Underage drinkers test the limits

72 underage arrests in past two weeks in Carbondale

"If you're underage, you can get arrested walking down the street with an unopened six-pack."

Nicole Sack
Daily Egyptian

The beginning of the fall semester is a time for setting into a new environment, making new friends and adjusting to class loads. For some underage students, it means feeling their way around the bar scene.

While the age of bar admission in Carbondale is 19, the drinking age is still 21. Underage college students who see alcohol consumption as a rite of passage on college campuses very often overlook this fact.

According to Carbondale Deputy Chief Steve Odum, during the past two weekends there have been 72 arrests for underage possession in Carbondale.

While Carbondale maintains the same amount of police officers during the beginning of the school year, they are refocused to concentrate on more effective bar checks, Odum said.

Brain Callahan, owner and general manager of Carboz, said that while his establishment has no formal arrangements with the police department, his staff makes sure that the police are treated with respect when they make periodic checks for underage drinkers.

"First of all, we don't serve minors," Callahan said. "Second, we monitor activity at the bar."

Security guards look for people without 'over 21' stamps, while bartenders and waitresses watch the customers they are serving, Callahan said. Callahan has his employees undergo TIPS (Training for Intervention Procedures), which teaches servers, sellers and

Blagojevich toughens stakes for methamphetamine labs

Amber Ellis
Daily Egyptian

Methamphetamine has been creeping into the forefront of the underground drug world in Southern Illinois for quite some time.

Under a new bill signed by Blagojevich on his whirlwind tour of Southern Illinois, harsher legislation will keep anyone who produces methamphetamine behind bars.

HB561 denies probation for anyone convicted of second and subsequent offenses of possession with the intent to manufacture or the illegal transportation of any amount of the ingredients in the making of methamphetamine.

Rep. Donald Moffitt, R-Galesburg, who sponsored the bill, said the bill was introduced and signed because of testimony by the state's fire service.

Moffitt said exploding meth labs are particularly dangerous to responding emergency personnel.

He also said it is hazardous to people who live in properties adjoined to meth labs and people who move into homes that occupied meth labs.

"There is residue left behind when people move out - it can be left in the drapes or carpet," Moffitt said. "It's dangerous when you have small children crawling around."

Rep. William Grunloh, D-Effingham, a chief co-sponsor of the bill, said several new bills have been recently signed to help aid the state in trying to strengthen penalties against methamphetamine production.

"[Methamphetamine] is not like the usual recreational drugs," Grunloh said. "You may not get to try it more than once. It could kill you or hurt you the first time. It's really a nasty drug."

According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, methamphetamine has several "street names," including

"speed," "chalk" and "ice."

Methamphetamine, an addictive stimulant drug, attacks the body's central nervous system.

Possible side effects of the drug include wakefulness, decreased appetite, hypothermia and euphoria. It also causes paranoia, hallucinations and mood disturbances.

Grunloh said methamphetamine use is becoming increasingly popular because its ingredients are readily accessible.

Statewide retail stores began helping curtail this problem by not selling lump sums of products that are used to manufacture methamphetamine, including cough syrup, batteries and glass bowls.

"This is serious," Grunloh said. "It's much more dangerous than any other drug I've seen."

House party website replaces sidewalk chalk

Website informs students about house parties, bars

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, SIU Admissions, SIU curriculum and wait what's this, PartySIU.com?

Yes, that is right. www.PartySIU.com is a new website created to give SIU students the low down on what house parties and bars are happening in town.

The creators of the website, who have asked to remain anonymous, started the site last week after an idea created last year.

"It is no different than chalk on sidewalks," one of the creators said.

The creator said there have been over 6,000 hits so far. He describes the website as a free place to go to find out where and what parties are going on.

Sean Bell, an SIU sophomore, thinks the website is a good idea.

"It's nice," he said. "You can map out exactly where you want to go to."

The site allows people to post listings for parties and to browse through the listings' details. Each listing gives the basic information of the date, time and location with printable maps to each party site.

PartySIU also gives details, such as the amount of kegs, the type of beer and liquor and the type of music being played.

Once the party is posted, the host can change its status. There is either a green sign meaning "Go" or a red stop sign warning "Cops,"

Social Security numbers sold on Web

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost everything is for sale on the Internet — even the Social Security numbers of top government officials like CIA Director George Tenet and Attorney General John Ashcroft, consumer advocates warned Wednesday.

The California-based Foundation for Taxpayer and Consumer Rights said for $26 each it was able to purchase the Social Security numbers and home addresses for Tenet, Ashcroft and other top Bush administration officials, including Karl Rove, the president's chief political adviser.

That illustrates the need for stronger protections of personal information, the group said.

Specifically, the foundation is concerned about legislation in the House that would amend the Fair Credit Reporting Act. The bill, sponsored by Reps. Spencer Bachus, R-Alabama, Darlene Hooley, D-Oregon, and dozens of other members, aims to prevent identity theft and improve the accuracy of consumer records, among other things.

In addition to Social Security numbers, some online sites will give out a person's bank account balance for about $300.

EPA exempts old plants from key air-pollution rule

WASHINGTON (KRT) — In one of the biggest changes to pollution regulations in recent years, the Bush administration on Wednesday eased a key air-pollution rule affecting more than 500 older power plants and some 20,000 aging factories and refineries.

The change would allow operators of these facilities to make significant equipment upgrades without having to install costly new pollution-control equipment. Until now, plants couldn't make significant changes without also installing enhanced air-pollution controls such as new scrubbers in their stacks.

The Environmental Protection Agency's new rule allows plant owners to make upgrades worth up to 20 percent of a plant's value without installing new air-pollution controls. A $500 million coal-fired power plant, for example, could replace $100 million in equipment yearly without adding new pollution controls.

The change, like much of the Bush energy plan, sides with industry in the tension between increased energy production and potential environmental degradation. The hope is that by increasing the efficiency of older coal-fired plants more power can be produced more cheaply.

Puree pandemonium at annual tomato battle

BUNOL, Spain (Reuters) — Blood-red streams of tomato juice oozed through the streets of the tiny Spanish town of Bunol Wednesday as tens of thousands of people hurled tons of squashy fruit in the world's biggest food fight.

"Fantabulous! It's the most exciting experience I've ever had with a group of people," Krista Moller, 19, from San Francisco, said.

With a thundering firework at midday signaling the start of the "Tomatina," five trucks dumped 120 tons of plum tomatoes into Bunol's narrow central street where 35,000 people were especially awaiting the ammunition.

Locals and visitors from around the globe lobbed the tomatoes at each other and, when the fruit turned to puree, reached down to whisk red froth into the air. The "People's Square" filled with the acidic sweet smell of tomatoes and slimy stained bodies.

People rubbed juice into each others' hair and skin while some men took advantage of the party to grab women and smear their chests in pulp.

Power cut cripples London

LONDON, England — Passengers were trapped on the London Underground as a power outage struck the city during evening rush hour Thursday.

A spokesman for London Underground said 60 percent of the subway system had been halted by the outage, including the majority of services in central London. The failure happened around 6:15 p.m.

By 7:30 p.m., Britain's energy regulator Ofgem said power was returning to parts of London.

Thousands of people took to the streets as dusk approached. Streetlights in some parts of London were not working in scenes reminiscent of the blackout that hit North America earlier this month.

London Underground said the power failure was having a "serious" impact on the whole of the city's metro network. Rail services from major stations including Victoria, London Bridge and Waterloo were also affected.

Where does the money go?

Parking Division splits $1.5 million between maintenance and improvement

Leah Williams
Daily Egyptian

Nicole Kelley visited the Financial Aid Office in Woody Hall to take care of a few errands. Thinking she may not be very long, she parked her car in a slot reserved for 15-minute parking. After finishing her chore, she returned to her car to find a patrol officer writing a citation and sticking it on her windshield.

"I tried to discuss it with him, but it didn't do any good," said Kelley, a junior in management information systems from Chicago.

This ticket is one of the many citations given out each year for violations of regulations. This money is in addition to amount spent on stickers, which vary according to rank and housing of students.

Annually, the Parking Division generates approximately $1.5 million as the result of decal sales, ticket violations, conference permits and meter usage.

With all this revenue, students often wonder where all of their money is going.

Along with operating costs of the Division and Hearing Office, the income generated is also used to improve various parking conditions, including congestion, future developments and repairs.

The Parking Division is researching information to further help the traffic process.

"We are constantly looking at the parking process and ways to improve," said Brian Mager, administrator for the Department of Public Safety.

Mager said much of the future planning for parking is guided under the SIU Master Land Use Plan.

"The plan is used to list out some of the major developments that we will be doing," Mager said.

For example, earlier this month, the Parking Division paid $300,000 for the road construction on Lincoln Drive and Route 51. The division also had a road located between Lots 10a and 10b, located just off Lincoln Drive and to the right of McAndrew Stadium, because the street had to be within certain footage of that new entrance. They also created 18 new spots in the area just for the students.

One future project that awaits approval from the Board of Trustees is to build a pedestrian bridge over Lincoln Drive between Neckers and the Engineering Building. The division would like to have the entrance to the buildings farther from the parking congestion. According to Mager, this would hopefully allow a safer environment for pedestrians and bicyclists.

Toward the end of last semester, the Traffic and Parking Committee agreed to allow $50,000 from the revenue fund to look at several new additions. These additions would include enhanced lighting and the possibility of security cameras installed in the most frequently used overnight lots, such as Lot 106, which had three cars burglarized last week.

