Union set to boycott Goody's

By Mikael Pyrtel
Business Writer

Goody's Family Inc., one of the fastest-growing and most aggressive stocks on the market today, may meet with union resistance when it opens its retail outlet in Carbondale.

Officials of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union are accusing the Knoxville, Tenn., based company, which will venture into Illinois this spring, of giving its employees the short end of the stick.

In November 1992, the ACTWU announced a nationwide boycott of Goody's stores to combat what the union called delay tactics to avoid coming to a fair settlement for the workers at the Knoxville distribution center.

The union will boycott Goody's wherever it opens a store, said John Davis, assistant field director with the ACTWU Washington office.

Clinton focuses on failing economy

Newsday

Deficit targets, spending cuts on top agenda

Bill Clinton's bold ideas for getting the economy back on track ran into the reality of Washington politics Thursday. His first economic decision as president had little to do with big-picture stuff like creating jobs or reforming health care.

Rather, Clinton was expected to increase the maximum allowable deficit targets that would have triggered automatic spending cuts, a widely expected and somewhat esoteric decision, for which he was immediately criticized by Republican lawmakers.

"What we are seeing here is a move toward a floating deficit target, a rubber ruler that will in essence allow almost a quarter of a trillion dollars in additional deficits" above the level Clinton had set out in the presidential campaign, said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, a co-author of the 1985 legislation that created the deficit targets.

"I think, quite frankly, that our new president has simply made a mistake by giving away one of the few tools he had to put the pressure on Congress" to reduce the budget deficit, Gramm said.

But White House spokesman George Stephanopoulos said that if Clinton did not decide to adjust the target, he would be faced with making deep spending cuts—some experts estimate they would top $65 billion over two years—half of which would come from defense.

"It doesn't seem particularly wise to have those kinds of fixed, arbitrary and deep cuts in defense at a time when we have servicemen serving both in Somalia and Iraq," Stephanopoulos said.

Making a decision to allow the deficit to rise higher before drastic measures are taken was an unfortunate symbolic first step for Clinton, although the 1990 budget law mandated that it had to be made before midnight EST Thursday.

Under the 1990 deficit-reduction act, Clinton had to decide whether to impose or relax deficit ceilings that apply to fiscal 1994, which begins Oct. 1, and fiscal 1995, which begins a year later.

The administration's Office of Management and Budget said that allowing the ceilings to take effect would force at least $24 billion in spending cuts in fiscal 1994 and $45 billion in fiscal 1995.

New early retirement plan offers better benefits for policy holders

By Jeremy Finley
Politics Writer

The early retirement plan passed by the Illinois General Assembly last week is designed to give downstate teachers, state police officers and university employees the chance to enjoy retirement benefits earlier on in life, an education official said.

Jim Clark, Illinois Education Association uniserve director, said the plan allows teachers who reach the usual retirement age of 60 to receive the same benefits five years earlier if they partake with the plan.

The retirement plan benefits both teachers reaching retirement and those hoping for teaching positions, he said.

"Teaching is increasingly becoming a profession with high stress," Clark said. "Teachers are paid by experience and years of age, so the more experienced and older teachers are paid a higher salary. (The plan) allows the higher paid to retire happily and be replaced with some younger teachers for a lower cost."

Teachers must teach for 38 years to reach maximum retirement and have to be 60 years old to get a non-discount benefit, but now they can receive these benefits at 55 years old, he said.

Clark said the plan has been a major legislation for the IEA.

"It's been hotly discussed in the past year, and we've worked to see how many employees would be affected by this. It boils down to that everyone benefits," he said. "It helps stretch the dollar in the school districts."

But Capt. William J. Powers, district No. 13 commander, said the plan will both benefit and hurt those involved.

Alumni rally for new college; SIUC official not convinced

By Tracy Moss
Administration Writer

The SIUC administration said it still is not convinced of the need for a new communications college, but alumni are raising their voices to try to do the convincing.

Gerald Stone, dean of CCFA, has received more than 75 letters from CCFA alumni. In the letters, the alumni condemn the dismantling of the college and support the formation of a new College of Communication.

Stone said the letters express how the cross-fertilization and association among the units of CCFA have helped the careers of the alumni.

"Without the support of the alumni, there would be no chance whatsoever that a new college would be possible," Stone said.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, said he is unconvinced that he can support the new College of Commu-

Lusk scores 12 points in emotional effort for friend

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

It was a game of emotion that brought the Salukis a 92-74 victory over the Drake Bulldogs Thursday night at the SIU Arena.

From the opening moment of silence in mourning for Iowa basketball star Chris Street, to a powerful slam by senior forward Ashraf Amaya that brought the crowd to a three-minute standing ovation, it was felt that this game would be special.

Sophomore guard Paul Lusk, who roomed and played with Street when he was at Iowa, said this game was for Street.

"I am just glad that I played well for him," he said. "It was about the only time I could really concentrate on everything that was at hand the past few days."

Street died in a car crash Tuesday night when his car collided with a snowplow.

Lusk finished the game with 12 points, including five consecutive points in the second half that put the Salukis ahead 60-48 with 10:02 left to play.

Lusk will be a pallbearer tonight in Street's funeral, where it will be his last moment with Street and his former teammates.

Joining Lusk in emotional play was Amaya, whose 26 points and 17 rebounds could be summed up in a one-handed jam that brought the house down with 3:52 left to play in the game.

Bulldog head coach Rudy Washington said he enjoys watching Amaya play other teams, but not his.

"Amaya is just a talent and is hard to match up against," he said. "We will run it against Southern and that's where I think he performs the best."

Amaya's jam brought the Salukis to 75-63 and set up an 11-2 run for SIUC that put the Bulldogs away.

"I am just glad that I played well for him. It was about the only time I could concentrate on everything that was at hand the past few days"

—Paul Lusk

Saluki head coach Rich Herrin said he was impressed with Drake's early play.

"They played hard both ends of the floor and outrebounced us in the first half," he said. "You have got to give them a lot of credit, because they played with a lot of heart."

Herrin said he knew Drake was going to be tough on defense.

"I heard that they (Drake) were averaging about 20 turnovers a game and they only forced us to turn it over 12 times," he said. "They got a couple of buckets on steals from us, but that is to be expected and I think we did a good job handling their press."

The Salukis will face 4-3 MVC foe Wichita State Saturday.

Salukis to face Indiana State

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Editor

After taking it on the chin Tuesday night at No. 1 Vanderbilt, the SIUC women's basketball team returns to Missouri Valley Conference action Saturday with a game at Indiana State.

Saturday's 6 p.m. contest features two teams riding hot streaks. The Salukis (7-6, 3-1) have won three of their last four games, all league contests, while the Sycamores (6-7, 2-2) have won five of their last seven contests, including a 59-56 non-conference win over UW-Milwaukee Thursday night.

The Sycamores are led by point guard Hazel Olden. The 5-foot-8 Olden leads the Sycamores in scoring with 13.5 points a game. Olden leads the MVC in assists per game (5.1) and ranks No. 2 in steals (3.4).

The Salukis counter with Anita Scott. Scott is averaging 9.6 points a game for the Salukis while dishing out 4.5 assists per game, good for third in the league.

Scott's backcourt mate, senior Angie Rougeau is one of three Salukis scoring in double digits: at 10.3 points per game. SIUC's other double-digit scorers are the frontline tandem of Tiffany Bolden ISU coach Kay Riek is concerned about SIUC's ability to score from both the paint and the perimeter.

"Southern Illinois has a very good inside-outside game. We will have to have an effective defensive effort to slow them down," Riek said.

Riek is looking forward to an assessment of where her team is at Saturday.

"SIUC is one of the top teams in the conference and playing them now will give us a good look at where we stand in the conference."

The SIUC women's indoor track and field team travels to West Lafayette, Ind., today to compete in the Purdue Invitational track meet.

Scores will not be kept at the meet, which will feature teams from Purdue, Illinois, Tennessee, Michigan State and Eastern Michigan.

Other teams competing in the 20-team field will be Cincinnati, Louisville, Ball State, Bowling Green and Missouri Valley Conference rival Southwest Missouri State. "Tennessee and Illinois should make it a very competitive meet," SIUC coach

Saluki men's track team set for meet with Eastern, U of I

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

The SIUC men's track and field team will travel to Champaign Saturday to compete in a double-dual track meet.

Double-dual meets are events in which three teams participate and each team is scored separately against each of the others.

SIUC will be scored against Eastern Illinois and the University of Illinois.

SIUC coach Bill Cornell said the meet is, "always a hotly contested meet, and has always been a big rivalry between us and Illinois."

Johathan Hirsch (35-pound weight throw), Brian Miller (shot put) and Cameron Wright (high jump) finished first in their respective events at the Southern Classic last Saturday, and are expected to turn in similar strong performances

NUMBER OF AIDS CASES UNDERESTIMATED — A total number of 611,589 cases of the killer AIDS virus were notified worldwide as of Dec. 31, 1992, but the true number likely is to be much higher, the World Health Organization announced Thursday. The notified number of cases of people infected with the HIV virus, which can lead to full-blown AIDS, and AIDS cases was a relatively crude indicator of worldwide trends, said WHO in a statement.

U. N. WEAPON EXPERTS ARRIVE IN BAGHDAD — A team of 51 United Nations chemical weapons experts arrived in Baghdad Thursday afternoon to pursue their mission of scrapping Iraq's arms of mass destruction in line with U.N. Security Council resolutions on the Gulf war. They arrived after receiving assurances from the Iraqis that their safety would be guaranteed, U.N. officials said, the team will be joined by another group of 19 U.N. arms inspectors.

JAPAN LEADER PLANS TO VISIT WASHINGTON — Japan's Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa may visit Washington in March or early May to hold his first talks with President Bill Clinton, Chief Cabinet Secretary Yohei Kono said Thursday. Japan wants to arrange a meeting as early as possible though Clinton has told reporters he would tackle domestic issues first for "around three months" as promised in his election campaign.

INDONESIA THREATENED BY OIL SLICK — North of the Indonesian island of Sumatra, a burning oil slick is threatening the coastlines of Malaysia, Indonesia and possibly even Burma. The oil spilled from the stricken Danish supertanker Maersk Navigator at the mouth of the Straits of Malacca. The supertanker collided Thursday with the Japanese tanker Sanka Honour, 50 nautical miles off the Indonesian port of Banda Achen.

