Beach Set Reigns at Saluquarama

If any SIU student is able to limbo after a fishing derby, canoe, swimming, or long-distance foot races, the 1965 Saluquarama can fill his needs.

All the recreational facilities of the Lake-on-the-Campus will be open to students and faculty this afternoon for summer relaxation and enjoyment.

Recreational equipment will be available all day, and will be free. This includes rental bicycles and canoes.

The organized events at the boat docks are as follows: 1 p.m., fishing derby; 1:30 p.m., canoe race for men and coeds; 2 p.m., ping-pong tournaments with men's and women's singles matches; 3 p.m., men's distance race around the lake from the boat house.

The beach activities include the following: 3:30 p.m., beach bully contest for the funniest costume; 4 p.m., swimming races (free style) for men and women 14-17 years, college age and faculty.

Those competing are entered as individuals, or as teams from residence halls, departmental clubs, off-campus halls or other groups.

The Viscoutis will play at the beach dance from 8 until 11 p.m. Anyone interested in signing up for the limbo contest may do so at the dance.

Awards for the competitions will be given at 9 p.m. Hot dogs and soft drinks may be purchased at the beach. ~~Some watermelons~~ feast at the dance.

Draft Card Alteration Law Cited

Draft-age students considering altering their Selective Service registration cards to show that they are over 21 were warned Friday to read the small print on the backs of the cards.

Joseph F. Zaleski, assistant dean, Office of Student General Affairs, called attention to the wording: "Any person who alters, forges, or in any manner changes this certificate may be fined not to exceed $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both."

Zaleski also indicated that Selective Service officials might be inclined to take special note of persons who use registration cards belonging to others in attempting to buy alcoholic beverages illegally. Special consideration could result in inclusion in one of the monthly draft calls—now drastically increased—sooner than anticipated.

Zaleski pointed out that the Office of General Affairs now sends altered Selective Service cards, or cards which have been used illegally, to the state director of the Selective Service System, John H. Hammack.

Formerly, they were sent to the local board in Murphysboro which forwarded them to the issuing boards, along with an explanation of how they were misused. The issuing boards, however, did not acknowledge receipt of the cards and decision was made to send them to Hammack, Zaleski said.

Mock U.N. Assembly Session Ends Youth Program at SIU

Sixty-one Illinois high school students ended a week-long leadership training program on campus Friday night by participating in a mock United Nations General Assembly.

Speaker at a dinner meeting before the opening of the mock session was Ahmed Ali, minister plenipotentiary and deputy permanent representative of Pakistan at the United Nations.

Assigned to represent 31 United Nations, including all countries currently members of the U.N. Security Council, the students were formed into two committees whose reports were debated in the General Assembly session.

The week-long Youth World program at SIU was sponsored by Youth World Inc. in co-

Brazilian Official, Journalist Observes Operation of SIU

Welson Gasparini, a Brazilian public official and journalist, was here Thursday and Friday observing operations and activities on the Carbondale campus.

Gasparini is mayor of Ribeirao Preto, a city about 500 miles from Rio de Janeiro in the interior of Portuguese-speaking Brazil. He is also a newspaper columnist and correspondent for an affiliate of The Associated Press.

Gasparini is visiting the United States for 60 days as a participant in the foreign leader exchange program of the U.S. Department of State.

He was accompanied on campus by Albert W. Bork, director of the Latin American Institute at SIU, and Ben-Hur Correa, Department of State escort-interpreter.

Gasparini, 29, received a degree in law from the University of Minas Gerais in the State of Sao Paulo.

He will visit newspaper offices and observe American politics on local, state and national levels.

A Daily Egyptian reporter discussed the problems encountered with the relocation of Brazil's capital to Brasilia, about 1,000 miles inland from Rio de Janeiro, the old capital.

Gasparini said at first there was great difficulty to get people to leave their homes, mainly because of families, to go into the interior but now the situation is improving and the population is increasing.

