Faculty Senate rejects Phoenix plan

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

The Faculty Senate voted 13-11 not to support the idea of a new communication college, but the four departments looking for an alternative to the College of Liberal Arts have not given up the fight.

William Elliott, chairman of the Phoenix Committee, a group formed by journalism, broadcasting, radio and television and cinema and photography, said although the proposition to create a new college was defeated before the senate, the idea still will be alive.

CTC saves 2 programs from elimination

The College of Technical Careers fought a good fight Tuesday to save five associate degree programs that went on the Faculty Senate's chopping block for budget cutbacks.

The final score: cutbacks three, CTC two. The senate approved cuts of associate programs in law enforcement, computer information and aviation technology, but supported construction technology and tool and manufacturing technology.

Students, faculty and other backers packed Student Center Ballroom A to support the endangered programs. Students in T-shirts and businessmen in suits alike wanted to see over the shoulders of 30 or more people who flooded out into the hallway.

administration as to what we do next," he said.

"The senate is only one constituency group, and the vote was very close. We are going to stay with this idea for right now."

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president and provost, said he will take the senate's vote under serious advisement but still is considering what to do.

Shepherd said he thought the vote did not go through for the Phoenix Committee because the debate lost its focus.

"I am a little disappointed," he said. "The discussion began as one of budget savings, but it became ambiguous. I think the ambiguity caused some senators who would have voted yes to vote no. I think there was not accurate accounting of he saving that could be had."

Elliott came before the Faculty Senate with his case for constructing a new college to house.

Elliott said after hours of work, the Phoenix Committee came up with a proposal to create the College of Mass Communication

USG candidate files appeal, claims constitution violation

Spiwak was disqualified Monday because his vice presidential candidate Yusuf Haqq did not meet the GPA requirements.

In a meeting with Harvey Welch, vice president of student affairs, and Jean Paratore, the associate vice president, Spiwak appealed the decision.

Paratore said student affairs would not immediately overrule the decision because the appeal process had to be followed according to the constitution, which means the appeal through the student judicial board first.

Spiwak said he feared the judicial board would turn away his appeal as it did with a similar appeal he had made.

He said he appealed to the board when petitions were first handed out because there was no prior scrutiny of GPAs, which violates the USG constitution.

Article III, section one, of the USG constitution reads that all candidates need to sign a release of information form. The second point reads, "Upon fulfillment of Section A.1, the candidate may pick up

WIDB plan grounded

Guyon pressured by other stations

By Mikael Pyrtel
Special Assignment Writer

WIDB officials said SIUC President John C. Guyon is stalling a plan to put the student radio station on the air because of pressure from other radio stations.

Guyon said Tuesday he will not present the plan to the SIUC Board of Trustees anytime soon, effectively delaying WIDB's efforts for another year.

WIDB has received student government approval for a fee increase to buy a transmitter and has collected 5,000 to 6,000 signatures supporting the move.

The afternoon conference between Guyon and WIDB officials made little progress.

In addition to opposition from WCIL, the station must contend with opposition coming from WPSD-TV, which broadcasts out of Paducah, Ky.

Dennis Lyle, general manager for WCIL, said at a Carbondale Chamber of Commerce board meeting that he understands what WIDB is trying to achieve, but it would be

Amaya tabbed top state cager

Missouri Valley Conference defensive player of the year. MVC first-team all-conference. MVC Tournament's most valuable player.

Just when it was safe to say that Saluki basketball star Ashraf Amaya won it all in 1993, he was named Illinois' collegiate player of the year Tuesday for the second year in a row.

The 6-foot-8 senior edged out the University of Illinois' Deon Thomas by a 12-7 margin as voted by the head coaches and sports information directors at the 13 NCAA Division I schools in Illinois.

SIUC Sports Information Director Fred Huff said Amaya was the incumbent in a way, and his talent and dedication was noticeable.

"He certainly had a lot of preseason publicity, he got his team into the NAAs, and even though he did not put up the same numbers as last year, he still had a strong year," Huff said. "They all say the same thing about Deon, though, so there is no way to really tell what people take into consideration when they vote."

No matter why they vote, it is a nice honor for Amaya to have, Huff said.

Amaya finished the season as the No. 3 scorer in SIUC history with over 1,800 points.

Saluki coach Rich Herrin was edged by Illinois' Lou Henson for Illinois coach of the year honors.

Softball No. 6 in Midwest

The SIUC softball team is off to a fast 20-6 start, one that is giving the Salukis some attention in the regional polls.

SIUC has garnered the No. 6 ranking in the Midwest region.

Oklahoma State (35-6) tops the Midwest poll, with Kansas (16-8-1), Missouri (22-10), Texas A&M (23-13), and Sam Houston (25-12) holding down the No. 2 through 5 spots.

The Salukis were to play host to Indiana State Tuesday, but rain forced postponement of the game until April 30.

The Salukis will stay at home for the weekend and host a pair of league opponents.

Tulsa will visit for a doubleheader Friday, while the Salukis welcome Southwest Missouri State for a Saturday twinbill.

Rain washes out SIUC games

Rain wiped out the SIUC softball and baseball games scheduled for Tuesday.

The softball team was to play host Indiana State for a pair of games. The doubleheader has been rescheduled for April 30.

The baseball team was set to travel to St. Louis to face the Billikens. The game has not been rescheduled.

The baseball team will get right back to work with home games against Arkansas State Tuesday and Southeast Missouri State Thursday at Abe Martin Field.

Both games start at 3 p.m.

Olson may have had too good of season in 1989

The Baltimore Sun

Doug Strange, and now Lee Tinsley. Gregg Olson used to abuse such no-names. Strange never would have hit a game-winning homer off him in 1989. Tinsley never would have ignited a game-winning rally.

What's wrong with Olson? The same question was asked last season after he blew his first save opportunity in Toronto. Olson succeeded to convert 19 consecutive chances, the longest streak of his career.

The same thing could happen again, the way Olson and pitching coach Dick Bosman are talking. But to the average fan, Olson is the reason the Baltimore Orioles started 1-4 instead of 3-2. It's never that simple.

The truth is, there's only one thing wrong with Olson: He spoiled everyone as a rookie, and it will haunt him the rest of his career. The average major-league shows a steady pattern of growth. Olson was so good, so young, he left himself little room to improve.

Here's a closer who pitched 1.

games in the minors, then converted 41 of his first 47 save opportunities with the Orioles.

It was a success rate he could not possibly sustain. Dennis Eckersley converts 89 percent of his chances. Olson was cruising along at 87 percent.

A decline was inevitable, and, at age 26, Olson still is searching for a happy medium. Surely, he's not the closer he was in those heady days of '89. But he's not this fading phoenix, either.

"There's a lot of quality there," Bosman said Monday from Texas. "He missed on a couple of pitches, and they cost us, that's all. I'd be concerned if his velocity wasn't up, or if the sharpness on his breaking ball wasn't there. But he has thrown a whole bunch of good pitches."

Also, he didn't throw them to Strange or Tinsley. Strange hit a 1-0 sinking fastball for the first home run by a left-handed hitter off Olson in nearly two years. Tinsley bounced a 3-2 fastball through the middle for his first major-league hit.

The common denominator? Olson

The Boss excited about chances of 1993 'pick-me-up-team' Yanks

Newsday

The man who needed no introduction wasn't introduced. "For my own safety," George Steinbrenner said later, enjoying a laugh at his own expense.