Money from the fund is also used for the upkeep of lots. Such maintenance includes the renovations and reconfiguration of parking lots, re-stripping of the roadways and adding new asphalt and patchwork to cover potholes. The Parking Division also watches for "spalding" on the lots. Spalding occurs when the concrete drops off and the construction underneath becomes exposed.

Lots also require cleaning performed by a hose in the garage and sweepers on the surface. Cash from the revenue fund is also used to provide electricity for the streetlights and garage lights.

Seasonal costs are deducted from the fund, which pay for snow removal on the streets as well as mowing of the grass on campus.

The Parking Division realizes the lack of convenient parking on campus and the concern of students and faculty.
Mager is often asked why the University cannot simply build a parking garage, but he said there is a significant difference in cost that many may not realize.
"It costs in the neighborhood of $11,000 to $15,000 per parking space to construct (in a garage). That is not including operation and maintenance once that garage is built versus the $1,100 to $1,200 for a surface space," Mager said.
"Currently, we are landlocked and have limited space to work with, but we are trying to work with what we have."

Professor prepares to study working women in Bangladesh

Potentially destructive trade proposal looms on the horizon

Rachel Lindsay
Daily Egyptian

By law, women in the United States enjoy the option of choosing from an array of careers. They can choose to stay at home or to go to college and pursue a degree; the option is there.

It is not so in Bangladesh.

Kathryn B. Ward recently returned from a nine-month sabbatical in Dhaka, Bangladesh, where she studied domestic violence against women and began a study on how economic changes affect working women in Bangladesh.

Ward, who left for the Indian city in November 2002, funded her domestic violence research through a grant from the Association Liaison Office and her preliminary research by means of a grant from the National Science Foundation. The NSF grant was an estimated $199,970.

While in Bangladesh, Ward worked closely with women's groups, such as the Migrant Women's Association, to study the cycle of domestic violence. She said Bangladesh has no particular laws punishing abuse, and women are afraid to leave because of the stigma of abandonment.

"In many cases, women leave when they are dead," Ward said.

While in Bangladesh, Ward found she had won the NSF grant and began her preliminary work. She selected a sample of 300 women to participate in her research through questionnaires and other means. Her graduate assistant, Saiful Islam, a second-year graduate from Chittagong, Bangladesh, helped her prepare for the research.

"I think the research will have a tremendous impact on the policy toward women in Bangladesh," said Islam, a second-year graduate pursuing a doctorate in Sociology.

The NSF grant covers a two-year study of "the impact of global and national economic changes on [women's] types of employment, income-earning strategies, and empowerment." It also requires Ward to discover what factors determine where a woman chooses to work and why some women shift from sector to sector or travel to other countries for a job.

"Basically, we're looking at some occupations of women workers," Ward said. "We want to know what is their work histories. Do they switch jobs over time? We know, for example, that some sex workers have been domestic workers at one point."

The study focuses on four main women's occupations in the formal and informal sectors: garment workers, maids, sex workers and housewives. Workers in the formal sector are under government regulation, but earn regular wages; factory textile workers fall under this category. The informal sector includes individual clothing workers, maids, sex workers and housewives.

The goal of the study is to contribute to the understanding of the impacts of economic policy and global restructuring. According to the NSF, this "is an important issue for policy makers who seek solutions to unemployment." As an example of her work, Ward emphasized the plight of women textile workers caught in the middle of a potentially destructive U.S. trade proposal.

Under the African and Caribbean Trade Development Act of 2000, then-President Clinton signed a law giving preferential tariff treatment to imported clothing made with materials exported from the United States. While this agreement benefited the United States, many factories in Bangladesh were no longer able to offer the best quality at competitive prices, and many factories

"In many cases, women leave when they are dead."

- Saiful Islam
graduate student, sociology

were being forced to shut down due to lack of profit, leaving many women unemployed.

Ward's most recent research suggests that this caused women's wages to drop. She pointed out that numerous women's incomes are desperately needed to support their families, but many of those women will not be able to find a job.

"We don't know where these women are going to go," Ward said.

While much of Ward's research focuses on gathering information about the workers, another aspect she has looked at is women's empowerment.

"In the process of doing preparatory work for the grant," Ward said, "I became interested in the possible alternatives [to the current occupations for women]."

She found that although women workers are wanted in other formal sectors, most of the women lack the tools and necessary training to work any other jobs. At present, the options for receiving this kind of training are limited. Ward's plans include helping the women she studied gain the necessary skills to succeed in other work sectors.

Islam thought Ward's research could help with socioeconomic empowerment of women and help them devise "an effective model that will be used in other countries of the world."

Ward will continue to study domestic violence under the ALO grant until fall of 2004 and women workers under the NSF grant until summer 2005.

Jensen becomes interim provost

Katie Davis
Daily Egyptian

Robert Jensen thought he would spend his remaining years at the University performing research and teaching psychology classes. The former acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts didn't expect to find himself in yet another administrative role at SIUC.

After all, he's already clocked 11 years of administration in his 22 years at SIUC.

But then again, what's another year. "I didn't really expect to do administration again," Jensen said. "But Dr. Dunn asked if I would do it, and I was willing to help the University out."

Last week, Jensen took up the role of interim associate provost, a position that will take him through next year, when Provost and Vice Chancellor John Dunn said he hopes to have found a permanent replacement.

"Dr. Jensen is a highly respected professor," Dunn said. "He has been an acting dean in COLA and an associate dean in COLA."

Jensen, who came to the University in 1981 and served as acting College of Liberal Arts dean in 1997 through 1999, handles personnel for Academic Affairs, including issues involving the military and off-campus programs.

"This is a very challenging job and definitely one of the most interesting I've done," Jensen said. "There is a lot of variety. Every day brings a new problem or two to be solved."

Dunn said his office will begin searching for a permanent replacement soon. As the interim associate provost, Jensen is not eligible to apply during the search, and his contract is for only one year. But Jensen said that's just the way he wants it. Jensen said that although he works with an amazing staff, he wants to complete his tenure in the provost's office.

Although Jensen is not teaching anything right now, he will teach psychopharmacology in the spring, and he said he intends to continue with research throughout the year.

Egyptian Dive Club offers unique experiences

New activities starting with the dive club

Pete Carroll recalls being surrounded by a school of fish the first time he went scuba diving.

"A school of fish formed a bowl around me," said Carroll, who is the adviser of the Egyptian Dive Club and head of the Physical Education Department. "They came up under and around me."

This was one of Carroll's first experiences when he began scuba diving in 1953.

Those who have never been diving before but would like to get involved can take a scuba diving class on campus. Pete Carroll helped get the class started when he was first hired to work in the Aquatics Department. It is a semester long and includes a typical classroom experience along with water training. The class is worth four credit hours and allows students to become certified scuba divers.

Carroll also founded the SIUC Dive Club in 1970. The club has been active for more than 20 years and currently has almost 60 members.

The team had its first meeting of the year Wednesday in Pulliam Hall. They are conducted every Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. and usually last one hour. All of the meetings, which are open to students as well as the general public, consist of a two-hour dive practice preceded by a guest speaker.

The Egyptian Dive Club offers students and community members the opportunity to participate in many unique scuba diving activities. This year, the club is planning to have an underwater pumpkin carving on Halloween and an underwater Olympics later in the year. The club is also planning scuba diving trips to locations such as West Palm Beach and the Florida Keys.

Matt Taitt, a senior in economics and the president of the Egyptian Dive Club, said there are also several local lakes, such as Mermaid Springs, that can be used for scuba diving. Jerry Nuss, a diving instructor at SIUC, helps with dive instruction during the club practices and gives private lessons to those who do not want to wait a full semester to become certified. Nuss said many of the members are environmentally concerned and often pick up garbage underwater. He also encourages the public to try scuba diving.

"Seventy percent of the earth is water," Nuss said. "Take advantage of it."

While many may view scuba diving as dangerous, Taitt said he always feels very safe because everyone is well trained. He encourages anyone interested to come by and check diving out.

"Anyone who has ever watched the Discovery Channel and thought it was cool should try it," Taitt said.

College of Education gets smart classroom for middle grade teachers

Kelsey Marland
Daily Egyptian

A classroom at SIUC may become smarter than its students.

Wham Education Building room 308, located on the top floor, has been specifically created to help SIUC students who are studying middle education and is complete with advanced computers and digital technology.

The College of Education and Human Service Wednesday unveiled its new, technologically advanced Smart Classrooms.

The project director, Jan Waggoner, said the new classrooms, including those at other universities, were paid for through a grant received by the school to further their technological abilities.

Middle education, which is grades five through eight, is a point in young people's lives that Waggoner is very interested in. She said this is a very important time for young people when they are making important decisions about quantity and quality of time. This classroom will help not only future teachers of middle education but also those currently involved with these students.

The lab, which is the largest in the College of Education, is specifically designed to train students and faculty here and at local community colleges through streaming video. It was also designed to aid with the recruitment and retention of qualified middle grade teachers. The smart classroom includes 30 Apple iBooks with wireless internet, two digital video cameras to tape classes so they can be streamed and downloaded by other schools, moveable student desks and a high-tech security system.

The classroom's new equipment was a part of the tri-school grant called the Teacher Quality Enhancement/Middle Grades Partnership, which gave SIUC $630,000. That amount was matched by the state, which gave the University $250,000 for the grant.

The money is for three years for the studying and technological growth of students who are planning to teach middle grades. The two other schools, Chicago State University and Northeastern Illinois University, have also pledged to use this money to help their middle grade teachers and students become better equipped for their professions.

The grant also helped with the last two summer's Summer Institute for middle grade teachers. The institute is a coalition of community colleges, faculty and SIUC arts and science education along with exemplary middle grade teachers. The partnership is to co-create a highly regarded middle grades teacher preparations program.