Discussions, Tour Wind Up Demonstrations at Center

Some 100 demonstrators Friday marched on SIU's Job Corps Center at Camp Breckinridge, Ky. The march was precipitated by Dick Gregory, Negro comedian and former SIU student, who earlier claimed the center was guilty of discriminatory practices earlier this week.

Gregory was not among the marchers, however. He suffered a gunshot wound in the left leg during Thursday's rioting in Los Angeles. Gregory was wounded moments after he had urged a throng of 500 Negroes to return to their homes, the Associated Press reported.

John Hughes, director of the Camp Breckinridge Job Corps Center, sent telegrams Wednesday to six national civil rights leaders, including

Martin Luther King, Roy Wilkins and James Farmer.

Hughes telegram said the march was "one army in the war on poverty attacking its allies."

Hughes met with local civil rights leaders and representatives of the National Job Corps from Washington, D.C., Friday at 4 p.m. The meeting was attended by the Rev. W.J. Hodge, president of the Kentucky chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, David Petty, a local civil rights leader and Job Corps officials Chris Weeks and John H. Kennedy.

A spokesman for the training center termed the meeting "amicable." He said that while representatives of the marchers met with officials for the camp and from Washington, the balance of the group toured the camp. Many children were among the marchers, he added, and the trainees seemed to enjoy having "company."

Shortly before the marchers arrived at the camp, a car bearing the letters "KKK" drove into the driveway, then turned and sped away, the spokesman said.

Gregory's allegations were made Sunday at Morganfield, Ky. He claimed the center was bypassing the people of Western Kentucky to hire only college-trained personnel.

Center officials denied the allegations indicating the high percentage of area residents and Negroes employed at the center earlier this week. Reports indicate that the injury

250 Short-Session Courses Concluded

Some 250 classes ended Friday at the close of the first eight weeks of summer school.

A spokesman at the Enrollment Center in the Registrar's Office said the office had no idea how many students were enrolled in the eight-week courses.

He also said he had no idea how many courses were being taught this summer. Some 922 are listed in the Summer School course catalogue, not including VTI courses.

Eight-week courses are taught by almost every school and department, but the largest concentration appears to be in the College of Education.

Many high school teachers enrolled in summer courses will have to be back in their own classrooms before SIU's regular summer session ends Aug. 27.

William J. McKeefery, dean of Academic Affairs, said it has not yet been determined whether eight-week courses will be offered next year.

"The matter is under study right now," McKeefery said. "A special committee is currently studying the four-quarter system, including eight-week courses in the summer, and will make a report on its findings and recommendations, then a final decision probably will be announced."

Robert G. Layer, chairman of the Department of Economics, is chairman of the special committee.

Layer said the work of the committee is still in its preliminary stages.

Graduate Student De-Clusters Yeast Cells By Using Low-Power Ultrasonic Waves

Ultrasonic waves are being used by a graduate microbiology student to de-cluster the grape-like masses of yeast cells which hampers scientists in making population counts of the individual cells.

Charles Gregg Jr., of Peoria Heights started this work last September as an undergraduate project but is continuing it as full-scale research while taking graduate studies.

He is following up a process developed by another graduate student, Curtis C. Scheffinger of Springfield, that of using the sonifier (ultrasonic wave machine) to burst cells so that the cell content can be analyzed.

But in most yeast cultures there are a substantial number of free (single) cells growing while many more are clustered together in twos, threes, or masses of a dozen or more.

To separate these clusters has been difficult, for most procedures break (burst) the cells before they separate, so that the cell contents dissolve into the culture medium, and a population count is impossible.

Gregg has found that by using low-power ultrasonic waves he can separate most of the clusters without undue breakage. After a five-minute treatment he has more than doubled the number of single cells; after 10 minutes he has eliminated any cluster of more than three cells and has begun to kill only a small number of cells.

Prior to the use of ultrasonic sound waves for this purpose, according to Maurice Ogur, chairman of the Department of Microbiology, scientists tried enzymes to de-cluster the bunches of cells but found that they often changed the properties of the cells "so that when you were ready to study them they were no longer viable (living)."

