Student charged

Stalking alleged by SIUC co-worker

By Stephanie Moletti
Police Reporter

An SIUC student, the first person in Jackson County to be charged under the Illinois statute making stalking a crime, is challenging the constitutionality of the law.

Douglas A. Lambert, a senior in journalism, was charged with the felony crime of stalking a female student on campus in March and is challenging the statute, claiming the law is too broad and covers too much innocent behavior by failing to require criminal intent.

Lambert and his attorney, Robert J. McCormick, also an SIUC student, have moved to dismiss the charge on the basis that the statute is unconstitutional.

"There is a need for such a law, but in its present form there is room for abuse," Lambert said.

Lambert has been charged on one count of stalking, a Class 4 felony for the first offense and one count of disorderly conduct, a Class C misdemeanor.

The State's Attorney's report on the incidents stated Lambert knowingly and without lawful justification placed Nicole Madison, an SIUC student from Edwardsville, in "reasonable apprehension of immediate or future bodily harm" when on at least two occasions he followed her.

The charge of disorderly conduct is a result of Lambert knowingly making a statement to Madison at the Student Center with obscenities in an "unreasonable manner as to alarm and disturb Madison and provoke breach of peace," according to the report from the State's Attorney.

The crime of stalking in Illinois is defined as: "A person commits stalking when he or she, knowingly and without lawful justification, on at least two separate occasions follows another person or places the person under surveillance or any combination thereof and:

1. at any time transmits a threat to that person of immediate or future bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint; or

2. places that person in reasonable apprehension of immediate or future bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint."

Prior to its 1993 amendment, the statute included threat and criminal intent as criteria for charges.

If convicted Lambert could face three to five years in prison and a fine. Lambert said this "is no laughing matter."

"This case is like a family feud. It's an example of how the statute promotes witch hunts," he said. "We put so much emphasis on putting people in jail. We need punishment but we need the carrot too, something more on the front end, on education."

Lambert was a part of the "blue crew" in maintenance in the Student Center during the spring semester. Madison also worked in the Student Center, where most of the alleged incidents reportedly occurred, Lambert said.

Kustra back in race, abandons radio show idea

By Angela Hyland
Politics Reporter

Illinois Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra announced Monday he had changed his mind about a decision to resign from his position to pursue a career in radio.

Mary Galligan, Kustra's press secretary, said the only career certainty that exists for Kustra is that he will remain employed for four years if elected.

"It's difficult to say what's going to be his last career move," she said.

John Jackson, a political science professor at SIUC, said Kustra's decision to rejoin the race, after he announced June 28 he would resign to host a radio show, was a decision he never would have expected.

"This is the third of three big surprises in the last two weeks," he said.

He said the first surprise came when Kustra announced he would resign to host a radio show, and the second came when Gov. Jim Edgar had quadruple bypass surgery.

Kustra's decision to resign last month as lieutenant governor and his decision Monday not to fulfill his contract with Capital Cities-ABC are unprecedented, he said.

"It's really rather odd," Jackson said.

Galligan said the decision was made late last week.

Although Kustra will receive a lower salary as lieutenant governor, she said he would be assigned additional duties in an effort to make the job more challenging and rewarding.

Kustra will become Edgar's senior advisor on economic development and will oversee the direction of the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, she said.

"One of the biggest issues in Illinois government is to improve its economy," she said.

Technical college updates programs

By Marc Chase
Administration Reporter

The College of Technical Careers, which was considered for elimination by SIUC administrative bodies, will be saved and will undergo several structural changes in its academic program, University administrators say.

The SIUC Board of Trustees approved a plan July 14 to streamline the college to bring it up to date with the modern demands of the workplace.

Changes in the college are a result of recommendations from the Illinois Board of Higher Education titled Priority, Quality and Productivity that evaluates programs at state universities for efficiency and cost effectiveness.

John Haller, vice chancellor for academic affairs, said the College of Technical Careers, which has the largest number of undergraduates of all academic programs at SIUC, will change from being a program where students primarily earn two year associate degrees to offering more extensive bachelor's degrees.

Haller said the changes will allow students seeking technical skills in specific areas, such as architecture technology and dental hygiene, to receive more thorough qualifications.

According to the SIUC

Productivity Report, changes within the College of Technical careers will be made through the year 2000.

Changes between 1994 and 1997 include upgrading six associate degrees in architecture technology, automotive technology, dental hygiene, mortuary science and funeral service, office systems and specialties, and radiological technology into bachelor degree programs.

According to the report, 14 new bachelor's degree programs will be offered through the college between 1997 and 2000, and most

Costello talks health care with community members

By Angela Hyland
Politics Reporter

Problems with the current health care system have become obvious to most Americans, but politicians are uncertain how to fund changes in a new plan, U.S. Rep. Jerry Costello said Monday.

The problem, however, is one which no longer can be ignored, he said.

"This is the greatest country in the world, and I think that we should provide basic services to the people in this country — and certainly health care coverage is a basic service, in my opinion," Costello said.

The proposed health care system would require more funding than currently is available, said Costello, who was in the area Monday to discuss health care.

To obtain additional funding, Costello said he believes a

U.S. TRYING TO DETERMINE ARISTIDE'S ANGLE — WASHINGTON — As recently as three years ago, Haiti's elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was a populist firebrand who upbraided the rich with threats of mob violence. Today, living in exile in Washington, D.C., Aristide comes across as a moderate who rejects vengeance and talks a lot about the World Bank. The contradiction between the two Aristides poses a critical riddle for the Clinton administration, whose policy in Haiti focuses on returning to power the 41-year-old Roman Catholic priest. In delicate talks, U.S. officials are working to pin down which Aristide they would be returning to Port-au-Prince. The question is especially significant because President Clinton is pondering sending U.S. troops to reinstall him. Washington also plans to keep U.S. forces in Haiti to defend Aristide after his return, whether the military regime departs peacefully or is ousted by force.

NORTH, SOUTH KOREA REVERTS TO THREATS — TOKYO — Less than two weeks since they were working congenially toward a historic summit meeting, North and South Korea have reverted to their familiar animosity, hurling threats and insults back and forth across the world's most heavily fortified border. The latest exchanges may be nothing more than hot air as usual on a peninsula where fiery verbal attacks have long been standard fare. But they could also indicate a difficult road ahead toward bilateral talks after North Korea's current confusion ends and a new government takes power in Pyongyang. The verbal dispute raging this week between the two bitter Cold War adversaries involves the propriety of mourning and condolences for the longtime North Korean dictator, Kim Il Sung, who died July 8. Pyongyang has staged an intensely emotional 10-day-long wake in honor of the late "Great Leader," with a parade and funeral scheduled for Tuesday morning and an elaborate memorial service Wednesday.

