Proposed baseball schedule worries SIUC athletic officials

By John Bolger
Sports Writer

Scheduling changes proposed for the upcoming college baseball season have some SIUC athletic officials worried despite the academic benefits expected for baseball athletes.

Hill Denson, coach at Southern Mississippi, and Gene Stephenson, coach at Wichita State, drew up the proposal that designates March 1 as the beginning date for baseball contests and the last Friday in June as the beginning date for the college world series.

The current schedule allows teams to start competition as early as the last week in January. The college world series begins in the first week of June.

SIUC athletic officials pointed out these advantages: A consistent starting date gives teams an equal chance going into the season and the extension of the season past finals week allows athletes more time to prepare for finals. However, the extension could result in cancellation of spring training and fewer fans to watch the games, they said.

Saluki baseball coach Sam Riggelman said "It (consistent starting date) allows a northern team, like the Salukis, an equal chance going into the season," Riggelman said. "Teams in the sunbelt have the advantage of good weather and are able to get a jump on the northern teams every year."

Jim Hart, athletic director at SIUC, said the problems that arise from the proposed schedule change are recruiting and economic issues.

Hart said that if the season is changed, the money that pays for the annual spring trip to Miami will have to be used to house and feed the athletes when they are here during the summer.

"Schools like Wichita State that do not have a football program can afford to still have a spring trip with the proposed schedule change," Hart said. "These leaves us with a little less to offer a prospective player."

Riggelman said the loss of the spring trip is what really worries

Floyd, Pate share first round British Open lead

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (UPI) — Raymond Floyd embarked on a bid for golfing history Thursday, firing a 7-under 64 on the defenseless Muirfield links to tie Steve Pate for the lead in the opening round of the 121st British Open.

Floyd is only six weeks shy of his 50th birthday and a victory on the Scottish seaside this week would make him the oldest player in the history of the game to win a major championship.

A win would also allow him to join Gene Sarazen, Ben Hogan, Jack Nicklaus and Gary Player as the only golfers ever to win four major events during a career.

"That would be fabulous company to join," said Floyd, who despite being almost eligible for the American senior tour has won on the regular circuit this year and is the season's fifth leading money winner.

"I think this is the best round I have played at an Open championship and is probably close to as good a round as you are going to play anywhere. My goal for years has been to win a British Open. In the world of golf, this is 'the' Open championship."

Pate, seeking his first major title after having slowly climbed through golf's ranks in an eight-year career, posted his 64 early in the day when conditions at Muirfield were at their tamest. Although the wind freshened during the afternoon, it was still only a modest factor as Floyd finished his round.

Their scores were one shot off the Muirfield course record of 63, set by Japan's Isao Aoki in the 1980 Open, and equaled the lowest round ever shot on the opening day of this tournament.

They grabbed a one-shot lead over Ian Woosnam of Wales and Scotsman Gordon Brand, Jr. Woosnam bogeyed the final hole to fall out of the share of the lead while Brand came in late in the day to thrill his countrymen with the hope that one of their own could claim the title.

Two shots off the pace at 5-under 66 were two-time champion Nick Faldo, long hitting South African Ernie Els and Americans Lee Janzen and John Cook. Janzen is playing in his first British Open and Cook is competing in the tournament for the first time in 12 years.

An international cast was at 4-under 67, including Oklahoman Andrew Magee and Washington's Orrin Vincent, who plays the European Tour and has missed 10 cuts in 15 tournaments this year. Rocco Mediate, Italy's Costantino Rocca, Australia's Craig Parry and Sweden's Per-Ulrik Johansson were also at 67.

Inkster, Golden share lead spot in JAL Classic

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (UPI) — Juli Inkster chipped in for an eagle, helping her to a 5-under-par 66 Thursday and a share of the opening round lead with rookie Kate Golden at the $500,000 JAL Big Apple Classic.

Nancy Lopez, playing with the confidence that comes from two runner-up finishes in her last three tournaments, sank a 12-foot putt on her 17th hole to tie for third place with Tracy Kerdyk at 67.

Two-time defending champion Betsy King, the winner of last week's tournament at Youngstown, Ohio, opened with a 71.

Lopez, starting on No. 10, birdied three of four holes during one stretch on the back side, and added two more birdies coming home.

"I'm getting comfortable playing well again," said Lopez, an LPGA Hall of Famer with 44 career victories. "The last couple of weeks I've enjoyed being in good position

Money for medals

Japan aims for sports supremacy by offering cash to winning Olympians

TOKYO (UPI) — Accustomed to dazzling the world with its economic might, Japan is aiming for Asian sports supremacy by tempting its athletes with cash for medals at the Barcelona Olympics.

Abandoning purist absolutes for practical realities, the Japanese Olympic Committee is eager to heap $24,000 on those winning gold medals, $16,000 for silver and $8,000 for bronze.

"We're offering the rewards to celebrate and praise the results," said an Olympic Committee spokesman. "With professionals now competing in the Olympics, it's time to reconsider what amateurism really is."

The committee has allocated a total of $800,000 for prizes in the drive to hike its gold count from the paltry four earned in Seoul in 1988, a particularly disappointing finish behind host South Korea's 12 and China's five.

If the JOC's pile of yen isn't enough enticement, individual federations are offering their own incentives.

"We want participants to win as many medals as possible," the spokesman said. "It would be a joyful problem to have more medalists than funds allocated. In that case, we'll just re-examine our budget to see if we

Eastern European athletes thrown into new, turbulent Olympic territory

VIENNA (UPI) — Back in Seoul in 1988, when walls still divided cities and euphoric students hadn't yet cut up the Iron Curtain into souvenir-size pieces, just about the best thing an Eastern European athlete could do was to win an Olympic medal.

In Eastern Europe, sports stars shone like beacons of hope. They told a skeptical outside world their country was the best and reassured their people that the system they had come to doubt was really in order.

This month at Barcelona, the colossus that was once the Soviet Union's team will march behind the Olympic flag, with small groups carrying national flags few will recognize.

For decades, Eastern European athletes traveled a familiar route. They were spotted as children, cosseted and kept, and turned out on a production line of perfection. Those days are gone.

Emerging democracies and free-market economies have cut government programs, reduced sports budgets and turned sports idols into ordinary folks.

While extolling the virtues of amateurism, Eastern European athletes held nominal jobs in the military or state enterprises, but were free to devote their lives to sport under the most ideal conditions. Now they have to split their energies between jobs and studies and — if they are good enough — to new loyalties to sponsors.

Last July, while competing in Austria, East German sprint star Katrin Krabbe described how her life had taken a "180-degree" turn. She told of having to switch from a life of hermetically sealed dedication to one where a critical public and sponsor demands shape sports in a free-market society.

Evaluation form reports SIU could lose 25 jobs

By Jeremy Finley
Administration Writer

An evaluation form of the SIU system reveals the possible loss of 25 or more jobs at SIUC.

The productivity, quality and priorities form is a preliminary evaluation of what departments, programs and positions are necessary, and which ones can be eliminated.

Michael Humphries, a professor in religious studies, lost his job when the Religious Studies Department was eliminated at the Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday.

Humphries will be officially terminated by May 1993.

Humphries said he was dumbfounded when he learned he had lost his job.

"I knew that the religious studies department had a checkered history concerning keeping staff positions, but Dean Jackson showed me papers showing that my job was basically secured," Humphries said.