The sonifier produces vibrations of 20,000 per second. These vibrations, transmitted down a stainless steel rod, force gas bubbles into the solution containing the yeast cells. These bubbles shear off the cells from the clusters, but if the power is too strong the cells are broken in the process.

Gregg, 24, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gregg of Peoria Heights. He is married to the former Janice Fox of Palestine, who is also an SIU student, a senior majoring in anthropology.

SIU Botanical Research Described in Journal; More Findings Will Be Presented at Meetings

Three articles on work conducted by Aristotel J. Pappelis, assistant professor of botany, and Rizos A. Katsanos, research assistant in botany, were recently published in Phytopathology, the international journal of the American Phytopathological Society.

The articles deal with the relationship of seasonal changes in pith condition ratings and density of the Gibberella stalk rot of corn, an approach to the study of the physiology of senescence and parasitisms in sugar cane, and the spread of physalospora tucumanensis in stalk tissue of sugar cane.

These papers show the results of the study of cell death in corn and sugar cane stalks and the related susceptibility to fungal pathogens. Stalk rot of corn causes an annual loss of $75,000,000 to Illinois farmers alone. The concepts developed from the study of the nature of resistance to corn stalk rot were applied to both sorghum and sugar cane.

Additional research on these problems was presented in February at the meetings of the Southern Sections of Plant Pathology and Plant Physiology at Dallas, Texas, and at the June Midwestern Plant Physiology meeting at SIU.

Two additional pieces of research will be presented at the annual meetings of the American Phytopathology Society at Miami Beach in October and the American Society of agronomy at Columbus, Ohio, in November.

Pappelis, Walter E. Schmid, assistant professor of botany, and Simeon Imbamba, research assistant in botany, have prepared an additional paper on the sugar cane problem.

Interviews Slated For Co-op Program

James Handley, a former co-op student now permanently employed by the Alton Box Board Co., will be on campus next Friday to interview prospective fall co-op students.

The co-op program gives students a chance to get first-hand information on how large business concerns operate.

The Student Work Office will be interviewing men who have completed their freshman year and are interested in intergrating their class work into a program of practical managerial work experience.

This summer Southern has seven students in the program. Interested students should contact Bruno W. Bierman or Leonard L. Lukasik at the Work Office on or before Thursday.

WAYNE A. R. LEYS

has now published the third in the series of "Philosophical Explorations," a book with the strange title of Dispositional Properties. It is not a book for beginners and it has no gadgety features that can be dramatized by television commentators. But there is reason to believe that this third book in Plochmann's series, like the first two, is really exploratory and on one of our intellectual frontiers.

The author, David Weissman of London, takes as his point of departure an intriguing argument developed by John Austin a few years ago in a paper entitled "Ifs and Cans." What at first appeared to be a trivial study of uses of the word "can" has stimulated some interesting inquiries into the "dispositional properties" of minds and objects.

Weissman carries forward the probe, showing what is objectionable in Aristotle's notion of "potentiality" and yet avoiding the skepticism of

G. K. PLOCHMANN

Hume. The result is a novel expression of the most prevalent philosophical mood of this decade—opposition to both "systems" and "atomism."

The other two volumes of "Philosophical Explorations" have been off the press long enough to have received considerable notice. The first book, The Recognition of Reason by Edward Pols, was not on my diet, but such a careful critic as Herbert Schneider called it "enjoyable and illuminating" and gave it a long review in the Journal of the History of Philosophy (April, 1965). Pols undertook to show that perception and conception cannot be completely distinguished.

Number Two in the series is a very different kind of book. It is a detective job by G. G. Rosenstock entitled, F. A. Trendelenburg, Fore-runner to John Dewey. The plot situation is as follows:

Dewey acknowledged his indebtedness to a number of his predecessors but did not specifically mention Trendelenburg. Now it happens that Dewey was a student and (later) a colleague of George Sylvester Morris. Morris had studied under Trendelenburg in Germany.