ISRAELI-JORDANIAN PEACE TALKS QUICKEN — EIN EVRONA, Israel — Israeli and Jordanian negotiating teams have met periodically in Washington for more than two years. But the Israelis have repeatedly called on the Jordanians and other Arab states to move the talks to the region, arguing that only then would the notion of a comprehensive settlement between Israel and its neighbors seem real to Arabs and Jews. The Jordanians sat on their side of the cease-fire line, on the east side of a rectangular table straddling the line, and the Israelis sat on theirs. But Faiz Tarawneh, head of the Jordanian team, seemed relaxed as he gave the first speech. "It is our expectation that the satisfactory results of the negotiations and accepted agreements will culminate in a treaty of peace that delineates carefully our rights and duties under conditions of peace," said Tarawneh.

MEDICAL USE OF POT TO REMAIN RESTRICTED — WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration will not relax a prohibition against the medical uses of marijuana because the scientific evidence is still insufficient to prove its therapeutic value, federal health officials said Monday. They said, however, that they would welcome controlled clinical trials that could further evaluate the drug's medical potential. From 1976 to 1992, the federal government had allowed a small number of individuals on a case-by-case basis to take the illegal drug for medicinal purposes. In a March 1992 ruling, the Bush administration discontinued the program, saying the drug's therapeutic value was unproven and that it could, in fact, cause harm to some patients because its use was associated with lung disease and other problems.

Local service dedicated to making outdoor world convenient for disabled

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Reporter

Eight years ago, Pete Linsner was a construction worker who enjoyed fishing off the shore of Lake Michigan.

One day, he was working on a job in Chicago when a co-worker dropped a 12-inch crescent wrench from 60 feet up. The wrench wound up buried four inches into Linsner's head.

Linsner survived the devastating accident, but was in a coma for 9 days.

After that, he underwent reconstructive surgery involving plastic plates and wires, and participated in 16 months of rehabilitation where he re-learned to walk and talk.

"I can now say that it was the best thing that ever happened to me," Linsner said. "Some people say 'why me?' I say 'why not me?' I didn't die for a reason, and now I may have found my niche."

The niche is Linsner's new job as founder and guide for Reel People Lured To Life, Inc.

He invented a wheelchair-accessible fishing boat and started a fishing guide service for disabled people and anyone else who may be interested.

Linsner said since he started the service, he has taken out fathers and sons, husbands and wives and senior citizens with walkers.

The service is not limited to fishing either. "If the person wants to fish, do some photography, have a picnic — fine — whatever they want to do," he said.

Along with his unique boat, Linsner has a host of other adaptive equipment, including electric fishing poles that reel in at the push of a button, the "wheelester," a casting device that can be triggered by the brush of a shoulder, and fishing poles with specially adapted handles.

"Carbondale's accessible," he said. "Why not have the lakes accessible too?"

He said the places that are accessible are not very good for fishing, and the good places are hard to reach.

"Instead of having to get to these hard to reach spots, I bring the boat to the person," he said.

Bill Baumann, program director for long-term services at the Center for Comprehensive Services in Carbondale, said the Reel People program is beneficial for both Linsner and the people he guides.

"Pete's done a great job in serving these people and helping them to realize what they can do," Baumann said. "What better way to serve the community than by doing something you like?"

Linsner said he prefers Cedar Lake because it is smaller and there are no licensing requirements imposed by concessionaires.

"I don't like the big lakes like Kinkaid and Crab Orchard," he said. "There's fear in a wheelchair. Most of them have never been in a lake, so there's some fear."

Even though Linsner just began the service this past spring, he is ready to expand. He said he is looking at the possibilities of including camping and hunting to his list of services.

Everything has not been smooth sailing for Linsner, however. When trying to start up the service, he ran into problems from area boat dock owners and the Lloyds of London insurance company.

"There's going to be idiots everywhere," he said. "Someone said I was ripping off the disabled."

But just as he did with his head injury, Linsner shrugged off adversity.

"I'm trying to provide something that's in dire need," he said. "When I see (clients) smile, I know I'm doing the right frigg'n thing."

Interested people can contact Pete Linsner at 529-1140.

Free legal advice available: Some flood victims eligible

By Aleksandra Macys
Campus Life Reporter

As people in the southeastern United States just begin dealing with the devastation of homes and lives due to flood waters, people in this area are recuperating from last year's disaster, and some are eligible for free help.

With the help of a grant from the Egyptian Area Agency on Aging, the legal clinic at the SIUC School of Law and attorney James B. Persels are offering free legal advice to flood victims.

The funding for Persels' efforts runs out July 31.

Victims who are eligible to receive the legal advice must be more than 60 years old and be residents of Jackson, Union or Alexander counties.

"We provide people with free legal advice," Persels said. "We will pick up the case and help them in legal and non-legal matters."

For non-legal concerns, Persels said he will help people contact the appropriate social agency.

"We will pick up the case and help them in legal and non-legal matters."

—James Persels

Persels can help flood victims with legal concerns that include housing concerns and insurance problems.

"We can also help people in consumer-type problems like repair rip-offs," he said.

Persels said he can also help with lost or damaged document replacement, informing people of their public benefits and in some areas of education concerning legal problems.

"Once people contact the clinic, I'll meet with them to give them free advice," he said.

Guyon recovering, returns to SIUC

By Marc Chase
Administration Reporter

After an absence of over a month due to triple by-pass heart surgery, SIUC President John C. Guyon returned to work Monday.

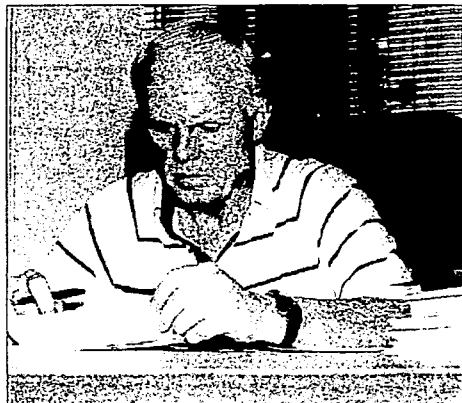

Guyon said he is prepared to resume the duties of University president, but will only be working for a few hours each day in upcoming weeks.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, has been the acting president since Guyon's surgery on June 10.

"I wasn't certain that I would do it (come back to work) at first," Guyon said. "I am ready now to reassume the responsibilities of president, but I have to take it easy."

Guyon said he will only be working about four hours a day for his first month back and will also attend various social events

Palestinian student plans to educate in homeland

By Kyle J. Chapman
International Reporter

With the growing complexities of the modern world, few people look to themselves to help contribute to a solution, but Ihab Barghouthi, a doctoral student in economics from Jerusalem, Israel, said his goal at SIUC is almost accomplished, and the time to go back to the Palestinian community is near.

Before coming to the United States, Barghouthi was a student and a journalist for a small paper in Jerusalem.

Living in Jerusalem as a student and a journalist sometimes brought him at odds with Israeli soldiers, Barghouthi said.

He is currently an active member of the Islamic Center of Carbondale and a graduate assistant in the economics department teaching GEB 211. Barghouthi will finish his Ph.D. work and return to Jerusalem tomorrow.

Barghouthi received a bachelor's degree in economics from BierZeit University in West Bank, Jordan and started his academic career in the United States at Appalachian State University in North Carolina where he received a master's degree in economics.

