I'm not going to get up and leave," he said.

Law student asks for re-admission

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC law student met with Law School officials in a closed hearing Wednesday to discuss re-admission to the school after he was forced out of the school this summer.

Kristopher K. Kilgore, a second-year law student from Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., had an appeal hearing to try to resolve his expulsion from the school. Kilgore has been in the School of Law since fall 1995.

Court records state Kilgore received a letter Aug. 16 from Thomas Guernsey, dean of the SIUC School of Law, stating that his admission to the law school had been rescinded because Kilgore allegedly had a warrant out for his arrest.

Officials also wrote in the letter that Kilgore allegedly did not disclose convictions of previous crimes on question 15 on his fall 1995 law school application, which asked, "Have you ever been convicted of a crime, other than a minor traffic violation?"

Alfred E. Sanders Jr., Kilgore's attorney, said he could not discuss the specifics of the hearing or of Kilgore's case at this time.

According to the fall 1996 School of Law application, question 15 now states, "Have you ever, either as an adult or a juvenile, been cited, arrested, charged or convicted for any violation of any law?"

School of Law officials could not be reached for comment on why the

Poe may have died from rabies, doctor now says

BALTIMORE—When Edgar Allan Poe died in this town in 1849, newspapers gave the cause of death as "congestion of the brain" and "cerebral inflammation," archaic terms that suggest doctors had no definitive explanation but believed Poe's death was related to a severe neurological disorder.

Now Dr. R. Michael Benitez's fresh review of the case tends to support the idea that, in the last four days of his life, Poe's central nervous system was under attack by the viral disease rabies.

Joanie Foster, owner of Joanie's concession adds flour to her cinnamon roll mix.

Recipe popular with both famous and everyday people

By Annette Barr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Standing next to a commercial-sized mixer in her fire-engine red apron, white lace beret and dangling apple earrings, Joanie Foster mixes her family recipe of her famous cinnamon rolls.

"We have a motto here at Joanie's, 'Where everything is fresh and tasty,'" Foster, the owner and founder of Joanie's, says.

This is the seventh year Foster has taken Joanie's, a mobile food concession, to the Murphysboro Apple Festival. She serves sandwiches, fries, lemon shake-ups and cinnamon rolls.

After working in food service for the school district in her hometown of Decatur, Foster applied what she learned to her concession business.

Since she started the business 14 years ago, the 52-year-old Foster has become well known for her homemade cinnamon rolls and hamburger buns, not only in Murphysboro, but among country music singers as well.

Over the years, Foster has taken her concession to country music festivals and concerts in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Florida. Standing below her wall of fame covered with more than 20 autographed pictures, Foster said, "I've fed all of these people, except for Reba. My granddaughter is the prettiest star up there."

Foster points to the picture of country band Brooks and Dunn, which reads, "To Joanie, Thanks. Nice Buns."

"Brooks and Dunn sent down a note after their show for two cinnamon rolls," Foster said. "A little while later, I got a note that said, 'six cinnamon rolls — Brooks and Dunn.' Then later I got a note, '25 cinnamon rolls, boxed and ready. The bus leaves at 8.'"

Foster said she usually is too busy to get a chance to meet many of the country music stars she feeds, but she did get to meet one of her favorite performers.

While working at a Randy Travis show, a woman working backstage asked Foster if she would like to meet Travis.

"I said, 'Oh, let me get out of here,'" Foster said. "I threw the old access pass on, and boom, boom, boom, we were back there. It was so exciting."

Foster said it does not matter if people are famous or if they are everyday people. She said they still like good, homemade food.

GPSC wants voice in grad program cuts

By Christopher Miller
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"We are probably underfunding the SPC. This resolution acknowledges that we are willing to contribute more."

Paul LeBlanc,
GPSC vice president for graduate school affairs

The Graduate and Professional Student Council voted Wednesday to demand a voice for graduate students in the process of reviewing SIUC's graduate programs for possible modification or elimination.

Monty Peerbhai, a GPSC representative, said he authored the resolution urging that the Graduate Council, which is made up of graduate faculty members, be given every opportunity to participate in the process. Peerbhai said it is not clear if graduate students will have any input.

"All this resolution is saying is give us a vote," he said at Wednesday's GPSC meeting. The Illinois Board of Higher Education, in accordance with the board's Priorities, Quality and Productivity Initiative, will review all 87 SIUC graduate programs.

Programs will be evaluated according to criteria including student demand, job placement, University cost and time to obtain a degree.

Since November 1992, 36 SIUC graduate programs have been eliminated as a result of the initiative. IBHE officials have expressed concern that some graduate programs have low enrollment and graduation rates, while other programs graduated more students than the job market can accommodate.

A University report to IBHE is due in August 1997. By mid-spring, University officials said they will have identified programs in the report that fail to meet IBHE criteria.

Jack McKillip, associate dean of the Graduate School, said the last IBHE review eight years ago studied those criteria but did not make recommendations.

"I think this time, recommendations will be made," he said.

