Fall tuition money falls short of goal

By John Baldwin
Staff Writer

A shortfall in the amount of money the University received from tuition in the fall — to the tune of about $800,000 — has administrators double checking whether they need to hire new people and being extra careful with their money.

The University has fallen that much short of its projections before, but not so early in the year.

"This large sum is happening in one semester. That's what's so alarming," Michael Williams, director of the budget office, said.

Administrators hope the tuition increase that will take effect in spring will help offset the magnitude of the shortfall. There was a tuition increase that took effect last spring, too.

Williams said he could not be sure about the exact amount of the shortfall because fall is not completely over and all the figures have not been tallied.

He said the shortfall could be "in excess of $800,000 or $900,000, maybe as much as $1 million."

President John C. Guyon and Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs, emphatically said that there is not a hiring freeze at the University.

They also have told deans that any commitments they have made to hire people can be fulfilled.

"Don't send people away on break worrying about their jobs, whatever you do," Guyon said.

Deans said they were told they could still hire people, but they now need to defend the need to fill positions with the vice president's office.

All colleges normally have a "lapse" in their budgets, meaning there is a certain amount of money in their budgets that they don't spend because shortfalls generally are expected.

"Income fund projections are more of an art than a science," Guyon said.

"There's always the chance we will miss an income fund projection. We always miss a little," he said.

Most deans agree that this is an austerity measure to make sure the University has enough money to operate through the rest of the year.

Kay Allen, project coordinator in the budget office, said part of the reason for the shortfall is an increase in the number of graduate students, about two-thirds of whom receive tuition waivers.

She also said that most graduate students don't take as many courses as un-

Senator: USG broke own rules

By Brad Bushue
Staff Writer

The Undergraduate Student Government senate had the right to vote on the eligibility of a senator who did not meet academic requirements, but only if the decision resulted in her impeachment, according to the actions of a USG senator.

USG Sen. Rod Hughes Friday appealed the senate's decision to allow academically ineligible Juliana Taylor to remain on the senate to the Judicial Board of Governance, requesting they review the senate's findings.

Hughes said the "USG did not make a lawful decision according to the constitution — it says if you don't have the GPA, you can't sit on the senate."

The appeal says the USG is in violation of their constitution's article that states that all senators must maintain at least a 2.0 grade point average.

2 students dropped from wheelchair lifts

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

Two students who are in wheelchairs said they were injured and their wheelchairs were damaged after being dropped by the wheelchair lifts that are attached to the vans used in the handicapped van service.

The students, who wished not to be identified because they depend on the van service for their transportation needs, said they were dropped from the lift when the hook, or catch, that holds their wheelchairs on the lift gave out.

The man said he was dropped twice from the same van — first in mid-July then in early August. After the second accident, he said he suffered pulled ligaments and muscles in his back as well as damage to his chair. The man said he is considering suing the University for the damage and medical costs.

The woman said she was dropped three feet from the lift and her chair came down on top of her. She said she required a tetanus shot and her wheelchair suffered an estimated $1,000 damage. The accident occurred in September.

"I can't figure out if it's lack of training (of the student workers) or the van is in bad shape," the woman said.

The man blamed a combination of poorly

Engineering names Chen as new dean

By Miguel Alba
Staff Writer

Juh Wah Chen, associate dean of the College of Engineering and Technology, will step into his new role as dean of the college effective Jan. 1, replacing Kenneth Tempelmeyer who has served as dean since July, 1979.

Tempelmeyer will return to teach at the University after a year's sabbatical.

President John C. Guyon announced the appointment Tuesday on the recommendation of Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and research. The appointment is subject to approval by Chancellor Lawrence K. Pettit and ratification by the Board of Trustees.

A professor of mechanical engineering, Chen joined the University in 1965 as an associate professor after leaving Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pa. He was promoted to professor four years later. In 1985, he was named associate dean.

"I want to keep improving the quality of undergraduate education here at the college," Chen said. "I also want to expand research activities."

Three students stuck in elevator for 2 hours

By Daniel Wallenberg
Staff Writer

Mike Yosanovich, senior in management, said that when people in the movies get stuck in an elevator they usually escape through a hatch in the ceiling. But the hatch in the elevator he was in was bolted shut.

Yosanovich and two others were trapped in an elevator at Morris Library for nearly two hours on Friday before they were rescued.

Kevin Scott, senior in zoology, said he and his fiancée, along with Yosanovich, entered the elevator on the fourth floor at about 10:50 a.m. and pushed the button to take them to the first floor.

The elevator began to move downward but the light stayed on four, Scott said. When the elevator stopped the door did not open.

When the trapped students failed to get the elevator moving by pushing the buttons for other floors, the button that opens the door was pushed, Scott said.

When the door opened the trio was confronted with a wall and were not sure if the elevator was stuck between floors or if the elevator had gone down to the basement, Scott said.

Yosanovich, a student worker at the library, said the elevator they were on was supposed to service floors 1 to 6

Shamir rejects Arafat's requisition for peace talks

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir rejected PLO leader Yasser Arafat's appeal for peace talks Tuesday, calling the Palestinian leader's speech to the United Nations "a monumental act of deception." As Arafat was outlining his peace plan for a Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied territories, violence flared anew in the West Bank.

Police disperse demonstrators with force

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Police beat protesters with truncheons and fired concussion grenades Tuesday to disperse an anti-government demonstration on the seventh anniversary of the imposition of martial law, which crushed the Solidarity union. "Jaruzelski must go," chanted a crowd of 500 students demanding the ouster of Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski in a demonstration near Warsaw University.

Curfew in earthquake zone; death toll rises

MOSCOW (UPI) — Authorities ordered a curfew Tuesday to prevent looting and ethnic violence in quake-devastated areas of Armenia, with one source saying soldiers shot at looters, as the death toll rose to 55,000 and hope faded for those still trapped in the frigid weather. Authorities said they clamped midnight-to-dawn curfews in several stricken cities and villages to halt the looting of homes and stores and prevent a resurgence of ethnic violence that has plagued Armenia all year.

Czechs halt jamming of Radio Free Europe

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (UPI) — Czechoslovakia, inching further toward political reforms, has stopped jamming U.S.-supported Radio Free Europe and will allow protests by opposition groups that do not endanger the political stability of the country, a top Communist Party official said Tuesday.

Judge rules against gay rights amendment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federal judge ruled Tuesday that an amendment attached by Congress to the District of Columbia budget allowing religious groups to discriminate against homosexuals is unconstitutional. U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth, in an 18-page opinion, ruled the law known as the Armstrong Amendment was unconstitutional. The measure had been designed to force the city to choose between changing its human rights statute protecting homosexuals or lose some $3.2 billion in federal funding.

PTL empire ordered sold for $65 million

COLUMBIA, S.C. (UPI) — The PTL empire built and lost by Jim Bakker was ordered sold Tuesday for $65 million in cash to an Orthodox Jew from Canada who gave no indication of what he plans to do with the Christian television ministry. The order came a month after U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds rejected a bid almost twice as large but involving less cash from Toronto real estate developer Stephen Murrick, who has said previously that his interest in PTL is strictly financial.

Rate restructure proposal is made by Illinois Bell

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — Illinois Bell Tuesday proposed restructuring its rates to raise $50 million in additional revenues while lowering business rates to make the company more competitive during telephone deregulation in local markets. Under the proposal, rates would increase an annual $22.92 for the average residential customer outside of the Chicago Metropolitan area as of January 1990.

Capitol to look for jobs for laid-off workers

JACKSONVILLE (UPI) — About 80 part and full-time jobs will be affected by a decision by Capitol Records to close a distribution center next fall, the center's manager said Tuesday. Kenneth Rothdeutsch said Capitol Records will try to find jobs for as many employees as possible at the company's compact disc production plant also in Jacksonville.

'Naked Gun' filled with comedic gags

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

Film Review

The Queen of England, the California Angels and Mikhail Gorbachev are shown no mercy in the latest parody from the makers of "Airplane!"

"The Naked Gun" is adapted from the TV satire "Police Squad," which brain dead ABC executives axed in 1981 because, "it required that viewers actually pay attention to the show," according to the film's producer Robert K. Weiss, a 1972 SIU-Calumnus.

But never fear! Police Lt. Frank Drebin returns via the silver screen, fighting crime and slinging puns in this gag-filled comedy that's a sure bet for relieving tension after finals week.