There has been tremendous unrest in his homeland of Israel due to confrontations between Palestinian militant groups and Jewish settlers. Confrontations between the two have often ended in violence.

The land has been occupied and controlled by Jewish settlers since 1948, but a new treaty established that Palestinians would receive some autonomy.

Barghouthi said he hopes to be able to help educate Palestinians so they can develop themselves.

"I think it is time to go back home and educate people and show them what is good for them," he said. "Palestinians are not just suffering from economic conditions, they also want to be respected as human beings."

Barghouthi said his contribution will be small until he spends more time in the Palestinian community.

"I've been gone from my country for five years so I don't think anyone will listen to me," he said. "If I want to be a leader of a community, large or small, I have to earn their respect and work hard for them."

"I will fit in best by teaching in one of the universities or working with one of the international organizations that works for the development of Palestinian communities like United Nations Development and Planning."

Yasser Arafat, Palestinian Liberation Organization chairman, returned to Israel after 27 years of exile to help rebuild the Palestinian infrastructure in several cities. Many of the areas are riddled with unemployment and violence, according to Arafat.

The problems in Palestine are complex, but developing good leadership is a start, Barghouthi said.

"The immediate need of Palestine is stronger leadership that will put the needs of the people before their own desires," he said. "Once we have good leaders, that will take care of the rest. They will be able to create a new generation of leaders."

Barghouthi said he will probably work at an all Palestinian university. But no matter where he is, he wants to educate people to help themselves.

Doctoral program: PQP strikes again

IN A NEVER-ENDING EFFORT TO SAVE MONEY, and with the recommendations of President Guyon and the University administration, the SIUC Board of Trustees has chosen to cut the doctoral program in physical education. The cut, announced Thursday, was the result of the Illinois Board of Higher Education's Priority, Quality and Productivity recommendations.

Other programs on the PQP chopping block were doctorates in sociology and political science, the master's in administration of justice and the bachelor's degree in consumer and family development, all of which received reprieves—for the time being.

THE PROGRAM LEAVES IN ITS WAKE SOME haunting questions that need to be examined before the PQP axe swings again, especially if this program's demise is to be used as a model for future cuts.

Doctoral students currently in the PE program have a right to expect to finish their degrees in the promised amount of time. The maximum time for doctoral residency is two years and after reaching candidacy, students have up to five years to complete required work.

Because students will be allowed to finish their coursework, the program is not technically cut at this moment but there will be no new admissions. Will faculty members, who have been in PQP limbo for two years, want to stay in a program that is dying? Will students be motivated to stay in a program when they do not know if the faculty will stay?

THE ENTIRE STRATEGY OF THIS DECISION IS puzzling. The program was cut because of low enrollment, not because of poor quality. The program boasts a 100 percent placement rate.

As time goes by, the students will dwindle to even lower numbers, but the program is bound to remain open until they finish. The plan will admittedly save money, but there is a long dry spell ahead before any savings are realized. No faculty members will lose their jobs since many teach master's and undergraduate level classes, too. Any savings from teaching salaries will be through attrition, not elimination.

THE SIMPLE FACT IS THAT ONE LESS graduate degree is offered at SIUC, and fewer students in that field will be attracted here. But more complex is the fact that all the graduate courses are interrelated. Eliminating one entire program is to throw the entire graduate universe out of orbit.

SIUC has built its reputation on the quality of its graduate programs, which are evaluated by the number of students and research dollars. Cutting doctoral programs is chipping away at the University's foundation.

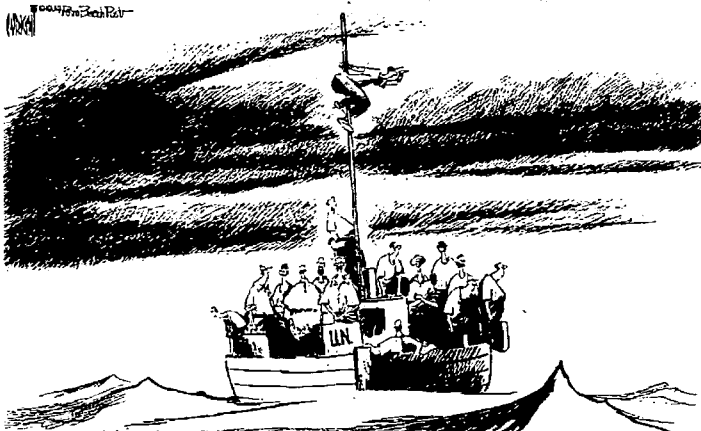

The next issue on the PQP agenda is faculty. IBHE will release a report in the fall and the University has one year to respond. It remains to be seen if faculty members will be eliminated for the role sin of low class enrollment.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

HAITIAN BOAT PEOPLE

Domestic violence reflects society

In the July 5 edition of this paper, the editorial staff printed a guest commentary by my opponent in the upcoming general election. Like many others throughout this country, my opponent has used the tragic murder of Nicole Simpson to jump on the bandwagon against domestic violence.

While, as State's Attorney, I welcome all to our fight against this extremely serious social problem, I must take exception to several statements made by my opponent in his "guest commentary."

First, my opponent asserts that "well over half [of the domestic violence cases] are dismissed before trial." I disagree. Since I took office on November 2, 1993, my staff and I have filed 143 domestic violence cases (either domestic batteries or violations of orders of protection).

As of July 12, 56 of these cases are pending. Of the remaining 87, 46 resulted in a finding of guilt and assessment of punishment. The other 41 cases were dismissed for two primary reasons. First, the defendant pled guilty in another case (10). Second, the victim failed to appear at the defendant's trial (17). These figures unequivocally contradict my opponent's "conservative estimate."

My opponent asserts "the central practical issue" in domestic violence cases as being "the victim is rarely willing to testify against the accused." While I do not concede this as being the central issue, I do admit that an inordinate amount of domestic violence victims do not appear at trial to testify against their abuser. However, to lay blame for this problem at the door of the local prosecutor is both simplistic and simple-minded.

There is no generalized reason for victims not appearing to testify. Fear, misplaced compassion, children, financial concerns, a desire for privacy, and ignorance all play a role in victims staying away from the courthouse on the day of the abuser's trial.

For a victim who has suffered through years of beatings, the fear of revenge by the abuser compels them not to testify. These women (and occasionally, men) have seen the demonic side of their abusers too often to garner the courage to tell the judge, let alone a jury of 12 strangers, what happened to them. They are convinced that no law is strong enough to protect them from future abuse.

As prosecutors, we see women who request dismissal of charges because the perpetrator "is not that had a guy." Or, "he'll change; he promised he would." Sometimes, the victim will say "If he goes to jail, he'll lose his job and I'd hate to see that happen." I can't estimate the number of victims who have spoken these or similar phrases to my staff and me. Even after we explain the essential wrongness of the abuser's actions to the victim, she persists in her demand for dismissal.

