Search for victims of quake continues

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — Rescuers using spotlights and generators worked into the early morning Wednesday to free hundreds of victims trapped by a major earthquake that killed at least 302 people, officials said.

Rescue efforts were concentrated on the devastated towns of Cabanatuan and Baguio, where about 750 people were reported trapped in a half-dozen toppled hotels and factories.

Television news reports showed the hotels crumbled like accordions, including the luxurious Hyatt Terraces and the Nevada Hotels.

"There are cries of children and voices of people in these hotels," said Rudy Roxas, a rescue coordinator in Baguio told a Manila radio station. "We can't say how many there are but the rescuers were trying to reach them."

Officials said the earthquake, which hit at 4:26 p.m. Monday, measured 7.7 on the open-ended Richter Scale and was centered at Cabanatuan, 60 miles north of Manila. It was the most powerful tremor to strike the Philippines in 14 years.

Aided by U.S.-supplied lights and generators, rescuers worked throughout Tuesday night and into Wednesday morning, battling rain and time to rescue the hundreds of people still trapped in the rubble.

U.S. military helicopters airlifted 25 victims, including four Americans, for treatment in a hospital at Clark Air Base, Air Force spokesman Lt. Col. Ron Rand said.

U.S. Ambassador to the Philippines Nicholas Platt said three officials of the U.S. Agency For International Development trapped at the Nevada Hotel while attending a seminar had been rescued. He said a fourth U.S. aid official died in the hotel but his name was not immediately released.

The Military Civil Defense said the quake had killed 302 people

Marion man accuses city of misuse of TIF subsidies

By Jerianne Kimmel
Staff Writer

A Marion businessman, who was previously turned down as a recipient of tax increment financing benefits, accused the city of improperly using TIF subsidies to finance the proposed Illinois Centre Mall in opening testimony Tuesday at the Williamson County Courthouse.

J.D. Castellano, operator of Marion's Westmore Plaza shopping center on Route 13, says he was discriminated against when the plaza was denied TIF benefits last year.

He contends that the Broeking Property, which is on Route 13 west of Marion where Marion proposes to build the mall, does not qualify for TIF because it is not a blighted area, it is not consistent with Marion's comprehensive city plan and it could be developed without public subsidies.

"I felt I was discriminated against," Castellano said. "I felt that giving subsidies to foreign developers to subsidize their businesses and the mechanism used to subsidize TIF was not fair to me."

Marion's defense argues that the area is blighted because of flooding problems and the presence of deteriorating structures adjacent to the property, such as a failed motorcycle shop, a dilapidated bridge that straddles the property, culverts and a strip mine.

"The blight is there," defense attorney Michael Conway said. "If the factors are there, it's there... to qualify the Illinois Centre TIF on the Broeking Property."

Castellano said the Illinois Centre TIF is in direct conflict with the city's comprehensive plan, which is to protect Marion's downtown plaza on the square.

"Our city fathers have put together a comprehensive plan to preserve our downtown business district," he said. "Mayor Butler has strayed from these wishes. Marion has always been a retail area downtown in which we have pride. Carbondale's downtown, with the mall, is not the same."

The city's defense says this suit is a "Trojan horse" for the lawsuit Carbondale officials filed late last year. The suit was dismissed in pre-trial hearings in February.

"The University Mall doesn't want the Illinois Centre to be built," Conway said. "But the issue here is whether or not (the property) qualifies for TIF."

Crime bill could provide educational assistance

By Christen Cortasco
Staff Writer

A provision included in the new crime bill, which recently passed in the U.S. Senate, will reportedly set up a police corps act that will provide educational assistance to persons interested in law enforcement, a Senate staffer said.

If passed by the U.S. House of Representatives and approved by President Bush, the act will provide for educational scholarships for people interested in law enforcement as well as provide additional training to persons already serving on the police force.

Approximately $430 million will be authorized for the police corps act, with $30 million going to an existing training program for those currently in a local or state police service, the staffer said.

Under one stipulation of the act, individuals interested in law enforcement have to make a commitment to serve in a state or local force for a minimum of four years. This would go into effect in fall 1991.

The scholarship payment may not exceed $10,000 for an academic year and those who fail to complete the four years with the police force must repay the scholarship with a 10 percent interest charge added to it.

If the four years are completed the payment works as an academic scholarship, which requires no payback, the staffer said.

Dennis Anderson, director of the administration of justice department at SIUC said with the rising tuition rate, it will definitely help the students.

"With today's lack of federal support and tuition rising, anytime students can get financial support, it will be beneficial. It will also help recruit and get people into the field," he said.

"If (the act) would encourage people to get started in the field as a practitioner," he said.

Gus Bode

Gus says it would be a crime not to take advantage of this possible law enforcement scholarship.

Germany agrees on Polish border

PARIS (UPI) — Foreign ministers of the two Germans and the four World War II Allies agreed Tuesday that Germany would sign a treaty guaranteeing Poland's western border as soon as unification was completed.

Any non-border issues between Poland and Germany would be resolved in a separate pact between the two countries, apart from the auspices of the two-plus-four talks on German unity, which included the Polish foreign minister for the first time on Tuesday.

In addition, East and West Germany agreed to meet with Poland later this summer to discuss Poland's economic problems, but no details were given on possible aid the Germans might offer.

High level delegations from the countries involved are in Paris to work out the unification of East and West Germany, divided since the end of the war. The major sticking point of the union was removed Monday when Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev agreed that a united Germany could choose to belong to the NATO western military alliance.

The Poles initially sought a signed border treaty before the four wartime allies relinquished their rights in Germany, but accepted the compromise accord which amounted to what diplomats termed a "solemn promise" that Poland would not be double-crossed on the border issue after unification.

"The question of the confirmation of the border that has been decided is entirely satisfactory," Polish Foreign Minister Krzysztof Skubiszewski said after Tuesday's meeting.

In fact, Poland lost bargaining power on Monday when Gorbachev said a united Germany could be a member of NATO with no restraints on its sovereignty, thus ruling out residual rights for the four wartime allies.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said a border treaty with Poland would be achieved "in the shortest possible time after unification."

Illinois opens first trade office in Poland

WARSAW (UPI) — Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson, accompanied by a 100-member delegation, Tuesday opened the first U.S. state trade office in Poland, a move seen as a sign of growing confidence in the economic changes of the government of Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki.

"I don't think I ever dreamed, as a resident of the Polish people of Chicago, on Daley Plaza celebrating Polish Constitution Day ... that I would ever be standing in Warsaw opening an Illinois trade office," Thompson said at a ribbon-cutting ceremony for the center, located just off one of Warsaw's most fashionable shopping streets.

More than 800,000 Poles live in the Chicago area, making Illinois the home of the largest Polish population outside Warsaw.

"We interpret that Illinois' presence will assist in creating a framework for Polish businesses wishing to export to the U.S.," Thompson said. "This office can provide assistance to small- and medium-sized Polish businesses by helping them learn the basics of foreign trade."

The governor said the idea of opening Illinois' 10th overseas trade office was discussed last year during the visits to Chicago by Mazowiecki and Solidarity leader

Lech Walesa.

Since then, the further movement of Poland, toward a market economy, its political development and passage last week of a bill to privatize state-owned property, coupled with the strong cultural ties between Illinois and Poland, made opening a trade office a good business move now, Thompson said.

King retains rights to title defense

NEW YORK (UPI) — Attorneys for promoter Don King and heavyweight champion James "Buster" Douglas reached a settlement Tuesday that allows King to retain his rights to the fighter's first title defense.

"My rights have been restored," King said outside Judge Robert Sweet's courtroom at U.S. District Court where the settlement was announced. "Due process is a wonderful thing. I get my rights back."