Director Waggoner hopes that this new classroom will also help teachers better connect to their students who have grown up in a more technologically sophisticated atmosphere.

"They grew up with MTV, the internet and cell phones strapped to their hips. So if we can connect with technology, [it can] help the retention and attendance," Waggoner said.

The classroom, which will be out to use Monday, has already begun to draw interest to the program. But at the end of the day, Director Waggoner says that it's simply about one thing.

"Bottom line, were trying to get [students] to learn more," she said.

Get in shape with a personal trainer

Trainers offer a variety of physical fitness programs

Jennifer Rios
Daily Egyptian

"I have a present for you," Jane Kupowski jokingly tells her client Nicole Arbelaez as she hands Arbelaez a set of weights.

Arbelaez smiles as she prepares for her hour-long workout, which begins in the weight room. Both smile at the fact they are the only females in the room.

Unlike many personal trainers, Kupowski participated in the entire workout as she explained each exercise and motivated her client to keep going.

"Good, keep it going. Eight more," Kupowski said.

"She makes you do them when you don't want to anymore. No cop-outs," Arbelaez said with a laugh.

Kupowski, who spent the summer working with overweight teens in California, is one of the approximately 10 personal trainers at the Recreation Center who cater to their clients' personal fitness goals.

Kupowski trains elderly, obese and disabled clients, as well as people who just want to get back into shape. In spite of having worked at the center for only a year, she has been certified with the American Council of Exercise since the age of 18.

After lifting weights Kupowski and Arbelaez work on the exercise equipment to tone specific body parts. Arbelaez asks if she can keep the weights the same on an exercise machine, but Kupowski encourages her to increase the weight by a few more pounds. Kupowski and Arbelaez finish the workout by performing abdominal exercises. The abdominal workout, which was created by Kupowski, uses the weight of a person's legs to strengthen the abs. She said that this puts less pressure on the back while still burning fat.

"It still hurts, though," Arbelaez said.

The exercise concludes the personal training session, and although they are tired, Arbelaez is satisfied with the hard workout.

"The thing is motivating. Jane is not only someone who is educated but dedicated," Arbelaez said.

Interested students can stop by the Recreation Center for additional information on personal trainers.

Kupowski is a sophomore in exercise science and a personal trainer at the Recreation Center. Kupowski often starts out her day waking up at 5:30 in the morning to teach a weight aerobics class. After her own college classes, she returns to the Recreation Center to meet with clients throughout the day. She often makes programs in her spare time that specialize to her clients' individual needs.

Kupowski designs her sessions to include cardiovascular, muscle work and flexibility exercises. She always takes her clients' heart rates and focuses the training on each person's health.

"I always check my clients' health even if they look healthy. I never assume," Kupowski said.

JESSICA EDMOND - DAILY EGYPTIAN

SIU physical and conditioner trainer Clete McCloud works with high school junior Jessica Hansen, who is training to try out for a volleyball team in St. Louis named Team St. Louis. Hansen has been training under McCloud for a week now and ends her training Dec. 1. Out of the eight years McCloud has been a conditioning trainer, he has been at SIU for two years.

Kupowski believes the three most important components of a good workout program are ambition, motivation and dedication. She has only missed one session since she became a personal trainer, and clients know she will be ready to work out with them even if it is six in the morning.

Some personal trainers focus on specific skills. Clete McCloud, also a personal trainer at the Recreation Center, assists people with sports-related skills. McCloud is the graduate assistant for Saluki Athletics and works with people who play a variety of sports.

"I work with competitive athletes or weekend warriors," said McCloud, who is a graduate student in exercise physiology.

Prices for personal trainers vary. The beginning package includes three sessions and costs $56 for students. The largest packages include 24 sessions for $312. There are also several packages that run between those two programs.

"The best gift I can give someone is health and fitness," Kupowski said. It makes for a healthier life."

OUR WORD

Setting fires is still stupid

For students who live in Brush Towers, waking up to piercing sirens in the middle of the night comes with the same consistency as stressing out over finals.

New students to campus — the few who didn't know this already — found that out quickly Monday night, but they didn't find out in the same fashion as most students.

Instead, students awoke to the sounds of a fire alarm that was pulled on purpose, by a resident adviser.

Danna Howell didn't pull the alarm to be funny, annoy her friends or because it was rush week. She pulled it because there was a fire.

The majority of the 800 students and University employees who fled from the building were corralled together like cattle, waiting to hear the alarm was false and be granted permission to return to their cozy rooms.

As they expected, they did return to their rooms. Only they were given the OK much later than many expected, and some students returned to find their living quarters dark with soot.

Although the alarm interrupted precious resting time, it may have saved many lives.

And yet, many students admit they were tempted to stay in bed and blame this alarm on some more stupid kids.

The Carbondale Fire Department is called to campus dozens of times each year because of false alarms. But they have also been called numerous times because a real danger existed.

In spring 2000, a room in Schneider Hall was completely destroyed by a fire, and much of the 12th floor had to be renovated. Even with the smoke, many students were so desensitized from the repetitive alarms they sluggishly drifted outside.

In October 2000, Boomer Hall III had three fires due to smoldering material in trash chutes — and one false alarm — in less than 48 hours.

Fortunately these two fires did not result in the loss of life.

In 1992, the students who lived at The Pyramid apartment complex were not so lucky. Five SIUC students died trying to escape the smoky building.

We editorialized fires just last week. We asked readers not to be careless and certainly not to purposely set dumpsters on fire.

We suggested the harm done can cost more than money and sleep. We reiterated what we all learned in first grade — fires kill.

Nevertheless, a fire this week that allegedly began with a smoldering cigarette that was tossed in the building's trash chute sent an 18-year-old visitor to the hospital for smoke inhalation.

In case some people need another reminder, starting a fire is not a good idea

In case some people need another reminder, starting a fire is not a good idea.

Whether started intentionally or accidentally, the fire in Schneider Hall could have been prevented. And the fire could have been worse if not for the quick actions of Howell and the firefighters who contained it.

We send our gratitude to these people who protected us from harm.

As in previous years, the DAILY EGYPTIAN Editorial Board believes it would be in the students' best interest if video cameras were installed near fire alarms.

Although penalties for students caught setting off fire alarms are harsh and include expulsion from the University, students are rarely caught in the act. Thus, we think the threat of being caught on tape would discourage inconsiderate and thoughtless students from pulling the alarm.

Because, as we saw earlier this week, sometimes those sirens are for real, even when we think it was just another false alarm.

Puzzled by too many options

By Brendan Marten
The Stanford Daily (Stanford U.)

STANFORD, Calif. (U-WIRE) — I wasn't president of the student body my senior year. I didn't play in Carnegie Hall the summer after ninth grade. I wasn't captain of the basketball team or a record-breaking all-star community service volunteer. I had a pretty low-key, run-of-the-mill high school existence. I was a member of the political debate club. I did community service here and there. But that was about it.

At the time, my friends and I felt free to label all those who were extracurricularly ambitious as "activities whores." In disbelief, we noted how they participated in seemingly frivolous organizations, sports and other "productive" uses of their time. We simply didn't understand them and their cheery attitudes. Who'd want to do all that when you could sit at home doing nothing like we did?

You might be wondering how I got into Stanford. That's a question that only Robin Mamlet could answer. But I can assure you, she didn't sign off on my admission because of my "active past" — or, for that matter, my "future-activity potential." But little did Mamlet know that once I stepped foot on campus, I planned take the activities circuit by storm.

By the time high school graduation rolled around, I felt shortchanged, like I had missed out on what it meant to be a college-obsessed, brown-nosing young adult. Not unlike the barrage of regrets — and subsequent Porsche purchases — that a 50-year-old dad encounters during his mid-life crisis, the second thoughts I had about the quality and quantity of my activity involvement led to a "young-life crisis."

Why didn't I fulfill this unexplained urge during high school? In retrospect, that would have been much easier. After all, I had a lot more free time thanks to the disturbingly un-academic nature of high school. If anything, you'd think I would have at least acted out fear of the dreaded "small envelope."

Months before I was due to arrive for freshman orientation, I began to debate what "well-rounded" list of things I should do. In a moment — OK, a quarter or two — of temporary insanity, I decided to join the ASSU, the mock trial team, the model U.N. team, the newspaper, the yearbook, the track and field team, a couple community service clubs and take up classical violin.

Note that I'd never done any of these activities before in my life. But that wasn't really a problem, right? I was going to be a chemical engineering and economics double major. I was debating whether it would be medical school or law school after my college years. I'd just gotten into Stanford, and I had places to go.

And besides, I was on top of things. For example, I knew that not just any guy could go and join the track team. If I wanted in, I needed to be able to run fast. So, I grabbed a stopwatch and cruised on down to the local community college track. Armed with a list of times from the most recent Stanford track meet, all I needed to do was time my attempts at various distances.

Then I'd see how I measured up in comparison to actual athletes and determine how much work I had before me. I soon found that I needed to shave that annoying 10 seconds off my 100-meter dash — a race that should take a good runner only about 10 or 11 seconds to complete. It was no less disconcerting to find that running for longer than five minutes made me feel like vomiting.

As I arrived at Stanford, the disappointments only came faster. I soon realized that I had neither the time, nor talent, nor sanity to pursue all of my objectives. But hey, just because I couldn't do all of my planned activities didn't mean that I couldn't do some of them. While I didn't accomplish everything I had hoped for, I ended up with a respectable list of responsibilities. I stuck with the mock trial team, the newspaper and a once-a-week tutoring job at the local elementary school.