Viewpoint
By Michael Wepsiec

Children, too, play a role in the decision of the victim. Often, the victim and the abuser have parented children together. The victim will claim that prosecution of the abuser will deprive her children of their father. That the abuser frequently abuses these children only enhances this sad irony. In many cases we prosecute, the abuser is the sole or primary wage earner.

For victims of this type of abuser, a successful prosecution may mean a significant loss of financial support. Even for the victim whose abuser holds a minimum wage job, this prospect presents a powerful deterrent to the victim's appearance in court. Some victims have a deep-rooted belief that occurrences in the home should remain there. They simply don't want the world to know the terror they have experienced. While we try, it is difficult to earn the cooperation of this type of victim.

Lastly, we come into contact with victims who simply don't comprehend the wrongness and illegality of their abuser's actions. Some were reared in an environment where daily violence was tolerated. Others simply believe that a slap to the face or a punch to the stomach is appropriate between spouses. In either case, it takes a great deal of effort to educate these victims regarding not only their rights, but also the law.

When faced with a reluctant victim, we apprise her of what we can do for her. We explain the law and what resources are available to her. And while we can suggest speaking to the staff at the Women's Center, recommend the assistance of a counselor, and provide the name of a support group, we cannot force the reluctant victim to follow through with any of our suggestions. Our job is to develop cogent evidence and present it to the trier of fact. As prosecutors, we are protectors of society's laws, not social engineers.

My opponent suggests that local police agencies are inadequately performing their jobs by failing to interview suspected abusers. I must disagree with this assertion. If the suspected perpetrator remains on the scene when officers arrive, invariably he is asked for his side of the story.

Many times, however, the suspect asserts his right to remain silent, which the police must respect lest public defenders will seek to suppress statements made by the suspect. If the suspect has fled the scene, the police simply cannot question him.

The central issue in domestic violence cases is not that the victim is rarely willing to testify, as the guest commentator states. Rather, the issue is that society's laws and an individual's right to be free of physical harm have been violated. Domestic violence is merely a symptom of a disease that afflicts our society. Until we identify and address the causes of this societal illness, prosecutors across the nation must continue to treat the symptoms. Pointing fingers, as my opponent did in his "guest commentary," is not an avenue to solving the problem.

A comprehensive, multi-disciplinary approach is needed: law enforcement, alone, is not and should not be the answer. Each of us must participate in the fight against domestic violence. Educating our children that violence begets no good should be each of our responsibility. Comforting and providing support for the victims and their children is an additional necessity. Society must be willing to develop and fund counseling programs for abusers so they recognize and correct their misdeeds. Unless and until all of us act, the environment, which allowed the tragedy in California to occur, will continue to exist.

—Michael Wepsiec is the Jackson County State's Attorney.

Kustra will play a leading role in this area, she said. When Kustra announced his resignation last month, many political analysts speculated that Edgar might choose a female or other minority as a running mate to help balance his ticket. Edgar denied such speculation, saying he planned to choose someone who shared views similar to his own. Monday, Kustra said Capital Cities-ABC reluctantly had released Kustra from his contract.

"I don't even know the girl; her boyfriend is the one I had a grievance with," he said.

Lambert said he believes charges were pressed because of past problems he had with Madison's boyfriend, Daniel Carver.

Neither Carver nor Madison was available for comment.

The incident's were first reported to the Student Conduct office, but were then turned over to the State's Attorney, Lambert said.

"We have a lot of stereotypes and this statute allows for them," McCormick said. "What you are and what you look like could make you a stalker."

McCormick gave examples of how the statute could be abused such as if an unattractive, shy man followed the woman of his dreams on two occasions wanting to ask her to join him for a cup of coffee.

McCormick said under the new statute a man in this situation could be charged with stalking, although there was not criminal intent.

McCormick said the charge of stalking shifts the burden of proof onto the defendant, who must demonstrate innocence by calling on one's constitutional rights.

This is a violation of the one's constitutional rights of due process clauses in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments and freedom of speech provisions of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, McCormick said.

McCormick has suggested a new amendment to the statute to include credible threat, a threat made without lawful justification to cause bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint and criminal intent, intent to cause bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint, which in his opinion could make the statute constitutional.

Michael L. Wepsiec, Jackson County State's Attorney, did not wish to comment on the case prior to the hearing.

The case is set for preliminary hearing at 10 a.m. Thursday in the Jackson County Courthouse.

associate degree programs will be phased out.

Elaine Vitello, dean of the college, said the modern job market demands more advanced degrees, and the change from associate to bachelor's degrees could give SIUC students an advantage when they graduate.

"We could position ourselves according to the future," Vitello said.

"More jobs are requiring technical expertise and beyond that."

Haller said some money will be saved within the program from associate degree eliminations, but costs for the improvements in the college will require additional funding that the program does not already receive.

He said the funding will either be obtained from the Illinois Board of Higher Education or through reallocation of money that already exists in the University.

"I anticipate we (SIUC) will request some new moneys from the Board of Higher Education, and I think we will get some money from the Board," Haller said.

Ross Hodel, deputy director for the Illinois Board of Higher Education, said the improvements for the college will be sent to the IBHE for final review and approval on August 15.

Nutrition police turn on sirens: Mexican foods arrested for fat

By Carole Sugaman
The Washington Post

From the advocacy group that brought you killer kung pao chicken, killer lasagna and killer popcorn, now this:

It's the taco salads that were really the problem!

Yes amigos, just when you thought it was safe to eat the whole enchilada, the Center for Science in the Public Interest—the nutrition police who blew the whistle on Chinese and Italian restaurants and movie theater popcorn—Monday released a study about Mexican food.

If the past is any indication, this burrito bashing won't change many diners' habits, at least for long. In fact, out of sheer frustration, CSPI's fourth go-around may send people straight for the sour cream and guacamole.

That's because the results are even more depressing than the others.

Almost all of the most popular dinner platters and appetizers analyzed by CSPI have as much or more fat, saturated fat and sodium than you should eat in an entire day. That means if you drink water for breakfast, lunch and a snack, you'll be fine with nachos for dinner. Just forget about a main course.

At a jammed press conference, Michael Jacobson, executive director of CSPI and maestro of the 30-second fat bite, said that while "Mexican food is not seen as a health food, the numbers will shock anyone."

Ready? An order of beef and cheese nachos has as much fat as 10 glazed Dunkin' Donuts.

A Chile rellenos dinner, the Mexican equivalent of fettuccine alfredo, has as much saturated fat as 27 slices of bacon.

Most of the platters have as much if not more sodium than Chinese food. And you thought that was salty.

Even without the dressing, a taco salad contains an entire day's worth of fat and saturated fat.

To make it healthier, you'd have to order it without the beef, cheese, guacamole, sour cream and fried tortilla shell. What's left? "A bowl full of lettuce," said Bonnie Liebman, CSPI's director of nutrition.

To conduct its survey, the group bought 15 dishes and platters at 19 mid-priced table-service restaurants in Washington D.C., Chicago, Dallas and San Francisco, and sent equal portions of each dish to a private laboratory for analysis. No fast food restaurants were included, although several were chains such as Chi-Chi's, El Torito and Rio Grande Cafe. The foods analyzed were primarily Tex-Mex dishes, rather than authentic Mexican cuisine.

