If implemented, the proposed policy would establish a separate board to consider sexual harassment complaints which could not be resolved informally through the individual departments.

The University is soliciting input from various constituency groups, including the senate, before deciding whether to adopt a new policy. Sexual harassment complaints are currently handled through regular grievance procedures. The senate's Governance

Committee will present several amendments to the University

One of the amendments will recommend that the Om-budsman's Office should conbudsman's Office should consider informal complaints, rather than the University Affirmative Action Officer as is contained in the proposal.

Another amendment will recommend that when a charge of sexual harassment is substantiated in an informal complaint, the file should be maintained permanently. If the charge is not substantiated, the detailed records of the investigation would be immediately expunged from the University's files and a notation would be made in the files that the charge was found to be the charge was found to be unsubstantiated.

The senate may also discuss the Board of Trustees' decision, made last Thursday, to delay made last Thursday, to delay the planned 3 percent January pay raise for SIU employees until April. However, Herbert Donow, Faculty Senate president, said he believes that "At this juncture, and due to the fact that the raise is such small potatoes. I don't think small potatoes. I don't we'll have much to say we'll have much to say about it. he said. What we are losing amounts to maybe a couple of hundred dollars for most of us anyway. There is one point we'd like to make, and that is that the 3 percent be carried over to next year's base

Mining research effort gets $1.5 million boost

Congress is giving to universities across the country what President Reagan is taking away from the Department of Energy — fossil fuel research funding — and SIU-C has become a principal participant.

U.S. House Representatives recently approved $1.5 million in federal proved $1.5 million in rederat energy research funds for SIU-C to operate the DOE's Mining Technology Center in Car-terville, which had been put on the selling block. U.S. Rep. Paul Simon's plan Mining research funding, already down to $340 million this year from a one-time high of $400 million, will be $300 million in 1983, according to Simon aide Paul Morrill.

J. Craig Carrell, research development director of the SIU-C Coal Research Center, said funding for demonstration plants and other big projects may have been cut, but basic research funding has not.

He said he expects research to be stepped up with SIU-C operating the Carterville

Is Bracy purchase a moral obligation?

THERE'S SOMETHING TO BE said about moral obligations. When people give their word, they have a moral obligation to keep it When an institution gives its word, it has a moral obligation to keep it or suffer loss of credibility.

But when President Somit talked of SIU-C's having a "moral obligation" to but the Brack Building some 15 miles from company.

But when President Somit talked of SIU-C's having a "moral obligation" to but the Bracy Building some 15 miles from campus as a temporary library storage, it was not SIU-C as an institution speaking. He spoke it as a personal belief.

Somit announced at the Board of Trustites meeting last Thursday that he believes SIU-C had a moral obligation to go with the Bracy purchase. All the former claims about Bracy being the best available solution to the Morris library storage problem have boiled down to moral obligation.

It is good of the president to remind us that the University must be careful about keeping its word. This is important if the University is to maintain an image as a credible and respectable institution.

THE UNIVERSITY IS not legally bound to buy Bracy. The $120,000 already paid in leasing the building is no commitment to buy it. If anything it frees the University from any obligation to buy. buy it. If anything it frees the University from any obligation to buy. The lease payment does not even apply to the purchase price. Besides, the University has other moral obligations. There is the obligation to use the $1.6 million allocated by the state for the purchase of what is best for the University in the long run—instead of the temporary solution that Bracy is supposed to be.

There is also an obligation of SIU-C to its faculty, staff and students. This is how many constituency groups and experts on the issue feel about the Bracy purchase:

The Faculty Senate — No! The Dean's Council — No!

The Graduate Council — No!
The Graduate Student Council — No!