Those nifty little clip-on devices that signal you when somebody's calling and show you a digital readout of the caller's number are making their way into lockers across the nation. Traditionally, the signal has been a loud beep that annoys everyone within earshot. Today most beepers also have a "vibrate" mode so that only the beeper knows when there's a call.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENT OPENS FIRE IN CLASS — A high school student was killed and another was injured Thursday when a third student opened fire on a class in a Los Angeles high school. Lt. Bob Ruchhoff of the Los Angeles Police Department's Hollywood division said "There's some indication that it might have been accidental. But until we've completed our investigations it will be hard to tell." There was speculation that a gun school police recovered after the shooting may have been in the backpack of a 16-year-old student.

RABBI IN CUSTODY FOR MONEY LAUNDERING — Rabbi Abraham Low, a respected, charismatic, ultra-Orthodox rabbi, is in custody on federal charges of setting up a money-laundering scheme involving Hasidic diamond dealers as bagmen and a "holy network" of bank accounts in the names of religious charities. The 42-year-old rabbi's arrest and the attendant publicity have saddened and embarrassed Los Angeles' Jewish community.

KING TELLS JURY HE TRIED TO COOPERATE — Rodney King told federal grand jurors last summer that he tried to comply with the orders of the officers accused of beating him, it was reported Thursday. A transcript of his testimony, portions of which were reprinted Thursday in the Los Angeles Times, also indicates that the jury never asked King whether the beating he received in 1991 was racially motivated — an accusation he previously made against the officers.

Mysterious accident seriously injures man

By Michael T. Kuciak
Administration Writer

When Archie Walbright climbed up on a 2-foot by 12-foot scaffoldboard while on a job inside the Boiler House on campus, he did not expect for the board to break out from under him and drop him 30 feet to the concrete floor.

Walbright, 47, went up to the top of the boiler by himself, while the other men climbed inside the boiler to get some welding done, said Dave Lange, of H and H Mechanical and Electrical Contractors, Inc., the company Walbright works for.

No one saw when Walbright fell from the scaffoldboard, hit the curved crown of the boiler, slid off and dropped to the floor. The men inside heard him fall, Lange said, and hollered "Man down!"

"It was actually a good thing that he hit that crown," Lange said. "If he had fallen straight down to the floor he would probably be a dead man today."

Harrel Lerch, building and maintenance superintendent, said Walbright was rushed to the Carbondale Hospital and transferred to Paducah.

Lange said Walbright was taken all the way to Vanderbilt Medical Center in Nashville, Tenn., because of the extent of his injuries.

"He is due to have surgery on his back on Friday," Lange said. "The doctors don't know if they will be able to save his feet and ankles, though."

Walbright, laying in his hospital bed, said he was wrapped up with bandages and trying to make do.

"I'm pretty bummed up," he said. "We're trying to make the best of a bad situation."

Workman's compensation, a fund employers pay into the state, should cover all of Walbright's medical bills, Lange said.

"I have been in the construction for 20 years, and I have never seen a scaffoldboard break like that," Lange said. "This accident is very unusual."

Tanning salons to post warning signs for clients

By Jonathan Senft
Health Writer

As students flock to the tanning salons before spring break, state officials want to make sure tanning customers know what to expect.

Starting March 1, tanning facilities are required by state law to have an operating permit, which forces facilities to send extensive information on the dangers of indoor tanning to their customers.

Spring break is approaching and according to Puretan Tanning Salon owner Carl Levering this is the time of year business usually picks up.

This season though, customers may find new information that helps them make up their mind whether or not to tan.

The Illinois Department of Health has passed state legislation for the required permit. The legislation requires, among other things, signs informing customers of the dangers of skin cancer in each tanning room.

The sign is, in addition to similar information, already on manufactured tanning equipment.

State health director John R. Lumpkin said "Tanning booths expose users to the same type of ultraviolet radiation as natural sunlight and should not be considered risk free."

Besides requiring permits and warning signs, the state indoor tanning regulations mandate:

- patrons wear protective eyewear
- customers be limited to one tanning session every 24 hours,
- patrons list medications that may cause a photosensitive reaction and
- trained operators must be in the facility at all times.

The permit initially will cost the tanning salons $250. A $150 renewal fee is due each year after.

Karen Green, spokesperson from the Illinois Department of Public Health, said the fees will go toward regulation of the legislation and to the state health department.

Levering said the legislation is good but it seemed like officials are trying to scare customers away.

"The beds already have the warnings posted on them anyway. This seems ridiculous considering the new sign the state wants must be the size of four sheets of paper."

WHEN PEOPLE LOOK at our nation's schools, they can see a lot of things that need to be changed.

Schools across the land are in need of new books, new teaching tools, new teachers and in some cases new buildings to help educate the children of this nation.

But Christopher Smith has a different idea for Murphysboro High School: He wants the school to get a new mascot. The name and logo Red Devils is a religious symbol, he says, and that is a violation of the laws of separation of church and state.

In a letter to the school board, Smith called for a change of mascot because a devil is a religious symbol of evil.

BUT IS THE RED DEVIL a religious symbol? The Murphysboro mascot came from a comic book. There is no picture of the devil in the Bible, so it is not valid to say the Murphysboro athlete looks like an evil entity.

Certainly Smith's point can be taken as valid if people think of a devil as "the chief evil spirit...foe of God... tempter of man...(or) any of such subordinate beings who reside in hell," the first definition listed in Webster's New World Dictionary. Even the second definition of devil, "a very wicked person," helps make his point.

BY THAT WAY OF THINKING, any Murphysboro athlete is an evil person or entity, and if people believe those definitions are the only ones, they might be inclined to agree the high school should change its mascot.

But seven definitions exist for the noun "devil," and the last five — which are equally common uses — are fitting descriptions of an school's athletic team.

Several of the definitions describe the Red Devils' boys basketball team, which has jumped out to an 8-5 start this season.

The third definition, "a person who is mischievous, energetic, reckless..."; the fifth definition, "anything difficult...to control"; and the seventh definition, "any of various machines for tearing things...to bits"; certainly fit a winning team.

EVERY TEAM WANTS to be known as an energetic machine that tears its opponents to bits and that cannot be controlled by its foes.

Not every Murphysboro team, though, is having a winning season. The fifth definition of devil, "an unlucky, unhappy person," is a good description of a Murphysboro girl basketball player this season. Those Red Devils have started the season 3-11.

But one definition stands out as a description of not only a Murphysboro athlete but also a student devoted to his or her school: In the 17th century, a devil also was defined as an apprentice.

Although this definition is no longer in use, it is a picture of what a student in a strong education system should be like.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE NEED an education system that acts more as an apprenticeship. Teachers need to be examples that students can mold themselves to be like. Students need to be eager, willing to make it their jobs to learn. And parents need to send their children to school with the directive that it is their job to pick up every morsel of knowledge they can.

The Red Devil is an appropriate mascot for young people because its more sensible meanings depict students dedicated to learning and full of school spirit.

Letters to the Editor

Letter writers should try to respect beliefs of others on SIUC campus

As we begin a new year, I wish to ask those who write letters to the DE to please show a little more respect for those who differ from you.

The level of venom and intolerance in letters published this fall has been simply appalling.

If you have strong religious beliefs, please remember that whatever your sect, the majority of the rest of humanity believes differently from you with as much conviction.

If you lack belief in God and put your trust in humankind, please remember that humans collectively have a rather poor track record, and there are good reasons why most people seek comfort in the spiritual.

If you are heterosexual and offended by gays, please remember they no more choose who they would be drawn to than you did, and most have had sexual experiences our mothers wouldn't have approved, whatever our orientation.

If you are conservative, please consider that rampant greed paralleled by increasing poverty and homelessness over the past dozen years do not make a good case for your philosophy.

If you are liberal, please consider that the widespread commercialization of sex and violence in our "anything goes" society have had a poisonous effect upon all of us.

Most of us have worthwhile values, although they may differ, and all of us have faults.

We can benefit by talking to one another, but only if your discourse is tempered by civility.

Can we agree to try? — John H. Caster, assistant professor, School of Medicine

Cost-effective program should not get trimmed

The civil engineering technology program is being cut.

This program has had a stable enrollment of about 40 students for the past 10 years with minimal university promotion.

In a "rumor-control" session with Department Chairman Dr. Gary Butson last semester, we were informed that the College of Engineering is moving towards a stronger emphasis on "loss leader" research programs in order to attract more students.

Our lack of research is one of the primary reasons our program was cut.

But CET is not an expensive major. With only three full-time instructors, we are very cost effective.

We require little in the way of state-funded laboratory space, equipment or supplies. In fact much of our modern surveying equipment is donated by a private sector impressed with our performance and potential.

(Civil engineering technology) is not an expensive major.... We require little in the way of state-funded laboratory space, equipment or supplies.

our graduates received jobs before they received their printed diplomas), being cut in order to expand research-heavy programs at a loss?

In all of Dr. Guyon's 21st century report with its flowery goals of "cultural awareness" and "Broad liberal arts foundations" there is not a single mention of "employability," something for which a large percentage of us to go to college.

I don't think there are many students studying engineering for cultural awareness or personal satisfaction. We're here to get an education and a diploma that will get us entry into careers with potential.

Why does SIUC seem to have its priorities backwards in cutting a unique, valuable program that will prepare students for an increasingly technical future? — Brian Boyer, senior, civil engineering technology

Activists at arms

Colorado anti-gay law subject of national debate

By Chris Davies
Special Assignment Writer

While human rights activists have called upon Illinois to enlist in a war against Colorado's anti-gay law, other Illinoisans are trying to outlaw homosexuality.

Last November, Colorado voters enacted a measure to the state constitution known as Amendment 2, which prohibits state and local governments from passing laws protecting homosexuals from discrimination.

The law has been enjoined while its constitutionality is being challenged in court.

Jay A. Miller, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Illinois, was asked by a national ACLU branch in California to support the boycott and said Illinois should boycott such a discriminatory amendment.

"I oppose the amendment, and I am very much in favor of gay rights and equal rights for everyone, for that matter," he said.

Miller said he is confident Illinois will join the entire ACLU organization if it chooses to boycott Colorado.