The specific terms of the settlement were not released, but King said he would retain the rights to Douglas's first title defense, against Evander Holyfield on Sept. 21. However, he would sell those rights to The Mirage Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, Nev., where the fight will be held.

"King has to be paid for assigning his rights," said Robert Hirth, King's lawyer. He refused to disclose how much The Mirage would pay for the promotional rights.

"The Douglas-Holyfield fight will come off," King proclaimed. But when he was asked if he would promote it he said, "No."

When asked who would, King said tersely, "Mirage."

The agreement put to rest King's suit against Douglas and his manager John Johnson for breach of contract and against The Mirage for tortious interference of that pact.

Douglas has a suit pending against King for breach of contract. Also present at the announcement were John Sharer, the lawyer for The Mirage owner Steve Wynn, and Stan Hunterton, Douglas's lawyer.

The first word of a settlement came Sunday, when Douglas told his hometown's Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch an agreement had been reached calling for the champion to pay $7 million to King and Atlantic City, N.J., casino owner Donald Trump. In return, King would have no role in Douglas's scheduled Sept. 21 title defense against Holyfield at The Mirage.

If Douglas defeats Holyfield, King would promote a Douglas-Mike Tyson rematch at The Mirage.

Though the attorneys Tuesday would not disclose how much King would be paid to turn his rights over to The Mirage, the promoter said the figures reported Monday "were in the ballpark."

Douglas won the title with a stunning 10th-round knockout of Tyson Feb. 11 in Tokyo. He and King have been at odds ever since, with Douglas claiming King tried to reverse the outcome in Tokyo by charging the new champion unfairly received a long count when he was decked in the eighth round.

Despite an exclusive contract with King, Douglas signed a two-fight deal worth at least $50 million with Mirage owner Steve Wynn within days of his victory over Tyson.

The deal with Wynn was contingent on Douglas breaking his contract with King.

Climbing club challenges Southern Illinois landscape

By Tricia Lynch
Staff Writer

The Southern Illinois landscape provides rock climbers with enough sandstone to fill their climbing appetites.

"The environment provides the opportunity to climb and we climb because we enjoy it," Eric Ulnar, president of the climbing club said.

Ulnar has been climbing for 13 years.

The climbing club is not a guide service," Ulnar said. "New members climb with more experienced members on their initial climbs.

This summer's heat will make a climber's hands sweat and make the rock oily, so plenty of chalk must be used to prevent slipping, Ulnar said.

The club currently has 20 members who carpool to Shawnee National Forest every weekend to climb, Ulnar said. Members range in experience from beginner to expert and must provide their own equipment.

"It's like ballet on a vertical surface and it also keeps your body fat low," Ulnar said referring to the artistic and medical aspects of climbing.

The co-ed climbing club competes with other universities throughout the year as well as climbing for leisure.

The club meets at 7 p.m. every Thursday at the Recreation Center to discuss club related activities. The membership fee is $15.

For additional information concerning the climbing club, contact Eric Ulnar through the Adventure Resource Center at 453-1285.

Lyons not afraid to show it all for the crowd

By Richard L. Shook
UPI Sports Writer

Steve Lyons has done it again — put his backside out to the world, so to speak.

If you didn't catch it on the television sports highlights, don't worry about it. You will.

And if by chance you miss it there, we're sure "This Week In Baseball" will pick it up. Or the next tape of sports bloopers.

Steve Lyons dropping his drawers to shake the dirt from his pants in full view of 14,770 Tiger Stadium customers and the accompanying television audience has already become a classic comic moment.

The Chicago White Sox utility man had beat out a punt to start the fifth inning Monday night, sliding face-down into first to beat Detroit pitcher Dan Petry, taking the throw on the ploy.

While Petry argued, Lyons "kind of got caught up in the moment" and nonchalantly lowered his trousers to shake out the dirt that was sliding down them.

Now everybody will know baseball players wear jock straps and white underwear that comes down halfway down their thighs.

Hey, who knows? Maybe Lyons will replace Jim Palmer as the most famous underwear wearer. Or start a nationwide fashion trend.

The amusing incident certainly added to the Lyons legend. The 30-year-old gained a reputation as being slightly off-center when he came up with Boston in 1985. It is reputed to be one reason the Red Sox traded him to Chicago midway through the following season.

His nickname is "Psycho," which Lyons does not react violently to. In fact, he almost seems to encourage it.

Sometimes a vacant look will come over his face during interviews. Like he's disengaging his normal thought process to encourage something unusual to come out.

It happens during games, too, to the irritation of some baseball people but to the delight of fans.

It isn't mischievous or malicious. It may be a harmless, humorous way Lyons has developed of drawing attention to himself. As if his playing ability wasn't enough.

But Lyons' contributions to the Chicago White Sox aren't funny. In his own way, in his own role, Lyons is an extremely valuable member of the team.

Lyons is one of those guys who gets worse the more he plays. He's simply not talented enough to play every day. In fact, if he's playing every day for you, that means your team is bad.

But Lyons is far too good to bat just five times a week. He has value beyond his salary and statistics.

Where is this great value? In his versatility.

Lyons can play third, first, all the outfield positions and maybe a little middle infield or even pitch or catch in a pinch. He won't hurt you much, if at all, on defense and will get you a key hit every now and again.

Every manager wishes he had a player like that on his team. They seem to gravitate to good teams, however, because they are the ones who can utilize them in best fashion.

They're on bad teams, too, but on an everyday basis. So their statistics don't look good because they are miscast. They get labeled "bad" (or "Psycho") and eventually some general managers will sack them up for little or nothing.

Watch Chicago the next couple of months. If the White Sox hang in there, and indications are that they will, Lyons will be a key reason why.

Maxvill still trimming around the edges

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Seven candidates remain in the running for the managerial position of the St. Louis Cardinals, general manager Dal Maxvill said Tuesday.

Maxvill's original list had 18 names but he has trimmed the list to seven, but he would not reveal the names.

However, Maxvill did confirm he interviewed Philadelphia Phillies coach Hal Lanier Monday in Atlanta. One other major-league coach has been interviewed but Maxvill would not identify him.

Maxvill said his interview with Lanier "went well." Maxvill said Lanier was "very interested. He has Cardinal roots."

Lanier coached five years for the Cardinals under former manager Whitey Herzog in the early 1980s before leaving to manage the Houston Astros.

Still to be interviewed from Maxvill's original list are former manager Joe Torre, a broadcaster for the California Angels; Louisville manager Gaylen Pitts; minor-league hitting instructor Mike Jorgensen. Other possibilities include coaches Don Baylor of Milwaukee, Hal McRae of Montreal and Phil Garner of Houston.

Maxvill said he hoped to complete the process in the next week to 10 days.

Coach admits to double life as drug addict

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Cleveland State basketball coach Kevin Mackey said Tuesday his dependence on drugs and alcohol forced him to live a double life, portraying one image in front of family, players and friends in stark contrast with his other existence that led him to the city's drug houses.

Mackey, speaking to the media for the first time since his arrest Friday on drunken driving charges, said he had had a drinking problem for about the last five years and that alcohol had led him to cocaine, which used periodically for the last three years.

"I led two lives," Mackey said, flanked by attorney David Roth, his wife Kathy, son Brian, and brother Steven. "I was totally out of control. It started with alcohol and led to drugs. My wife is a saint. She lived with the devil.

"I've read in the past where people have called me street smart. I don't think there is anything as stupid or as sad as the life I've led."

Mackey was arrested Friday outside a suspected drug house on Cleveland's east side, where he spent five hours inside the building. A urinalysis revealed Mackey was legally intoxicated and also had cocaine in his system.