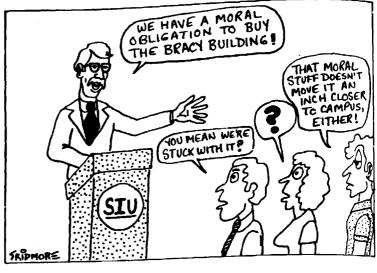

The Library Affairs Advisory Committee — No!
Ralph McCoy, dean emeritus of library affairs — No!
Kenneth Peterson, dean of library affairs — What's the use. They Undergraduate Student Organization — We'll sit on the fence — safer that way.

SO THE DECISION to buy the Bracy Building deserves a second look. Serious consideration should be given to what seems an adequate alternative close at hand. The fact that the Baptist Sturlent Center which was recommended by Vice-President for Academic Affairs John Guyon, has only recently come on the market should not deter a decision to obtain that facility if that is the best when judged by objective standards. In fact the BSC has many attractive features that may make it the better choice.

The Center has more floor space than Bracy — 77,000 square feet compared to the latter's 60,000. Its dormitory rooms can be easily converted to office space that the University badly needs — the way it was done with Woody Hall and Anthony Hall. It is on campus. — a mere 200 yards or so from Morris library. It would prove a more acceptable solution to most of the constituency groups on campus. Finally, it might prove the ideal way to deal with the state's refusing to allow SIU to use the appropriated money to build a storage building — however unreasonable that restriction may seem to many.

YES, THERE IS a let to be said about moral obligations. It is important to live by one's word. But, perhaps, in the matter of the Bracy purchase there is really no moral obligation to buy it. There is also perhaps a higher moral obligation — that of doing what is best for the University in the long run — that overrides any perceived obligations to the owners of the Bracy Building.

In vain, the editorial committee of the DE searched for a replacement to fill in for the master while he took his leave. It just was not possible to find another strip that had the balance of social commentary and humor to deserve a place on the editorial page. Therefore, at the present time, no strip has been brought in to replace "Doonesbury."

Not everyone has loved "Doonesbury," of course. No other comic strip has been pulled from so many newspapers because of Trudeau's controversial treatment of issues and public figures.

Question Begin's actions

We thank the almighty for Dr. Robert Ashmore, an "expert" on the Arab-Israeli conflict. I attest to the authenticity of his remarks during his candid lecture Dec. 3 at the Student Center. He spoke the raw truth.

There is a great need for the American people to come face to face with the duplicity of our to face with the duplicity of our country. As an American who loves America and all she stands for. I dare say, we need more authentic Americans to "tell the truth" no matter who is hurt in its wake. Truth never wrongs anyone. Company run by SIU-C grads works with microelectronics

By Robert Green Staff Writer

A small Carbondale company whose employees are all former SIU-C students is trying to use their expertise to find new and environmentally beneficial uses for microelectronic technology.

Microstructures Inc., located south of Arnold's Market on Route 51, is in the business of "microprocessor-based prog-ramable control," according to Jim Zimmerman, an engineer who graduated from the School of Technical Careers in 1978 with a degree in microelec-

Zimmerman said the com-pany designs a microprocessor programable controller which can be used, for example, for energy management in com-mercial and industrial industrial buildings

"The controller could control peak loads, which can save customers a lot of money," Zimmerman said. "It can also be used for industrial processing control such as assembly lines, for a home computer control system which could turn on appliances and control home energy use and for statistical analysis in the billing of commercial solar energy systems."

A microprocessor, he said, is an integrated circuit in the form of a single chip. Inside the chip are the essential components of a computer, and because it's programable, it can perform in an almost infinite number of duties.

The parabolic collectors, which are not made by Microstructures, are generally made of metal and glass and are designed to concentrate the sun's rays to a focal point. The resulting heat is used to heat water, and can also be used to supplement a heating system, Zimmerman said.

He said he believes his company's solar tracking unit is probably the best one being made today. We try to do everything really state-of-the-art."

Lummerman said the com-pany was formed about a year and a half ago and has seven employees — three engineers, two technicians and two in-vestors who take care of marketing and inventory. All employees were SIU-C students.

He said the company operates on a shoestring. With much of the equipment donated, but prospects for the future are bright.