Finally, I realized what everyone else undoubtedly had already taken to heart in high school. While "being busy" looks good in the daybook, you can't look at your life from the perspective of filling a schedule. More importantly, I discovered that extracurricular activities can be extremely enjoyable and rewarding.

Just from my three little areas of interest at Stanford, I've had some of the best times of my college career and come in contact with dozens of people that I otherwise never would have met — let alone know in any meaningful capacity.

While I'm a late-blooming activities whore, I'm a whore to this day — albeit in moderation. And all of my past high school high-mindedness aside, I'm damn proud of it.

Arnold could terminate others for governor

By Eugene Chu
Daily Skiff (Texas Christian U.)

FORT WORTH, Texas (U-WIRE) - It's been weeks since Arnold Schwarzenegger announced his candidacy for governor in the upcoming California recall election. Some people still joke about the idea of "The Terminator" seriously being the next governor of California.

Other people point to a recent Los Angeles Times poll that shows Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante with a 13-percent lead. Still other people point to an extremely long candidate list for the election. While people in and out of California continue to express doubt about Schwarzenegger and the recall election, they are ignoring something important.

While doubters joke, they seem to have forgotten the serious actions that Schwarzenegger recently took

Despite the jokes, various polls, and the horde of contenders, Schwarzenegger has a serious chance of winning the upcoming recall election.

Most people now consider Schwarzenegger to be a serious Republican candidate but still joke about the possibility of him winning. While the doubters joke, they seem to have forgotten the serious actions that Schwarzenegger recently took. Along with filing the necessary paperwork, he has recruited financial mogul Warren Buffett as a financial adviser and fellow superstar Rob Lowe as a political liaison for the Hollywood voters.

According to a recent Associated Press story, Schwarzenegger has a larger campaign fund than either Gov. Gray Davis or Lt. Gov. Bustamante. Schwarzenegger has been vague on certain issues, but the campaign websites for Lt. Gov. Bustamante and candidate Arianna Huffington don't specifically list their stances on these issues either. While it's true that the superstar has never held public office, he has prepared himself to be a real candidate at poll time.

Some people are quick to point out election polls. A poll done by the Los Angeles Times this weekend shows Bustamante leading 35 to 22 percent over Schwarzenegger. However, there are other factors about that poll that should be considered. The same poll shows 46 percent of likely voters saying they may change their minds before the election Oct. 7. In addition, the poll was taken after Lt. Gov. Bustamante won a California Congressional delegation endorsement and before Republican candidate Bill Simon dropped out of the race this weekend. In other words, Lt. Gov. Bustamante may be in the lead now, but things could change.

Even if the people know about Schwarzenegger's actions and seriously understand the polls, some still point out the long candidate list.

Weeks ago, one popular and hilarious news story talked about the large number of Californians filing governor candidacy paperwork. While more than 200 people initially filed candidacy paperwork in the beginning, many names were dropped because they turned their paperwork in late, their backgrounds made them ineligible, and other factors. As stated earlier, high profile candidate Bill Simon voluntarily dropped out of the race. While it's true the candidate list has more than 100 names, it may not stay that way.

Admittedly, the Schwarzenegger campaign has no guarantee of victory. The recall election is still more than a month away, and California Gov. Davis would still need to be recalled before anyone could replace him. Along with that, Schwarzenegger has to deal with doubters, discouraging poll figures and more than 100 candidates who also want Gov. Davis' position.

Despite those obstacles, Schwarzenegger has taken serious political action, outdone the incumbents on fund raising and may face less competition at election time. He faces a tough challenge ahead, but he could "be back."

COMMUNITY LEADER'S FORUM

A dream deferred

By Father Joseph Brown
Black American Studies Program Director

At a time when the U.S. media seems determined to shift the focus from the 40th anniversary of the March on Washington to the final speech, Martin Luther King's "I have a dream," I have been drawn to meditate on the word, "deferred."

Frustrated that the final improvised flourishes of King's speech have erased his opening indictment against the United States, I have let "dream" start a bout of free (or not so free) word associations: Dream. "A dream deferred." Deferred loans. Deference to one's elders. Deferred decisions (about marriage? Law school? Lunch? Homework?) Maybe - and this has special resonance at a place like STUC - even deferred maintenance.

In some quirk of this game of word spinning, all the ideas come back to the same place. For the last 40 years, we have been putting off the dream of Martin Luther King, Jr. - much like cash-strapped institutions and governments have put off repairing the environment, the buildings and the "infrastructures" upon which our commerce depends. Same intention; same result.

We have far too many critical needs and cannot make any one of them our first priority. If it isn't perilously broke, don't fix it. We can juggle some item from Column A and hope it temporarily covers the immediate crisis in Column B.

And the lights go out, from Cleveland to Albany to Long Island.

King begins "I have a dream" forcing our attention to an issue of deferred justice: "When the architects of our republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir.

This note was the promise that all men, yes, black men as well as white men, would be guaranteed the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note in so far as her citizens of color are concerned. Instead of honoring this sacred obligation, America has given the Negro people a bad check; a check which has come back marked, "insufficient funds."

During the last decade many have appropriated King's apocalyptic vision at the end of the speech, the words about "content of one's character" over the "color of one's skin" and declare, by some act of grand virtuosity, that we no longer need be concerned with those who stood in line waiting for the "insufficient funds" to clear so that they could be about cashing the check of the American Dream.

We no longer have discrimination based on color; the laws against racial oppression are in place and in effect. Overt racism is found only in unfortunate pockets of the unenlightened. Men and women of good will strive for fairness and diversity. While all is not right in the world, it is certainly getting better.

And those sentiments are better uttered if the lights are out, in our minds; in our communities, in our classrooms. That dream appears to "crust and sugar over" in the face of HIV/AIDS infections growing faster in Black and Hispanic communities - and among women of those groups - than among any other populations in the U.S. And Black and Hispanic women are entering the nation's prisons at an equally alarming and disconcerting rate.

That dream "sags like a heavy load" when we are confronting unemployment rates of between 30 to 47 percent in the urban areas where the only option for the disenfranchised poor is the same option that faced their parents and grandparents: the debilitating effects of poverty, depression and environmental pollution that harm our children like a plague. The "dream" is a long-lived nightmare when any of our children exhibit the same characteristics of long-term exposure to war as that manifested by children in Bosnia, Liberia, Columbia or Iraq.

For the last 40 years, we have been putting off the dream of Martin Luther King Jr.

If the formerly enslaved had been given full payment on the promissory note back in 1865 how would this country be different? Many of them would have reached the ranks of the middle class by the time of World War I. Their children would have been in place to own property and their children's children would have inherited wealth. That generation's grandchildren would be liberally doting the maps of industry, politics, religion, education, cultural and social achievement even the map that is SIUC.

The U.S. would be much closer to the "beloved community" of which King dreamed continually - and not just in the early twilight of an August day in 1963. Maybe, just maybe, we would not still be deferring his dream and turning the dreams of children the world over into visions of revenge, retribution and vindication.

The vision? See it as a rainbow. Do we dare dream ourselves to be much better than we are? I hope the sacred obligation that King named will never let go of us.

Sociology is here to stay

DEAR EDITOR:

I read with interest the article in Monday's DAILY EGYPTIAN about the Budget and Planning Task Force Final Report and noticed that a couple of recommendations from that report were inserted as a side bar. The article is interesting; however, several observations were omitted. First and foremost, at the present time these are only recommendations. I have no doubt that the adoption of any significant changes would necessitate a lengthy discussion on campus between the various special interest groups involved. Secondly, although one recommendation calls for the merger of Sociology, Black American Studies and possibly Women's studies, the article does not point out, if implemented, the potential richness that could emerge from such a venture. Sociology has and always will be concerned about issues of race, class, and gender. We are confident that there are other departments on campus with similar concerns.

The creation of an institute dedicated to the study of diversity issues would not undermine the integrity and uniqueness of each academic unit included in the institute. Sociology will continue to award bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees that reflect the complex diversity of our discipline. Instead, such an institute could provide more and not fewer opportunities for both undergraduate and graduate students interested in studying the intersections of race, class and gender in our society and around the world. Finally, the creation of such an institute would allow for even greater collaboration with other departments who seek to enhance their commitment to diversity, education and research. In the end, it is our expectation that while the structure of the units would change, the substance of our respective disciplines and the campus community would be enhanced.

Thomas Calhoun
Sociology Chairperson

European charm

New café brings old world atmosphere to Southern Illinois

story by LINSEY MAUGHAN

In 1872, the building located at 201 E. Main St. in Carbondale was a railroad hotel known as the Newell Hotel. With the slogan "The finest and only European hotel in Southern Illinois," the place featured a restaurant and lounge in the downstairs, outdoor seating and a garden terrace along the street. The building even survived a fire at the turn of the century.

The building's owner is gradually getting back to its early roots with the opening of Bisanis Coffee Café five weeks ago.

"The original facade is still underneath the metal outside," building owner Dan Terry said.

Terry said that in the future he plans to take down the metal and restore what was formerly brick with stucco over it. The other three floors of the building are still office space that 14 tenants currently occupy, including professionals such as psychologists and a Brehm Preparatory School office.

It was Terry who came up with the concept and design for the café, and after months of discussion, he came together with Alan Ernst, a local and national public health consultant and the café's owner.

"A lot of thought has gone into the design concept based on the needs of the community," Ernst said. "Every attention to detail, Dan took."

The attention to details shows in the skillfully chosen color scheme and unique décor, which embraces customers while being well ventilated with high ceilings and elegant ceiling fans.

