Campus police to use radar detection

Pedestrians receive response on safety

By Stephanie Moletti
Senior Reporter

In the hectic days of classes while rushing from one class to the next, drivers on campus should be wary — SIUC police have a new tool — radar units which they plan to put to use Sept. 1.

Samuel Jordan, director/chief of security at SIUC, said the two units were purchased in response to concerns voiced last year by students and the community about crosswalks and pedestrians subjects to accidents.

"We have been trying to figure out a means to address these concerns," Jordan said. "The units will serve as a means to try to reduce the actual and potential traffic accidents which occur on campus."

Jordan said police officers were trained with the radar units over the summer. The department is trying to locate problem areas where, "a driver may wish to speed."

The speed limit on campus is 25 miles per

Speeding drivers could receive a state ticket or a campus citation. State fines begin at $75. Campus fines are $15 and do not show up on a driver's record.

Jordan said he wants to make sure the campus community received "fair warning" before the units were put to use.

"We're not trying to set up speed traps or something of the sort," Jordan said. "Revenue is not a part of this decision."

Jordan said prior to the use of the units,

U.S. forces in Haiti backed by republics

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration won rhetorical backing from Caribbean republics Tuesday for an invasion of Haiti, but came away virtually empty in its attempt to sign up allies for military action to restore ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power.

"Our governments are equally united in their determination to take all necessary means to carry out the (U.N.) Security Council mandate to restore the democratic process in Haiti," U.S. and Caribbean officials said in a joint statement issued after a meeting in Kingston, Jamaica.

But only four of the 11 member countries of the Caribbean Community agreed to contribute troops and they said that together they could supply only a single company — 266 soldiers — to a U.S.-led invasion force that is expected to total 10,000 or more.

Tuition costs studied

By Marc Chase
Senior Reporter

The affordability of a college education for students attending state institutions is a major focus of a student committee's report reviewed Monday by the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

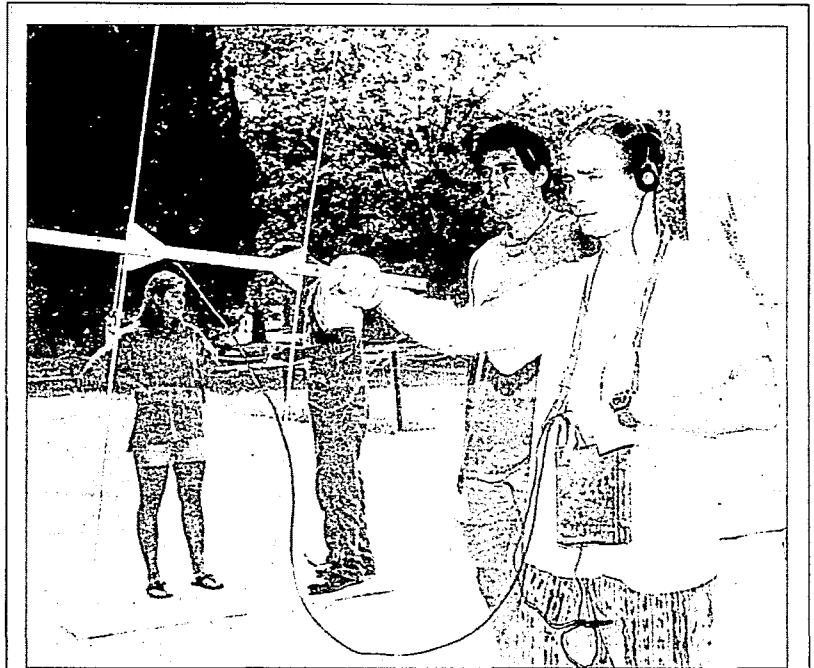

Jenny Rubin, SIUC representative to the Illinois Board of Higher Education Student Advisory Committee (IBHE-SAC), said many barriers exist at state universities which make higher education more costly for students.

She said it is the goal of the IBHE-SAC Committee to Study Affordability in Higher Education to persuade the Board to eliminate these barriers.

Students needing financial aid would be served better if the structure and scheduling of academic programs were improved at state universities, Rubin said.

"We (IBHE-SAC) want to eliminate the barriers to a timely

SIUC freshman makes 'miraculous' recovery

By Katie Morrissey
Staff Reporter

Michael Amrich, 26, a returning freshman in general studies from Watouconda, says he believes in miracles.

It was a miracle, he said, that brought him back to SIUC three years after a near fatal collision.

The day before Halloween, just 10 weeks after beginning as a freshman at SIUC in 1991, Amrich was crossing Highway 51 on foot with two friends when a car traveling at 70 mph collided with him. Jackie Amrich, his mother, said the car that hit Michael had to be towed away from the scene. He broke the windshield with his forehead and was thrown over the car into the middle of traffic.

"It was just a coincidence that me and the car were both in the same place at the same time," Amrich said.

He said a greater coincidence was that the first two people on the scene were a trauma-team nurse on her way to work and an off-duty paramedic, with his medical equipment.

They were not called to the scene — they happened to be in the two cars behind the car that hit Amrich.

Amrich's mother said no one even knew who those people were. "We never got to thank them,"

Amrich said. "The hospital staff had no idea who they were and we never saw them again."

She and her husband brought their pastor in to see Michael in December 1991 to prepare for his last rites. They agreed to take Amrich off the life support systems when neurologists said his bent brain stem and the severe hemorrhaging from the quarter turn of his brain in its skull could not be treated.

Three days after they took him off life support, Amrich's mother said he was still alive and even responded to his former girlfriend's request to snap his fingers.

"I was amazed. I was screaming and crying, and I ran for the doctors to show them," his mother said.

When the neurologist was shown Amrich's improvement, his mother told the doctor, "You can't take credit for this one."

She said it was God who brought her son back.

CIVIL WAR SPANNING ACROSS AFGHANISTAN —

NEW DELHI, India — Rocket and artillery duels have killed more than 800 people in Kabul this summer, demolishing hopes that two international peace missions launched this past spring can lead to a ceasefire and an end to Afghanistan's civil war. Shifting alliances among feuding warlords have led to intensified fighting that this year has claimed almost 5,000 lives, wounded more than 25,000 and forced 600,000 people to flee Kabul, the capital, and fighting in recent months has spread to areas of the country that have not seen battle in years.