"I moved my family from California for this," he said. "Imagine the stress it had put on all of us."

Humphries said the continuing elimination of jobs at SIUC could give the University a bad reputation.

"It is going to establish a reputation after what had been going on," he said. "In fact, it might already have one."

Martha Cropper, director of the Technology Commercialization Center, said two positions possibly will be eliminated of the Center.

Cropper said the Center is not funded by the University.

"If the layoffs occur in the external funds, the jobs will be cut," Cropper said.

The tentative POP document stated the level of external support of grants and contracts is not adequate to continue the Center.

The elimination of the Center could save see JOBS, page 5

Perot's retreat leaves supporters disappointed

By Earl Zeligman
Special Assignment Writer

For Don Mitchell, the Southern Illinois coordinator for the Perot for President Campaign, Ross Perot's Thursday morning withdrawal from the 1992 presidential race amounted to a betrayal.

"I was greatly disappointed in the man," Mitchell said. "He has done great damage to the American political system. He gave people a reason to believe they could bring about drastically needed changes. I'm afraid a lot of people will become very cynical."

Mitchell said he received no warning about Perot's withdrawal.

"I was watching CNN when they aired the announcement," he said. "I just didn't think he would withdraw."

In the last two weeks, Perot's popularity has dropped 19 points, from 32 to 13 percent, according to national polling services.

Last week rumors of discord in the Perot camp surfaced when it was reported that one of Perot's two campaign managers, Hamilton Jordan, who ran Jimmy Carter's 1976 presidential campaign, was going to resign his position.

On Wednesday night, Perot's other campaign manager, Ed

Rollins, announced he was leaving the Perot campaign because of differences with the candidate.

"In his first real test, we thought

Clinton, Gore accept nominations

NEW YORK (UPI) — Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, saying "we can do better" and calling for a "new covenant" between government and the people, Thursday accepted the Democratic nomination for president in the ever changing 1992 political landscape.

Shortly after the Democrats' 41st national convention gave its seal of approval to Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore as its vice presidential candidate, Clinton told the nation that the Democrats were the party of the middle class that could provide the change needed in Washington.

Between the time of Clinton's nomination Wednesday night and Gore's Thursday, Texas billionaire Ross Perot said he would not run for president as an independent and turned the already strange 1992 campaign from a possible three-man affair back to a two-man race.

In a late insertion into his acceptance speech, Clinton acknowledged Perot's decision and made a pitch to his supporters.

"We are, in the words of Ross Perot, a revitalized Democratic Party," Clinton said. "I am well aware that those who rallied to his cause wanted to enlist in an army of patriots for change. We say to them: join us — together we will revitalize American."

But for the rest of the speech, Clinton portrayed the Democrats as a changed party ready to look out for the middle class and the Republicans under President Bush as the part of rich special interests who have soiled the American dream.

"In the name of all the people who do the work, pay the taxes, raise the kids and play by the rules — the hard-working Americans who make up our forgotten middle class, I accept your nomination for the presidency of the United States of America," Clinton said.

"I am a product of America's middle class," he added. "And when I am your president you will be forgotten no more."

In their acceptance speeches, Clinton and Gore each stressed the points that were clearly going to become some of the major themes of their campaign: a new generational ticket that understands the needs of all generations; a middle class team that will fight for the people over rich special interests; strong family men who have been tried and tested by personal adversity.

High levels of lead, copper found in SIUC water

By Rebecca Campbell
General Assignment Writer

Five locations on the SIUC campus have failed to meet Environmental Protection Agency guidelines for lead and copper in the water supply.

The five sites that exceed EPA guidelines are the Poultry Center, 179 Evergreen Terrace, 164 Evergreen Terrace, Fulkerson Hall

Report states five campus sites that exceed EPA guidelines on Greek Row, and Mac Smith residence hall, which is not open to students in the summer.

Joe Stuart, Illinois EPA engineer with the Division of Public Water Supplies, said the results are from a first round of testing.

Federal EPA regulations require two samples to determine if a water sample meets guidelines or not.

The first test is preliminary, Stuart said.

The levels found in the five locations on campus are not dangerous, he said.

"The concern is for the first person to take a glass of water after it has been sitting in the pipes for six or eight hours," he said.

Stuart said to let the water run until the temperature changes, indicating fresh water is in the pipes.

If the second round of samples still exceeds EPA guidelines, the University will be required to post a public notice concerning the water. Correcting the problem by reducing the ability of the water to corrode the metal in the pipes is the next step.

One or all of several factors may cause water to be corrosive: a lower pH, lessened alkaline properties in the water or perhaps a lack of calcium.

The problem must be identified to know the specific steps to correct it.

A statement released by University News Service said SIUC "will actively address the problem.

GUERRILLAS ATTACK YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC
Serbian guerrillas Thursday launched a three-pronged assault on Bosnia-Herzegovina, intensifying their drive to partition the former Yugoslav republic along ethnic lines, officials and news reports said. At least 20 deaths were reported in fighting since Wednesday across the republic. In the capital Sarajevo, Serb guerrillas on hilltops kept the city under intermittent mortar and machine-gun fire.

KERDISH REBEL ATTACKS LEAVE 27 DEAD
Twenty-seven people were killed in attacks by Kurdish separatist guerrillas and in clashes between the rebels and Turkish security forces, officials said Thursday. Nineteen of those killed were rebels. The latest deaths brought to 55 the number of people killed in the area in less than one week of violence related to the outlawed Kurdish Workers Party, or PKK, which is seeking to set up an independent state in the region.

LEBANESE MOVE ON ELECTIONS AMID PROTEST
Parliament voted Thursday to schedule Lebanon's first public elections in 20 years, but the move sparked protests by Christians who said voting should not be held while Syrian troops remain in Beirut. Christian militia leaders said despite the parliamentary vote, designed to follow the path of a 1989 Lebanese peace agreement, they would boycott and protest elections unless Syrian troops first leave the capital.

HIGH COURT ASKED TO DENY ABORTION PILLS
The Justice Department Thursday asked the Supreme Court to deny what it called a pregnant woman's "end-run" attempt to have access to unlicensed French abortion pills, saying the public interest would be "irreparably harmed." In papers filed with the Supreme Court at the request of Justice Clarence Thomas, the Bush administration requested that an application for a stay of a Circuit Court order be denied.

KING FREED AFTER DRUNKEN DRIVING ARREST
Rodney King, the man whose beating at the hands of police sparked both riots and reforms, was arrested Thursday on suspicion of drunken driving after he was spotted driving erratically in a restaurant parking lot. King was arrested shortly after 2 a.m. in the parking lot of a Denny's restaurant in Santa Ana and was released several hours later on his own recognizance, California Highway Patrol Officer Angel Johnson said.

TUBERCULOSIS CAUSES DEATHS IN NEW YORK
A deadly strain of tuberculosis killed seven inmates and a guard at a New York prison, federal health officials reported Thursday. The deaths represent one of the most alarming outbreaks in a nationwide upsurge of tuberculosis cases that fail to respond to drugs, the federal Centers for Disease Control said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. A 30-year decline in the number of tuberculosis cases ended in 1984.

GARBAGE TRAIN MOVES ON TO STATEN ISLAND
The 2,200 tons of rotting, stinking New York garbage that spent three weeks wending its way through the Midwest headed home Thursday for burial in a Staten Island landfill. The trash train had been stinking up a siding between two northern Illinois cornfields, about 100 miles southwest of Chicago, since Monday. It headed east late Wednesday and made its way into Pennsylvania by Thursday afternoon.

