Flight 800's black boxes located

Information may tell why plane crashed, exploded

Los Angeles Times

EAST MORICHES, N.Y. — Two "black box" recording devices that could provide crucial evidence on why TWA Flight 800 crashed into the Atlantic Ocean off Long Island eight days ago were recovered late Wednesday night by Navy salvagers using a remotely controlled underwater camera.

The National Transportation Safety Board hopes the cockpit voice and flight data recorders will provide important information about the last moments of flight before the Boeing 747 jumbo jet exploded in a ball of flames and plummeted into the sea, killing all 230 people aboard.

Robert Francis, the NTSB vice chairman heading up the investigation of the crash, said he was notified about 11:30 p.m. EDT that the two orange metal boxes containing the recorders had been located by a video camera on a remotely operated vehicle searching the ocean floor 104 feet below the surface.

Francis said the boxes, found in a pile of debris directly beneath the recovery ship Grasp, were being brought to the surface by divers and were to be flown to Washington for analysis at NTSB laboratories.

It is hoped that the cockpit voice recorder will yield conversations of the cockpit crew in the last 30 minutes before the crash, along with other cockpit sounds such as the clicking of controls and any alarms that may have sounded. The flight data recorder logs information on about 20 technical aspects of the flight, including power and flap settings, airspeed, altitude and rates of climb and descent.

Francis said that as of late Wednesday, authorities had recovered the bodies of 114 of the 270 people who are believed to have died in the crash, made positive identifications on 95 of them, tentative identifications on 12 and notified the families of 94.

Assistant FBI Director James K. Kallstrom declined to comment on reports that authorities have found fragments of metal in some of the bodies that have been recovered.

GPSC members disagree about representation

By Signe K. Skinion
DE Government/Politics Editor

Changes in SIUC's Graduate School programs will take place in one year after the Illinois Board of Higher Education completes a self-study; however, two Graduate and Professional Student Council members disagree on how SIUC should be represented on a committee involved with the changes.

Monty Peerbhai, GPSC member, said he was asked to be the IBHE Student Advisory Committee graduate representative until problems arose between him and GPSC President Mark Terry.

"There are two positions available to each college on the IBHE/SAC committee," he said. "One goes to an undergraduate and the second to a graduate, but only one of the representatives is a voting member while the other is an alternate. GPSC and the Undergraduate Student Government each pick one representative and then agree on which of the two will be the voting member on the committee."

IBHE/SAC is composed of two students from every state university and votes and discusses policy changes affecting graduate and undergraduate schools. Every eight years, IBHE conducts a Priorities, Quality and Productivity study on the state graduate schools to decide what programs should stay or be Swing Set played the last Sunset Concert at Turley Park Thursday night to a crowd of nearly 1,500 people.

Swing Set plays last Sunset

By Lisa M. Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

After six Sunset Concerts, the final get-together was held at Turley Park Thursday evening. Community togetherness was felt as friends and families joined one last time this summer.

Maurice Leonard, of Carbondale, said he came to the concerts this summer to be with his friends and eat good food.

"I'm here, week after week, to be with my friends and sight see," he said. "I enjoy eating and drinking and getting everyone together. Even if I don't like what I hear, it's still a good place to be."

Swing Set, a band that played early jazz, filled the ears of concert-goers on Thursday. The band provided easy-listening background music to nearly 1,500 people.

Michelle Myers, from Carbondale, said this was her first time venturing to a Sunset Concert.

"I've had such a good time," she said. "It's great to get SIUC students and people from the community together, because we are real people, not just crazy kids. I think these kind of things should last at least until September. So, when the majority of the student population comes back, they can enjoy it."

Michael May, a senior in radio and television from Mundelein, said he makes it to the concerts when he does not have to work.

"This is only the second concert I've been to," he said. "It's a

IBHE reviews math, English departments

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Illinois Board of Higher Education's response to self-studies of the SIUC math and English departments could foreshadow the board's response to all University departments, which send off their own reports next year, an IBHE official says.

Kathleen Kelly, IBHE Academic Affairs deputy director, said all state universities' math and English departments are being reviewed as part of the IBHE's eight-year cycle of department review.

"In reviewing the studies, we've identified some concerns," she said. "There's an oversupply of Ph.D. graduates. Graduates who invested many years in education are not getting jobs in their fields."

Kelly said the math and English studies are significant because all other departments at state universities, including those at SIUC, are preparing to send similar self-studies to IBHE for the board's Priorities, Quality and Productivity initiative.

Nationwide studies have shown science and engineering departments, among others, to be conferring too many graduate degrees, she said.

Ronald Kirk, SIUC mathematics chair, said his department sent data about its doctoral program to the IBHE in the spring and was waiting

Residents voice concern over incinerator's dioxin hazards

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Despite reassurance from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and Incineration management that incineration at Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge will not pose a significant risk to cancer, local residents still expressed their concerns at a public information meeting Wednesday night.

Officials at the meeting used maps and drawings, passed out written information, and answered questions from the public concerning the hazardous waste being burned at the refuge.

Kevin and Jolene Svoboda, who have lived in Crab Orchard for 18 years, came to the information meeting to find out from officials how the incinerator will affect them, since they use Crab Orchard Lake about four times a week.