SOUTH KOREA ENCOURAGES LESS VIOLENCE —

SEOUL, South Korea — Both victims and perpetrators have said South Korea's new civilian government, inaugurated last year by former dissident Kim Young Sam, has produced a significant reduction in violence as a means of social control. Once omnipresent in all walks of life, beatings and other physical forms of coercion are being firmly rejected by a growing number of South Koreans as everyone from soldiers to parents speaks out against the use of force.

THAI OFFICIALS IMPLICATED IN JEWEL THEFT —

BANGKOK, Thailand — A scandal that broke out when a Thai servant stole more than $20 million worth of jewelry from a Saudi royal palace five years ago has spread into the upper echelons of Thailand's police department — a former police chief and his deputy were implicated in the case Aug. 15, while authorities suspect the guilt stretches even higher. Much of the "jewelry" given back to the Saudis at the time turned out to be fake, and many valuable pieces were missing — the beginning of a messy scandal that has dogged a succession of Thai governments.

ARSONIST ADMITS TO SETTING FOREST FIRES —

SAN FRANCISCO — A Northern California man pleaded guilty Monday to setting three forest fires in 1992 as part of a plot to make money for companies that lease firefighting equipment to state and federal agencies. Ernest Earl Ellison, who worked for his brother's water truck business, admitted he had been paid by fire-suppression equipment owners to set the blazes, U.S. Attorney Charles J. Stevens in Sacramento said.

COMPUTER HACKER CAUGHT IN LOS ANGELES —

LOS ANGELES — An FBI agent caught one of the nation's most-wanted computer hackers in a foot chase Monday in West Los Angeles, where the fugitive was sighted about two blocks from the FBI's office after spending nearly a year on the run. Justin Tanner Petersen, who has claimed that he worked undercover helping the FBI track down other criminal hackers, had been sought by federal agents since he fled while awaiting sentencing for hijacking radio station phone lines in Southern California to win contests with expensive prizes.

VIRGINIA GOVERNOR SEEKS TO END PAROLE —

RICHMOND, Va. — Coping with a tidal wave of new inmates flooding the Virginia state prison system could be the central challenge for Gov. George Allen as he tries to persuade the General Assembly to pass his $850 million proposal to eliminate parole. Prisons in Virginia already are so packed that the state is illegally housing 1,800 prisoners in jails. As outlined Monday, the administration's plan to absorb the influx would double the current size of the prison system, building so many new penitentiaries that few areas of the state would be unaffected.

FDA CONSIDERS TEST DEVICE FOR APPROVAL —

The Food and Drug Administration is testing an experimental device that keeps track of a patient's physiological responses while it delivers a heart-stimulating drug, then raises or lowers the drug's intravenous infusion rate to simulate a tough virtual jog around the block. The goal is to diagnose coronary artery disease without using the traditional run on a treadmill to determine the impact of exercise on patients. Cardiologists are debating the device's safety and cost as the FDA considers it for approval.

City Council gives approval to Applebee's Bar and Grill

By Connie Fritsche
Staff Reporter

A new restaurant specializing in family service could open in Carbondale in two months as a result of an approval from the Carbondale City Council.

The Council approved development of a new Applebee's Neighborhood Bar and Grill in the University Mall Subdivision at the Council meeting Tuesday evening.

Tom Redmond, Development Services Director for Carbondale, said the new restaurant, located west of University Mall, is scheduled to begin construction after the contract company finishes a new Applebee's in Terre Haute, Indiana.

Redmond said developers are hoping to have the Carbondale restaurant finished within two months.

Preference in construction work also was discussed at the meeting. Local union officials asked that the council pass an ordinance requiring local workers be given preference in the construction of the facility. Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan said she is concerned about the small number of women hired to work construction jobs.

Cleveland Matthews, a city council advisor who has worked with affirmative action, said the deficiency was due to the fact that there are so few women who are members of the local unions.

The Council voted to continue the current affirmative action approach to hiring workers and continue consideration of local preference.

Flanagan said she would still hope to see a step up action to recruit women into union positions.

The Council also voted in favor of revising a city code pertaining to therapeutic massage. The revision will allow persons trained in therapeutic massage to practice without going through the previous procedure of police investigation.

The Council could make no comment on a closed session held prior to the council meeting concerning pending litigation.

Edgar pledges more funds to Illinois women's shelters

By Dean Weaver
Senior Reporter

Gov. Jim Edgar announced last week that an additional $363,235 will be given to shelters which help victims of domestic violence. Carbondale's Women's Center, however, will not reap the benefits of any additional funds.

Edgar, who is running for reelection this year, stated in a press release that the department of public aid will give the Women's Center in Carbondale $203,349 for fiscal year 1995, which began July 1.

Juli Claussen, executive director of the center, said this figure is the same amount the center received in 1994 from the department of public aid.

Claussen said the center, which was started 22 years ago to help victims of domestic violence and sexual assault, has been receiving steadily increasing state money since the mid-1970s.

"Today, about 70 percent of our money comes from the state, 20 percent comes from local donations and 10 percent is from the corporations and the federal government," Claussen said.

Gail Handleman, spokesperson for Comptroller Dawn Clark Netsch, said domestic violence is a serious issue that Netsch, who is also the democratic gubernatorial candidate, plans to address if elected.

Handleman said Netsch commends the governor for increasing the funding for shelters, but wants to remind voters that Edgar cut funding for domestic violence by 3 percent in 1992.

Handleman said funding for liaison activities with criminal justice system was also eliminated in 1993 at Edgar's request.

Claussen said although the center relies heavily on state funding the local money they receive is equally important.

She said the Women's Center could reach out and help more women if they had additional funding.

"The center has had a 45 percent increase in the number of domestic violence clients over the past 5 years but only a 7 percent increase in staff," she said. Claussen said the Carbondale shelter, located at 408 W. Freeman, can comfortably

Sororities recruit new freshmen

By Charlotte Rivers
Campus Life Editor

Women who want to join one of the four SIUC sorority chapters can apply today and tomorrow as the Panhellenic council prepares for rush for new members.

This is the first time in three years the council has had a fall rush. Instead, the chapters have had spring rushes since 1990, when the council was not permitted to accept first-semester freshmen.

To participate this fall, interested freshmen must have graduated from high school in the upper 50 percent of their senior class, with at least a C average.

Sophomores, juniors and seniors also should have a minimum C average, but individual houses vary on their own grade point average requirements.

