Administration Ends Troubled Opinion Paper

Robert MacVicar, the new chancellor of the Carbondale campus, and Wilbur Moulton, dean of students, told members of Student Senate Saturday that they both have decided not to allow any further publication of the Senate's student opinion publication, KA.

The Senate members, including new student body president and vice-president, Sam Panasovitch and Pete Ronzelle, were present at the unofficial meeting of the Student Senate. No official action could be taken at the meeting because most of the members were present to form a quorum.

MacVicar told the student senators that he had reached his decision to terminate further publication of KA because he felt there had always been a problem with it, especially regarding the guidelines set up by the University. He also said the existence of KA and Daily Egyptian lease effective than it ought to be in expressing student opinion, and no new role played by KA would be better conducted by the Daily Egyptian in the future.

MacVicar did not go into detail about how the Daily Egyptian might fill the vacuum created by the absence of KA. He did say that increased student opinion and contributions in the Daily Egyptian should not necessarily be limited to student letters.

Speaking informally with the student senators, MacVicar said there were a variety of possibilities for making the Egyptian more of a voice for student opinion, including a student senate-appointed editor for the Daily Egyptian editorial page.

After the meeting, MacVicar answered several critical questions regarding the newly-increased activity fees.

Signatures Being Sought On Student Drivers Bill

A special committee created by new Student Body Vice President Pete Ronzelle is collecting signatures to support a bill which would allow SIU students to drive cars between their homes and school. The committee director, Leo (Buch) Dracol, said the bill will be voted on by the Illinois legislature Wed tesday. He said that 500 signatures have been collected and they will be sent to the House before a vote is taken.

Sponsor of the bill is Gale Williams (R-Murphysboro). He said that if the bill is defeated, he will resubmit it next January. The bill, which has been brought to the floor as an "emergency measure," requires a two-thirds majority for passage.

If reintroduced next January at the beginning of the regular session, only a simple majority would be needed for passage.

The student committee said it is also urging students to start a letter writing campaign to their state senators in support of the measure.

The bill requires approval of both the House and Senate, as well as the signature of Governor Shapiro.

Fortas to Face Senate Hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) - Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas is slated to go before the Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday and is expected to face some rough cross-examination on his judicial philosophy as the panel considers his appointment as chief justice.

The hearing is likely to underscore the mixed party lines that have shaped up since President Johnson announced selection of Fortas to succeed Chief Justice Earl Warren and appointment of U.S. Circuit Judge Homer Thornberry to fill the court vacancy.

The party picture was further confused Monday when a Republican Senate leader endorsed the appointments while a Democratic Senate lieutenant said he will oppose confirmation of Fortas.

"In my opinion, both men are eminently qualified," Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, R-Calif., said. The assistant minority leader thus lined up beside his party's No. 1 Senate official, Sen. Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois, who is actively supporting the nominations.

Newsmen interviewed after Kuchel's position after Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia, secretary of the Senate Demoocratic Conference, said he is opposed to Fortas' elevation to chief justice.

Byrd, whose post puts him in the No. 3 spot in the party leadership, declined to elaborate.

Byrd thus joined the Democrats' No. 2 Senate official, Sen. Russell B. Long of Louisiana, the party whip, in opposition to Johnson's plane. And opposition within the Judiciary Committee is being spearheaded by Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., a North Carolina Democrat.

The stands of Byrd and Long left only one of the top three Senate Democratic officials, Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, supporting the President.

Sen. Milton R. Young of North Dakota, who holds the GOP leadership post that corresponds with Byrd's on the Democratic side, is among 19 Republican senators who signed a statement declaring they would vote against any Supreme Court nominations submitted by Johnson before he leaves office.

The statement, initialed by Sen. Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, said that the filling of court vacancies should be left to the next president.

4-Year School Aid Plan Gets Unanimous Approval

WASHINGTON (AP) - A $14-billion authorization to extend and expand federal aid to higher education over the next four years was approved by the Senate Monday, $3 to 0.

