Voter-registration policy disputed

Protecting democracy: Reno files suit against 3 states, including Illinois, for failing to adopt the 1993 'motor-voter law.'

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Illinois and two other states are facing lawsuits filed by Attorney Gen. Janet Reno, Monday, for not adopting the federal law providing a variety of avenues for voter registration.

The 1993 National Voter Registration Act, also known as the motor-voter law, passed with strong Democratic support over Republican opposition. California and Pennsylvania also are confronted with lawsuits from the U.S. Justice Department.

The act requires all states to provide voter registration through the driver licensing process, through the mail and at state social service offices.

According to the act, its purpose is to "establish procedures that will increase the number of eligible citizens who register to vote in elections."

The law also is meant to "protect the integrity of the electoral process," according to the legislation.

Reno stated in a news conference Monday that "Congress has the authority to regulate federal elections. We now must use the authority that Congress gave us to enforce it."

Eric Robinson, spokesperson for Gov. Edgar, said Illinois does not have the law because the legislation did not pass the General Assembly.

"Gov. Edgar shares the concerns of legislators on two fronts," Robinson said. "First it is another unfunded federal mandate, something else the federal government has forced upon the states without funding; and it could make vote fraud easier."

He said unfortunately Illinois has a history of voter fraud and the legislation has taken measures to safeguard against this.

"Illinois does not go through this process (voter registration) lightly,"

Robinson said.

Robinson declined to comment on what action the state plans to take with the lawsuit, but did say that the governor is "exploring all options."

"There has been talk in Washington (D.C.) about repealing the law," he said.

Joanna Slaney, a spokeswoman for Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun, D-Chicago, said that Moseley-Braun supports the full implementation of the act in Illinois.

"Illinois should not go to court to limit democracy. Nor should the state spend tax dollars defending the decision to do so," Moseley-Braun stated in a press release.

Slaney said the Senator believes

Students debate merits of O.J. defense, offense

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Some SIUC law students think strategic moves made by lawyers involved in the O. J. Simpson murder trial may be more important than the actual evidence.

William Schroeder, law school professor, said every thinkable rational and irrational move is being made by both the prosecuting and defensive teams.

David Winnet, a third-year law student from Hillsboro, said the first day is important, because it is the only time until the end of the trial that the lawyers talk uninterrupted.

"It is very clear when the lawyers are talking, but once people begin taking the stand it becomes choppy."

David Galanti, a third-year law student from Carterville, said that Bailey, a well-known attorney on the defense team, has an intimidating presence.

"Having F. Lee Bailey sitting next to whomever speaks is a very good move by the defense," he said.

Galanti said he feels that having Nicole's sister sit in the front row is a smart move by the prosecutors, because she looks like Nicole, and positioning her facing the jury will play on their emotions.

Galanti said having a high powered team of lawyers may be detrimental for Simpson because having

Saluki to close final curtain

Lack of business forces Kerasotes to close 2 sites

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Kerasotes Theatres is closing two local establishments within the next two months. The Saluki Twin Cinema will have its last showing Thursday, Jan. 25, and the doors of the Varsity Movie Store will close the first week of March.

After year-end review figures, Kerasotes decided last week to close the two businesses.

The Saluki, located in the Lewis Park Village Mall, is closing due to lack of business. John Miller, general manager of Kerasotes Theatres, said, "Attendance at the Saluki has dropped off and (the theater) has not been making any money. We have tried promotions to generate business but it never worked."

Charles Reiter, manager of the AMC University Place 8 theater, said, "Since they (Saluki) are a dollar house and we are a full house, there will be no impact on our business." Reiter also attributes the closing of the Saluki with its bad location and lack of parking.

Varsity Movie Store, which is located at 418 S. Illinois Ave, and has been open for almost nine years, will close in March, Miller said. Bryon Kluesner, manager of Varsity, said, "Kerasotes is a movie chain with 97 theaters with three

USG to vote on $3 health-fee increase

By Shawna Donovan
Daily Egyptian Reporter

At tonight's Undergraduate Student Government meeting, senators will vote on the proposed $3 health fee increase slated for next fall.

The fee increase, proposed last semester by Health Services Director Terrance Buck, would pay for additional health programs on campus. Those additional services include HIV testing, a new clinical psychologist, an emergency medical vehicle to transport mental health patients from Harrisburg, and a residence hall nurse.

There has not been a health fee increase in four years, Buck said.

Carin Musak, USG vice president, said students are in support of the health fee increase.

"This is one of the few fee increases that goes directly to students," she said. "The feedback from the health survey we (health advisory board) did was positive (towards the additional services).

U.S. LOOKED AT AIR STRIKES AGAINST N. KOREA

WASHINGTON—President Clinton's senior defense- and foreign-policy advisers gave serious consideration last year to military strikes against North Korea to destroy that nation's nuclear-weapons facilities, Defense Secretary William J. Perry said Tuesday. "We considered it," Perry said in his first appearance before a Senate Foreign Relations Committee controlled by Republicans and chaired by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. "We know how to do it. But I did not recommend it to the president."

HAITI: DON'T TAKE G.I. JOE HOME TOO SOON

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti—President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's government is increasingly concerned that the United States is pulling its troops out of Haiti too fast and with inadequate preparation for the imminent turnover to a United Nations peacekeeping force, according to government officials and diplomats. All sides agree that the security situation has improved dramatically since U.S. troops occupied the nation Sept. 19, making possible Aristide's return Oct. 15 and restoring Haiti's first democratically elected government. The disputed questions are whether the United States is leaving too soon and whether a U.N. force, with a more limited mandate, will be able to sustain pacification enough for Aristide to remain in power, start economic recovery and organize a credible election to pick his successor.

SHADES OF BERLIN. . . ISRAELIS CONSIDER WALL

JERUSALEM—In the wake of the suicide bombing that killed 19 this week, Israel is nearing a momentous decision: fencing off the occupied West Bank to protect its heartland from further terrorist attacks. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Tuesday he would appoint a ministerial committee at the Cabinet meeting Sunday with a mandate to begin the gradual separation of Israel from the Palestinian territories. The proposed security frontier on the West Bank will include a fence in many areas, government officials said, and also will rely upon electronic surveillance systems, extensive patrolling by land and air, military outposts and checkpoints to control entry into and out of Israel.

UNIONS, USAIR STRUGGLE TO HACK OUT CUTS

WASHINGTON—The three major unions at USAir Inc. Tuesday struggled to reach a pain-sharing agreement on how to absorb billions of dollars in wage cuts and contract concessions on the eve of a board of directors meeting to consider the airline's financial viability. The unions are close to agreement on $1.75 billion in concessions, their share of the $2.5 billion in overall labor savings being sought by the Arlington, Va.-based carrier, sources said, but a last-minute snag with the flight attendants union threatened the agreement. The balance of the cuts will come from nonunion and management employees. The three unions—the Air Line Pilots Association, the International Association of Machinists and the Association of Flight Attendants—made progress late last week toward an agreement on how to apportion the cuts among themselves.

CIA AWAITS CLINTON'S CHOICE FOR TOP SPOOK

WASHINGTON—The new CIA director will face an extraordinary challenge in trying to restore direction and morale in an agency struggling to define its post-Cold War role, reduce its budget and recover from the fallout of the case of confessed spy Aldrich H. Ames. The unexpected retirement of R. James Woolsey not only has handed President Clinton a tough post to fill but heightened tensions inside an agency that already was in turmoil, according to sources inside the agency, at the White House and on Capitol Hill. "It's always bad to be leaderless," one congressional intelligence expert said, "but, in this case, they need someone really bad."

Details, details: Seniors ready to graduate

The Final Push:
Students get ready for their final semester, graduation and beyond

By Kellie Huttes
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Now that the deadline for seniors to apply for graduation has passed, there are many things anxious students need to do to prepare for graduation and for the job market. Laida Cruse, assistant director of SIUC's records department, said there were more than 2,000 graduation applications turned in last week that are still being processed.

Students who did not turn in an application for graduation, and want to graduate in May must notify their respective academic unit and obtain permission from the dean to apply, Cruse said.

After applications are processed, they are returned to various campus departments where advisers make final graduation checks to ensure students have completed their required course work.

She has hotel reservations made for her parents and grandparents near Carbondale for her May graduation and is making plans with friends for her Saturday, May 13 celebration.

But Norville, a senior in accounting from Taylorville, said her bed of roses does not always smell so sweet.

'Meet me in St. Louis'

Possible tollway link to metro area focus of study

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Imagine a trip to St. Louis that does not involve bumping over narrow two-lane highways, or going miles out of your way just to drive on a freeway.

Officials announced last week that three specific areas are being considered for a new road that would directly connect Carbondale and St. Louis. A $400,000 feasibility study will begin immediately, to further focus the project.

After studying the possible routes a new four-lane tollway could take, the Southwest Illinois Freeway Team (SWIFT) has narrowed their investigation to three recommended corridors, each one-mile wide.