Panhellenic vice-president Deb Faermark said she is glad new freshmen are allowed to join sororities this year.

"This is the first fall in three years that we've had fall rush,"

Faermark, a senior in communication disorders from Glenwood, said, "I'm happy that first-semester freshmen are eligible, because it adds so much to their student involvement."

Panhellenic president Kristin Hinrichs, a senior in physical education from St. Louis, said it is hard to estimate how many rushees will participate, but she expects a total of about 200, many of whom will be freshmen.

Chris Bobrowicz, a freshman in psychology from Crystal Lake, said she is looking forward to rush

Bar entry age raised to reduce violations

WHEN THE CARBONDALE CITY COUNCIL raised the bar entry age to 19 last spring, council members intended the new age to be a deterrent for those underage from entering and drinking at local bars. But, as SIUC students returned to Carbondale more than a week ago, swarms of students, both underage and overaged, returned to the bars as well.

The search for a solution to underage drinking has been never ending for community members ever since students started minoring in drinking alcohol. The issue of underage drinking will continue to be talked about for a long time. As for now, those wishing to enter a bar must be 19 to do so legally. In the meantime, it is too early to analyze the effectiveness and the impact of the 19 entry age. But, those students under 19 should realize that they are breaking the law when they enter a bar.

ON FEB. 1, THE COUNCIL VOTED 5-0 TO RAISE the drinking age to 19. The new age has been in place since July 1, but the debate of raising it all the way to 21 is still alive and it could be revisited soon, according to Carbondale City Manager Jeff Doherty. In fact, when the 19 entry age was voted on last spring, two of the five city council members supported taking it all the way to 21.

In a recent article, Don Priddy, community resource officer for the Carbondale Police Department, said that officers are not specifically looking for those under 19 but underage drinkers. He said that arrests for underage consumption and possession, illegal bar entry and serving to minors in 1993 were 524; in 1994, so far, it was 418.

Carbondale city council members raised the entry age in hopes it would keep high schoolers out of the bars, provide a better transition period for incoming freshmen and help address the underage drinking problem. The members took another measure raising the minimum fine for underage drinking to $250. But, has raising the bar entry age to 19 and implementing a fine helped in solving the problem or is it just a matter of time before the entry age is raised to 21?

SUPPORTERS OF RAISING THE ENTRY AGE argue that 21 is the legal age to drink, and why else would students want to go into a bar. Continuing support in the community and on the council of raising the entry age to 21 could make it a possible scenario for Carbondale. On the flipside, underage drinkers would probably find more unsupervised settings (keg parties) to consume alcohol at instead of bars if it was raised to 21.

The controversy surrounding raising the age to 21 and the opposition to it may not be enough to stop the council from passing the measure if the number of arrests continue to go up because the 19 entry age did not work.

When at the local bars socializing with friends, underage drinkers, whether they are above or below 19, need to think about something: raising entry age to 21 might be one step closer than they think because of that one beer in their hand.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

CUBAN BLOCKADE II

Letters to the Editor

America should talk with Castro

Los Angeles Times

Talking with Fidel Castro is never easy for Washington's policy-makers—but that doesn't mean it should never be done. In the case at hand, the prospect of talks is downright encouraging: Secretary of State Warren Christopher has announced that a dialogue with Havana will begin Wednesday in an effort to curb the latest influx of Cuban refugees to this country.

The reasons for Washington's traditional reluctance to engage Havana diplomatically have been valid but increasingly are out of date. There is the fear that Castro will use any U.S. concession to score propaganda points against his No. 1 enemy. And every time an opening to Havana is pursued, it is decry by the most fervent anti-Castro exiles in this country's influential Cuban American community.

However, in this case the risks are worth running. There are specific issues on the table. A dialogue does not mean that Washington would or should be drawn into new areas of diplomatic engagement with a dictator whom the United States prefers to keep isolated—however arguable an isolationist policy might be.

Washington has already said it will increase the number of immigration visas issued through the U.S. Interests Section in Havana, which functions as an embassy in Cuba.

More visas for legal immigration, even if a wait is entailed, could ease the anxiety that is prompting many Cubans to try to enter this country illegally. In exchange, Washington could demand that the Cuban government not harass anyone who seeks such a visa.

The United States could also agree to Castro's demand that hijackers of Cuban vessels be arrested on arriving in the United States and be charged with a crime. In exchange, Washington should insist on a greater Cuban effort to stop refugees from taking to the sea.

Finally, the Clinton administration could win leverage with Castro by offering to let Cuban Americans resume sending money to relatives in Cuba.

The dollars flowing to the island in the last two years as a result of relaxed currency controls no doubt have somewhat helped Castro's faltering economy.

It can be argued that the fundamental premise of U.S. policy toward Cuba is painfully anachronistic now that the Cold War is over. If we can negotiate with North Korea about its nuclear program and trade with Communist China, why not talk to Castro?

Plan needed to deal with plutonium

Washington Post

As far as the world knows, the plutonium smuggled out of the former Soviet Union has not—so far—been sufficient to build a nuclear weapon. But the evidence that there's any trafficking at all in this sinister material is profoundly troubling. It's the most serious kind of a warning that governments—and not only Russia's—need to get urgently to work to manage and control the large surpluses of the stuff that the end of the Cold War has suddenly created.

Over the past couple of years, a long shelf-full of reports and studies has described the dangers that can arise as the nuclear powers dismantle their weapons, especially in a state that has collapsed into separate and independent countries. The interceptions of small amounts of plutonium by the German police point to a lapse of security that many close watchers foresaw as entirely possible.

The United States does not have a clear strategy for dealing with its own excess plutonium, let alone other countries'. As for working with Russia, Congress has appropriated some money to help Moscow set up a tight system of accounting and control, but very little of that money has actually been spent.

Attempts at cooperation have run into the general political turmoil there and, beyond that, a widespread reluctance among Russian officials to let foreigners anywhere near a substance that may still consider a great national asset.

Russia's President Boris Yeltsin is to visit German Chancellor Helmut Kohl in Berlin next week, and later in September, he is to meet President Clinton. The security over nuclear materials deserves a high place on the agendas for these conversations.

Mr. Clinton and his foreign policy advisers have been greatly distracted in recent months by Cuba, Haiti and Bosnia.