On the day The Boss returned to his Yankee Stadium aerie, there was no better barometer of the team's condition than the mood of the principal owner.

Not even the scoreboard, on which the New York Yankees never trailed against the Royals, painted such a glowing picture of the young season.

There was the vision of at least a division title in his eyes and the promise of revisited glory on his lips as he toured the locker room after a 4-1 triumph in the home opener.

Clearly, his comeback won't be complete until his team is reacquainted with the World Series.

"This is a pick-me-up team, like in '77," Steinbrenner decided after the Yankees posted their fourth victory in the first seven games of his third reign. "If Nettles didn't do it, Munson would. Today Boggs did it, and O'Neill did it."

The 1977 team, it should be recalled, presented The Boss his first world championship ring and the belief he could do no wrong in baseball.

In the 15 years since his second and last fling at the top, in 1978, he has taken a few hard falls, including a trip to the American League East basement and a lengthy stay on the permanently ineligible list, courtesy of former commissioner Fay Vincent.

But he has worked hard to wake up the echoes of the distant past, starting with the appointment of Reggie Jackson as a special adviser, and spring training camps by Ron Guidry and Tommy John.

Ironically, it was the performance of several players added during his physical absence that raised the owner's spirits. Jim Abbott, Paul O'Neill and Wade Boggs were among the personnel treated to opening introductions by the esteemed Bob Sheppard, starting his 43rd season as public address announcer.

In reality, of course, they introduced themselves to New York in the most flattering manner possible.

Abbott, the marquee left-hander acquired from the California Angels during the winter meetings, pitched a complete game and benefited from the support of left fielder O'Neill and third baseman Boggs both at the plate and in the field.

The former had four hits in as many at bats, two runs batted in and one run scored; the latter drove in the first run with a two-out single and started two double plays.

There was more than enough praise to go around the clubhouse, which Boggs considered a positive.

"You're just a piece of the puzzle here," said Boggs, who suffered no trauma pulling on pinstripes after 11 years with the Boston Red Sox.

"You're not the whole team. No one is here. It doesn't revolve around one or two guys who have to carry the ballclub."

Pick-me-up teams spread the wealth. O'Neill accepted congratulations from Steinbrenner but seemed more

JAPAN APPROVES ECONOMIC STIMULUS PLAN — In an effort to jump start Japan's sluggish economy, the Japanese government adopted a $117 billion package to provide money for everything from burying the rat's nest of electric cables above Tokyo to making more low interest loans available to home buyers. The package will help revive the Japanese economy but analysts said it is unlikely to help correct the yawning trade surplus that is putting Japan on a collision course with America.

YELTSIN GETS COLD RECEPTION IN SIBERIA — Boris N. Yeltsin brought his political road show and quest for votes to the Siberian capital of coal and steel recalling how when the chips were down before, the Kuzbass miners always rallied to his side. The Russian president's foray into this country's most important coal mining region revealed both his weakened status and the flaws of his campaign to win a national referendum later this month.

GUN TIED TO SOUTH AFRICAN ASSASSINATION — When right-wing extremists broke into a South African arsenal in Pretoria on April 14, 1990, and stole weapons and ammunition, black anti-apartheid leader Chris Hani said there was something suspicious about the theft. Three years later, one of the stolen pistols has been identified as the weapon used Saturday to assassinate Hani, the head of the South African Communist Party. Police said they hope the weapon will show if the suspect in the killing, Janusz Walus, was help by pro-apartheid groups.

PHYSICIANS SUPPORT HEALTH CARE REFORM — A strong majority of physicians supported many key elements of President Clinton's emerging health care reform agenda, especially universal coverage, even if overall reform causes them to lose some income and professional freedom, according to the largest-yet survey of American doctors on the issue. The Washington Post won three Pulitzers, and the Miami Herald won two, including the most coveted of the 15 journalism awards, the Pulitzer Prize gold medal for public service, for its coverage of the hurricane that devastated Miami last August, leaving 41 dead and 160,000 homeless.

INMATES EVACUATED FROM RIOT PRONE AREA — The California Department of Corrections will evacuate inmates from work thorough programs in areas ravaged in last year's rioting, the regional director of the department said. SURVEY FINDS TEENS SAYING YES TO DRUGS — In what some researchers warned could be the start of a worrisome new trend, an annual federally funded survey has found "significant" increases in the use of marijuana, cocaine, LSD, inhalants and other illicit substances among eighth graders, most of whom are 13 or 14 years old. The annual University of Michigan survey found that 11.2 percent of eighth graders reported trying marijuana in 1992, a full percentage-point

STUDY LINKS HEREDITY TO POST-WAR STRESS — A new study of Vietnam veterans has found that much of the risk of developing post-traumatic stress disorder is inherited. Debate team struggling with cuts, resignations

By Tina Davis
General Assignment Writer

For the first time in more than a decade, SIUC's debate team will not finish in the top 10 in the National Championships, which is directly linked to the budget cut to the team, the team director said.

Jeff Bile, assistant professor in speech communication, said he has resigned his position as debate coach, because of declining support from the University.

"The budget for the debate team has been cut three times within four years," Bile said. "That means that the team won't be able to compete as much as usual, so our ranking will keep falling more and more every year."

Bile said the normal team travels to compete 12 times in the spring and 10 times in the fall. However, because of the cut, the team has traveled 12 times last spring and 2 last fall.

"This year, we dropped from top 10 to the top 50 and within the last two and a half months we finished within the top 20. That means that if we were funded enough to compete through all the rounds we would have finished somewhere in the top five," Bile said.

"I just don't want to deal with this anymore," Bile said. "There was a debate coach before me; there will be one after me."

Chad Jacobs, sophomore and member of the debate team, said the team is not going to be able to perform the same without Bile, because he has led the program for almost 10 years and produced a national championship team for four consecutive years.

"I'm also leaving the team because Bile is leaving and also because I think the team will soon be cut so much that it won't be able to function anymore," Jacobs said. "It seems like the University wants us to keep falling until we're no longer a team."

Gerald Stone, dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts, said the college had no intention of trying to hurt or damage the debate team.

"It would be my preference to not cut the team, but these things happen regrettably when they are done," Stone said. "The debate program was so thinly funded that they would have problems competing anyway, so they were cut as well as all the other programs."

"If comparisons are made between the teams, the debate team wasn't cut as steeply as the other programs," Stone added.

Bile said he is disappointed, and his team's morale is low.

"Many of the programs being cut aren't nationally ranked; it doesn't make sense to me," Bile said.

"Our budget is between 25 to 30,000 dollars a year and every year we're cut by the thousands," Jacobs said.

Bile said in the late 1980s the school wanted a national caliber debate team and that is what they got.

"Our debaters make an enormous sacrifice in order to keep up the reputation of the University's team with honor," Bile said.

"They have neither the intelligence resources of Cornell nor the financial resources of an average top 20 school; none the less we still manage to rank in the top 5 because our sacrifice and hard work," he continued. "I don't understand how they can keep tearing down a team that they told us to build."

Meredith Warner, a junior in speech, said she is incredibly sad that Bile is leaving.

"Because of Bile, I can't imagine my life without debate. I'm just happy that I got a chance to debate for his team," she said.

Warner described Bile as being a dynamic coach who believed that coaching a debate team was equivalent to coaching a football team.