These corridors are now the focus of the feasibility study contracted by the Illinois Department of Transportation. The results should be available in August of this year.

"I have learned it takes more paper than concrete to build a road."

Dan Reitz
chairman of SWIFT

Dan Reitz, chairman of SWIFT, said the process of actually building the tollway is still several studies away.

"The engineers have to do at least two more studies after a corridor is picked," he said. "I have learned it takes more paper than concrete to build a road."

A four-lane road has been studied before in 1967, 1976 and 1986, said Reitz.

"All other types of highways were found to be impractical because of the insufficient traffic in the area," he said. "We decided a tollway was the only possible alternative."

Carbondale City Manager Jeff Doherty said the city of Carbondale has been supportive of the direct route to St. Louis from the beginning.

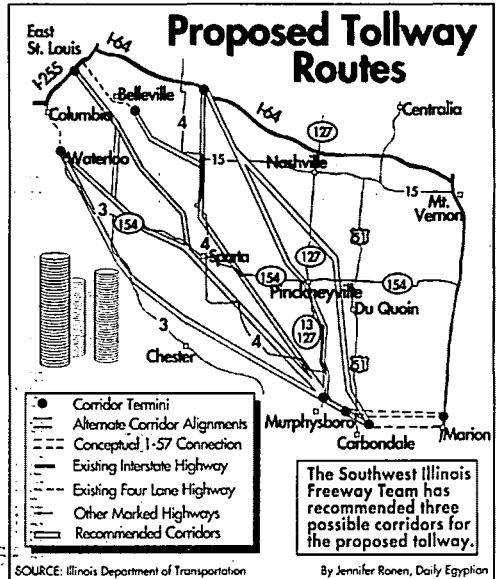

"This is not just about economic growth," said Doherty. "This is about economic survival."

"There is a sense of isolation in Southern Illinois because of the lack of direct access to the nearest major metropolitan area."

Doherty said the ability to get goods to market is one of the major factors in how much industry an area gets. Shortening the distance trucks have to travel to transport products to St. Louis would encourage new industry to develop in the Carbondale area.

"It is also important to remember

Scholarship, database on agenda of Institutional Advancement

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC's Department of Institutional Advancement — created just one year ago when University Relations, the SIU Foundation, and the SIU Alumni Association were combined — has good reason to celebrate its first anniversary, one SIU official says.

As of Dec. 31 the department had raised $5.4 million, which is more than half of the $9.6 million goal set for fiscal year 1994-95, according to J. Robert Quatroche, vice president for institutional advancement.

Quatroche said the department is working on creating a new scholarship for incoming freshmen, equipping laboratories for the College of Engineering, and producing money to support the athletic program with private funding.

Quatroche said the scholarship would be designed to attract "the very brightest Illinois high school students."

He said the four-year scholarship would be offered to incoming freshmen who meet strict academic criteria. He said many talented students pass up SIU because they get a better package elsewhere, and the scholarship would help to bring those students here.

The department is also concluding a year-long study on an alumni-information database. As of now, the different colleges have information but much of it is outdated, he said.

The new database would bring all the colleges together with updated information. He said it would take about two years to phase into this new system, while in the meantime updating and working with the old one.

Edward M. Buerger, executive director of the SIU Alumni Association, said there are 150,000 alumni worldwide and that there are about 73,000 in Illinois.

Buerger said through the efforts of Quatroche and President John C. Guyon, the department has been able to increase the staff which will help

Treatment for alcohol abuse available through University

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

According to SIUC Health Services, 85 percent of SIUC students use alcohol. Some students who drink develop problems, and the Health Services Alcohol and Drug Education Program has several solutions to fight the dilemma.

About 250 students enter the Program each semester, and the number is rising, said Barb Fijolek, coordinator of alcohol and drug education at Health Services. The students either come in on their own or are referred after getting in some form of trouble, she said.

"We have screening sessions that we can set up with students if they're interested, or they can be referred," she said.

Once someone is diagnosed with a drinking problem, they have several options. Self-help groups on campus assist those who do not need as much care.

A three-week intensive outpatient program paid by students' health insurance is available. The program takes place in the evenings for about 20 hours a week, and school is not disrupted. There the student receives counseling, education and support, Fijolek said.

"They don't have to quit school," she said. "They don't have to disrupt their whole lifestyle."

For students who need extra care, a three-week inpatient program is available in St. Louis.

The costs of the various programs are covered under the health insurance plan available through SIUC, unless the condition existed before coverage began.

"If it's a pre-existing condition, they would have to pay (insurance) for a year," Fijolek said.

City, football team need common goal

THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE EGO OF ST. LOUIS after the Cardinals moved on to Phoenix, Ariz., appears to have a possibility of being mended. The Los Angeles Rams are planning to move in, for the 1995 season. Should the Rams and the city receive the approval of 23 out of 30 National Football League team owners, St. Louis will be ensured a new football team.

All things considered, a Rams move to St. Louis would be a fortunate as well as a healthy thing for the city's economy and an exciting event for area fans. The move also would ensure that St. Louis would not be a major city without a foothold in the NFL.

At the same time, however, St. Louis should be wary that another snafu, such as the Cardinals' move, does not become necessary.

The city of St. Louis has been growing rapidly in recent years, with expansions at Lambert Airport, the growth of the city's suburbs — a trend seen with many big cities — and the creation of a metro-link transportation system which connects many of the suburbs directly to the city and its new 70,000 seat stadium built to house the hoped-for football team.

SHOULD THE RAMS' MOVE BE APPROVED, THE efforts of St. Louis to attract a new football team after the Cardinals moved on will have not been in vain. The approximately $200 million stadium, which was funded by the city as well as the state of Missouri, would be put to good use, and more money could perhaps be generated for the city.

It would seem that the city would benefit by the Rams' move, but there is more to consider.

GIVEN THE LACK OF COOPERATION THAT existed between St. Louis and Bill Bidwill, the owner of the Cardinals, the city and the owner of the Rams would do well to stimulate cooperation before a final move is made.

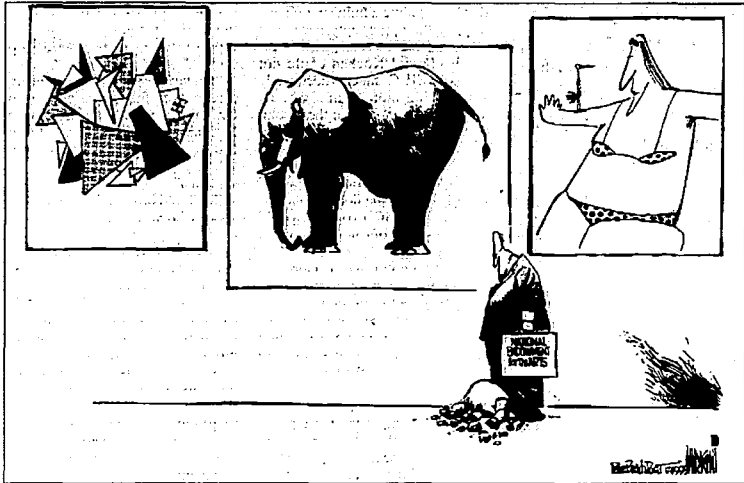

Many reasons have been cited in the media for the Cardinals' move to Phoenix including low fan attendance, a poor record of victories on the field and — probably the most frequently cited reason in public arguments — the disagreements between Bidwill and the city over the need for a new stadium.

The Rams' success in St. Louis from a public-relations standpoint could be greatly enhanced if both city and team owner are honest and open about their goals and visions for the team.

Also, the Rams are in a transition period in another area — the area of management. While the club searches for a new coach, the team will need to keep in mind what qualities this new leader should possess. Someone with a strong vision and a fresh and flexible attitude would be beneficial, so the team has a chance to settle in to its new home.

There already are enough difficult challenges — such as the need for the team to sell 40,000 season-ticket packages before the move is approved — facing the Rams and St. Louis. The more additional challenges that can be avoided, the better the situation will be for both city and team.

IF ST. LOUIS SEIZES THIS NEW OPPORTUNITY to bring the tradition of football back to its growing metropolis, good things could follow. As all good field-goal kickers know, however, the ball is more likely to make it through the goal posts if it clears the interfering hands of a defensive blocker.

Rams need local support to stay

It's about time. The city of St. Louis and its fans deserve a professional football team, and with the Rams' move to the Gateway of the West, the fans in this area will finally get a chance to show how big a sports town it is.

Critics of the Rams' move to St. Louis point to the Cardinal flight to Phoenix and the expansion fiasco of a year ago, but their fears are not justified.

The fans in this area have been without football for eight years and are hungry to have America's most popular sport back.

What happened in 1987 was not the fact that the St. Louis community did not want to support a National Football League team, but that the relationship with the Cardinal management had worn thin.