The results brought the by-now well-practiced annoyed response from the National Restaurant Association, which said that the CSPI study "feeds the nation's paranoia about the food system."

Jeff Prince, spokesman for the group, said that CSPI's other studies have had "a minimal effect" on dining habits, and that the publicity gives "the public a bad name and makes diners feel guilty unnecessarily."

To be fair, CSPI did offer some positive options—chicken fajitas and chicken burritos are the best bets, if, of course, you eat them without any of the fun stuff—the beans, sour cream, guacamole and tortilla chips. Or, choose grilled chicken or fish.

"I'd rather be DEAD than live with this pain"

The above statement is a strong one, but it just happens to be one that I and most other chiropractors hear everyday. It's a soul piercing remark when heard during a consultation; the pain may be from Migraine, backpain, sciatica or a host of other nerve or spinal related illnesses. We often hear that the patient has been everywhere, taken drug after drug with little or no relief. They've almost given up on life, being unable to do the chores they want to do or enjoy the sport they love the most. They've been further told that they will probably have to live with the pain or disability. Thank God for chiropractic that that is not always the case. Chiropractic often spells relief for chronic pain and disability. Listed below are just a few of the conditions that are helped in chiropractic offices everyday.

higher tax should be placed on tobacco products and suggested that companies with 500 or more employees could pay a 1 or 2 percent pay roll tax.

John Foster, chairperson of the political science department, said if the plan passes, there will be no immediate benefit for SIUC students because health insurance is included in the cost of student fees.

An affordable health insurance program, however, is an issue which should concern all students, he said.

Although people between the ages of 20 and 40 rarely use the health care system now, Foster said it will not always be this way.

"If you don't repeal the laws of biology along the way, we're going to need to start using it," he said.

Foster believes the current plan underestimates the cost of the new program and said he believes an increase in income tax costs would be necessary.

Although students may have to pay increased taxes to finance a plan they will not benefit from immediately, Foster said it will save them money in the long run.

By passing the plan, Foster said young people probably would benefit the most.

Costello said several options have been suggested by Congress to pay for the plan.

One way is to have employers pay more for the bulk of the coverage. The second way is to fund the program, in part, through an increase in taxes on tobacco products, he said.

"Quite frankly, it's too early to know what's going to happen," he said.

If the program is funded by employers, several options have been suggested, he said.

If small-business owners pay for coverage, they could receive government assistance, be funded entirely by the government, or be aided through a payroll tax of 1 or 2 percent on companies with 500 employees or more, he said.

If funding is obtained through an increase on tobacco products, it could mean smokers soon will pay $5.50 to $2 per pack more for cigarettes, he said.

"I think that's a small price to pay for radically changing our system so that everyone has basic, vital health coverage regardless of what happens to their job," he said.

Costello said he would be in favor of raising taxes on tobacco, but does not know how much of an increase he would vote for.

Money also could be made available if a cap were put on the level of funding the federal government would pay into Medicaid, he said.

Currently, Medicaid is funded jointly by the state and federal government.

If a cap were put on spending, it would mean more of a financial burden would be placed on the states, he said.

This would result in a reduction of services or a state-wide income tax increase, he said.

Costello said he strongly supports a universal health care program, but would oppose funding which would place an added financial strain on Illinois.

"We always talk about — and you read about — the 37 million people who have no coverage," he said. "The truth is that everyone has health care services."

"We always talk about — and you read about — the 37 million people who have no coverage. The truth is that everyone has health care services."

—Jerry Costello

For 37 million people, however, only minimal services are available, he said.

"They have no preventative medicine whatsoever," Costello said.

"They do not have medical services available to them to prevent major illnesses like people who have health insurance."

People who oppose universal care often do not realize that it costs more to pay medical bills people could not afford to pay than it would cost to pay for preventative medicine for these same people, he said.

Some people oppose universal health care because they believe they are paying for other people and would not benefit personally from the plan, he said.

"Anyone who is working today who has a job that provides health care coverage for them, they're only a paycheck away from losing their health coverage," Costello said.

Monks step into computer age with new businesses

By Leef Smith
The Washington Post

When the monks at Holy Cross Abbey in Berryville, Va., need guidance, they usually turn to God.

But no amount of prayer could help them decipher the computer system a donor had given them to improve their fruitcake sales.

For that help, the Cistercians turned to computer specialist Ed Leonard, an acquaintance from Loudoun County.

Within months, Leonard had streamlined the production and sale of the mail-order cakes.

But seeing how easily the monks adapted to computers made him wonder whether the key-board—not the kitchen—might be their most promising source of income.

So Leonard started a much more ambitious project.

He quit his job as an executive for a computer equipment maker and two years ago founded the Electronic Scriptorium, a Sterling, Va.-based business that farms out data-entry work to monasteries across the country. Most of the work involves creating electronic card catalogues for school and university libraries.

"The response has been overwhelming," Leonard said.

"The monastic community has embraced us. Right now, I have more monks than projects for them."

Several monks say such work not only helps pay their monastery's bills but also fits into a long monastic tradition.

They point out that monks were the first librarians, responsible for the manuscript transcriptions through which important writings were copied and distributed in medieval times.

"Our work with the Scriptorium is very much in line with the tradition that made monasteries communication centers," said Brother Benedict Simmonds, of the Berryville monastery, who has served as its liaison with Leonard's company.

"This work is part of the evolution of monastic usefulness. ... It's an idea that's so right it goes on like a light bulb."

Leonard expects to handle 40 to 50 projects this year.

"If the plant closes, if they downsize, if they realign, if they receive a pink slip, their health coverage is gone."

Problems also can occur if a person decides to get insurance with a different company because pre-existing conditions often will be excluded from coverage, he said.

"If you switch jobs or you go out to buy health insurance on your own because the plant closed or you lost your coverage, then the new company will provide coverage for everything that you're healthy for," he said.

"It excludes any problems that you may have had due to pre-existing conditions."

Humanities seminars encourage idea-sharing have a heavy teaching load.

"The theme for this summer seminar is 'A Constructionist Approach to Social Problems' which will focus on such topics as missing children, homicide, animal rights, and noise as a social problem," Best said.

Lynn Appleton, a sociology professor from Florida Atlantic University, said it is like going back to graduate school and yet not being in school.

"At the university I teach at, school is in session 12 months of the year and so there is not enough time for research," Appleton said.

Duncan Brown, a mass media professor at Emerson College in Boston, said the professors of this seminar each bring their way of thinking about a certain topic to the seminar. This allows professors to be opened to an array of different opinions.

"Because there are such varied specialties among the professors at the seminar, it presents a fresh way of thinking," Brown said.

The National Endowment for the Humanities is a federal agency that promotes progress and scholarship in the humanities and the arts in the United States. The endowment is an independent grant-making agency of the federal government to support research, education, and public programs in the humanities.