"In February we will hold an executive committee meeting to vote on the boycott," he said. "I feel confident we will support the efforts of the other ACLU branches and the gay rights activists."

The ACLU in Colorado recently was awarded an injunction against the amendment until its constitutionality can be judged in district court.

Judge Jeffery Bayless issued an injunction against the amendment, stating that the clause prohibiting homosexuals from claiming discrimination contradicts the Fourteenth Amendment.

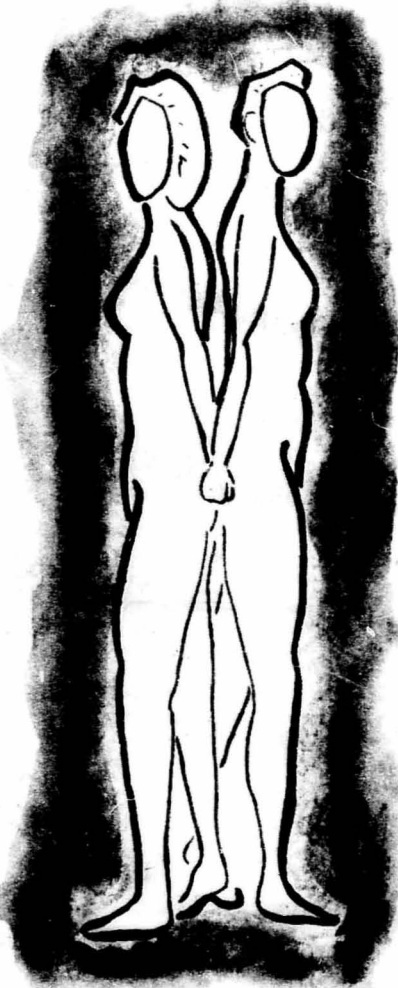

Nancy Solomon, Colorado's ACLU public relations director, said the state has filed a stay claim in the wake of the injunction that would allow the amendment to be enforced while its constitutionality is being decided.

"We will fight this amendment as long as it takes and do what ever it takes to defeat it," she said. "There are some mean-spirited people out there but I believe the constitution will prevail in the end."

Miller said the enactment of Colorado's Amendment 2 has raised fears among gay communities and human rights activists in every state, but it should not directly affect Illinois rights protection.

"It would be more difficult to pass such an amendment here in Illinois because of the way the legal system here operates," he said. "Such an amendment would require a 'yes' vote of at least 60 percent in the state legislature."

Despite the difficulty in passing a similar amendment in Illinois, organizations across the state presently are rallying to create anti-gay referendums.

Wayne Lela, an anti-gay rights organizer from Downers Grove, said he has been in touch with Illinois groups and individuals who are optimistic about passing an amendment identical to Colorado's.

"I believe Illinois should legalize homosexual activity," he said. "It should be punishable by law to have homosexual sex."

Lela said an anti-gay referendum has a strong chance of becoming a law in Illinois.

"More and more people are getting tired of homosexual activity, and many believe it is immoral," he said. "It is an immoral act and if the state would make it illegal it would drive homosexuals underground."

Lela said he always has been against homosexual activity and Colorado's amendment has encouraged him to organize against it.

"The wording in Colorado's anti-gay law is exactly what I feel will help us get an anti-gay law on the books here," he said.

Lela said morality is his foremost concern.

"We are all born with immoral thoughts, but I don't act on mine, and neither should they," he said. "If homosexuality was legalized the number of AIDS cases would decrease."

Solomon said the Colorado amendment was an experiment initiated by a right-wing fundamentalists organization in California, known as Pre-Millinium, to test the possibility of passing anti-gay laws across the nation.

"Pre-Millinium advised the Colorado for Family Values organization on how to word the amendment and supported them in doing so," she said. "Because the amendment passed, other states are presently being targeted by Pre-Millinium for legislation of this kind."

Pre-Millinium has targeted 35 other states in which it will try to introduce anti-gay legislation. Among these are California, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Oregon, Iowa and Missouri.

Will Perkins, chairman of the Colorado for Family Values organization, denied that his organization was motivated by or affiliated with any other organization.

"We started this amendment as a result of homosexuals trying to gain minority status," he said. "We do not believe that anyone's sexual orientation entitles them to any special privileges."

Perkins said he has been contacted by organizations from many states since the amendment was passed and he has offered assistance to all of them.

"We will act as a resource for any organization that would like to enact similar amendments in their states," he said. "By November of 1994 there will be many other states with laws such as (Amendment 2)."

Perkins emphasized his actions are not hate-motivated.

"I feel that homosexuals should not have any special protection or minority status—they are protected under the First Amendment and that is enough," he said. "The federal constitution has no sexual-oriented amendment and Colorado shouldn't either, and we will not allow homosexuals any special rights."

Activists feel Amendment 2 has paved the way for other anti-gay legislation, and 1994 will bring an unprecedented amount of anti-gay referendums.

Scot Nakagawa, director of Fight the Right National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, said many states are now preparing to put anti-gay referendums on the ballots for 1994.

"At this point Oregon is preparing to get 32 different anti-gay initiatives on the ballot in '94," he said. "Many other states are planning the same thing."

Oregon has already initiated anti-gay ballot measures organized by the Oregon Citizen's Alliance this year but they were rejected by voters because of harsh language against homosexuals. The rejected measure 9 described homosexuality as being abnormal and perverse.

Nakagawa believes Oregon will use wording modeled after Colorado's law to get anti-gay measures passed in 1994.

"Amendment 2 states that homosexuals should not have minority status and quota preferences which many people agree with," he said. "But the last statement says gays should not be able to make claims of discrimination."

"People do not realize the gravity of the last statement," Nakagawa said. "Taking away any human beings protection against discrimination is unconstitutional."

AMENDMENT 2

Neither the State of Colorado, through any of its branches or departments, nor any of its agencies, political subdivisions, municipalities, or school districts, shall enact, adopt or enforce any statute, regulation, ordinance or policy whereby homosexual, lesbian or bisexual orientation, conduct, practice or relationships shall constitute or otherwise be the basis of or entitle any person or class of persons to have any claim, any minority status, quota preferences, protected status or claim of discrimination. This Section of the Constitution shall be in all respects self-executing.

SIUC organization urges campus to participate in Colorado boycott

Chris Davies
Special Assignment Writer

SIUC's Gays, Lesbians Bisexuals and Friends has called upon the University to join forces against Colorado's Amendment 2.

Terry Fisher, staff member of the GLBF Pride Line, sent letters to all SIUC registered student organizations on campus asking them to boycott Colorado. Fisher will meet with President John C. Guyon next week to ask his help in initiating the boycott.

Fisher said GLBF already is boycotting the amendment, and he hopes SIUC will participate.

"Colorado has prohibited homosexuals from having their civil rights protected," he said. "The amendment is discriminatory and we need to take action against it."

Fisher said SIUC's policies protect against sexually-oriented discrimination and he believes groups should remember this before supporting Colorado.

"Several SIUC organizations have planned trips to conferences and conventions held in Colorado," he said. "Those groups should cancel."

SIUC's Graduate and Professional Student Council presently is considering canceling a scheduled trip to the graduate student annual conference in Boulder, Colo., on April 1.

GPSC Vice-President Bill Hall said the GLBF boycott should be respected.

"GLBF has been a positive organization on this campus for some time now, and we should respect their request for a boycott," he said.

Hall said GPSC will decide whether to vote on cancelling the trip at its Jan. 27 meeting.

"I anticipate we will support the boycott and GLBF in their efforts," he said.

Hall said a Florida campus has offered to host the conference as an alternative to Colorado.

"If the conference organizers are going to change the location for the national conference, they will have to hurry because plans and reservations will take time to change," he said.

Other GPSC members agree Colorado should be boycotted but they are undecided on the best way.

Richard Schell, GPSC executive board member, said he is not certain if cancelling a trip would be the most effective way to express displeasure with Colorado.

"I feel that the amendment is mean-spirited in its origin and discriminatory in its attempt," he said. "I am not in favor of the amendment but I would like to hear more from the GLBF representative before I make any decisions."

Ron Smith, vice president of graduate school affairs, said the law discriminates against gays, but he would choose protesting at the conference over cancelling the trip.

Museum exhibits political photos

The Washington Post

In this period of pomp, circumstance and the passing of power, the National Portrait Gallery presents two penetrating reality checks. Twinned exhibits remind us how quickly political fame and influence can fade, and how enduring is the legacy of the artist.

Exhibit A is a portrait portfolio of 69 of America's most powerful people, assembled in 1976 by photographer Richard Avedon for Rolling Stone magazine.

Although not quite two decades have passed, many of these movers and shakers seem only vaguely familiar, and others are utter strangers.

Exhibit B consists of 58 photographs of men and women who have helped shape our intellectual and aesthetic life, and whose work still informs and influences succeeding generations.

Selected from the Smithsonian's Archives of American Art, the photographs are themselves also artworks.

The Avedon portfolio, on view for the first time since the Bicentennial, is a vivid reminder that our most fashionable photographer is much more than a fashion photographer. By presenting each of these people standing under his trademark flat lighting against a bare background, he deprives them and us of props, requiring his subjects to show themselves and us to look at them.

Here are presidential candidate Jimmy Carter and President Ford, both trying and failing to look presidential, leading one to think of how the former grew after office, and how fast the latter faded into affable obscurity.

Here's James Angleton (1917-87), former CIA counterintelligence chief, looking so self-consciously sinister you have to laugh, and George Bush, looking so little like the director of the CIA you have to wonder. And Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz, looking as mean-spirited as he proved himself to be.

But in many cases even a lifelong newspaper reader and television watcher may find it necessary to check the labels to see who these famous and powerful people are, or were.

While reminding us that fame is fleeting, the Avedon exhibit also affirms that the times, they are a-changing. The portraits are a pantheon of white males such as no panel of editors would choose, today.

Only six "persons of color" and six women are anointed; two women serve both categories, and two others are included because they married powerful white men, or mothered them, or both.

nut in either March or April, when total government borrowings are expected to top a $4 trillion ceiling. Congress is expected to agree to increase the ceiling, but that legislation could easily turn into a bitter, partisan fight over tax increases and spending cuts.