Leslie "Don't call me Surely" Nielsen repeats his sitcom role and keeps a remarkably straight face throughout the shenanigans.

The comedic plays on words, outrageous sight gags and silly situations dreamed up by writers Zucker, Abrahams and Zucker serve to hilariously undermine Nielsen's traditional TV cop in this slapstick spoof on the crime-detective genre.

Also lampooned are baseball blooper tapes, condom ads and those awful movie love sequences that show couples laughing in the park or running on the beach together.

Another strength of the film is its cameo appearances. "The Naked Gun" features no less than seven guest stars.

Stay through the credits. They include "Mr. Weiss' Divorce Attorney" and bit players who are identified by their one big line in the film instead of by "Man at Counter," etc.

When producer Weiss spoke at the Carbondale premiere of "The Naked Gun," he mentioned that the writers weren't satisfied just to write a joke and then go on to the next one.

Many of the film's gags are very well developed, topping themselves for a final payoff just when they appear to be over. Such is the case with O.J. Simpson's execution scene and Lt. Drebin's downtown car chase.

Other jokes, which appear to be throw-away gags, produce some of the funniest moments in the picture, as when Queen Elizabeth sits in her special box seat at a major league ball game only to wind up passing hot dogs, beer and peanuts down to the other people.

The film's weakest moments occur as a result of its teenage bathroom humor.

Certain "sex" dialogue between Nielsen and Priscilla Presley would be better placed in a movie with the word "Porky's" in it, not an intelligent attempt to satirize genre conventions.

Bottom line — this is no "Airplane!" but the gags and slyness keep "The Naked Gun" rolling along, with some often hilarious moments.

By Phyllis Coon
Staff Writer

The donation of photo finishing equipment will help make College of Technical Career photo production students more employable, a visiting instructor at the college said.

A Noritsu Quick Service system, valued at $75,000 was donated by Noritsu Corporation of America to the college, Jerry Courvoisier, a photo production instructor, said.

"Noritsu is the world's largest manufacturer of photo finishing equipment and they feel our program is one of the best," Courvoisier said. "They want our students to train on their equipment."

The donated equipment is a one-hour mini-lab, he said. "It does everything from processing to printing the film," Courvoisier said. "It's something like you would see in a mall."

Through technological advances in processing and printing, the one-hour laboratories make up 50 percent of the industry.

"Students will benefit from the technical skills the training on the photo finishing equipment provides."

Semester in review: Fall '88 at SIU-C

FALL SEMESTER 1988 is almost over and we would like to take this time to review some of the events that shaped this semester.

The announced tuition increase panicked many students and sent them running to their financial aid advisers in hopes of receiving more funding. The tuition increase, undoubtedly, will force some students to drop out of SIU-C because of lack of funds. The situation is unfortunate, but students will have to grin and bear it.

BUT SOME STUDENTS did not give in without a fight. A group of students protesting tuition increases walked into a Board of Trustees meeting carrying a coffin with the word "education" written on the side. Another group of students planted a cross in front of Morris Library with a banner attached to it reading "Higher Education, R.I.P."

For a while, it seemed student activism would return to campus after the apathy that has plagued college students throughout much of the 1970s and '80s, but the protests disappeared just as silently as they arrived.

JIM HART BEGAN his first full semester as Athletics Director. Amid controversy, Hart was hired by the administration because it believed he would be a good fund raiser. He proved them right. Although there were discrepancies, Hart surpassed by at least $15,000 his goal of raising $50,000 for the athletics department this semester. But despite a successful fund raising campaign, word leaked out that the men's gymnastics team and the women's field hockey team would be cut because of budget problems.

THE ANNUAL HALLOWEEN celebration ended this year in a flurry of controversy. President John C. Guyon declared this year's Halloween celebration an "incipient riot" and announced steps to end the celebration once and for all. Guyon's plan is to create a midsemester break the week of the Halloween celebration so students will consider going home instead of remaining in Carbondale. Guyon's plan sounds like a good idea, but it remains to be seen if the new break will be effective in ending Halloween.

THE INFAMOUS COMPUTER virus that crippled computer systems throughout the country found a home here at the University. For weeks, computer programs were botched, erased or rendered completely useless, which resulted in lost term papers and homework assignments for many students. The virus also created a new excuse for students who handed in late assignments: "The computer ate it."

University faculty voted this year on whether to unionize or not to unionize. Despite an onslaught of letters and advertisements by the IEA-NEA, SIU-C faculty voted a resounding "No." Collective bargaining at SIU-C would have to wait another two years.

OTHER SIGNIFICANT events that occurred this semester include the trial of Richard Nitz, the man accused of murdering Michael Miley, the approval by the City Council of the east-west couple, clear-cutting in the Shawnee National Forest, the numerous impeachments — including that of Vince "Makes Sense" Kelly — in the Undergraduate Student Government; and, of course, the forgettable presidential campaign.

Letters

Saluki fans boring

This letter is a complaint about the lame fans who attend Saluki men's basketball. I attended the game with four friends and, between us four and the guys in front of us, we had more spirit than the whole place combined, including the cheerleaders.

We sat in section U and every time Evansville came up to shoot free throws, we were on our feet waving and screaming. The section next to us, and the side opposite, sat there and did nothing. These seats behind the basket are important to the team because we are heard and seen at the free throw line.

So, I challenge all the boring, lazy people to get up and, in try to break the concentration of the visiting teams.

This goes for the entire area as well, especially the season ticket booster members who love to put the dogs down when they do something wrong.

This could be the best year for Saluki basketball. Let's help them by becoming the sixth man on the court, and cheer, and scream, and stomp, and show visiting teams that they have something to contend with besides the five men on the court.

One more thing, the band should be louder and the cheerleaders could be much more leading when they do cheer. —Stephan Trubitt,

Tired of vulture eyes on him, student requests more parking

All eyes are upon you Like vultures circling a wandering prey, they watch you. They creep towards you, hoping your destination is within their reach.

Finally, you make the move. Your hand plunges into your pocket. Your keys are withdrawn. You're at your car.

They swarm toward you like bees on honey, fighting to get that oh-so-valuable space. It's every man for himself, survival of the fittest on the SIU-C campus parking lots.

Now, this game of cat and mouse has got to stop. The parking situation on campus has become like local television stations — not many to choose from and hard to get in.

Cable television relieves us from the three-station syndrome, the one where "Heartland News" is the only source of enlightenment. However, relief from the absence of sufficient parking space is yet to be seen.

When parking availability becomes a determining factor in class attendance, there is a problem. How many times have students driven to school only to sit ten to fifteen minutes waiting for a never-to-be-found space. Then, by the time you look for parking off campus, park your car and hike to class, you are so late you might as well have stayed home, where many students end up going.

This parking problem is becoming quite a nuisance and has been overlooked for too long. One decent sized parking lot would do wonders toward handling the problem.

West of the Agriculture Building sits a vast area of unused land, a perfect location for a new parking facility. This location is near the library, numerous school buildings and is not a place where a parking lot would tarnish the beauty of our campus.

And, if financial concerns are the excuse for rejecting new parking facilities, then possibly a redirection of funds from the overfunded Recreation Center expansion is in order.

Whatever the case, we need more parking space. This is an issue that should be looked at immediately. Darin Pomatto, junior, speech communication and journalism.

Student warns of sticky elevators

A warning should be sent out to all University students: Don't take the elevators in Morris Library unless you have a couple of hours to spare!

On Dec. 9, two students and I were trapped in an elevator for close to two hours. We repeatedly sounded the emergency alarm to alert someone to help. The only reaction was for the library staff to place an out-of-order sign on the elevator and ignore the emergency alarm as if it was merely a malfunction.

I must admit that being trapped in a five-by-seven cubicle for an extended period of time is an excellent way to get to know complete strangers and catch up on reading the Daily Egyptian. However, I do have other things to do.

It is a travesty to think that a situation of this type is treated with such negligence.

In the future I hope that the elevators are equipped with padded seats and a television to make the stay more accommodating. This seems to be the only feasible solution since the inefficient bureaucratic library has failed to repair or replace the obsolete, frequently out-of-order elevators. Mike Yovanovitch, senior, management.

Sports columnist insults readers

We are extremely disgusted with your "Press Box" writer, Troy Taylor. He is an insult to writers everywhere, even kids in third grade. The following will be a series of questions which are not designed to be answered or will be answered by us. Why does Troy write his garbage only twice a week? Does it really take him that long to think of that crap?