Fans were fed up with the constant complaining of Cardinal owner Bill Bidwill. Bidwill obviously did not want to be in St. Louis and did everything in his power to get out. The fans knew it, so who could blame them for the poor attendance in the last couple of years?

Bidwill said he left because St. Louis officials would not give him a new stadium, but this was just one of the many tantrums he threw over the years.

Costs of terrorism high for Middle East

Los Angeles Times

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin concedes that Israel has no foolproof defense against suicide bombers. So long as there are those who are ready to accept self-destruction as the price for murdering others, an unavoidable threat will remain. Things can be done to reduce that threat, but its elimination can't realistically be promised or expected.

And so Israel must be prepared to face more atrocities like Sunday's bus-stop explosions near Netanya,

Viewpoint

Daily
Egyptian
Reporter

The Cardinals never have been a very successful franchise, having a 383-514 record since the organization was started in Chicago in 1920, and since the Cardinals moved to St. Louis in 1970, they have never won a playoff game.

The St. Louis faithful were more than patient with the Big Red and have had to put up with years of bad football decisions and whining from Bidwill.

That in itself gives St. Louis the right to have another team.

One example of how much the residents in this community want football is the way city officials went after Arena and Canadian football league teams.

When the NFL announced plans in 1993-94 to expand the league to 30 teams, St. Louis was considered a front-runner.

However, problems with stadium leases and owner confusion sent the expansion teams to Charlotte and Jacksonville.

Even though the expansion Stallions never came into being, the city was caught up in the enthusiasm of professional football and that carried over in the pursuit of the Rams.

St. Louis has already proven to be a sports town, as the baseball Cardinals and Blues always draw well. The city officials have also put their support behind the teams, including building two new stadiums for hockey and football.

The city shelled out mega amounts of money to lure an NFL team here, and now that the Rams have arrived, it's time for the community to show how much it wants the team.

The first way the residents of St. Louis can show their desire for a team is by meeting the 40,000 Personal Seat License quota needed to pay for the Rams moving expense.

The fans of St. Louis have lived without a football team for a long time and do not want to lose another team.

The Rams do not have to come in and be a Super Bowl contender right away — the fans will be patient as long as the football hierarchy tries to put a quality team on the field.

north of Tel Aviv. A furious and frustrated Israeli public knows that all too well. In such a climate, the natural response is to demand accountability. Rabin was in deep political trouble before the weekend massacre. A renewed sense of national vulnerability puts his future in greater jeopardy, and along with it the process that has already begun to transform the Middle East.

At issue, of course, is not only Rabin's political survival but Yasser Arafat's and the whole of the peace process. Islamic Jihad, Hamas and similar fringe groups violently reject the implicit premises on which the success of that process rests: the need for mutual territorial and political compromises. Israel's right wing similarly rejects these premises. If terrorism wins, then all that Israelis and Palestinians will again be able to look forward to is an era devoid of hope and filled only with greater tensions, hatred and increased bloodshed.

therefore USG will be voting on it." Musak works at the health service and is on the health advisory board.

Once USG and the Graduate and Professional Student Council votes on the fee increase, it will have to be approved by the SIU Board of Trustees.

Also, a resolution asking SIUC Student Trustee Mark Kochan to step aside is on the agenda.

Jemal Powell, senator from the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts, wrote the resolution which will ask Kochan to step down as student trustee. Last week, Kochan announced he will maintain his position despite taking an internship this semester in Chicago.

Student leaders expressed concern over Kochan's apparent decision to physically leave campus but remain the student representative on the Board of Trustees.

Kochan has said he will attend all board meetings, return to campus every couple of weeks and have access to his office's voice mail messages. Kochan has said that the internship is part of his master's degree in public administration and he took the opportunity because it was available.

Powell said Kochan could not represent SIUC students adequately while being more than six hours away from campus, but the resolution does not offer any plan of action for USG.

"I am concerned about someone running his office from voice mail," Powell said. "If he does step aside, USG and GPSC officials would have to figure out how to replace him."

"It is not political or personal — it (Kochan stepping aside) is the right thing to do," he said.

Musak said USG officials have been in contact with Kochan and the senators who she has talked to are concerned about Kochan's internship.

"With the few people I have spoken to, it is one of the hot topics," Musak said. "What they are saying is that it can't be done (representing students) if they were away from campus."

"This resolution will be a push,"

she said. "But it is hard to say what Mark is going to do."

John Shull, former USG senator, said he supports Kochan, and he thinks the students would get less representation if he would step aside.

"I believe he can serve as student trustee even though he will be in Chicago," Shull, who ran with Kochan on the same party during last year's student election, said. "He will still be in contact with the students."

Shull said he would be concerned about who would appoint the new trustee.

Besides the two items, three other items are on tonight's agenda.

The focus of one bill is to involve USG with the SIUC HIV Consortium, an organization that involves several campus groups to promote HIV awareness.

Another item is to nominate two persons to the SIU Chancellor Search Committee, and another is to place Toby Trimmer in the vacant CMMA senator's seat.

Kochan could not be reached for comment.

The meeting is at 7 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom B.

registering to vote in Illinois should be easy; no one should be turned away from the polls.

Illinois law currently allows for voter registration in county courthouses and city boards of elections, according to the State Board of Elections. Forms are available at drivers' license facilities, but they must be mailed in. Registration also can be conducted at home by precinct committeemen and deputy registrars.

Some Democratic supporters of the act say Republicans oppose the law because the people who would register under it tend to be Democratic voters.

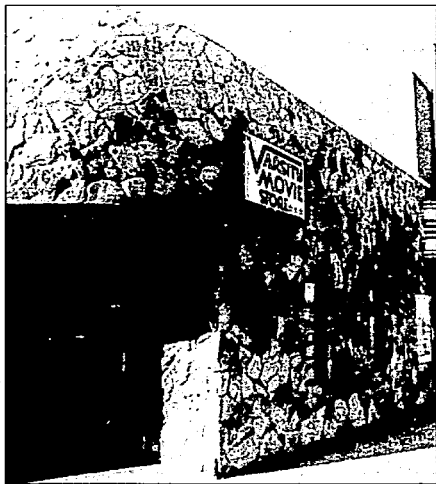

Susan Hall, voter registration drive coordinator for USG, said SIUC's student government supports any legislation that provides for easy access to registration.

Hall said the motor-voter law would register Illinoisians for federal elections, but they would still have to register for state and local elections.

"A lot of other states adjusted their laws with the motor-voter law, so people could register for federal, state and local elections (at one time)," she said.

Hall said the act would benefit students and the low income because it targeted drivers' license bureaus and social service offices.

"Illinois' registration rules are not conducive to the large voting population," she said. "I think the largest barrier to voter turnout is voter registration."

Quatroche said that within the next two weeks there will be appointments for a task force, Development Strategic Planning, which will set real goals and objectives for private fundraising.

The task force is expected to produce a report that will include priorities for the use of private money around May.

Tips to help manage anger

By Matt Denis
Student Health Programs

College life provides students with great opportunities to understand and experiment with new ways of living, to grow as future professionals, and to develop new relationships.

Along with these benefits, however, conflicting academic and personal demands can create a great deal of frustration and disappointment.

Anger is a normal emotional reaction to these frustrations, and when used effectively, can motivate you to initiate necessary changes in your life. Poorly managed anger, however, can be quite harmful.

When people are angry, their body prepares for action: muscles tense, the heart beats faster, and blood pressure rises. Dr. John Hatch and colleagues have demonstrated that ignoring and suppressing one's own anger may lead to tension-type headaches.

To Your Health

Other research has found relationships between anger and high blood pressure, anxiety and depression. In relationships, anger that is not expressed directly may take the form of criticizing, sarcasm and violence.

Pretending that your anger is not present does not make it go away.

Here are some tips for managing your own and others' anger.

- First, it is important to recognize and admit to yourself when you are angry. Try to identify the cause of your anger, which is not always obvious. For example, your anger may be a reaction to feeling hurt, embarrassed or afraid. As such, it can be quite helpful to identify and express the other feelings that underlie anger.

- Before expressing anger, it is important to calm down so that others will want to listen rather than fight or argue. This might involve first discussing the situation and your feelings with an objective friend or counselor or writing them down. Humor, exercise and relaxation can help create a positive attitude and reduce anger tension. When you choose to express anger, it is best to do so clearly and assertively, without blaming or insulting, and with openness to negotiation.

- When others are angry, real listening and consideration of their point of view can go a long way to reducing anger and to possibly resolving differences.

- Finally, avoid or leave situations in which anger is likely to lead you or others to violence. If your safety seems to be threatened, get help immediately.

For more information or assistance in managing anger and conflict, contact the Student Health Program's Wellness Center at 536-4441.

Clinton calls for 'citizenship'

State of Union address emphasizes partisanship

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—President Clinton, exhorting the new Republican Congress to put aside "partisanship, pettiness and pride," Tuesday called for a new effort to rekindle a public spirit of community and civic virtue, beginning with a federally led drive to curb teenage pregnancy.