What Rosenstock has done is to rummage through the almost forgotten writings of Trendelenburg. He has come up with many doctrines that are similar to statements that made Dewey famous. For example, Dewey insisted that many erroneous opinions come from thinking of "experience" and "nature" as separate entities. Trendelenburg tried to get away from the conceptions of "mind" and "environment" as separate entities. And there are many such similarities.

It will be noticed that Rosenstock's subtitle, "Fore-runner to John Dewey", does not claim that Trendelenburg is the source of Dewey's insights. The text is not as cautious as the subtitle and in various places contends that Dewey was definitely influenced by Trendelenburg (presumably through Morris).

What makes Rosenstock's exploration timely is the interest, since Dewey's death in 1952, in the sources and peculiar twists which made Dewey the most influential American philosopher of our century.

It seems that Plochmann has made good on his promise to produce some "philosophical explorations," in so doing he has helped to establish SIU as a producer as well as a consumer of scholarship.

Several years ago the Southern Illinois University Press announced its intention to publish a series of philosophical books under the editorship of G. K. Plochmann. Editor Plochmann gave a name to the series. He called it "Philosophical Explorations." This was a daring thing to do before the first manuscript was in type and before the first critic had written his beady-eyed review.

Could Plochmann find authors who were really Daniel Boones in philosophy? Opinion, both inside and outside the field, was to the effect that much of post-1940 philosophizing was timid, un-inspired and repetitive. By contrast, exciting explorations were being made by scientists with the help of moonshots, bathyspheres and isotopes. Would Plochmann's finds really seem like "explorations"?

The answers to these questions are beginning to emerge this summer. The SIU Press

An Overview of Homosexuality In Survey of Current Thinking

Sexual Inversion, edited by Judd Marmor, M.D. New York: Basic Books, 1963, 358 pp. $8.50.

Queer People, by Douglas Plummer, New York: The Citadel Press, 1965. 120 pp. $3.00.

Subtitled "The Multiple Roots of Homosexuality," Sexual Inversion is an effort to make available to clinicians, scholars and students, a representative survey of the authoritative, current thinking about the phenomenon of homosexuality and its treatment as a social-psychological pathology.

In addition, several of the authors deal with the biological, social, legal, moral and historical aspects. These sections are the more enlightening and insightful.

The volume is divided into three sections offering the views of the biological sciences, the social sciences, and the clinicians. As noted earlier, the first two views are more valuable to the student and probably to the clinician as well.

The clinical section is almost a self-parody of the psychoanalytic point of view, replete with all the value judgments, assumptions, imaginative interpretations, and limited samples that students and critics have come to expect of this school.

The exceptions are Rado's criticism of the concept of bisexuality (which is the only one of the seventeen articles in the collection which was not written specifically for this book) but was originally published in 1940), Salzmann's critique of the concept of "latent" homosexuality, and, possibly, Mayerson and Lief's report on a study of psychotherapy with homosexuals.

In view of the evidence that homosexuality, no matter how defined or evaluated, is an extremely widespread form of sexual adaptation (if one uses Kinsey's estimates there are 26,631 white, male, exclusively homosexual persons aged 20 or over in Los Angeles alone), and because of the increasing willingness of the public to be confronted with the existence of this highly tabooed subject (count the number of "gay" references, jokes, aspersions on the Johnny Carson "Tonight Show" in one week), this book provides a useful overview of the subject.

The general reader will find some of the technical discussions (biological data) and psychoanalytic "gobbledyook" difficult at times, but lucid discussions and summaries are provided in most cases.

Even the psychoanalytic materials are useful, particularly when contrasted to the others, in pointing up the marked limitations of that approach while at the same time making one aware of what an enormous contribution psychoanalysis has made to contemporary thought action.

Queer People purports to be "the truth about homosexuals in Britain" according to its author, who writes under a pseudonym for reasons he makes abundantly clear in the text.

However, it contains little by way of explanation or insight into anything other than the unconscionable manner in which the homosexual is dealt with by the police and courts in the United States and Great Britain.

The remainder of the book is primarily a poorly reasoned and argued defense of a way of life. It is irritating and annoying in that statements are continually made as though they were self-evident propositions (most of them to the effect that homosexuals can't help being that way). No attempt is made to define the use of the term homosexual, an obviously critical point well documented in the studies considered in Marmor's book.