Illinois schools receive $23 million from IGA; budget problems remain

By Rebecca Campbell
General Assignment Reporter

The Illinois General Assembly allotted $23 million more for elementary and secondary schools than last year, but local officials say their schools still will be strapped financially.

Herrin Superintendent of Schools David Hindman, said the Herrin school district still has bills from last year that must be paid out of the appropriations for this fiscal year.

"They (the state) still owe us $400,000 from last year," he said.

School districts only received 11 payments from the state instead of 12.

Eugene Finley, spokesman for the State Board of Education, said the percent of school budgets funded by the state actually will go down in fiscal year '93, despite the increase in funding, because the cost of education has increased in the past year.

The budget may be reduced if the General Assembly decides to reevaluate the budget, he said. The State Board of Education cannot predict if the legislature will cut the funding when they meet again in the fall, he said.

John Williams, business manager for the Carbondale school district, said the figures are regarded by him as tentative. Last fiscal year the budget was revised three times, he said.

Williams said his school district borrowed money last year to make up the difference between the district's budget and the amount actually received.

"We have to have a fairly comfortable idea (about the budget) to negotiate with personnel and do other things," he said.

Hindman said hiring staff before the budget is approved can be a problem. There is a rule that says teachers must be notified 60 days before the beginning of the school year or they are on the payroll.

The school's budget has to be figured using estimated, not actual, state contribution because the legislature does not vote until July, which is less than 60 days before the start of school, Hindman said.

Hindman said his district has not had to borrow money yet, but may have to consider it next year, especially if the budget is reevaluated and cut a few months down the road.

Williams said Carbondale elementary schools have not been too hard hit, but

Witness: Meister signed without authorizations

By John McCadd
Police Writer

A prosecution witness testified Thursday that several waste disposition records were signed without authorization by defendant John Meister, who is accused of theft and forgery in connection with waste disposal transactions in 1988.

Meister, former SIUC pollution control director was indicted Nov. 15, 1991 for two counts of theft by deception and 12 counts of forgery stemming from alleged illegal dumping of waste in the Jackson County landfill, and crude-oil contaminated waste on his business partner's land.

Everett Allen, owner of Allen Waste Management, said Meister, while working with Allen Management never was authorized to sign manifests, or waste disposition documents, necessary to prove lawful dumping rights.

However, Allen acknowledged during cross-examination that he allowed Meister to sign his own name, as well as Allen's, to other Environmental Protection Agency applications.

He later said he accepted payment from the Ashland Pipe Line Company for disposal service, though he knew Meister was not authorized to sign his name on the manifests.

Thursday's testimony focused on Meister's alleged involvement with a 1988 transaction with the Ashland Pipe Line Company of McLeansboro, from which he is charged for forgery on eight manifests, resulting in the disposal of waste in illegal areas.

The Ashland Pipe Line Company hired Allen Management to clean up and dispose of crude-oil contaminated waste after a pipeline leak in 1988.

Defense attorney Darrell Dunham said because Allen accepted payment from the pipe line company, he lent an implied authorization for Meister to have signed the manifests, thus not constituting forgery.

"Mr. Allen has testified that John Meister was not authorized to sign manifests, yet he's perfectly willing to accept payment for the job though Meister's signature is on (the manifests)," Dunham said. "He

Gore good choice for Democratic ticket

SOME CALL IT THE "baby boom" ticket. But Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, 45, gets more than a young running mate with Sen. Albert Gore, Jr., 44. He gets a complete ticket.

Although Clinton's choice breaks with the political tradition of picking a running mate from a different part of the country to give the ticket national appeal,—Gore is from Tennessee, Clinton from Arkansas—it could help Democrats to consolidate the South in an election year in which all presidential candidates come from the same region.

Gore's appeal goes beyond regional consolidation. He is the patch that covers the holes in Clinton's record.

CLINTON DOES NOT HAVE national governmental experience. With a political career developed at the state level in Arkansas, the presidential hopeful has not been exposed to the realities of the nation's capital. Gore, on the other hand, is considered a true insider in the Capitol world. The son of a former senator, he was elected to Congress in 1976 at age 28 and moved on to the Senate, where he has gained national recognition for his work on environmental issues. He unsuccessfully sought the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988.

Gore's "green" concerns will also help Clinton, whose environmental policies at home have been questioned. The team seems ready to use the "environmental hammer" against Republican opponent George Bush, whom Gore has attacked consistently after his 1988 campaign promise of being the "environmental president." Gore attacked Bush first for refusing to attend the environmental summit in Rio last June, and then again for taking a weak stand there.

GORE ALSO IS LIKELY to help the Democrats with the issue of traditional values. After Clinton's stormy and widely publicized extramarital affair and the emphasis Republicans are giving to "family values," Gore stands as an excellent shield for the party. He married his high school sweet heart, Tipper, after graduating from Harvard. A mother of four, Mrs. Gore gained national attention by leading a campaign against obscene lyrics in the music industry. The Gore's family image also was strengthened after a car accident seriously injured the couple's younger child, and the senator withdrew temporarily from political life to "be closer to his family."

The vice presidential candidate's military record is also likely to divert accusations from opponents. A Vietnam veteran, Gore was one of only 10 Democratic senators who voted to authorize Bush to use force in the Persian Gulf. He also is considered an expert in arms control but has favored maintaining some B-2 bombers in service.

BY CHOOSING A RUNNING MATE younger than himself, Clinton breaks with the political tradition of creating a generational link by picking an elder candidate, but creates a team that can appeal to those hoping to break with the past in presidential politics, and even likely to appeal to a large group of apathetic voters—those under 30.

Also, by choosing a running mate that conveys an image of leadership and competency, the Democrats will make voters more comfortable with the prospect of the candidate succeeding to the presidency in the case of death or disability of the president. Although the considerations of Gore's nomination can be seen as purely strategic, it is reassuring to know that at least one vice presidential candidate has the qualifications to fulfill a political role beyond giving the party a geographical advantage over its opponents.

Study of religion aids people to better understand cultures

The proposal to close down the Religious Studies department is, in my opinion, not only unwise, it is also bizarre. The loss far outweighs the annual savings of a few thousand dollars.

The academic study of religion, together with that of philosophy, literature, and history is central to a liberal arts education. No one would deny the importance of the study of the mores and customs of a remote tribe in the Amazon or the hinterland of Australia, or that conducting experiments on rats or monkeys in order to understand the complexities of human behavior. These academic pursuits are important and can be of immense interest to specialists, but certainly not more important than the study of religion. Since earliest times, religion has been, and continues to be in the present age, a vital and pervasive feature of human life on earth.

It has shaped nations and civilizations and in countless ways has affected, and often directed, the course of history.

In the contemporary interdependent world one must understand the ideologies and faiths of other people as well. SIUC, with its large number of international students, provides an ideal setting for the study of world religions and cultures.

The courses offered by the Religious Studies department are our only windows to the world.

Where else can we go to understand not only the basic tenets of Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism etc., but also the civilizations that these religions have shaped and the societies they have created.

SIUC will be the poorer and the loser if, heavens forbid, Dean Jackson's proposal is carried through. This step may help the Dean a tiny bit in his attempt to make up the shortfall in his college budget, but how will he compensate for the immense loss SIUC students and the Carbondale community at large will suffer? —Shafiq Habal, Junior, Biological Science.