Does anyone actually read his articles and comprehend their meaning?

Get with it D.E., Troy can easily be replaced by even a junior high school paper writer. —Jeff Blevins, senior in Radio-Television, and Eric Davidson, sophomore in business administration.

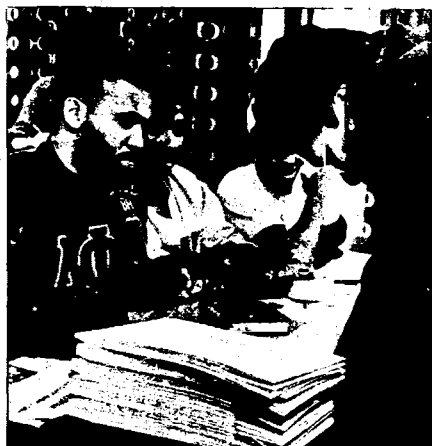

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board, whose members are the student editor-in-chief, the editorial page editor, the associate editorial page editor, a news staff member, the faculty managing editor and a School of Journalism faculty member.

Letters to the editor may be submitted by mail or directly to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 500 words. Letters of fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters submitted by mail should include the author's address and telephone number. Letters for which verification or authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Taylor refused to resign her senate position because she said the article in the constitution allowed her to average in grades from a previous school. The Judicial Board of Governance ruled Nov. 30 that the GPA only consisted of the grades received at the University.

At a special meeting Dec. 7, Taylor was allowed to remain seated when an attempt to impeach her failed to get two-thirds of the senate's support.

Taylor said she had no comment on the outcome of the senate trial on her removal.

Nancy Hunter Pei, the Judicial Board of Governance adviser, said the appeal "may linger on until next semester," because it would be difficult to obtain the required quorum to review the ruling during finals week.

At the Nov. 30 meeting of the Judicial Board of Review, board member Michael Parker said the debate over Taylor's status in the senate is "useless squabbling."

Hughes predicted the Judicial Board of Governance would rule in favor of impeaching Taylor.

The Judicial Board of Governance has the authority to impose sanctions against Taylor if it agrees in favor of Hughes' appeal, according to an article in the USG constitution.

The formal appeal to the Judicial Board of Governance also states several discrepancies in the use of parliamentary procedure as grounds for the removal of Taylor. "It's just icing on the cake," Hughes said.

and was not supposed to go to the basement.

The students then began ringing the alarm bell but received no response, Scott said.

Yosonovich said that they stopped ringing the bell because it was so loud and did not seem to be doing any good.

The students then began to scream and yell and finally they heard someone outside the elevator trying to get them out, Yosonovich said.

Kevin Presson, a student worker at the Learning Resources Center in the basement of the library was the one who freed the students.

Presson said that he and other employees in the LRC heard the alarm bells but did not pay much attention because the bells frequently sound off.

Presson said that when he heard people yelling, he realized someone was trapped in an old elevator entrance which had been covered by a piece of paneling.

Presson said he removed the paneling and pushed the door of the elevator open and freed the students at about 12:40 p.m.

"When we got them out of the elevator, they were sweating and told us they had been in there a while," Presson said.

Yosonovich said that for two weeks prior to the incident he had heard strange noises coming from the main elevators located in the undergraduate library and had decided to use the elevators nearest the circulation desk "just to be safe."

"What upset me the most was that after we were rescued," Yosonovich said, "I went upstairs and found an 'out-of-order' sign on the elevator."

Harrel Lerch, superintendent of building maintenance, said that the Physical Plant received a call at 1:15 p.m. on Friday that an elevator was not in service. A call was placed to the company that services the University elevators and a worker was sent to the library and found no one trapped in the elevator. The repairman was not told of anyone being trapped in the elevator.

Lerch said that there was a malfunction in the elevator and that it should not have gone down to the basement. This is a rare incident and the elevators would be checked further on Tuesday, he said.

dergraduates, which means less money. So while the number of students has increased, the increase in graduate students may account for part of the shortfall.

Another potential reason for part of the shortfall could be that many students are taking larger course loads to get more return for their money when tuition increases, but tuition increases only until students reach 12 hours. Meanwhile, some students may be taking fewer courses, dropping below a full-time load, to ease the burden of higher tuition.

But this is largely speculative, people working with the shortfall said.

"We don't know right now what effect the tuition increase will have," Williams said.

Shepherd said, "We can't see right now that there's any effect on enrollment from the tuition increase."

Incidents of attempted rape not linked to same suspect

By Mark Barnett
 Staff Writer

A man allegedly sexually assaulted two women in separate cases of attempted rape, police said.

In both incidents, which occurred Sunday, the suspect fled the scene when unsuspecting pedestrians appeared.

Although descriptions of the suspect were similar, Carbondale Police have not linked the crimes. "There is no official word that the incidents are connected," Neal Jacobson, public information officer for the Carbondale Police, said.

The suspect in each incident wore a long, dark overcoat, and was described by police as a black male in his early 30s. One suspect was described as 5-foot-11 weighing about 190 pounds, police said. The other description of the suspect's height was 5-foot-10 to 6-foot.

The first assault occurred at 12:53 a.m. near 905 S. Illinois Ave., police said. A 19-year-old female was walking south on South Illinois Ave., when she was grabbed from behind.

The woman was carried to a parking lot where the man attempted to take off her clothes. He then ran to the northeast when two people walked into the area, police said.

The woman kicked and scratched the suspect, police said. The suspect may have scratch marks on his face.

The woman received no medical treatment for minor injuries, police said.

The second assault occurred about 53 minutes later at 300 W. College St. A 21-year-old female was knocked to the ground by a suspect fitting the same description, police said.

The suspect began fondling the woman then fled when people were heard approaching the area, police said.

Carbondale library to spend $3,000 on new books

Carbondale Public Library is purchasing $3,000 worth of new reference books, thanks to an LSCA Title I grant awarded to the Shawnee Library System, of which the library is a member.

The grant, totaling $84,402, is intended to help supplement the reference collections of the 46 public libraries in the 16 southernmost counties of Illinois served by the Shawnee Library System. Distribution of the funds was based on the size of the population served by each library.

Project coordinator Linda Mathias said the demand for the traditionally more expensive reference books often exceeds the financial resources of libraries in rural areas.

The grant will enable these libraries to respond to local patron needs by adding materials in subject areas of particular interest to their communities.

Head librarian Ray Campbell has consulted with Mathias in determining the needs of the Carbondale Public Library. Adult and children's titles are being considered for purchase with grant funds. This additional money will allow the library to expand those subject areas most frequently requested by local patrons, thereby speeding up delivery of high-demand books and information.

The Shawnee Library System Headquarters is coordinating the joint purchasing.

Transportation for handicapped an 'adventure'

Railroad tracks sidewalks, barriers for wheelchairs

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

The city of Carbondale is 10 square miles, as cities go, a relatively small affair. The citizens of the city would not be unduly pressed upon to traverse avenues to their destinations were they without that most common of the world's transportation, the automobile.

They could walk along the sidewalks, crossing railroad tracks or the street when necessary — wading through snow and rain might constitute discomfort, but would not restrict.

Unless, that is, the citizen happened to be confined to a wheelchair. In that case, he would be at the mercy of the sidewalks upon which he rides,

People in wheelchairs are sometimes forced to use city streets because the sidewalks are in disrepair as this woman is doing on South Poplar.

the snow and rain that make his terrain hazardous, the railroad tracks in which his wheelchair can be lodged or tipped over.

FOR A person in a wheelchair, getting around Carbondale can be "an adventure" as Lee Smith, a graduate assistant in disabled student services, said.

An adventure indeed:

Exiting from a lift on a van run by handicapped services two people were dropped, one of them on two different occasions, within a two-month time span.

Brad Hagy, a Pierce Hall resident, was struck while crossing the street — in a cross walk. He suffered a fracture and his wheelchair sustained serious damage.

While crossing the railroad tracks on East Grand, a woman said her wheelchair lodged in the gaps between the tracks as a train approached. After yelling for help, an able bodied person pushed her over the tracks.

Paulette Subka, an independent living specialist at the Southern Illinois Center for Independent Living, estimates there are 125 people that use wheelchairs who live in Carbondale. More than 60 of these attend the University, according to disabled student services.