"Instead of telling us how to debate, he threw us into the match and made us learn from our mistakes," Warner said. "His ability to be a captain gave us the motivation to work hard and advance."

Warner said the debate team is unique because unlike the 300 schools they compete against their team is the only one that works collectively as a family.

"Now, we're kind of left in the dark about the future of the team for the next few years," Jacobs said.

Cable regulations benefit consumers

EVER-CLIMBING CABLE RATES will be no more if the Federal Communications Commissions has its way. The FCC recently wiped out any price increases the cable industry had passed since the end of last September with the passage of the 1992 Cable Act, which directed the FCC to regulate cable TV. The FCC also created a new formula for establishing basic-rate ceilings in various markets that will force those that have exceeded those rates since September to reduce rates by 10 percent or more. The FCC's rules not only allow for competition, but the regulation also places controls on any future rate increases and will have far-reaching effects that benefit consumers.

THE CABLE INDUSTRY HAS been without regulation since 1986 and it finally took government intervention to put an end to increased rates. Many would agree that government control over businesses in most cases is not a solution, but in the case of the cable industry it was needed. According to some estimates consumers who have a normal bill of about $20 every month will see about a $2 decrease in their bill. Nationwide it would save customers about $1 billion.

The decrease to individual consumers, however, may not seem like very much, but the regulation is only a start. Because many cable companies had raised rates from as much as 7 to 15 percent since the 1992 Cable Act, consumers of these cable operators will see even bigger rate reductions.

THE ORDER APPLIES TO RATES that are not only basic but for transmitting broadcast channels, public access and local government programs.

A provision also requires operators to offer their channels at comparable prices to other cable operators.

This is good news not only for other cable operators but also for consumers because competition will result in cost-saving rates.

Another part of the ruling that has yet to be settled would restrict cable operators from their past practice of charging for items such as remote controls and cable installations.

The FCC's move could make these charges separate and based on a cost defined by FCC standards.

SOME CABLE OPERATORS IN Southern Illinois have expressed their dissatisfaction about the FCC's regulation, as was expected. Much of the cable industry has lashed out at the FCC as a wielder of unwarranted authority.

Unfortunately, some authority had to be implemented to protect the consumer.

First Amendment protects free forum no matter how ignorant opinions get

I would like to address an issue raised by B. Moss in a letter to the editor in the April 7 issue of the Daily Egyptian.

In the letter, Moss admonishes the editorial staff for responsible journalism because they ran a letter from Marc Perry in which Perry argued that homosexuals were mentally ill, and as such, should be denied certain Constitutional privileges.

While I in no way endorse the view held by Perry, the restrictions on speech that Moss advocates are equally distressing.

It must be remembered that the free exchange of ideas is fundamental to not only a university's growth and quality, but to an ostensibly democratic society's as well.

Freedom of speech should not be distorted to favor only select groups any more than other civil rights should.

The Opinion and Commentary page is a public forum for ideas, no matter how ignorant or misinformed these ideas might be.

To restrict what can be said in such a forum is to endorse the same process of ignorance we purport to despise.

The editorial staff of the Daily Egyptian in no way acted irresponsibly.

On the contrary, they supported a Constitutional premise that guarantees us a venue for public debate.

If certain positions in these debates seem distasteful, offensive, controversial or downright false, we have the responsibility to answer them using the exact same venue in which they appeared.

To boycott an idea, any idea, because we oppose it not only denies target groups a voice but dissolves the framework of learning that we are accustomed to at a university. — David Tietge, graduate assistant, English

Rudeness toward teachers not necessary

The rudeness and disrespect that some students direct towards teachers is something that I cannot understand or tolerate.

I have several classes this semester in which certain individuals talk throughout the entire lecture.

I am also sick of hearing students make fun of teachers behind their backs.

What purpose do actions such as these serve?

Why are people like this even in school, if they cannot even listen to the teacher?

Yes, some teachers may be difficult, but the ones that I have this semester are very pleasant, and sometimes overly accommodating.

A teaching assistant that I have for a certain class is constantly bombarded with insults and compliments.

She always explains things well, yet she is attacked for the exams being too hard.

First of all, she has nothing to do with the exams, and second of all if the complaining individuals would perhaps listen to her and maybe study a bit more, they would find that the exams are actually not that hard.

And no, this rudeness does not only occur in general education classes.

I am in an upper level finance class in which five or six individuals cannot shut their mouths while the instructor is lecturing.

One student even makes obscene gestures behind the teacher's back while he is teaching.

This individual's level of maturity really impresses me!

I believe that he actually thinks he's cute by doing that. Teachers deserve respect.

Someday these rude people will perhaps have to deal with being treated with disrespect, and then they will see how painful it is.

But for now, could it be that hard to sit quietly, without talking or cracking gum, and make the teacher feel appreciated and needed—because they truly are! — Diana Fuller, senior, anthropology and finance

Quotable Quotes

That's about all I can do for now." — Incumbent Undergraduate Student Government President Brad Cole, explaining it was Election Commissioner Christopher Ananias' job to tell candidate Mike Spiwak that his ticket had been removed from the election ballot.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, said the plan for CTC was to eliminate all of the two-year associate degree programs, either by changing them into four-year programs or cutting them all together. The five programs considered would be the first to go.

"The recommendations to eliminate these associate degrees is based on the fact that we intend to eliminate all associate degrees eventually," he said.

A large part of the audience came prepared for when the senate faced the question of keeping the construction technology program.

Jervis Underwood, president of the Faculty Senate, opened the discussion by announcing he had received a number of letters urging the senate to vote in favor of construction technology.

Carl Branson, a local contractor, represented a small group of several other construction managers and contractors who came to the meeting to support the program.

Branson began by asking if he could present a cellular telephone call from Rep. Larry Woolard, D-Carterville. All eyes turned to the small black portable telephone Branson set at the edge of the conference table.

"I believe the uniqueness of the program is such to provide a service to residents to get an education," said Woolard's ghostly voice to the crowd leaning over the telephone. "I am going to do everything that is legislatively possible to make sure this continues."

Branson said construction is the largest industry in Southern Illinois, an industry he said would speed up or slow down the economy.

Ralph Gordy, contractor and 1991 Southern Illinois business leader of the year, said the University had to retain the program because of the unique management aspects of construction the program teaches.

"During the past 35 years I have seen a lot of contractors and subcontractors go broke," he said. "It was not because of a lack of hard work, but a lack of management skills."

"This program provides jobs to the youth of this region," he continued. "These programs teach people the business of construction. It is very easy to convert to a four-year program, just by adding management skills."

Antonio Washington, a senior in vocational education studies, said he spoke on behalf of the other students of construction technology when he said the program is more important than just manual skills.

"The program is not just hammer and nail," he said. "It is about the management of construction. It is needed and used, and this is the reality of construction technology."

Alliance Party president stirs controversy with ads

By Jeremy Finley
Special Assignment Writer

The mud slinging already has started for the Undergraduate Student Government elections.

Last week, the Alliance party, before it was disqualified, put out two different flyers in buildings on campus.

One of the two posters accused Undergraduate Student Government president Brad Cole of false and failed promises.

The poster with the allegations also included a drawing of a hand labeled "administration," which was holding onto puppet strings connected to a student with dark hair and glasses labeled "Student Party." The Student Party figure was standing on top of a fallen figure labeled "student."

Mike Spiwak, president of the Alliance Party, said the party's main platform is that the majority of the students on campus are underrepresented.