Student: Abortion should be up to women, not politicians

In light of the recent Supreme Court decision on Pennsylvania's Restrictive Abortion Law, I am urging all students to bounce many if not most of the Republicans out of their offices in their respective states and Congress.

It seems that our politicians seem content with undermining a woman's body and her decisions. Do these "men" feel they are helping us, when they are taking away our freedom? Or should I say, our right to choose.

This matter touches mostly women, so shouldn't women decide what they want to do with their own bodies, instead of our bureaucratic leaders, who are mostly men?

My parents have been foster parents for almost 25 years. They have fostered over 100 children.

I have seen reality, poverty, abuse, cocaine babies, alcohol fetal syndrome, druggies, illiteracy and many other unfortunate people come through my parents door. I have seen this and I also know where displaced children will end up in this competitive world of ours.

There is a one-year-old Black baby from Chicago in my parents' home today. She was a cocaine baby. It was very hard to find a home for her, fortunately my parents, at age 50, took her in and will raise her until she is ready to live on her own.

There are not enough people like my parents to go around. This fact of life interests very few, but isn't it sad how so many people are interested in other people's lives? These people don't seem to be doing what my parents are doing! It's time for the pro-life movement to put its signs down and stop being so ignorant of this situation. Until they do something on the level my parents have, they have no credibility and are just like the people in congress, trying to run other people's lives. Stop being hypocrites, actions speak louder than words.— Robb Williams, Junior, Finance

Chief executive defends Ice-T's 'Cop Killer' song

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — The co-chief executive of Time Warner Inc., under fire over rap song "Cop Killer," issued a strong defense Thursday of the decision to release the song and pledged the company will continue to publish controversial material.

"What would Time Warner stand for if we made as the criterion of every creative effort the commandment 'Do not disturb?'" said Gerald Levin, in a passionate defense of the song by rapper Ice-T, at the entertainment giant's annual meeting.

"What would it profit anyone, if in the name of pleasing everyone the country's leading media and entertainment company ceased to risk saying anything worth listening to?" Levin asked the 1,000 shareholders at the meeting.

That remark produced an outburst sustained applause from the shareholders, who had been confronted by dozens of protesters marching outside the Regent Beverly Wilshire Hotel and heard the company condemned for weeks by police officers and their supporters.

Shareholders also applauded enthusiastically when Levin said, "We must be willing to hear and report the world as we find it, not as we wish it to be."

Levin admitted the song, contained in the album "Body Count" — and including lyrics such as "bout to dust some cops off?" — is "raw and unsparring."

But he stressed repeatedly, as has Ice-T, that it is not a call for anti-police violence.

"Cop Killer" is a bitter, angry song of protest meant to express the rage and frustration a young African-American feels is the face of official brutality that was symbolized for so many — white as well as black — by the Rodney King case," Levin said.

"It's clear that what the artist is doing is depicting the despair and anger that hang in the air of every American inner city," he said.

$75,000 in short-term savings, according to the document.

William Keim, special assistant to the dean of the College of Technical Careers, said the restructuring of the college makes it difficult to tell how many jobs will be eliminated.

Keim said proposals concerning the creation of new departments in the school are being worked on.

The document stated programs in the College of Technical Careers may be eliminated; and some current administrative positions may be eliminated.

"With the elimination and merging of some departments, the losing of jobs could result," Keim said.

According to the document, short-term savings of the restructuring process cannot be determined.

Donald Stucky, chairman of the Plant and Soil Science Department, said he and other faculty were asked by administrators to create a contingency plan for evaluation of the department.

"Basically we were asked what areas we could do with and without," Stucky said.

Until the budget in the department is confirmed, it is difficult to say what jobs could be cut, Stucky said, though it is possible jobs may be lost.

According to the document, if external funding to support the research at research stations in the department is reduced significantly, employees may be terminated.

Short-term savings of $36,000 could result from the reduction of research.

Juh Wah Chen, dean of the College of Engineering and Technology, said three layoffs within the college may occur.

Because of the elimination of the word processing and duplicating capability functions, personnel may be eliminated in these areas, Chen said.

we'd see how he'd do," said Mitchell. "But he flunked. He broke his word."

"He betrayed our trust, and the trust of the millions of volunteers who worked hard for him," said Mitchell.

John Jackson, a political consultant and Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said he was surprised that Perot withdrew from the presidential race, but also said Perot's decision was not inconsistent with the candidate's past behavior.

"I think Perot is a guy who has walked away from things before," he said. "For example, he walked away from the GM board position for $787 million. He has a history of walking away when things get frustrating, and to some extent it's a personal stylistic matter."

"I think most of the explanation of why Perot left the race lies deep within the character, heart and psyche of Ross Perot," he said.

While Jackson said he was "amazed" by Perot's decision, Chris Grissom, the Jackson County Republican Party chairman, said he was only mildly surprised.

"I suspected it would happen," said Grissom. "Some of the signs in the last few weeks seemed to indicate it might happen. First Jordan was rumored to quit. Then you had the embarrassment at the NAACP convention."

"He went from a front runner to a spoiler," he said. "It wasn't a question of whether he would win, but whether he would siphon more votes away from Bush or Clinton."

Grissom said he thought Bush would be the big winner, noting Perot's ties to past Republican administrations.

"Most people tend to identify him as a republican," said Grissom. Jackson said he sees two scenarios, one favoring Clinton and the other favoring Bush.

In the first scenario, Jackson said he sees Clinton as the beneficiary of angry voters who want change.

"The people who were mad, fed up and want change only have Bill Clinton as an alternative. This week Clinton is clearly pressing the theme that he is the candidate of change, and that we've had republicans in the White House for 12 years straight and 20 of the last 24 years," said Jackson.

"George Bush is not going to change things very much. George Bush is George Bush. He's going to continue what he has been doing, and it will pretty much be business as usual," he said.

In his other scenario, Jackson said many of Perot's supporters are Reagan Democrats, democrats who voted for Reagan and Bush in past elections. Jackson said these people may return to the Republican party.

"Many of Perot's supporters are the so-called Reagan Democrats of the past," he said.

"Many of these people are independent voters. Many of these people are the kind of Southwestern and Western voters who tend to vote Republican more often than they do Democratic. So, you may make a demographic argument that they will ultimately return to the Republican fold."

When asked who he will support, Mitchell said he is so disappointed with Bush and Clinton that he may not even vote.

"I think there are poor choices left for us," he said. "The president lied to us when he said read my lips and then raised taxes. And the Democratic Party hasn't changed."

"A lot of people won't vote, and I might be one of them," he said.

Top aeronautical company earnings ascend 10 percent

CALABASAS, Calif. (UPI) — Lockheed Corp., continuing to perform well in a time of declining defense dollars, reported Thursday its second-quarter earnings rose 10 percent, boosted by profit growth in its aeronautical and electronic segments.

Lockheed said its second quarter earnings increased to $77 million, or $1.24 a share, from $70 million, or $1.11 a share, in the second quarter of 1991.

The earnings were in line with expectations, which had ranged between $1.20 and $1.30 a share. Lockheed stock rose 50 cents to $44.875 a share on the New York Stock Exchange.

The company said sales rose slightly to $2.48 billion from $2.43 billion in the prior year's second quarter.

Lockheed Chairman Daniel Tellep said the earnings rise stemmed from higher program profits in the company's aeronautical and electronic sectors.