Under the impassive gaze of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., Clinton told a joint session of Congress and a nationwide television audience he will dedicate the rest of his term in office to a theme revived from his 1992 campaign, a "new covenant" between the citizenry and their government.

In his State of the Union address, the president promised a less intrusive and more effective government, saying: "We cannot ask Americans to be better citizens if we are not better servants."

To meet that pledge, Clinton promised a thorough review of the entire federal bureaucracy and vowed to eliminate "over 100 programs we do not need ... like the Interstate Commerce Commission and the helium reserve."

On his first visit to the Capitol since Republicans seized control of Congress in the November elections, Clinton was greeted warmly by members of both parties. He offered his congratulations to the many new Republican members of the House and Senate and to Gingrich.

He said he had listened to the public's voice in the November elections and did not hear America singing, he heard it shouting for change.

"All of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, must say, 'We hear you,'" the president said.

And injecting a personal note, he acknowledged, "I have made my mistakes and have learned again the importance of humility in all human endeavor. But I am proud to say that our country is stronger than it was two years ago."

Unlike Clinton's two previous State of the Union addresses, there were few new legislative initiatives in the speech, in recognition of the new, hostile Republican majority in Congress and the public's skepticism about the effectiveness of government to solve the nation's problems.

Thus, much of the speech was given over to lofty language extolling the virtues of volunteerism, community service and family responsibility.

"We must repair the damaged bonds in our society and come together behind our common purpose," Clinton said, defining that purpose as nothing less than remaking "our economy, our government and ourselves."

While reaching out to Republicans, Clinton deliberately drew clear contrasts between his approach and theirs, saying there are things Americans still want their federal government to do, such as helping displaced workers, responding to natural disasters and protecting the environment.

He urged the GOP leadership to work with him to raise incomes for struggling American workers but stopped short of a firm proposal for an increase in the minimum wage.

On immigration, Clinton promised a vigorous effort to police the nation's borders and limit employment opportunities and public services for illegal immigrants.

He endorsed creation of a national computer registry to prevent employers from hiring illegal immigrants.

Clinton's purpose was clearly to restart his stalled presidency—and achieve some political leverage despite the Republican control of Congress—by returning to the themes that won him the White House in 1992.

The speech was, in effect, the launch of a two-year campaign to win back the hearts of the middle-class voters who supported him in 1992, then repudiated him in 1994, and who will decide the election of 1996.

His remarks included a relatively lengthy recitation of the administration's accomplishments, which aides said was included because polls have shown that most Americans are not aware of what Clinton has done in his two years in office.

White House aides took pains to point out that most of the themes Clinton highlighted in Tuesday's address—including the "new covenant"—were not new but were a reprise of positions he has consistently followed throughout his political career.

They heatedly dismissed suggestions that Clinton was trying to redefine himself, arguing instead that the president was merely turning again to the core beliefs that helped him win the presidency in 1992.

Indeed, they told reporters that Clinton began the process of writing the address by going back to the 1991 speech in which he announced his candidacy and introduced the idea of a new bond between the people and their elected leaders.

Much of Clinton's proposal for a campaign against teen-age pregnancy was drawn from his own welfare reform plan announced last June.

Clinton has cited teen pregnancy as a major problem ever since his campaign, when he called for "value-based sex education and health clinics in schools."

Last February, he lectured high school students in Washington's poor black Anacostia neighborhood on sexual responsibility, telling teen-age boys: "This is not a sport. It's a solemn responsibility."

Tollway

this road will go both ways," he said.

"Not only will Carbondale industry have access to St. Louis, but St. Louis residents will have better access to Carbondale; and our tourist industry."

Although not currently being considered, another possible benefit the tollway could provide is more direct access from Carbondale to Interstate Highway 57.

Doherty said it was likely SWIFT would connect the tollway with I-57, because the extra 15 miles were so important.

"In terms of travel time we get farther away from I-57 as the area develops, with the addition of traffic lights and business districts along Route 13," he said.

"Connection with I-57 is very important now both for safety and access."

Todd Hill, director of the study, said the biggest problem a rural tollway must face is lack of revenue.

"Not only is construction very expensive, but money also is needed to pay for operation of the toll stations, and maintenance of the road," he said.

Reitz said a related challenge for SWIFT will be the bonds sold to raise funds for construction of the tollway.

Revenue from the completed tollway may not be sufficient to pay back the 30-year bonds.

The team will also require a study of alternative revenue sources, including federal money or possible community participation.

Fees for state park users in question

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC forestry student believes that current state park funding is unfairly distributed, and that park users would be willing to pay an entrance fee to keep them open.

Michael Beezhold, a graduate student in forestry from Salem, came to the conclusion while working on his master's thesis.

He believes that park users that buy hunting and fishing licenses pay more than those who use the parks for activities like hiking and swimming.

"Those people who are consumptive users of parks (hunters and fishermen) pay for the majority through their fishing and hunting fees," Beezhold said. "If you're going to continue to charge hunters and fishermen more money, they will probably, in the long run, decline in using the parks as much."

Beezhold proposes to distribute the cost more evenly among all users.

"There's got to be a way to charge these people (non-consumptive users)," he said. "In essence, they should have to pay something."

All Illinois residents fund state parks through their taxes. Additional funding is received through concession taxes, licenses and a percentage of federal money that is generated through national park fees and rationed off to states based on park usage.

Beezhold said one of the biggest problems with funding state parks is recent cutbacks in federal money without implementation of extra taxes. He said seven parks were temporarily closed a couple of years ago for lack of funding, and several programs were cut. Beezhold collected data from about 400 Jackson County residents, the majority of whom said they would be willing to pay an entrance fee on top of current camping fees. He said surveying Jackson County alone is enough to lead him to believe that other, more affluent Illinois residents also would agree to the fee.

If the fee is instituted, some parks that have many entrances may not be able to collect as much as those with only one or two access roads. Crab Orchard Wildlife Refuge, a federal preserve in Williamson County, works on an honor system; park users are supposed to pay at the main entrance. Beezhold said this needs to be looked at closer.

"It (the honor system) doesn't work very well," he said. "I know people who use Crab Orchard without paying."

Another possibility is the installation of gates or booths at the parks. Beezhold said the state would need to spend money to determine how much money it could make off of raising fees.

"In the short run, it would probably be several million dollars," he said. "They would have to do a benefit cost analysis to make sure that they're able to raise enough revenue to cover the cost of raising fees."

Beezhold said he believes that if fees were raised, park usage would decline at first, only to increase after time.

He has spoken about his proposal with the Illinois Department of Conservation in Springfield, which has expressed interest in his findings.

Overseas curricula available

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students wishing to expand their knowledge of other cultures may feel restricted within the boundaries of SIUC; however, the Study Abroad Program extends those boundaries to far greater lengths.

The SAP is geared toward sending students overseas to study in such places as Bregenz, Austria, or Nakajo, Japan, provided the students who apply meet the academic requirements.

Tom Saville, coordinator for the SAP, said these programs offer students the chance to expand their knowledge of other cultures, regardless of their major.

"What we try to do here at SAP is help to correct the trade balance between our American and International students," Saville said. "We provide our American students, no matter what college they are in, the opportunity to learn more about other cultures."

"We have students in basically every college, such as business, journalism, engineering, life sciences and liberal arts," he said.

Requirements vary

Saville said meeting the requirements for studying abroad may involve several different aspects, depending on what the student is interested in.

"Requirements vary with the program involved," he said. "For Austria and Japan we ask for a 2.75 grade point average; however, we also look at a student's adaptability and maturity as well," he said.

Even though a certain G.P.A. may be required, Saville said a foreign language is not always needed.

"Our major programs in Bregenz and Nakajo, for example, are suitable for any student and do not require a foreign language background," he said.

'Phenomenal activity'

David M. Sharpe, professor of geography at SIUC, taught weather for one semester at Nakajo and speaks highly of his experience.

"It is a phenomenal activity for any student and an enjoyable opportunity for a student in any major," Sharpe said.

Sharpe said even though Nakajo is a small community, his stay was an enjoyable experience.

"Nakajo was great and I enjoyed it very much," he said. "Although Nakajo is a small city, it is fairly easy to get transportation to a larger city such as Niigata," he said.