Grants are made through six divisions: Education Programs, Fellowships and Seminars, Preservation and Access, Public Programs, Research Programs, and State Grants.

One of the programs it offers is the Summer Seminars for College Teachers. These seminars are offered for college teachers and independent scholars who want to revitalize their understanding of significant ideas and texts in the humanities. This program is almost 20 years old and offers about 50 programs a year, Best said.

"This is the second seminar that SIUC has had, although I'm not sure that it will be offered in the future," Best said. "Offering such a seminar is very competitive and is given to major research institutions."

Bill Tregoe, a sociology professor from Lansing Community College, said he is researching how social problems create types of jobs.

"This seminar creates the concept of the colleague that involves helping others and sharing work and ideas," Tregoe said. "We bounce ideas off of one another." The professors come from some varied regions of the country and the world.

"Professors come to this seminar at different stages of research.

Some are just starting a project. Others are in the middle of a book. And others are revising some of their material," Tregoe said.

The seminar will end July 29. It is a seven week course.

long, and lacking important information.

"The federal government is run by a constitution that's only five pages long," he said. "I wonder why GPSC has a constitution that is 20 pages long and still doesn't have all the details."

Smith said the duties of the council's president should be more specifically defined.

"I think the duties of my office, while I recognize that they ought to be vague enough to offer some flexibility, should take up more than nine lines, yet that's all that's there," he said.

Matthews said the constitution needs to include more information on the council's committees.

Smith said he thought regulations relating to the election of GPSC leaders and other issues should be built into the constitution.

"I think that there's going to be some recommendations for some big changes — recommendations about making my position and the vice presidents positions elected at large, some suggestions about how we might represent unclassified graduate students, and things of that nature," he said.

Matthews said the committee would probably be responsible for determining the feasibility of a merger between GPSC and the Undergraduate Student Government.

Smith said he would ask for volunteers for the committee during the meeting, and will continue to recruit committee members.

"I think that this needs to be a competent committee and that what we're going to do is encourage as much diversity on this committee as possible," he said.

Other items to be discussed at the meeting include amendments to the National Association of Graduate and Professional Students constitution, and a reception for SIU trustees to be held this fall.

of hunting accidents to a minimum nation wide, Sinkus said.

In order to purchase a hunting license, hunters under 16-years-old must successfully complete the course, Smothers said.

The course has been taught since 1959. In 1976, it became a requirement for people under 16 to purchase a hunting license, said Sinkus.

"We've certified a lot of young people through this course," said Sinkus.

The course also will cover wildlife identification, bow hunting, wildlife management and advantages of hunting on the environment and wildlife, said Smothers.

Students should bring their own lunch; however, there is a restaurant within driving distance.

No supplies are needed and a work-book is free to take home after the course, Smothers said.

The class will be held in two days from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. July 26 and 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. July 27.

Those interested should call the Carlyle Visitors Center at (618) 594-2484.

Smothers said pre-registration is required and there are plenty of slots available.

The promotion of gun safety and hunting techniques will be the focus of a hunting safety certification course offered July 26 and 27 at the Carlyle Lake Visitors Center.

Hunters and future hunters will be able to take the free 10-hour course, which will focus on several issues including helpful hunting topics. Joe Smothers, instructor of the course and Carlyle Lake park ranger, said.

"We want to teach good hunting ethics and good gun handling and safety," he said.

In the state of Illinois during 1993, 29 hunters were involved in hunting accidents. Most were because of over-excited hunters shooting themselves. Bill Sinkus, volunteer service coordinator for the Illinois Department of Conservation, said.

"We like to bring in a good representation of the several types of firearms including semi-automatics, bolt actions, and several types of pistols," Smothers said.

Rootstock II: Time ripe for SIUC peach research

Bradley Taylor, a professor in Plant and Soil Sciences, clears some weeds away from an apple tree research plot, Friday morning. Along with his research on peach rootstocks, Taylor also studies root variations on apple trees at the SIUC Orchards.

Quality produce, growth efficiency aims of studies

By Heather Burrow
Special Assignment Reporter

SIUC is the only university in Illinois that conducts research on peach rootstock.

To help fund this research at the Horticulture Research Center, student workers at SIUC sell peaches, apples and plums in front of the Agriculture Building.

Susanne Howards, a student worker, sells fruit 12:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday until fall semester.

"We sell by volume in half packs, full pack, half bushel and bushels," Howards said. "There are anywhere from one to five workers doing this."

Bradley Taylor, a professor in plant and soil sciences, said his research involves rootstock and is used to help improve the quality of peaches for the consumer and increase efficiency.

The first research on peaches started in 1984, and the second generation of studies began this year.

Taylor said the main problems growing peaches in Southern Illinois is the soil.

"The major concerns in this area are soil because it is less than ideal with so much clay content," Taylor said. "Clay makes for water log problem and the roots not getting sufficient oxygen."

Another concern is the soil on peach growing sites, which are not well drained and are susceptible to flooding and severe droughts, Taylor said.

"Through researching about 20 different types of rootstocks, we are trying to identify root systems that can survive the environment," he said.

Taylor said an example of a good root system combination in Southern Illinois' soil environment is using almond rootstock, which is closely related to peaches in parentage, combined with peach rootstock because almonds are better in droughts.

This research assists in making peach trees that are long lived and produce for as long as possible, Taylor said.

Wayne Sirles, manager of the family-owned business, Rendleman Orchard, and an SIUC graduate in plant and soil sciences, said he agrees with the impact research can have on the quality of fruit.

"Research always needs to be done because it makes a difference in bud hardiness and even color of the fruit," Sirles said.

Taylor has some peach trees at Rendleman Orchard that are used in research at SIUC.

"Four or five trees are isolated, about 40 or 50 bushels, and they are tested with chemicals and the company Brad works for pays him to do the research," Sirles said. "These trees are not for human consumption, only for research. They are destroyed after the research is completed."

The research is also used to make it more efficient for growers because if the peaches are large and they mature in a short space of days, this increases economic viability, Taylor said.

"If stores buy peaches that are grown locally, the fruit can be on the tree a day or two longer and more sugar is produced which makes the fruit sweeter," he said. "Peaches shipped across country are picked when they are immature and they never attain quality."

SIUC's orchard is on Rowden Road across from SIUC bull test station.

Cup helps us notice foreign friends

By Bill Plaschke
Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif.—The television image-makers will tell you the World Cup was about rock stars and gods.

The Century City suits will tell you it was about economic impact.

The soccer nerds—and won't they be coming out of the upholstery—will tell you it was about a future professional league.

But, as usually happens when people forget about other people, they will all be wrong.

The World Cup was about cabbies.

It was about climbing into the back seat of a ripe taxi, glancing up at the foreigner sitting on a strange bed of wooden beads behind the wheel, then doing something for the first time in your adult life.

It was about talking to the guy.

It was about asking where he was from.

Then, of course, it was about asking about his country's soccer team.

We could have asked this before. But, sadly, never before have we cared.

For one month, the World Cup offered our diverse nation a chance to sit at a common table. Those of us lucky enough to accept that invitation looked across that table with surprise.