He said programs that use the review as an opportunity to evaluate their programs will benefit from the study.

McKillip said IBHE also wants the University to examine graduate tuition waivers.

McKillip said though only a small fraction of undergraduate students receive tuition waivers, about two-thirds of graduate students receive some form of waiver.

"Graduate education is more expensive than undergraduate education," he said. "That's appropriate because graduate students in turn contribute to undergraduate education."

In other business, GPSC reached a compromise on Student Programming Council funding by setting a ceiling of $11,500 on GPSC's allocation to the programing council.

Paul LeBlanc, GPSC vice president for graduate school affairs, said GPSC allocated $5,000 in operational budget and $2,700 in specific event funding last year.

He said the resolution sets a limit of $11,500 for all funding to SPC by the council for this year until the SPC Advisory Committee determines how to fund the programming council.

Jan Jacobs, graduate council representative, said the $18,000 originally requested by SPC amounts to 25 percent of GPSC's budget. She said if GPSC were to allow such a drastic increase in SPC's funding, other programs that GPSC funds would have to be cut.

SPC total budget last year was $130,000.

It requested $18,000, or 14 percent of its total budget, from GPSC because 14 percent of the student body is graduate students.

LeBlanc said GPSC's allocation to SPC was probably low in the past, and he said GPSC is taking steps to correct that.

"We were probably underfunding them," he said. "This resolution acknowledges we are willing to contribute more."

A misunderstanding cannot be solved by senseless violence

THERE WAS AN ALLEGED INCIDENT LAST Friday night that proves that some people need help when it comes to their problem-solving skills. This incident comes in the form of a story.

Once upon a time there were two female SIUC students who were entertaining a friend at their apartment. Well, this friend proceeded to get into an argument with an unknown man who, after a few verbal bashings, left the premises extremely angry. And if this would have been a perfect world, the incident would have been over and everyone involved could have gotten on with their lives. But this is not a perfect world, so our tale takes a turn for the worst.

This unknown man, who apparently had to prove just how manly he was to the two female students, allegedly returned to the females' apartment with his manly friends and proceeded to trash the home of the two women as they sat and watched in fear. Then, when someone came to help those students in distress, the big strong men proved their warrior like skills by running off into the night like roaches in the light.

The moral of the story: Be careful what you say to strangers, because one of those strangers only may know how to solve their problems with violence.

Is this really what the world is coming to? Are there still people like this out there who are so immature that the only way they know how to deal with a situation, any situation, is violence? Given this scenario, it would seem so.

The fact that this escalated the way it did only proves that some people do have a problem when it comes to dealing with other people. There is never any justification for such an immature display of violence.

WHAT IS THE THOUGHT PROCESS THAT GOES through such people's heads? Do they actually think getting friends and destroying someone's home is a good solution. And if so, how have such people gotten this far without getting arrested?

Granted, so far everyone has only heard one side of this story. Christina Maxedon, a senior in radio/television, and Jessica Greenwald, a senior in marketing, have told the police what they say took place.

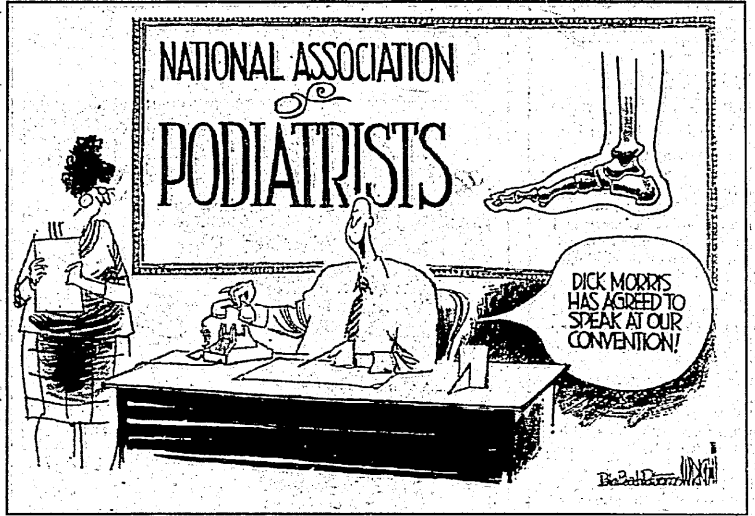

According to them, and as mentioned above, they were at their apartment when someone at their residence became involved in a verbal argument with a man who came back with some friends who trashed their home.

However, because this man has not come forward — and who would want to come forward after something like this? — and because the police have not identified anyone and have no suspects, this one side of the story is all there is to go by.

It is probably safe to say that there are many people who would love to hear this unknown man's side of the story. And Maxedon, Greenwald and the police probably have a few things they would like to say to him as well.

But what can be said about this kind of behavior. It only brings about a quiet sadness that reminds people that no matter how far we get as a society, some people will never get over their immaturity.