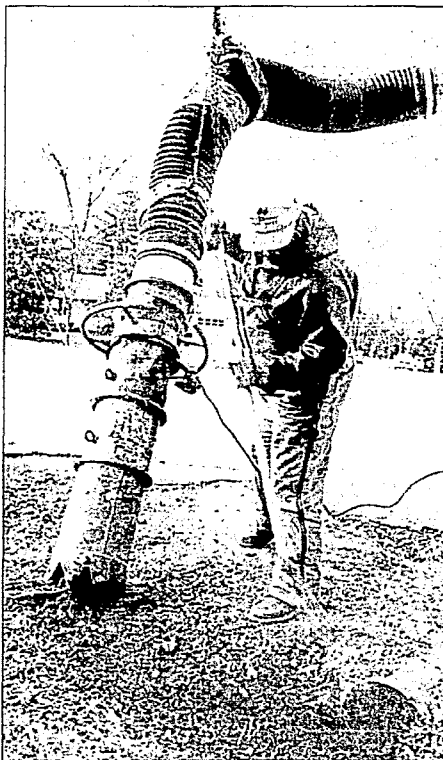

Susan Kemner, academic advisor for SAP, said living overseas offers students the chance to broaden their knowledge, not only in terms of academics.

"I recommend anyone who has the opportunity to live overseas to do so," Kemner said. "It teaches you how to perceive things, not so much as what you perceive in a different culture."

Seminars offered

SAP will hold several information seminars starting this afternoon at 3 p.m. in the University Museum Auditorium in Faner Hall. SAP will also have a representative in the humanities lounge in Faner 2302 every Wednesday afternoon from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. until the end of the semester.

For further information, students can contact the SAP office at 453-7670.

New anti-drug ads set

Newsday

NEW YORK—Having previously compared the brains of drug addicts to fried eggs in their television spots, the Partnership for a Drug Free America Monday launched a new advertising campaign to convince teen-agers that smoking marijuana was neither healthy nor "cool."

"A growing number of teen-agers see marijuana as no big deal," said

James Burke, chairman of the private group whose members' companies have sponsored numerous anti-drug television campaigns. "That attitude is gaining momentum and driving this problem."

At the launch of the television spots, federal drug czar Lee Brown, former New York City police commissioner, cited a University of Michigan study last month that showed that 31 percent of high school seniors had smoked pot.

Overturning car Halloween gets Philips fine, probation

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIU student pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of criminal damage to property Jan. 19 in connection with his role in overturning a car last Halloween.

Marlon Phillips, a senior in marketing from Dolton, was ordered to pay $1000 in restitution to the owner of the vehicle overturned and put on a year's probation.

Phillips was originally charged with mob action and criminal damage to property. Both charges were originally class 4 felonies, but the mob action charge was dropped and criminal damage to property was reduced to a misdemeanor in exchange for his plea of guilty.

Phillips has until his next court appearance, which is scheduled for March 30, to pay the restitution. If he fails to do so, additional penalties may be levied against him, according to Jackson County State's Attorney Mark Wepsiec.

"He would have to come to court on the 30th and explain why he hasn't paid it," he said. "It is possible he could go to jail. The judge may also give him more time to pay the restitution."

The other SIU student charged with mob action in connection with the cars overturned Halloween, Anthony Rudis III, an undecided freshman from Lockport, pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of mob action earlier this month. He was fined $250 and received 1 year of probation by the court. Rudis was also put on 1 year of probation by the University.

Treatment

One of the hardest parts of quitting a habit is the temptation.

"If you're around a lot of partying people, it's sometimes hard to change that whole lifestyle," Fijolek said. "It helps to get a fresh start."

In addition to helping people with addictive behaviors, the alcohol and drug education program helps those close to addicts.

"It's also open to people who know somebody who does (have a problem), because it's real tough on the people around the drinker sometimes," Fijolek said.

Last week, the Food and Drug Administration approved naltrexone, the first drug sanctioned to combat alcoholism in 50 years.

"If you're around a lot of partying people, it's sometimes hard to change that whole lifestyle."

*Barb Fijolek
alcohol, drug educator, Health Services*

Naltrexone was originally used to block the euphoria felt after using heroin and other narcotics. It was recently found to curb the craving for alcohol and has been used in combination with other treatments.

Dr. Yasoda Modali, a psychiatrist with Health Services, said she may prescribe naltrexone in the future.

"I'm not going to prescribe naltrexone unless the person has been sober for some time," she said.

"Naltrexone is not the first choice for the student for me."

Naltrexone cannot be used alone to fight alcoholism, partially because of the amount of temptation on college campuses.

"We have to use a combination of treatment, education, group therapy and individual therapy," Modali said.

Modali is unsure if naltrexone will be covered under student health insurance.

Norville

starting a new job and leaving behind a lot of friends all in a matter of three weeks in three months is stressful," she said.

Norville, like most seniors, has had to deal with course conflicts and putting friends and social activities on the back burner to study during her final semester at SIUC.

"My main priority has been to get good grades so I would be able to get a good job," she said. "Sure I've had to study a lot, but I've always been able to keep really good grades and an active social life, but it has been less active in the past year."

When not studying, Norville spends time with her Sigma Kappa sorority sisters, Beta Alpha Psi accounting fraternity members, and Golden Key National Honor Society friends.

"It's sad to say, but I've gotten more involved with my studies, my sorority involvement has lessened," she said. "It's harder to spend time everywhere with everyone."

Graduation woes aside, Norville is eager about the job that lies ahead of her.

"I don't have too many ties here, so I am excited about traveling," she said.

But before she jets off, Norville is charting an evening with her parents, friends, and her friends' parents after the graduation ceremony.

"We all plan to go out to Fred's and get crazy," she said.

Seniors

If all requirements are fulfilled, students planning to participate in graduation ceremonies must fill out a cap and gown application in the University Bookstore in the Student Center by April 1.

Richele Vogt, a student worker in the bookstore, said it is important to fill out applications early because the non-disposable rental caps and gowns must be ordered.

There are 12 colors of tassels for the various colleges within the University, and a different price for each of three gowns.

Associate's and bachelor's gowns are $13, master's gowns are $29 and doctoral attire is $31.

Lee Blankenship, manager of 710 Bookstore, 710 S. Illinois Ave., said he is negotiating to sell disposable caps and gowns from Jostens.

Graduation announcements may be ordered from C.B. Announcements any time during the semester, but a representative from the company will be at the University Bookstore Feb. 13-17 to take orders.

Announcements come in various packages starting at $44, or may be purchased individually. Packages include announcements, thank you notes and University seals.

Payment at the time the order is placed is required and cannot be applied to a student's bursar bill.

Although seniors are bombarded with paperwork to get through school, they should not forget what lurks beyond graduation — the job market.

Jim Scates, director of University Career Services, said if seniors have not registered with the service, they need to do so as soon as possible.

"Students don't realize the job market is just like a sports season; employers hire in cycles and different majors have different cycles," he said. "It takes about nine months, on the average, to find an individual a job, so they better start looking now."

University Career Services offers students reports about employment recruiting trends for 1995, resume writing workshops and mock interviews.

hotline is available for $16 and the hotline and mailing service that sends resumes to prospective employers is $26. These one-time fees are kept active in the SIUC files six months after a student's graduation.

Scates said he and the service's counselors provide job search strategy ideas to registered and non-registered students.

"There are job opportunities out there for 80 to 90 percent of the students, but they're not advertised in the newspapers," he said.

"Most positions are put in journals and on electronic hotlines and that's a way employers get good employers.

"The average student does not look in the journals and hotlines, but the good students will," Scates said.

Before seniors graduate they will receive information from SIUC's alumni association regarding membership and special discounts on health and life insurance.

Kim Morgan, an alumni association employee, said an annual fee of $30 gives alumni various discounts: for on-campus events, hotels, restaurants and car rentals; a subscription to the alumni magazine and a universal SIUC Visa card.

such high-profile lawyers gives the impression of having much to prove.

Kevin Green, a second year law student said, "A group of great minds should be used in order to prove his innocence."

Green also said that placing Simpson in front of the jury is humanizing him and illustrating that he is not a monster.

Students feel that the abusive past and the dramatic 911 phone calls made by Nicole Brown Simpson will strengthen the prosecutor's case.

Mark Krzaczyński, a first year law student from Gurnee, said that "Prosecutors will portray the case as a typical domestic violence scenario and say that Simpson was a control freak who was prone to violence."

Schroeder said that this is the strongest part of the prosecutors case.

"The judge did the right thing in allowing the jury to hear the repeated incidents of domestic violence."

Rhonda Thompson, a second year law student from Plumfield, said being allowed to bring up incidents of domestic violence is a major victory for the prosecution.

Jim Cutchin, a second year law student, said the jury should be aware of the domestic violence but they should not be used to defame Simpson.

"It will have a prejudicial affect but not necessarily wrongly so," he said.

Green said that the 911 calls and domestic violence shows that Simpson is violent.

"But just because he is violent does not make him a murderer," he said.

Cutchin said that the defense must promote Simpson's super star image and downplay the negative image portrayed by prosecutors.

"The defense will probably try to portray him as the O. J. that everybody loves and try to diminish all evidence that the prosecution has," he said.

Green said the defense alleges that Los Angeles Police Detective Mark Fuhrman is racially prejudiced and that he planted the bloody glove on the grounds of Simpson's home.

Winnett said that the defense will try to make Los Angeles Police Detective Fuhrman look as bad as possible.