"We are going to be an advocate for students rights," he said. "The concern of students should be the single most important thing."

Spiwak said his party is stating the slogan, "Don't get fooled again," to promote the problems the current USG has had in the past.

Spiwak said the resemblance to Cole is purely coincidental.

Cole also said, in an interview before the debate, that the poster could be a form of dirty politics. "I guess that could be me, and yes, it is dirty politics," he said. "I've seen worse. And that poster is not saying what they plan to do, it just slams me. People will figure this out. They know what's up."

The poster included the allegations to Cole, beginning with last year's Springfest issue. The student party promised to continue Springfest in their party platform last election, and Spiwak said that was an obvious display of failed promises.

"Springfest obviously got cut, and that promise was made just to make them sound good," he said.

Cole said Springfest was canceled before his party won the election.

"We had a problem with people wanting to kill Springfest," he said. "But we still wanted it, but the decision was made before we were elected."

Spiwak said he questioned USG's motives to raise the bar entry age because of the number of senators in the student party belonging to the Greek system, with the assumption that students will join the system for socializing.

"They say they're fighting for the 18 bar entry age, but the majority of the senate are members of fraternities and sororities," he said. "The majority of USG are Greek. These are the facts, you draw the conclusion."

Spiwak said there are 31 students running on the party ticket, including himself, the vice president and the student trustee, half of which are women and include non-traditional students and international students.

Cole said his party supports and will continue to support the 18 bar entry age, and that the Greek issue is a useless one.

"What difference does it make?" he said.

"Before we all came here we were all just high school kids. If the council were all members of Neely hall, would that matter?"

Cole said USG also has minority senators, and the issues petitions and begin the petitioning process.

This process was not followed by the election commissioner, Christopher Ananias, Spiwak said.

The board determined there were procedural problems but ruled that because requirements were met and candidates were treated fairly, no sanctions would be imposed.

Spiwak handed an appeal Tuesday to Nancy Hunter Pei, director of Student Development and adviser of the judicial board, and said that Pei confirmed she would call the chief justice of the board to convene as soon as possible.

Welch said he would promise only to do his best to help Spiwak based on what the candidate would present, should the need arise.

Haqq maintained that he has a good disciplinary record and is in good academic standing.

Haqq said he was going to take his name off the ballot three weeks ago because of personal family problems and an off-campus job he had lauded.

He also was going to reduce his hours to nine. A minimum of 12 hours is needed to hold an executive position.

He was told by Ananias that he could not withdraw from the election because Spiwak would be dropped from the ballot as well. Haqq was also told at this point of time that his original form had been lost.

The election commissioner was to take the matter up with the chief of staff and the vice president but gave Haqq three days from the candidates meeting to send in a second eligibility form, Haqq said.

"I was trying to buy time for the Alliance Party," Haqq said. "Mike told me he was going to appeal the unconstitutional procedures, and I was waiting to see what happened."

Haqq said the election commissioner never did contact him about any decision from the chief of staff and the vice president.

"My point is that my family comes first," Haqq said. "I'll be the first to say that circumstances beyond my control put me at fault. I was caught in a Catch-22 situation."

Studying cultures will help overcome racism, differences

By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

There are many types of people within any race — both good and bad. The key to overcoming differences is to study about other races and begin to understand them, a panel discussion leader for African Awareness week said.

M. Lionel Bender, SIUC professor of foreign language and literature, said by adopting the philosophies of other cultures people may be better off. About 50 people attended the "Bridging the Gap Between Africans and African Americans" panel discussion on Monday.

Bender and Madlyn A. Stalls, SIUC assistant professor of black American studies, talked about issues selected by the African Student Association.

The issues selected included discipline and identity in relation to the ways in which they affect race relations between the two groups in question.

Stalls focused on the lack of opportunities Africans and African Americans have as children to receive positive feedback about their culture and surroundings.

She cited such phrases as "all Africans who are in America have money," "all black women are sex objects and can't be raped," "all Africans have many wives" and "Africans think they are better than African Americans."

Stalls said these kinds of stereotypes still linger today and are at the heart of many problems faced by the two groups.

Bender and Stalls took questions from the audience between lectures. Several questions were asked as the discussion steered the focus to the issues most relevant to the audience members.

The discussion has remained a highlight of African Awareness week throughout its 19 years in existence.

Four undergraduates learn from moot court

By Shawna R. Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Competing as partners in front of professional judges gave four undergraduate students a chance to gain invaluable experience, the adviser to the group said.

The four students, competing as lawyers at the Illinois Undergraduate Moot Court competition in Springfield, took second place in the model government program March 6.

Michael Esler, assistant professor of political science and faculty adviser, said it was a chance for excellent pre-law training as well as getting awareness of what the law is.

"Being around the law gets students interested in the court room," Esler said. "I believe the moot court experience is greater hands-on experience that they cannot get in the classroom."

"It is a serious, hard-working tournament," he said. "It is a challenging, academic exercise that requires quick-thinking, that is why you have to know what you are talking about. There is not a chance to re-think what you said."

The undergraduate moot court team is made up of two two-member groups.

Brian Flanagan, a senior in political science and economics from Minonk who plans to attend law school next year, said the undergraduate moot court experience will help him in the future.

"It has mentally pushed me to do better academically and to go on to law school," Flanagan said. "We have learned how to brief cases and how to argue them."

Flanagan, along with partner Jon House, a senior in philosophy from Bradford, went on to the finals and placed second.

They also got the chance to present a case to the Illinois Supreme Court Chief Justices, an appellate judge and other judges at the tournament.

"It was really great to present a case," Flanagan said. "They gave us advice and compliments on how we did."

"It is a really good experience that has helped me prepare for the future by knowing how to present and argue in front of real judges," he said.

Jason Bowles, a junior in political science from Williamsville, and Rob McColley, a senior in radio and television from Urbana made-up the other SIUC undergraduate moot court team partnership, which got cut in the semifinals.

McColley said he wants to attend law school eventually but has plans to internship next fall in Washington D.C. in politics and journalism.

"It was a great experience and desires credibility because we studied our cases while other model government participants partyed," McColley said.

"The best part about the tournament was we argued in front of Supreme Court justices and ate cold fried chicken with them afterwards. We had a great time," he continued.

R.J. Robertson, a law professor and moot court coordinator at SIUC School of Law, helped the undergraduate team.

SIUC law students provided some input to the team on presenting cases and arguing them.

The tournament was set up two years ago to get students involved with state government and the legal processes in it.

Teams competing in the tournament included Illinois State, University of Illinois, Western Illinois, Eastern Illinois, and Bradley.

Beijing, London to discuss Hong Kong's political future

Los Angeles Times

In a diplomatic breakthrough that could bring renewed cooperation over Hong Kong's future, Beijing and London agreed Tuesday to open negotiations on rules for 1993 elections in the British colony.

If successful, the talks will mean that legislators elected two years from now will remain in office beyond Hong Kong's July 1, 1997 reversion to Chinese sovereignty. Implementation of this "through train" concept is considered to be a key to preservation of stability in the transition period.

The agreement to open formal negotiations, announced simultaneously in Beijing, Hong Kong and London, came after six months of Sino-British diplomatic tension. Talks are scheduled to begin April 22 in Beijing, the official New China News Agency reported.