He pleaded innocent Monday to charges of driving under the influence of alcohol and possession of an open container of alcohol, although Roth said the innocent plea was routine procedure at an arraignment on those charges. There may be further charges filed based on evidence that Mackey had used cocaine, but a decision on that is not expected until the end of the week.

His pretrial hearing has been scheduled for July 25 in Cleveland Municipal Court in front of Judge Salvatore R. Calandra.

Soviet police clubs rioters to halt ethnic violence

MOSCOW (UPI) — Police clubbed rioters and fired warning shots to halt clashes that left at least 27 people injured in renewed ethnic violence between Kirghizians and Uzbeks in Soviet Central Asia, news reports said Tuesday. The official Tass news agency said additional police and soldiers were sent to Osh, a city of 209,000 people in western Kirghizia republic that was the site of violence last month. It said 160 residents had been arrested for violating a curfew imposed in the earlier unrest near the border of Uzbekistan republic.

Kunstler to join Mohawks in negotiations

MONTREAL (UPI) — Civil rights lawyer William Kunstler will join Mohawks trying to negotiate an end to a standoff with police that earlier claimed the life of a police officer. Kunstler, of New York City, was scheduled to arrive Tuesday in Montreal, a spokeswoman said. He was invited by the Mohawks to join their negotiating team. "He's identified with movements like this," the spokeswoman said. A Canadian Armed Forces spokesman, said administrative staff had been moved into the area in case the government orders army involvement in the situation.

Workers return to Empire State after blaze

NEW YORK (UPI) — It was business as usual Tuesday at the Empire State Building the day after a fire on the 51st floor that might have touched off a towering inferno if it were not for the skyscraper's sturdy construction. Capt. Charles Casper, one of the first firefighters to confront the blaze, credited the sturdy concrete composition of the 59-year-old landmark, built under a Depression-era fire code, with preventing severe damage and injuring any more than the 38 firefighters and civilians who were hurt.

Army investigates deserters arrested in Florida

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Army is conducting an espionage investigation of six soldiers who were arrested in Florida and found to be deserters from the same U.S. intelligence unit in West Germany, the Pentagon said Tuesday. "At this point the Army is doing a routine counterintelligence investigation. But they say their initial look is (that) it does not appear to be an espionage case," Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall said. The six soldiers, who were being held at Fort Benning, Ga., had access to top-secret material at their unit.

Florida bank to pay $18 million in settlement

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI) — Florida Federal Savings Bank agreed to pay more than $18 million to settle charges that it billed the Education Department for student loans it had never tried to collect, the Justice Department said. The settlement, finalized late Monday, calls for the thrift to pay $17.89 million in restitution to the federal government. It also calls for the thrift to correct the credit ratings of students whose loans were improperly labeled delinquent. The settlement also calls for Florida Federal to pay $150,000 to release most bank officers and employees

2-year-old takes dad's car for joyride in parking lot

MACOMB (UPI) — Two-year-old Tommy Crawford had an early driving lesson last week. Crawford was sitting inside his father's 1977 AMC Pacer in a service station parking lot last Thursday when his father went inside to return rented videotapes. His father, Robert Crawford, took the keys with him but Tommy unbuckled his car seat and reached down to release the emergency brake. The car started rolling and the 2-year-old was standing in the driver's seat, trying to drive. The car glided at about 5 mph before it hit a telephone booth. Robert Crawford said Tommy was not injured.

Will the real Paul Simon please stand up

By Rob Coné
Entertainment Editor

After his 1988 bid for the presidency, Paul Simon became known to Americans because of his signature bow-tie.

While no one has ever accused the Senator from Makanda of being America's best-looking politician, "Saturday Night Live's" Al Franken thinks differently.

Franken, who regularly spoofed Simon on the show, met with the Senator June 20 at his Washington, D.C., office.

David Carle, Simca's press secretary, said Franken showed up dressed in a suit, bow-tie and horn-rimmed glasses and proceeded to do an impromptu mirror imitation for the Senator and his staff.

From his low baritone, slow-paced, folksy voice to his thumb-pointing, clenched fist that pounds at the air to help emphasize his point, Carle said Franken had the Senator's mannerisms perfected.

He said before Franken's visit, the staff never realized how many times they've had that thumb pointed at them. "Now we notice it every time," he said.

Before Franken left, he presented Simon with a photo of himself dressed as the Illinois Senator. He autographed the letter with the inscription, "Paul, to the best-looking guy in politics."

Franken was in Washington June 19 to entertain guests, which included Simon, attending a Democratic Party fund raiser at the Kennedy Center where he portrayed the Senator.

Franken offered to play the role of the Senator again this fall to help with Simon's re-election campaign, Carle said.

"Nothing has been scheduled so far," he added, "(but) the Senator plans to take him up on it."

COBA lecturers give seminar in Europe

By Karen Radius
Staff Writer

Not all of Thomas Gutteridge's trip to Europe was a vacation. Gutteridge, dean of the College of Business and Administration, spent 21 days visiting France, Germany, Austria and England with his wife and daughter.

While in Lochau, Austria, Gutteridge was a guest lecturer at a seminar on competitive and strategic considerations in exporting to the U.S. market. The three-day seminar also hosted two other lecturers from SIU-C; Carol H. Anderson, associate marketing professor, and Ike Mather, finance professor.

The seminar acquainted the eight participants with U.S. business environment and systems and the lecturers spoke about their prospective fields.

They discussed distribution, promotional and pricing strategies, the U.S. banking and tax system, organizational leadership and managerial functions.

When involved in discussion with officials in Austria, the lecturers had an opportunity to discuss U.S. business and gain contacts for the University, Gutteridge said.

"They were exploring whether or not the company they worked for would want to expand their business into the United States," Gutteridge said.

"It's networking. You set up relationships, and over time, it leads to building the relationships," he said.

Diceman's gags don't overcome poor movie plot

Film Review

By Anne Ryman
Staff Writer

"The Adventures of Ford Fairlane" rolls the Dice but comes up with snake eyes in a movie full of gags but short of content.

Controversial comedian Andrew Dice Clay plays rock 'n' roll detective Ford Fairlane, the epitome of the egotistical macho male.

"I have my own number. 1-800-PERFECT," he says.

A failed rock 'n' roller himself, Fairlane tried being a roadie, a publicist and a bodyguard before becoming the ultra-cool super hero of the rock music world.

His profession, however, is becoming a problem. Rock stars give him gold records and koala bears instead of payment for his services. Milli Vanilli pays him in bicycle shorts and hair extensions.

Much of Clay's persona is evident in this movie—the trademark cigarettes and sexual anatomy gags. But persona cannot help a poor plot.

Priscilla Presley plays the icy Colleen Sutton in a stilted performance reminiscent of her superficial role in "The Naked Gun."

Wayne Newton plays Julian Grendel, the corrupt record tycoon. Robert Englund, best known as the sadistic Freddie of "Nightmare on Elm Street," plays a bisexual leather-clad villain with a high-pitched laugh.

Unlike Clay's stand-up comedy routines, where he blasts audiences with overconfidence, there is evidence that Ford has feelings of self-doubt.

In the end, he gets the girl and gets money but what Dice really needed to get was a script with a plot.

"The Adventures of Ford Fairlane" may satisfy die-hard Dice fans, but it doesn't top his cable television specials.

Forest Service must halt cutting practices

THE SHAWNEE NATIONAL FOREST clear cutting issue is pretty clear cut. The people of Southern Illinois don't want precious wilderness ecosystems destroyed.

The U.S. Forest Service was deservedly hit with a barrage of bad publicity last year when the public became aware that clear cutting practices were virtually destroying many virgin timber stands in the Shawnee National Forest.