"I think that the defense thinks if they can make Detective Fuhrman look like a racist they might be able to get at least one juror on their side," he said.

The media also are a major factor in the Simpson case, Galanti said.

"The media are trying to get the best ratings they can, whatever it takes they will do it," he said.

Krzaczyński, first year law student from Gurnee said it is hard to believe that the jury will not be affected by the media.

"It is the most sensationalized case in history," he said.

Cutchin said there is a positive side to the extensive media coverage. He said though elements of the media are trying to defame Simpson, a lot of education is coming from the coverage concerning how the judicial system works.

Prosecution's case finally unveiled

After yet another setback, defense on center stage today

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—Ending months of anticipation, prosecutors in the O.J. Simpson murder trial finally revealed their case in public Tuesday, telling 12 jurors and millions of television viewers that the affable public face of the star athlete hid a controlling spouse who tried to dominate his wife and who killed her and a friend when he failed.

Prosecutors for the first time described the full panoply of physical evidence that they say links Simpson to the June 12 murders. DNA tests and other scientific analysis of blood, hair and fibers, the government lawyers said, show a trail of blood running from the crime scene to Simpson's car and back to his home two miles away.

Simpson is charged with the murders of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Lyle Goldman. He has pleaded not guilty, and his lawyers had asked Superior Court Judge Lance A. Ito to let Simpson proclaim his innocence to the jury as part of their opening statement. As legal experts predicted, Ito denied that request Tuesday, though he did rule that Simpson can show the jury scars that his lawyers maintain prove he could not have carried out the killings.

The prosecution opening statements were televised across the country, but no sooner had the government lawyers delivered their remarks than Ito threatened to end the trial's television coverage.

Court TV, which is responsible for the pool coverage of the trial, allowed a brief shot of an alternate juror to be broadcast in violation of a court order restricting dissemination of jurors' pictures. Although the network apologized for the mistake, Ito was outraged.

The television media "have demonstrated an inability to comply with the court's order," Ito said. "My inclination is to terminate all television coverage at this point."

Speaking directly to the press, Ito added, his voice heavy with anger and sarcasm: "Our friends in the news media, I thank you again. ... This is unbelievable."

Ito has previously threatened to discontinue the television coverage of the trial, and with the issue suddenly thrust to the forefront, he asked a lawyer representing the Los Angeles Times and other news organizations to meet with him Wednesday. He then he recessed the proceedings for the day.

That forced lead Simpson trial lawyer Johnnie L. Cochran Jr. to delay the delivery of his opening statement until Wednesday, a development that defense lawyers said was unfair to Simpson because it allowed jurors to hear from only one side Tuesday.

"We have seen today his right to a fair trial has been interrupted," said Robert L. Shapiro, one of Simpson's attorneys, who described the early halt of the proceedings as a violation of his client's rights to due process.

Without any defense statement to balance it, what the jurors and alternates got from the government team was a double-barrelled attack, combining allegations of domestic abuse with a host of blood, hair and fiber samples. Relatives of Simpson and the victims also were in the courtroom Tuesday, occasionally breaking down in tears when grisly photographs from the crime scene were displayed for the first time in open court.

DNA tests point to the blood of both victims in Simpson's car and indicate a mixture of their blood and Simpson's on a glove found at his home, prosecutors said. In addition, DNA tests identify Simpson as the source of five drops at the crime scene, they said. They also said that a drop of blood found on a sock recovered from Simpson's bedroom belonged to Nicole Simpson.

"That trail of blood ... is devastating proof of his guilt," Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark said, her voice trembling slightly as she neared the end of her remarks. "The results of the analysis of that blood confirms what the rest of the evidence will show, that on June the 12th, 1994, after a violent relationship in which the defendant beat her, humiliated her and controlled her, after he took her youth, her freedom and her self-respect, just as she tried to break free, Orenthal James Simpson took her very life in what amounted to his final and his ultimate act of control."

In contrast to her emotional conclusion—which Ito interrupted after defense attorneys complained that Clark was arguing her case rather than merely previewing the evidence—the veteran prosecutor spoke in flat tones as she listed the blood and hair samples connecting Simpson to the crime.

Deferred Apple Computer Loan offer expires February 17, 1995. No payment of interest or principal will be required for 90 days. (Some retailers may require a deposit to hold merchandise while loan is being approved.) Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to principal, and the principal amount, as so increased, will be subject to the repayment schedule. Monthly payments are an estimate based on the following information: For the Power Macintosh 6000/50 system shown here, a purchase price of $1,085.74, which includes 6.5% sales tax, including loan fees, the total loan amount is $1,200.63, which results in a monthly payment obligation of $32. For the Power Macintosh 7100/66 CD system shown here, a purchase price of $4,045.94, which includes 6.5% sales tax, including loan fees, the total loan amount is $4,280.42, which results in a monthly payment obligation of $110. Computer system price, loan amounts and sales taxes may vary. See your authorized Apple Computer Retailer or representative for current system prices, loan and tax amounts. Loans are for a maximum of $10,000 to a maximum of $10,000. This may take out more than one loan, but the total of all loans cannot exceed $10,000 annually. 1.55% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.33%. For the month of November, 1994, the interest rate was 10.83% with an Annual Percentage Rate of 12.20%. Apple loan terms with no prepayment penalty. The monthly payment and the Annual Percentage Rate shown assume the 90-day deferral of principal and interest described above and no other deferral of principal or interest. Students may defer principal payments up to 4 years, or until graduation. Deferral will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval. Apple Computer Loan and 90-Day Deferred Payment Plan offers are available only to qualifying students, faculty and staff. # Feds bust nine in Centralia-based cocaine ring

Daily Egyptian Reporter

Indictments were suppressed until all apprehended

Nine Centralia-area residents and one former Centralia resident were arraigned between Jan. 12 and Jan. 18 on an indictment charging them with federal narcotics conspiracy and narcotics-distribution charges.

The indictment was originally handed down by a federal grand jury sitting in East St. Louis on December 21, 1994 and was sealed until the last defendant was arraigned, which allowed investigators to locate all the defendants.

Charged are Larry McKinney, 39; Andreko D. Hoskins, 22; Debra M. Burner, 39; Dionnis Marie Crisp Pankey, 29; Doug Laws, 34; Donnie Wilson, 25; and John D. Bowlby, 23. Other defendants include Patricia Joann Miller, 28, of Odlin, and Anita L. Cook, 33, of Sandoval, communities near Centralia. Former Centralia resident Andrea V. Wynn, 29, now of St. Paul, Minn., was also indicted.

Investigator Alan Rose, who headed the 18-month-long probe, said most of the defendants are accused of selling several packages of cocaine ranging in size from 1 gram to 5 grams, but singled out one defendant as the ringleader.

"McKinney was the main participant," he said. "He is responsible for bringing the cocaine into Centralia."

According to Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Garrison, a total of about eight pounds of cocaine was involved in the conspiracy.

Eight of the defendants posted bond and were released but McKinney and Hoskins, both on probation for felony cocaine offenses at the time of their arrests, were detained without bond until trial.

If all the defendants elect to go to trial they will be tried as a group, but Garrison said some defendants may opt for a plea bargain.

"Everyone always pleads not guilty at their first appearance," he said. "We are already having advanced plea discussions with several members of the group."

The trial is set for March 6 in East St. Louis with U.S. District Judge Paul E. Riley presiding.

Weaver among top editorial writers

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Dean Weaver

Daily Egyptian on June 21, 1994.

Weaver said he was fed up with the city council's attempt to curb underage drinking. "I wanted the city council to see that the only way to stop underage drinking in the local bars was to raise the entry age," he said. Every city in the state with a public university has raised or is considering raising its bar-entry age to 21, Weaver said.

The in-depth research on both sides of the issue that Weaver provided was vital information that helped the editorial board take a stand on the issue, according to Lloyd Goodman, DE's faculty managing editor.

Weaver has worked on the DE since Fall 1993, reporting city news and politics and editing the commentary page. He is currently the DE's special assignment reporter.

Before coming to SIUC he attended Lake Land College in Mattoon, where he was co-editor and photographer for the campus newspaper, Lighthouse.

Weaver is the most recent recipient of the Hearst award at SIUC. Brian Gross placed ninth place in the editorial competition in January 1994. John Rezanaka placed eighth in December 1993 in the sports-writing competition.

According to DE records, other recent SIUC winners of the Hearst award include Joe Littrell and John C. Patterson. Both finished in 13th place in 1993. Paul Pabst was in 12th place in early 1991.