The Svobodas said they were worried about the dioxin landing on fruits and vegetables in their garden.

"We came down to Southern Illinois to be around all the lakes and country, to get away from all the pollution around Chicago, and now it seems like they are bringing the pollution right to us," Jolene said.

Officials estimate the amount of dioxin produced from burning PCBs at Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge will increase the cancer risks for residents living in Marion by less than one in 10 million.

But some residents and environmental groups feel any additional risk to public health is too much.

TUTSI-LED ARMY TAKES OVER GOVERNMENT —
BUJUMBURA, Burundi—The Tutsi-led army took power in Burundi Thursday and installed one of its own as president. The coup d'etat was widely expected since President Sylvestre Ntibunganya, a Hutu civilian, fled to the U.S. ambassador's home Tuesday evening, citing fears for his life. Although bloodless, it effectively destroyed a fragile experiment in democratic coalition government in this central African country, which long has been riven by ethnic hatred between its dominant Tutsi minority and an 85 percent Hutu majority. Defense Minister Finim Sinuyobcha, in a radio broadcast announcing the military takeover, declared the National Assembly and political parties suspended. He said demonstrations and strikes are illegal. The minister said Pierre Buyoya, a Tutsi retired major who headed an earlier military government, has been named interim head of state because in the past he had "tried to unify Burundi and he tried to put democracy in place."

WORKER KILLED IN NUCLEAR POWER ACCIDENT —
KIEV, Ukraine—Two accidents at a Ukrainian nuclear power station Wednesday killed a worker and released radiation, officials said Thursday. The accidents underscored international fears over the safety of Ukraine's Soviet-built, cash-strapped nuclear plants. Western nations have pressed Ukraine to shut down the Chernobyl plant, where a reactor exploded 10 years ago in the world's worst nuclear disaster. The latest accidents occurred Wednesday at the Khmelnytsky plant in western Ukraine. In the past 16 weeks, each of Ukraine's five nuclear plants has suffered a mishap in which radiation leaked or a reactor was forced to shut down. Khmelnytsky's sole reactor has been shut down since April 20 for maintenance and was being tested before a planned restart of electrical generation, officials said. A plant employee was killed during a test when a pipe burst, hitting him in the head and releasing radioactive steam, officials told news agencies.

WHITEWATER PROSECUTORS WRAP UP CASE —
LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Federal prosecutors wrapped up their case Thursday against two Arkansas bankers on trial for fraud and conspiracy, as rural neighbors jammed the courtroom in a stoic show of solidarity for the well-known Democrats and associates of President Clinton. Nearly 150 people from Perry County sat impassively as a deputy to Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr recapitulated the case against the bankers, Herby Branscum Jr. and Robert M. Hill. W. Hickman Ewing Jr. told the jury the two bankers conspired to illegally transfer funds from the small financial institution into Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial reelection effort.

U.S., SOUTH AFRICA REACH WEAPONS AGREEMENT —
WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration and South Africa have reached tentative agreement to resolve a bitter dispute over U.S. efforts to prosecute South Africa's state-owned weapons company, a deal that apparently eliminates one of the few sources of friction between Washington and the government of President Nelson Mandela. A terse White House announcement issued after President Clinton met Wednesday with Mandela's deputy, Thabo Mbeki, said the agreement "meets the needs of both countries and represents a successful effort to resolve a difficult bilateral matter." The weapons company, Armscor, was indicted on charges of illegal weapons trafficking in 1991, when the firm was still an instrument of the apartheid South African government. When the widely admired Mandela became president and white rule was dismantled, South Africa expected the United States to drop the charges, but Washington refused to do so. The U.S. position was that the corporation broke U.S. arms-export laws and violated a legally binding international arms embargo on South Africa, and the fact that the ownership changed did not affect the charges. South Africa argued that Mandela and his government should not be held responsible for acts allegedly committed by their discredited predecessors, and that a state-owned company was not subject to U.S. prosecution in any case.

DE faculty managing editor takes Texas job

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

To devote 100 percent of his energy to student publications, the Daily Egyptian Faculty Managing Editor is resigning from his position in August.

Lloyd Goodman

Lloyd Goodman, faculty managing editor, announced he will be leaving his position in August to take the role as Director of Student Publications at the University of Texas at Arlington. As director, Goodman will be in charge of both the newsroom and business office.

Goodman, faculty managing position since April 1994, said it's constant changes in the department, such as the appointment of new director, a new associate dean and a curriculum assessment have caused his energies to stay focused on the department and not the students.

"Each change takes time and energy," he said. "My energy keeps getting drained for what I want to do. I want to focus my energies on the students."

Donald Jugenheimer, department chair of the school of journalism, said Goodman's absence will be felt at the DE.

"Lloyd has high standards for excellence," he said. "The huge number of hours he dedicated to the job and his interaction with the students is what made him so successful."

Jugenheimer said a search for an in-house interim for the 1996-97 school year has begun. He said after an interim is placed, a search will begin for a permanent replacement.

"It's difficult to conduct a search on such short notice," he said. "We will have an interim to carry on Lloyd's role while we open a national search."