This type of behavior is typical in children, but the men allegedly involved here were so-called adults. Or at least they possess the bodies of adults. From their alleged behavior last week, it almost shows that these individuals never bothered growing up mentally. And if bets were being placed, odds are that they never will. Or they at least have a long, long way to go.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Forest Service doing bad job

Once again, that pesky U.S. Forest Service is back. The Bell Smith Springs area (or Opportunity Area 6), is due to be logged with the blessings of the Forest Service. Last year at this time, federal Judge J. Phil Gilbert ruled that the forest plan is to be revised by the Forest Service and in the meantime, no timber sales are to be released. However, projects considered "ecological restoration" would be considered.

The Forest Service intends to punch in new logging roads and cut and burn areas above ridge tops, near springs and creeks and next to campsites and picnic areas. Does that sound like "ecological restoration" to you?

These sales make up the largest cuts and clear cuts (clear cuts were supposed to be outlawed in Shawnee in 1992). It also is another below-cost timber sale. These sales will cost taxpayers over $500,000. The cutting and burning practices they plan to use are an attempt to eliminate non-native pines and regenerate native hardwood species. However, 3,200 acres of the 3,400 acres of pine they intend to cut have been found to be native species, according to legislation passed by former President Carter. They also are state-endangered, so the projects may be illegal.

Because the Forest Service won't give up on practicing bad science, they have been taken back to court. In the meantime, logging companies, one being Westvaco, can move in at their convenience.

This area is facing irreversible ecological damage. The springs and creeks are threatened with siltation and sedimentation from erosion.

And the critics, specifically the pine warbler, will lose their critical habitat. This is a loss/lose situation, and it's time we recognize that the Forest-DisService is manipulating facts and ripping off the public.

This is the big one, folks, and if we don't start to get involved with the protection of our forests, we won't have any forests left to protect! Call the Forests Service at 1-800-MY-WOODS and give them your viewpoint. Even better, contact the Student Environment Center on campus (549-7387) and help organize against the largest cut in the Shawnee. There will be an action Wednesday to protest the Forest Service's timber policies. Meet at 11 a.m. at the north end of the Student Center.

Different kinds of racism do exist

Editor's note: Because of an editing error, this letter did not run in its entirety in yesterday's Daily Egyptian. We are reprinting the entire letter as a service to our readers. We apologize for any inconvenience or confusion this may have caused.

Tim Lewis's condemnation in the Daily Egyptian (Sept. 8) as a "sick idea" that black people "cannot be racist, because they are oppressed," deserves comment. The notion that there is something "sick" about black anger against whites is like saying that there is something "sick" about Jewish anger against Nazis. Perhaps the difference between black and Jewish anger is that white America's history of slavery, lynching, Jim Crow segregation, rape of black women and police brutality lasted more than 300 years, while the Nazi persecution of Jews lasted 12 years.

Implicit in Mr. Lewis's statement is that white and black biases in this country are somehow morally equivalent. By the same token, is the Jewish bias against Nazis morally equivalent to Nazi bias towards Jews?

White people enslaved blacks; white Americans legalized apartheid in the form of Jim Crow laws that date back to 1896 and white people employed lynching and police brutality as forms of organized terror and murder throughout every region of this country. Not every white American participated in racism; neither did every German participate in the construction of concentration camps. But to suggest that there is moral equivalency between white and black racism is as absurd as suggesting that there is a moral equation between Jewish hatred of Nazis and Nazi racism. It just doesn't wash historically.

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 350 words. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Ph.D.s should pay their own way

Ph.D. programs have become an inefficiency in promoting higher education and intellectual advancement. The value of the degree and the cost of its acquisition are related problems that deserve examination.

The Ph.D. does not necessarily make graduate students better teachers or researchers. Within universities, however, having a Ph.D. is an absolute requirement for faculty employment, and as a result, a sort of exclusive 'professorial fraternity' has taken root. Capable teachers, scholars and researchers are unwisely being excluded from universities simply because they lack a Ph.D., not because they are inept scholars.

The nature of any fraternity or union is growth; consequently, a surplus of Ph.D.s exist given the need for the type of work that they do. Surplus creates vicious competition between professors vying for intellectual recognition, forcing useless scholarship in the name of progress.

The problem is at its worst in the humanities, with Ph.D.s establishing their entire careers on the study of the great literary, artistic or philosophical works of others. Wouldn't it be far better if these so-called scholars added to society's treasure with their own great literature, art or philosophy instead of scavenging off others by telling us what the great work really means, over and over and over again shamelessly contradicting one another?

How many scholarly interpretations of "Hamlet" are necessary before someone realizes that "Hamlet" has no definitive meaning — that its meaning varies with the personality and life experience of the reader? Current scholarly writings are undertaken simply because of professorial frat-member pressure, not because of any particular need to understand a given work better.