The House plans to act later this week on a much narrower version of the same program - $3.4 billion over the next two years. Extensive discussions will be needed to draft a bill acceptable to both chambers.

The federal aid goes to students, colleges and universities.

Under the measure approved by the Senate, existing programs would be extended and in some cases expanded at a total cost of $13.8 billion in the 1969 and three succeeding fiscal years,
A Question of Conscience

Vietnam Poses Morality Conflict for Draftees

By Brian Truscon
(Last of a Series)

Vietnam has posed a serious personal conflict for many, including those who do not oppose our military involvement there, they still foresee a time when the Vietnam conflict might be justified.

Humphrey, the only United States and Great Britain, out of 100 nations of what, have ever provided for conscien tious objection to the nation's armed forces and conscrip tion law in Great Britain at present, the U.S. is the only country that will allow men "conscientious ob tion" in the military.

According to the new draft law, the present basis for ob taining conscientious objection deferment (CO), is a "demonstrable physical or mental condition disqualifying for military, is for the registrant to prove to his board that he has had "religious training and beliefs" that make it impossible for him to continue to serve in any form.

This aspect has been frequently overlooked about the CO classification is that it places the burden of proof on the highpriority registrant with his draft board, whereas in the past the registrant was not required to prove his case at all. The use of this burden of proof has been a constant battle for those seeking COs.

According to a report prepared for the Quakers by their Peace Education Division, the new draft law gives a very high probability, they say, that no one will no longer receive a CO classification unless 1. He be an absolute pacifist, 2. He be a churchgoer, and 3. He be a "nondenomination" in traditional religious terms from church school onward.

One man who does not seem to fit the "traditional religious terms," especially towards the military, is Father John Young, the director of the Ecological Foundation and Chapel at SIU.

Father Young is a native of Minnesota and a graduate of the University of Minnesota. A graduate of the Episcopalian Theological Seminary and Union Theologi cal Seminary in New York, Father Young has since served several years in Harlem, Cleveland and Alaska.

At age 32 and slightly balding, Father Young is perhaps one of the new leaders of "radical" Christian priests. He believes strongly that the present narrow guidelines for conscientious objection are too narrow. He says there is a "present trend in anti-war thinking, especially among the young, leads from an absolute opposition to war in any form, to a more open minded 'I won't fight in this war.'"

Father Young said that the present CO provisions were "originally framed to accom date members of peace groups, conscientious objectors or the Quakers in order to keep them out of the war and the government. He noted that even those churches now insist that the CO restrictions are too unrealistic.

In light of the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal, Father Young said a CO deferment should be "reserved" to per tons who can not participate conscientiously in a particu lar war."

"I am considering here not simply a tactic of those re sisting the war in Vietnam, but a new style of standing up against war in general by opposing some wars."

Father Young's proposal is not a new one. Last month, the Lutheran Church in America, as its highest policy-making level, declared support for the selective CO position.

Father Young pointed out that even the anti-war movement is more a minority opinion in the Christian community. The Church is not to defend the Christian tradition on this point, but it is emphasizing the duty to support the Christian tradition, he said.

Father Young also suggested that perhaps within our present historical limitations, "conflict with the state in some form inevitable," Christian leaders should recognize this, but they must insist on a way to maintain their opposition to war in this movement.

State Bill Stalled

SPRINGFIELD, I.L. (AP)—A bill to require automobile drivers to pay personal property taxes in order to operate their car on Illinois highways was stalled in the Illinois House of Representatives Monday on a vote.

The vote was 6 to 6, recalling the German pas tor, Dr. Patrick Bohriesser, who led an assassination attempt on Adolf Hitler, Father Meyer said that "such actions are within the repertoire of Christian tactics."

"On the other hand," be continued, "according to this point of view, a person would also be free to refuse to lend his body, his activ ity for violence to support a military action that be deeded patently immoral. This would also assume that the burden of proof reased with the military authorities, instead of with the individual."