"I would say the café has a Venetian overall charm," Ernst said.

Ernst said Terry travels nationally, has visited many coffeehouses in many different locations and felt Carbondale could use a new one and started generating ideas.

The café provides seating room for 75 to 80 people, Ernst said.

One great feature of Bisanis is its convenient location directly across from The Stage Co., where there is sufficient parking nearby.

"It's easy to get in and out," Ernst said.

What truly makes Bisanis unique is the equipment it uses, like Brevé specialty coffee and their espresso machine, which results in the high quality products it offers.

"With top of the line equipment, we can assure the quality and consistency that the people deserve," Ernst said.

Ernst said they use Ghirardelli Chocolate products, which are top of the line. Additionally, he said desserts are made with top of the line ingredients.

"In Italy, where all of this originated, it is an art," Ernst said, referring to the café business.

So Bisanis went straight to the experts by importing an espresso machine from Italy.

The creation process begins with freshly ground espresso beans. The grounds are then pressed to 30 pounds per square inch, and steam is pushed through the grounds for 17 to 22 seconds, which makes the basic espresso. To make a cappuccino, milk is then frothed at 160 degrees, and the mixtures are added together and made to order with flavoring.

While the café attracts family and college students alike, Ernst has learned a professional business crowd needs to collect there.

"It's much more of a metropolitan kind of business," he said. "People come in and are like, 'Wow, I don't even feel like I'm in Carbondale.'"

But as Carbondale traffic breezes past, the large café windows facing East Main Street, customers know they're not far from home.

"It's great. The atmosphere is really neat," said customer Lee Fronbarger on his second visit to the café. "The view of the town square really adds to the atmosphere."

Fronbarger also said the food was very good and reasonably priced.

"I like the décor very much; it's nice of a big city atmosphere in a medium town," said Debbie Tindall, a first time customer of Bisanis.

"It's a welcome addition to the restaurants that we have in Carbondale. It's always nice to have more variety," said Jennifer Bathon, another new customer.

Ernst described the music at Bisanis as conducive to sitting and visiting or having a meeting.

"I want people to feel that this can be a center of community life," he said.

Ernst also said a lot of people who are retired enjoy coming in and "hanging out." He described some retired people coming in with books recently, who said they are happy to have found a new reading place.

Ernst said a liquor license for Bisanis is pending, but they should be able to offer beer and wine toward the end of September.

Once the beer and wine are available, Ernst said Bisanis would pursue live early evening music including jazz groups, acoustic guitarists, pianists and vocalists. The café will offer a variety of music; all of which will be appropriate for the atmosphere, he said. He has opted for early evening music instead of late night, explaining he feels Carbondale offers enough late night music, and this way Bisanis can provide something different.

Ernst also said Bisanis is open to the possibility of book and music signings, art openings, dinner theater, poetry readings and Saturday children's book readings so parents can relax while their children are entertained.

"It's a nice, simple, pretty environment," said Peggy Stockdale, a member of the Psychology Department faculty at SIUC. "I'm glad to see a new place in Carbondale, and I like that they're located in the downtown part of Carbondale."

Reporter Lindsey Maughan can be reached at lmaughan@dailyegyptian.com

CASA receives $25,000 endowment

Money will be used to establish dental hygiene scholarships

Valerie N. Donnals
Daily Egyptian

An anonymous donor recently gave $25,000 to the College of Applied Science and Arts to use as a scholarship for students in SIUC's dental hygiene program.

The donation was made in memory of Dr. Robert E. Dudenbostal, an SIUC alumnus who died March 19, 2003, at the age of 75.

Dudenbostal received his bachelor's degree from SIUC in 1950 and his DDS from the University of Illinois Dental School in Chicago. He practiced dentistry in Carbondale for 40 years before retiring in 1999.

He was also a member of the American Dental Association and the Illinois State Dental Society, previously served as president of the Southern Illinois Dental Society and also participated in several local organizations.

Michael Ellis, director of Development for CASA, said the donor knew Dudenbostal when they attended SIUC together and had become reacquainted with him early last year.

The scholarship stipulates the money is to go to a full-time student considered in good standing in the dental hygiene program for tuition and required supplies.

"The expense of equipment and books in that department is very expensive, especially for dental hygiene students," Ellis said. "It is very important and will help them get the materials they need."

Charla Lautar, interim chair of the Department of Health Care Professions, said beginning their sophomore year, dental hygiene students pay thousands of dollars on equipment for their classes.

Students in the dental hygiene program can study their first year at any institution because the professional sequence of courses begins during their sophomore year. That is the year that they will also incur the highest costs.

In addition to standard tuition and housing costs paid by all students, those in the dental hygiene program will pay an estimated $3,200 for supplied and equipment.

Lautar said the majority of the fee is a one-time only cost. For example, instruments, such as blood pressure and stethoscope, and disposable personal protective equipment, such as gloves, masks and scrubs are expected to last all three years of the program.

The remainder of the fee is paid each year of the program. For example, juniors and seniors are required to pay an additional $1,300 and $1,600, respectively, to cover standard lab fees and textbooks.

Lautar said upperclassmen also perform more complicated procedures as they advance in skill level, so they need more equipment. The fees are constantly changing and increasing in response to changes in procedures and technology.

Recipients will be chosen annually by the Scholarship Selection Committee in CASA, which will also determine the award amount based on how much is in the fund.

The fund remains open, so additional contributions can be made by calling the SIUC Foundation.

Reporter Valerie N. Donnals

Afghan officials see new signs of Taliban activity

Liz Szy Chicago Tribune

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan (KRT) — For Rahmatullah, 18, an impoverished Afghan student enrolled at a small religious school in the Pakistani border town of Chaman, the offer made by the Taliban mullah who visited in June was too good to refuse.

In return for 3,700 rupees — about $60 — the mullah promised, he would be given a gun and the chance to wage holy war against the infidels occupying his country.

So Rahmatullah, who uses only one name, took the money, said goodbye to his classmates and joined the swelling ranks of a revived Taliban rebellion against U.S. forces and the government of President Hamid Karzai.

He didn't fight for long. A week after he crossed into Afghanistan and linked up with a unit of 20 Taliban fighters, the group was betrayed by a local villager and attacked by Afghan forces. Rahmatullah was captured, his money was confiscated, and now he says he regrets his decision.

"I did it for the money," he said at the government prison in the former Taliban stronghold of Kandahar, where he has spent the past two months. "I made a mistake and I want to go home."

As a raw recruit, Rahmatullah had little to tell interrogators about his Taliban employers. Hardened fighters and leaders are turned over to the Americans based at the nearby airport; Rahmatullah was questioned by them but not detained.

But his account, and that of another captive, Mohammed Ramazan, illustrate something that the Afghan government has been complaining about for some time: Remnants of the ousted Taliban regime are aggressively recruiting and reorganizing in Pakistan in a revived effort to stage a comeback in Afghanistan.

"There are lots of Taliban in Quetta, and a lot of people are joining them," said Ramazan, 19, who was recruited by a different Taliban mullah at a mosque in the Pakistani town of Quetta.

In recent weeks, the fruits of those efforts have become alarmingly apparent. A sharp rise in Taliban activity has been accompanied by evidence of a newly effective strategy for destabilizing the Karzai government and undermining America's goal of securing a lasting peace in Afghanistan.

The wildly inaccurate hit-and-run attacks against U.S. forces by small groups of three to four fighters that characterized the first year of resistance to America's presence in Afghanistan have been replaced by larger, better-coordinated assaults on softer targets, including remote government checkpoints, foreign and Afghan aid workers and supporters of the Karzai government.

The accounts of Ramazan and Rahmatullah hardly suggest that this neo-Taliban army is likely to pose much of a challenge to the 11,500 coalition troops based in Afghanistan, including 8,500 Americans.

Yet Afghan officials say Ramazan and Rahmatullah are only the lowliest foot soldiers in a guerrilla movement that is showing new signs of sophistication, coordination and also access to resources. Led by seasoned military commanders from the former Taliban regime, it is being fueled by fresh recruits among young Afghans enrolled in the madrassas, or religious schools, of Pakistan.

Although the numbers involved are impossible to estimate, there is no doubt that the Taliban's strength is growing, said Gen. Samiullah Qadri, who heads Afghanistan's border forces.

"For the first time now, I believe it may be possible for terrorists, for the Taliban, to take over power again," he said. "If the coalition forces left Afghanistan, within a few hours six or seven provinces would be taken by the Taliban."

In recent weeks, some Taliban fighters have acquired motorbikes, giving them the capability to move swiftly across rough terrain, said Gen. Mohammed Khan, the army commander in Kandahar. They have radios and mobile satellite phones, enabling them to act with a degree of coordination that previously was lacking, he said.

The Taliban's tactics have already secured a degree of freedom of movement for fighters in swaths of Afghan territory along the eastern border with Pakistan and stretching deep into southern Afghanistan, the Pashtun tribal belt from which the original Taliban drew most of its support. The provinces of Zabul and Uruzgan, where the Taliban leader Mullah Omar is believed to be hiding, are considered largely loyal to the Taliban.

Afghanistan blames Pakistan for the Taliban revival and has called on Islamabad to clamp down on Taliban activity on the Pakistani side of the border. Some Afghan officials believe Pakistan's support goes beyond turning a blind eye; without the active involvement of Pakistan's government, said Khan, the Taliban wouldn't have access to resources.

"All the strength they have is coming from Pakistan," he said. "If Pakistan wasn't helping them, they would be nothing."

Pakistan vehemently denies the charge and last week called on Afghanistan to share intelligence on Taliban activities so Pakistan could do more to help.