Since his appointment, Goodman has helped develop a Features/Campus Life department, revise DE policies and redesign the look of the paper.

Marc Chase, editor-in-chief of the DE for the fall semester, has worked with Goodman for the past two years. He said Goodman's experience has helped strengthen the paper.

"His knowledge from jobs and working with award-winning college newspapers has brought good ideas to the college and strengthened the fundamentalism of our paper as a whole," he said.

Chase said the School of Journalism is fortunate that Goodman has passed down his ideas.

"His skills will be missed, but he passed those on," he said. "The support we have in the college right now and the talent and resources we have to pick from will benefit us."

Lance Speere, a graduate assistant and writing coach at the DE, said Goodman has helped return the paper into the hands of the students.

"He's the first in a long line of faculty editors to view the paper as student controlled," he said. "In dealing with the University's budgets and administration decisions, students can feel the brunt of those decisions. He is a fierce defender of the rights that students have as journalists."

Two SIUC staff instructors, Amy Ammons, a 1996 graduate in aviation management from Rockford, and Chris DiSanto, a senior in aviation management from Mount Prospect, check the controls in a Cessna 172 RGB used in flight instruction.

Flying students soaring high

By Annette Barr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As one of Amy Ammons's students prepares for his flight, Ammons sits by ready to answer any last minute questions or give some advice.

Ammons, a staff instructor and 1996 graduate in aviation management from Rockford, has been teaching other aviation undergraduates how to fly for two years.

"I have been learning how to deal with people and how to get different people motivated," Ammons said. "I try to make flying fun first of all, because it is fun."

Leland Widick, chief flight instructor, said staff instructors are students who are flight certified by the Federal Aviation Administration. Before becoming a staff instructor, Widick said students have to complete a series of tests and interviews. He said staff instructors are considered student workers.

"People sometimes have the perception that staff instructors are unequal due to the fact that they are student workers," Widick said. "That's a misperception."

Chris DiSanto, a staff instructor and senior in aviation management from Mount Prospect, has been a staff instructor for one year. He said staff instructors accumulate flying hours and gain experience.

"The experience is incredible," DiSanto said.

"Anyone who has to teach something is going to learn more themselves. This reaffirms the fact that if I am successful here, I can get a chance to fly in the real world."

Ammons said both students and staff instructors benefit from sharing their knowledge.

"I get a real sense of responsibility," Ammons said. "We're really no different than full-time staff instructors."

DiSanto said staff instructors are usually assigned four students each semester, allowing instruction to take place on more of a personal level.

"It's not like we're teaching a class, it's one-on-one," DiSanto said. "Here you can see them progress. You can see what you've done and feel a sense of accomplishment."

Dan Gray, a sophomore in aviation flight from Alton, has spent the summer under the instruction of Ammons.

"I would rather have a staff instructor," Gray said. "They're still students so they understand what we're going through."

Widick said there is a large support group from which both the staff instructors and students can receive guidance.

"The students are able to take advantage of the staff's University knowledge," Widick said. "One problem with flight instruction today is anyone can go to any airport to learn to fly. Here we offer an advantage of both monitoring and mentoring."

Official says flurry of runaways normal at wilderness program

By John Lynch, Julie Bury, and Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporters

Spectrum, a self-confidence building wilderness program for troubled youth at Touch of Nature, should be expected to have problems, says one of its administrators.

Timothy L. Humes, program coordinator for marketing and development at the Touch of Nature, said the recent flurry of seven runaways (two to three a week) from the Spectrum program is normal.

"It's nothing that hasn't gone wrong before," Humes said. "It was just a fluke that the runaways happened to be caught on the police blotter this time, because we have them every year."

University police reportedly picked up a total of seven runaways from the program the week of July 7 through the 13th and recovered a stolen purse that same week allegedly taken by two juveniles from Spectrum.

Corporal John Dunning of the SIUC police department said the runaways usually turn up in an arcade, gas station or some other public place.

According to Katy McCullough, program coordinator for Spectrum, three of the seven were terminated from the program and returned to the Department of Children and Family Services.

Standard procedure for recovered runaways is to contact their case workers or probation officers and let them decide the runaway's fate, McCullough said.

Runaways returned to DCFS are usually sent to a traditional detention center, McCullough said.

Of the recent rash of runaways, Humes said that nice weather may have been a contributing factor, but a lot of them will run away just for the attention.

He said that when participants run away from the Spectrum program, most of them choose to come back on their own. But the program does work with SIUC police to bring runaways back.

"We have a good partnership with University police," he said. "They have all of the schedules for our programs, so when we alert them of a situation they can pretty much gauge where the runaway is going to be."

Humes said, "If they run away five times and we get them back five times, we're going to help them as long as they want it."

Although 95 percent are referrals from state agencies such as courts and the DCFS, Humes said every youth who participates in the program

Depot needs new tenants

By Tim Carrol
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Although interior restoration of Carbondale's historical train depot is nearly complete, questions remain about what tenant the city will choose to occupy the building.

The city council is looking at the operating costs to help determine rent. Brad Fleck, depot restoration director said, "There are few prospective tenants but city members would not release any more information because negotiations are still under way."