Father Meyer admitted that selective conscientious ob jection would make the task of our military administration "somewhat more difficult."

But he emphasized that this very incoherence to the mil itary was also a strong argument for the selective CO position. "Such a position," he said, "is a way of voting against what someone has called the total administration of our lives, of which mil itary conscription, taxes, po lice power, economic regu lation, and control of the mass media are all part."

Father Young asserted that the sheer efficiency of government in directing and channel ing our lives is 'frighten ings.'

He said the selective CO is one way of countering the omnipotence of the state by giving the individual the chance to say a real 'no!'"

Reform, Don't Just Punish

The American people are discovering that they have been caging criminals without the proper efforts to rehabilitate them. A Harris poll conducted early this year revealed that an increased number of Americans now believe that prisons should reform criminals, not merely punish them.

What is needed is a program of rehabilitation in our state and federal penal institutions that will help inmates gain self-respect. Studies by leading criminologists have shown that the morale of prisoners was never so high throughout the U.S. as during World War II when inmates produced almost $300 million in goods and foods for the war effort. After the war when the prisoners were left idle save for a few state and federal license-making and road building projects, morale was notably lower. Sociologists conclude that men who have lost their self-esteem needed some means to win back from the society which ostracized them.

To earn self-respect a man must often take pride in his work or, in the way he leads his personal life. In Houston, Texas, bankers, auto salesmen, and personnel experts teach the intricacies of getting loans, buying cars, and applying for jobs. Under this program only 13.9 per cent of the men ever return to crime, a drop of more than 20 per cent over a five year period.

There are many more examples of expert rehabilitation schemes which are successful. The good programs are numbered out by those that fail or which only penalize inmates without even attempting to help them. The American people must reform their penal institutions before they can properly reform the penal systems. Nick Harder

Purple People Promote Peace and Equality

By Arthur Hoppe

By the late 1960s civilization appeared doomed. Blacks rioted against Whites at home. Whites worried on Yellows in far-away lands.

At the very least, it seemed no one could understand, worldwide race war looked likely.

In a secret castle high in the Alps, far from the distant world, strong, Dr. Progley Franken­stein worked in his lonely laboratory, carrying forward the experiments begun in his family generations before.

With feverish haste and gleaming eyes, he transplanted hearts, livers, brains, kidneys and assorted chicken parts. At last, on a dark and stormy night as lightning played on the windows, he pulled a switch.

"My monster, my life's work," he cried triumphantly. "It lives!"

"Frankly," said Mrs. Franken­stein with a snort, "it doesn't look like much to me. First of all, it's got goofy purple skin. And it has impossible orange hair. And those hideous clothes. And that peculiar chicken part, and those wily eyes. And that stupid brain. And that slutty gait. And that acc­ quisitive mouth."

"Exactly," said Dr. Franken­stein. "Exquisitely, to be more precise."

"You've just brought the creature out the back door.

Thanks to mass production, Dr. Franken­stein produced no fewer than 7,632,597 of the creatures in record time, all of which he ushered out the back door. He named them all "Purple People" and shipped them to his laboratory and vanished.

The Purple People, as they came to be called, blankly settled in the nation's ghettos, driving out the Negroes, Orientals and Latins, who were then on the bottom of the social totem pole. Their impact cannot be underestimated.

Southerners repainted their signs saying, "Colored," to read, "Purple." Northerners voted for "neighborhood schools." And tourists said all Purple People looked alike, which they did.

Conservatives demanded that the Purple People "stand on their own two feet" and go back where they came from. Liberals made sure to invite one to every cocktail party, where it behaved abominably. And nobody's sister even gave thought to marrying one.

Help wanted signs said, "No Purple People Need Apply." Golf clubs are now sequestered in saferooms to restrict their membership to applicants of the "Caucasian, Negro and Oriental races." And comedians told Purple jokes, offending no one.