Yet whether Pakistan is involved or not, the answer to Afghanistan's resurgent Taliban problem lies with the government in Kabul, according to Mullah Mohammed Khaksar, a former Taliban deputy minister and the only member of the Taliban government to defect when the regime collapsed.

"They are not as strong as people think," he said of the revived Taliban movement. "They are better organized now, and of course if things continue this way, they could become a big problem. But if the government gets stronger, and gives jobs and opportunities to the people, everyone will be busy and no one will want to fight for the Taliban."

Sen. Dole charms 'red coats,' stumps for Haley Barbour

Karen Nelson Knight Ridder Newspapers

PASCAGOULA, Miss. (KRT) — Elizabeth Dole is the epitome of the Republican woman, or at least that's what her fans in Jackson County said Wednesday as she spoke to a crowd of them.

"Elizabeth Dole is my hero," one businesswoman said after the event. "She can move mountains and still look like a Barbie doll, never breaks a sweat or a fingernail."

Dole, elected to the U.S. Senate from North Carolina in November, was brought to Jackson County by fellow U.S. Sen. Trent Lott on a one-day whirlwind visit to speak to the county Republican Women's annual Founder's Day luncheon. She stumped for Mississippi gubernatorial candidate Haley Barbour and the state Republican Party before a crowd of more than 500.

The Jackson County Republican Women, wearing red and known as the red coats, were fondly lauded as the backbone of the Republican Party on the Coast. Lott credits them with helping to get him elected 30 years ago when he was a novice to politics and the party, back when he and an election commissioner were the only two GOP candidates in the county.

The ballroom was full of them Wednesday from the office of governor to Jackson County coroner. Tony Lawrence, Democratic candidate for district attorney, almost seemed out of place, especially when the real stumping began.

"It's time to reach the dream of the party," state GOP Chairman Jim Herring said, a clean sweep on the statewide ballot.

Barbour said the primary three weeks ago was the largest turnout in the history of the state, while the Democrats had their smallest in 40 years.

"This is an important year, the moment we've all been waiting for," Lott said, when it was his turn at the podium. "Two senators and two congressmen can't do it alone."

He said the state needs the Legislature and major state offices behind the Republican movement. Lott also hinted at a big industrial prospect that has its eye on the Coast.

"We already have people (state leaders) saying we can't afford that

Lott said. "That's why we haven't had it."

But Dole was the centerpiece, along with a magnolia on every table. She was introduced as one of the top 10 most respected women in the world, a graduate of Duke University in 1958, married to a former presidential candidate and one who has served in the administrations of five presidents.

"She can talk you into things you don't even want to do," Lott said.

But on Wednesday, she was preaching to the choir.

"The Senate is a different world," she said. "Lott is a tireless servant of Mississippi. Because of him, Mississippi has grown."

She opposes obstructing judicial nominees, referring to the case of Charles Pickens, and feels all should have a full hearing and a vote of Congress. She has taken up the cause of fighting hunger in her state. She believes the country needs a comprehensive energy plan and health care plans for all. She admires and respects Barbour and the president.

And she said she believes, "We stand on the cusp of a Republican majority in this country."

Variation of gene linked to binge drinking

Kawanza L. Griffin
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

MILWAUKEE (KRT) — The same week that the University of Wisconsin was ranked the nation's No. 2 party school, a study suggests a new explanation for all that binge drinking — genetics.

College students who carried a particular version of a common gene tended to have more harmful drinking habits than those who had a different version, according to a study published in the journal Alcohol and Alcoholism.

The gene, known as the serotonin transporter gene — 5HTT — has previously been shown to play a key role in emotions, including depression and anxiety.

"One might speculate that in a new environment like college, if one is prone to a higher level of anxiety, one might also be more likely to use alcohol," said Paolo B. DePetrillo, the senior investigator with the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism who co-authored the study.

However, DePetrillo said the relationship between drinking and emotions is not clearly understood and that further studies are needed.

For the study, researchers surveyed about 200 Caucasian college students aged 17 to 23 years old about their alcohol consumption and then collected their saliva to look at a gene that helps regulate serotonin, a chemical messenger in the brain known to play a role in depression.

Everyone inherits long or short versions of the 5-HTT gene from their parents, resulting in three possible combinations: two short, two long or a short and long.

Although the majority of the general population has either two short or two long genes, about 30 percent of the white population has one of each gene, DePetrillo said.

But the percentage varies within each ethnic group, he said. For example, African-Americans tend to have a higher proportion of the long variant, while Asians have more short variants, he said.

Binge drinking, defined as five or more drinks at a single sitting for men and four for women, was more prevalent in students with two copies of the short form of the gene, the study found. In addition, those students were more likely to drink to get drunk and to consume more drinks at a sitting than students with other combinations.

The study also found that having at least one copy of the long variant was protective; those students tended to drink less, even though they went out to drink as often as the other students.

A study last month by Madison researchers also found that people with two short genes were more likely to develop depression after experiencing multiple stressful events.

Reduction in file-sharing follows industry crackdown

Riley McDonald
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (U-WIRE) — As soon as third-year University of Virginia Commerce student Scott Howard heard that 1,000 people faced multi-million dollar lawsuits for sharing music online, he shut off his Kazaa service.

"I don't have enough money to pay $250,000 per song," Howard said.

His action illustrates a global trend: fewer users logging on to peer-to-peer networks in the wake of the Recording Industry Association of America's June 26 announcement that it planned to file lawsuits against individuals distributing copyrighted music.

Nielsen Net Ratings reported a 15-percent decline in traffic on Kazaa and Morphous in the week immediately after RIAA announced its pursuit of individual users.

Traffic on the largest service, Kazaa, continued to decline for the next seven weeks, from a peak of seven million unique users per week to below five million. The number now remains stable around five million, according to Nielsen Net Ratings Senior Analyst Greg Bloom.

"Usage of Kazaa is not anywhere near its all-time high," Bloom said. "However, threats from the record industry are not dealing a knockout blow to alternative file sharing right now."

Computer Science Prof. Alfred Weaver argued that legal actions by the RIAA will eventually make a significant impact on the operation of peer-to-peer networks like Kazaa.

"I think it's an effective ploy, and I think it will have the intended result," Weaver said. "It will drastically reduce illegal file-sharing."

The firm that distributes Kazaa, Sharman Networks Limited, told the San Francisco Chronicle the Nielsen report represented only a normal lull in traffic that occurs annually during the summer.

Bloom disagreed, pointing to the drastic drop in numbers immediately after RIAA began issuing subpoenas and the continual decline over seven weeks.

RIAA is wary of interpreting reduced traffic on peer-to-peer networks as the intended result of its legal action, RIAA spokesperson Jonathan Lamy said.

"How we view the success of this effort is not necessarily in day-to-day sharing on file-sharing networks," Lamy said. "We view the ultimate success to be if music fans migrate to legitimate services and if those services grow and thrive."

Many university students continue to use peer-to-peer networks, despite the threat of RIAA lawsuits.

Representative denounces same-sex partner benefits for University of Illinois employees

Tiffany Witte
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

CHAMPAIGN, (U-WIRE) — The University of Illinois followed the trend of thousands of colleges, governmental bodies and corporations on July 17 when the board of trustees approved health and dental insurance benefits for same-sex partners of university faculty and staff.

But since that time, several state politicians and conservative groups have begun petitions asking the University to reconsider, and encouraging Gov. Rod Blagojevich to intervene.

Reps. Charpin Rose, R-Mahomet, and Bill Mitchell, R-Forsyth, delivered a letter last Tuesday to the board, signed by 23 politicians.

Rose said the board should not have approved the benefits in the midst of a University budget crisis.

Rose said the $400,000 being used to fund same-sex partner benefits would have been enough money to restore two-thirds of University classes that were cut as a result of budget problems.

"We're looking at the fact that (the University) cut 506 classes, fired 167 $400,000 for this," he said.

In a letter dated Aug. 8, Rose called on Blagojevich to use his authority as an ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees to intervene "on behalf of the students and University employees."

Curt McKay, co-director of the Office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered Concerns, said the group has been asking lawmakers since the mid 1990s to approve benefits for same-sex partners and is saddened, but not surprised, that legislators are working to reverse the board's decision.

"The state legislature has had the opportunity to (offer the benefits) for years and has not done so — in fact they have actively opposed doing so," he said.

He said although it's unfortunate that the benefits will come at a time when the university is having budget problems, it's not a sufficient reason to "treat a whole group of people inequitably."

Rep. Mitchell said he is against offering the benefits at any time because heterosexual couples in unmarried relationships don't receive the same benefits.

the (Illinois) house floor, whether in a good or bad economic time," he said.

Rose said he has received several e-mails from unmarried heterosexual couples who are upset because they don't have the benefits now offered to gay and lesbian couples, but McKay said he hopes that in time, the benefits will be extended to those couples as well as students.

Lidia Downs, executive director of the Illinois Center Right Coalition, said the group is also in the process of contacting trustees and asking for a reversal of the decision. Downs said the group's opposition to open homosexuality is a major factor in its position on this issue.

"I think this is just a door opening," she said. "This is eroding the traditional idea of a marriage... we have a mandate as a society to protect that tradition."

Rose said he doubts the governor will step in and try to reverse the decision, due in part to strong democratic support of the benefits.

"I won't hold my breath," he said. Abby Ottolandi, a spokesperson for the governor, said Blagojevich supports same-sex partner benefits and doesn't have plans to intervene at this time.

Pete McKenzie, a student and host of one of the posted parties, has mixed feelings about the website because he believes "more people will probably come."