It said backlog was $8.4 billion at the close of the second quarter, compared with $8.8 billion at the end of 1991.

Total negotiated backlog, including unfunded programs under contract with U.S. and foreign governments, was $15.9 billion.

NBC's Olympic advertising deemed deceptive in NYC

NEW YORK (UPI) — NBC's commercials urging viewers to buy special television coverage for the Barcelona Olympics were branded as deceptive Thursday by New York City's Consumer Affairs department.

Mark Green, the department commissioner, said his office has taken legal action to stop ads for the pay-per-view "Olympic TripleCast," a round-the-clock joint effort by NBC Sports and Cablevision Systems.

Green said the commercials fail to disclose that Olympic events will be seen live on the three channels only between 5 a.m. and 5 p.m. EDT, when most New Yorkers are at work. The coverage after 5 p.m., when most subscribers will be watching, will be taped. Spain is six hours ahead of the eastern United States.

The commissioner said his office Thursday served the companies with notices of violating the city's Consumer Protection Law. The network has until July 20 to respond or face possible fines of up to $500 for each ad, Green said.

He added that the network would be asked to sign an agreement concerning plans for disclosure of taped programming.

"NBC has repeatedly said in news conferences, interviews and in its promotional material that the Olympics TripleCast would be presented live each day from 5 a.m. to 5 p.m. EDT and then replayed immediately the same day from 5 p.m. to 5 a.m.," NBC spokesman Curt Block said. "We have never said or implied there would be any live presentation of the Olympics in prime time, either on the TripleCast or the broadcast."

Viewers buying the special Olympic coverage would pay $29.95 for a single day to $135 for the full 15 days of "live coverage," which begins July 26. The Summer Games end Aug. 9.

The commercials on NBC state: "Now (you) can switch between three cable channels, each televising a different event, live with no interruptions. For the first time ever, you can choose what you want to watch when you want to watch it."

Green said: "Advertising taped programming as live tricks sports fans into paying for the thrill of live action when half the time they're only getting canned goods. There's nothing wrong with taped action, so long as it's properly labeled."

Green said he wrote NBC sports President Dick Ebersol after learning the network had shown taped tennis matches from Wimbledon without disclosing the competition was not live.

Green warned Ebersol that such failure regarding the Olympic pay-per-view package could be deemed a deceptive trade practice.

He asked Ebersol to provide details on disclosures regarding future programming. NBC did not respond to the July 7 letter, Green said.

The commercial-free TripleCast package features 16 sports, which would be shown start to finish, and repeated during the taped segment.

can't have it both ways."

Allen later said during a second prosecution questioning that he never saw copies of the manifests before payment was accepted, and did not see Meister's alleged unlawful signature.

Prosecution witness Bobby Funkhouser, engineering assistant for the Ashland Pipe Line Company, testified that after the project was completed, copies of the manifests were not returned to him, leaving him with no knowledge where the waste was taken.

Prosecuting attorney Ellen Shanzle-Haskins said the prosecution hopefully will rest its case by Monday.

some programs are on hold that should be expanded.

One of the programs Williams said he would like expanded is a reading program aimed at helping grade school children with reading difficulties.

"It's critical in an elementary school district to have a strong

Williams also said some classes have too many children in them. The classes still operate effectively, but really should be smaller, he said. More personnel need to be hired and there just is not enough money for that, he said.

Spanish authorities mobilize for possible terrorist threat

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The specter of international terrorism has shadowed the Summer Olympics for nearly 20 years, but the roundup of Basque separatist leaders and the tightest security in the Games' history may lessen the threat in Barcelona, a leading international security firm said Thursday.

Kroll Associates, the internationally renowned investigation and security consulting firm, released its report Thursday on risks to tourists, corporate executives and athletes at the Olympics.

"There is no question that the local (Barcelona) officials are extremely concerned, particularly since Barcelona has been a historical target of Basque terrorists," said Brian Jenkins, Kroll's senior managing director. "This really is the first Olympics to be held at a site where there are active terrorist organizations — organizations that have declared themselves in opposition to the Olympic Games."

To thwart any efforts to disrupt the Games, Spanish authorities have spent about $400 million on security and assembled nearly 58,000 Spanish Army, National Police, Civil Guard and Barcelona Urban Guard officers to patrol the area.

Sixteen naval vessels will patrol a 12-mile shoreline area, limiting access to the beach and to the nearby Olympic Village.

Additionally, Spanish and French authorities mounted a massive manhunt for members of the outlawed Basque "atherland and Liberty Party (ETA) in March and April. The sweep led to the arrest of 40 suspected ETA members.

"There has been an all out offensive by the Spanish and French police against the terrorist organizations," Jenkins said. "And they've had some success, arresting many ETA leaders. But the ETA has been on the ropes before and always come back."

"I won't say that Americans will be targets of this group, but it could be a matter of being in the wrong place at the wrong time. Tourists should stay away from government buildings and police and army facilities. These are favorite targets."

The ETA, Jenkins said, also is undergoing a change of philosophy toward its brand of political terrorism.

"Our security officials have been told that there is an internal struggle going on within the ETA over the organization's tactics," Jenkins said. "They used to bomb public buildings and military and police facilities, but now have turned their attention to softer targets."

In May, Jenkins said, five children were killed by ETA bombs at a Civil Guard apartment building near Barcelona. Just last month, two homemade bombs were deactivated in Barcelona and another two in Gerona, 50 miles northeast of the Olympic site.

The Kroll report also found that there was the possibility that ethnic violence from the civil war in what used to be Yugoslavia or revenge motives for the February assassination in Lebanon of Sheik Abbas Musawi — secretary-general of Hizballah, a group linked to Iran — could spark violence at Barcelona.

Independent pulls out of race he never entered

DALLAS (UPI) — Texas billionaire Ross Perot, whose folksy style of outsider politics sparked a historic petition drive for president, said Thursday he would end his unofficial campaign in the nation's "best interest."

During a 30-minute news conference, Perot thanked the thousands of volunteers who have worked in his campaign but said it was clear that with a "revitalized" Democratic Party the race would be thrown into the House of Representatives and he could not win.

"To all the volunteers, I will always look back on this with the fondest memories. I'm sure that the founding fathers would be proud of you," he said.

Perot indicated he would ask the volunteers to continue with their signature gathering as a sort of barometer of the level of national discontent with the state of traditional American politics.

The candidate said he had spent about $10 million in the campaign, but he said that was not the point.

"I decided that it was definitely going into the House of Representatives," he said, adding that the Democratic Party had done "a brilliant job" of revitalizing the party.

The White House wasted no time in claiming that President Bush would be the natural heir of Perot supporters, despite the fact that the Texan appealed to disenchanted Republicans.

"We welcome any or all of Mr. Perot's supporters to support President Bush and to take another

Billionaire's decision has experts rethinking

By William Ragan
Politics Writer

Independent candidate Ross Perot's withdrawal from the presidential campaign may result in SIUC researchers rethinking election-year surveys.

Perot ended his unofficial campaign Thursday morning, citing the rejuvenated Democratic Party as a major factor in his withdrawal.

Perot said in a press conference in Dallas that the Clinton campaign's increased momentum would push the election into the House of Representatives, where Republicans and Democrats would most likely vote along party lines and not for an independent candidate.