But in terms of American national interest and national security, Caribbean and Balkan policy hardly compare to this country's stake in the future of Russia and its nuclear armory. The leakage of plutonium so far is only a hint of what could happen.

Merkner said the chief neurosurgeon had never seen such a miracle either.

This was not the first time Amrich had surprised his parents with news of returning to school.

Amrich once was an electrician in the Lake County area, but in 1991 he left for Carbondale to get his bachelor's degree at SIUC.

Amrich's mother said they were surprised the first time — "but this we could not believe."

The accident and subsequent rehabilitation brought with it financial strain. Amrich said the DORS were paying for his college tuition and books.

Beverly Hardnett, rehabilitation services supervisor for the Department of Rehabilitation Services (DORS) at Carbondale, Anna and SIUC, said the University is a good choice for those with needs related to accessibility.

Hardnett said DORS coordinates services for people with mental and physical disabilities.

When a person is unable to pay for training, the primarily state-funded agency might find scholarships, work with the insurance company or use its federal funding to assist.

With DORS' assistance, Amrich now hopes to learn how to use his life experiences in a writing career.

police officers on campus paced vehicles thought to be speeding.

"We had to follow that car for a certain distance at a certain speed," Jordan said. This method is unsafe and officers can only claim the driver was "in excess of the speed limit."

"The units are the most practical tool for checking speed on campus," he said.

Kory Zakeri, a junior in chemistry from Chicago, said from his experiences on campus, daytime drivers are more responsible than drivers at night.

"Nighttime is when there's a problem, people driving home at night seem to be a little inebriated," Zakeri said. "I think it's (radar units) great especially at night."

Christy Goddard, a senior in marketing from Mt. Vernon, said she believes the units are "ridiculous."

"Traffic on campus is so bad that you are unable to exceed the speed limit," Goddard said. "They should use the money for a new parking garage or something for students. Speeding is not a problem."

Rob Gunter, a sophomore in creative writing from Belleville, said his car broke down several weeks ago and he has been walking to classes.

"Having had to walk to class the last few weeks I hate trying to cross, especially by the Communications Building. You think you're going to get killed," he said.

However, Gunter said he hates to get pulled over by the police and does not look forward to that aspect of the units.

degree completion," Rubin said. "If you can't get into a class and have to remain (at a university) for an extra semester because the school did not schedule effectively, education ends up costing more money than necessary."

Rubin said the committee has no specific plans for universities to improve degree completion timelines, but is asking IBHE to consider recommending that state schools improve their timelines.

She said the committee also is requesting the SIU Board of Trustees set tuition rates one year before they go into effect so students and their families have time to plan ahead.

"Currently, the Board of Trustees doesn't set tuition rates until almost the time that students attend the first semester of classes," Rubin said. "Many students get screwed because of this."

Monty Peerbhai, alternate IBHE-SAC representative, said the committee also wants to do further research on the allocation of grants and loans to help students fund their education.

A grant is a sum of money given to students that does not have to be paid back, while a loan is borrowed money that the student must pay back. He said the committee is considering a system that limits IBHE grant money primarily to freshmen and sophomores.

Juniors and seniors then would receive mostly loans if this plan were enacted, Peerbhai said.

Deb Smitley, IBHE associate director for public affairs, said the justification for this plan is to encourage the retention of students during their first two years of college. Smitley said the plan also would be more financially feasible for students.

"The idea is to have students at academic risk receive grants because if they receive loans and then drop out, they must repay the loan immediately," Smitley said.

Benjamin Shepherd, SIUC vice president for academic affairs and provost, said he is concerned that many students are becoming dependent on loans to fund their college education.

"It concerns me that so many students borrow large amounts of money to obtain a quality education," Shepherd said. "When students borrow money they accumulate a debt. We need to look at that debt and wonder how students and taxpayers will ever be able to pay it back."

skills.

This semester, he is enrolled in regular general education classes.

It was hard for Amrich to accept life in the early stages with his prosthetic leg, his residual limb, which he calls "stumpy," and with the difficulties resulting from severe brain trauma.

He said once he was able, he turned to alcohol to relieve the pressures he felt from suddenly being different.

His mother helped encourage Amrich to put away the bottle and start moving forward.

Amrich has been through intensive rehabilitative care to help him adjust. Once released from the trauma center, he spent the next four and a half months at the Rehabilitation Institute in Chicago. He has been through a seemingly endless series of operations and tests since then. The last was this summer, to correct the alignment of his foot.

These days his artificial leg allows him to walk with canes, but Amrich prefers to drive in his wheel chair, which he calls his "hot rod Harry," for most distances.

Amrich's two friends who witnessed the accident, both recent SIUC graduates, were not injured by the car that hit him. He said he was glad they were not hurt and hopes they never suffer any form of survivor's guilt.

"God was watching over me or I wouldn't be here today," he said.

Amrich's mother expressed a similar opinion.

"We just knew beyond a doubt that God was with Michael throughout this whole thing," she said.

Amrich said he has little remorse or bitterness about the loss of his leg and some of the blessings he once took for granted.

"I was not a nice person before," he said.

The accident caused him to rethink his morals and goals, he said.

A poem Amrich wrote incorporates some of the mottos he developed during his recovery — "Deep within my soul is the power to overcome but only with the help from God can this power rise and come forth."

Amrich said he grew close to Merkner after the accident.

Last Thanksgiving he read his poetry to the Messiah Lutheran Church in Wauconda.

Merkner said Amrich's accident changed his view of how God is working in people's lives today.

"God had a special plan for Michael — I'm convinced of that," he said.

Amrich said when he is in his hometown, he visits with Merkner often.

"We go out to lunch, and the pastor says, 'Let's let God pay for this one,' which means the pastor gets it," Amrich said.

Amrich said he doesn't let God pay every time, but God usually can afford the better meals.

"When I pay, we have hot dogs," he said.

Shryock to host Celebrity Series

By Aleksandra Macys
Senior Reporter

With a new semester, new faces appear on campus, new classes are taken by students and some old and new appearances are made by artists of all walks through Shryock Auditorium's Celebrity Series.

The series, which is entering its 29th season, is a not-for-profit function of SIUC that offers a wide variety of entertainment such as jugglers, dancers and singers.

Robert Cerchio, director of the auditorium, said all the performances in the series should be spectacular.