One of McKenzie's biggest concerns is with the police possibly becoming involved.

Dan Manis, another party host and user of the website, said he was a little worried about the police.

"It's strange to me to advertise parties on the Internet that are catering to underage drinking," he said.

Manis believes that PartySIU will help draw more of a crowd to his parties. His roommate described the website as "stupid." He laughed as he wondered who would get arrested this weekend.

Along with house party listings, the website gives a short review of local bars in the area. The review consists of pricing, music and overall atmosphere. The creator of PartySIU described his website as a "community service" to SIU students.

ANNIE DENTAMARO - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Matt Siegal, a freshman in administration of justice, thinks the site is good for freshman that can't get into the bars.

"Personally, I think it's kind of sad that people are going to be on the Internet instead of actually at the parties," Siegal said.

Another feature of PartySIU lists and explains the rules for several types of drinking games.

Trent Perkins, another host of an upcoming party, said he has already been advertising his parties the old-fashioned way — with chalk on the sidewalks of campus.

"It will let people know where the good beer is," Perkins said, referring to his house where the beer is CO2 powered, "just like the bars."

The creators of PartySIU are planning on adding a live chat room and "drunken photos" to their already growing website.

"We don't know how big this is going to get," the creator said.

consumers of alcohol to prevent intoxication, drunk driving and underage drinking.

TIPS training is required for at least 50 percent of the staff at establishments that serve alcohol in Jackson County.

"Ideally, everyone hired takes the TIPS class — bartenders, waitresses, security and bar-backs — but due to turnover that number is kept from being 100 percent," Callahan said.

Matt Maier, owner of Mugsy McGuire's Bar and Grill and Entertainment Center, sends all of his employees to TIPS training every year.

Maier has his own way of making sure that his servers do not distribute alcohol to minors — loss of their jobs.

"You've got to control it," Maier said. "If you see it, you've got to stop it."

An extensive three-year investigation by the Task Force on College

Drinking, commissioned by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), reported alcohol consumption is linked to at least 1,400 student deaths and 500,000 unintentional injuries annually.

The standard fine for underage possession-consumption is a pay-by-mail fine of $250 or the option to go to court and have your fines established by a judge, Odum said.

Unlawful delivery, assisting a minor in obtaining alcohol by either buying or supplying, will get a person over the age of 21 arrested. There is no mail-in fine for unlawful delivery. The offender will automatically have to go to court and appear before a judge, Odum said.

Drinking arrests are not limited to the bars. House parties are also fair targets for underage drinkers, Odum said.

"If you're underage, you can get arrested walking down the street with an unopened six-pack," Odum said.

Today's Birthday (Aug. 29). You're willing to put in the extra work, and so is your excellent team. This is good, because there will sure be some. Don't worry - you're thorough and smart.
To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.
Aries (March 21-April 19) - Today is a 6 - Just when you've given up and think that life is a dreary routine, a person appears with a smile and offers a hand for no possible reason at all. It's impossible for you to refuse.
Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is an 8 - The bliss of true romance can lead to a project or two. Love energizes creativity, so this is normal. Get busy.
Gemini (May 21-June 21) - Today is a 6 - Schedule your date for tomorrow night, because you still have a few things to do first. Your sense of humor should be coming back, and not a moment too soon.
Cancer (June 22-July 22) - Today is a 7 - You've been using more energy than you realize. Do something special for yourself tonight. The privacy of your own home is best for whatever you choose.
Leo (July 23-Aug. 23) - Today is a 6 - It's a good time to get your accounting straight, so make that a priority. Later, curl up with a good book.
Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 23) - Today is a 9 - You could start getting benefits from a rather unlikely source. If you do the work, the profits and/or savings will come rolling in.
Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) - Today is a 6 - You've been doing a lot of thinking lately. However, don't get so bogged down in the thought process that you can't move when you should. Catch an opportunity.
Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is an 8 - Don't push yourself quite so hard. You need a while to let things sink in. As you know, a little more planning never hurts.
Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is a 6 - Try to remember exactly what you hear so that you can pass it along to your friends. This is a good skill to acquire. Practice.
Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Today is a 7 - It's important to be respectful now, especially if you're winning. Don't get arrogant. Remember, you're not doing it by yourself.
Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Today is a 5 - You've almost completed the most difficult part of the learning curve. Set time aside for a change of scenery and some intellectual refreshment.
Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - Today is a 7 - Evaluate a recent project so that you'll do better next time. That's always possible, even if this latest project was close to perfect.

SIU volleyball opens season tonight at home

SIU plays three games in Best Inns Invitational

Adam Soebbing
Daily Egyptian

Heading into tonight's match against Austin Peay State, the first of the season for a young but gifted SIU volleyball squad, there is still some uncertainty in the eyes of head coach Sonya Locke.

With many of the Saluki newcomers still learning the ropes, Locke is going into this weekend's Best Inns/Saluki Invitational just as clueless as many of her players.

"I really do not have a plan," said Locke, whose Salukis begin play at 7 p.m. at Davies Gymnasium. "I'm trying to see what we're doing in practice and see who seems to be the most consistent and at this point, the same people everyday are not being consistent."

As a result, expect a lot of players to be on the floor at some point for the Salukis, who hope to start the 2003 campaign on the right foot with three contests in two days.

"I told them you all need to be ready, no matter what your role is — how small, how large — you need to be ready to perform," said Locke, who has yet to determine a starting lineup or rotation for tonight's match.

The fact Locke has not named starters is not necessarily a bad thing but more a testament to the large number of Salukis who have the ability to contribute this season.

And with two more contests scheduled for Saturday against some experienced squads — the University of Denver at 11 a.m. and the University of Iowa at 7 p.m. — the Salukis will have plenty of chances to prove their abilities to Locke on the court.

While the athletes believe they are prepared for this weekend, Locke still feels the team lacks some confidence. Tonight's contest should go a long way in helping that confidence to grow, as should the familiar surroundings of Davies.

"Things are apt to get a little out of control, and I think when you have people cheering for you it could help bring that control back," Locke said. "When that happens, it will be nice having the crowd behind you rather than against you."

Kelly Harman, the lone senior on SIU's roster, also believes playing at home will be invaluable to the young Salukis as they get their first taste of college volleyball.

But it wouldn't matter where the tournament takes place; the Salukis just want to see what they are made of on the court against some real competition.

"I think everybody is ready to get out there and see what we have," Harman said. "I think we need to play a couple games to see where we're at and to see what everyone is capable of."

One might expect some of the Saluki newcomers to be a bit nervous entering their first collegiate action, but freshman Holly Marita is just the opposite.

The setter from Pleasant Prairie, Wis., can't wait to get started.

"I'm not nervous at all," Marita said. "I'm very excited actually to be starting off in our gym at home."

Hopefully there will be a big turnout and it will be really loud. It will be a good experience."

Marita and the Salukis hope to make it a forgettable experience for their opponents. Each team in the field went through some struggles last season, accumulating sub-.500 records. But a majority of the starters for each are back, which is more than the Salukis can say from their memorable 2002 season.

Denver (7-20 in 2002) and Iowa (8-22) return all six of their starters while Austin Peay State (10-20) returns five.

"They're upper-class teams," Locke said. "They're going to have chemistry that we don't have, which is going to pose a problem. They're going to flow through some things that still might be stutter steps for us."

With the field owning an edge in experience, Locke isn't going in with major expectations. She just wants to see her team play hard and play together.

"We just want to see them pursue balls, make good plays, celebrate their points, be aggressive and be competitors," Locke said. "Win, lose or draw, if they do those things, I'll be plenty happy."

Illinois fullback out for opener

Chris Neubauer
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

CHAMPAIGN (U-WIRE) — No matter how much Carey Davis keeps pestering University of Illinois head coach Ron Turner, Turner said Tuesday that he won't give in.

Davis, a senior fullback who had his left knee scoped Monday afternoon, won't play in Saturday's season opener against Missouri unless the Illini doctors give him the all-clear sign. Turner says those chances are slim.

Davis did trot out on the practice field during Tuesday's steamy hour-and-a-half practice. He gingerly ran with a ball on the sideline far away from any contact. Gingerly is the key word, though. Less than 24 hours after surgery, Davis' left leg was heavily wrapped in a beige bandage from his ankle to his thigh. His mobility was limited though he carefully tested out the knee with some cuts.

But his appearance at practice Tuesday was a positive enough sign for the Illini. It shows that barring any further complications, Davis likely won't miss anymore than Saturday's game. But he didn't look at all like a player that would be ready to cut, dive, sprint and block in four days. Let alone do all of the above on AstroTurf.

Sophomore Jason Davis will start at fullback against Missouri. Turner isn't concerned with any drop off between his starter and the replacement.

And why should he. Jason Davis has the same size and is nearly identical in size to Carey Davis.

Jason Davis saw playing time in the final five games of last season as a true freshman. He made the most of his four receptions, scoring touchdowns on two. He also gained 64 yards rushing.

NCAA report shows rising budgets fail to bring in titles

Andy Horonyz
Daily Egyptian

A new report released this month by the National Collegiate Athletic Association said schools' athletic budgets continue to soar — but their results often fail to get off the ground.

In its inaugural scientific study on the impact of intercollegiate sports spending, the NCAA said last week that its members' on average set aside about 3.5 percent of their total budgets to athletics, and nearly every program regularly posts negative revenues.

The findings from the two-year study, hailed by the NCAA as the most inclusive of its kind, show that athletic operating expenses of schools in the upper echelon of Division I-A rose 62 percent from 1996-1997, compared to a 39-percent increase in total university spending.