Indeed, Gramm held a news conference Thursday to announce that he would introduce a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget when Congress takes up the debt-limit question. He added that he had enlisted the support of Texas billionaire Ross Perot and his network of supporters to lobby for the amendment.

"I am concerned that absent some binding constraint," Gramm said, "Congress will never deal with the deficit problem."

And Republicans in both the House and Senate Thursday sent pointed signals to Clinton that they were willing to work with him to reduce the deficit and stimulate economic growth, but only if tax increases were not part of the package.

"We just happen to believe that the answer doesn't come from raising taxes," said Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla.

Clinton promised during the campaign to focus on the economy "like a laser beam" once he took office and pledged to send Congress an economic package on the day after he was inaugurated. Stephanopoulos told reporters Thursday that Clinton's first orders of business on the economic front were the deficit decision and the signing of an executive order to create the National Economic Council, which investment banker Robert Rubin already has been named to head.

Stephanopoulos said that he expected Clinton to announce an economic plan "relatively soon," and noted that his top economic advisers met on Inauguration Day to continue reviewing options.

The expected high-power role of the nation's new first lady began coming into view Thursday, with White House officials saying that Hillary Rodham Clinton would be a key player in shaping domestic policy proposals, particularly in the area of health-care reform.

It was not clear what her job officially would be called; White House Communications Director George Stephanopoulos said that those details had not yet been worked out. But, Stephanopoulos said, "She'll be closely involved in developing health policy."

"We will be taking on the company wherever they open," Davis said.

Goody's plans to occupy the space vacated by Watson's in University Place, located across the street from the University Mall in Carbondale.

The store plans to open in early May.

The fact sheet issued by the union gave five reasons for the boycott:

- Goody's Family Clothing revenue was $361.7 million for fiscal year 1991. Its net income totaled $10.9 million;

- Goody's has earned $8.5 million in profits for the first three quarters of fiscal year 1992;

- on January 9, 1992, the workers at Goody's sole distribution center voted to be represented by the ACTWU;

- employees at the distribution center are paid an average of $5.25 an hour, below the poverty level for a family of four;

- and the company's health insurance costs workers more than $2,000 a year for family coverage, making it unaffordable for most workers.

Davis said the boycott has been in effect for several months now and has generated results:

- "We have had a very positive effect wherever we have been. We feel the public has been very supportive because they understand that you can't feed a family on $5.25 an hour," stated Davis.

- The distribution in Knoxville employs about 150 people, and although the employees have not walked off the job or been replaced, they are not purchasing products from the store.

- The support of the ACTWU adds another 237,000 people to the nationwide boycott, whose membership stretches into Canada and Puerto Rico. An additional 14.1 million have been added with the support of the AFL-CIO.

What worries Davis is the trend that stores like Goody's are following across the country.

"These are the new jobs being created in America today," Davis said. "And at $5.25 an hour and health care cost so high, I don't see how this country will get back on its feet."

Harry Call, executive vice president and chief operating officer for Goody's, would not discuss the company's feelings about the boycott.

Call said neither the boycott nor the media attention has had an adverse effect on shareholder's attitudes.

He would not comment on the effect it was having on company profits.

"The boycott does not seem to be affecting our shareholders and the stock is performing extremely well.

On Feb. 9 the sales earnings of the company will be released to the shareholders, and the numbers will speak for themselves," Call said.

No deadline has been set to reach an agreement, but Call feels progress is being made.

"We have had several meetings and plan to have several more meetings in the future," he said.

However, Davis does not share in Call's optimism.

"There has been some negotiating but the progress has not been satisfactory," he said.

"The union is calling for a pay increase to at least $7 an hour and a sharp decrease in health care costs.

"The workers are not on strike at the moment; a strike is not our intention," Davis said.

some experienced officers that have a lot of information to offer, but it puts in new officers for good job circulation, and it helps with layoffs," he said. "I think it benefits the department more than it hurts it."

Powers said state police officers' years of service and their age must add up to 75 to receive the benefits, but the plan offers five years added to either service or age to equal the 75.

"The officers have to buy this time, though," he said. "This isn't free, they must give a percentage of their salary for retirement. But this is an involuntary thing, so those who don't want it don't have to have it."

Steve Brown, press secretary to House Speaker Mike Madigan, said the plan has been in discussion since June 1991.

"We passed the legislation dealing with state employees in June, and since then the idea has been kicked around for other state employees to benefit," he said. Brown said the response for the plan has been generally positive, but some employees, especially university employees, have reacted negatively.

"There have been questions if it will really save the state money, or if it will cause major problems for the pension system. Universities have complained that they will lose valuable professors," he said. "We'll just have to wait and see."

Donald Wilson, SIUC vice chancellor for financial affairs, said in an interview Monday that many SIUC employees cannot take advantage of the plan because of narrow constraints.

The plan is only available to staffers and faculty between the ages of 55 and 59, who would get 7 percent of their annual salary for every year they retire before they turn 60. A faculty member who retires at the age of 55 would get 5 percent of their annual salary.

nication proposed by the Phoenix Committee. He said his decision will not be final until he meets with the committee Jan. 29 to hear the committee's arguments.

"I remain unconvinced at this point, but I can still be convinced," Shepherd said.

Shepherd said he has read, analyzed and computed the administrative costs of the Phoenix Committee's proposal and remains unconvinced the remaining units of CCFCA can form a college of close program structure.

This statement comes at a time when alumni objections to the dismantling of the College of Communications and Fine Arts is growing.

The alumni letters express their disappointment that a college with the reputation of CCFCA would be considered for abolishment.

Kyu Ho Youm, an alumnus of CCFCA and associate professor of journalism at Arizona State University, said he has an abiding interest in his alma mater because it is nationally and internationally known for its superb journalism and communication programs.

"I am confident that the proposed College of Communication will contribute to maintaining the reputation of SIUC for its first-rate programs in the United States and abroad," Youm said.

Shepherd said the communication programs could exist in the College of Liberal Arts without damaging the status CCFCA has earned.

"I do not believe to any extent that the reputation or quality of the communication programs will be compromised or diminished by being arranged in an administrative unit other than a college," Shepherd said.

"I find no compelling evidence to support that contention."

The SIUC Graduate Council approved recommendations to eliminate several graduate programs, and a University administrator updated members on the status of restructuring.

The council followed the recommendations for all the master's degree program changes except one — the establishment of a single department for the Educational Psychology and Special Education departments.

The council is waiting to adopt the merger until papers are issued on the recommendation by Roy Pelias, speech professor and reporter of New Programs Committee.

The approved recommended cuts include Applied Physical Education, Experimental Physical Education and Professional Physical Education concentrations; Vocational Evaluation, Job Development and Placement and Adjustment Services concentrations; School Health Education, Community Health Education, Industrial Health and Safety Health Education concentrations; Administration of Recreation and Park Systems, Recreation Resource Administration and Therapeutic Recreation concentrations; and Educational Administration and Instructional Supervision concentrations.

The council also approved the merger of Health Education and Recreation and a change of title for the Vocational Education Studies department to Workforce Education and Development.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, repeated a call for patience while the University and the state suffers through a budget crunch.

Hollywood remembers film legend Hepburn as graceful screen actress with lavish appeal

Newspday

When the Film Society of Lincoln Center wanted to make her the subject of its annual tribute two years ago, Audrey Hepburn's response seemed perfectly wonderful, perfectly Hepburn: "It was very simple," she said with a laugh. "They wrote me a letter and I was thrilled."

No more than we, of course. When Hepburn appeared, there was no one else on screen, no one else around. Her combination of style, wit and graceful sexuality provided her a separate constellation in the firmament of Hollywood legends. When she died Wednesday at age 63, after a long illness, she left a kind of black hole.

She made only 26 films, but rendered a number of indelible screen images: the princess on the loose who falls for journalist Gregory Peck in "Roman Holiday"—her first American film and only Academy Award-winning performance; the bohemian Holly Golightly in Truman Capote's "Breakfast at Tiffany's"; the book-store-clerk-turned-high-fashion model in "Funny Face" with Fred Astaire; and Eliza Doolittle in "My Fair Lady"—a role some felt was taken unfairly from its Broadway interpreter, Julie Andrews.

Hepburn, who would earn four more Oscar nominations, was beloved for her gamine-like screen presence, an often mischievous approach to love and an ability to transform even mediocre material—by virtue of nothing more than native elegance—into something blissful.

On the occasion of the Film

Society tribute, Joseph Gelmis, a critic for this newspaper, examined a scene he said represented the "essence" of Hepburn's appeal as a romantic heroine of the '50s and '60s.

It was from "Sabrina." In that Billy Wilder-directed comedy, Hepburn played the Paris-educated chauffeur's daughter who, during a party, dances with the raffish, high-born son of the manor, played by William Holden. It's a scene full of moonlight and music, seduction and satisfaction; she's loved this man all her life, and she's in his arms.

"Her rapture isn't the high point of the moment, however," Gelmis wrote. "Hepburn's specialty was love, showing it and bestowing it. She was tender, ever ready for the spark that would ignite her passion. And her love was irresistible. It would transform a froggy kind of prince into a real man."

"The transcendent climax to the moment, then, must be Holden's transformation. Going through his knee-jerk seducer routine ... Holden suddenly realizes Hepburn knows exactly what's going on, yet she is an amused and willing collaborator at her own seduction. His face explodes into a boyish grin of astonished pleasure and she sputters in embarrassment and appreciation, and she smiles back at him with delight."

From the beginning, this was what Hepburn's appeal was all about—a vulnerable, elfin quality married to a self-assurance that was certainly not fashionable in the mid-'50s, but which made her immediately popular with American audiences. And it generated something resembling a cult around Hepburn, who was neither the sex kitten nor professional virgin who seemed to populate films of that era. She was a woman—intelligent, compassionate, without guile—who knew what she wanted, but wasn't necessarily willing to do anything to get it; whom men wanted, and women wanted to be. Like Myrna Loy in an earlier era, she embodied sex without stupidity.

Her voice was musical, an undefinable mix of European distinction and simple warmth; it could certainly melt men. Her sense of movement, too, seemed set to music; it was a ballet scholarship that sent her as a young woman to London, where she was discovered by fashion photographers, and turned to modeling.