"Now that the Democratic party has revitalized itself, I have concluded that we cannot win in November," Perot said. "I have decided not to become a candidate because I do not believe it serves the country's best interest."

William Elliot, professor of journalism, has been collaborating with researchers from Pennsylvania, Oregon and Indiana on a survey which examines Perot's unusual political campaign.

Elliot said Perot brought an entirely new way of campaigning to the political arena, and it will be intriguing to see if other candidates follow suit.

"Perot brought in a different way to get his message across, through popular media and talk shows," Elliot said. "It will be interesting to find out if Clinton continues doing it, or goes back to a traditional campaign approach."

Elliot called Perot's withdrawal from the campaign "unexpected and surprising" and said the development would have a marked effect on this year's presidential elections.

"This changes things significantly," he said. "We're going from an interesting and unusual political campaign to a standard two-party campaign. It's an abrupt shift."

Elliot's research also will encompass the influence of presidential debates on popular opinion, and the public opinion of the candidates.

John Jackson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and professor of political science, is conducting a survey that looks at political party leaders and how they have changed over the years.

Jackson has been conducting the survey every election year since the McGovern — Nixon campaign of 1972.

Jackson called Perot a "political phenomenon" and said he was the strongest independent candidate in decades, a fact which may have arisen from the general dissatisfaction with the political system by voters.

"Clearly the country has a problem when half of the people are not even bothering to vote," he said. "Many of his supporters were turned off to politics."

Perot's decision to end his unofficial campaign may cause Perot supporters to follow the change-orientated theme of Clinton's campaign, even though most of Perot's supporters hail from the Southwest, an area usually known for its high Republican population, he said.

close look at his programs and achievements," spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said. "We think we're the party of investment, jobs and economic growth. These are the issues that the Perot people are interested in."

Perot said he would not be able to win the election if it were decided in the House, where Republicans and Democrats would most likely vote along party lines and not for a third party or independent candidacy.

"If we cannot win in November, the election will be decided in the House of Representatives. Since the House of Representatives is made up of Democrats and Republicans, our group would be unlikely to win," Perot said.

"Now that the Democratic Party has revitalized itself, I have concluded that we cannot win in November and that the election will be decided in the House of Representatives," he said.

"Since the House of Representatives does not pick the president until January, the new president is unable to use the months of November and December to assemble his team and prepare to govern. I have decided not to become a candidate because I do not believe it serves the country's best interest."

Perot said he would continue to speak his mind on politics. "I don't plan to have a personality change," he said.

Asked about the nearly 30 states that have turned in their petitions and the possible disappointment among the volunteers, Perot said, "People can say what they want, but I'm trying to do what's right for my country."

He added: "I'm not in this for ego. I'm not in this for gratification."

The announcement came as a shock to Perot volunteers in Dallas and across the nation, leaving some in tears and others just plain mad.

In New York, where Perot volunteers were scheduled to begin rounding up signatures Thursday, Donald Neddo of Waterford was angry.

Backers disappointed by Perot leaving race

DALLAS (UPI) — Volunteers expressed disappointment, shock and outrage over Ross Perot's decision to drop his independent presidential bid Thursday, with one man saying he was "sick, sick, sick" about the move and another claiming he'd been "conned by one of the best con artists in the world."

Many of the thousands of volunteers who were devoting time and energy in petition drives to get Perot's name on the ballot in all 50 states were hard at work when they learned about the Texas billionaire's withdrawal from the race.

An elderly gentleman arriving at the campaign's headquarters in Dallas moments after Perot announced his decision was asked by another volunteer, "Did you hear the latest?"

"Yes, yes, and I am sick, sick, sick," replied the man, obviously distraught over the announcement. Some in the posh headquarters complex in north Dallas were in tears.

The reaction of other volunteers across the country ranged from disappointment to anger. In New York, where Perot volunteers were scheduled to begin rounding up signatures Thursday, some expressed outrage.

"I feel we've been conned by one of the best con artists in the world," said Donald Neddo of Waterford, who was coordinating the campaign in 20 counties from Westchester County to the Canadian border.

Neddo said while "people across the country were working six, 10, 12 hours a day, seven days a week" on Perot's behalf, "he didn't spend a dime of his own money."

Perot said during the news conference he spent about $10 million on the short-lived campaign.

Rick Rice, a 35-year-old insurance agent from Orono, Minn., said reaction at the Minnesota campaign headquarters ranged from "disappointed to really ticked off."

"I think betrayed is too strong a word, but I'd be lying if I said I didn't feel a little that way. I don't want to say it because the man is such a good man," said Rice, adding the Minnesota office had received more than $80,000 in donations.

"I'll try to keep an open mind," Rice said. "I might still vote for Perot or if I don't, I'd be for (Bill) Clinton at this point. I'm not committing myself. I'm tired of being committed and being embarrassed."

Phil Rierden, a media liaison for Massachusetts People for Perot, said was duped by the Texas billionaire. Perot promised to run if supporters got him on the ballots in all 50 states, and now has reneged on his promise, he said.

"I feel I was suckered. There was a deal and one of the partners backed out," said Rierden. He dismissed Perot's explanation that he got out of the race because the Democratic Party had revitalized itself and he feared the presidential election would be decided in the House.

Rierden said if Perot won a plurality of votes, then House members would have made him president.

In Chicago, Ted Pincus asked supporters to switch their allegiance to Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton. Pincus said the Democratic platform is now closely aligned with Perot's ideas.

"All of us are extremely disappointed in what we consider to be Ross Perot's overreaction to his drop in the polls," Pincus said.

Perot followers in Texas turning to boost Bush

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Ross Perot's sudden departure from the presidential "stakes will boost President E's political fortunes in Texas, where he is likely to inherit most of Perot's conservative following.

Perot, the Dallas billionaire whose grass-roots supporters got him on the ballot in 24 states, shocked the nation Thursday by withdrawing from the presidential race, even though he had never officially declared his independent candidacy.

With Perot out of the way, political observers and party regulars believe Bush will be able to capture his adopted home state of Texas in November — a feat that might have been impossible in a three-man race with Perot.

Clinton, Bush scrambling for claim of Perot supporters after Texan quits

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democratic nominee Bill Clinton and President Bush scrambled Thursday to present themselves as the natural heirs of Ross Perot's supporters, signaling an intense contest for the disenchanted voters.

The Texas billionaire's withdrawal from a race he never officially entered, though, created more hype, hoopla, pandering and bet-taking than action.

Would Clinton or Bush be the chief beneficiary of Perot's supporters? Would the withdrawal harm Clinton's prospects in the South? Could Bush appeal to the people he alienated who joined Perot's effort? Or, would Perot supporters simply stay home this November, furthering the decline in voter participation?

"Ross Perot's supporters have told all of us that it's time to go beyond the politics of blame and division and denial," Clinton said in a statement, after phoning the prospective candidate to pay tribute to his movement. "They reflect the energy and courage that the people of this nation, at their best, can harness when they know change must come."

Hours before delivering his acceptance speech, arguably the most important moment of his life, Clinton added: "We have heard their message and share their hopes. I ask them to give us a fair hearing, to read our plan for putting people first."

Bush, who also invited angry voters to join his campaign, summoned reporters to Pinedale, Wyo., near the ranch where he and Secretary of State James Baker were fishing, to make his pitch for Perot supporters and get some television air time.

Sounding as if he and Perot were good old friends, Bush referred to his former nemesis as "Ross" and said he had a "good conversation" with him earlier in the day.