THE LAST WORD

—by jeff howard

The same problem exists in the sciences, too. It just doesn't seem as bad because the Ph.D.s speak in jargon, so we fools trained to understand English, simply don't know what the hell is going on in their publications. Have you ever tried to read an article in the journal Science? A typical sentence looks like this: "The standard deviation of variable x is unaccounted for in relation to the mean of all uncorrelated results." Yea, right. But why can't a motivated scientist with an M.S. write that garble instead of a Ph.D.?

There is little a motivated scholar with a master's degree cannot do that an equally motivated Ph.D. can do. The master's degree already consists of a couple of years of area concentration. After that, additional learning could be self directed. The time normally spent pursuing a Ph.D. would be better spent working or apprenticing in a chosen field. Besides saving time, the aspiring scholars would save themselves and taxpayers a lot of money.

After all, tuition at public schools such as SIUC amounts to only a small portion of the total cost of the education; state taxpayers make up the difference! So the argument that Ph.D. programs are simply part of the cost of higher education does not hold because college students choose to attend college while taxpayers are obligated to foot the bill. And if taxpayers must foot the bill, they should be assured that their money is being wisely spent. Let's face it: in a couple of years we will be the taxpayers. Shouldn't we be concerned?

Don't get me wrong. If people want to earn Ph.D.s, then let them. But let them do it at a private school where they will pay for it and not taxpayers.

The effect of public schools not granting Ph.D.s would be the destruction of the professorial fraternity because very few people could justify the expense of the degree. Consequently, more opportunities would be made available to job candidates based on teaching ability, writings and research experience and not the artificial merit of a Ph.D.

Mr. Pink was right. For those of you who haven't seen Quentin Tarantino's "Reservoir Dogs," Mr. Pink was a gangster who refused to chip in for an obligatory tip to a diner waitress who only provided average service. Pink rightfully pointed out the double standard of automatically tipping waiters and waitresses but giving nothing to fast food workers slaving away in a pool of grease for minimum wage.

He could have expanded his tipping argument to other professions, but he didn't. The movie was about stealing diamonds and extreme violence, after all, so there wasn't much room for a good discussion on tipping.

employees — at least those at stores that sell kegs — to the list of neglected folks who deserve tips. I'm not pushing this because I happen to work at a liquor store and want more money. I'm pushing it because it's an injustice.

It really is. It's a custom for people to tip workers who carry a pizza weighing a pound or two up to their doors. I, on the other hand, wheel a 170-pound keg of beer to a car and lift it in, receiving only a "thanks" — if I'm lucky.

C'mon, now! You go in and buy five kegs of cheap beer. I know you're probably going to sell cups for $3 a pop and end up with a nice fat profit. And you won't even give me a tip. If I was bringing you a steak at a restaurant, you'd end up giving me 15 percent of what it cost — unless you don't mind looking like a tightwad. I don't even want 15 percent. I'd just like a buck or two for breaking my back for you.

I know that tipping theoretically exists to give motivation to workers so they really hustle to provide good service. People give bartenders an extra dollar so they can get faster service next time. You might be wondering how this would apply to liquor store workers and, yeah, that's a good point. But does this motivation exist for pizza drivers or flower delivery people? Nope. They get tipped just because it's a tradition and maybe because people feel sorry for them because they don't get paid. We keg people deserve to be a part of this, too.

the question was changed. Court records state that Kilgore first received a letter from Associate Dean W. Eugene Basanta on July 1 requesting a description of all criminal arrests or charges against him between 1979 and 1996. Records indicate Kilgore was supposed to respond to this letter by July 9, but did not, and a new request date was set for July 17. The court records state Kilgore did respond by the July 17 date, and Kilgore stated that each of the questions on his Law School application were answered truthfully. The records show that on Kilgore's application, he disclosed two DUI convictions in 1984 and in 1989, but the Law School officials listed a record of a conviction after 1989. So Kilgore had to respond to that charge again by July 22. Records indicate that Kilgore responded by July 22 in a letter, which stated that he had not had a conviction after 1989. The school told him to respond again because officials had found an arrest after 1989. Kilgore responded in a letter dated Aug. 9 that he mistakenly thought his second arrest date was 1989, but Basanta corrected him that it was 1991. "However, the fact remains that I have had two convictions, both of which were revealed on my application," Kilgore stated in a letter to the school. "I have made no attempt to conceal any personal information requested of me." According to court records, Kilgore filed a petition for a restraining order to let him back in the school, but the order was denied by Jackson County Judge David Watt Jr. earlier this semester. School of Law officials said they cannot comment on a student's personal matters. Sanders said law school officials will make a decision on whether Kilgore will be readmitted to the school by next Wednesday. Kilgore said he could not comment at this time.