The series for fall semester kicks off with a band that Cerchio said played in Carbondale six years ago. BeauSoleil avec Michael Doucet, a Cajun-style band that mixes zydeco music with blues, country and other styles of music, will appear on Sept. 23 at 8 p.m.

Next in the series is the Lerner and Loewe musical, "My Fair Lady," which will be performed Oct. 28 at 8 p.m. This successful musical was one of many good performances on the circuit this year, Cerchio said.

San Francisco Taiko Dojo Japanese drums will bring their show to Shryock with a bang. The performance consists of a percussion instruments performance, discipline of mind and body, and unity among the drummers. This energizing performance will take place Nov. 3 at 8 p.m.

"Oleanna — A Power Play," which Cerchio said he saw while in New York, is a play about sexual harassment on campuses and the abuses of power that can lead to this problem. It will be presented Nov. 14 at 8 p.m.

"Oleanna is not recommended for children, but it is a brilliant piece besides the subject matter," Cerchio said.

The series continues in the spring semester with "Guys and Dolls," The Alberta Ballet, The Flying Karamazov Brothers, "Camelot," and The David Parsons Dance Company.

Other special events offered this semester include Swan Lake, which Cerchio said has never been performed at the auditorium, the Mantovani Orchestra and Chorus and The Illinois Symphony, which will feature two SIUC Alumni singing.

Shryock Auditorium was constructed in 1917 and named after the University's fourth president. It is the largest auditorium in Southern Illinois, seating more than 1,200 patrons.

For more information on performances or tickets call 453-ARTS. Package and other discount tickets are still available.

Retiring music professor to be honored tonight

By Kellie Huttes
Senior Reporter

An SIUC professor who has played numerous roles, from leading the campus orchestra to protecting buildings from riots in the 1960s, during his 32 years with the school, will be honored along with 112 other University employees at a retirement dinner tonight.

Music professor George A. Hussey said he has not seen many changes within the University or its School of Music during his years at SIUC.

"Most students have been really nice and have appreciated all types of music taught to them," he said.

Hussey joined the University in 1963 because of his friendships in Southern Illinois and connections he had with Shryock Auditorium when he performed as a symphony oboist.

Hussey has conducted the SIUC orchestra since 1992.

Robert Weiss, acting School of Music director, said Hussey stepped in and energized the orchestra more than anyone in the past.

"He is one of our best-known performers who has played with major orchestras," he said.

Although Hussey never intended to teach, he has taught a variety of music courses, and students say he is a very caring professor, Weiss said.

Hussey said he was the first woodwind player ever to lead the orchestra, because violinists or string players usually were chosen.

Weiss said one of Hussey's recent challenges has been mastering the baroque oboe — an old instrument from the baroque period that he taught himself to play and perform.

Hussey said he has put away his old oboe and is concentrating on the baroque. After his retirement, Hussey will perform and possibly teach the baroque oboe at Oberlin University in Ohio, he said.

Hussey's accomplishments include playing with the New American Woodwind Quintet, a faculty ensemble that has performed across the United States, Europe and China, with an old friend, Jervis Underwood, another SIUC music professor.

Underwood said he met Hussey when they both were traveling during weekends to play with the Memphis orchestra in the 1960s.

Underwood said Hussey was influential in his orchestral career and bringing him to SIUC in the late '60s.

The annual reception and dinner, hosted by SIUC President John C. Guyon and his wife, Joyce, will take place in the Student Center Gallery Lounge and ballrooms at 6 p.m.

activities.

"Ever since I was in high school, I've wanted to belong to a sorority," she said. "A couple of girls on my floor in the dorm were talking about it, and we decided to do it."

Bobrowicz said she expects rush to be time-consuming but well worth the investment.

"I think it would probably be like a home away from home," she said.

Rush counselors, called Rho Chi's, will be in the Free Forum area today from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and in the Faner Hall breezeway from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday, Hinrichs said. There is a $25 application fee which is used to defray rush expenses, she said.

Although counselors are sorority members, their chapter affiliation remains unnamed throughout rush to eliminate potential bias, Faermark said.

Delta Zeta member Meghan McCauley, a senior in marketing from St. Louis, said her part in rush is to meet the rushees and stay near them when they become pledges.

"Pledgship is learning about the chapter and fun activities," McCauley said. "We have a philanthropy that we contribute to every year. For our national chapter, it's speech and hearing."

Other community service projects include telethons and blood drives, she said.

Rush activities begin Sept. 7 with an orientation meeting, and rushees meet with their counselors.

Rushees and houses are matched up on a mutual quota system, Hinrichs said.

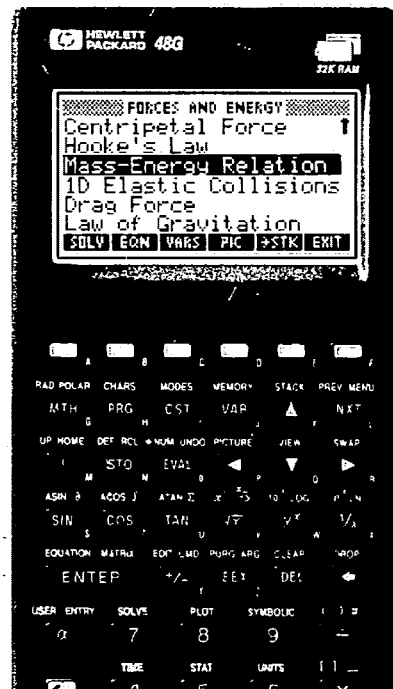

"Rushees sign bid cards, and sororities have a list they turn in. Rushees are matched up and we try to give them their first choice," she said.

About 85 percent of all rushees are accepted, Hinrichs said.

New members can expect to spend about $300 for the semester of their pledgship and about $150-$180 for each following semester, she said.

GPSC creates board to find SIU chancellor

By Chad Anderson
Staff Reporter

SIUC's Graduate and Professional Student Council will discuss gaining RSO status for the Pro Bono Tax Program and will also announce a search committee for a new chancellor at tonight's meeting.

The search for a new chancellor has become a major topic because the job has come under scrutiny by Illinois lawmakers.

Patrick Smith, GPSC president, said he is undecided on the topic.

"I've been following that question, and I'm not really sure if a chancellor is needed," Smith said.

He said he thinks some of the changes that are important.

Smith also said the possibility of students being left out of the selection process hurts the student's right to be represented.

"I've been following that question, and I'm not really sure if a chancellor is needed."