Mr. Garolian, coordinator of General Studies Biology, responding in the July 9th Daily Egyptian as to why grades were poor in introductory Biology GSA 2016, remarked that science and math were among the most difficult courses for college students across the nation. I find another commonality exists. They can all agonizingly dull— even when presented with the evangelistic zeal of those who have come to consider them essential to the intellectual development of all students. Grandiose amounts of nothing, poorly presented, may cause even greater apathy and dis­ interest among students.

Some students are simply hopeless, of course. Their foolish irreverence to science, they pre­ fer knowledge of their fellow man to the elevating mental excitement which is derived from the study of plants, animals, and numbers.

To voluntarily forego this pleasure in order to pursue such ignoble subjects as sociology, history, liter­ ature, art, music, and philosophy is, I concede, beyond rational com­ prehension.

Perhaps these helpless deviants can be mentally rehabilitated. Disc­ line and mind training may pro­ vide the key. Then, if we do our work properly, the well-educated student will clearly see the im­ portance of the study of protons over that of poverty, ultrasonic vibrations over ultimate commit­ ments, hormones over logic, citric acidity over social rights—short­ things over people.

Science and math are not so terribly difficult to learn. To some it is just difficult to acknowledge that they are terribly significant to them.

Robert Knewitz
University School
Ascent of the Scholar in Modern Society

The Academic Revolution, by Jennie Reisman, Doubleday, describes the higher education in America. The authors make sound reviews of the social stratification in higher education—in pricing, testing, motivation, and equality (for a new view). Chapter four is especially good in historical review of the role of the humanities in the establishment and support of colleges to the role and take-over of the national professions. The variances leading to each type of higher education is very interesting.

Other sections deal sociologically and historically and are beautiful with the public—private contradiction (the inevitable feminism—masculine—college education syndrome; the denominational views: Protestant, Catholic, and the Negroes in their colleges and others).

As for the community college (Junior College) movement, this is less well handled; and the "reform" of the graduate schools is not strong. By personal bias, however, this reviewer finds the few pages on the art of teaching—and especially the opening sentences as very crisp and clear. (It reads): "We already suggested that teaching is not a way of research. There is no guild which, once successful, leads to greater prestige and influence than mediocre teaching, nor do any of the professions that develop pedagogic skills in a graduate setting. Indeed, there is very little knowledge about which teaching strategies work with which students ... That makes the book worthwhile! Since a University which has not been looking at this specific factor in higher education, this section, coupled with a number of others, is well worth examination. How to get over the "hump" that these few words convey is well worth all of everyone's though; for a great many of the "problems" these sociologists suggest hinge on this matter.

But to the authors' main thesis, it is this: That we have all been all wrong in assuming that democratic has shaped our higher learning. No. It has been the growth and triumph of professionalism which has brought us to our present pinnacle—or verge of ruin! Who has led? Who leads? Who is to mark out the goals for higher education? The authors are convinced that a handful of well-established and well-endowed or structured institutions (with "top" graduate schools) dictate what happens in American education. Strong medicine.

Every reader will find something to his liking (or disliking) in this volume despite the authors' sociological gambit, position-taking generalizations, and "unscholarly" scholarship. How do you understand such items as "today's students are more concerned than yesterday's in proving their academic competence?" There are enough loaded and unloaded statements to provoke seminars on end—and that may be the best thing that can happen from wide reading of The Academic Revolution.

Finally, the reference section is excellent and the index for this large volume (580 pages) is adequate.

Gun Control Bill Prompts Varied Reactions in Minds of U.S. Citizen

By Al Manning

"It will hurt the good citizen and won't affect the criminal.

"It won't do any good."

"They are taxing us some more and the state can make more money."

"It will reduce violence in the long run."

These comments are typical of the reaction to gun control laws. Proposed national gun control measures deal mainly with the selling of certain types of firearms through the mail, while the Illinois law regulates persons as fire­arm owners.