Environmental groups in Southern Illinois were responsible for this wave of public information about how the timber industry was turning a nice profit off its exploitation—they prefer to call it harvesting—of our public forests.

CLEAR CUTTING, however, is no longer the issue. The Forest Service has (allegedly) abandoned this practice to try to improve its image, but the proposed sale of 25.7 acres of hardwood timber in Jackson County's Fairview district has environmentalists up in arms, and understandably so.

The U.S. Forest Service has thus far failed to sufficiently research the proposed "selective," or "group," cutting that is supposed to take place in the Fairview section of the Shawnee National Forest. In selective cutting, only certain types of trees are removed from a designated section of timber. For instance, only aged oak and hickory trees would be removed from the 25.7 acres up for sale in the Fairview area.

But what kind of effects will such cuts have on Shawnee's migratory song bird population or on the diversity of other species in that stand? The Forest Service has yet to be up front and provide satisfactory answers to these questions.

Two separate environmental groups have voiced protest to the proposed cutting. The Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists is taking the U.S. Forest Service to court over its mismanagement of the land and has sought a court injunction to keep any more trees from falling until a judge decides whether the timber sale is legal and meets federal regulations concerning the deforestation of public lands.

Another group, Earth First!, is practicing civil disobedience in defending the public land. Nearly 20 Earth First! environmentalists have established a campsite on a Fairview logging road and will keep their vigil, they say, until they are absolutely certain that this court injunction prohibiting any more illegal cutting will be upheld throughout the trial.

THE DAILY EGYPTIAN applauds the efforts of RACE, which is challenging the Forest Service at its own level and is going through the American court system at great personal expense to fight what it believes are crimes against nature. Sacrifices of a different kind are being made by the activists at Fairview campsite, with many of the participants taking valuable time out of their personal lives to protest the questionable cutting policies of the U.S. Forest Service in the Shawnee National Forest.

The U.S. Forest Service is well aware of the damage that's done to the delicate balance of a forest ecosystem—not to mention the repercussions of soil erosion and downstream pollution—when timber cutters invade a wilderness area. Yet instances of irresponsible cutting on our public lands continue.

Can't the world's thirst for lumber be quenched on privately owned tree farms without robbing our national forests of their treasures. We believe this is one solution.

When the issue boils down to economic benefits for logging companies versus the preservation of some of our country's last wilderness areas, there can be only one choice—save the Shawnee National Forest from deforestation.

Commentary

Welcome to the world's weird news

In our modern society, not much behavior is considered deviant or weird. Since the 1960s, when the cry went out to "do your own thing," people have been doing just that.

And it is reflected in the news. In earlier days, the Manhattan Dartman would have been known all over the country. There would have been headlines about his latest attack, interviews with his victims and cops vowing that it was just a matter of time until they nabbed him.

But outside of New York, the Dartman has been little more than a news squib. Even The New York Times has virtually ignored him, since he has not done anything politically or socially significant.

Since I began newspapering when it was still an uncouth craft, I still find oddballs like the Manhattan Dartman worth noting. I mean, you can't go through life pondering S&L swindles, the trade imbalance, deficit spending and NATO cuts, or eventually you find yourself saying: "Blahhhhh!"

For several weeks the Dartman has been roaming midtown Manhattan, armed with tiny little darts made from pins, and a straw through which to blow them at the hind ends of well-dressed women.

Before he was caught, he had scored direct hits on the bottoms of at least 55 women. I don't know if this qualifies the Dartman for the Guinness Book of World Records, but until someone claims otherwise, it sounds like a world mark to me.

The tiny darts did not inflict serious wounds and were not contaminated. And the pain, according to the victims, was not any greater than if they had been pinched or tweaked.

However, several of the women said they were "unnerved" by the experience. And many others who had not been darted said they had developed cricks in their necks from looking over their shoulders in fear that the Dartman would plink their rumps.

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

But the threat to female bottoms ended when the cops caught the Dartman the other day.

It would have been a livelier story if he were a Wall Street financier or a politician. As it turns out, there is something typically New Yorkish about him. He's a face in the crowd, a young mailroom clerk and messenger.

The police say he hasn't given them a motive for darting women's bottoms. Of course he hasn't. And he probably never will. People who commit dippy acts commit are dippy.

When I mentioned the Manhattan Dartman to a young co-worker, he said: "Boy, that's the weirdest guy I've ever heard of."

Which showed that he is not really a student of weird guys.

As strange as the Manhattan Dartman is, I rate his strangeness below that of the Toe Nail Man.

The Toe Nail Man was a Chicagoan who lurked about one of the university campus libraries.

Actually, he lurked under the library tables.

He would look for young women who sought comfort by kicking off their shoes as they read.

When he found one without stockings, he would paint her toenails. He had so deft a touch that he would sometimes paint all 10 toes without the young lady's knowledge.

Like the Dartman, when the Toe Nail Man was caught, he couldn't give a plausible explanation for his behavior. As I recall, he said something like: "A man's got to do what a man's got to do."

Nor had my young co-worker heard of the El Platform Flasher.

Flashers are not uncommon. But most show little imagination.

A few years ago, however, there was the Painted Jogger. At a distance, he looked like any other jogger in his shorts, T-shirt and sneakers.

However, when he drew near, shocked females saw that what appeared at a distance to be jogging shorts was nothing more than a light coating of vegetable dye.

Some cops rated him tops on the weird flasher scale. But I still give that ranking to the El Platform Flasher.

A middle-aged fellow, he would appear on the subway platform, neatly dressed in fedora, tweed topcoat, suit, tie, shiny shoes. He looked like the other commuters.

But he wouldn't board the train. And as it slowly pulled away, he would break into a big grin and throw open his topcoat.

The gawking passengers would see that the shirt was only a bib front. And his trouser legs covered only his shins.

By the time the police came, he had dashed to another platform. But from time to time, they would catch him. A shrink would ask him why he went to so much bother displaying himself to strangers. He would just smile and shrug.

As the song went in "South Pacific": "Who can explain it, who can tell you why? Fools give you reasons, wise men never try."

How true.

Marion Mayor Robert Butler said he agrees that this case is a front by competitors to block injury their businesses may receive from a new mall and has "no doubt whatsoever" that the area meets state guidelines.

As mandated by state law, TIF incentives may only be used for developments on land that is blighted, and exist to permit cities to redevelop blighted areas that are deteriorating and that would not come back economically without special tax incentives, such as TIF subsidies.

Prosecuting attorneys say the 1488-acre area near Interstate 57 is prime development property and commercial competition is not the issue. "We all believe in competition," prosecuting attorney Terry Grimm said. "Competitive injury is not the issue. What's good for Marion is good for Carbondale. We're all for the development of the area. (Illinois Centre developers) can develop how (they) want, but this statute can't be used."

Grimm said the land can be developed without public subsidies.

"The land would not only be developed, it is being developed whether or not TIF is invalidated," he said. "Just because it may not develop the way the developers dream, it will develop someday anyway."

Tom Forman, architect and city planner from Evanston, said the property has an "inherent value commercially" because of Marion's tendency toward westward growth and does not show signs of blight.

"In my review of (the property), I was not able to find how the focus of the area is characterized by blight," Forman said. "The property has size and quality, it's high, and has two access roads that are good connectors to Route 13. We're not going to see Marion growing to the south, north or east. This town has always looked to the west...Where do land developers (in Marion) look to—it's to the west."

Testimony will continue today in Marion.

Illinois' exports to Poland totaled $15.5 million in 1989, a 56.9 percent jump since 1987. Nearly 32 percent of those export sales involved machinery and related industrial products.