The dispute began when Hong Kong Gov. Chris Patten proposed reforms making the 1995 elections more democratic than Beijing had expected. China responded by charging that Britain was renegeing on agreements. Pro-democracy activists in the colony accused Beijing of breaking its promise to allow Hong Kong a "high degree of autonomy" after 1997.

"I think this is a victory for common sense," Patten told reporters in London, where he had been meeting with Foreign Office officials. "I very much hope that we can come off at the end of the day with an agreement on proposals which are fair and acceptable to the people of Hong Kong."

Caffeine pill abuse says no to healthy lifestyle

Using over-the-counter stimulants can result in depression

By Jonathan Senft
Health Writer

Preparing for the end of the semester, whether studying for finals or writing term papers, often provides incentives for students to rely on caffeine and "pick-me-up" drugs to take the place of regular sleep — but they may be fooling themselves.

Brands like No-Doz, Vivarin and Mini-Thins, fill the shelves of the local liquor stores to provide students with extra caffeine that will keep them awake for short periods of time.

Keep alert, fast acting and other hype on the No-Doz label encourages potential buyers to grab the extra energy.

Caffeine tablets are drugs that stimulate the central nervous system. But, they also can cause irritability, anxiety and insomnia. Also, the belief that caffeine pills limits the effect of alcohol is unfounded. According to the SIUC Wellness Center, contrary to popular belief, caffeine will not counteract the effects of alcohol.

Rob Sepich of the Wellness Center said unfortunately for students, the effects of caffeine are not the same as getting regular sleep.

According to a survey from the office of the Surgeon General, pills with caffeine might give the student the feeling that their studying will be stronger, but evidence has shown this information is contradictory.

"When caffeine is used in excess, the body may become jittery and people will have an inability to concentrate"

—Robert Russell

The pills will keep the body awake, however.

The dosage of caffeine in No-Doz is 100 milligrams, the average amount of caffeine in one cup of coffee.

Other brands use more, such as Vivarin, which has 200mg of caffeine.

Robert Russell, SIUC professor in health education, said caffeine can be useful to those who are trying to stay awake.

However, Russell said when the body receives too much stimulation, side-effects will occur.

"When caffeine is used in excess, the body may become jittery, and people will have an inability to concentrate," he said. "Often, the drug can cause the body to become more susceptible to emotional upset."

Russell said stress makes the effects of caffeine worse.

"Emotional upset from an over-usage of caffeine can happen when the caffeine is mixed with a number of things to worry about, such as finals, work, or a social life," Russell said. "With the high stress with an over usage of caffeine, the body can crash."

A crash is when the body is unable to keep going and it must have sleep.

When caffeine is used in over-excess, the result can be a super-depression, Russell said.

When caffeine is used continuously, people are often robbing themselves of sleep. Also, the body may experience an increase in blood pressure, he said.

According to the SIUC Wellness Center, caffeine side effects can be vomiting, nausea, jitters, nervousness and headaches, known as "The Caffeine Headache."

A brochure by the Wellness Center said, "most authorities agree that 200mg (about two cups of coffee) is the amount that begins to cause effects on the body, however, some notice effects in as low as 50mg."

The Food and Drug Administration has been questioned about the safety of caffeine pills. Currently, FDA policy is to require accurate labeling and to restrict the sale of caffeine pills to those under the age of 18.

The No-Doz wrapper states "for occasional use only. Not intended

Average caffeine content of beverages and drugs

Caffeine has been deemed safe, but only in doses of 100-200 milligrams every 3 to 4 hours

5oz cup of coffee

for use as a substitute for sleep." The FDA recommends other caffeine pill manufacturers include a similar disclaimer on their wrappers.

Jim Curtis, employee of Old Town Liquors said the prohibition against the sale of tablets to those under the age of 18 is enforced strictly.

"If some kids come in that are not of age, I'm not going to sell (the caffeine pills) to them," he said. "It's the same policy as cigarettes or any thing like that."

"We do sell a lot of No-Doz and of the Mini-Thins," he said. "But only, maybe, a few more this time of the semester, rather than any other time."

BDI Pharmaceuticals, the company that makes Mini-Thins provides a phone number on the label of the pill bottle for those who have questions, however they ask that all requests for information on their product be made in writing.

The Wellness Center recommends adequate sleep, a healthy diet and moderate exercise as the key to remaining healthy and able to retain information. Those who have healthy lifestyles tend not to need caffeine supplements.

discussed at USG meetings are important to everyone. "I don't think this is a Greek issue," Cole said. "From tuition to fee increases, it's everybody's issues." Spiwak said that Cole promises support student parking on campus, while he has a faculty/staff blue sticker on his car. "I think that's horrendous," he said. "Be sure, when I win, I will not have a blue sticker" Cole said he does have a blue sticker because past presidents of USG have had the sticker. "I paid for it, because the idea is that when I go to meetings I can find a space and be on time," he said. Spiwak said students came to him with complaints against USG's passed housing fee increase. The student government should represent the students, and the students do not want a housing increase, he said. Cole said the consensus he received was a support of the increase. "I don't vote anyway, but the residence hall association said they supported it," he said.

unfair business competition.

"I oppose the bid because it is another example of the University competing with the private sector," he said. "The staff is volunteer and they do not have to pay rent, along with other expenses that licensed broadcasters must contend with."

WIDB was not represented at the chamber meeting and Lyle expressed concern as to what signal sent to the business community.

"WIDB wanted the opportunity to address the board and the fact that they are not here concerns me," he said.

WIDB officials contend that they were informed that the board meeting was to be held at a different time. Lyle said that WIDB best serves its purpose where it is.

"WIDB is a perfect learning tool and its a good place to make mistakes," he said. "You can take the opportunity without taking all the risks."

Lyle is referring to the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission. Which acts as the official broadcasting licensing board. President Guyon said the concerns voiced by the WCIL are legitimate.

"The major issue will always come down to the university giving unfair business competition by being competitive with the local industries," he said.

Although WIDB is seeking an educational license as opposed to a commercial license, Guyon believes that does not detract from the issue.

"They are seeking an educational license, but they are still going to have people listening that would not be listening to something else at the same time," he said. "And I think it is a legitimate concern about competition supported by the University, when the private enterprise must run their own operation."

Jason Pajdo, WIDB station manager, believes the arguments raised by Guyon lack foundation.

According to Pajdo, all broadcast radio stations structure their programming according to the Arbitron ratings because it is what advertisers look at. The Arbitron rating is a demographic indicator of what people listen to which radio stations.

"President Guyon told me that we would be taking audiences away from WCIL," Pajdo said. "We would not be taking audiences away from WCIL because they (students) are not rated on the Arbitron scale. Arbitron does not count them. We would be taking students away who do not even exist. And just because a person may be a student does not mean he is going to listen to WIDB."

Michelle Miller, public relations director for WIDB, said that Guyon is not as concerned with serving the student body.

"Over a year ago the University communicated seven concerns they had with WIDB going on the air, and we have now answered all seven concerns," Miller said. "He threw it all back in our face and acted like he did not want to hear it. He said we best serve the students at our current status."

According to Miller, the station reaches about five thousand students in the dorms. But with the license the station would reach 25 thousand students.

"We are the only radio station that caters just to the student body," she said. "We feel Guyon is cheating us and cheating us and the student body."

Another objection that has been raised to WIDB receiving a license has been issued by WPSD-TV 6.