The Illinois law went into effect July 1, but law enforce­ment agencies have been asked to wait until Sept. 1 before enforcing it because of the large number of applica­tion and slow processing in Spring­field. The registrant's iden­tification card, which costs $5 for a five-year period, must be presented to buy a firearm or ammunition. Eimer Johnson, assistant director of the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Correction, believes the law will change public attitude and in the long run will re­duce violence.

He says that murder situations arise out of conflict. A person will have more time to quell his anger if a gun is not readily available. Johnson says registration is an emotional process and that many of the false fears will be eliminated as the public becomes more educated con­cerning the law. He com­pared the problem to that of fluoridation a few years ago.

Jack Hazel, Carbondale chief of police, and Tom Leff­fer, SIU Security Officer, said the new law will not greatly affect their offices.

"The only possibility is that if a man is picked up with a gun and doesn't have a permit, it will give us some­thing to charge him with," said Hazel.

Lef­fer cited a similar exam­ple of how it will help the police. SIU has a housing regulation that requires all gun owners to register their guns with the resident coun­selors of the respective living areas. Lef­fer sees no change in this policy.

Hazel said that two per­sons have turned in their guns to the police station as a re­sult of Sen. Robert Kennedy's assas­sination. "One man brought in a shot­gun and asked us to destroy it, which we did, and another man brought in a .22 (rifle). He just wanted to get rid of it; so we will probably use it with our other guns," said Hazel.

One local store owner said his ammunition sales have risen to a point where some ammunition is hard to buy. He thinks many persons who keep a gun around the house for protection but do not plan to register it are stock­piling ammunition.

Another store owner said he has not received any in­formation from the state on new procedures concerning the law.

Both said the law will not solve any problems.

Obviously the law is not popular among firearm owners. As one store owner said, "The gun owners are against this law by about 100 to one."

SIU Handball Blossoms as Conditioner

By Dave Palermo

The small, hard rubber ball bounded off the cement wall with the speed of a rocket. One of the two skimpily-clad students raced over and, using his hand, batted the ball back with the same force as his opponent. That's handball.

Handball has been played in the U.S. for almost 70 years, but at SIU the sport is just beginning to blossom as a campus activity. Numerous students play daily on the cement courts east of the Arena.

The handball sect is a rare one indeed. Those who indulge in the sport are usually trying to get in condition, stay in condition or just play for the sheer enjoyment of competition.

Handball can be played by the young as well as the aging thus it is a good carry-over sport to contain that ever-enlarging middle-age growth around the midsection.

Richard Karakis, a senior majoring in advertising from Cicero, Ill., has been an avid handball player for two years. "I played often back at the YMCA in Cicero," said the gangly enthusiast. "It's a game they don't have indoor courts at Southern like they do back home so the students could play year-round."

The facilities at Southern consists of four one-wall courts, four three-wall courts and four four-wall courts of outdoor.

You usually have to wait for a half hour because the courts are being used," he contends. "Because of the heat, most of the students play either early in the morning or in the evening."

Four-walled handball, to say the least, is more demanding. Four wall courts, are similar to a dungeon with 20-foot walls surrounding the players. One who excels at this form of handball must master the art of determining which way the ball will angle off one of the four walls.

The game can be played by two, three or four persons and is won by the side first scoring 21 points.

A match is won by the side first winning two games. The official handball rules state that in national, state and district tournament the losers in the semi-finals must play for third place. Only one hand, at any one time, may be used in striking the ball. The use of the foot or any portion of the body, excepting one hand, to return the ball is barred and is a point for the opposing team or opponent.

Only the serving team can score points and in attempting to return the ball, it cannot be struck more than once. After the ball is served, the receiving side returns the ball by striking it either on the fly or on the first bounce so that it will strike the front wall either directly or after having struck one or both of the side walls or ceiling.

New Craze

Handball, a sport that has been played in the U.S. for almost 70 years, is finally catching on among students at Southern. Among the numerous enthusiasts who occupy the courts daily is freshman Jack Lebovitz (right) who serves the ball.