Navy workers discover 300-year-old bones

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON—In 1918, a Navy engineer digging a foundation for barracks in Connecticut stumbled upon some bones in a shallow grave at what is now the U.S. Naval Submarine Base in New London. The bones were the remains of two Indians who had died about 300 years earlier, perhaps in a skirmish between the rival Mohegans and Pequot tribes. Bronze arrowheads were imbedded in the right hip of one and the lower spine of the other. Everything was shipped to Washington to become part of the largest collection of its kind in the United States, the Smithsonian's repository of American Indian bones. After 80 years, the bones will be shipped back to Connecticut, as the Smithsonian and other institutions comply with federal laws requiring the return of the 100,000 sets of American Indian remains held by the nation's museums, art galleries and historical societies. The national repatriation effort is required by measures approved by Congress in 1989 and 1990 aimed at healing old wounds by recognizing tribal claims to the remains and reversing a century-old practice of collecting them for scientific study. The scientists must confirm that they are from the tribe requesting them, a painstaking process that sometimes means having anthropologists examine skulls for tribal characteristics or pouring over ancient maps, letters and colonial records that describe fluid tribal boundaries. Smithsonian researchers have concluded they could be either Pequot or Mohegan. They're slated to be returned eventually to a joint group of Mohegan and Pequot representatives and reburied in a mutually agreed upon place.

Because students have flexible schedules, they make good volunteers, Bildtback said.

"Many of the volunteers have full-time jobs and cannot leave," he said. "Students are available a lot of the time because they have space in their day. If they need to skip a class, they can."

Austin is required to occasionally spend the night in the fire house. The room has one bed, a television, a video recorder and some chairs. There usually is no one else around, and he said he relishes the quiet time in the fire house.

"I bring some books here and try to study when I can," he said.

Austin said the one precious commodity he tries to protect is sleep. He said it is not unusual for him to spend 24 hours awake with the help of some Mountain Dew.

"I was in bed, and we had a call at 1 a.m.," he said. "And I got back at 2 a.m. I went to bed around 3 a.m. and had to get up in 4 hours and get ready for class."

Kevin Barry, a junior in admin-

"A lot of students come here for education and tear up the town, but I feel like I'm giving something back."

Max Austin, Volunteer firefighter

stration of justice from Chicago, is one of Austin's roommates.

"He does a real good balancing job," Barry said. "I respect the balance he finds between time and his dedication to the job."

Austin said he pretty much retires the firefighter mantle during weekends.

He said if a call goes out on a Saturday night, the other volunteers know he probably will not respond.

"During the week, they know they can count on me," he said. "You can't let that pager run your life. Otherwise, it won't be fun."

Austin does admit he has to step inside the firefighter uniform occasionally when he is near SIUC.

He said when he was a freshman, a fire broke out on the 13th floor of Ncely Hall in Brush Towers, and he ran up the stairs to help. He said as he climbed the stairs, everyone started to yell at him to go back.

"I kept on saying 'I'm a fireman, I'm a fireman!,'" he said. "But as I climbed the stairs, I could not see through the smoke. I'm not stupid. I got out of there. It was not my place to be there."

Even though he almost has fallen through a burning mobile home in Carbondale and has had a life-threatening leak in his air pack during training, Austin is not discouraged from keeping the volunteer job and balancing it with school.

"I would not give it up for the world," he said. "A lot of students come here for education and tear up the town, but I feel like I'm giving something back."

"I can't imagine an Apple Festival for the past five or six years without Joanie here," Fiorino said.

"Whenever I walk up there, she always wants to know if I've eaten."

"I think she really does it because she enjoys it. She's always concerned about other people. That's the one thing that's always impressed me."

Foster said she works hard to please people because that is what makes her happy. She said she looks forward to returning to the Apple Festival each year. "It's because of Southern hospitality," Foster said. "I believe if there's any Southern hospitality, it's in Southern Illinois."

The Apple Festival runs through Sunday.

Carnival to bring craziness

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Both underage students in need of a Friday night get away and non-traditional students with families can find an evening of fun and adventure at the 16th annual Carnival of Craziness.

The Carnival of Craziness begins at 7 p.m. tonight in the Student Center. Activities include live performances from the Infrared Rockers, a reggae band from St. Louis; comedian Cary Long and palm readings. There also will be a rap contest, a coffeehouse and a mystery hunt for children.

While the carnival appeals to people of all ages, Amy Benton, a graduate assistant for Student Programming Council, said she hopes to see more underage students at the carnival.

"People are always complaining about having nothing to do," Benton said.

"The carnival is a good showcase of what SPC can do, and it gives the students something to do on campus."

Palm readers Dorothy and Carolee from Evansville, Ind., will be at the festival to entertain students. Dorothy said she and Carolee have been involved in readings since 1971 when they both began to study astrology.

The process of reading palms gives the reader a chance to see a person's potential, Dorothy said. "Palm reading tells what kind of energy you have," Dorothy said. "It tells whether you are an industrious person or the kind of person who props up your feet on a table and watches TV and says, 'bring me a beer.'"

Dorothy said the cost of the readings is included in the $2 admission price. Readings last about 15 minutes per person.

Benton said one of the goals of the carnival is to provide an evening of entertainment that will bring all kinds of people together.

That is one of the main concerns of Kalimu Endesha, the percussionist for the Infrared Rockers.

Endesha said he wanted the band to show that people can be united.