Students eligible for the Journalism Awards Program include undergraduates majoring in journalism and mass communication. Participation is limited to schools accredited by the Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications (ACEJMC).

to get one for Jerry Rice, too." Plummer didn't laugh at his own joke. Too tired, he said, from pinching himself the last few days. "How many times have I played Rocky running on my treadmill, envisioning myself as the guy nobody believed in, now with the opportunity to be the heavyweight champion of the world?" Twelve players on his Mission San Jose (Calif.) High School football team earned college scholarships, but not Plummer. Two years at Ohlone College, a community college in Fremont, Calif., and then the school dropped football. Two more walk-on seasons as starting nose tackle for the University of California. "When they moved me from linebacker to nose tackle, I cried," he said. "I thought I could only try so much." Three years of trying to pay the bills with the Oakland Invaders. Eight years and 792 tackles in anonymity for the San Diego Chargers. And all along destiny had Jan. 29, 1995, pegged as Plummer's reward for standing nudged in shoulder pads. "How ironic," Plummer said. "My old team versus my new team; I guess I was meant to play in this game." "No matter how it works out, though, I feel more appreciated here. This is an organization that cares about its players. Coach Bobby Ross cares in San Diego; he cried when I told him I was going to San Francisco. But the owner in San Diego didn't care. He didn't even know my name." "I got on an elevator once with Billy Ray Smith, and (team owner) Alex Spanos gets on and says hi to Billy Ray and has no idea who I am. I had surgery on Tuesday and played on Sunday for that man, and he didn't know my name. I really don't want to be negative because the only negative aspect in my experience down there was the lack of respect I got from ownership. "And that's changed now because (son) Dean Spanos is running the ballclub instead of Alex Spanos. Oh my, what a coincidence: Dean Spanos starts running the ballclub and they get in the Super Bowl for the first time. If (Alex) Spanos had stayed in control, Bobby Beathard and Bobby Ross would have left and then you would have been talking about a Cincinnati or Tampa Bay and a perpetual losing organization. "People ask me about Alex Spanos this week and I'm going to tell them the truth: Dean Spanos has done a great job." Alex Spanos, who turned control of the Chargers over to Dean this year, said he had no recollection of snubbing Plummer in an elevator. "I respected that man," Spanos said. "When Bobby Beathard said we had to let him go, I said, 'Do you have to?' I always liked Gary. He wasn't a great player, but he was a leader and played his best.

Bettors

bets — are addicted to gambling. "The Super Bowl is to compulsive gamblers what New Year's Eve is to alcoholics," said Arnie Wexler, a one-time compulsive gambler and now a private consultant, after resigning in October as executive director of the New Jersey's Council on Compulsive Gambling. It was in that job, manning the organization's 24-hour hot line—dial 1-800-GAMBLER—where he heard a man tell him about dropping $21,000 on Super Bowl bets. Super Bowl XXIX, between the San Francisco 49ers and the San Diego Chargers, has piqued the interest of both the casual and professional gambler because of a particularly lopsided matchup. The NFC champion 49ers are considered such a superior team that the Chargers are deemed 19-point underdogs by the bookmakers in Las Vegas.

are, according to Michael "Roxy" Roxborough of Las Vegas Sports Consultants, "predominantly male (more than 90 percent), age 25 to 44, have some university education and (are) most likely to have a professional, or white-collar, job with a median income of about $45,000." He continued: "That means they're much younger and much more affluent than the typical casino customer, and that's why they're prized so much." Legal betting on the Super Bowl has increased 150 percent since 1988, according to Roxborough. But Las Vegas is not the only outlet for those with an interest in Sunday's game.

The thirst of the majority of Americans will be quenched by a small head-to-head wager with a friend, co-worker or neighbor and/or by participating in an office pool. Most of those are based on a grid with 100 boxes, each of which matches up with a score of the game. The boxes cost as little as $1 each to buy, and a person betting that amount can win $25 by owning the box with the correct score at the end of each quarter of the game.

Such pools are as illegal as bets placed through a neighborhood bookie, who generally offers customers the same odds posted in Vegas.

Law enforcement officials said sports betting remains one of organized crime's most profitable activities, although the amount of money wagered is incalculable. As Justice Department spokesman John Russell put it, "Organized crime doesn't allow us to look at their books."

But the conservative rule of thumb, according to legal bookmakers in Nevada, is that illegal sports betting—and that doesn't include office pools—is 50 times that of the legal betting in Nevada.

Nevertheless, enforcing laws against sports betting is not a high priority in area jurisdictions and there is no attention paid to office pools. "I've been a prosecutor here 28 years and I've never seen a case of (prosecuting the organizers or bettors in an office pool) here," said Robert F. Horan Jr., Commonwealth's Attorney for Fairfax County, Va. That's partly because gambling has become more socially acceptable as more state governments approve lotteries, casinos, riverboat gambling and horse-racing tracks as alternatives to raising taxes, according to Wexler, an expert on compulsive gambling.

Even federal law enforcement officials have stopped pursuing numbers runners and small-time bookmakers, according to the Justice Department's Russell. He said the FBI now focuses on police corruption, organized crime, federal tax avoidance by legal establishments and attempts to fix the outcome of games. But organized crime's grip on illegal sports betting has not diminished, according to FBI spokesman Bill Carter.

"Illegal gambling is a traditional crime that is operated by organized crime," he said. "As far as a money-making activity, it's one of their most profitable activities."

And, even though the figure is mind-boggling, the estimate for the amount of money bet with illegal bookmakers Sunday may be low, Roxborough said.

"For the Super Bowl, it may be 75 to 100 times (the Nevada total) because there are some events that capture the public's fancy and some that do not," he said. "For a July baseball game between the Phillies and the Padres, it might only be 20 to 30 times, because you'll only get the hard-core bettors."

Man devises innovative versions of baseball to entertain crowds

By John Eisenberg
The Baltimore Sun

Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos is wise to want no part of the other baseball owners' hare-brained plan to use replacement players.

It is not going to work.

Oh, maybe a few fans would be curious and desperate enough to come watch a collection of has-beens and never-weres play games that mean absolutely nothing. But it would be a grim, relentless exercise, a joyless mediocrity that would succeed only as a nightly reminder of what the fans are missing.

A headache would be preferable. Of course, if the owners had any cunning at all, they wouldn't try to trick the fans with a subpar product posing as the real deal. There's no fun in that. And, of course, a little bit of fun is just what the Great Baseball Strike needs about now. Unless Don Fehr's droll wit still cracks you up.

If the owners are hellbent on offering an entertaining product that would succeed in scratching everyone's baseball itch, they should try something fresh, something different, something novel.

Some suggestions: —A League of Their Own. That's right, women's fast-pitch softball, just like in the Geena Davis/Tom Hanks movie of a few years ago. The Orioles against the Yankettes at Camden Yards. The youths would be a publicity department's dream, the games even better. There are plenty of women out there who can play. It would beat the return of Oil

Can Boyd by a mile.

—Tons of Fun Softball. Play the thing strictly for laughs. Establish a weight minimum, say, 250 pounds. Put together teams of jiggling guys who can't see their feet, give them major-league uniforms two sizes too small and let them go wild playing slow-pitch softball under the lights at Camden Yards. Put coolers on the field. Run big-man specials. (Every time someone hits a homer or busts a waist seam, beer and nachos are half-price for the next five minutes.) Televisé the post-game clubhouse feed bag on the JumboTron. (Jurassic Park come to life.) The place would sell out.

columnist for

—Management Ball. In a real strike, companies often try to continue to function with management types filling in for employees. In baseball, this would lead to an Old-Timers meet Max Patkin sort of thing. Fans would enjoy seeing Frank Robinson, Elrod Hendricks, Al Bumbry and Mike Flanagan play. Frank could add to his career home run total. And, of course, Angelos would demand to play third base, replacing his favorite

Oriole, Leo Gomez. Pam Shriver and Jim McKay could come off the bench in a pinch. Admit it, you'd pay to watch George Steinbrenner pitch to Angelos. (Chin music? Oh, yeah.)

—Townie Ball. Many major leaguers don't live in the city in which they play. Few Orioles actually care about representing Baltimore. But a team of local amateurs, culled from a series of tryout camps and trumpeted as a "real" Baltimore team, would strike just the right chord. Anyone who didn't drink National Boh, vacation at Ocean City or call it "Droodlepark" would be ineligible. Now there's a team that would be worth caring about. (And maybe we could slip in a ringer or two, someone like Kevin Hickey, or maybe even Jim Palmer wearing a fake beard. No one would know.)

—Glitter Ball. Every city has celebrities of which it is enormously proud, but which ones can take an outside pitch and hit to right? Now there's a question for inquiring minds. Here in Baltimore we could field a team composed of, among others, John Waters, Anne Tyler, Barry Levinson, Bess Armstrong, Edgar Allan Poe Jr. (close enough), Jim McKay and Pam Shriver (yes, them again) and, of course, Peter Angelos, who is on television more than Oprah these days. (No, Chicago gets her.) We'd get our rears kicked, particularly by the L.A. teams, but I'd pay to watch John Waters throw a knuckleball.

—Jock Ball. As the Michael Jordan phenomenon proves, people are more than willing to pay to watch stars from other sports play baseball, no matter how poorly they play it.