From there, it was a short trip to bit parts in films, one of which, "Monte Carlo Baby," brought her to the Riviera. There, she met the French novelist Colette, who told Hepburn she would be perfect in the title role in the Broadway production of Colette's "Gigi." And so, Hepburn came to New York in 1951.

Her film work over the next decade included "War and Peace," "Funny Face," the Hitchcockian mystery "Charade" which paired her with Cary Grant, Lillian Hellman's "The Children's Hour" opposite Shirley MacLaine and "Breakfast at Tiffany's." Capote once said she was wonderful, "but not my vision of Holly." Capote may have been envious. For many people, Hepburn was Holly.

"Love in the Afternoon" (1957) teamed her up with Gary Cooper, and she was again nominated for an Oscar for "The Nun's Story" (1959).

When Hepburn's off-screen persona seemed to parallel the gracious cinematic image, we didn't complain.

Her death Wednesday was announced by the United Nations, for which Hepburn had for years worked as a tireless spokeswoman and fund-raiser for the children's charity UNICEF.

She attributed her passion for that cause to her own childhood experiences in Nazi-occupied Holland, where she had suffered severe malnutrition and where food aid had saved her life.

"I've been involved with UNICEF in one way or another all my life," she said.

Clinton's female nominee greeted with cold shoulder

Zapnews

Zoe Baird's chances of being confirmed as the United States' first female attorney general shrank Thursday as the opposition to her nomination grew.

Thousands of irate calls and letters flooded Capitol Hill, senators who earlier had indicated support for Baird began to waver or express outright opposition.

At least 12 senators - five of them Democrats - called for Baird to withdraw, promising to vote against her if she does not.

But Baird, 40, who has admitted under oath that she knowingly violated the law by hiring undocumented aliens to care for her young son, steadfastly refused to drop out.

"I do not believe that would be appropriate," Baird said in a second day of testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I think that my overall record gives me the potential to be a great attorney general."

Meanwhile, Clinton, on his first day in the White House, stood behind his nominee, despite calls from Democratic senators urging him to select someone else.

"President Clinton continues to believe she'll make a good attorney general," White House spokesman George Stephanopoulos told reporters.

However, the spokesman said that when Clinton made the nomination, he did not have "a full understanding" of the seriousness of the violation. That statement differed from spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers' statement last week that Clinton considered the issue beforehand, "and did not think it was a problem."

Five Democrats - Sens. John B. Breaux of Louisiana, one of Clinton's earliest and staunchest supporters; J. Bennett Johnston, also of Louisiana; Richard C. Shelby of Alabama; David L. Boren of Oklahoma; and Jim Exon of Nebraska - called on Baird to pull out.

'Aladdin' stereotypes focus of heated argument

Candace Samolinski
International Writer

A recent controversy surrounding Walt Disney's "Aladdin" suggests that the film is stirring up more than genies and flying carpets.

People across the country are voicing their opinions about the way Arabs are portrayed in the film, some have even suggested racial motivations.

A Jan. 10, ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH article reported that Casey Kasem said the film was "gratuitous Arab-bashing".

The characters in the film are portrayed as Arabians and their appearances fit the stereotype common in many American films.

Howard Bergh, professor of middle-eastern politics at SIUC, said he is aware of the stereotype.

"There was a time in the early '70's when all of the villains became Arabs portrayed with hook noses and turbans," said Bergh. "But Italians, Germans and other races have all been shown the same way. I don't really think it is a problem."

Others do not feel the same way. Riazuddin Zabairi, associate professor of religious studies at SIUC, believes the problem still exists.

"Unfortunately, there is not a real understanding of Arabs," Zabairi

People offended by film's portrayal of Muslim, Arab lifestyles

"The media portrays all Arabs as Muslims and Muslims as Arabs. That is simply not true. Only one-fifth of Muslims are Arabs. The other four-fifths are non-Arabs. The problem may be fading, but it is not gone."

The film currently is showing at AMC Theatres in Carbondale.

"The media portrays all Arabs as Muslims and Muslims as Arabs. That is simply not true."

— Riazuddin Zabairi

Although SIUC has a large foreign population, Jeff Martin, the manager of AMC, said no complaints have been reported.

"It is a very good film and is doing very well here," Martin said. "I haven't had any complaints yet."

In the article, Nabil Al-Hadithy of Berkeley, CA, said a more balanced portrayal could be achieved if both Arab and Jewish races had equal representation in Hollywood.

Al-Hadithy also was cited as saying Jewish studio executives were "absolutely responsible" for the negative portrayal.

Robin Gross of B'nai B'rith, located in the Interfaith Center in Carbondale, said she found nothing wrong with the film.

"My family enjoyed it very much," she said.

When five SIUC student's of Arab-American heritage were asked for their opinion of the film they each said they felt Arabs were exploited by media stereotypes, and this film was different only because it was in cartoon form.

Howard Green, a spokesman for Walt Disney, was cited in the article as saying he criticism was coming from "a small minority."

Legal action could prevent Shawnee timber harvesting

By Angela L. Hyland
Environmental Writer

Timber cutting in an area of the Shawnee National Forest approximately 35 miles southeast of Carbondale may soon be stopped, local environmentalists said.

A summary judgement issued Tuesday may be a shortcut to stopping the cutting, said Joe Glisson, public education coordinator for the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists.

"The forest service made an incredibly stupid blunder," he said. "They unknowingly admitted they were breaking the law."

A summary judgment indicates that both sides of a dispute acknowledge the facts involved in a case but they disagree on the legality of the issues involved.

Logging on the site known as Opportunity Area 6 would destroy the habitat of the pine warbler, a bird currently found in the Shawnee.

The U.S. Forest Service is required, by law, to maintain minimum viable populations of native and desirable species of animals.

Under the law, enough reproductive individuals must be present throughout the area to ensure their continued existence.

"The Forest Service is supposed to protect the critters that live here, but they're deliberately trying to wipe them out," Glisson said.

"They've admitted that they are knowingly, deliberately and systematically destroying the pine warbler's habitat," he said. "They're threatening the pine warbler's very existence."

The Forest Service acknowledges the cutting will destroy the birds' habitat, Glisson said, but they claim what they are doing is not illegal because the warbler is not native to the forest.

Glisson said he has documentation dating back to the 19th century that proves the pine warbler is a native species.

Forest Service officials refused to comment.

"We've finally proven that they're breaking the law," Glisson said.

"We're not going to allow them to continue raping the forests and killing the critters that they're required by law to protect."

"Hopefully, we'll be able to shut down the timber agency," he said. "It's disgraceful what's being done here."

"Every congressman in Illinois has asked them to stop," Glisson said. "Now, we're just about ready to shut them down. It's a very good feeling."

Financial aid fiasco

College-bound students must fill out two application forms

Newspday

College-bound students and their parents face a nightmare seeking financial aid this spring as a result of changes by the federal government that were supposed to make the application process fairer.

Parents of high school seniors have been making frantic phone calls to guidance counselors and college admissions offices across the country because of confusion and delays due to new federal aid forms that do not meet the requirements of some states and many major universities.

As a result, many families now have to fill out two complicated forms instead of one. Some applications, due in mid-January, may not be in parents' hands for at least another week. And some schools say they may be forced to announce financial aid packages in early April, when they announce acceptance.

"For the high school seniors, it's a nightmare," said Sherwood Johnson, financial aid director at the State University at Stony Brook.

For years, the routine was relatively simple. In the fall of a child's senior year in high school, families would get a multi-page financial aid form from a guidance office, take an hour or two filling it in, and send it to a processing company, like the College Board. The company would forward copies to colleges.

But many people complained about the fee—as much as $10 for each copy. And some said the form was unfair because it asked the value of the parents' home. For example, in many northeastern suburbs, where real estate prices are far above the national average, parents said their home's price made them look wealthy when they were middle class, and they were not able to sell their houses to pay for college.

Last summer Congress thought it had fixed the problem when it approved a new federal aid application, which omitted home value. There was no application cost for the four-page form.

But many universities—including Ivy League schools—still want the old forms if students apply for financial aid from the college, as well as for federal assistance. That made a total of eight pages to fill out.

Because the U.S. Department of Education had to work out details of the forms with the College Board, the application packages were delayed for months. And in 17 states, the process took even longer because state law mandates forms also include data for state aid programs.

Now, board officials say they will not finish sending forms out until the end of this week. And parents may not get them until near the end of January. As a result, many colleges have extended financial aid deadlines.

At Yale University, the old date was Jan. 15. The new one is Feb. 10. Donald Routh, the school's financial aid director, said the school requires the older, more complicated form, in part because "we continue to believe that assets and in particular home equity are part of the measure of a family's financial strength."

At Stony Brook, which also wants the old form, Johnson said the new application does not take recent family difficulties into account. For example, he said, "there's no way of indicating that a parent lost their job at the end of 1992."

Prestigious scholarship awarded to student in SIUC School of Law

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Sean Smoot, a first year law student from Elmhurst, said he was surprised to learn that he was the recipient of the Du Page County Bar Association Scholarship.

"It was so flattered and excited about it at the same time. I have not been this excited since I got my acceptance letter to come to SIUC," Smoot said.

Smoot is the first SIUC student to receive the Du Page County Bar Association scholarship.

The $1,000 scholarship goes to a Du Page County resident, who is going to an Illinois law school, has a financial need, has prior academic achievement and is an entering law student.

Scott Nichols, SIUC Law School's Dean of Admission, was the person who sent in Smoot's application along with a few students that attend SIUC Law School from Du Page County.

"I was impressed with Scott," Nichols said. "I was surprised to hear that he got it though because there was a lot of competition from the Chicago area including such students from private law schools."

"His winning the scholarship makes the University very happy because he is the only student from SIUC to win since it started in 1983," he added.

Smoot received a bachelor's degree in Criminal Justice Sciences from Illinois State and is studying to be a criminal lawyer.

"His winning the scholarship makes the University very happy."

—Scott Nichols

"I find it very interesting that a person is on trial for something, and it could mean his liberties could be taken away," Smoot said.

"Civil Law you can lose money, but in criminal law, you can lose your freedom."

During his senior year at Illinois State, Smoot interned at the State's Attorney office. He was an assistant for a case that involved a triple homicide along with counts of armed robbery.

Smoot said his experience with working with a prosecuting team gave him an extra drive to succeed.