"The city is trying to get a non-profit organization as a tenant," Tom Redmond, Carbondale city planner said. "A tenant that will not compete with existing business in the area is desired."

When the project was originally drafted, Carbondale Convention & Tourism had planned to occupy the depot. After being located at University Mall for the past two years, CCT decided last fall that they received good visibility at the mall and they would have to pay more rent at the depot, Debbie Moore, executive director of CCT said.

"Our decision to stay at the mall was strictly a business decision," Moore said. "The city was asking $20,000 for a years rent of the depot, which was $9,000 more than CCT pays at the mall."

At one time the city considered creating a museum in a portion of the depot, along with the CCT offices, but the project subsided when CCT decided to stay at University Mall, Moore said.

"We were going to apply for a grant to make part of the depot a train museum and after we backed out, I think the project was dropped," Moore said.

Bill Schremp, owner of Trains and Things in East Gate Shopping Center, said he has offered to make a large contribution to the museum. He has the largest collection of Illinois Central Railroad artifacts in the country.

"I am willing to provide the collection, valued at $1 million dollars, if the city would accept my offer to make the depot a museum," Schremp said.

"If the city decides that they don't want to make it a museum I'm afraid I will have to give the collection to the Smithsonian Institution."

Schremp's Illinois Central collection consists of 1,000 quality black and white prints like steam locomotive, passenger car, depot structures among other scenes. The collection also contains old artifacts like signals, paintings and books, Schremp said.

"I would like to keep the collection in the area, however, if there is no place to put it, I'm sure the Smithsonian would give their eye teeth for the assortment of historical items," Schremp said.

CCT also submitted a proposal to the city manager of Carbondale

Better preparation will control over 21 dorms

IN ORDER TO MEET THE NEEDS OF THE MORE than 1,500 21 and older students who choose to live on campus, Neely Hall has been converted to an 21-and-over hall. The hall provides certain privileges such as remaining open during breaks, having kitchenettes and rules that allow alcohol in the rooms for the 21 and older student. Now, SIUC needs to take precautions to prevent problems of underage drinking in the dorms.

Officials say there were only a few problems at Allen when it was a 21-and-over hall permitting alcohol consumption, only a few who were underage were "caught" drinking.

This time the situation is different. The bars, at that time, had an 18-year-old entry age. Whether to see bands or to attempt to drink, the 18-to 20-year old student had the entertainment outlet in the bars. Now bar entry age has been changed to 21. This coupled with the close proximity of living quarters allowing alcohol on campus could conceivably lead to an increased problem with underage drinking on campus.

SIUC OFFICIALS DO NOT INTEND THE HALL to be filled with a continuous stream of parties. Alcohol can only be consumed in the room and no other area. The privilege of being able to drink in the room will be taken away if abused.

However, SIUC needs to increase security. Currently the policy is to stop anyone under 21 who may appear to carry alcohol into the hall. The front desk will be run 24 hours a day by students prepared to handle emergencies and other problems. The rest is a "play by ear" situation. There should be more than a single student at a desk.

UNDERAGE DRINKING WILL ALWAYS BE A problem at college. Anyone who is underage can go to a house off campus and consume alcohol. Once that house becomes University property, it becomes a different situation and the University needs to be more prepared to prevent underage drinking.

New chapter begins for Daily Egyptian mentor

WE WOULD LIKE TO SAY FAREWELL AND BEST wishes to Lloyd Goodman, the Daily Egyptian's faculty managing editor, who will be leaving at the close of this semester.

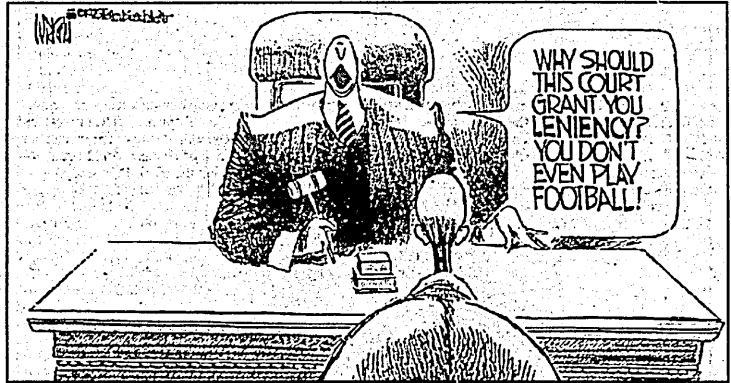

He came to the paper, updated its policies, realigned beat structures and prompted the redesign of the paper.

With a strong background in copy editing he taught such a course for the journalism department and stepped in to help operations when the paper was looking for a business manager.

In charge of the day to day operations, notwithstanding, he believed in the student-run paper, allowing the students to dictate the content and editing of the paper. There were times that he could have stepped in and assisted, but found the learning process to be greater when the student makes the choice. He gave compliments and admonitions to us when we deserved them.

He was responsible for more than the day-to-day operations of the paper. He was always available to and a friend of the students who work here. He was able to help us carry all the baggage that we students carry throughout the semester.

He freely offered his empirical knowledge of the business and those who worked with him are better for it. We will miss him.