"A lot of people that supported Ross want to see the kinds of changes that I want to see," Bush said. "When it gets down to the issues I think they're going to be more on my side than on the side of the Democratic ticket."

He added, "I would welcome his support."

Perot, who has a distinct distaste for Bush and the path he has taken, did not offer his backing to Bush or Clinton, though he gave the Democrats a bounce Thursday, saying the party had "revitalized itself," an assessment naturally shared by party boss Ron Brown, who also called Perot.

The announcement was a major blow to Perot volunteers across the nation.

SIU law school introduces mediation program

By Jill Hein
Student Writer

A new program planned for the SIU School of Law in September of 1992 will train law students how to keep their clients out of court.

An alternative dispute resolution program will be added to the School of Law's legal clinic program.

The ADR program will train law students in non-traditional methods of resolving disputes rather than allowing litigation to reach a court of law.

Development of mediation skills will be emphasized during the first phase of the ADR program.

Mediation involves a neutral third-party who meets with both sides. The mediator attempts to increase communication so that both sides can arrive at a solution.

An agreement reached during mediation is then put in writing and signed by all involved in the process.

If a solution is not reached during the mediation, then none of the information given can be used in any further proceedings.

"We chose mediation first because it is the least complicated and will work well with the other aspects of the Legal Clinic," Mary Rudasill, director of clinical programs, said.

Rudasill said the trend of mediation began in such areas as the insurance business and labor contracts.

"The whole idea is that the mediator doesn't make the agreement, but makes everyone listen to one another."

—Mary Rudasill

In some Illinois counties, a statute requires certain cases to be mediated before being allowed in court.

"The role of mediator is a growing field for law students," she said. "As law students, they must learn how to represent clients in the mediation process."

"The whole idea is that the mediator doesn't make the agreement, but makes everyone listen to one another so they can work out an agreement and the terms of it," Rudasill said.

Rudasill said one-third of all cases are suited to mediation.

Such cases include durable power of attorney, general cases like divorce, consumer and debit-creditor problems, as well as cases involving abuse of the elderly.

"The majority of elder abuse is perpetrated by family members or care givers."

We provide legal support in a situation that is costly in terms of emotions and finances," Rudasill said.

Other alternative dispute resolution methods may be adopted by the clinic.

These include such practices as arbitration, med-arb (a combination of mediation and arbitration), moderate settlement conferences (rules requiring all parties to meet before a case comes to court), and early neutral assessment (expertise analysis of a cases giving strengths and weaknesses of a position).

The addition of the ADR Clinic to the Legal Clinic was provided for by a $166,000 grant by the U.S. Department of Education and matching funds from the University.

It takes new philosophy to attract grad students

By Kelley O'Connell
Student Writer

The SIUC Department of Philosophy gives students from all over the world of breadth of fresh air.

"The broad range of philosophy courses are part of the reason why students come to SIUC to receive their doctorate," Mark Johnson, chairman of philosophy, said.

Johnson, who came to the University in 1977, was promoted to chairman in January.

Before that, he was an assistant and then a full-time professor.

Philosophy students at SIUC are offered a pluralistic view of philosophy which means they can study history, analytical, continental and/or American philosophy.

"The number of graduate students has grown substantially since the 1960s," Johnson said. "There are approximately 40 graduate students now compared to 21 in the 60s."

Today, there is a total of 12 faculty members, 40 graduate students, 18 graduate assistants and 26 undergraduate students.

Last year the department celebrated its 25th year of offering doctorate degrees.

"The philosophy department is trying to center additional attention towards undergraduates," Johnson said. "The hope is to become bigger, but not too big."

Johnson said he finds that students from People's Public of China, Taiwan, Korea and Japan come to study at SIUC.

He said he believes many hear about the program is through word of mouth.

"Students hear all the good that comes out of SIUC and they come to see for themselves."

Many of these students receive excellent jobs out of it," Johnson said.

Mary Magada-Ward, a graduate student working on her dissertation, is studying the pragmatist feminist philosophy of science.

Magada-Ward said she still is amazed at the encouragement the faculty and students put forth at the philosophy department.

"There is a sense of community here, and a lot of interaction takes place between the students and the faculty," she said.

Magada-Ward came from Bowling Green College in Ohio to earn her doctorate in philosophy at SIUC.

Johnson, the recent recipient of the Outstanding Scholar Award, said the department provides an opportunity for students to go beyond a narrow focus of learning.

"The breadth of courses will help students get teaching jobs at small schools, which is what many of them want to do," Johnson said.

"Students initially become interested in rethinking the concept of thinking in the West," he said.

FCC allows telephone companies to transmit video via phone cables

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Communications Commission voted Thursday to allow telephone companies to transmit television programming and other video imagery into American homes using phone lines.

The FCC modified its rules to let local phone companies participate in the video marketplace — previously the exclusive domain of cable TV companies and the TV networks — by distributing video programming via their lines.

The commission also recommended that Congress repeal restrictions and authorize phone companies themselves to actually supply consumers with such programming, extending from entertainment to information.

That could include a menu of fare ranging from home movies to news and information data worthy of a library.

While the FCC has the power to let the phone companies transmit video programming, it is Congress that must decide whether the companies can supply the programming.

The phone companies called the FCC's action a "half step" and are awaiting congressional follow-up.

"We see it as progress," Bell Atlantic spokesman Bob Beran said of the FCC vote. "(But) it doesn't go far enough. We want the whole thing. We won't be happy until we have a level playing field."

Laying the groundwork to transmit video images through phone lines could take more than a decade and probably will not be realized until early in the next century.

Commissioner Sherrie Marshall said that in its 5-0 vote, with two partial dissents, the FCC reaffirmed its commitment to competition in the multibillion-dollar telecommunications industry.

"We are endorsing a host of new opportunities for American consumers and economic growth," Marshall said.

The FCC said the new competition would drive down prices in the video marketplace and improve service.

"Competition should encourage new investment in our telecommunications infrastructure as well as create more diversity in the viewing opportunities now available to the American public," Marshall said. "This decision can hardly be viewed as a death knell for the vibrant U.S. cable industry."

The commission's vote allows phone companies to use something called video dial tone to transmit video programming, linking phone lines to television sets.

An FCC fact sheet said video dial tone could give consumers more power in selecting what they want to watch and enable them to manipulate camera angles and replay parts of programs.

"Telephone companies and others could offer capabilities to allow the viewer to customize viewing by allowing the viewer to choose video programming based upon subject matter, favorite actors or directors, time of day, or other categories," the fact sheet said.

Phone interests would have to lay a labyrinth of fiber-optic cables to distribute video programming to people nationwide.

To supply programming, the phone companies would have to line up producers to make the programs.

Cable TV companies use programming made by such producers as Home Box Office and Cable News Network. Some cable companies own parts of the producers of their programs.

Beran said Bell Atlantic studies show that the phone company would profit by supplying video programming and reiterated that it wants to do more than merely distribute such imagery.

Texas Rangers hire Harrah for remainder of '92 season

ARLINGTON, Texas (UPI) — The Texas Rangers Thursday announced Toby Harrah, hired as an interim manager last week when Bobby Valentine was fired, would continue to manage the team for the rest of the season.

The announcement, which became a foregone conclusion after the Rangers responded to Valentine's dismissal by winning three straight games last week, came with Texas opening the second half of the season 6 1/2 games behind the front running Minnesota Twins in the American League West.