"The experience was fantastic. I think that is one of the reasons that I got the scholarship," Smoot said. "I hope to return someday and thank the State's Attorney. He has inspired me."

Smoot came to SIUC because of the law school's reputation and he has family around the Southern Illinois area.

Smoot said he would like to settle down with a job in Southern Illinois or return to the Bloomington area.

"I hope to stay and get a job here, like my favorite lawyer, my grandfather, did," Smoot said.

Abortion opponents preparing for annual D.C. protest march

The Washington Post

Wanda Franz remembers where she was 20 years ago Friday when the Supreme Court handed down Roe vs. Wade. She was in the cafeteria at West Virginia University, and a woman who knew Franz had spoken out against abortion shouted at her, "You can go home now. It's over."

Hardly. Meant to solve a problem, Roe vs. Wade, the monumental ruling that made abortion legal nationwide, incited a war that has shut down legislatures, divided political parties and splintered families. It took on a woman's intensely personal dilemma and made it the focus of an enduring and glaringly public debate.

Strife over the issue has become so institutionalized that the only comparison that comes close is the country's conflict over race. As many as 100,000 abortion opponents are expected to march to the Supreme Court and Capitol Friday, part of what has become their yearly anniversary ritual.

The war is far from over. Battles have only shifted venues over the past two decades, from the Supreme Court, to statehouses, Congress, back to the court. It has been fought in front of clinics, at political conventions, always in homes.

In Roe, the court ruled 7 to 2 that state laws making abortion a crime infringed upon the 14th Amendment's due process guarantee of personal liberty, which, the majority said, protects a woman's decision whether to have a child.

But the ruling only led to more questions. Should the government pay for abortions for poor women? Must a husband or parents be told? Could the tissue of aborted fetuses be used in important medical research?

Each issue raises more dilemmas. Choice vs. life. Equality vs. responsibility. Symbolic coat hangers vs. pictures of developing fetuses.

Now, a whole new era of abortion conflict is beginning.

The election of President Clinton, a supporter of abortion rights, and a court ruling last June affirming most of Roe but inviting state regulation, changed the battleground once again.

Clinton has promised to lift—perhaps as early as Friday—the Bush administration's "gag order" restricting abortion counseling in clinics that receive federal funds. He has also said he may end the ban on funding for research on fetal tissue.

Abortion opponents are bracing for a fight. "People are really ready to work now," said Franz, who is president of the National Right to Life Committee, a group that plans to step up its lobbying of state legislatures for more abortion limits. Franz, a student at West Virginia University in 1973, is now a professor of child development there.

Meanwhile, abortion rights advocates still are reeling from 12 years of Republican administrations that opposed abortion and a conservative Supreme Court that, despite affirming Roe, made it easier for states to restrict abortion.

"We have to recoup a lot of losses from the last 12 years," said Janet Benshoof, who last year began a new advocacy organization in New York City dedicated to preserving abortion rights. "We're just realizing how far back we are."

The future of abortion rights hangs on how far states push restrictions and how the Supreme Court assesses whether those limits are an "undue burden" on women seeking abortions. The court, in last June's ruling, said an undue burden exists if substantial obstacles are placed in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus is viable, that is, can live outside the womb.

It is a new standard and one not yet defined. Fearing that states might pass laws that significantly impede access to abortion, abortion rights supporters have been lobbying Congress to pass the proposed Freedom of Choice Act, which would greatly limit state abortion regulation.

"While there is a mood among the laity that maybe things have calmed down," said syndicated columnist Nat Hentoff, who switched sides to oppose abortion nine years ago, "they haven't."

What is it about abortion that the issue remains salient at a time when six of the nine Roe justices have died or retired?

Abortion raises questions about the beginnings of life and equally profound questions about individualism and privacy.

To many people, abortion means equality for women; and to many women, it invokes conflicts about motherhood, control of one's own body and destiny. In the background is sexuality, challenging the country's Puritan origins.

Abortion rouses religious convictions and lifestyle differences. Some conservatives equate abortion with loose morals and a lack of "family values." Liberals say the need for abortion is a human reality and that the country must allow for a safe and accessible option to end a pregnancy.

Polls—including one conducted last week by The Washington Post—show that most people fall into a conflicted middle, believing in a right to abortion but also saying it should be exercised rarely, such as when a woman's health is threatened or in cases of rape or incest.

Experts predict cloudy economic forecast

The Washington Post

Sorry, President Clinton. But even on a sunny day in Washington, Wall Street managed to rain on your parade.

The gnomes of the nation's financial capital have decided that your inauguration foreshadows a drop in the stock market this year.

The decline, they contend, is preordained by what they call the "New Presidents Inauguration Indicator."

Don't take it personally. Presidents Eisenhower, Nixon, Carter and Reagan had the same experience in their first year in the White House.

Presidents Kennedy and Bush, on the other hand, were treated kindly by the NPII.

The indicator is based on the fact that when the stock market declines between the first trading day of the year and the day of the inauguration of a new president, shares invariably languish for the rest of the year.

Conversely, if the market rises in the first three weeks of the year, it will end the year higher.

That was the case in 1961 and 1989, when Kennedy and Bush took office.

This January, the market has fallen, whether measured by the Dow Jones industrial average or the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index.

As if to confirm that trend, stocks started to slip within an hour of Clinton taking the oath of office, and ended the day 14 points lower.

Since the start of the month, the Dow is down 67 points, or 2 percent.

Thus, according to the NPII, the stock market will be lower on Dec. 31 than it was when the year began.

As kooky as all this may sound, respected market analysts take it seriously.

"This is not frivolous," said Yale Hirsch, the respected stock market analyst who discovered this relationship. "It has a sensational record. Sophisticated investors can get a good read on the market from this."

Hirsch cautioned, of course, that investors should not rely on any single measure of the market.

The logic of the indicator, its proponents say, is straightforward.

When the nation gets a new president—as opposed to a second-term—investors place their bets with an eye to how his policies will affect the financial markets.

Presumably year-end currents are out of the way and investors, as Hirsch said, "can make a clear-eyed judgment of the new administration."

The New Presidents Inauguration Indicator works in large part, Hirsch said, because of the 20th Amendment, passed in 1934. Known as the "Lame Duck" amendment, it established that Congress must convene and the president be inaugurated promptly in the month of January following the November election.

The effect of the Lame Duck Amendment was to squeeze into the month of January several events critical to the nation's economy and financial markets.

Tool time for Teri

Carbondale punk band delivers show using female front

By Andy Graham
Entertainment Writer

Some girls play with dolls. Some girls play with trucks.

Some girls play with tools, and some girls, such as Carbondale's Teri Lee, play with rock bands.

One of the only punk bands in Carbondale to boast a female lead singer, Girls With Tools want to show their turn a good time.

Just over one year ago, two employees of Quattro's restaurant, drummer Geoff Thorsen and guitarist Phillip Gill of Carbondale, decided to start a band.

While recruiting musicians, they discovered their lead singer slinging dough.

"We heard Teri do her Ethel Merman impersonation at work one day, so we asked her to sing and she said 'I'll do it if my husband (Tony Lee) can play bass,'" Thorsen said. "He never had played bass before."

The final addition to the band was Brian Vaughan, who knew Teri from their hometown of Decatur.

When Teri heard that Vaughan's band had just split apart, she asked if he would like to join Girls With Tools.

Vaughan, originally from Decatur is a veteran of two other Carbondale bands, Nightsoil Coolies and Monster Truck. Nightsoil Coolies released three tapes and played for two and a half years. Monster Truck fragmented into three other bands.

Guitarist Eric Fisher joined the Ticks, a band on Minneapolis' Twin Tone label, and drummer Ralph Woods and bassist Roger Pugh formed Crank.

Vaughan's visible stage energy, powerful riffage and sincere lyrical styling add both depth and character to the Girls With Tools line-up.

Vaughan's vocal style could most be compared to a mix between Neil Young and J. Mascis of Dinosaur jr. On original songs like "My Telescope," where the melody alternates from tension breaking punk rock down to a slower, ballad tempo, Vaughan's whiney voice manages to keep its edge and melt with Lee's voice throughout.

Their show usually consists mostly of fine tuned originals like "Anywhere To Turn," "Lucky Day," and "Diced Up," complimented with covers of such songs as Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Are Made For Walking," Fang's "The Money Will Roll Right In," a song Thorsen sings.

The true crowd pleasing cover of the set list is their version of the Cheers theme song as sung by Vaughan.

"We need to start working out some new songs. Carbondale gets bored of bands that play the same songs over and over again," Thorsen said.

Girls With Tools is in the process of recording an eight song demo tape at Acme Sound, a local recording firm owned by Brad Casetta of Baby Fishmouth.

The band is not planning on releasing the tape to the public right away.

"We would have to get a lot more hardcore and disciplined to put out anything," Thorsen said. "We would like to just send it out and get jobs on the college circuit."

As far as goals go, Girls with Tools have few.

They would like to embark on a short tour and travel, but getting signed by a record label is not on their agenda.

"Getting signed is a joke, there are so many bands that are competing for it that if you just have fun and play then you might get lucky, but we just have fun with it," Vaughan said.

The audience response from their shows seems to be pretty positive, Gill said.

"We had no idea what kind of response we would get. At first, we were kind of intimidated," Gill said.

"People seem to have a really good time and we didn't really expect that. We just wanted people to be tolerant," he said. "Really, that's all you can ask."

The members of Girls With Tools are close friends as well as bandmates, Lee said.

"If we weren't doing this, we would just be drinking and instead, we are doing this and drinking," He said.

One word that accurately describes Girls With Tool's music is contrast.

Like a flower that somehow manages to spring up in the midst of a wasted, industrial environment, Teri Lee's voice compliments her colleagues' sounds similarly.

But on some of the songs, her voice is right up front, competing to be heard.

Girls With Tools has been compared to many punk bands with female lead singers like X, Blondie and Mary's Danish but Girls With Tools escapes comparison.

"We could basically be compared to any band who has or has ever had a female singer," Tony Lee said.

Teri Lee's voice covers a whole spectrum of dynamics during live performance, creating a terrifying wail on some songs, and then turning 180 degrees to add an element of beauty and grace.