Letter to the Editor

Investigate disease of arrogance

How many times can I get my letters published in the Daily Egyptian before I leave this academic institution? Let me count the ways for you Mr. Ensor. When I started at Southern Illinois University in the fall of 1994 you were griping about the Halloween fiasco.

Then in the spring of 1995 you ran for Mayor of Carbondale and turned the election into a farce. In the fall of 1995 you again sounded off about Halloween. Oh, and let us not forget that in this same term you called for Ed Jones' and Steve Kirk's heads and jobs on a platter for turning Neely Hall into an over-21 residence hall against the students' wishes.

I though, hoped, and prayed that we had heard the last of you but much like a chronic case of irritable bowel disease you have risen again to spew your drivel about an issue which should concern you not in the least...homosexuality.

Yet again you have taken a stand against something about which you have as little knowledge as the professionals that you cite as sources for your argument. How could you, they, or anyone else have the slightest clue about homosexuality unless there is experience upon which to base that clue? Your argument is the epitome of the same ignorant, stereotypical bigotry that, in the past, led people to believe that women should be kept barefoot, pregnant, and in the kitchen, or that the "Aryan" race was the

You say that homosexuals make you sick Mr. Ensor. Well let me tell you that it's arrogant, belligerent, loud-mouthed, self-righteous, uninformed, opportunistic parasites who flood the newspapers with letters to do nothing more than masturbate their own egos that sicken me.

I have an idea for you Mr. Ensor. Why don't you see if you can't find this "disease," with which you seem to be afflicted, in your scholarly journals, and make a case against yourself. Who knows, you might actually get some fool to believe you are right for once.

Commentary

Feminism missed half the equation

Los Angeles Times

Like many other 1970s feminists, I envisioned a future in which women's roles would include a professional life as men's roles expanded to include responsibilities for home and children.

Two decades later, it hasn't worked out that way. Women get their careers, but with a few exceptions, men never got an expanded role at home. What went wrong? Here is my theory: Society got the half of the feminist program that was compatible with a social philosophy that was stronger, deeper and more acceptable in this country than feminism—individualism.

The individualistic half of the feminist program had nothing to do with men as contributors to the family. That is the social or communitarian half of feminism.

The inexorable growth of individualism, with its emphasis on choice, independence and personal development, can be seen throughout our society. Instead of a new balance between home and career for men and women, everyone is working harder (or not at all). Respect for roles and activities that contribute to family relations and family development has sunk to the point where women often feel ashamed of devoting themselves to home and family. At the same time, men who do their fair share at home are viewed as lacking ambition.

The development of an individual's career depends on subordinating family responsibilities. After the Northridge earthquake, the media were full of praise for those who quickly left their damaged homes and shaken families to take up their workplace responsibilities. I saw no laudatory stories about those who stayed home to take care of their families.

The plagues of extreme individualism are isolation, alienation and a failure to nurture the next generation. These plagues have become epidemic in our society. The witnesses are random crime, gangs, non-parent children, homelessness.

Where do we go from here? We have many new immigrants in our country. Most come from societies that give family responsibilities, family unity and social interdependence more importance than is the norm here. Instead of trying to eradicate their family loyalties as we assimilate them to our individualistic society, we must learn from them in a process of cultural accommodation and exchange. For example, rather than criticizing Latino immigrants for living together in small quarters, we need to recognize that we can learn something from the familial closeness they are expressing. Multiculturalism, in the sense of learning from one another's values, is a crucial process.

Within the women's movement, reproduction and child rearing have come to be seen as an artificial social construction, not an evolutionary necessity. Motherhood is viewed as a role from which to be liberated, not one to celebrate and cherish. By learning from the value systems of our immigrant groups, we can renew both family values and the women's movement. The next generation will benefit.

eliminated. Peerbhai said he was informed last week that USG President Troy Alim decided he would be the IBHE/SAC undergraduate representative and Terry agreed Alim should be the voting member. Peerbhai said, although Alim may do a good job, he will not represent the Graduate School well; he is not a graduate student and does not understand the importance of the POP study being conducted by the IBHE this year. "We (the Graduate School) are facing enormous cuts to programs and now there are 3,500-3,800 graduate students who have no voice at all under the IBHE," he said. "I cannot believe that Mark Terry can act in such a manner during a round of POP cuts. He is throwing away his constituency during a critical time because he doesn't have an understanding of the issues." Terry said he understands the importance of IBHE/SAC, but Peerbhai was never the graduate representative. "Monty asked me if he could be the IBHE/SAC representative alternate and I told him to go talk to Troy (Alim) and see if they could work together," Terry said. "Both Monty and Troy came to me and expressed a reasonable amount of friction on some of the issues so I decided to not make Monty the alternate." Terry said at the Wednesday night GPSC meeting he appointed Najjar-Abdul Mussawwir as the IBHE/SAC graduate representative. "We are going to be focusing on three areas with the POP study," he said. "First is getting involved as much as possible on campus. Second is using the IBHE/SAC representatives and keeping Troy Alim up-to-date on what is happening to us. And third is Troy Arnoldi, who is a voting member of IBHE and a SIUC graduate student, and working with him on what is important." Ben Shepherd, SIUC provost and Academic Affairs vice chancellor, said four changes could occur following the IBHE POP study. "After the self-study is completed next August, we could face restructuring some programs, abolishing some programs, possibly bringing in new programs or, in some instances where programs have a high interest and high funding, expanding programs," he said. "What we really have to look at through the POP study, regardless of the quality, is how viable our programs are and do they prepare students for the work force."

place where friends can meet and have a good time. I am really going to miss these things on Thursday nights. I mean, it's better than cable."