"We want people to think positively and know that there is hope that people can come together," Endesha said. "We emphasize the positive and hope that people feel good."

Endesha said reggae more than any other kind of music can unite people because it is based on a reality of hard times that everyone can identify with.

"Reggae is about life," Endesha said. "Life in Jamaica is hard. There is no welfare or food stamps, and people have to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps."

The Carnival of Craziness is not just for traditional students but also has activities for non-traditional students and their families, Michelle Kahler, the Assistant Program Director of Student Development, said.

Kahler said the carnival will have a mystery hunt for children. The Saluki mascot will be missing and it will be up to the junior sleuths to find him, she said.

"The kids will be provided with one clue that will lead them to the second person and another clue," Kahler said.

"All the letters spell out where the Saluki dog is. Each person giving out clues will be dressed in costumes such as a ghost or Frankenstein."

There will be prizes for the kids and a "Goosebumps" video presentation, Kahler said.

The Carnival of Craziness is at 7 and lasts until midnight in the Student Center. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. Admission is $2.

Loggers halted at Shawnee Forest

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Officials of two logging companies contracted to log a portion of the Shawnee National Forest say their companies may not fulfill their contracts because of economic concerns and local opposition to logging.

Hardwood Survey Stakes, of Hoylton was under contract from the U.S. Forest Service to cut 258 acres of pine trees near Bell Smith Springs National Natural Landmark in Pope County.

Herschel Kasten, president of the company and SIUC graduate in agriculture, said the market for pine tree sales has dwindled, vandalism to his equipment has occurred and lawsuits that have been filed against the Forest Service have been factors in his decision not to cut down the pine trees.

Kasten had $200,000 invested in equipment from several years ago when the timber sale was first going to be cut.

But in summer 1994, the timber sale was stopped by environmental activists' protests and lawsuits, Kasten said.

"I don't want to fight this thing," Kasten said.

"If people don't want me in there, I don't want to pay the price." Although some equipment purchased was able to be sold, he said he has not been able to recover his costs completely.

"It is frustrating and aggravating when you do not know what you have going from day to day," Kasten said.

"The Forest Service can let it rot. That's my attitude now."

Officials with the U.S. Forest Service said the pine trees need to be cleared to allow the regeneration of hardwood forest.

They said softwoods such as pine grow more quickly than hardwoods, blocking the sunlight that the hardwoods need in order to grow.

John Wallace, environmental educator at SIU Touch of Nature, said the Forest Service renamed the plan "ecological restoration" in order to justify below-cost timber sales.

"The Forest Service had already planned on cutting the pines before they called it ecological restoration," Wallace said. "It's just a way to package timber cutting so it will sound good on the surface."

Another logging company, H.N. Wood Products of Golconda, owned by Glen Hobbs, is under contract to cut 205 acres of the area.

But the company's attorney said H.N. is trying to decide whether or not the contract can be performed. "We are looking at a company who has incurred very substantial losses due to Forest Service actions", Gary Stevens, a Washington D.C. attorney specializing in federal timber law, said.

Since the timber sale was suspended in the fall of 1993, Glen Hobbs, the owner of H.N., had to default on some major contracts, lay off employees and liquidate equipment, Stevens said.

The sale was suspended because of a federal judge's order that the Forest Service must do additional environmental analysis of the area. Therefore, Stevens said the company is considering a possible lawsuit against the Forest Service.

As of this point, Becky Banker, the service public affairs officer, said service officials have had no loggers tell them that the loggers want out of their contracts.

Banker said the loggers still have valid contracts.

Brent Logging, of Rosiclare, has a contract for 220 acres, although the company's owner, Dale Brent, said he has no comment right now regarding his decision to renew his contract with the Forest Service.

Kristen Kordecki, a senior in photography from Carbondale and a member of the SIUC Student Environmental Center, said students at the center are on alert because they believe the logging should not take place. The biggest backing the group can have is from the students at the University, Kordecki said.

She said the group does not agree with logging Bell Smith Springs because it is public land that will incur irreversible damages from the cut.

Murray State is coming off a 44-41 overtime loss against Western Kentucky that snapped the Racers' 11-game home winning streak.

The Racers ended their 1995 undefeated season with a first-round loss in the Division I-AA playoffs to Northern Iowa. This season, the Racers have received a No. 9 spot in the Division I-AA national rankings. SIUC may not share the same notoriety as Murray State, but Saluki Coach Shawn Watson said his Dawgs do share a lot of similarities, with Houston Nutt's Racers.

"I think when you look at Murray State and look at our defense, you're looking in a mirror at each other," Watson said. "Run wise, we are probably real close to being the same. Offensively, you look at the formation philosophy and the use of personnel — you look yourself in the mirror.

"We run the zone scheme, they run the zone scheme. In the running game we run the counter, and they run the counter."

Last season, the Racers held the Salukis to 182 all-purpose yards — with only 23 yards on the ground.

This time, Watson said the Salukis "will do whatever it takes to win."