The opening of the trade office is part of a 13-day development mission to Potand, Hungary, the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom. Illinois also will open a trade office in Budapest and sign a sister-state agreement with the Russian Republic in the Soviet Union.

The governor also announced the signing of two agreements involving the establishment of a university exchange program and a three-month internship for a Polish national with First of America Bank of Springfield, Ill., which will offer first-hand experience in operating a customer service bank.

"With the opening of the trade office, the Illinois business people will have some assurance that there exists in Warsaw a place for them to go and a place for them to learn and get assistance," he said.

"Many companies in American have no real experience with matters of export and import, and in a time of a very crowded global economy they are looking for ways to increase their market share."

The opening was accompanied by a controversy over the appointment of Maciej Cybulski, a native of Poland who has lived in the United States since 1980, to head it.

The Solidarity newspaper Gazeta Wyborcza reported that a Polish-language newspaper in Chicago said Cybulski cheated hundreds of Poles employed in his office-cleaning company out of thousands of dollars but that most were afraid to sue because they were illegal workers on tourist visas.

The paper said a telephone campaign to the governor's office opposing the appointment got no results.

Thompson called Cybulski "a splendid representative of the state of Illinois."

Out of 1,500 joint ventures registered so far in Poland, less than 100 include U.S. partners. Thompson acknowledged that geography, and an initial concern about whether the new Solidarity government is really a change, probably kept U.S. businessmen back.

"When Walesa and Mazowiecki visited Illinois, there was some reluctance on the part of businessmen because they weren't quite convinced the old days were gone," he said.

and injured 672. The dead included 81 in Baguio, 54 in Dagupan City in Pangasinan, 26 in La Union Province, 122 in Nueva Ecija, one in Tarlac and 10 in metropolitan Manila.

The Red Cross said 19,183 people were homeless.

Baguio, 120 miles north of Manila, remains isolated because of landslides and downed communications and power lines. At least 70 aftershocks have been recorded, officials said.

President Corazon Aquino, accompanied by her 18-year-old daughter Kris, flew by helicopter to Cabanatuan City in Nueva Ecija Tuesday. She consoled relatives of the victims at a building near the toppled six-story Philippine Christian College, where crews were attempting to rescue some 100 people pinned inside.

Aquino later declared an emergency in five hard-hit towns to allow swift relief and rehabilitation operations.

Twenty mangled bodies had been recovered from amid the slabs of concrete and twisted steel in the school that folded like an accordion, officials said. Workers using chain saws, blow torches and flashlights rescued more than 100 students overnight.

In Washington, the Pentagon said it had received no reports of deaths or injuries among the 15,000 U.S. military personnel in the Philippines, including those at Camp John Hay near Baguio.

U.S. civilian rescue teams with search dogs were on their way to the Philippines to assist in rescue efforts, the Pentagon said.

U.S. Ambassador to the Philippines Nicholas Platt contacted Aquino and Philippine Defense Secretary Fidel Ramos and told them the United States has made an initial aid commitment of $25,000, said State Department spokesman Richard Boucher.

Philippine-based U.S. troops airlifted to Cabanatuan and Baguio helped in the rescue effort.

"Obviously, we can't clean up this mess in one day," said Lt. Lt. Kim Hawk, head of a team of 100 U.S. troops airlifted from the nearby Clark Air Base.

In Baguio, officials said 21 bodies taken from collapsed buildings were brought to the campus of St. Louis University, where weeping relatives tried to identify them.

Aside from the rescue effort at the hotels, workers also were trying to retrieve 31 people buried at the University of Baguio who are feared to be dead, workers said.

Cadets at the Philippine Military Academy led the rescue effort at the factories at the export zone, the armed forces spokesman said. Officials requested for medicine, painkillers and jackhammers and helicopters flew survivors from stricken buildings to the PMA parade grounds where tents were put up.

SIU-C grad named head officer of Oklahoma ROTC

By Brandi Tipps
Staff Writer

Lt. Col. Robert Aikman, a 1970 graduate of SIU-C, has been assigned to be the executive officer of the Naval ROTC Program at the University of Oklahoma.

Aikman is second in command and is the coordinator of staff and recruitment. Aikman is also an associate professor of naval science.

Aikman applied for the position after returning from Okinawa, Japan this year.

"I wanted to stay west of the Mississippi," Aikman said.

"Oklahoma is a fine institution and it has outstanding sports," he said. "I'm a sports fanatic."

The position that Aikman holds will last three years and then he will be re-located to another job.

He won't have to go overseas again for quite a while, since he just returned to the U.S., he said. Naval personnel can only be stationed overseas every six to eight years, he said.

Aikman loves the University of Oklahoma, he said.

"The campus here at Norman reminds me of SIU-C," Aikman said. "I have very fond memories of SIU."

The Naval ROTC program at the University of Oklahoma is one of 66 in the entire nation, Aikman said.

The program has four divisions intertwined with naval aid marine fields.

"There is a mixture of the two services so that the students can get the experience of the different fields and make a better decision as to what they would enjoy, Aikman said.

Aikman received his B.S.

degree in Education from SIU-C.

During the time he spent at SIU-C, he served as a Student Senator, Chairman of the Homecoming activities, and President of the Inter-Fraternity Council.

Aikman was commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps in 1970. He went on to Basic Artillery School at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

According to Arthur Aikman, Aikman's father and a professor of education, his son served as Regimental Operations Officer and Battery Commander at Camp Pendleton, California in 1978.

In 1981, he was promoted to major, according to Arthur Aikman.

Aikman was then promoted to lieutenant colonel in 1989 and served with the third Marine Expeditionary Force in Okinawa, Japan.

'Navy Seals' gets by with little military help

WASHINGTON SHNS — The heroes of the new movie "Navy Seals" are supposed to be the strongest, fastest, smartest, straightest-shooting sailors in the U.S. Navy.

So why doesn't the real U.S. Navy love this movie? And why do the "American" helicopters and ships seen in the film actually belong to the Spanish Navy?

The answer has to do with the delicate relationship between Hollywood producers and the image-conscious Pentagon, which has the power to say "Do it my way or do it on your own."

The producers of "Navy Seals" tried to enlist the Navy's help to make the action adventure movie, but the Navy brass rejected the script largely because one of the characters is a smart-mouthed, racist, reckless cowboy—not exactly how the admirals think of themselves.

In the past, the Navy had always rejected any scripts about the Seals, the elite special operations force that takes its come from sea, air and land. The way the Seals operate is highly classified, and the Navy didn't want to give away any secrets that would reduce their effectiveness or endanger them.

Also, "Navy Seals" is about a sensitive subject: The commandos are sent into the Middle East to rescue hostages and destroy anti-aircraft missiles held by terrorists.

"This is Rambo; we don't do Rambo," said a Navy official who reviews scripts.

Other films such as "Top Gun" and "Hunt for Red October" have gotten the Navy's full support, including the use of ships, subs, planes and sailors. The producers have to pay for any extra expense, but it's far easier and cheaper to have the Pentagon on your side.

The "Navy Seals" producers were turned down cold and went instead to Spain, which has a single aircraft carrier, eight submarines and a few helicopters.

So some shots of a U.S. aircraft carrier are actually of the Spanish carrier Principe de Asturias. The submarine and helicopters, painted with U.S. Navy markings, also are Spanish.

The producers still needed a dockside shot of the U.S. Navy base at Norfolk, Va., however, and agreed to make some minor changes in the script in exchange for the Navy's help.

Explaining why the Navy at first refused to help at all, Lt. Cmdr. Ron Morse of the Navy's Hollywood liaison office, said, "The script they sent us for review fell outside the guidelines for what we can cooperate with."