Many people agree that the concerts are a good place for area people to gather and enjoy an evening outside their homes. Quentin Reed, a long-time resident of Carbonlake, said Thursday's concert was the first one he had been to, but he will come back next summer.

"I am really enjoying myself," he said. "All people don't enjoy the same things, but it's nice to see all these people get together and enjoy the time they spend here. I enjoy this type of music, but some people don't. I think it's nice people can gather even if they don't like the music and just be together."

for its response. John Howell, SIUC English chair, said his department revised and refocused its doctoral program before sending the IBHE its report. "We're hoping to know their response in November," he said. Ben Shepherd, SIUC Academic Affairs vice chancellor, said by August 1997, each department will evaluate its graduate degrees for POP. They will consider enrollment, whether graduates are prepared for jobs, job placement of graduates, cost per graduate, faculty productivity and number of graduates per year. SIUC awarded three doctoral degrees in English and two in mathematics in the 1994-95 academic year. At the Graduate and Professional Student Council meeting Wednesday night, Shepherd said some SIUC graduate programs have job placement problems, not unlike those Kelly found in math and English. "The IBHE fully acknowledges graduate education should prepare students for careers," Shepherd said. Since November 1992, POP has resulted in the elimination of 36 master's and doctoral programs and nine bachelor's programs at SIUC. Shepherd said the POP evaluations will result in each degree being either expanded, downsized or eliminated. "They're not just out with an ax to cut and kill our programs," Shepherd said, citing the newly created master's of Interactive Multimedia in the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts. Kelly said SIUC will not lose money or experience layoffs if programs are cut because the resources will stay at the University, strengthening existing programs.

Dioxins

Student Environmental Center, said even though there are alternatives to burning PCBs, it does not seem like officials are giving the people a choice. Tracy said the incinerator is the most expensive way of getting rid of the waste. She said she would like to see them store the waste in a facility until a safe way to get rid of it is discovered. Richard Davis, project manager for the incinerator, said they want to remove the waste as soon as possible to prevent the PCBs from spreading any further into the lake and wildlife. Davis said a dam was built this year to slow the spreading of PCBs, since they have been spreading about a quarter of a mile every 10 years. "We are doing this so some future generation will not have to deal with it, and right now, we have the technology and money to take care of it (by burning PCBs)," Davis said. Dwain Winters, a dioxin specialist with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, pointed out that all humans have dioxin in their bodies already, most of it coming from meat and dairy products. Winters said when the dioxin leaves the smokesstack, it lands on the ground, so when livestock eat the plants the dioxin becomes concentrated in their fat. Humans then ingest the dioxin through the food chain, Winters said. Normal day-to-day fluctuations of dioxin intake are greater than the additional amount of dioxin from the incinerator. "Something can be very toxic, but if you are exposed to very small amounts of it, the risks can still be small," Winters said. James Helfrich, a junior in civil engineering, said after speaking with officials at the meeting, the incinerator still does not seem like a good idea for the health of the community. "It seems like another temporary solution to a real serious problem that is not really going to fix the situation, but just put a band-aid on it," Helfrich said. Next Tuesday or Wednesday, officials have scheduled a mini-burn, using a mixture of soil spiked with more contaminants, in order to test the incinerator for any potential problems.

Vital Choice project receives positive feedback

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Vital Choices for Young Children Program, that was created at SIUC, has requested more funding and has gotten positive feedback after it was sent out to more elementary schools in Illinois in February.

Jim Campbell, associate professor of education and Vital Choices project director, said they have requested $35,000 through the Attorney General's Office.

Campbell said so far $100,000 has been received from the Attorney General's Office.

Campbell said the program covers substance abuse for pre-kindergarten through third grade.

Campbell said they need more money to send the program to more schools across Illinois.

"We would like to provide on-the-site training," he said. "We would go to the schools and work with them on ways they can implement the program into their curriculum."

He said they sent out 450 copies of the revised program in February to more elementary schools around the area.

"We just brought it more up-to-date on the issues, more recent research and some of the terminology, like drug-abuse prevention is now substance abuse," he said.

Bill Wade, press secretary for Springfield's Attorney General's office, said the program's money request is being reviewed.

"They should know something within a matter of two weeks," he said. "It looks good though that they

"The teachers have said they really like it. One woman who wrote me a letter said 'this is like a dream.'"

Jim Campbell,
Vital Choices project director

will receive it."

Campbell said the feedback to the program has been very positive.

"The teachers have said they really like it," he said. "One woman who wrote me a letter said 'this is like a dream,'" he said.

Campbell said just teaching children to say "no" is not enough.

"We need to teach children the skills to develop restraint to resist the pressures to take drugs," he said.

"This program integrates the very concepts and ideas into the curriculum so the kids are doing it and not even realizing it."