Subka said the transportation for the disabled in trained drivers and badly maintained equipment for his accident.

"Take it from someone who's been dumped twice, the University does need (new equipment)," he said.

Harry D. Wirth, director of service enterprises, said, "We have had problems with the tie downs (that hold the wheel chair in place) in the vans for years."

Susan Negrin, 22, a senior in recreation management, said she nearly tumbled from a lift on a handicapped service van when her front wheels rolled off the front of the lift because her chair was not properly secured. The driver caught her before she fell off the lift, Negrin said.

Wirth said a new training program had been instituted to remedy concerns that handicapped people have expressed to him about the service.

Mitch Smoot, student supervisor of the handicapped van service, said he now evaluates student drivers during the semester. He said students are trained for a week by watching others run the lift.

"I train them like I was trained," Smoot said. He said he began working for the van service in the fall 1987.

Both people had fallen from the lift on the same van, Smoot said. The van is a beige Dodge that Wirth said will be replaced.

Smoot said the man had fallen from the van twice not because of faulty equipment, but because he rolled onto the lift too quickly.

Spores such as these held by University physiologist James S. Ferraro will soon rocket into orbit on a NASA shuttle. By comparing mold growth patterns on earth with those in space, he hopes to learn more about biological clocks.

University researcher plans mold experiment on shuttle

By Lorie Roberson
Staff Writer

Going boldly where few molds have gone before, one University researcher will be sending his bread into space via a NASA space shuttle.

James S. Ferraro, a research physiologist, has been working since 1964 with a strain of bread mold that has been genetically altered to show more clearly the workings of its internal biological clock.

This biological clock, or circadian rhythms, is a system of regular, recurring patterns of behavior and physical functions, Ferraro said, such as the sleeping-waking cycles.

Everything from single-celled organisms to humans have these rhythms, and each is timed to its owner's individual clock, he said.

"In mammals, this clock is a set of neurons that can tell time in a 24 hour cycle," Ferraro said. "These clocks are very accurate, but sometimes it doesn't tell time in exactly 24 hours. It's like a poor watch, it either runs a little fast or a little slow."

Ferraro said most living things use light as a correctional cue to make up for the faults within their clocks, and these organisms reset their clocks daily to fit with solar time, but there is an exception.

"Humans are the only animals who respond more to social cues than light," Ferraro said. "Social cues for us can be our alarm clock waking us up or someone asking us out to lunch. We may not be hungry, but we go anyway."

Ferraro said that while most researchers agree that there are circadian rhythms, not all agree that an internal process sets them in motion. Some think that subtle elements in the environment that haven't been discovered yet may trigger these clocks.

"The nice thing about that theory is that you could never prove it wrong," Ferraro said. There could be a force we don't know about like xenon rays from Galactica that are cyclic in a close-to-24-hour time frame."

Ferraro is using bread mold in his study because it would make an ideal space subject due to its predictable circadian growth patterns.

By sending the mold into space, Ferraro hopes to expel the theory that elements in the environment affect the circadian rhythms.

Ferraro's theory is that if the mold is in space and away from any environmental elements, the circadian rhythms will revert back to their natural 24-hour time span, proving that there are internal clocks and organisms can tell time themselves.

An earlier experiment was conducted with NASA and the bread mold in 1963, Ferraro said, but the additional gravitational forces generated with the launch interfered with the test results.

Ferraro has scheduled a launch date of Nov. 13, 1989 to try his experiment again, this time altering the bread mold tubes to account for the hypergravity in launching.

Award given for paper on education

A University faculty member has received an award for her doctoral dissertation on vocational education.

Jan Schoen Henry, associate professor of office systems and specialties in the College of Technical Careers, received the Omicron Tau Theta National Research Award Dec. 4 during a convention of the American Vocational Association in St. Louis.

Henry's dissertation is entitled "Perceptions of Careers in Secretarial Office Occupations Held by Secondary School Students and Business Teachers."

Henry has been a member of the CTC faculty since 1974 and serves as one of two special needs coordinators for the college.

Genes injected in fish eggs to make growth more rapid

By Brad Bushue
Staff Writer

In Life Science II, two professors and two graduate assistants are admiring tropical fish -- and they've been doing it for three years.

One might question their fondness for the creatures, but these fish are unique.

Christopher Kohler, an assistant professor in fisheries management, said it is impossible to estimate their value because they are like no other fish alive.

Since they were fertilized eggs, the fish, now grown to adults, have had a gene from another animal with a quicker, faster growing life cycle. Kohler hopes the gene will become part of the fish's gene makeup and passed on from generation to generation.

Kohler explained that the gene from an animal that produces a rapid-growth hormone was injected into the newly fertilized fish egg before it went through the natural process of cell division.

Kohler said the process, which is referred to as gene transference, is an attempt to produce a disease-resistant, rapid-growing breed of fish with better traits for survival.

Genetics

Last in a series about genetics research on campus.

In the future, the process of placing fast-growth genes into other animals could be a key to faster, more efficient meat production.

Kohler, a molecular biologist and the principal investigator for gene transfer technology in aquaculture, works with a team of investigators that incorporates all areas of expertise.

Bill Muhlach, an assistant professor in zoology, is a developmental biologist, and Kohler is an aquaculturist in zoology. They are assisted in their studies by two graduate assistants, Peter Phillips and George Palcubis.

Kohler said the project is just now going into the stage of experimentation and repetition, waiting for one of the lab subjects to integrate the strange gene into its genetic makeup.

He said the team is waiting for the fish to grow to a size where they will be able to survive testing.

Kohler said he hopes the team will have developed a transgenic fish. A neogene is used to see whether the genetic makeup will accept the alien gene, he said.

Gene transference could have "big economic impact in the future," Kohler said, and could be used in a wide variety of ways. He said a breed of fish with a rapid growth rate can be harvested for food more efficiently.

Approval of the new fish breed for human consumption is "down the road," Kohler said in reference to the future of the project.

He said the government, which funds the project, requires the team to work under very strict guidelines, such as sterilizing each test fish in case it should be released into the natural environment. If one of the test fish were to somehow get into the environment, it would not be able to reproduce.

Parker and his team are among only a few other researchers in this area. "We're up there with other fish investigators," he said.

50 percent pay raise suggested for members of Congress, judges

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A presidential commission recommended a pay raise of more than 50 percent Tuesday for members of Congress and federal district judges, an increase of $45,500 to boost their annual salaries to $135,000.

The panel also suggested salaries of Cabinet members be raised $35,500 a year — from $99,500 to $135,000. It said the better pay is needed to attract and retain high-caliber officials for top government posts.

In addition, the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries suggested these other raises:

- President, from $200,000 a year to $350,000.
- Vice president, from $115,000 to $175,000.
- Chief justice, from $115,000 to $175,000.
- Associate justice of the Supreme Court, from $110,000 to $165,000.
- Federal appeals court judges, from $95,000 to $140,000.

The panel, created to draw some of the political heat away from federal salary questions, will submit its recommendations Wednesday to President Reagan, who can either accept or modify them when he submits his 1990 fiscal budget to Congress Jan. 9.

Most of the pay increases would automatically take effect 30 days later unless both the Senate and House vote to reject Reagan's recommendation — an act considered unlikely by many congressional observers. Congress will be out of session for at least 19 of those 30 days.

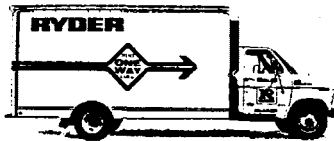

The commission has consistently backed large pay raises to make top government jobs competitive with private industry. Reagan usually has pared back the proposals before sending them to Congress.

The White House declined

By Theresa Livingston
Staff Writer

Two University students have won internships and will spend next semester working at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Florida.

David G. Steeno, a junior in advertising, and Barb Burns, a junior in radio and television, will be spokespersons for the exhibition, "The World of Motion," where they will be part of a group of college students giving presentations on behalf of the company.

The group will premiere the 190 cars, give presentations and field questions from the audience.

"We'll be working directly in the display area with the visitors of the park," Steeno said.

"It's an intense program that will give us a strong business and personal foundation," Burns said.

Visitors to the exhibit will be given the chance to bring up problems they have had with past car models.

"This gives people the opportunity to ask specific questions about various cars.

David G. Steeno

We will attend seminars and training sessions to inform us about each model," Burns said.

The 10 students in the group are chosen by recruiters who travel throughout the country during the fall semester, visiting various college campuses.