KBSI: 'Satellite difficulties' hurt MVC cause

Something new seems to be popping up every day in the world of sports lately—so it's time for all to know where I stand on some of these issues.

What's your frequency?: The Monday night Saluki men's basketball game at Evansville, which was the KBSI Missouri Valley Conference game of the week, turned out to be nothing more than another example the local Fox affiliates inability to cover a live sporting event.

As if fumbling numerous NFL broadcasts last fall wasn't enough, KBSI had (surprise, surprise) "satellite difficulties" at UE which "Copped" out the Dawgs game for the first 13 minutes.

The MVC keeps insisting that it's ready to become one of the premiere basketball conferences in the nation, but the league better find a reliable way to showcase its talent before it does any more bragging.

Here's a helpful hint for KBSI. There happens to be a university

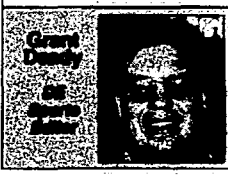

(I won't mention any names) with in its immediate viewing area that boasts one of the top mass communication programs in the country. I'll bet this would be a great place to recruit some young talent that might help get things on track.

Don't Dawg him: Anyone who is down on Saluki forward Chris Carr for his recent shooting slump is going to end up eating their words. Just because the kid hasn't gone out and poured in 30 or more (like he's done three times this season) lately is no reason to worry.

The only people who should be worrying is Drake, who visits the Arena Thursday night. I've got a feeling the Bulldogs are going to become Carr's springboard back into the Valley scoring title race.

More predictions: Evansville won't beat SIUC again this season as long as the Dawgs find a way to stop Andy Elkins, who poured in 27 Monday night. Elkins is all the Aces have and that includes former local hero Reed Jackson, a native of Norris City.

From the Pressbox

Jackson is a solid player (I wish he would have signed with SIUC), but he's not going to beat you like Elkins can.

Congratulations: Back on Jan. 2 something unique happened in Carbondale.

The Saluki women's basketball team knocked off Southwest Missouri State, 74-60.

Big deal, right? Wrong.

SIUC had beat SIUC 10 consecutive times going into the Jan. 2 game.

This Saluki triumph didn't get near the publicity it deserved, so hats off once again to head coach Cindy Scott and her players for finally getting the Lady Bears off their back.

Have you seen him?: Saluki diver Rob Siracusano seems to set a record every time he climbs the ladder lately.

Iowa visits the Rec Center pool Feb. 4 for a dual meet with the Dawgs. Take advantage of Siracusano's last home meet. I hear the tickets for Atlanta in 1996 are expensive and tough to get.

Let there be light: Rumors are beaming all over campus that McAndrew Stadium is going to turn the lights back on for Saluki football next fall.

Wait a minute. McAndrew already has lights?

That's right, but the lamps all need to be replaced — among other things.

Just to be sure this was no rumor, I talked to the big guy Tuesday afternoon (SIUC Athletic Director Jim Hart), and he said the wheels are in motion to make night games a reality.

"Don't get too excited," Hart said. "I'd like to say it's going to happen, but we've tried to do this before and it didn't happen. It is a possibility. We're investigating the cost."

SIUC hasn't played under the moon since Tampa nipped the Dawgs, 25-23, Oct. 20, 1973.

What next?: As you might imagine, first-year Saluki head coach Shawn Watson is the driving force behind the lights project. If the coach pulls this one off, it will be his second miracle since taking over the job in December of 1993. Watson's first miracle was making SIUC second among Gateway Conference schools in attendance while fielding a 1-10 team.

Bottoms up: No details just yet on how night games would effect tailgating...we'll keep you informed.

Intramurals get 'long-distance' support

By David Vingren
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Donations will keep rolling in for SIUC's intramural sports program, thanks to student participation that is one of the best in the nation.

For the second straight semester, the SIUC intramurals program will receive thousands of dollars in contributions from 1-800-COLLECT, which has selected 75 schools nationwide to donate sporting equipment and T-shirts to, in exchange for advertising.

"We selected schools with the highest participation rate and they (SIUC) were one of the top 200 in the nation," David Lund, coordinator of the 1-800-COLLECT sponsorship program, said.

SIUC was chosen partly because its large enrollment leaves potential for even more participation.

"We like to sponsor schools with a lot of students so there is more possibility for participation and our name goes out to more students," Lund said.

SIUC's intramural sports will receive free T-shirts, basketball jerseys, a $6,000 voucher for sports equipment, and thousands of dollars in 1-800-COLLECT coupons.

Even though student participation is already high, the main objective for participating in the program from SIUC's perspective is to make its intramural sports system even greater.

"We want to increase participation in sports," Matt Blakey, SIUC intramural sports coordinator, said.

"This (program) is just for the students. We want to get them more involved."

In return, 1-800-COLLECT will receive free advertising by exposing its name on the donated T-shirts and posting booths and posters throughout campus.

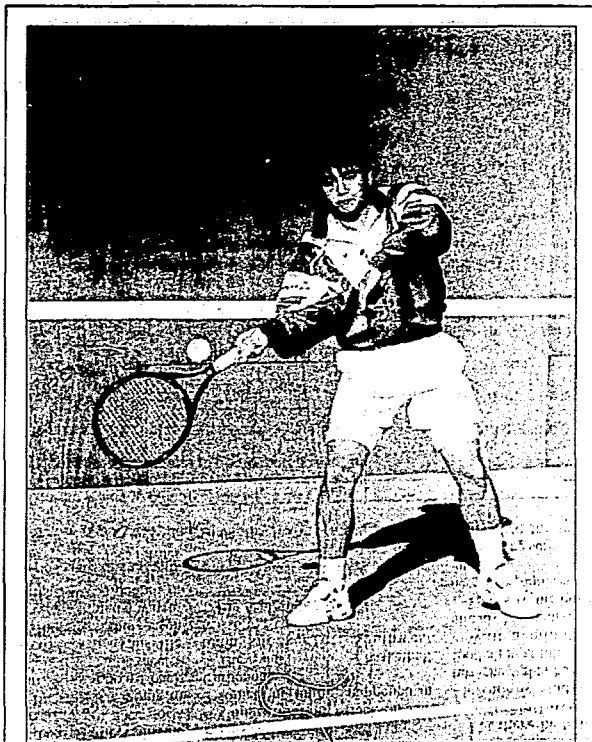

"We just want to increase participation in the program and we want to develop a relationship between 1-800-COLLECT and the students so 1-800-COLLECT gets exposure," Lund said.

Equipment and T-shirts will go to intramural softball, basketball, wrestling, and volleyball.

Lund said a plus to the program is that it entails men's and women's sports equally.

"We want everybody to be interested, not just the men," Lund said.

SIUC's intramural program relies heavily on sponsorship for funding, which makes 1-800-COLLECT a vital player in the survival of recreational sports.

Plummer: 'I guess I was meant to play in this game'

The Washington Post

MIAMI—He couldn't get a college scholarship, was bypassed in the NFL draft and when the U.S. Football League folded he was suddenly unemployed.

"When I was trying to get in college, George Seifert was an assistant at Stanford and he wrote me these wonderful letters, telling me how he wanted to give me a scholarship. And then he came to see me, and he said, 'You're Gary Plummer?' And he just laughed.

time I lifted a weight or every time I ran. It's so motivating to have somebody tell you you can't do something. I remember him saying to me, 'Son, you're too small. You can't play in the Pac-10.'

Sunday, linebacker Gary Plummer will play in Super Bowl XXIX for Seifert and the San Francisco 49ers.

"Got my own podium on Picture Day," Plummer said. "They tell me they have special interview arrangements for Steve Young, Deion Sanders and myself. I told them they might want

Bettors play own games on Super Sunday

The Washington Post

Companies that advertise on the Super Bowl telecast this Sunday will pay a record $1 million per 30 seconds. But that's a pittance compared to what gamblers will ante up on pro football's championship game in Miami. Not surprisingly, the sports event that draws the most viewers also draws the most bettors: According to Nevada gambling experts, by kickoff Sunday evening an estimated $2.75 billion overall will be wagered, with $54 million legally bet in Nevada, the rest through coun-less illegal outlets. In fact, it has been estimated that by game time one in every four Americans will have made some kind of wager—legal or illegal—on at least one Super Bowl.

"Whether it's an office pool or man-on-man or whatever, the Super Bowl is the largest sporting event in our country. It's almost un-American not to bet on it," said Vic Salerno, who operates a "sports book" or gambling outlet in Nevada, the only state in which betting on pro or college sports events is legal.

Some bettors will be satisfied to gamble as little as $1 on an office pool for a chance to win $25. Some professional bettors almost surely will make large, calculated bets at one of the 102 sports gambling operations in Nevada. Others—such as the fellow who said he won all his bets on the outcome of a mid-1980s Super Bowl but ended up losing $21,000 for the day on site