"This year, we've been able to expand our package to what we hoped it would be," he said. "We're a little bit more solid with what we're doing in philosophy."

Watson agreed that Murray State will be a big challenge, but he said he will not let the outcome of the game, whether it is won or lost, influence the entire season.

"You don't put a whole season on a ballgame — especially this early," Watson said.

Tomorrow's kickoff is at 7 p.m. at Roy Stewart Stadium.

Spikers begin league action

Compiled by DE Sports Staff

Swim teams hit open water at Little Grassy Lake

SIUC Women's Volleyball Coach Sonya Locke says her young team is not too concerned that its first conference game of the season is on the road tonight. "Nothing can change where it is we have to play," Locke said. "We try not to eye make road trips an issue because we have to do it."

Teams from the Missouri Valley Conference begin league action this weekend. The Salukis will square off against conference nemesis Northern Iowa tonight in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

"Northern Iowa is a very good team, and they proved that last year," senior defensive specialist Becky Chappell said. "For us to win, we have to play them consistent, or they are going to put us in our place."

Saturday, the Salukis square off against the Bradley Braves at 7 p.m. in Peoria. Last season, SIUC defeated Bradley both at home and on the road.

"Wherever we play, we try to make the gym our home," senior middle blocker Jodi Revorai said. "The size and shape of the court and the net's height are the same."

Tonight's match begins at 7.

Other Saluki weekend sports events follow:

The SIUC men's and women's swim teams dive into competition Saturday at Little Grassy Lake for an open-water event.

"Some of our swimmers are really ready, and others have no idea what it's about because they have never done a swim like this," Men's Swim Coach Rick Walker said.

Kansas has won the event the past two years, but SIUC has had some strong finishes in each event including Diana Roberts, who finished second two times, and on the men's side, Liam Weseloh, who won the race last year.

The open water meet will start at 9 a.m. at Little Grassy's south beach. The race also will end at the south beach.

Men's golf team hopes to finish strong at invitational

First year Men's Golf Coach Leroy Newton leads the hackers to the Northern Iowa Invitational Sunday for its second tournament of the year.

Newton's team, which consists of eight members — six freshmen and two juniors — none of whom are returnees from last season, finished in the bottom of the pack in last week's Union Planters Bank Invitational.

"We had too high of scores," Newton said about placing 12th of 12 teams. "It was just a matter of getting their feet wet."

Although water and low golf scores are mutually exclusive, the team had an entire week to think about the finish and work on scoring more birdies, less bogeys and an eagle or two.

The men's golf team has never played the course in Waterloo, Iowa, and will not be able to get a practice round in before the tournament, putting them at a slight disadvantage against the field that includes few Big Ten and Big Eight schools.

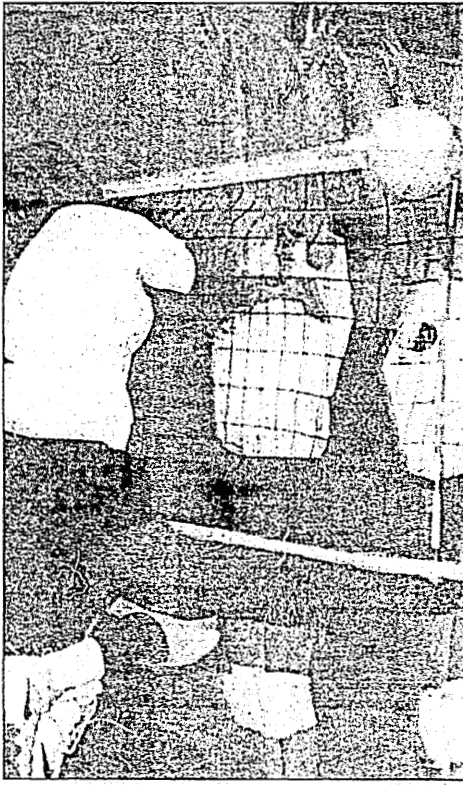

"We are going to walk the course and try to make them feel a little more comfortable," Newton said. "Before the year is over, we will have improved a great deal."

Daugherty's crew headed to Lady Northern Invitational

The women's golf team looks to finish strong at the Lady Northern Invitational in Ann Arbor, Mich., this weekend. The team is led by 11-year Coach Diane Daugherty and Missouri Valley Golfer of the Week Molly Hudgins.

Hudgins shot a 79, 77 and 75 to help pace the Salukis to a third place finish in the Illinois State Redbird Classic Sunday in Normal.

Spiker outside hitter Marlo Moreland, from Lancaster, Texas, spikes the ball into the block of her teammates during practice Wednesday afternoon at Davies Gym.

Adjusting

related to her.

"The way I helped the most is that I am able to read her," Locke said. "Some days when she wasn't feeling well, I would pull her aside and ask her if everything was okay, and she would tell me what was bothering her.

"We'd talk about it, and I think she would feel better afterwards."

Moreland, who is an undecided sophomore with a full scholarship, said that she also had to adjust to the style of play Locke wanted from her players.