"They came (to the University) and had an interest session where we were told about (the internship).

Barb Burns

They then had their preliminary recruiting session here, interviewing several people," Steeno said.

After completing the interviews, the recruiting team returned to Florida, where each member of the team appeared in front of a board of directors and reported on their findings and made hiring recommendations.

The program has been in operation for several years, with the recruiting teams regularly returning to Carbondale.

"Several (University) students have been involved in past years. This is a big stop for them since several people have come out of this program," Burns said.

The members of the group will be paid a weekly salary and will rent accommodations on the park grounds.

"We will be guests of Walt Disney World, staying right inside the complex," Burns said.

"I've always wanted to work for Disney World and I'd like to come back to work for them after graduation," Burns said.

"It will be great experience and I really won't miss the winter season," Steeno said.

Burns said she was especially attracted by Disney World's approach toward the student workers.

"We are cast members, not employees. We have a costume, not a uniform. The motto is 'living, learning, working,' and I like that," she said.

Tabloid tycoon's papers to go on sale

LANTANA, Fla. (UPI) — Trustees for the estate of Generoso Pope Jr. have decided to sell the late tycoon's two flagship tabloids, The National Enquirer and Weekly World News, a trustee said Tuesday.

Although trustees have not set a price for the tabloids, The Wall Street Journal said one observer valued the Enquirer at about $400 million.

The Journal reported Tuesday that potential buyers include Robert Maxwell, the British printing and publishing tycoon, and Mike Rosenbloom, a Canadian investor who owns the several rival publications, including the Globe, the National Examiner and Sun.

Tony Miles, executive publisher of Globe Communications in Boca Raton, declined to comment on the report.

Pope, pioneer of the sensational, gossip style that made the Enquirer a market leader among supermarket tabloids, died Oct. 2 of a heart attack.

Jerome S. Traum, a New York attorney and one of three trustees of the estate, said the decision to sell GP Group Inc., including the two tabloids, was made within the past several days, in keeping with a suggestion in the trust.

"It was not an instruction," Traum said. "We had a lot of considerations to take into account. We reached this decision. We consider it is the right one."

Traum said the trust placed no conditions on the proposed sale.

"We are under no time pressures," he said.

SIU-C faculty to share ideas at university in Bangladesh

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

On Dec. 29 three University faculty members will begin a trip that will take them across twelve time zones.

Walter Jaehnic, director of the school of Journalism, Joe Foote, chairperson of the radio and television department, and Linz Brown, associate director of International Programs and Services are going to Dhaka University in Bangladesh as part of a inter-institutional exchange program, Jaehnic said.

The program is part of a $50,000 grant from the United States Information Agency, he said.

"What we are trying to do is build a continuing relationship between the faculty in their journalism school and ours. The aim of this is really just to give them any help with their program we can," Jaehnic said.

The University's journalism and radio and television departments are combined and the Department of Mass Communication and Journalism is the only school of its type in Bangladesh.

As the first part of this exchange program six of their faculty visited SIU, Jaehnic said. Next October another group of faculty will again visit SIU, and next year SIU faculty will again visit Bangladesh.

Foote, who has visited the University four times said, "It is gratifying to me to have people I met three years ago show up in Carbondale."

Revising their masters program, program curriculum and beginning an internship program are the three things Foote said he will continue working on. He also plans to do a feasibility study on starting a media center.

He said they will all three teach some classes in their spare time. The things that the faculty learn from them can be directly applicable to their program because they model their program after American ones, Foote said.

Brown said one of the roles he will play is to talk to people in different ministries of the government and the professional press institutions to ascertain their continuing education needs.

"Then I'll go back and work with the University to see what program can be developed," Brown said.

Jaehnic said he will be meeting with the chairman of the department to discuss long term planning, serve as an administrative consultant and also work on the internship program.

He said they already have someone interested in providing money for the program.

Text books also will be taken over for the library and for faculty t use, Jaehnic said.

Students at the University don't own their own text books instead the books are on reserve at the library, Foote said.

"At this stage I can't believe I'm really going," Jaehnic said.

The three will return at the end of January.

Three awarded $100 scholarships for engineering

Three industrial technology students were each awarded $100 scholarships by the St. Louis Chapter of the Society of Manufacturing Engineers in a classroom ceremony last week.

Mark Babler, Jeffrey Meyer and Elizabeth Schulte, all seniors in industrial technology, received the awards from Ernie Ustet, past chairman of the St. Louis SME chapter.

Scholarship recipients must have a minimum grade point average of 3.0 on a 4.0 scale. The final selections were based upon the recommendations of the University

Carbondale is geared to the students. "Students have the handicapped van service; for non-students, there (is) not a whole lot out there."

She said without a van equipped with a lift and the ability to drive it, a handicapped person usually must resort to taxi cabs. But if the wheelchair is a battery-powered, taxis generally won't transport them because of the possibility that the battery will explode.

EVEN FOR students, Smith points out, the van service does not transport on weekends or breaks. And if a person wants to be transported for something that is unrelated to school they generally are "out of luck."

Because of the lack of transportation for people in wheelchairs, Smith said, they often must take the sidewalks to reach their destination, or if the sidewalks are in disrepair — the streets.

Smith said he doesn't recommend going in the street, but because of the state of the sidewalks, sometimes there is no choice but to "ride the street."

South Washington Street probably is one of the worst sidewalks in the city, Smith said.

SMITH DESCRIBED the problem with the east sidewalk on that street: "There you are on a sidewalk that a curbcut led onto and you run into the steps" in front of Lincoln Jr. High.

Subka also laments the condition of the South Washington Street sidewalk. It is the "S" curve near Washington Square that is the most dangerous part of the walkway, she said.

"Would you rather be in the blind spot (on the street) or would you rather fall off the sidewalk," she asked rhetorically.

She said the slope of sidewalks is a general problem. It threatens to tip people in wheelchairs over if the slope is too great, and the problem is especially acute if it is raining or snowing.

RATHER THAN having breaks, Subka said, the belts in most wheelchairs are what keep the chair from rolling backwards on an incline, and if these become wet the chair can slide.

City Engineer Larry Miles said several areas on South Washington will be repaired

Thompson: Invest more in education

CHICAGO (UPI) — The only way for the United States to regain its position as a pre-eminent economic power is for Americans to "spend less money" on foreign goods and invest more in education, Gov. James R. Thompson said Tuesday.

Thompson, one of five panelists appearing on the Oprah Winfrey Show, also defended his efforts to lure foreign businesses into Illinois.

"Spend less on VCRs, foreign cars, toys and all this other business that we're ruing, and put it into American education to give our kids a chance to be competitive," Thompson said.

"Invest in our kids' education. Invest in our worker retraining."

next year, and because of renovative work at the Glove Factory, 408 S. Washington, the University is repairing the sidewalk in front of it.

Miles said because of a lack of money the sidewalk on only one side of a street can be repaired. This is the case at South Washington.

While some sidewalks may be bad, there is general agreement on the worst of the hazards for wheelchair transportation in Carbondale: "The railroad tracks are the worst thing," Hagy, a senior from Fox Lakes said.

ANNETTE HANNA, a senior in child and family, said she has been stuck between ties as a train sped toward her on the track.

"I've gotten stuck a couple of times when trains were coming. I just started yelling and someone came and helped me."

She said the tracks that cross East Grand are the worst.

Edward Reeder, director of public works, said the problem is that a compromise must be found between keeping trains from jumping the tracks as they pass through town, and letting wheelchairs pass over.

Illinois Cent-al Gulf "put the ties as close as they could to the existing rails" with out forcing the trains to derail, Reeder said.

SUBKA SAID the University' solution to crossing the railroad tracks is the newly erected overpass that extends over the tracks.

The overpass, however, can be a huge detour for people who live in the Carbondale Towers, an apartment complex that houses a large number of people confined to wheelchairs. Once a person makes it to the overpass a battery powered chair may not have enough "juice" to make it over the 1100-foot span, Subka said.

Duane Schroeder, director of the Physical Plant, said from the vantage point of his office, which overlooks the overpass, he has never seen anyone in a wheelchair cross it.

SCHROEDER AGREES that this is probably because of its length, but its length is necessary, he said, because it must be within federally mandated incline limits to allow people in wheelchairs to use it.