Campbell said some of the drug programs in the past encouraged drug abuse.

"The typical approach previously was to bring in your sports hero or rock star to talk about how they had this bright promising future and reached the bottom and pulled themselves up," he said. "The research has shown that what kids really get out of it is, 'hey, they can handle it, so can I.'"

Linda Threatt, preschool teacher for Blufford Grade School, said she used the program this spring semester.

"It was wonderful," she said. "I used this program as a reference to get ideas of some books for me to read to my students, like 'The Hungry Caterpillar.'"

Threatt said she had gone through the Kids at Risk drug program for five summers and the Vital Choices for Young Children Program is a lot better.

"This program is geared more towards my kids and their age group," she said. "I feel my kids learned a lot."

Spectrum

has chosen to do so.

"The Spectrum children can have problems from arguing with their parents to having trouble in school and disrespecting authority to having trouble with the law," Humes said. "Enrollees in the program come from all over the state, from downtown Chicago or from a rural setting."

"Only five percent are directly referred to us by their parents, but others in the program are ordered by the court to attend our program or go to detention facilities."

Prospective children are interviewed and shown slides of what Spectrum is all about and what takes place there, he said. Those who enter the program must sign a contract of agreement, Humes said.

"We don't drag them off kicking and screaming," he said.

Still, Humes described the program as a rigorous outdoor experience designed to give participants a sense of accomplishment, something they have not learned elsewhere, and educate them for re-entry into society.

The program takes all shapes, sizes, colors and types of troubled youth, Humes said.

"It's impossible to summarize these kids except to say that they are from bad environments," he said.

The 30-day program is year round and divided into groups of 11 children. Groups are co-ed if at least three females can be included, otherwise the groups consist of all males, Humes said.

About 150 youths go through the Spectrum program annually to build their self-esteem and change their negative outlook on life, Humes said.

"Our goal is to light a fire in those kids, but it's up to the family and the case workers to take it from there," he said.

Humes said a 1989 study comparing the Spectrum program to more traditional detention programs for troubled youth showed that 80 percent of Spectrum children stay out of trouble compared to only 60 percent for the detention programs.

Of the repeat offenders following the Spectrum program, the seriousness of their crimes were much reduced, Humes said, while those of the other programs were worse.

"You can create numbers to say whatever you want," he said, "so I don't hold a lot of value in studies. What I believe in is what I see in the programs that I have worked with."

in April '95, which outlined an offer to manage the civic center and in return, CCT would receive free rent at the depot, Moore said. The proposal was rejected.

Carbondale purchased the depot from the railroad in 1990 and began plans to restore the depot. Exterior restoration was done a few years ago and interior restoration began in January to make the depot look the way it did in the '30s, Fleck said.

The city consulted state historical engineers in hopes of meeting the specifications needed to obtain a state register to deem the depot a Illinois historic landmark, Fleck said.

Program, which has specialists come in to teach skills or to lead hiking adventures, Lukes said.

He said that after accessing information on where to go and what to do, Base Camp can help keep student's costs to a minimum by renting equipment that would otherwise make a camping trip costly.

Lukes said Base Camp is a "break-even" program. All the money made from rentals is used to pay for staff and new equipment.

The program spent $6,000 on new items coming this fall, including new stoves, tents and backpacks.

"The money doesn't go very far because we have to buy quality equipment so it will hold up," Lukes said. "You might be able to buy 10 canoes with $6,000."

"The nature of a checkout program is rough because people tend to rely on the facility to do all the maintenance."

Aaron DeFrates, a graduate student in marketing, said the equipment he rented from Base Camp was convenient, and some of the best he has ever used.

"I used to have my own equipment, but it cost too much money to keep on buying new and better equipment," he said. "It was also a burden to carry around."

"I rented from Base Camp for an expedition out at Lake Kinkaid. The tents were comfortable and the canoe was a very sea-worthy craft."

Sometimes the equipment comes back in bad shape, Ludemann said. She said Base Camp is pretty tolerable to certain situations such as a wet tent if it rained, but sometimes equipment just disappears.

"We have one canoe that is AWOL," she said. "The last I heard it was in New Mexico. But things like this go on a person's bursar bill."

The third area of the Outdoor Adventure Program is the climbing wall, inside the Recreation Center.

The climbing wall is a 28-foot wall that imitates challenges met by rock climbers. Climbing equipment, such as helmets and ropes, are provided for students on Mondays and Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m., and Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6-8 p.m.

The wall is up for a new look on Aug. 5, when a student-designed renovation take place, Lukes said. "Basically it will be a little more challenging," he said. "They are putting in new rock holes and some steeper inclines."

wives and/or girlfriends.

They were not our role models. Our parents were.

If we asked for a pony at Christmas, it was not to imitate our Saturday afternoon hero.

Our western heroes were down-home, clean-shaven, all-American, truth-and-justice personalities; the bad guys were stomachied, shifty-eyed, swarthy-complected and wore crossed ammunition belts.

We lived in a fantasy world composed of various shades of gray. All brought to us by cereal companions.

In today's sports world, with constant technological break throughs and instant reporting, it is much harder to distinguish between heroes and the bad guys.