Immigrants who are the recipients of our anger and butts of our jokes, those with funny accents who pass through our lives as blurs behind a mini-market counter or in a strawberry field or in the front seat of a cab ... they became more than just images.

They became people. People with voices and homes and dreams.

Before the World Cup, we considered them aliens.

After spending a month using the universal language of soccer, we have discovered they are neighbors.

Forget this notion about a sporting event bringing the world together. The World Cup taught us about the bridges that can be built within our own borders.

Our differences, often the reason for disdain, suddenly became cause for celebration.

There was the cabby from El Salvador who was still furious at a perceived slight to his team during qualifying.

Yes, I said, I now understood about the power of soccer referees, and wasn't that too bad.

By the way, he too bad, he came to this country several years ago, lives in a small apartment outside New York City, and hopes one day to save enough money to bring the rest of his family.

Good luck, I said. And for once, I wasn't just saying it.

Then there was the cabby from Sudan who wondered if the Nigerians had enough gumption to survive the second round.

When he wasn't driving a cab, he was working toward obtaining a college business degree that he could use back home.

He didn't particularly want to move to our country, but he didn't know another way he could help give his own country a future.

You should be proud of yourself, I said. And for once, I wasn't just saying it.

Suddenly, numbing rides usually marked by weird pipe music coming from a makeshift radio became lively 30-minute debates.

Money changed hands, but so did smiles. The temptation was to hang up a sign so the next passenger would understand:

The World Cup was here.

Frighteningly, perhaps, this soccer tournament also changed the way we looked at people we thought we knew so well.

Like Patricia, an "aunt" to our children, the first person we invite to holiday celebrations, a former employee and dear friend.

She moved here from Colombia nearly 20 years ago, but until this summer had always resisted becoming a citizen.

When we asked why, she could never fully explain.

She just shrugged when we told her we would never understand.

Then her national soccer team arrived in Southern California for the World Cup.

And while watching it play on television from my assigned work stations on the East Coast, my eyes were opened.

Colombia was not just a bad joke about drugs, it was an actual country with real people possessing real passion.

These thousands of Colombians, dancing and singing in the Rose Bowl stands, were far different from ones we usually see on the CNN clips of dirty Bogota streets and funeral processions.

I heard their chants, and recognized their anguish as their team fell behind, and my mind turned to Patricia.

Yes, I thought. So this is who she is.

Excitedly one morning, I picked up the phone in hopes of reaching her, of telling that I thought I understood why she was reluctant to become a citizen, that perhaps it was because she did not want to lose her heartfelt Colombian roots.

But she was not home.

She had driven to the Rose Bowl with several other Colombian friends to watch the game against the United States.

And here, I didn't even know she had Colombian friends.

anyone." Apparently, he's right.

Thomas has 33 home runs, seven more than Albert Belle, and for all the celebration of Ken Griffey Jr.'s summer, Thomas is hitting almost 40 points higher with nearly as many home runs. His power is almost beyond description, and so far, no one has asked to check his bat for cork.

As for Thomas' size ... well, Mickey Mantle says he stood next to the White Sox slugger at the All-Star Game, measured Thomas' 6-foot-6, 260-pound frame and decided, "I felt like a bat boy in comparison."

Yet, there are moments when Thomas is human at the plate. The Indians' Mark Clark performed a near-miracle during the series, keeping Thomas quiet in all four at-bats during the Indians' 3-2 victory. Clark says his success comes from "throwing a lot of splitters at Frank, keeping him off-balance. I've always had good luck with him that way." Counters Thomas: "I wouldn't say always, but Clark does throw me a lot of splitters and breaking pitches. He's tough to hit against."

Thomas rebounded quickly against the Tribe, hitting a 419-foot home run against Jack Morris in the Sunday finale of the key Central Division series, proving once again there's no one method to containing him. "Everyone's tried everything," Thomas says with a smile. "In, out, curveballs, splitters, every series I see something different from a new set of pitchers. That works with most hitters, because they don't adjust, they keep swinging the same way. But I'm not like that."

If he continues, Thomas could be the first player since Carl Yastrzemski in 1967 to win the Triple Crown.

Even if Thomas falls short, he's a near-certainty to finish above .300 with at least 20 home runs and 100 RBI for the fourth consecutive season.

Only Ted Williams and Lou Gehrig have done that. American League pitchers' best hope now is for a strike.

DeNoon does receive some private financial assistance in order to compete in some of the far away races, but will shell out between $2,000 and $2,500 before the summer circuit concludes.

Once autumn rolls around, though, DeNoon puts his own athletic career on hold to pursue his greatest passion in life, coaching the Saluki women's teams.

"Working with kids is my existence and seeing them rise above what they think is their limits," DeNoon said. "When you see people do that, that's what it's all about."

rounds.

The Brazilian goal tender Taffarel changed the momentum of the match when he made a diving save against Daniele Massaro, while Dunga made his kick giving Brazil a 3 to 2 advantage setting the stage for Baggio.

Baggio, who had been awarded the best soccer player award in Europe, played the entire game with a pulled hamstring. Even with Baggio not 100 percent the Italians would not want anybody but the world's best player to attempt the pressure kick.

Most of the game was a tightly checked match played in the mid-field, but Brazil had a decisive edge in possession time and shots.

Abdel-Jabbar said the game is typical for a World Cup final.

"Traditionally the final is played very conservatively and close because no one wants to give an easy goal," Abdel-Jabbar said.

Abdel-Jabbar said even though the game was not all that exciting it did possess the contrast between Latin American soccer and European Soccer.

"Countries like Brazil play an attacking more individual style of game, while Europeans play defensive and attack as a group down the field," Abdel-Jabbar said.

He said Italy didn't use this style effectively.

"All Italy looked for was a long ball counterattack and hope for a goal, which is not very likely," Abdel-Jabbar.

He said while the game did not have end to end action, the game was a good battle between two of the top teams in the world.

World Cup's ending frustrates fans

By Doug Durso
Sports Reporter

After 120 minutes of grueling soccer, the most watched sporting event in the world was decided by penalty kicks with Brazil prevailing over Italy.

When Italy's star Roberto Baggio sent the ball sailing over the goal, giving Brazil a 3-2 win in penalty kicks, the Brazilian team erupted with joy while Baggio could only stare at the empty goal.

The game set two firsts in World Cup history. This was the first

Brazil tops Italy on penalty kicks after 120 minutes of play

World Cup final to end with penalty kicks and the first final to end regulation time in a scoreless tie.

Maher Omar, a teaching assistant in engineering from Palestine, said he thought the game was boring.

"Both teams were playing scared, especially Italy, neither team wanted to give up a cheap goal," Omar said.

Omar said he also thought penalty kicks was not the right way to finish a World Cup final.

"Penalty kicks is a very cheap way to finish a Cup final, players work so hard then have to lose the championship that way," Omar said.

He said during other games penalty kicks might be appropriate, but during a final other ways should be explored.