According to WIDB, WPSD officials contend the radio signal would interfere with the television signal. Causing viewers to "hear" WIDB on their televisions.

Evergreen Terrace houses the majority of the people in the conflicting area. And WIDB officials said they have support from Evergreen Terrace to go on the air.

"We have received a letter from the Evergreen Terrace Residents' Council supporting us because we are the only station here that caters to the student body and it would be in the best interest of the students," he said.

and Media Arts, made up of the departments of journalism, radio/television, cinema/photography and the broadcasting service.

"As information technology further penetrates our social and private lives, this college will allow us to better satisfy the need for SIUC to keep up," he said.

Nathan Stucky, assistant professor of speech communication, said the proposal creates more difficulties than it solves.

"The present proposal requires an unnecessary expenditure of funds," he said. "At a time when we are cutting on costs, this will cost $280,000 each year."

Stucky said administration of the new college also would cost more than three times than the units did while they were under the College of Communications and Fine Arts, which is being abolished. Some units are moving to the College of Liberal Arts.

He said there was no clear benefit of having a separate college and the name was confusing.

Michael Starr, associate professor of radio/television, said the $280,000 was being spent anyway.

"The fact is that the proposition represents a substantial savings of over $200,000," he said. "I don't know where (Stucky's) figures come from."

Starr said he was surprised to hear complaints about the name of the college.

"I thought we had reached a meeting of the minds on that, and I'm surprised to hear comment," he said.

Shepherd agreed that the new college would save money.

"The cost to accommodate the resolution will indeed be less than the original," he said. "The administration cost will be less."

James VanOosting, chairman of speech communication, said he was unsure whether the new college would fit with the No. 1 priority of cutting costs.

"I think educational benefits would accrue, but the question is fiscal priority and could it be accomplished in the school structure," he said.

Starr continued to fight the idea that the college would cost money.

"It's not like taking $280,000 out of a pot and decreasing the amount left, because it's already in there," he said. "Over 85 universities across the country have a similar structure. We should maintain the integrity of units that have brought so much credit to the University."

One senator suggested the four departments merge under the College of Liberal Arts.

Elliott said moving the units to COLA would cause the units to lose focus by taking on the COLA curriculum, which he said would not be appropriate for more specialized students.

"We have over 1,000 students and 100 graduate students," he explained. "The business world has proven that the way to survive is not to make everything larger and less focused, but to make it more focused."

A senator said the radio/television department was one of the bragging points of SIUC, and should be protected.

"People in that department tell me that rejecting the proposition will do real, significant and lasting damage to the department," he said. "Should we continue with strong programs, or decide to have second-rate programs?"

Students may reduce risks by riding bikes defensively

By Joe Baker
Wellness Center

Spring is right around the corner and many SIUC students will rediscover the most efficient form of transportation ever invented, the bicycle.

Not only are bicycles energy efficient, inexpensive to operate, but they also are easily parked on campus. However, since they are both fast and lightweight, there are precautions that need to be taken to ensure that you return safely on your bike after traveling among 1 to 2 ton cars and heavy trucks on the crowded city streets of Carbondale.

Because bicycles are less visible to car drivers, defensive driving is a must for bicyclists. They always lose in a confrontation with a car. According to the National Electronic Injury Surveillance System, bicycles and bicycle equipment rank first in injuries related to sports and recreational equipment.

Fifteen to sixteen hundred bicyclists die annually in bicycle crashes, about 1 million bicyclists require medical treatment every year, and more than 400,000 are treated in emergency rooms across the country.

To Your Health

Also, bicyclists are at greater risk for head injury than participants in almost any other sport.

Reduce your risk for accidents and injury through these simple guidelines:
■ Inspect your bicycle regularly, at least weekly, to ensure that everything is tight and operable, including lights, brakes, horn and tires. Check tire air pressure.
■ Use proper hand signals.
■ Obey all traffic signals.

■ Whenever it is necessary to ride after dark, wear light-colored clothes, make sure your bike has a white headlight and a reflector or a red taillight that can be seen for 50 feet.
■ Wear a lightweight bicycle helmet. They are inexpensive, about $20, and reduce the risk of head injury.

Enjoy the comfort and convenience of your bicycle, but remember you are never far from the pavement. For more information about bicycle safety, contact the Wellness Center at 536-4441 or the Safety Center at 453-2080.

Clinton's budget includes money for disposal of radioactive wastes

The Washington Post

In the Bush administration's last budget, it was the "Integral Fast Reactor," part of a $145 million-a-year program to subsidize the development of the next generation of nuclear technology.

In President Clinton's first budget, it reappears relabeled as the "actinide recycle program," a shadow of its former self at $15 million, offered now as a new way to dispose of highly radioactive wastes, or actinides.

To its many critics, it is Son of Clinch River — a mutant offspring of the government's abandoned plan to build a reactor at Clinch River, Tenn., that would produce more radioactive material than it consumed. To the critics, it is more than just nuclear pork: It is an unnecessary and potentially dangerous program that could lead to the use of plutonium as a commercial fuel.

Clinton told the nation in his

State of the Union Address in February that "we're eliminating programs that are no longer needed, such as nuclear power research and development." But not quite.

The Energy Department's proposed fiscal 1994 budget contains $57.8 million to subsidize three manufacturers' efforts to develop advanced versions of existing nuclear reactors, which the budget text says are needed "to ensure that nuclear energy continues to make a vital contribution to national energy security."

Government funding for new reactor technologies would be phased out — except for the Integral Fast Reactor, under development at the Energy Department's Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois.

The Office of Management and Budget proposed scrapping this program according to sources in the administration and on Capitol Hill, but restored part of it at the behest of Sens. Paul Simon and Carol Moseley-Braun, both Illinois Democrats whose support the administration needed on the economic stimulus and deficit-cutting package.

"Hey, three out of five ain't bad," an Energy Department official said of the cut nuclear energy programs. "The secretary (Howard R. O'Leary) just felt that we should continue this option" as a way to produce energy or consume radioactive waste, or both.

The United States has stockpiles — of highly radioactive spent fuel from commercial nuclear power plants and of plutonium from dismantled warheads — that it does not know what to do with. The materials are rich in energy content, but policy since the Carter administration has banned their use as energy sources for economic and environmental reasons and because of concerns that introduction of plutonium into the commercial fuel market could turn the lethal material into a commodity.

STD protection labels required for birth control

The Washington Post

The Food and Drug Administration is requiring manufacturers of contraceptives to design labels that reflect how well the product protects against sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted pregnancy.

According to FDA Commissioner David A. Kessler, the effort is to clarify for teenagers that contraceptives like the pill, IUDs or Norplant may prevent pregnancy but offer no protection against HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, or any other sexually transmitted disease.

Kessler and Ruth Merkatz, FDA specialist in women's health, emphasized that "there's a lot of confusion out there," even among counselors. "Safe sex isn't just about preventing pregnancies," Kessler said.

"You don't hear people saying use Norplant plus a condom, or Depo Provera plus a condom, or oral contraceptives plus a condom. That's not being said, and it needs to be said," he continued.

The FDA said letters were sent to manufacturers of oral, injectable and implanted contraceptives as well as natural-skin condoms (usually made of lambskin membrane) requiring packages to state that "the products are intended to prevent pregnancy and do not protect against HIV infection and other sexually transmitted diseases."