"He's been a coach and a minor league manager," said Rangers General Manager Tom Grieve. "He knows the players. He's focused on winning for the second half of the season."

"I think the players are very comfortable with Toby, but that in itself is not a reason for hiring a person to be the manager."

"On the other hand, we felt that if we brought someone new in here to manage, there would be a major adjustment period not only for the players but for the manager."

"The more we watched Toby over the four-day period, the more it was obvious that he was capable of being more than interim manager. I thought he handled the stress of the moment very well."

Harrah, 43, spent 16 years playing in the American League — eight of those in Texas. He had served as a coach under Valentine for two seasons before the former Texas manager was dismissed last week.

"Toby's a good friend of Bobby Valentine's," Grieve said.

"He was a loyal coach under him and it wasn't an easy task taking over the job. I think at the beginning, he might have had some second thoughts about it."

Hot putts save Pate in Open

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (UPI) — A hot putter can make up for a lot of problems in golf and Steve Pate provided another example of that Thursday.

Pate not only holed his share of putts in the opening round of the British Open, but he hit a series of excellent long, lag putts while firing a 7-under 64 that left him in a share of the lead.

"I putted very well," said Pate, 31, who has risen steadily through golf's ranks in his eight-year career. "Although I hit a long way from the hole, I never three-putted."

"I don't feel I am swinging the club that well, but my putter worked out pretty well. I'm not swinging as well as I have over the last month and a half."

Pate finished sixth on last year's money list on the American tour and won the 10th and final automatic spot on the United States Ryder Cup team. But two days prior to the opening of the Ryder Cup matches, a car in which he was riding was involved in an accident and he suffered severely bruised ribs.

That caused him to miss his

British Open win would leave Floyd with life's goal: Four major career titles MUIRFIELD, Scotland (UPI) — With the passage of time, Raymond Floyd's last major goal in golf appeared to be slipping away. Now it is realistically within his grasp.

A win in the British Open would make Floyd only the fifth player in the history of the game to capture all four major titles during a career. And after a 7-under 64 at Muirfield Thursday, he has a shot at it.

Floyd's round tied him for the first-day lead with fellow American Steve Pate and added another remarkable achievement to his growing list of recent surprising successes.

"My goal for years has been to win the British Open," said Floyd, who will turn 50 on Sept. 4. "It would make me only the fifth person who has ever done that (win all four majors) and it would be a fabulous company to be considered part of."

Only Jack Nicklaus, Ben Hogan, Gene Sarazen and Gary Player have won all four majors — the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and PGA Championship.

singles match in that event and although he fully recovered from that mishap, this season has not been as productive as last year. He is 27th on the money list and has not won since the early part of the 1991 campaign.

"I have not played well since the Masters (where he tied for sixth place)," said Pate. "I started playing better for the first time at the U.S. Open. For a couple of months, I have putted poorly, but it has got a little better."

him. "The spring trip is so vital and important to the program," Rigglesman said. "The proposed schedule change could have a definite impact on recruiting."

The schedule change will allow time off for finals week, which in the past was scheduled as the conference tournaments.

Hart said the positive element of this proposal will be the athletes' chance to make more of their education.

"The current schedule packs so many games into the season that the academics of the athlete could suffer," Hart said. "The new proposal will give the athlete more of a chance to excel at his studies."

Rigglesman said another worry about the proposed change is that a large part of the season will be played when the students are not in school so there will be fewer fan support.

"We get good support from the community but we need the students out here. We can't lose all those fans," he said.

Rigglesman said baseball powerhouses like Miami and Wichita State have huge local followings and do not rely on students for their fan support.

The proposed changes have been supported largely by coaches across the country because it offers scheduling equity,

Rigglesman said. "Only time will tell how these changes will affect our program," Rigglesman said. "I'm not completely against it, but it is not the answer to college baseball."

Hart said the proposal looked like it would pass at the NCAA winter meeting.

The proposal was presented to Division I athletic directors and coaches and will be voted on this December.

can add some more." China is holding out the carrot of "substantial rewards" for those reaping gold, exceeding the $2,500 each for the 1988 victors, equivalent to a year's wages for the average Chinese.

Triumphant South Koreans receive lifetime pensions of $759 per month for gold, $379 for silver and $253 for bronze.

In Japan, the cash bonanzas evoke mixed feelings.

"I'm afraid if athletes compete for the prospect of money, they won't enjoy the sport for itself," said Kimihiro Inomata, a sports psychology professor serving as a team adviser. "Ideally, cash for medals shouldn't exist in amateur sports. But realistically, times are changing. In some senses, it can't be helped."

Japan will be represented by a 377-member delegation, including 263 athletes — the biggest squad the country has ever sent to an Olympics.

A medal sweep is anticipated in the native sport of judo, with other successes possibly coming in the men's and women's marathon, wrestling, volleyball and baseball. Cycling offers a remote shot at a medal.

When baseball was an Olympic exhibition sport, the Japanese finished first in 1984 and second to the Americans in 1988.

Now that it's a medal event, Japan views the Cubans as its toughest rivals.

Since then, Krabbe's life made another stormy revolution. She was the focus of a highly publicized drug scandal, and when the air cleared she said she did not have time to prepare for the Olympics and will not go to Barcelona.

In Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Romania, athletes are struggling to find their place in a free market, and while some sports officials maintain a thin facade of hope that performances in Barcelona will match former glory days, others are more realistic.

Hungary, never a total serf to the hammer and sickle, has always stood on middle ground. Hungarians had made decisive, irreversible steps toward the West long before their government capitulated to its citizens. They have a long tradition of Olympic involvement and have excelled in a number of sports.

"We have lived through hard times," said Rezzo Gallow, head of Hungary's state Sports Office and a former national water polo player. "Sportsmen enjoyed privileged treatment in the former socialist countries, so in Hungary too."

He said that during the Jan. 5 Kadar era of "soft dictatorship," that sports "entered the services of the regime's political goals". Now, faced with reversing its economy and introducing new political thinking, Hungary is standing by its athletes and coaches as best as possible.

Gallow said politicians voted to support funds for sports from the state budget independent of party lines, and that additional money had been raised through a sports lottery. In a climate where people have more disposable income than their neighbors to the east and north, it has also been possible to attract sponsor money.

Earlier I didn't want to be there because I wasn't playing well and I didn't feel comfortable. I'd have anxiety attacks on the golf course."

Inkster, who also suffered a form of anxiety after losing a playoff at the Nabisco Dinah Shore, said she had a serious talk with herself a week ago. As a result, she isn't pressing as much.

"I've been playing well, but I haven't let myself relax," she said. "So I had a chat with myself and said 'don't worry about it, it's not a big deal.'"

"I played really relaxed today, even after my bogey."

Inkster, with 14 career victories, collected the eagle with a 30-foot chip on the par-5, 430-yard 15th hole. She also had four birdies against a single bogey.

Golden, so comfortable with her game that she didn't even have to think, played in the first group of the day at Wykagyl Country Club.

She registered seven birdies to set a target that none of the world's best women could better.

"I was in such a zone I didn't have to think much today," said the 25-year-old Texan. "I did everything well today. It's hard to get everything to click together, and when you do it's a lot of fun, like it was today."

All but one of her birdies came on putts of six feet or less, and the other was from 12 feet.

Golden consistently missing the cut every other tournament.