—Patrick Smith

"Board policy states that one faculty member and one non-faculty member will be nominated. That doesn't mean the non-faculty member will be a student. I'm afraid the students just won't be heard," Smith said.

The meeting will also cover the issue of granting RSO status to the Pro Bono Tax Program. Without RSO status, the program would not be affiliated to the University.

If the group is granted RSO status, it will receive office space and would be affiliated to the University, which is the last obstacle in the way of the program getting started.

The purpose of the program is to relieve some of the pressure and stress included in the income tax auditing process by having people help students to work with the program as a service. For more information on Southern Illinois, who are being audited by the Internal Revenue Service.

Biomedical grant introduces teenagers to science

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

Pre-college students unsure of the kind of career they want for the future could explore science and medicine, thanks to a new grant received at SIUC.

Associate professor James S. Ferraro, of the School of Medicine's Physiology Department, was awarded $250,000 for projects introducing biomedical technology to middle school and high school students.

The 1994 Precollege Science Education Initiative for Biomedical Research Institutions awarded the grant to Ferraro, who will create programs for area students and disburse money from the 5-year grant for them.

"It's for good students who don't have a direction yet, to introduce them to science and see if that's where they want to go," he said. "It wasn't designed for the school (of medicine) to benefit, but it's continuing what the mission of the school is — providing general practitioners to the Southern Illinois area."

"It's (the grant) for good students who don't have a direction yet, to introduce them to science and see if that's where they want to go."

— James S. Ferraro

Ferraro said the first area of the project — a six-week program for teenagers interested in science — was implemented last summer. The program brought eight students between 13 and 17 years old to the University where they worked for 30- to 40-hour a week in a laboratory setting at the University's physiology department.

"They learned about public speaking, statistics, how to use the library; things that would be useful as a researcher," he said.

Ferraro said the two boys and six girls in the program — four from Carbondale Community High School and four from Unity Point Consolidated School — each received a stipend of approximately $1,000 for their work.

Ferraro said he had little time to organize the summer program once he learned he received the grant award, but the project was a surprising success for the University and others involved.

"A lot of people were surprised at how professional and knowledgeable the kids were," he said.

Rick Steger, a physiology professor, said he worked with one of the students on a project which examined the complications of diabetes and was pleased with the student's progression.

"I had high confidence (in them) and that confidence was realized," he said.

Ferraro said the students gave a presentation of their data to University faculty at the end of the summer and the work will probably be published in science journals.

"The kids were excellent," he said. "They were enthusiastic and computative of knowledge, and it went amazingly well."

Michael Blair, a 7th and 8th grade science teacher at Unity Point School, said he helped recruit students for the program and was impressed with the students' work and the program's effectiveness.

"It seemed like a positive experience for the kids," he said. "We don't get involved with SIU as much as we probably should, but this was one opportunity in we could get into the medical school."

Blair said he hoped more programs would focus on junior high, in addition to high school students.

"If you can get them started (in science) earlier, they're more likely to stay with it," he said.

Another area of the project will train teachers next summer, Ferraro said.

"We'll be bringing in teachers to work with faculty members learning hands on activities to help (their students) learn more about a particular area of science," he said.

Ferraro said the teachers will also receive a stipend for their participation.

Another area of the project, "Resource of Seminars" is currently being implemented, Ferraro said.

The program will "provide schools with a list of topic resources, a list of subject areas in biomedicine and professors who can give a talk," he said.

Ferraro said the project will also purchase computers for schools in the area.

Skamaggedon '94 tour pulls into Carbondale tonight

By Stephanie Moletti
Senior Reporter

A trio of ska bands have joined together for a 40-day tour across the United States and will be making a stop in Carbondale tonight at Hangar 9.

Skamaggedon '94 consists of Gangster Fun of Detroit, Buck 'O' Nine of San Diego and MU330 of St. Louis. MU330 performed twice earlier this year at Hangar 9, 511 S.

Illinois Ave. Richard Simpson, co-owner of Hangar 9, said the groups started their tour Aug. 22 in Tucson, Ariz. and will end their tour Sept. 24 in Denver.

"Carbondale just happened to be in the way, so we've got them (tonight), Simpson said. "They are all very high-quality bands."

Each band is touring with the support of a new release. Gangster Fun's "Time Flies When You're Gangster Fun" from Icupp Records, Buck 'O' Nine's "Songs in the Key of Bree," from Immune and MU330's "Press" from No Records will be available at the show.

Pam Cross, of Cross Publicity, the company handling the tour, said ska music is influenced by just about every type of music. -- funk, thrash, jazz, blues and reggae.

Cross said ska's key elements are dancing and fun.

MU330, named for a high school music class most of the members took together, has been together since the summer of 1991. Since January, MU330's gigs have elevated from house parties in their hometown to national touring.

Cross said it is their sound and attitude that makes this six-member band so unique.

Gangster Fun is a nine-piece band which formed in 1986. The band released their debut album

"Come See Come SKA," in 1989 and is awaiting the release of their second album in September.

Buck 'O' Nine is a seven-piece San Diego-based band, who recently released their debut album. The band said the new releases "will lift you up and make you smile."

The show will begin at about 9:30 p.m. There is a $3 cover charge and each band will play one set.

according to news agency accounts from the Jamaican capital.

Although U.S. officials say they still hope to resolve the issue peacefully, they admit that an invasion is becoming increasingly likely. At the United Nations, Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali admitted failure Tuesday in a last-ditch attempt to persuade the military government of Lt. Gen. Raul Cedras to step aside in favor of Aristide, who was deposed in a bloody coup in September 1991.

Boutros-Ghali informed the Security Council in a closed meeting that his special mission had failed and that he would do no more for now. "The initiative has not been successful," he told reporters afterward.

The U.S. government sent a high-ranking delegation, led by Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott and Deputy Defense Secretary John Deutch, to Kingston in an effort to assure the United States of at least token international participation if it decides to go ahead with an invasion.

Talbott and Deutch are scheduled to return to Washington Wednesday after an overnight trip to the Dominican Republic to inspect the porous Dominican-Haitian border and to urge the authorities in Santo Domingo to crack down on cross-border smuggling. Haiti and the Dominican Republic share the island of Hispaniola.

Jamaica, Trinidad-Tobago, Barbados and Belize agreed to contribute troops, although Jamaican Foreign Minister Paul Robertson told a news conference that the total Caribbean contribution would be "a light company, approximately 266 troops."