The only contraceptive products allowed to claim effectiveness against such sexually transmitted diseases as HIV, gonorrhea, chlamydia, syphilis, herpes, hepatitis B and others are latex condoms, which are less permeable. (Natural-skin condom packaging will refer consumers to latex condoms for STD protection under the new FDA directive.)

Kessler said manufacturers should have the new labeling on shelves in about six months.

"This is in everyone's interest," Kessler said. "It's a public-health initiative. This is not a theoretical risk. The epidemic that kills is HIV."

Merkatz recently said released data demonstrated that despite the increasingly widespread use of contraceptives, teen-agers were increasingly being infected with STDs.

"It is clear we are not coming to grips with this problem," Kessler said, pointing to a report he received recently of a teen-ager dying of AIDS, bitter and bewildered because she had been on the pill and believed herself protected.

David Lister, a senior in management from Nashville, Tenn., and Jay Cafmeyer, a sophomore in speech communication from trailed in both counts. Strange was looking for a fastball with one out, a man on second and the score tied. Tinsley wanted only to reach base leading off an inning, and Olson went to the obligatory 2-0.

Crystal Lake, get in a game of handball. Lister and Cafmeyer were playing Tuesday afternoon near the SIU Arena.

That's what he was kicking himself over yesterday - not the two-strike, two-out double by Tino Martinez that cost him his second save. "If I get him out, the game's over," Olson said of Tinsley. "There's not even a problem."

But he threw four consecutive fastballs after falling behind Tinsley, and the result was almost predictable. According to the 1993 Stats Player Profiles, opponents batted .349 when ahead of Olson in the count last season, .108 when behind.

That's an unusually wide disparity, and the difference in Olson's career numbers (.324-.152) is nearly as great. Never mind that Tinsley's artificial-turf single might have been an out at Camden Yards. Olson yielded the advantage.

Of course, Olson got ahead of Martinez 1-2, to no avail. Martinez previously was 0-for-3 off Olson with three strikeouts. Olson threw him a good curve, but not good enough. "If it was in the dirt," he said, "I probably would have struck him out."

Such are the tiny margins that separate victory from defeat, the great closers from the merely good. Olson has fallen into the latter category, ranking ninth in the American League in save percentage each of the past two seasons. But you don't quit on a pitcher who has accomplished so much at 26.

Just before Martinez's hit, Olson struck out Jay Buhner with a vicious curveball. He earned his first save with a 12-pitch inning Saturday night. We're not talking about Bobby Thigpen here.

Still, Olson is at a crossroads. At Bosman's suggestion, he started throwing his sinking fastball last season, and is now experimenting with a slider. The idea is to show hitters a different look. But it will all backfire if he can't control his bread-and-butter pitches.

That doesn't appear to be the case—Olson seems to have his good curveball, and he described his fastball Sunday as "tremendous." In all likelihood, he will record his fourth consecutive 30-save season. But he isn't going to attain perfection, the unfair standard set by Eckersley.

"The game's changed," Olson said.

"It used to be that people would bring in their closer, and the game was over. Now, everyone knows we're human. They're going after us more."

Conlan: Huge weight lifted off shoulders

Los Angeles Times

Free agency has helped make Shane Conlan a rich man, but the process was no joy ride. Conlan, the 29-year-old, three-time Pro Bowler was introduced as the newest Los Angeles Ram Monday at Rams Park and said he felt as if a huge weight had been lifted from his shoulders.

Which means his father feels as if he had just been dug out from under a collapsed skyscraper.

"Every time I would call my dad, he would ask, 'Got a job yet?'" Conlan said. "I'd say, 'No, but we've got some offers.' And he would say, 'Sign one.'"

Weighing offers from the Los Angeles Raiders and Pittsburgh Steelers until the last minute, Conlan put his name on the dotted line of a $5.4 million, three-year contract Sunday night and became a player whom Coach Chuck Knox describes as the "keystone of the resurgence of the Ram defense."

Conlan, who has never played middle linebacker in a six-year National Football League career with the Buffalo Bills, will get his chance with the Rams. And that was a key factor in his decision to leave a team that plays a hour from where he grew up, not to mention a team that has played in the last three Super Bowls.

"You watch films and you see these middle linebackers making all these plays and you say, 'One time in my career I want to be in spot,'" Conlan said. "That's one of the main reasons I'm playing here. I'm excited about playing the position, about playing on grass and I'm excited about the coaching staff."

"I loved playing in Buffalo. I grew up 70 miles south of Buffalo and went to Penn State, which is about three hours from my home. My family is there. I have a tremendous amount of respect for the Bills' organization and Coach (Marv) Levy and I have lot of friends on the team."

"It was a tough decision, but I'm ready for a new challenge."

Knox said he had absolutely no qualms about Conlan's ability to make the switch from inside linebacker to middle linebacker.

"He's got Pro Bowl talent, good striking ability and he can move," Knox said. "He won't be bothered by the change of position. If he can play like that inside in a 3-4, he can play middle linebacker in a 4-3."

impressed by the performance of the crowd of 56,704, a regular-season record for the renovated Stadium. "From the excitement they showed on opening day," he marveled, "I can imagine what it would be like if they win here."

O'Neill spent the better part of the last six seasons playing for Cincinnati, where opening day is a civic holiday. But the outfielder said the electricity of the occasion there paled in comparison to his first experience as a member of the home team in New York.

"Just standing out there (in leftfield)," he said, "I thought, 'This place is cool, man.' The fans, the fights, I was impressed. That crowd at the end, wow, that's a lot of excitement."

It even impressed Boggs. "I've been here as a visitor," he said. "But today there was a tremendous sense of anticipation and hope, a sense of good things to come. It boosts the players' confidence. That's what we need to do, bring the winning tradition back to the city."

Even Steinbrenner couldn't have phrased it better, although he certainly tried. "I haven't felt that kind of electricity here in a long time," the owner said. "Of course, I haven't felt any in the last couple of years, but it goes back a few years beyond that. I think (the fans) think the team has a chance to win."

He didn't mean a game or an occasional series, either. The most glaring danger to the Yankees in 1993 may be the owner's great expectations. Certainly, they did little to discourage the man's dreams Monday. They played alertly, if not flawlessly, and benefited from clutch hitting.

"I would hate to think we're doing anything different just because Mr. Steinbrenner is back," Yankee manager Buck Showalter said. "But Mr. Steinbrenner has a way of putting an extra hop in everyone's step."

O'Neill showed excellent reactions in left field, a new position for a man whose arm made him a natural for right field in Cincinnati. "It's definitely big out there," he said. "You always check when you're playing by looking at the (foul) line and the gap. But the gap here is so big, you always feel out of position."

His triple in the sixth inning sailed into the left-centerfield gap past a diving Brian McRae and bounced into territory formerly occupied by the monuments. O'Neill said he couldn't imagine the vastness of the dimensions in the old park but he had a sense of history just walking up the tunnel to the Yankee dugout.

"You don't even have to go back to Ruth and DiMaggio," he said. "Seeing Reggie walk through the locker room today brought it home."

That, of course, is the idea. Maybe the Yankees really will connect with the past, will revive the tradition. "If I didn't (feel that way)," Boggs said, "why should I be here? Why should any of us be here?"

Good question.

From knees, Santiago brings baserunners down to theirs

The Sporting News

They love Orestes Destrade, but they'll remember Benito Santiago.