The name of the band is often misleading to the public. "Girls With Tools" infers that they are an all female band, which they are not. "We were going to call ourselves Trainwreck," Thorsen said. "People would say, 'hey, do you want to go see the Trainwreck tonight?'"

Girls With Tools play at the Hangar 9 on February 13 as the headlining band.

The opening band is currently unknown. The Hangar 9 was the sight of the last Girls With Tools show, December 17, where the house was packed.

"Everyone that has seen us and doesn't know us say, 'man, you guys are great,' and I just say 'yea, right, for a band that's playing three songs at once,'" Tony Lee said.

"We just everybody to drink a whole lot so that the bar makes alot of money and have a good time."

Japanese trade experts struggle with unpredictable U.S. president

The Washington Post

Oh, those inscrutable Americans. For weeks, Japanese trade experts have been struggling to divine President Clinton's intentions, tirelessly seeking to assess just how tough he will get with Japan on the trade issue.

Officials from no fewer than three government agencies and the nation's leading business organization, the Keidanren, have traveled to Washington in hopes of gaining some sort of insight. Back in Tokyo, their colleagues have been pouring over transcripts of confirmation hearings for Clinton's top appointees.

Their general conclusions: Clinton won't abandon the free-trade orientation of prior U.S. administrations, nor will he use extreme protectionist methods to bully Japan into buying more American products. Then again, he might.

"Our overall impression of Clinton is that, first of all, he understands many issues very well," said a high-ranking official of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI). "But our feeling is that, perhaps as a result of his being so knowledgeable, what he will actually do is unknown."

"A lot of us thought that once we found out who would be in the Cabinet, we might get an impression of what his trade policies will be," the official said. "But the situation is still difficult to figure out."

That mixture of confidence and anxiety is widely shared. Despite troubling signals and Japanese expectations that the new president will adopt a somewhat tougher stance on trade than former President Bush did, the prevailing view is that Clinton's trade policies will not be radically different.

"They will probably say all sorts of things," Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa said in a recent television interview. "Whenever there is a new administration they always blow a lot of hot air. But after several months, it quiets down."

Japanese business and government leaders applauded the president's focus on curing America's domestic problems—a much more sensible approach, in their view, than blaming Japan for U.S. woes.

But few people here say they are sure the new administration will adhere to the free-trade ideology of the past. So policy makers are quietly discussing proposals aimed at keeping trade disputes from escalating, and are vowing to fight back should a nightmare scenario emerge in which Washington unilaterally imposes trade sanctions against Tokyo.

"When you become president, you become prudent and responsible," said Kazuo Nukazawa, managing director of the Keidanren. "But we are preparing for the worst. Any prudent nation should."

One of the main reasons for optimism on the trade front, in the view of Nukazawa and others, is that the United States is staging a solid recovery from recession, and such U.S. industries as computer chip making and auto manufacturing are becoming more competitive, thereby reducing one major cause of anti-Japanese feeling.

Moreover, Japanese policy-makers are delighted with statements by Clinton and his top aides indicating a determination to seriously tackle the budget deficit, which they regard as the principal source of U.S. economic woes.

But some see unsettling signs, notably the selection of Laura D'Andrea Tyson, a University of California at Berkeley economics professor, to chair the president's Council of Economic Advisers. In a recent book, Tyson argued that to ensure the health of strategically important, high-tech industries, the U.S. government may need to "manage" trade with countries like Japan by insisting on certain levels of exports and imports.

Noboru Hatakeyama, MITI's vice minister for international affairs, gave a decidedly cool reaction last month to the news of her selection. "We have not necessarily gotten the impression that she is very much in favor of free trade," Hatakeyama said. "So we have to carefully watch her policies down the road."

Neither was Tokyo thrilled when U.S. auto executives and labor leaders, after meeting with Clinton in Little Rock, Ark., declared themselves pleased with the way he had responded to their complaints about Japanese competition.

Japanese automakers are particularly upset over signs that the new administration intends to sharply increase tariffs on imports of Japanese minivans. Tatsuro Toyota, president of Toyota Motor Corp., said such a move would be "completely counter to the spirit of free trade."

Accordingly, Japanese government and business leaders are gearing for a possible onslaught of criticism from Washington. They say one of the ways Tokyo will almost certainly respond is by announcing soon a major new government spending program intended to boost the economy. That would help spur demand for imported goods and put a lid on Tokyo's burgeoning—and embarrassing—trade surplus.

Victim's family off deep end over early parole of Kimball

Los Angeles Times

Robert Bedell has Nov. 24 marked on his calendar.

Bruce Kimball has it etched in his mind.

That is the date Kimball, a 1984 Olympic silver medalist in 10-meter platform diving, is expected to complete his sentence for an Aug. 1, 1988, drunk-driving accident in which his car slammed into a group of teen-agers, killing Bedell's son, Robbie, and Kevin Gossic and injuring six others.

Kimball, 30, is living in Spectrum Dade Chase, a residential substance abuse treatment facility in the Miami area. During the day, he works, rebuilding structures in the wake of Hurricane Andrew. At night, he returns to the facility.

His father, Dick, a five-time U.S. Olympic diving coach, including the 1992 Games, is enthusiastic about his son's opportunity to work. He is convinced that it will prepare Bruce to return to society next November.

Bedell is outraged.

"I didn't realize that he was out walking around," Bedell said. "He's working during the day, so do I. He goes home after work, so do I. I'm in prison as much as he is. I think he should be in prison the whole time, under maximum security the bulk of the time. And whatever alcohol programs he needs should have been administered there."

Bedell and his wife, Theresa, have attended every parole board meeting involving Kimball, who was originally sentenced to 17 years in prison.

"He was sentenced for 17 years, based on the crime he committed," Bedell said. "Just because the prisons are overcrowded, they've shaved off time and shaved off time, and moved up the release date and moved up the release date."

"I don't think people in the general public really realize when they see someone sentenced for a certain time that they aren't going to serve that time. It used to be one-third of the original sentence. For Bruce Kimball it'll be about 25 percent, and he's out (on work release) now."

Kimball was imprisoned in late January of 1989. If he is released in November, as planned, he will have served four years, 10 months, or 10 months less than the one-third generally considered to be the minimum.

For Kimball's family, however, it has been a long, long time.

Dick, Bruce's mother, Gail, and his brother and sister, Jim and Vicki, have taken turns each month, traveling to Florida from their home in Ann Arbor, Mich., to visit Bruce. All of them visited him last month to celebrate Christmas.

"We've tried to give him support," Dick Kimball said. "We're just glad this thing—him being in prison—is finally over. We're just happy he's made his way through there, and that he'll have a chance to start a new life."

The elder Kimball hopes that his son can maintain a low profile when he is released. "There was way too much publicity before," he said. "He doesn't want that to happen again. He doesn't want to be hounded."

The publicity was intensified by Kimball's participation in the 1988 Olympic Trials, only 17 days after the accident. It was a decision that angered many, who thought it was bad enough that Kimball drove at an estimated 75 mph, that his blood-alcohol level was twice the legal limit and that he killed two teen-agers and injured six others, two seriously.

But for him to go on with his plans to make the Olympic team?

Public sentiment was clear: Kimball showed little remorse for his crime and lacked sensitivity for the family and friends of the victims.

"At the time I was mad that he was out (on bail) to even go," Bedell said. "So the justice system failed."

"And I think U.S. Diving and the U.S. Olympic Committee) were insensitive in allowing him to compete. Heck, they suspend amateur athletes and pro football players when they are on steroids and drugs. Here, he was not only on alcohol, he killed two people and they allowed him to compete."

"And he was insensitive to go on and compete as if nothing had happened. It was appalling."

Kimball was supported by the close-knit U.S. diving community at the Trials in Indianapolis, and until making a poor dive in the ninth of 10 rounds he was on his way to the Games in Seoul.

People wearing T-shirts that read, "Remember the Victims," watched in silence. The rest of the crowd cheered his dives.

He finished fourth in an event in which two made the Olympic team.

Kimball was encouraged by diving people again last summer when Danny Compain won a national age group championship in Austin, Texas. Compain was one of several divers Kimball coached last year.

Although Kimball was not in attendance because he cannot travel outside of Florida, word spread that he had trained Compain.

"The diving community was very much behind him," Rose Bowl Aquatic Coach Van Austin said.

Kimball was allowed to coach only after parents of the Hurricane diving club were informed of his past.

"There wasn't one person that had any reservations about Bruce working with their kids," said Randy Ableman, Hurricane head coach.

Kelly still hurt by QB controversy; feels apologetic for feeling good

Los Angeles Times

BUFFALO, N.Y.—At the start of this month, many in Buffalo doubted the Bills could win with Frank Reich at quarterback.

Two weeks later, many doubted they could win without him.

Welcome to the wacky world of the NFL, where the most popular quarterback often seems to be the one standing on the sidelines, clipboard in hand, his future in someone else's hands.

Quarterback controversies are certainly nothing new. They have been going on as long as football teams have carried more than one quarterback on their roster. As soon as people lose hope in the quarterback on the field, their hopes soar that the one on the bench will do better.

But Buffalo seemed immune from such a situation. After all, the Bills' choice heading into last Sunday's American Football Conference Championship Game against the Dolphins in Miami was between Jim Kelly, an All-Pro quarterback who has thrown 23 or more touchdown passes in each of the last four seasons and led Buffalo to the Super Bowl two times in a row before this year, and Reich, a backup quarterback in each of his eight pro seasons, a man with only six career starts going into this year.

Yet, there was a public clamor for Reich. Two papers from nearby Rochester took a telephone poll that revealed a preference for Reich by a vote of 1,267 to 37.

"I can understand why people didn't know if we could win with me," Reich said. "I don't understand how people can say, 'Can we win with Jim Kelly?' That I can't understand."

There were questions about Kelly even before he was knocked out of the Bills' regular-season finale because of a sprained right knee.

Kelly hurt his elbow earlier in the season and seemed to struggle at times. He finished the regular season with 23 touchdown passes, his lowest total in four seasons, and 19 interceptions, a career high.

With Kelly unavailable, in stepped Reich to start the postseason opener against the Houston Oilers.

Only those NFL fans who have been living in a cave the last few weeks don't know what happened next. Down, 35-3, in the third quarter, Reich engineered the greatest comeback in NFL history, throwing four second-half touchdown passes and also leading the Bills to a fifth as Buffalo rallied for a 41-38 overtime victory.