Robertson said Bahamas and Guiana were considering joining the force but had made no final decision.

Despite the tiny size of the Caribbean contribution, Talbott called the meeting "a watershed" because it guaranteed the United States at least some foreign participation. The four countries were the first to make a firm commitment to send troops.

Deutch said the Pentagon will begin at once to give the Caribbean contingent U.S. logistic support.

"The time for action has arrived," Deutch said.

"There can be no doubt in anybody's mind that the multinational force is going to Haiti."

Those words seemed to predict an imminent invasion but Deutch explained that a multinational army will be needed in Haiti in any event, either to invade and force out Cedras or to help maintain order if the military government gives way peacefully.

But U.S. officials said that with the failure of the U.N. effort, the chances of a peaceful resolution of the crisis were fast running out.

'84 Olympics official denies drug test coverup

Los Angeles Times

Documents shredded accidentally, commissioner says

PARIS — Prince Alexandre de Merode of Belgium, chairman of the International Olympic Committee's medical commission, confirmed Monday that documents concerning positive drug tests during the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles were destroyed before he examined them, but he said that he believes the episode resulted from an accident and not a cover-up.

"This was a small incident," he said. "It's not a scandal."

Since arriving here for this week's Centennial Olympic Congress, members of the IOC's executive board have responded with a similar lack of concern about a recent BBC television report alleging that test results were stolen from De Merode's office in Los Angeles and shredded in a conspiracy involving officials of the IOC and the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

"You're talking about something that's 10 years old," said IOC Vice President Kevan Gosper of Australia. "I think we would be better served to discuss medical commission issues that are pertinent now."

Another board member, Anita DeFrantz of Los Angeles, said: "It's pretty old news. I don't know why it's being brought up now."

The IOC's director general, Francois Carrard, said last week that the executive board would seek information from De Merode during the medical commission's report scheduled for Sunday. When Carrard learned, however, that De Merode would be detained in Belgium until Monday, he said the executive board might not pursue the matter.

"It's not on the agenda," Carrard said.

Upon arriving in Paris on Monday, De Merode said that five or six test results were destroyed, not nine as reported by the British television network. He also disputed the BBC's claim that he knows the names of the offending Olympians, saying that the code numbers used to connect the athletes to their tests were shredded before he had an opportunity to identify them.

"Nobody knows," he said.

De Merode said he believes that the documents, most of them involving tests conducted during the final two days of the Games, were victims of the LAOOC's efforts to save money as the committee shut down as many operations as possible after the closing ceremony.

When De Merode returned to his office in the Biltmore Hotel on the night after the Games ended, he said he discovered that it had been converted into a suite.

"I called the organizing committee and was told, 'You must understand, you are in the United States. The Games are finished, everything is finished,'" he said.

He said he went to LAOOC offices the next day to inquire about the medical commission documents, including the drug test results, and was told by the organizing committee's chief medical officer, Tony Daly, that they had been sent to IOC headquarters in Lausanne, Switzerland.

When De Merode said he would travel to Lausanne to inspect them, Daly changed his story, according to De Merode, who said he was then told: "I must tell the truth. Everything was destroyed in the paper shredder. We are sorry, but we can't produce anything from your documents. I apologize, but we can't do anything."

De Merode said he believed the explanation.

"I don't believe it was intentional because it's certainly not in their interest," he said. "The U.S. mentality was the Games were finished. They didn't want to pay. They were a private organization."

The U.S. attitude is not the same as the European one. They have their efficiency. Everything is done very quickly. They like to save money.

"That's why I believe it was an accident. It's an unfortunate story, but it was not done deliberately."

Black quarterbacks on rise in college football programs

The Washington Post

Picture the perfect quarterback. He is a team leader, confident with just the right mix of ego and discipline. He is smart, able to read defenses and manage his squad on the field. He is someone who everyone else can look up to and emulate. And in your mind, he is probably white.

"It's one of those things that nobody wants to talk about but a lot of people feel," said Calvin Hill, who played fullback with the Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins but was an all-American quarterback at a New York prep school in 1965. "It's just conditioning. People think: black people can jump, dance and sing. They're great on defense, but they can't play quarterback."

Although that attitude has been slower to change in the National Football League, at the college level the position is being filled more and more often by blacks.

"I've always wanted to be a quarterback," said Virginia Tech's Maurice DeShazo. "If they don't want me at QB in the NFL, I'll go to the CFL (Canadian Football League). I don't want to play anything else."

Before the '70s, many black quarterbacks were "moved over" as soon as they got to college. Hill, who turned down an offer from UCLA because he figured he'd have a better chance at quarterback if he went to an Ivy League school, attended Yale with the expectation of a lot of playing time. Instead, on his second day of practice, Hill was told he would not be the signal-caller—a white player named Brian Dowling was handed the job instead.

Although Dowling went on to become one of the best quarterbacks in Yale history, he was never able to make it in the pros, and Hill said he feels he might have had better luck if he had been given a chance.

"It hurt because it was something that had been very, very important to me," he said. "That's the premier position and I know a lot of black guys who were great quarterbacks in that time but never got to play because of their color."

As attitudes changed in the decades that followed, some black players were able to make it as quarterbacks in college, but still weren't considered suitable for the professional game.

Turner Gill, a three-time All-Big Fight pick and a candidate for the 1983 Heisman Trophy, was the first black player to quarterback for an extended period of time at Nebraska. By the time Gill left Lincoln, his team had finished second in the polls, he had passed for 3,317 yards, rushed for 1,317 yards and completed 54 percent of his passes.

Despite those numbers, Gill is the only one of the top five quarterbacks in Nebraska history who wasn't drafted into the NFL. He is also the only black in the group.

"I had some negatives that made me a risk, but I guess a lot of people do," said Gill, who spent two years in the CFL before switching over to minor-league baseball.

season format and an extra playoff tier. But the sport has not gone without a World Series since New York Giants manager John McGraw refused to let his team participate the year after the first Series was played in 1903.

No one can measure what kind of damage a World Series cancellation would do to the image of Major League Baseball, but the owners and players appear ready to find out.

The divide is so wide in the labor dispute that both sides seem willing to take any risk to prevail. The owners are stuck on cost certainty. The players are stuck on the status quo. The Series hangs in the balance.