Despite mobility problems, Subka said the city does its best to repair curbcuts, sidewalks, and is generally in tune, along with the able-bodied population of the town, with the needs of a large disabled population.

"We work really hard with the handicapped people," Reeder said, "I think you'll find this city is very accessible." By code "we require that every new building is handicapped accessible."

SMITH ECHOES Reeder's assessment: "In the town there's an attitude toward disabled people that's a very positive attitude. This town, and University, is probably the most accessible areas in the state."

But he tempers his praise with a warning, "The town and University are doing a supurb job, but there's always room for improvements."

Larry Bird biography written with help of mother, not star

By Mike Szostak
Providence Journal

He is the son of an iron-willed mother who worked two jobs to support her family. He is the son of an alcoholic father who committed suicide. He grew up poor in a valley of poverty. He lived at his grandmother's house from the time he was eight.

He got his first basketball when he was four. He realized his first desire to succeed when he was 14.

He is 32 now and earning more money than he ever dreamed possible. Yet he remains a Ford Bronco kind of guy in a world of BMWs.

A black kid from Harlem? Chicago's South Side? L.A.'s Watts? Try again. Try Larry Bird. The hick from French Lick. The slow white guy from Indiana who can't run and can't jump but still plays basketball better than almost everyone who ever bounced a ball.

Just when we thought we knew everything about Bird—his breath-taking skills, his magnificent court sense, his work ethic, his penchant for a few beers with friends, his intense desire for privacy, his disdain for Bill Lambeer—along comes Lee Daniel Levine with an eye-opening biography, "Bird: The Making of an American Sports Legend," McGraw-Hill, $17.95.

This is no puff piece. Levine, a high-school freshman in Laorte, Ind., when he first heard of the skinny kid from French Lick, intended to write the definitive Bird book.

"I was frustrated by the lack of an up-to-date book," Levine said. "I could never quite get a grip on what makes Larry Bird different. The fact that he wasn't sure what drives him made me want to know. I wanted something as I felt I was writing for myself I fan if I were true to myself, then I would be true to the fans."

Thanks to a chance encounter with Larry's mother, Georgia, and the 16 hours of interviews that followed, the Bird book rose above ordinary. Be sure this is not an "authorized" biography. Levine, 30, a Michigan alumnus, did not talk to Bird. Larry declined Levine's one request. Bird's decision to remain mum isn't a shock. He is working on an autobiography with Bob Ryan of The Boston Globe.

The book is selling, but Levine is convinced that Bird, the Celtics and the NBA are trying to thwart his attempts to promote it. He said he could not obtain press credentials in Chicago or Detroit to appear on pre-game radio shows. Levine said Bird's agent, Bob Woolf, tried to discourage him during his research.

"There's no question you can argue that the limitation of this book is that Larry is not involved," Levine said. "I knew Larry wouldn't be involved, but he has given hundreds of hours of interviews so there wasn't much he could add."

The question now is what Bird will have to say in his own book about his life away from basketball. Next to basketball and his family, privacy is Bird's most cherished possession.

Levine interviewed dozens of Bird's acquaintances from French Lick and Indiana State. He spoke to several family members. He talked to Bird's ex-wife, Janet. He mentions Bird's daughter, Corrie, 11. He drew heavily on newspaper accounts, magazine articles and books about Bird.

Levine offers a fascinating look at Bird's childhood and adolescence. His father's alcoholism strained the family's fabric. Only his mother's determination kept the five Bird boys and their sister together.

Kentucky releases text of allegations

Scripps Howard News Service

In something of an anticlimax, the University of Kentucky responded to a court order by releasing the full text of 13 allegations made against its basketball program by the NCAA.

The text contained no surprises and little that wasn't already known.

In a related move, the university announced it has been granted an extension by the NCAA to delay its response to the 18 allegations until Jan. 30. The deadline had been Dec. 12.

The university told the NCAA it needed more time to conduct interviews that would be pertinent to the investigation.

Information that included names, places and dates was released in the text, which also included allegations that Kentucky assistant basketball coach Dwane Casey and exiled guard Eric Manuel each "provided false and misleading information" to the NCAA during its investigation.

Casey is named in nine of 14 allegations that have been released with names included. One allegation, that Casey sent $1,000 to Claud Mills, the father of recruit Chris Mills.

Reactions to Texas A&M coach's decision mixed COLLEGE STATION, Texas (UPI) — Players and students at Texas A&M expressed shock, disappointment and relief Tuesday over the resignation of athletic director and head football coach Jackie Sherrill.

Many of the students still on campus and numerous football players also lauded the selection of John David Crow as athletic director and R.C. Slocum as the new head football coach.

"It really hasn't settled in yet," quarterback Bucky Richardson said. "It's kind of a bittersweet kind of thing. We'll miss him (Sherrill) dearly. I talked to him yesterday and he told me to keep my head up. That's the kind of guy he is."

Sherrill met with about half the team Monday — the rest had already left campus for Christmas vacation — and told them he loved them and would be vindicated of all allegations into his program.

Sherrill resigned after seven seasons because of the continued allegations of NCAA rules violations.

Most of the players interviewed Tuesday said the resignation was not totally unexpected, but still was hard to accept.

"I'm hurt down inside," punter Sean Wilson said. "I liked the guy. He's helped me grow up a lot. I wish he was still here ... I came here because of him."

The NCAA in September placed A&M on two years' probation and banned the Aggies from appearing in a bowl game this year because of rules violations.

Last month, former running back George Smith alleged Sherrill paid him more than $4,000 in "hush money." Smith later recanted, but the school launched an internal investigation that is on-going.

The campus newspaper, The Battalion, called for Sherrill to resign or be fired, and for the NCAA to impose the "death penalty" if the allegations proved true.

"We didn't want Coach Sherrill to leave until the allegations were true, and that still hasn't been proven," senior Anthony Wilson, who was the opinion page editor at the student newspaper, said.

"We're not surprised that it happened, but we are surprised it happened when it did."

Wilson said he believed the decision was best for the university.

"If Coach Sherrill had stayed, we would have had that cloud hanging over," he said. "We're glad it's over and it's time to begin a new era."

Wilson said the staff has discussed its next editorial, which will be published in the first issue next semester praising President William Mobley for taking quick action, and supporting Slocum and Crow.

"I was very impressed by them," Wilson said. "I think they're very sincere about the integrity of the program."

Players gave high marks to Slocum, who has been with the Aggies 16 of the last 17 years.

"R.C. knows the system," linebacker Dana Batiste, said. "He'll do a good job. You just can't bring in another guy."

Richardson said he has not talked with Slocum.

"I don't know what he's got in mind, but I don't anticipate a drastic change," he said.

Jay Hays, A&M student body president, said it was unfortunate Sherrill had to leave.

"You can't really say whether it was an admission of guilt or a noble gesture," he said. "It could have been either one. It's too bad he had to leave under such a cloud because he's had some good years."

Sanders top player in Maxwell balloting

Heisman winner wary of dangers of fame

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Oklahoma State running back Barry Sanders, winner of the Maxwell Award as the nation's outstanding collegiate football player, remains wary of the dangers of fame.

"I think I have a long way to go in playing football," said Sanders, who added the 52nd Maxwell Award to the Heisman Trophy he received earlier this month. "Although I have been honored with awards, life doesn't stop here. You have to keep things in perspective."

"You have to keep trying to better yourself. You either get better or you get worse. You can't lose sight of your goals. I've seen a few athletes win some awards and their outlook changes. I don't want that to happen to me."

Sanders, a junior, ran for 2,553 yards and scored 39 touchdowns, both NCAA records, as Oklahoma State compiled a 9-2 mark this season and earned a berth in the Holiday Bowl, where the Cowboys will play Wyoming.

"We felt he would be a great one once he got the opportunity," Oklahoma State Coach Pat Jones said. "But we never expected him to win the Heisman Trophy or the Maxwell Award."

In balloting by members of the Maxwell Football Club of Philadelphia, sports writers and college sports officials, Sanders received 400 first-place votes and 2,392 points.

USC quarterback Rodney Peete was second with 105 first-place votes and 1,288 points and UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman third with 56 first-place votes and 868 points. Rounding out the top five were Miami quarterback Steve Walsh (36-473) and West Virginia quarterback Major Harris (32-383).

Sanders became the first running back to win the award since Nebraska's Mike Rozier in 1983. Quarterbacks had taken the previous four awards, including Don McPherson of Syracuse, who won the honor in 1987.