"Then they came back to us and said, 'We really need to do this in Norfolk.' We said, 'We've got this problem.' They said they'd look at it, and they did," Morse said.

The biggest offender was the character played by Charlie Sheen. "He wouldn't be a Navy officer for a nanosecond," Morse said.

Another Navy official said, "If you are gonna be a Seal, a professional Seal, a live Seal, you don't do crap like that. Would you follow a jerk like that into combat?"

The offending character is a true wild man, off duty and in combat, who gets "high" on killing. He also makes numerous derogatory comments about Arabs and disobeys orders with a tragic result.

Chuck Pfarrer, a former Navy Seal who wrote the movie, said it is "as realistic as it possibly could be without me going to jail."

He didn't want to make a "Rambo"-type movie, Pfarrer said. "I wanted to dispel psychotic baby killer image that everybody has of special operations guys."

Group charges advertisers with exploitation of youths

NEW YORK — A consumer advocacy group charged Tuesday that advertisers are increasingly exploiting unsuspecting children by subtly promoting products through clubs, celebrities and school programs.

Consumers Union said moviemakers often get into the marketing act too, prominently placing products like Camel cigarettes in scenes of "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," Marlboros in "Superman II" and the Dominos Pizza and Burger King fast-food chains in "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

"Kids are a hot market and everyone is cashing in on them," said Jean Kiefer, managing editor of Zillions, a children's version of Consumer Reports, two magazines published by Consumers Union, which released the results of its study of advertising directed at children.

Calling the new tactics deceptive and manipulative, the Consumers Union study said, "Advertisers are attuned to kids' developmental stages. ... At a time when kids need to learn how to consume thoughtfully, numerous promotional messages are teaching the opposite."

The Mount Vernon, N.Y., consumers group described a proliferation of campaigns that sell to American children using subtle and not-so-subtle tactics.

One company criticized in the study responded that it was not trying to influence children's behavior with its products.

Estimates of the spending power of children and teenagers vary, studies estimating the market targeting children worth $1 billion a week; Forbes magazine has said the market will grow to $60 billion this year, Consumers Union said.

Senate cuts debate on civil rights bill, Dole upset

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate opened the way Tuesday for passage of a major civil rights bill, provoking a violent outburst by Republicans who charged they were "treated like a bunch of bums."

The Senate voted 62-38 to impose cloture, which limits debate to 30 hours, after bitter argument over the bill, which would restore legal anti-discrimination safeguards for blacks, women and other minorities in the workplace.

All Democrats, except Sen. James Exon, D-Neb., and seven Republicans voted for cloture. Thirty-seven Republicans voted against.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole, furious with the Democrats for forcing a vote and equally furious with GOP senators for voting for cloture, berated the Senate.

With deep anger in his voice, Dole said, "I say let's get another leader on this side ... if we're going to throw away eight or nine votes, I don't want any part of it" and bitterly criticized GOP colleagues "who know better than the leadership."

"If we're going to shove it down the throats of the minority, things are going to get tough around here," Dole said to a spellbound Senate. "We're going to have a different Senate on this side of the aisle."

"To have this jammed down our throats ... it seems to me we're going to be in for a long, hot summer," Dole said. "If we're going to be treated like a bunch of bums, we're not going to have any time agreements, any agreements around here."

"This is a political game," Dole said. "Forget about the bill. Shove it down their (Republicans) throat. Make the president veto it, trying to put our party on record against civil rights on a cloture vote."

Dole also charged Democrats "renewed" on a deal with the White House, an accusation that Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., vigorously denied, saying "there never was an agreement" and there were "fundamental" differences that could not be overcome.

"I am convinced that the bill before use will lead to a veto,"

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., said. "We're going nowhere. The civil rights community has not won a victory. They have shot down the bill."

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell defended his actions in forcing the vote and added, despite Dole's threats, "I'll continue to do my best to act in a fair and equitable manner ... best calculated to accomplish the public's business."

The situation in the Senate posed a delicate problem for President Bush.

Hundreds of species of fish endangered by development

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Forty North American fishes have become extinct this century and hundreds more are endangered, including several species once so abundant they were commercially fished, new studies show.

The studies, published in the most recent issue of Fisheries, the Bulletin of the American Fisheries Society, update a 1979 survey that found 251 North American fishes have been pushed to the edge of oblivion by industrial and agricultural development that has polluted or drained streams and lakes.

The new studies name 364 fishes in North America that warrant protection, including 103 classified as "endangered," 114 as "threatened" and 147 classified as "special concern."

Authors of the study said that "endangered" fishes are those in danger of extinction throughout a significant portion of their ranges and "threatened" refers to fish likely to become endangered within the foreseeable future.

Fish of "special concern" are those that may become threatened or endangered by minor disturbances in their habitat or require additional information to determine their status.

Jack Williams, chairman of the American Fisheries Society's Endangered Species Committee and one of the authors of the studies, said acid rain, mining and irrigation—particularly desert farming—had taken the biggest toll in destroying vital habitats for many fish species.

Among the fish wiped out:

■ The thick tail chub, once one of the most common fishes in Central California, vanished during the last few decades as a result of intensive agricultural production that drained the slow-flowing stream beds and lakes that it preferred.

■ The blue pike, a popular sport and commercial fish, was found in teeming numbers in the Great Lakes in the early part of the century, only to die out in the late 1960s due to its inability to tolerate growing pollution.

Feds, fishers discuss turtle deaths

HOUSTON (UPI) — The deaths of at least 31 sea turtles since the re-opening of shrimp season have prompted federal officials to consider stricter shrimping regulations and the possible early closing of the season in the Gulf of Mexico.

Officials of the National Marine Fisheries Service and the Justice Department met shrimpers from Texas, Louisiana and Florida Tuesday to discuss how to increase compliance with federal laws requiring the use of controversial turtle excluder devices in trawl nets.

Scientists said they cannot determine whether the 31 turtles—all members of endangered or threatened species drowned in shrimpers nets. But Dr.

Ed Klima of the marine fisheries lab in Galveston said the shrimping industry is a "major factor" in the turtle deaths.

The turtles have been found washed up on Texas beaches since the shrimping season reopened. Dr. Andrew Kemmerer, southeast regional director of the marine fisheries service, said federal officials are considering closing certain areas of the gulf to shrimping or ending the shrimp season early.

"Those are some of the options we'll be considering," Kemmerer said. "We will be making some announcements later today on some of the actions we will be taking. They will be substantially more severe. At the same time, we're looking to the industry to take some of their own steps."

The meeting was called by the Texas Shrimp Association.

"The government is upset. Well, everyone is upset that there are 30 turtles stranded on the beach," said Lucy Gibbs, TSA executive director. "We've got an endangered species and we've got a problem."

Seventeen of the dead turtles were endangered Kemp's ridleys, nine of them adults, Klima said. The deaths have harmed efforts that have been under way for years to save the dwindling species in the Gulf of Mexico, he said.

The Coast Guard estimates about 40 percent of gulf shrimpers are not complying with federal laws requiring the use of turtle excluder devices, or TEDS, in their nets.

Fish oil can not claim heart disease benefits

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government has ordered the makers of fish oil capsules to stop claiming they reduce cholesterol levels or cut the risk for heart disease, officials said Tuesday.

The Food and Drug Administration sent letters to 67 fish oil manufacturers June 28 requiring them to stop making the claims because there is insufficient evidence to support them, said FDA spokesman William Grigg.

"While there are some studies that indicate some promise in this regard ... FDA has decided that the evidence is not so clear cut it should be commercialized," he said.