Zimmerman said the company is negotiating a contract to supply the tracking systems for 570 collectors at a resort in Galena, and has negotiated an energy management contract

But despite the desire to expand, Zimmerman said the small corporation has a credo upon that it won't compromise.

her choice, she said.
The gifts helped an elderly woman buy a walker; provided toys and clothes for the children of an unemployed worker; bought shoes for the children of a divorced mother; paid for dentures for another elderly woman; and provided spending woman; and provided spending money for poor nursing home residents.

"I could see the appreciation in people and that's all the reward I ever needed — just to see them appreciative."

During the Christmas season of 1980, while 52 Americans were held hostage in Iran, Mrs. Reed used the money to buy 52 electric candles for residents to display in their windows.

The gifts never were considered charity, she said.
"We just called them miracles."

"Miracles do happen, you know, so maybe they'll happen again," said Mrs. Reed, who writes columns for three weekly newspapers in east-central Illinois.

The benefactors had decided that Mrs. Reed should distribute the money. After each gift, she would write to them and explain how it was used. Each time, they would

SIU-C names house for millionaire

y Lisa Tecklenburg kudent Writer

en W. Clement Stone came When W. Clement Stone came hrough with $1 million in stock in 1969 to fund the construction of the SIU Conference Center etter known as the University louse — he may have saved a of of peoples' necks.

Back then, the country was a storm center of protest. Students protested the Vietnam conflict, the draft, the civi rights movement and, at SIU-C there was an added controversy

the construction of new house for the University president Amidst an ever increas Amidst an ever increasing construction cost estimate, the general student body protested and the Illinois Board of Higher Education and the Illinois University of the Samerantition of the Samerantit Education and the Illinois House of Representitives made House of Representitives made investigations into the construction plans. The Student Senate demanded resignations of the Board of Trustees, the University president and the Carbondale and Edwardsville campuses over the matter. But Stone came through with

But Stone came through with the needed funds, in the form of $1 million in insurance stock in 1969. Now, 13 years later, the Board of Trustees has approved a motion to rename the house the W. Clement and Jesse V. Stone University House.

Stone will accept the honor when the University House officially adopts its new name in a dedication ceremony ceremony scheduled for Saturday.

Clement Stone has been hailed aa a philanthropist. Born Chicago in 1902 and left fatherless two years later, he became one of America's most notable self-made millionaires.

Stone ne stepped into the ess world at the age of 6, hawking the Chicago Examiner newspaper on street corners. By the time he was 13, he owned his own newsstand. When he was 16 he sold insurance and, at age 20, with a savings of $100. Stone set up his own insurance agency.

By 1979, with assets estimated at $1.5 billion, Stone's Combined Insurance Company had become one of the leading insurance companies in the Stone has attributed his success to a "positive mental attitude" — a philosophy he espouses through books and lectures

Speaking from experience, he has insisted that "anyone can become wealthy, no matter how poor the start in life."

Stone has also been noted for his civic leadership.

1 Block from Campus

He has devoted service to the throughout his adult life, he has areas of criminal justice, prisoner rehabilitation and guidance for troubled guidance for troubled adolescents. He was named

Chicagoan of the Year in 1980, for his work with Chicago Boys received 10 honorary degrees from colleges and universities.

Honorariums from SIU-C are nothing new to Stone, however. In 1980, the College of Business and Administration the him its recent the him its second International Stone was nominated for the Leadership Award for En-Nobel Peace Prize in 1981 and, trepreneurship.

Herpes self-help group formed

By Michele Inmai

Along with society's dreaded words such as nuclear holocaust, pollution, famine, tax cuts and global destruction ranks a new word genital herpes.

This sexually transmitted disease will affect half a million people in the United States and the 20 million who already have disease will recurrences, accordi Harvard Medical Newletter. according to a ledical School

Although herpes has reached epidemic levels at SIU-C, it may be approaching endemic proportions.