After 90 minutes in regulation and 30 minutes of overtime, I can see why in other matches penalty kicks could be used but not in the final of the World Cup," Omar said. "I don't know exactly what the solution is but maybe sudden death after overtime is the answer."

Khaled Abdel-Jabbar said he agrees that penalty kicks should not be used in the final but it has its own allure.

"Penalty kicks stress the individual skills of the players and has been a tradition, but not in this situation," Abdel-Jabbar said.

The penalty kicks, which consist of five rounds with each team designating its players, began with the 34-year-old Italian captain Franco Baresi shooting, like Baggio, over the goal. The advantage had seemingly shifted over to Brazil, but Italian goal tender Gianluca Pagliuca robbed Mauro Silva to keep the tie breaker scoreless.

In the second round both Italy's Demetrio Albertini and Brazil's best player, Romario, both beat the goal tenders and scored. Alberigo Evani and Branco also scored to make the score 2 to 2 after three

Sox' Thomas is 'Big Hurt' for AL pitching

The Sporting News

CHICAGO—The destruction of American League pitchers continues, so routinely now, it is fair to ask: Can anyone solve Frank Thomas?

Even after going just three for 11 in the weekend showdown against the Indians, Thomas is still flitting near .380, a number that tells only a fraction of his story for 1994.

At the All-Star break, Thomas led the American League in seven offensive categories, including batting average, runs, walks, on-base percentage, slugging, total bases and extra-base hits. He had reached base safely 209 times entering this week, tops in the majors, and at his current pace he will challenge Babe Ruth's record of 379 set in 1923.

Thomas is an opposing pitcher's nightmare, a power hitter who rarely chases pitches out of the strike zone. That's why Thomas can, without arrogance, advise pitchers not to bother finding a strategy to defeat him, because "there's no one way to pitch to me, really. I can make adjustments to

Carr plays reverse role as coach

Saluki forward coaches kids at Rich Herrin's hoops camp

His team is made up of 16-year-old boys from two separate high schools—three are from Breese Central, which is near Carlyle, and three are from nearby Cartersville.

However, while attending this week's Rich Herrin Basketball Camp at the Arena, their coach Chris Carr demands they play as a single unit.

"I just want them to play hard," Carr said after his team finished up its final game of the day on Monday. "As long as they play together, we're unbeatable."

Carr, a 6-4, 195 lb., junior forward for the Saluki basketball team is in charge of coaching the six boys through 30-minute organized scrimmages that help sharpen their skills in game situations.

Keith Book of Breese Central, who Carr labeled his "low-post-man," said he's seen Chris play on television a few times and has learned a lot from him as a coach.

"He does a good job of coaching," Book said. "He's mostly big on teaching us how to play defense."

Carr became extremely excited during the final minutes of the team's last game when one of his players hit a string of consecutive three-pointers. But after the final buzzer sounded, Carr displayed the same enthusiasm for his hopes of having a positive impact on his players lives away from the court, as well as on it.

"I love working with these kids and I'd love to say I've had an influence on them," he said. "For them to go home and tell their mom or dad that Chris taught me this, or Chris taught me that, it would all be worth it. Not only do I want to be an influence in basketball, but in life."

Besides tutoring high school kids on the finer points of the game this summer, Carr completed a two-week intercession course at SIUC and continues to polish his own hardwood skills in St. Louis at Anthony Bonner's (New York Knicks) summer league program.

The upcoming season will be somewhat of a transition for Carr and senior front line teammate Marcus Timmons as the two will be without center Minko Pavlovic for the first time since playing for the Dawgs.

According to Carr, though, Saluki hoops fans should not have to panic, thanks to 6-9 Kentucky transfer Aminu Timberlake, who will be eligible to play after sitting out last season.

"He'll (Timberlake) fit in well," Carr said. "He's athletic, can run the floor well and can finish on the break."

Carr himself can look forward to a season full of double-teams and hard fouls after elevating himself to one of the Missouri Valley Conference's premier threats in 1994, but that doesn't seem to bother the native of Pilot Knob, Mo., one bit.

Taking race circuit by storm: DeNoon places high in N.Y.

By Grant Deady
Sports Editor

Saluki women's track & field and cross country coach Don DeNoon continued his blistering pace on this summer's race walking circuit Saturday with a third place finish at the U.S. Track & Field Open and Masters Championships.

The event took place in Niagara Falls, N.Y., where DeNoon muscled through a field of 151 competitors and finished first among Masters Division participants.

Judging at the meet was extremely rigid as 12 athletes were disqualified for not towing the fine line between walking and running. DeNoon said he received two warnings for his technique after never before having a problem with it.

"I've gone through the whole year and never had a judge look at me twice," DeNoon said. "I got two red cards, one more and I would have been disqualified."

The strong finish at Niagara Falls comes on the heels of DeNoon's sixth place showing at the U.S. Olympic Festival two weeks ago and helps prepare the 11-year SIUC coaching veteran for the upcoming World Masters Championships in Toronto, Canada on July 31.

DeNoon is the defending champion at the event after walking away with the title in Japan last fall.

Despite being fatigued during Saturday's race, DeNoon said he'll be more than ready when the gun fires north of the boarder just 12 days from today.

"I was really tired Saturday, but when you get into top physical shape, you want to keep going," he said. "That's how I feel right now, but you have to be careful not to over-train."

Competition at the World Championships may stiffen for DeNoon as his main American threat, James Carmine of Pennsylvania, is slated to participate.

Also, a former Russian Olympic gold medalist, who is now in his 40's, is said to be registered for the race.

DeNoon, 51, said he figures his Russian counterpart to be in top physical shape, but claims Carmine has never come much closer than within 10 minutes of his 20k times.

The travel time for DeNoon and his wife, who usually accompanies him, is extensive since the couple piles into their red 1989 Mercury Cougar with 134,000 miles to nearly every

After beating down Missouri Valley Conference pitchers last spring, SIUC catcher Tim Kratochvil has taken his hearty swing and home run hitting ability to the Great Lakes League for the summer.

Kratochvil's most recent assault on the major league baseball-sanctioned, NCAA league came last Saturday as he was named the most valuable player of the league's All-Star game.

In addition to being named MVP, Kratochvil also won the Home Run Contest which took place before the game.

In earning MVP honors from the game, Kratochvil had a home run and a double.

Playing for the Dayton Aviators, Kratochvil is hitting .393, second in the league, with three home runs and 22 runs batted in.

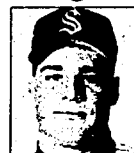

The team plays two halves in the league and if it finishes first during a half, it goes to the playoffs. The Aviators were 17-6 in the first half and are 7-1 in the second half. Because of a few rained out games, the team still has a shot to win the first half. Last year, Kratochvil hit .349 for the Salukis and led the team with 10 homers and 48 RBIs.

Kratochvil, a junior, began his career at SIUC in 1993 when he began his collegiate career with a home run in his first at-bat.

He finished last season with a home run in the playoffs which measured over 500 feet.

The Salukis finished the season 27-26 and 9-10 in the conference.