Annette Dickinson of the Council for Responsible Nutrition in Washington, a trade organization for food supplement manufacturers, said the group was surprised and disappointed by the action and intended to appeal the decision.

"Their decision was made on the basis of a 2-year-old submission from us. There has been an abundance of new evidence in the past two years that further supports our position," she said. "We continue to believe that some type of claim about fish oils is appropriate."

The FDA would consider any new evidence and might reverse the decision if enough data is produced to support the claims, Grigg said.

"This doesn't mean that a year from now you might not have enough data to justify these claims. It's just right now you don't," he said.

The agency previously banned a wide range of health claims about fish oil ranging from benefits for diseases ranging from AIDS to arthritis, he said.

"We held up on the cholesterol claims until we reviewed those and discussed them," he said.

Meantime, the agency has also requested fish oil manufacturers to submit evidence supporting the safety of fish oil.

Climatologist's quake prediction discounted

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — Earthquake experts in Tennessee and Missouri Tuesday discounted a New Mexico climatologist's prediction that a major earthquake will occur along the New Madrid fault in early December.

Iben Browning's prediction has led the Wilson school district in eastern Arkansas to cancel classes on Dec. 2-3; the Missouri and Arkansas National Guards to schedule earthquake preparedness drills Dec. 1-5; and the city of Carbondale to suggest key department heads be on duty on those days.

However, scientists at Memphis State University and St. Louis University say that Browning's assertion that a quake is likely on Dec. 2 or 3 is worrying residents of the New Madrid fault zone needlessly.

"A quake on Dec. 2 or 3 is no more likely than at any other time (and the prediction) should not be considered seriously," wrote Arch Johnston, director of the Center for Earthquake Research and Information at Memphis State, and Brian Mitchell, chairman of the earth science department at St. Louis University.

Johnston and Mitchell went a memo delivered last week to state and federal officials along the fault criticizing the prediction methods.

"Because of media attention and public concern (about the prediction), we feel it is important to show the method is ineffective for predicting earthquakes," the scientists wrote.

Browning, 72, of Sandia Park, N.M., is a climatologist who works for PaineWebber Inc. and other private concerns. He is said to have predicted last fall's earthquake in northern California, the 1971 tremor in the San Fernando Valley and the eruption of Mt. St. Helen's in 1980.

Browning's prediction, based on tidal forces that he says control tremors, says the highest tidal forces will be on Dec. 2 and 3 in a latitude ranging from northern Canada to New Orleans.

Geologists along the New Madrid fault have predicted a strong earthquake before the turn of the century, but have said there is no way to predict an exact date.

IU researchers to study environmental change

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (UPI) — The causes and consequences of global environmental change will be explored at the Indiana University School of Public and Environmental Affairs as part of a national research program to be launched this month, university officials said Tuesday.

IU has been designated the site for the Midwestern regional center of the new National Institute for Global Environmental Change. Through SPEA, the university will operate an interdisciplinary, multi-investigator research center with senior personnel drawn initially from SPEA and the departments of biology, geography and geology.

The program will begin following an expected approval Friday of an agreement between the U.S. Department of Energy, which has provided $6 million to initiate the program, and the University of California, where the institute's central directorship will be headquartered.

Regional centers will be located at Indiana, Harvard and Tulane universities; and the University of California at Davis. Director of the Midwestern regional center will be J.C. Randolph, IU professor of public and environmental affairs.

"The institute will provide the DOE with an important, new university-based research capability to conduct both scientific and policy research on various aspects of global environmental change, particularly those concerned with energy production and use," Randolph said.

The IU center will focus on issues of significance to the Midwest, some projects may have a national scope, Randolph said.

Investigation shows flaws in medical device regulation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Government regulation of medical devices remains seriously flawed and underreporting of serious problems linked to a crib death monitor shows the need for tougher policies to protect the public, investigators said Tuesday.

Investigators from the General Accounting Office and the Inspector General's Office told a fact finding congressional hearing that further steps must be taken to safeguard Americans from the potentially life-threatening health risks posed by defective medical devices.

Current Food and Drug Administration regulations enable manufacturers of pacemakers, crib death monitors and similar medical devices to sell their devices without undergoing tests to prove safety and effectiveness. All manufacturers must do to win such approval is show the FDA that their products are substantially equivalent to devices already on the market.

About 94 percent of the 36,000 medical devices currently in use entered the market in such a manner.

"Our review of the (approval) process found material weaknesses which could ... negatively affect the public's confidence in FDA's ability to protect the public health," said Richard Kusserow, inspector general for the Health and Human Services Department.

"FDA's reliance upon the 'honor system' does not provide adequate safeguards," he added.

The inspector general found many questions about the safety and effectiveness are not identified until after a device is used by the general public.

"For this reason it is critical to have an effective system in place to detect problems and to take prompt regulatory actions against violative firms when necessary," he told a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee.

However, recent investigations have shown some manufacturers apparently are failing to comply with a 1985 law requiring the reporting of deaths and other serious problems associated with devices to the FDA.

A report released Tuesday by the General Accounting Office found "underreporting of serious problems" associated with an electronic monitor designed to sound an alarm when a baby at risk of crib death suffers a life-threatening breathing stoppage. About 30,000 of the home monitors, called Model 8200, were sold by Aequitron Medical Inc. of Plymouth, Mass., before the device was replaced by another model last year.

From January 1983 through January 1989, Aequitron received at least 70 complaints of deaths associated with use of the Model 8200 monitor, 56 dated after the death and injury reporting became mandatory, the GAO said. However, only six of the 56 deaths had been reported to the FDA as of September 1989—and two of the six cases were reported nearly one year after the death occurred, the GAO found.

Poland lowers official count of Nazi death camp victims

WARSAW (UPI) — A government commission has lowered the number of people believed to have perished at the Auschwitz death camp during World War II from 4 million to 1.5 million, it conceded the overwhelming majority were Jews.

The decision to revise the official number of those killed in the Nazi camp was a formal rejection of original figures generated after the war by the Soviet Union, which still holds the records kept by the camp's commandants.

It is also at odds with figures used by historians in West Germany, the United States and Israel who have documented the number of victims of the Holocaust.

Poland's former communist government relied on the figure of 4 million, as part of a propaganda effort to make Auschwitz, a symbol of Nazi oppression of all peoples, not just the Jews.

The revision was made by a commission appointed by the Culture Ministry which is determining the future direction of a museum at Auschwitz, known in Polish as Oswiecim.

A Soviet commission which came to Auschwitz in February 1945 after its liberation put the number of victims at more than 4 million. That number was questioned by historians in the West, but not in Poland until very recently.

Franciszek Piper, head of the history department of the Auschwitz Museum, told the Solidarity newspaper Gazeta Wyborcza that examination of the evidence shows at least 1.1 million people died in the camp, including 960,000 Jews. Some 283,000 survived Auschwitz.

The newspaper said the real figure may be higher but does not exceed 1.5 million.

The commission examined transport records, numbers assigned to prisoners and statistical data from ghettos around Europe to

Along with the Jews, 150,000 Poles, 23,000 Gypsies and 20,000 Russian prisoners of war were brought to the concentration camp.

Sam Eskinazi, a spokesman for the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, said the change by the Polish commission reconciles the numbers of Auschwitz dead with those generally accepted by Western historians.

He said it does not change the figure of 6 million Jews killed by the Nazis.

The question of how many people died at Auschwitz and who they were, hit a nerve among Jews last summer when Roman Catholic Cardinal Jozef Glemp said the camp was as much a tragedy for non-Jewish Poles as for the Jews.

The Auschwitz Museum appealed to the Soviet government to return the archives of the camp to help establish the true number of those killed.