Sanders will have a chance to become the first player to earn two straight Maxwell Awards next season, since he said he plans to play his senior year at Oklahoma State.

"I was surprised when I heard the rumors (that I would leave school and apply for the NFL draft)," Sanders said. "I never had any interest whatsoever. It was just a rumor."

"I just turned 20 and I'm not ready to take on a full-time job yet, either mentally or physically."

UCLA's quarterback No.1 player on coast

United Press International

UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman, considered by many NFL scouts to be the most likely No. 1 selection in next year's collegiate draft, Tuesday was named United Press International's All-Coast Player of the Year.

Southern California coach Larry Smith, who directed the Trojans to their second consecutive Rose Bowl bid, was named All-Coast Coach of the Year by UPI's panel of voters.

Aikman completed 209 of 327 pass attempts for 2,599 yards, 23 touchdowns and tossed just 8 interceptions this season leading the Bruins to an 9-2 record and a Cotton Bowl berth. In his two seasons at UCLA, Aikman — a transfer from Oklahoma — climbed to the top of the school's career passing list by completing 64.5 percent of his 600 attempts.

The 6-foot-3-quarterback needed to play quarterback in the NFL.

Joining Aikman in the backfield are three durable, multi-talented backs.

San Jose State's Johnny Johnson was a double threat on the football field with his running and pass catching abilities. The 6-foot-3 junior became the first Division I player ever to rush for over 1,200 yards (1,219) and catch over 60 (61 for 668 yards) passes in a single season. He ranked second nationally to Heisman winner Barry Sanders in total yards with 2,202.

Nevada-Reno's Neve Fogar set a pair of Big Sky records this year for career rushing yards (4,484) and for being named to his fourth straight all-conference team. Hawaii's Heikoti Fakava was

Gateway, NCAA proposals discussed at IAAC meeting

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

Changes in the Gateway conference and the NCAA and their effect on SIU-C were discussed at the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee meeting Tuesday.

Maggie Mathias, director of curriculum and instruction who attended the recent Gateway meetings, said there is a movement to support some sports at the cost of others.

Mathias said a proposal has been drawn up that would allow schools to continue full scholarship support of football, basketball and two sports of the school's choice. The remainder of the conference sports would be supported at a lower level of financial aid.

"I really am opposed to that," Mathias said. "It disseminates the competitive edge the conference gives to women. They don't have the competitive arena anymore."

Associate athletics director Charlotte West reported that the Gateway had changed its format for the women's basketball tournament, and was considering changing the volleyball schedule.

The championship game of the basketball tournament will be held on a neutral court, beginning this season, West said.

A proposal to change the volleyball season schedule from single round-robin to double round-robin was discussed at the conference meeting, West said. No action was taken.

West also discussed several of the 147 amendment proposals to the NCAA constitution, which will be voted on January 8-12 in San Francisco.

The committee voted to disapprove of an amendment proposal which would allow incoming freshmen to stay on-campus prior to their first year at the school's expense.

West said the proposal stipulates that the students cannot practice with any athletic teams, and will be considered a transfer if they decide to leave.

"College sports is so much keeping up with the Joneses, that you don't have an option due to the competitive nature," West said. "If it is passed, it makes it look like you have to do it."

The committee voted in favor of a proposal setting grade point requirements at 1.6 after the athletes first year of competition, 1.8 after the second year and 2.0 after the third.

gymnastics and field hockey be cut from the athletics department for the advancement of men's and women's basketball.

Hart reported that approximately $180,000 would be saved by the athletics department if the two programs were cut.

"This is not a money now situation," Hart said in the meeting. "An alternative will push back the money now situation another year, and we will not be able to utilize that."

West told the committee the men's basketball program is financially in the bottom half of the Missouri Valley, which hampers what the program can offer.

"If this were a dire financial emergency, we would need to take drastic steps. But if you look at what is best for the sport, you need to look at a phase-out period."

—Julie Illner

If SIU-C offered the total number of scholarships allowed by the NCAA in each sport, the University would be $227,760 short, West said. By cutting field hockey and gymnastics, SIU-C would be $159,440 short, she said.

"The dollars we would save by the time we got there would correct nothing but scholarships," West said.

The athletics department also listed travel expenses to compensate for televised games, increased money for sports information and increased funds for recruiting purposes as factors behind the proposed cuts.

"Those are just samples of things we must do to give our coaches tools," West said. "Education is an endeavor but there is also a business aspect."

As part of the 1988-89 fiscal year athletics budget, men's basketball received the sole increase, going from $150,000 to $180,000.

"I said it at the time and I'll say it again, that is not enough," West said.

Marcus Mulholland, a member of the gymnastics team and president of the Student Athletics Advisory Board, and Wendy Darius, a senior on the field hockey team, were at the meeting to represent their respective sports.

Darius was accompanied by the remainder of a five-member committee, which was formed by the field hockey team last Wednesday evening during a team meeting to discuss news of the proposed cuts.

Darius presented a petition to save the two sports to the committee. The petition had approximately 2,300 signatures collected in the past four days, Darius said.

Mulholland attacked the method of selecting the two sports for the cut, citing a questionnaire examining the athletics department sent to administrators, coaches and other support staff members that he said was too objective.

Among the categories on the questionnaire were participation trends, recruiting costs, whether the sport is a revenue producer and the facilities for the sport.

Mulholland also criticized the holding of news about the proposed cuts from those teams involved and the fact that the news was leaked before finals week.

"If their (the person who leaked the information) main concern was to give us the information, it should have been done before," Mulholland said.

The gymnast then requested an anonymous apology from the committee, expressing a regret that the information was leaked before finals week.

"It has really rattled a lot of us at an unfortunate time," Mulholland said.

Darius agreed with the ill effect the news had on finals week preparation, but said a more serious concern could affect the University.

"The Title IX issue has come up, and if you drop another women's sport it will come up again," Darius told the committee.

Title IX is a law passed by the Supreme Court that forces public institutions to give women the same opportunities as men in athletics.

West agreed with Darius' concern.

"Right now the number of female athletes is low, some 31 percent," West said. "That's poor. Traditionally, our University has a low female enrollment, which compounds the problem."

"With field hockey gone, we're down to 27 percent. To me, that's a flashing red light."

"It has really rattled a lot of us at an unfortunate time."

—Marcus Mulholland

West added that some of the scholarship money saved as a result of the cuts may be used to boost participation levels in women's athletics.

Julie Illner, coach of the field hockey team, said future cuts have to be dealt with in a more professional manner.

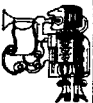

Illner attacked the fact that she and gymnastics coach Bill Meade had never seen the SPC report and that the report was compiled before Hart and athletics fund-raiser Wayne Williams were hired by the University. The report did not reflect the amount of money raised by Hart and Williams, Illner said.

"If this were a dire financial emergency, we would need to take drastic steps," Illner said. "We have financial problems, yes. But if you look at what is best for the sport, you need to look at a phase-out period. I think that might be the best way to go about this."

Weekend TV shootout promises a lot of scoring

By Keith Drum
UPI College Basketball Writer

One game that could live up to the hype comes Saturday night when Loyola-Marymount plays at Oklahoma.

The Sooners are solid favorites to win, but the game still may be one of the more heavier watched and wagered because of the high-scoring possibilities. ESPN is televising the shootout.

Can Oklahoma reach 165 points and set a NCAA record? Expect it. Oklahoma scored 152 versus Oral Roberts, which is a better team than Loyola-Marymount. The Lions won't accuse Sooners' Coach Billy Tubbs of running up the score. Rather, they will encourage it.

Can the Sooners get to 200? It would take a long shot. Make that lots of long shots. The 3-point rule gives Oklahoma a chance if the Sooners choose to pass up layups for bombs.

Is the over-under 300? At least. Let's say Oklahoma gets 170. Loyola only needs 130. The Lions already reached 164 this season, tying the NCAA record set by Nevada-Las Vegas in 1976. A total of about 320 should do it with a 178-142 final.

Is this really basketball? No, but look at it this way — it's closer than anything

Georgetown has done thus far this season.

NCAA statisticians are trying to determine if LSU freshman Chris Jackson set a record for his class with the 53 points against Florida last Saturday night.

Jackson is on target for one mark.