Students who suffer from herpes may feel shame and anxiety, according to Silvana Richardson, a registered nurse and graduate assistant in Health Activation. Some may feel helpless, she said, in losing control of their bodies because herpes is recurrent and no cure exists. Others may feel shame because it is sexually transmitted

To help alleviate this anxiety. the SIU-C Wellness Center is forming a Herpes Self-Help Group which will begin the third ek in February, Richardson

The group will provide, "information about herpes and how to take care of yourself if you have herpes within a mutual support group."
Richardson said. "We hope that people in the group can give

Knowing the facts about how the disease is spread how to deal with recurrences and how to reduce the likelihood of future out-breaks can give a sense of some control back to the person with ' Richardson said in a

According to Richardson. there are two types of herpes virus. Herpes simplex virus-I used to be associated with cold sores or fever blisters on lips and Herpes virus-II genital herpes. But, Richardson said, either type of virus can cause herpes infections anywhere on the body though direct contact with mucous direct contact with mucous membranes and secretions of an infected person.

If the virus is contracted. blisterlike sores develop two to 20 days after exposure at or The person may also have swollen lymph glands, and general aches and fever, Richardson said.

Richardson said.

After two to three weeks the sores heal, but the virus remains in the body where it may be dormant for a lifetime or be reactivated by perhaps physical or emotional stress, sunlight, fever or fatigue.

Those with herpes are concerned about spreading the disease to sexual partners. Richardson said. To prevent spreading the disease, she said to avoid sexual contact or contact with other infected areas when the sores are present. That will mean that teams will stay with their starters longer, and play more man-to-man defense at the end of the man defense at the end of the game. It could also make possible strange developments such as giving a team a layup but denying the outside shot late in the game, or purposely fouling a player rather than let him attempt a three-point shot that might tie the game.

Most coaches conceive the shot being taken at the end of the game to cut a lead, or towards halftime to establish a wider lead. A few observers consider the possibility of a great shooter setting up outside — it's only a 20 to 22-footer — and consistently throwing in shots

Three-point shot losing coaches' favor

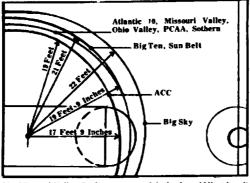

Saluki basketball coach Allen Van Winkle doesn't like the newly instituted three-point play rule. Neither does Wichita State's Gene Smithson. Nor does Drake's Gary Garner think much of it, even though his Bulldogs have had more suc-cess with it — hitting nine of 19 cess with it — nitting nine of 19 three-pointers in four games — than any other Valley team.

Bradley's Dick Versace thought it was all right for a while, but a one game experience changed bs mind.

Bradley made just bree of 18 while, but a one game ex-perience changed h.s mind. Bradley made just if ree of 18 shots from outside the 19-9 three-point stripe in a game against Murray State. Versace spent the next week taking the play out of his offens. "We devoted a week of practice to learning the three point line," said Versace. "We will now use it as a gauge to shoot inside."

Few of the Valley coaches were ardent supporters of the new rule when it was approved in May. The coaches had voted unanimously, though some reluctantly, to place the line at 21 feet. Then the rules committee placed it 15 inches closer to the center of the hoop

The Missouri-Valley Conference went right in the middle when it came top placement of the three-point line. In the MVC, a successful shot from as close as 19-9 is worth three points.

That made the coaches even more leery of the rule. Except for fervent supporters like West Texas State's Ken Edwards, most of them have adopted a wait-and-see attitude towards the long jump shot.
So why was it established, and why was it unanimous?

Perhaps as part of the nationwide rush to experiment with college basketball this year. Major collegiate con-ferences rushed each other to institute new rules regarding the three-point play rule and the shot clock

Nine conferences adopted the three-point play, and eight of them established some sort of shot clock, ranging from 30 to 45 seconds. The MVC did not adopt shot clock. It was felt that the three-point play would add excitement to the game, especially in the closing moments, and also keep teams from clogging the lanes defensively.