Even with names and numbers on their jerseys.

Salukis set to shine in Atlanta

Four SIUC Olympians focused on weekend competitions

By Chris Clark
DE Sports Editor

With one week already gone by for the Centennial Games in Atlanta, four Saluki athletes are looking to make their mark in Olympic history.

Antonia Mahaira, a swimmer on the Greek Olympic team has already competed in four of her five events. She is looking to close out her 1996 Summer Games experience on a memorable.

Antonia Mahaira

medal-winning note.

Mahaira will compete today in the 50-meter freestyle event after competing in the 100-meter freestyle, the 200-meter freestyle, the 400-meter freestyle and 4x100 medley relay events.

In the 100-meter freestyle Saturday, Mahaira finished 31st overall with a time of 57.92 seconds. She fared a bit better in the 200-meter freestyle Sunday, where she finished first in her preliminary race in a time of 2:03.21 and advanced to Heat B., but did not get to the finals and finished 15th overall.

Monday, Mahaira swam in the 400-meter freestyle, where she finished 31st, with a time of 4:24.05.

Wednesday, she competed as a member of the Greek 4x100-meter medley relay team. In that event, the Greeks finished 22nd, completing the contest with a time of 4:24.80.

United States high jumper Cameron Wright will take off on his flight toward Olympic gold today. He will jump in the eighth spot in the first qualifying group in the event.

Should he qualify, he will jump in the finals, to take place Sunday.

Wright qualified for the Olympic Games in June with a jump of 7-6 1/2, which eclipsed his previous personal best of 7-6.

Connie Price-Smith, a three-time United States Olympian, will try one last time to win her first gold medal, in the Olympic shot put.

Smith said she will probably retire after the 1997 season to devote more time to coaching.

Price-Smith is considered to be the United States' best chance at winning gold in the shot put.

She won the event during the Olympic Trials in June, and will continue to chase her Olympic dreams at the qualifiers.

Tuesday afternoon.

Should she make it out of the qualifying round, the finals await her Thursday.

Dora Kyriacou, the fourth and final Saluki to compete in the 1996 Olympic Games, is a member of the Cyprus Olympic team. She will participate in the 200-meter and 400-meter runs.

Kyriacou will run the preliminaries and finals of the 400-meter run on Saturday, while the 200-meter preliminaries and finals will be run Thursday.

Irvin trial illustrates how far our heroes have fallen

Willie Nelson once sang, "Momma, don't let your babies grow up to be cowboys." Did he know Dallas Cowboy Michael Irvin when he penned that song?

Irvin, the Cowboy's premier receiver, pleaded no-contest to a second-degree felony charge of cocaine possession July 15. He received a $10,000 fine and four years deferred probation July 16, successfully avoiding any jail time.

Irvin was also ordered to perform community service. If the National Football League, with their comic substance-abuse policy, is allowed to oversee this portion of Irvin's sentence, the 800 hours of community service could translate into Irvin being forced to reduce his prices at autograph sessions.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue has now passed his own sentence on Irvin's indiscretions. Irvin will miss the first five games of the season, one more than the usual sentence for first-time offenders of the league's policy.

Tagliabue, in a letter to Irvin, quoted by The New York Times, said, "You serve as a highly visible symbol of the Dallas Cowboys and the NFL. As such, you are an unusually prominent example of good and bad for young people."

The remainder of the letter states that while Tagliabue recognizes the magnification of Irvin's actions due to his public notoriety, they are offset by the substantial benefits, financial and otherwise that Irvin receives.

When black-and-white television was the norm, cowboys such as the Lone Ranger and Gene Autry were heroes to millions of children. They wore white, did not smoke, get drunk, do drugs or beat-up their

Adventure program a treasure for experienced or novice outdoorsmen

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC Outdoor Adventure Program helps quench the thirst of both the avid outdoorsmen and the novice nature lover to experience the wilderness at a low cost.

The Recreation Center started the student-run, non-profit program in 1979, after students began requesting camping equipment.

Brian Lukes, assistant director of facilities for the Intramural-Recreational sports Department, said many students wanted to experience what Southern Illinois has to offer outdoors.

"We went out and bought $2,000 of camping equipment. It paid for itself in a month," Lukes said. Ever since, the Outdoor Adventure Program has expanded to meet the demands of students who want to experience the outdoors, Lukes said.

The program now includes the Adventure Resource Center, Base Camp and a climbing wall.

The Adventure Resource Center is located across from the south weight room in the Recreation Center. The center provides information, including outdoor magazines, maps of trails and resources, gathered from parks throughout the United States on outdoor facilities, parks and camps across the country.

"Today, a woman called and asked about white-water rafting," said Julie Ludenann, an outdoor recreation major and director of the Outdoor Resource Program for the summer. "There isn't anything in the area, but we were able to refer her to places of interest."

The Center is designed for students to plan trips through specific geographic area or activity, Lukes said.

Clinics and trips are offered to students at reduced rates through the Outdoor Adventure Program, including a ski trip to Colorado.

Such trips have participant limits, and are available to the first students who sign up, Lukes said. Bike maintenance and fishing lessons just two of several dozen clinics offered by the Outdoor Adventure