Nowhere in baseball does defense come closer to knocking offense off center stage. Nowhere does a throw, any throw, come as close to matching the emotional rush of a home run. And nowhere—particularly in Miami—could Destrade, the Florida Marlins' only Cuban-born player, be upstaged in the collective memory by a Puerto Rican catcher.

But the reality of it all began to form the first time Santiago, his knees flat against the dirt, unopposed on an opposing runner. It happened four times in spring training, the ball rocketed by Santiago's right arm and finding second base moments ahead of a runner. Three more times, again from his knees, Santiago picked off players who had done nothing more than say too far off the bag.

By the time the Marlins reached opening day, Santiago's cannon rivaled whatever lumber Destrade and the others brought to the plate. As much as the locals wanted a home run from one of their own, they wanted to see the wonder of a catcher erasing another runner, the inexplicable action of a man firing a laser across the field without benefit of legs or momentum.

Santiago felt it, too, and he never stopped looking for the one man who would take one step too many. For three games, the Dodgers never tried. Santiago kept them honest by flicking throws to second base, again, off his knees. But Tommy Lasorda knew better.

"He doesn't just stop your running game; he eliminates it," says Lasorda, who considers Santiago the greatest athlete ever to play the position.

"Every time I'd go into San Diego, I'd forget about it and he'd throw guys out from his knees. I've never, never seen anybody do that."

Neither had anyone else. On an expansion team that could lose between 90 and 100 games, Santiago gloves. He's a four-time All-Star with three Gold Gloves and a bat (his 34-game hitting streak in 1987 is still a major league rookie record). Not only did Santiago start the season having played 263 consecutive games without a passed ball, but he also started as a 28-year-old star in the prime of his career.

And then there are the knees, the kind of defining characteristic that has added charisma to the talent and elicited awe from all those around him. That Santiago has become the team's leader, a fact that elders like Charlie Hough and Destrade understood early, only adds to the package.

"I know (runners) feel embarrassed because if I go to second base and I look back and see somebody throw me out from their knees, I'm going to say, 'Hey, at least get up,'" says Santiago, who caught his first victim of the season, former San Diego teammate Gary Sheffield, straying off first base in a 2-1 Marlins loss. "I've had people yell at me to get up and throw. I don't think people like it. If it was me, I'd look back at home and say, 'What's this guy doing throwing me out from his knees?'"

"But that's the way I play baseball, and they'll keep seeing that."

"It's a pleasure to watch," Marlins manager Rene Lachemann says. "He does things you wouldn't teach to a catcher because guys couldn't do it. The catcher you'd be trying to teach just wouldn't have the ability to do it. It's impossible. And I'm not just talking about throwing off his knees. The way he blocks the ball, his hands. These are things he does that other people just can't do."

As for the knees, it all started more than 10 years ago when Santiago's brother suggested Benito try getting the ball there while still on his knees. The bullet landed where most others have.

"I almost broke his glove," Santiago says of that maiden toss. "He was so excited. But I was afraid to do it in a game. Then I'm playing in the big leagues my second season and everybody is getting a better jump, and I don't have a chance to get anybody out. That's when I went to the bullpen and started practicing. I didn't tell anyone. So then, when I went I got the first one out, I went back to the dugout and everybody was looking at me like, 'What the hell are you doing?' But I got the guy out. Maybe if he was safe somebody could have said something. Then I got the second guy out, too."

The sheer power of Santiago's arm, not to mention the incredible accuracy, nearly cost Hough a couple years he couldn't spare in the Marlins' opener. With a runner straying off second, Santiago fired a shot just past Hough's head.

"He scared the hell out of me," Hough says. "If he gets that ball what I think is about six inches lower, he might have had me."

"They've got to keep their eyes on me," Santiago says. "The pitcher's got to look because I know I could blow off somebody's head out there."

Kenyon hoping to return favor in caring, comforting his ailing wife

Los Angeles Times

Mel Kenyon's wife, Marianne, has been in a semi-coma for more than a year but Kenyon, the winningest driver in midget car history, fervently believes she will come out of it some day.

"Her motor mechanics are shot," Kenyon said. "They're not hooked up to her body. Her mind is working, but she is locked in her cylinder. She could be right today or she may never be right, but I'll never give up on her."

The paralysis is the result of two bicycling accidents.

Marianne, now 49, was cycling in Colorado in 1988 when she hit a rut, fell and hit her head on a rock. She was unconscious four days before recovering.

Then, on Aug. 22, 1991, again wearing a cycling helmet, as she had been in Colorado, she was riding on the road near their home in rural Indiana—no more than half a mile away. A dog jumped at her bike and knocked her down. She hit her head again, and this time, she didn't fully regain consciousness.

So Kenyon, who will be 60 Wednesday, lovingly helps in her care, figuring that to be the least he can do.

"Don't forget, I was her first baby," he said.

Kenyon, still an active competitor on the U.S. Auto Club circuit, was referring to Marianne's part in nursing him back from near death after a fiery accident in an Indy car race June 20, 1965, at Langhorne, Pa.

"I was nearly out of my mind from the pain when Marianne finally got it through this old granite head of mine that I needed help," Kenyon said. "She brought me and the Lord together."

"I had had one setback after another from infections, convulsions and losing body fluids. I can't describe the pain there is in fire burns, but you know, two weeks after Marianne got through to me, I was up and out of the burn center in San Antonio and in eight months I was racing again."

The accident occurred when the engine blew in Kenyon's car and he was hit from behind by two other cars, rupturing the fuel tank.

"I was the first one to prove that fuel bladders (inside the tank) could burst," he said. "I sat in the fire for three minutes with little or no protection. Fortunately, I was unconscious and never felt the pain—until I woke up."

"I could never have made it without her. ... I had been raised in a Christian family, but as my racing career progressed, I felt more and more in control of my own destiny. The fire was the Lord's way of getting his message to me."

"That same commitment will keep me beside Marianne, and her commitment will bring her through. Like I said, I don't know when, but it will happen. I've heard recently of people who came out of comas after five or six years. I hope it doesn't take her that long."

Kenyon was in Winchester, Ind., last week for the start of the 1993 USAC midget season. Marianne was with him, so were their sons, Vaughn, 22, and Brice, 20.

"We loaded her in the van, the way we did (the children) when the boys were young, and took off. I wish I could say her condition was better, but it really hasn't improved much since last Christmas. But I can tell by her eyes that she wants to be with us."

"She gives us yesses and nos with her eyes, and answers with her left foot. Her left leg and foot are 95 percent right, but nothing else works much."

Every weekend, when he is not racing, Kenyon picks his wife up from the Parkway Center in Lebanon and brings her home, then takes her back Monday morning.

"I want her here, among her surroundings, as much as possible," he said.

The rambling farm-style house, set among central Indiana fields of corn and soy beans—with its obligatory basketball hoop above a garage door—is full of Kenyon's trophies and memorabilia from 40 years of racing, and his wife's paintings and sculptures.

For many years, she painted portraits of Indianapolis 500 winners, which were then presented at the annual USAC banquet. Mel's favorite is one she did of him and his yellow No. 61 midget—with a cross painted on the engine cover—racing at speed at the Indiana Fairgrounds the year he won the 1985 national midget championship, his seventh.

Kenyon won his other championships in 1964, '67, '68, '74, '77 and '81. He has won 111 USAC midget events, 16 more than the late Rich Vogler and 52 more than the next-active driver, Sleepy Tripp.