NFL players propose 4-year contract agreement

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Borrowing heavily from labor agreements in other sports, the NFL players union Tuesday proposed a four-year contract that would eventually allow unrestricted free agency to all players with three years of experience. The contract offer, intended to end a 15-month labor dispute that included last year's ill-fated 24-day strike, adopts a free agency system patterned after the system started in the NBA this year and includes the salary arbitration system used in major league baseball. The offer also calls for improved pension and severance benefits for players and includes a drug testing policy virtually identical to the one used in the NBA.

The proposal comes four weeks after the NFL Management Council, the league's labor bargaining body, proposed two different free agency systems and said it would unilaterally impose one on the players before Feb. 1.

Officials of the NFL Players Association, the union that represents some 1,600 NFL players, hope their new offer is attractive to management by virtue of its similarity to agreements in other professional sports. "There's hardly a thing in this proposal that is not already agreed to in some other professional sport," said Dick Berthelsen, the union's general counsel. "(Other sports) certainly not only survived, but flourished with them and we don't see why the NFL wouldn't as well."

NFLPA Executive Director Gene Upshaw said the proposal also seeks to clear up the inequities between the professional sports.

had defined the University's position on basketball earlier, when the fiscal year 1989 budget gave the men's team a $30,000 increase despite forcing other sports to cut back.

As the most visible sport at SIU-C, men's basketball has the best opportunity to produce revenue for the athletics department, West contends. But to be in a position to draw funds, basketball has to be competitive with the upper-level Division I schools. Basketball's current level of funding is inadequate for that purpose.

So West, in her role as then-interim AD, commissioned the 10-member Strategic Planning Committee to find a way to fulfill that purpose. That committee's report went to President John C. Guyon's desk last spring. The recommendation, on page 7 of the still unseen report, said that to give basketball a chance, the elimination of field hockey and gymnastics was the first alternative.

Hart followed through, motioning the IAAC to accept the report's proposal.

The athletics department took a stand, a position that will affect the department for some time to come. If there's a positive light in untangling this mess, that was it.

But the dark side will haunt the department for some time. By keeping the report under wraps, it bred rumor, forced leaks and left the coaches and athletes out in the cold.

Feelings of loyalty and dedication for the University will never be quite the same. The losses in that respect won't be regained — no matter how many basketball games are won.

"We will try to find some time to do some fun things," Scott said. "It's an educational experience to see things unique to that area."

Senior guard Deanna Sanders said the games are used to prepare for the remainder of the season.

"Everybody would like time at home, but there are benefits," Sanders said. "We use those days to get tuned up." A game on Christmas would be out of the question unless it would be too good to pass up, Herrin said.

"Only if it was the right opponent, someone that would give us recognition," Herrin said.

Gymnastics, field hockey cut

10-5 vote eliminates two programs

By David Gallanetti
Staff Writer

Field hockey and men's gymnastics will be eliminated from SIU-C's athletics program as a result of a 10-5 vote by the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee Tuesday.

The decision came after a 55 minute executive session, which was preceded by pleas from representatives of both sports to retain the programs.

"This is not a very happy time," Athletics Director Jim Hart said following the meeting. "It was a very difficult decision, but something that had to be done. It's not something you say congratulations over in winning the debate. It is a no win situation."

However, student-athletes involved will continue to receive the same scholarship aid presently being awarded as long as they remain at SIU-C and maintain satisfactory progress toward a degree.

Hart said he thought the decision was made with enough time for everyone involved to consider the consequences, but criticized the manner in which the general public was notified of the cuts.

"A lot of hard work went into the decision by the committee, myself, Dr. (Charlotte) West and all those involved," Hart said. "It was not hasty by any means. One of the first things you learn in the locker room is what we say here and see here does not leave here. Obviously not all expense to that."

Although Hart said the cuts will damage the athletics department's reputation, it is not necessarily something that will last.

"It is certainly a bruise, but whether it is as visible as a black eye, I don't know if that is accurate," Hart said. "Someone once said time heals all wounds."

The cuts stemmed from a report by a 10-member Strategic Planning Committee, which filed a report in April 1988 recommending, among other things, men's

Move creates no surprise for hockey coach, players

The announcement to cut gymnastics and field hockey did not surprise players and coaches, but they were still disappointed by the decision.

"I thought they would consider a phase-out," said field hockey coach Julee Ilner, who proposed to the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee that the sport be eliminated over a period of two to three years.

"(The phase-out) is the right thing to do for the kids," added Ilner, who attended the meeting with five field hockey players.

"We had considered a phase-out," Associate Athletics Director Charlotte West said. "We tried to go with what was less hurtful in the long run."

Gymnast Marcus Mulholland, president of the Student Athletics Advisory Board, made a 10-minute plea to maintain the two sports.

"We walked in with a long shot," Mulholland said. "We didn't have chance."

Committee's decision has long term effects

The votes were counted with a dramatic flare: slowly enough to keep a close count, but too fast to halt the inevitable.

After nearly two hours spent in discussion — about 50 minutes of which were in executive session — the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee came to a decision on the fate of the gymnastics and field hockey programs.

Athletics Director Jim Hart sat stone-faced as the secret ballot was announced.

When the number was 8-to-3 to cut the sports, gymnast Marcus Mulholland gave a look of resignation.

Once all 15 slips of paper had been recorded, one field hockey player began to cry.

IAAC president George Black dutifully recorded the 10-5 vote, which cut the men's gymnastics and field hockey programs from the roster of 20 sports and then ended the meeting.

The vote also ended the debate. The athletics department left no doubt that its stand on budget priorities remains a tightrope. It will try to continue to offer as many sports as possible, but it will not sacrifice men's and women's basketball for the sake of having a broad base of programs.

Assistant baseball coach resigns for White Sox job

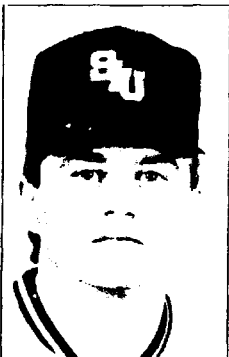

By Megan Hauck
Staff Writer

Kirk Champion, assistant baseball coach for the Sakukis, has accepted a minor league coaching position with the Chicago White Sox. His appointment will begin Jan. 1.

Champion was head baseball coach at Rend Lake Community College four years prior to coming to SIU-C in 1985 as pitching coach and recruiting coordinator. He will join the White Sox as a pitching coach in the farm team of the Class A Midwest League in South Bend, Ind.

"It's one of the few options I would have looked at to leave SIU," Champion said. "I'm excited about it."

Champion, a graduate of Southwest Missouri State University where he spent three years as pitching coach, will continue a family tradition in baseball. His father, Babe Champion, is a professional baseball scout with the Kansas City Royals. A brother, Keith, is manager of the St. Louis Cardinals' Class A affiliate in Savannah.

"It's a good opportunity for me and my career right now. I've thought about it a lot, and I've got a good idea what I'm getting involved in. It wasn't a difficult decision. I had made up my mind that this was the time to do it if I got this opportunity."

Break schedule will keep teams busy over holidays

By Troy Taylor
and David Gallanetti
Staff Writers

Oh there's no place like the road for the holidays. So goes the tune many SIU-C athletes will be singing this Christmas season.

Members of the men's and women's basketball teams, the swimming and diving teams and men's indoor track team will see plenty of action over the holiday break. It won't all include unwrapping gifts.

Rich Herrin's men's basketball team will tipoff seven times over break, while Cindy Scott's squad will take to the court eight times. Swimming and diving will be involved with four meets over break while track will have one.

The closest any of the teams has to play to Christmas or New Year's Day is men's basketball, which will participate in the Wyoming Cowboy Shootout Dec. 29-30.

"It's kind of a bad deal," Herrin said. "A tournament close to New Year's is just one of those things."

The men's team will take time off Dec. 22 after returning from Southwest Missouri and return to SIU-C on Dec. 27 to prepare for the tournament.

"Basketball has got to be very special to them, and they have to give some things up," Herrin said. "They are on a full scholarship, and it should be worth the effort. You have to give and take."

Senior forward Randy House reflected his coach's comments.

"I'm sure for some who live further away (from SIU-C) it becomes an inconvenience," House said. "It is a give and take situation. They pay your education and we put four years of our life in. We have to put some things on hold."

Scott said playing over break is nearly a must to stay in condition.

"It's important to give them as many days as possible at home, but still not hurt what they've worked on for three months," Scott said.

The women will have five