With Kelly still not ready to return, Reich guided the Bills to another victory in the second round, throwing two more touchdown passes in a 24-3 defeat at Pittsburgh of the Steelers.

Six touchdown passes in two games for Reich.

And a hook.

When Kelly showed he was physically fit during practice in the middle of last week, Coach Marv Levy named him the starter for last Sunday's AFC title game—and then batted down the hatches as the controversy swirled.

Kelly was stunned. At least a portion of the town he had led to its greatest sports glory seemed, to him, to have turned on him.

The anti-Kelly sentiment wasn't limited to that newspaper poll. It surfaced on Buffalo talk shows, in letters to the editor and even in comments by sportscasters and columnists in parts of the country.

Wrote Greg Cote in the Miami Herald before Sunday's game:

"Here comes Marv the Mechanic in his greasy big overalls, leaning in under the hood, fiddling with what ain't broke, sticking a busted, rusty part into a perfectly good engine. I guarantee you, if Mr. Goodwrench coached the Buffalo Bills instead of Mr. Marv Levy, none of this would be happening."

Said Levy: "The denigration of Jim Kelly revolted me."

And Kelly, "I felt like I had to apologize for feeling good."

So Kelly, a bachelor, turned inward, looking for support from his parents and five brothers.

"Everybody rallied around me," he said. "My family means more to me than anything. They all seemed to know what to say to me and when to say it."

Kelly said: "They told me, 'You know what you're all about. Don't think you have to do it all yourself. And whatever happens, we still love you.'"

Despite changing fan interest, NCAA women's hoops alright

The Baltimore Sun

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—No one turned away at the door this time. No fire marshals running around in a panic. No refunds for ticket holders forced to exit the building.

Less than a year after drawing an overflow crowd of 14,500 to Cole Field House, the Maryland-Virginia women's basketball game Wednesday night returned to more civilized surroundings.

Good. There's nothing wrong with the women pushing toward the big-time, but for all their hand-wringing over growth, growth, growth, the sport is doing just fine.

Go ahead, call the politically correct police. It's unconscionable to celebrate a major college sport without recruiting scandals, teenage egomaniacs and coaches jumping contracts.

Sorry, a woman's place is not in the dome—not if perspective has anything to do with it. The game keeps evolving, interest keeps growing. Shouldn't that be enough?

Wednesday night's crowd of 7,198 was the second largest for a women's game at Cole, yet half the size of last year's sudden blip on the radar screen, when Maryland was ranked No. 1 and Virginia No. 2.

This time, No. 5 Maryland beat No. 10 Virginia, 70-66. It wouldn't have mattered if the crowd was 700. The game was as tense and exciting as any the Atlantic Coast Conference men will play this season.

As the lead changed 10 times in the second half, the shrieking intensified from all those 10- and 12-year-old girls who want to grow up like the Terps' Katrina Colleton and Malissa Boles.

Who cared if their favorites couldn't dunk?

The game was a blast. Still, to Maryland Coach Chris Weller, the evening wasn't a total success. "I was hoping for around 8,000, but it wasn't a great day, with the inauguration and all that," Weller said. "Hopefully, we'll get some spill-off. It'll take time."

Ultimately, Weller wants Maryland's average attendance to be comparable with Tennessee's (6,679) and Texas' (5,740). "We're making real progress," Maryland Athletic Director Andy Geiger said, "but you kind of have to notice it by degrees."

Patience, patience. "It's going to be a slow process, but I don't see us going backward again," said Lisa Speas, the assistant sports marketing director at Maryland in charge of women's athletics.

"The biggest problem I have is that there's no funding to get things to happen as fast as I want them. I'm always trying to get sponsors. We just don't have money right now for women's athletics."

According to Maryland sports marketing director Neal Eskin, approximately 15 percent of his $100,000 advertising budget goes to women's basketball. Football and men's basketball each get 40 percent, non-revenue sports five percent.

Speas, however, has made notable progress the last two years, devising a season-ticket brochure, targeting groups as diverse as senior citizens, elementary-school students and professional women, securing radio and television contracts.

These are significant strides in a sport that barely registered on the college landscape 20 years ago. The men's game will always be more popular—the players are bigger, faster, stronger—but the women certainly are carving their niche.

So, why all the fretting? Because support for the women's game is spotty. The game between No. 1 Vanderbilt and No. 2 Tennessee at Vandy's 15,317-seat Memorial Gymnasium on Jan. 30 is a sellout. But a crowd of only 849 saw Maryland get upset at Florida State last week.

Weller, in her 18th season at Maryland, can't be blamed for craving more exposure—she earns $70,000, men's coach Gary Williams $131,000. At Virginia, men's coach Jeff Jones and women's coach Debbie Ryan each make $106,000, but that's the exception, not the rule.

At least Weller has Geiger in her corner, and Speas, as well. The Terps' goal this season is an average attendance of 3,500. Their current average is only 2,421, but Wednesday night was their first ACC home game. The bigger draws are coming.

The product is out there now—if anything, it receives more media coverage than fan interest warrants. Your average hoop junkie still would rather see the Dunbar High boys, but that's fine. The women are part of the basketball universe, too.

Angels get minor league pitcher in trade ready to throw—footballs

Los Angeles Times

ANAHEIM, Calif.—The California Angels have a history of trading for players who can't play, pitchers who can't pitch, prospects who never develop and veterans who are finished.

Now, they have managed to wind up with a 23-year-old freshman quarterback.

The Angels discovered Wednesday that Jeff Tuss, the minor-league reliever they acquired last week from the Montreal Expos for first baseman Lee Stevens, won't be reporting to spring training this year, it ever.

Tuss said Wednesday night that he would play football for Fresno State and had signed a letter of intent. He plans to begin classes this spring, has four years of eligibility remaining and hopes to replace starting quarterback Trent Dilfer when he leaves for the NFL.

"I guess you can say Fresno State hasn't been the most popular school down there (in Southern California) lately," said Steve Caruso, Tuss's agent.

Fresno State beat USC in the Freedom Bowl at Anaheim Stadium on Dec. 29.

"This got real serious, real quick," Caruso said. "I've been trying to let the Angels know what's going on since Friday, but couldn't reach them. And now, geez, it's turned into a real mess."

The Angels, whose emotions ranged from bewilderment to embarrassment to annoyance, still are trying to figure out what happened. They didn't know Tuss even cared for football, let alone developed some sort of mid-life crisis at 23.

They were unable to contact Tuss last Friday to inform him of the trade because he was at Fresno State on a recruiting trip.

"The first we heard of it was (Wednesday)," said Bill Bavasi, Angel farm director, who received the call from Caruso. "Right now, we're just trying to get as many facts as we can, trying to determine who knew what at the time of the deal."

"I mean, we've never traded for a guy who planned on quitting. Then again, we never had a player offered to us who planned on quitting."

What's unclear is whether the Expos were aware of Tuss's intentions. Caruso claims he informed Kent Qualls, Expo director of minor-league operations, in December that Tuss probably would quit baseball. The Angels say the Expos failed to convey the message during trade negotiations. Expo General Manager Dan Duquette was unavailable for comment. "There's no sense in anyone worrying about it now," said Whitey Herzog, Angel vice-president/player personnel.

CHAMPAIGN, from page 20

Saturday. The meet will be held in Illinois' brand new indoor track facility, the first meet ever to be held there.

Illinois is competing in its first indoor meet of the year.

"We just hope the competition that EIU and SIU give us will help get us started," Illinois coach Gary Wieneke said.

Eastern Illinois coach Neil Moore said the meet will be "a renewal of old rivalries."

HIGH SCHOOL JUNIORS

Part-time money—money for college.

If you're a high school junior, and 17, the Army Reserve can help you earn good part-time money, as well as extra money for college.

How? The Army Reserve's Alternate Training Program. Here's how it works. You take Basic Training between your junior and senior year. After your senior year, you train in a specific skill at an Army school.

Then you'll usually serve one weekend a month near home, plus two weeks a year.

This all adds up to good part-time money—more than $15,000 during a standard enlistment. If you qualify, there's also the Montgomery GI Bill which could provide you with up to $5,040 for college or approved vocational/technical training. That totals more than $20,000 for your education. Give it some thought—then give us a call.

PURDUE, from page 20

Don DeNoon said. DeNoon said the fact that the meet is unsure<sup>d</sup> will give coaches the liberty to shift athletes and try them out in new events.

SIUC will be competing without top athletes Crystalla Constantinou and Joy Williamson, strong runners in the sprinting events.

Williamson is out with a strained hamstring and back problems. She excelled last Saturday in the long jump, when she recorded the top Saluki jump of 17-7, which was third overall.

Constantinou is experiencing tendonitis in the right foot, and also missed the Southern Classic.

In the Illinois State Triangular meet Dec. 12, she finished in second place in the 100-meter dash (7.23 seconds) and the 200-meter dash (25.6).

DeNoon said that this should be the Salukis' toughest competition yet.

If 1/12 of transaction amount is made for 12 consecutive months, then all finance charges assessed and paid will be refunded.

MONTGOMERY WARD PRICING PLEDGE

We'll match any store's current advertised price at time of merchandise purchase. Plus, if you find a lower advertised price at any store, including Montgomery Ward, within 30 days after merchandise purchase, we'll cheerfully refund the difference. Simply bring in the ad and/or your receipt. This pledge is not limited to identical items and model numbers like some of our competitors. We will match the price on the same name brand item even if the model numbers are different. If shown on our comparable model charts. And on many items our private label items with our competitors' comparable name brand or private label items. Our sales associates in Electric Avenue, Auto Express, Home Ideas and our Seasonal Shops have comparable model charts of matchable items. Price matching policy does not apply when an additional Bonus/Free item is part of the purchase price, or to sales of floor samples, one-of-a-kind, damaged or clearance goods, closeouts, limited quantities, special order ties, manufacturers' rebates, sales by other than local stocking retailers or merchandise sold in mail order catalogs.

Montgomery Ward
WHATEVER IT TAKES!

Items designated "lowest prices ever" are at or below our lowest prices of the season, year or ever. However, special incentive offers such as early birds, rebates, coupons, etc., may have resulted in temporary lower prices.