Queer People must be classified as a Sunday supplement treatment of a subject deserving more. As such, it contributes little more than a dozen other titles of the same genre.

Photographer's Guide Cites Legal Problems

Photography and the Law, by George Chernoff and Hershel Sarbin. Philadelphia: Chilton Books, 1965. 128 pp. $3.95.

This book is an attempt by two New York attorneys, one of whom is the publisher of the magazine Popular Photography, to provide a legal "bible" for the photographer by giving in a single, readily available source guidance in problem areas such as invasion of the right of privacy, ownership and use of negatives, recovery for loss or damage to film, copyright procedures and libel by photography.

While the aim of the authors to meet the need for available legal information on these subjects is commendable, the final product falls far short of the announced goal.

Probably the greatest shortcoming of the book to the average photographer is its almost exclusive reliance upon New York case law. This results in instances where the reader is misled as to the law in many states, and in all cases does not show how courts in the remaining states will react to the same fact situations.

The substantive content of the book is lacking in the areas of both libel and the right of privacy. The authors try to establish a dichotomy between the right to use the finished product. This dichotomy is not necessarily accurate when photographing people.

The discussion on libel is lacking in that it fails to point out that one of the most common ways to commit libel by photograph is to crop a picture so that the remaining portion, while factually true and accurate, conveys a false or improper impression on the viewer. This type of cropping is analogous to quoting a statement out of its context.

A chapter on copyrights is excellent, but probably of limited use to the amateur. Consideration of the ownership of film is also well done, clearly pointing out that there is often a difference between the ownership of a negative, the right to its physical possession and the right to make and use reproductions from it.

Although the book has many shortcomings, it should be read by all photographers to become aware of the many complex legal problems that face them. Yet the book should not be relied on to answer a specific legal problem. There is no substitute for legal advice from a competent local attorney based on the particular facts of a situation and given in light of existing local law and conditions.

Southern Now Third In Summer League

Southern moved into third place of the Midwest Summer Collegiate Baseball League Friday night by defeating the University of Illinois 3-0 in a game called at the end of six innings because of darkness. Ron Guthman extended his scoreless-inning streak to 9-1/3 with a three-hitter. Guthman did not have an easy time of it, though, as his wildness (six walks) put him in constant trouble throughout the game. Illinois had runners on in every inning off Guthman, but baseman John Hough for the final out.

Terry Thomas, an SIU wrestler who is pitching for the Illini this summer, took the loss. Thomas limited the Salukis to three hits, but shabby fielding by his infield in the first inning gave the Salukis three unearned runs.

Hough started the game with a single and moved to second when shortstop Rich Hacker walked. Jack Brown tried to sacrifice, but Hough was thrown out at third for the first out.

With runners on first and second, first baseman Frank Limbaugh grounded to second, but when Jim Reed booted the ball for an error, Hacker raced home with the first run.

After Solis grounded to short for the second out, third baseman Lee McRoy hit a grounder to third which Lou Ryniac booted for the second error, and two more runs scored.

Thomas held the Salukis to two hits for the rest of the game, but the damage had been done.

First baseman Klemm got two of the three hits off Guthman to lead the Illinois attack.

It was an especially sweet victory for the Salukis, who not only got out of the cellar for the first time since the first week of the season, but also defeated fellow SIU athlete Thomas who had shut them out 7-0 in an earlier game.

The series continues with a doubleheader today. Right-handers Bob Ash and Mike Lyle are scheduled to pitch for the Salukis. Jack Brown, who has played both third base and outfield for the Salukis this summer, will try his hand at pitching in the final game of the series Sunday afternoon.

Brown is starting in place of lefthander George Poe who did not make the trip. Brown did some pitching this summer with the Murphysboro American Legion team.

National Science, Huns, Felts 1 Finish on Top in IM Leagues

The regular intramural summer softball league schedule ended Thursday with National Science, Huns and Felts 1st in first place in their respective leagues.