The closest line is in the Atlantic Coast Conference, one of the first conferences to adopt a change. The line in the ACC is at 17-9, measured straight out The MVC line is at 19-9, at the top of the key, as is the line for the Atlantic Ten, Ohio Valle, me Atlantic Ten, Onto Valle?, Pacific Coast Athletic Association, Southern, Big Ten and Sun Belt Conferences. percent, and maybe as low as 17 or 18 percent.
Drake is the only Valley team that has had measurable success with the play. The Bulldogs have made nine of 19 attempts. Guard Terry Youngbauer has made seven of his 16 tries, and has fired away at any time, not just at the end of the game.
Still, Drake coach Gary Garner still has his doubts about the play, according to Drake Sports Information Director Dave Williford.

Rose Peeples said she was brought up not to be selfish, and maybe that's why she looks to pass the ball to an open teammate before taking the shot herself.

Maybe that's why she was elected co-captain of the 1982-83 women's basketball team by her teammates despite the fact she had transferred to SIU-C only a few months before.

And maybe that is why she transferred from Kansas to SIU-C in her senior year, knowing that because of the transfer she would be unable to play if the Salukis are to win their confere .ce and move on to nationals.

After completing her After completing her two-year junior college stint. Peeples was recruited by many major colleges, including SIU-C. She chose Kansas, a Big Eight school, mostly because Lynette Woodard, selected twice as the college woman backetball player of the year basketball player of the year, did a lot of the talking.
"That's really the only reason why I went there," Peeples

Rookie divers chalking up victories

By Brian Higgins Staff Writer

Somewhere southwest of Portage, Ind., and northeast of Clearwater, Fla., lies Car-bondale, Ill. From these two cities, as diverse socially and cities, as diverse socially and economically as they are climatically, hail two SIU-C freshman divers. Angie Faidherbe and Cindy Mullin have converged under the watchful eye of diving Coach Dennis Golden to form the the receiver available of the appropries. new nucleus of the women's Faidherbe and Mullin both 18. were recruited by SIU-C after outstanding prep careers. Faidherbe was the top diver in both her conference and district in Indiana, as well placing in the state meet. Mullin was a con-ference and sectional champion, and earned state medalist honors three times.

Under the SIU-C banner, however, the duo has found themselves facing a different echelon of competition. When top diver Saundra Bollinger injured her ankle, Faidherbe and Mullin found themselves and Multin found themselves having to change their strategy from that of learners to that of leaders. Against Missouri and Auburn, that is exactly what they did.

"I think the competition's difficult," said Faidherbe, who claimed the 1-meter titles at both meets. "In high school diving competition, you were out for blood at every meet - out for blood at every meet—you had to win. Here all the divers know each other. You want to win, but you're also out to have a good time."

"I'm having a better time diving here than I was in high school," said Mullin, who kept pace with Faidherbe by winning the 3-meter championships against Mizzou and Auburn. "Since Saundra was injured, it has helped to get first at a meet. It builds your confidence. Just getting first at a college meet is really a neat feeling."

really a neat feeling."
Since the season started, both divers have improved their scores with each meet. Neither has yet hit the magical score of 240. which, if accomplished twice, would qualify them for nationals. But, as Golden noted, they are a world closer to that mark than they were when the season commenced.

"One thing I've been really pleased with is that in every meet they've gotten higher and higher," Golden said, "If the nigher. Golden said. If the scores are any indication, they'll make nationals in another meet or two. It's not something that happens overnight, so we're all being patient with the process. They were really great at Auburn. The close relationship between Golden and his divers is one factor that both Faidherbe and Mullin attribute to their recent success.

"I thirk he's a great coach." Faidherte said. "He's a real fun coach. It's not like you have to win all the time. When you're nervous, he's great at relaxing mate's sentiments.

Mullin echoed her team-

"I think Denny's a great coach," she said. "He says you're here to have fun - go for