Parker proving point even though issue is dead

By Frank Blackman
San Francisco Examiner

OAKLAND — Dave Parker says he doesn't hold grudges. Gee, that must be a real comfort to the A's.

"This is a business," he said. "They chose to gamble on some of their young talent. I understand that. That's baseball."

Even if Parker isn't fixated on demonstrating just how big a mistake his former team made by letting him sign with Milwaukee during the off-season, he's making the argument anyway every time he steps into the batter's box.

The Brewers' designated hitter is batting .312, with 12 home runs and 58 RBIs (the fifth-best total in the league).

And he's done a job on the A's. Parker is 12-for-43 against the A's, with two home runs and nine RBIs. In 12 games between the clubs, he's driven in what proved to be the game-winning run three times.

While Parker insists he's not seeking revenge, that doesn't mean he agrees with the decision A's general manager Sandy Alderson made not to offer him a two-year deal. "I had a very productive year for the A's," said Parker, who hit 22 home runs and drove in a team-high 97 RBIs for the world champs. "When you have a productive year, you want to be rewarded. I think after what I contributed to the A's success last year, I should have been rewarded. And a two-year deal was what I wanted."

"They chose not to do so. So I felt they didn't want me. And I'm the type of guy, I don't want to be anywhere I'm not wanted."

With Parker gone, the A's initially tried Ken Phelps as the left-handed DH. Phelps is now in Cleveland. Alderson acknowledges that his team's most pressing need is finding a left-handed hitter. So did the A's blunder when they let Parker leave?

"Well, if you're going to ask a pointed question," Alderson said, "I'll give you a pointed answer. No."

By refusing Parker's demand for two years at $1 million-plus per (he signed with the Brewers for a guaranteed $2,625,000), Alderson was able to satisfy Rickey Fenderson, at least temporarily, then Jose Canseco, and still keep his books balanced.

The GM also said there was a conscious desire to make the team younger — Parker's absence created a job for Felix Jose. And finally, with the compensation received from Milwaukee for Parker, the A's were able to draft Todd Van Poppel. The pitcher's impact will be felt long after Parker has retired.

Manager Tony La Russa said money was never a factor. There was real concern that Parker's surgically repaired knees wouldn't be able to handle the day-to-day strain for two more years. And La Russa felt he could fill the void at designated hitter by using any starter he wanted to keep in the lineup but out of the field for a day.

While La Russa has unlimited respect for Parker ("I never managed a brighter player than Dave Parker, and with his natural ability that gets you to the last plateau as a player"), the manager made a point he didn't want overlooked.

"Look in the newspapers," La

Russa said. "We're 27 games over .500. I think we've survived with other people."

Parker, meanwhile, has flourished. What makes his accomplishments this year even more astounding is that he is so productive at age 39. Rarely has a player, even a great one, been able to excel in the final years of a career.

"The guys that I played against, the superstars, when they got to be old, they really seemed to lose a lot," A's hitting coach Merv Rettenmund said. "Brooks Robinson, Mickey Martle, Frank Robinson. Right now, Dave Parker's probably swinging the bat as well as he ever has."

All he needs, Parker said, is a steady job and no lingering injuries. He'll do the rest.

"It doesn't surprise me at all," he said of his success this year. "I think it's surprised everybody but me. I've always been a quality hitter."

Still a force on the field, his contributions off it cannot be underestimated. Any clubhouse he enters automatically is changed irrevocably.

"What people don't understand is that when I'm going around the clubhouse ranting and raving, I'm also getting myself up for the game," he said. "And hopefully I'm benefiting other people, too, by making it a more relaxed atmosphere."

Parker has only one personal goal left. June 27 he became the 66th player in baseball history with 2,500 hits, and he wants to get to 3,000, something only 16 men have been able to achieve. He is prepared to stick around as long as it takes to reach that total.

So it wouldn't be at all unreasonable to see the guy the A's thought might not have two years left still playing in 1992.

"Everybody is raving about me being productive at 39," Parker said. "Well, I look at Nolan Ryan, I look at Carlton Fisk. Because you're in your upper 30s or 40s, life is not over. Life expectancy is not 40."

"I think I'm showing players young now or in their early 30s that you can go on and still be at the top of your game."

Sentencing on Thursday for Pete Rose

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Pete Rose, baseball's career hit leader who has been banned from the sport for life because of gambling, will be sentenced Thursday for tax evasion.

Rose, the most productive batter in the history of baseball with 4,256 hits, could be sentenced up to six years in prison and fined up to $500,000.

The former Cincinnati Reds star, who was seldom injured in a brilliant quarter-century career, will be on crutches when he is sentenced at 10 a.m. by U.S. District Court Judge Arthur Spiegel.

Rose tore a cartilage in his right knee Sunday playing stickball with children at his wife's family reunion. He is scheduled for surgery Friday.

A year ago, Rose was banished from baseball for mife for gambling. Three months ago, Rose pleaded guilty to filing false federal income tax returns in 1985 and 1987 that omitted $300,000 in income.

"I am truly sorry for what has happened," said Rose. "I am not a bad person, but I did some bad things."

When Rose pleaded guilty on April 20, Spiegel did not indicate what type of sentence he might impose. However, the judge repeatedly asked Rose if he understood that by pleading guilty he could be sentenced up to six years.

Rose repeatedly answered, "Yes sir."

There are a number of possibilities for sentencing, among them, no prison time, probation, a stiff fine, community service, a few months of prison time or a few years in prison, or a combination of punishments.

Pacers' camp benefitting Williams

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — Kenny Williams is asking more questions and receiving more advice than the other players at the Indiana Pacers summer camp.

Williams, 21, is the youngest player at the camp and the only one without a game of major-college or professional basketball under his belt.

However, he is the player among the 16 in camp team officials believe has the best chance of making the squad in the fall.

"I've just seen him two days, but his attitude has been wonderful. He shows skills," said Indiana coach Dick Versace. "There's a ton to learn."

"You put him out there against a guy out of college, he looks really good. You put him against a crafty old veteran and you can see he doesn't know a lot of the tricks," he added.

Williams received a lot of advice Tuesday on playing trapping defenses and playing offense against traps.

He has seen such schemes before, but at 6-foot-9, he would primarily play small forward in the pros. In high school and junior college, he played power forward and center.

Adjusting to playing a new position is one of the many things Williams knows he needs to catch onto quickly to make an NBA team.

"Adjusting to the pro level, you have to learn a lot about the game, whereas in college they just teach you the basics," he said. "It's a whole different level. There are a lot of tricks to be learned. There are a lot more skills in order to play."

After playing in a camp last month in Chicago for potential draftees, Williams was convinced his skills were comparable to players with three or four years of college experience.

He also quickly picked up on some basic distinctions about the style of game played in the pros.

"What I'm going to have to get used to is hustling back on defense, which they tell you in high school and college, but you really have to emphasize in the NBA, because if you don't, you'll get beat every time," he said.

Picking up the nuances of NBA play could be tough for Williams, who is just two years removed from high school and has not played any organized college basketball for more than a year.

Mackey said he was able to conceal this "double life" from his family and friends until Friday, when police and television stations were tipped off that Mackey was in the suspected drug house.

Despite the revelations of the last few days, Roth and Mackey are campaigning to allow the coach to keep the job he has held for the last eight years at the commuter college in downtown Cleveland. Roth said Mackey would enter a treatment center and would submit to daily drug testing if necessary to prove he was clean.

"My attitude is that I made some horrendous mistakes," Mackey said. "Give me a chance."

Roth was to meet with CSU officials Tuesday in an attempt to resolve the situation, which school officials have said will be settled quickly.