NCAA President Myles Brand told USA Today he expects the report "will result in more restrained and measured spending," and will urge university presidents to resist making unnecessary investments.

"They can say 'no,' where it was much harder to say 'no' before," Brand said.

But that was not the mindset of SIU Athletic Director Paul Kowalczyk, who said he found some discrepancies with the findings of the study.

He said that with the Athletic Department's current budget of $6.3 million, which comprises about 1.2 percent of the University's overall budget, SIU is relatively unaffected by the report.

"If I read it and interpreted it verbatim it basically says that based on our current budget, our basketball team should be winning national championships, and that's just not possible," Kowalczyk said.

In addition to the drastic increase in overall spending, the report also shows sprawling budgets do not reel in more victories or higher-caliber applicants for admission. Nor does augmented costs for football or men's basketball produce medium-term increases in winning percentages or net operating revenue.

According to the study, of the 117 Division I-A programs, 40 percent reported an operating profit in 2001; but state and school subsidies aside, only 6 percent ended the year in the red. And for every additional dollar spent on daily operations in football and men's basketball, schools typically realized only an additional dollar in revenue.

Brand trumpeted the results of the report as "myth-breaking," telling the Associated Press the public has framed its opinions of schools' athletic budgets based on extreme assumptions.

He also recalled instances where reporters had speculated universities doled out nearly a quarter of their total budgets to intercollegiate sports, far more than the 3.5 percent figure compiled by the study.

"It's just not appreciated what the reality of the situation is," Brand said.

Although the report is intended to curb spending, it is unlikely to make a dent in the annual spending of powerhouse programs like Ohio State, Florida, Nebraska and Tennessee.

Those schools' budgets all loom near $50 million, with a large chunk of that committed to their football teams.

But the NCAA's findings may raise some eyebrows among lower-division schools considering an upgrade to I-A.

Kowalczyk said the Saluki football program has considered making that jump in the past, but the recent surge in expenses has effectively ended any thoughts of moving up.

"That's just a huge step up for any school to take," Kowalczyk said.

"That would require giving out another 20 scholarships, recruiting nationally, flying first class and just generally running the program at an entirely different level. And it's not just football either; it eventually trickles down to other sports as well."

Fourteen programs have made similar moves in the past 12 years, and of those schools, only Marshall currently has a budget in excess of $10 million. And the Mid-American Conference member recently cut its men's track program in an effort to trim its budget to $11.5 million.

While Kowalczyk noted that Marshall is perhaps the greatest example of a smaller school having success at the I-A level, he said the SIU football program has a long way to go before it's ready to follow in the Thundering Herd's footsteps.

"Over the last 20 years with the increased budgets, television money and fundraising, all the components have changed," Kowalczyk said.

"I've been around I-A programs before at Kansas State and Northwestern, and I've seen how it's done at that level and it's a big leap."

That leap may now be a much bigger hurdle thanks to the economic-consulting firm

66If I read it and interpreted it verbatim it basically says that based on our current budget, our basketball team should be winning national championships, and that's just not possible."

— Paul Kowalczyk
SIU athletics director

Sebago Associates, which conducted the study examining athletic trends in the past decade, focusing on operating expenses such as salaries, team travel expenses and scholarship costs.

One area the Sebago team of Robert E. Litan, Jonathan M. Orszag and Peter R. Orszag may have neglected in their study was the issue of athletic programs building new facilities.

Chronicle of Higher Education Editor Welch Suggs, who recently compiled a study of the loss of male athletes due to Title IX, said construction of new athletic complexes is one of the chief components of the so-called "arms race" of intercollegiate athletics.

"That is really the biggest thing and it's really only a sticky point for the top quartile of teams in Division I," Suggs said.

But the construction of new facilities will soon be under greater scrutiny because, as Suggs said, the NCAA has already hired a group of associates from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, one of the country's most illustrious non-profit corporations, to conduct a study.

"At this point they haven't yet set a time table for this study, but the results could show findings similar to this one," Suggs said.

While many I-A programs sweat the results of the current spending study and await the findings of the facilities report, Kowalczyk said he expects the impact on the SIU program to be minimal.

"Perhaps at the Big 10 level the difference between wins and losses and the correlation to spending is significant," Kowalczyk said.

"But a lot of the things those schools do we just really have no need to do."

SPORTS FLASH

Former Saluki baseball player named to all-star team and promoted in minors

Former Saluki outfielder Sal Frisella has been named to the Appalachian League All-Star game and promoted to a single A short-season team.

Frisella was drafted by the St. Louis Cardinals at this year's Major League draft. He has led the Johnson City (Tenn.) Redbirds, in batting average (.338) and runs scored as well as ranking second in doubles (10), home runs (7), walks (21) and RBIs (30). Frisella also led the Appalachian League in on-base percentage (.440), second in slugging percentage (.545) and third in hitting.

Frisella's numbers earned him a spot as the sole representative of the Redbirds on the Appalachian League post-season All-Star Team and a promotion to the short-season A New Jersey Cardinals of the New York-Penn League.

The all-star team is voted on by league managers and media.

SIU men's and women's cross country to hold time trials this Saturday

The SIU men's and women's cross country teams will participate in their first timed event of the season, an intrasquad meet.

The trial will begin at 9 a.m. The women will run first in a 4K, followed by the men running a 6K at 9:30 a.m.

The race will be run in the open field behind Abe Martin Field.

Salukis bully Quincy 64-14

ANTHONY SOUFFLE - DAILY EGYPTIAN

SIU sophomore quarterback Joel Sambursky attempts a pass during the first quarter of Thursday night's season opener against the Quincy Hawks. Sambursky completed five of nine passes for 109 yards and a touchdown. He also rushed for 42 yards and another touchdown as the Salukis thrashed the Hawks 64-14. SIU will next play Southeast Missouri State Sept. 6 in Cape Girardeau, Mo. The Indians fell Thursday night to Ohio 17-3.

SIU football pulls together after Koutsos has a close call

When Tom Koutsos hobbled off the field, the attention of the SIU football team followed him.

Koutsos just received the pitch on the option from quarterback Joel Sambursky. Only one Quincy Hawk defender was between the senior running back and the school's all-time points record.

He leaped over the defender, but his right leg clipped the defender's pads and sent him in a violent aerial summersault. After crashing on top on his helmet, Koutsos attempted to hop back on his feet just like he did after all but one of his runs in his career.

This was reminiscent of that one run, though, when he broke his wrist against Murray State last season. Something wasn't right with the school's all-time leading rusher. He finished the game with 21 yards on a mere five carries.

But unlike last season, Koutsos re-emerged on the sidelines late in the second quarter, walking with a slight limp but nothing to the degree it was when he first left the game. When Koutsos reemerged, so did the spirit of the Salukis, who went on to cruise past the Hawks 64-14 Thursday night in front of 7,854 fans at McAndrew Stadium.

The Salukis were sloppy when Koutsos' right knee was being checked by trainers. SIU had six penalties for 55 yards and lost a fumble in the first half. The Dawgs also allowed 162 yards in the half to the Hawks, who ran the run-and-shoot spread offense out of the no huddle.

But in a matter of less than four minutes after Koutsos returned to SIU's sideline, the Salukis scored three touchdowns.

"I was angry because I worked hard to get back after a year and a half," Koutsos said. "Then to get hurt in the first game, but you really can't do nothing."

"It's football; it's a dangerous sport."

The early prognosis is that he sustained a sprained knee. He is expected to play next weekend against Southeast Missouri State next weekend.

Still, it worried the bejesus out of SIU head coach Jerry Kill.

"Any time a player goes down, you just don't want that," Kill said. "The first thing I thought of was 'Good Lord Please.' Just being what [Koutsos] has been through, and I just said a little private prayer."

"The good lord always comes through, and Tommy is going to be all right."

Muhammad Abdulqadir was one of the few Salukis whose play was not deterred when Koutsos went down.

Abdulqadir showed that last season's 1,331 yards were no fluke, even if his 142 yards Thursday night came against a lesser Quincy squad.

The senior racked up 138 of those yards and all three of his touchdowns in the first half on just nine carries. It took him only two carries to get his first touchdown when he scampered 59 yards on a draw play.

Half of the 5-foot-7, 200 pound all-purpose back's carries went for more than 10 yards. On the night, the preseason All-American averaged 14.2 yards every time he touched the ball.

Not to be forgotten was Brandon Robinson. The do-it-all fullback had 49 yards and two touchdowns rushing and added 33 receiving yards.

Sambursky, the returning Gateway Conference Freshman of the Year, didn't show any signs of a sophomore slump. The heady quarterback completed five of his nine passes for 109 yards and a touchdown. He also rushed for 42 yards and another score.

SIU's revamped starting defense showed a bend-but-don't-break approach. Quincy was able to amass yards liberally until the Hawks neared SIU's 40-yard line, which is where the Salukis tightened the clamps.

The Hawks were not able to flicker any lights on the scoreboard until 1:02 in the third quarter when SIU's second-string defense was in the game. Quincy quarterback Matthew Wehrle hooked up with J.P. Limbaugh for a 15-yard touchdown pass.

SIU recovered two of the five fumbles it forced and also had an interception. The Saluki defense also recorded five sacks.

Even though Quincy lacked equal talent, the Hawks were able to give the still young Saluki defense a crash course on the run-and-shoot offense. That will serve them well next Saturday when the Salukis travel to take on a pass-happy SEMO squad and its Walter Payton nominee quarterback Jack Tomco.

"It gave us a good chance to evaluate what we have and see what we need to work on," Kill said. "And we did it with a win."