"I didn't have a good day at my first practice," Moreland said. "But I've learned what Sonya wants and expects from me now, so I basically breeze through practices."

Moreland considers herself a jock and believes she would not be as good a student as she is if it were not for her love of volleyball.

"I love sports, and I know I can't play if I don't do my work and do it well," she said.

Moreland said that doing her work well and being a student athlete is not as easy as most people think.

"You have to study when you're tired after the game on the bus when you just want to go to sleep," she said.

Moreland said she misses home every now and then, but said she does not regret a thing about her new life at SIUC.

In fact, Moreland said she now feels right at home.

"When I go home, I actually miss SIUC."

THIS YEAR A LOT OF COLLEGE SENIORS WILL BE GRADUATING INTO DEBT.

Under the Army's Loan Repayment program, you could get out from under with a three-year enlistment.

Each year you serve on active duty reduces your indebtedness by one-third or $1,500, whichever amount is greater, up to a $55,000 limit. The offer applies to Perkins Loans, Stafford Loans, and certain other federally insured loans, which are not in default. And debt relief is just one of the many benefits you'll earn from the Army. Ask your Army Recruiter.

PERSONAL PICKS:

- | | |
|-------------------------|---------------------------|
| Sept. 15 | New Orleans at Cincinnati |
| Arizona at New England | New York Jets at Miami |
| Baltimore at Houston | San Diego at Green Bay |
| Detroit at Philadelphia | Washington at Giants |
| Indianapolis at Dallas | Tampa Bay at Denver |
| Jacksonville at Oakland | |
| Kansas City at Seattle | Sept. 16 |
| Minnesota at Chicago | Buffalo at Pittsburgh |

Prediction: I hope you're hungry on Sunday, Neil O'Donnell. You're going to eat a lot of turf at Joe Robbie Stadium.

Prediction: Last week Houston went 1-1. I have been told they seldom win two in a row, but I must pick them again because of Brent Hampton!

Prediction: I can't go the easy route this week with 'Jerry Rice,' so I'm going with Jimmy Johnson and the Miami Dolphins to remain undefeated, the second easiest avenue.

Salukis try for 3-0 against Racers

Halfback Coe Bonner (44), a senior from Franklin, Ga., runs the ball through an open gap in practice Thursday afternoon.

The football Salukis will try Saturday to accomplish something that has only been achieved eight times in the program's 81-year history — a 3-0 start.

SIUC will try to top that mark with a win over Murray State University in Kentucky tomorrow night. The last time the Salukis accomplished that record was in 1991, when they won their first five games.

Saluki running back Coe Bonner said the Dawgs are approaching the contest with very little doubt and a lot of confidence.

"We are just simply going to refuse to lose," Bonner said. "We are not going to talk about it as if we beat Murray State. We're going to take it as when we beat Murray State."

Saturday's showdown marks the 13th in the series between the two schools — a series deadlocked at 5-5-2. Murray State hammered the Salukis last season at McAndrew Stadium 35-3.

But a win over the Racers may be more than just another statistic to be measured over a period of time.

"They beat us up pretty bad last year," Bonner said. "If we beat Murray State, it's going to change the whole outlook of this program right here."

VOLLEYBALL

Team, coach help freshman Saluki adjust to SIUC

(122) and digs (67).

But that is no wonder, considering she is someone who believes in doing things right on the court or not doing them at all.

Moreland's teammate, Lenika Vazquez, a freshman in accounting from Buffalo, N.Y., said Moreland is pretty hard on herself on the court.

"Marlo is better than she thinks," Vazquez said. "When she gets a kill in a game, if it's not the right way, she won't accept it. She is a perfectionist."

"Off the court, she is really nice."

Moreland began playing volleyball in the sixth grade at her sister's high school volleyball practices.

"I didn't know what I was doing then," she said. "I was just out there in the way."

Moreland's family is full of athletes. Her mother, sister and aunt all have played volleyball.

Though she admits SIUC and the surrounding Carbondale area is a typical rural community, she said it does remind her of Lancaster.

"There's really nothing to do here, but the people are very friendly — just like my town," she said. "My teammates are my family because we're together so much."

However, Moreland's journey did not come without its fair share of friendly promises.

Upon her arrival, Locke made a promise to Moreland's mother that she would take care of 'her baby.' And that's exactly what she does, Moreland said.

"I stay hungry and Sonya tries her best to bring me Mexican food, which is my favorite, whenever she can," Moreland said. "I feel like she is my second mom because I whine to her, and I can talk to her about anything."

But Moreland said she had to adjust to Locke as well — both on and off the court. Moreland recalled how she thought Locke was mean when they first met. And Locke agrees that Moreland was not always comfortable talking to her.

But Locke said after Moreland did start to talk, she was more comfortable.

"I have an open-door policy with all my players," Locke said. "When they choose to use it, that tends to be when they feel more comfortable with me."

Locke said she helped Moreland feel comfortable because of the way she