"I know it's a source of grave concern and I'm very sensitive to the frustration and anxiety people are feeling," said acting Commissioner Bud Selig, "but we are where we are because we have repressed these problems and ignored these problems for decades."

If the World Series is the ultimate victim of the strike, public confidence in the sport could fall to a level not seen since the Black Sox Scandal of 1919. The strike already has stirred bad feelings among the fans and brought increased scrutiny from the government. The loss of the postseason tournament could be devastating.

"Of course it could," said management negotiator Richard Ravitch. "It would be the first time in 90 years that the World Series was not played. That's not good. There will be a tremendous loss of money to the players and owners and a tremendous loss for the fans. That's why we have to leave no stone unturned in an attempt to settle this, but not at the expense of continuing this conflagration between the players and owners next year."

If you asked union director Donald Fehr, you'd get the same kind of reasoning.

The Major League Baseball Players Association will lose the millions that would have gone into the pension fund and to individual postseason shares, yet the players consider the concessions being sought by management so onerous that the loss of the postseason may be a necessary evil.

The union may even try to use the prospect of losing the postseason to create another negotiating deadline for management.

The Aug. 12 strike deadline did not have the desired effect, but the union might be able to juice up the negotiations by setting a September deadline after which it would refuse to play the Series even if a settlement were reached.

"It's conceivable, but we're not at that point now," Fehr said late last week. "It's getting late."

currently offers," Uler said. "I plan to offer basic, intermediate and advanced level classes in addition to introductory classes."

He also said the wall at the Recreation Center is only vertical, which makes it severely limited. Uler will offer various climbing surfaces as well as an enclosed natural cliff in order to make his facility more multi-dimensional.

In addition, Uler plans to offer rates comparable to bowling rates, instructional programs for youths, as well as adults, and renting the building for birthday parties and special events.

Aside from recreation and instruction, Uler hopes to hold rock climbing competitions and eventually host American Sport Climbing Federation sponsored events at the facility.

Although it is still in the planning stages, Uler said he has a site chosen in the Giant City area, and response to the new facility has been largely positive. He has his sights set on opening the climb-specific facility some time next year.

Youthful Salukis, Illinois State, Drake set pace

By Doug Durso
Senior Reporter

The Saluki women's cross country team has been picked second in the Missouri Valley Conference preseason poll for the fourth straight year.

The squad was picked to finish behind Illinois State who edged SIUC 105-96 in the voting.

Don DeNoon, head coach of the Salukis, said being picked in the top two in four consecutive years shows the consistency of the program.

"Being selected high in the polls and finishing in the top four over the last several years shows how the program has improved and remains one of the top teams in the conference," he said.

He said the top four teams are all very even and those teams could finish in any order.

"Illinois State is a very strong team who will contend for the championship, and I think Indiana State is a sleeping giant who has a lot of talent and will give every other team problems," DeNoon said.

Illinois State has three runners returning who finished in the top 15 at the Missouri Valley Conference Championship last year including sophomore Sue Daggett, who finished fourth in the meet.

Drake, who finished second in the conference last year, is predicted to finish third in the poll.

Drake returns with three runners from last year's top 15, including junior Jamie Malone leading the bulldogs with a seventh-place finish in the 1993 MVC Championship.

Defending MVC Champion Indiana State is predicted to finish fourth in the conference this year, but the Sycamores have last year's conference champion, senior Amy Cohee, leading a team that has four top-25 finishers coming back.

The key to SIUC's success will be how fast the young runners can help senior co-captains Deborah Daehler and Jennie Horner. The team is young with only two seniors, one junior, four sophomores and eight freshman.

"If we can stay healthy, get the right attitude and stay together, we will be able to contend for the top spot in the conference," DeNoon said.

He said the first two weeks of practice have gone extremely well in preparation for the season.

"Practice is going very well, the team is really coming together and practicing really hard," he said. "The team has put in over 100 hours of practice and are ready for the season to start."

The Salukis will host Southeast Missouri State in a dual meet on Sept. 3 at 6 p.m.

Rock climbing facility planned by SIUC alum

By Chris Clark
Staff Reporter

Rock climbing is an increasingly popular sport in Southern Illinois and Eric Ulner hopes to take that popularity one step further by opening an indoor climbing facility in the Carbondale area.

Ulner has compiled a list of successful ventures in the past, including owning his own outdoor climbing instruction and guide service. He was the co-designer of the climbing wall at the Recreation Center and has authored a book, "Vertical Heartland: A Rock Climber's Guide to Southern Illinois". He also has a bachelor's degree in recreation from SIUC and has been involved in technical rock climbing for 17 years.

Ulner said he is opening the facility because rock climbing is one of the fastest growing sports in the United States and that the International Olympic Committee is even considering competitive climbing as a demonstration sport in upcoming Olympic games.

Mark Klonicke, a rock climbing instructor at SIUC's Base Camp, agrees that Ulner's facility has a large market to tap into.

"The idea could work, if it's marketed right," Klonicke said. "The climbing population here is large. A lot of climbers visit here from the St. Louis area and Kentucky."

Ulner said the new facility will provide a wider variety of instruction for those at different levels of skill and enthusiasm.

"What I have to offer is more than what the Recreation Center

Baseball's image weakens as labor dispute continues

The Baltimore Sun

NEW YORK — Talk about an October surprise. How about the first October since 1904 that there won't be a World Series?

That possibility becomes more real every day that passes without a settlement in baseball's ugly labor dispute. The baseball strike is in its third week, and there is little reason to believe that it will end in time to salvage a credible postseason.

No doubt, every attempt will be made to recoup the estimated $140 million in television revenues that were expected to spring from the fall classic, but the players and owners have set themselves up for a classic fall. It is a looming public relations disaster that could leave scars on baseball's fan following for years to come.

"I think it would be devastating."

said Hall of Famer Brooks Robinson, whose reputation as a clutch player was cemented in the World Series. "I think a lot of people are losing interest right now. If they settle in the next few days, OK, but if it goes into mid-September, who cares?"

Of course, a lot of people will care. In Cleveland, where the Indians have a chance to make it to the World Series for the first time since 1954, the cancellation of the postseason would be a major civic disappointment. Same in Montreal, where the surprising Expos were in excellent position to earn their first trip to the World Series.

Baseball has proven resilient after previous labor disputes, even after the 50-day players strike of 1981 that led to a hybrid split-
