Engineering plan calls for GE cuts

By Chris Davies
Administration Writer

Students in the College of Engineering can expect fewer general education courses, fewer degree programs and fewer faculty, as a response to Vice President Shepherd's down-sizing proposal.

The College of Engineering has written a formal response to Shepherd's proposals that include the elimination of GE courses, faculty and some programs.

Juh Wah Chen, dean of the college, said University downsizing has forced the college to make decisions about what should and should not be cut.

"We have decided to reduce faculty by eight to 10 positions," he said. "We will do this by not replacing its retiring faculty."

Chen said GE courses will be cut, along with the civil engineering technology degree program at the graduate level.

"The college is all for dropping some of the University's required GE courses," he said. "The undergraduate degree has some 175 required credit hours, so we will be more than happy to get rid of some of the GEs."

"The college is also looking toward cancelling the civil engineering and technology program at the graduate level because of a lack of enrollment," Chen said. "By 1995 we hope to have all the students in that program tethed out."

The college is also being faced with trying to enroll more American students into its graduate programs. The graduate program has a 62-percent international enrollment and only a 38-percent

U.S. enrollment.

Chen said the University will try to offer more incentives to U.S. students to attract them to graduate programs.

"We will try to achieve a one to one enrollment level. One American for one international student," he said. "Engineering students often leave the programs because of high-paying job offers in the engineering field."

The downsizing is effecting all departments of the college and its

$3 fee increase proposed to aid with child care

By Christy Gutowski
Administration Writer

Jeff DeArmon is trying to fulfill his roles as student and father, a task complicated by finding access to an adequate child care facility.

DeArmon, a 26-year-old psychology major, recently moved to Carbondale from Harrisburg with his wife and two children. The move, he said, was because it was difficult commuting to SIUC each day as a full-time student while caring for two children.

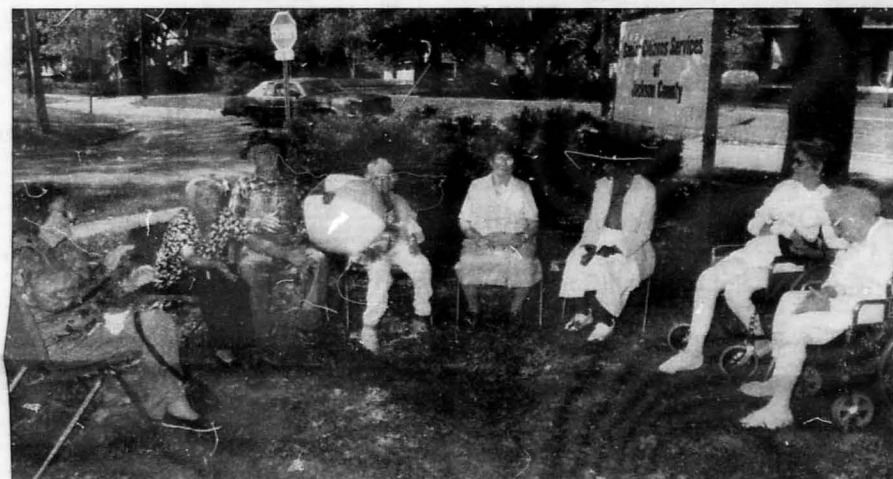

DeArmon said he hopes to find a sufficient day care facility for his children so his wife could attend the University as well.

A $3 student fee increase was proposed by Harvey Welch, vice president for student affairs, to help SIUC student parents, such as DeArmon, that are in need of a child care facility while they attend classes.

The fee increase will begin summer semester 1993 if passed, and profits will be used to build or lease a facility for Rainbow's End child development center.

Victims of Iniki start rebuilding

Los Angeles Times

HONOLULU — Residents of Kauai began to rebuild their homes and lives Monday as a round-the-clock air and sea lift brought food, water and supplies to the devastated island.

In an outpouring of support for their island neighbors, government and relief agencies on the three other major Hawaiian islands ferried in generators, plastic sheeting, portable showers and bulldozers to help reconstruction efforts.

Military kitchens provided meals to island residents, who had existed on meager supplies since Hurricane Iniki struck Friday. Evaluation teams sent from Oahu by Gov. John Waihe'e

Senators' support: Two senators from Illinois approve nomination of judge to federal post

By John McCadd
Politics Writer

The nomination of Judge J. Phil Gilbert, which will be put to vote in the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee this week, has the support of Illinois senators.

U.S. Sens. Alan Dixon, D-Belleville, and Paul Simon, D-Makanda, believe the process has moved along faster than usual despite concern that a mostly Democrat Senate would delay voting because of partisan conflicts with Republican George Bush who nominated Gilbert.

Gilbert, who is an Illinois First Judicial Circuit Judge at the Jackson County Courthouse in Murphysboro, was nominated to fill the position for the Federal District Court in Benton.

James Schufreider, spokesman for Dixon, said there has been concern that a portion of the Democrat dominated Senate would rather postpone voting until after the November presidential election.

Postponing the vote until the election might enable another judge to be nominated for the position if Bush loses, Schufreider said.

Biochemistry department faces changes

By Teri Lynn Carlock
Special Assignment Writer

The SIUC biochemistry and chemistry department is undergoing structural and faculty changes as the result of difficulties arising in the program during the past two decades.

The department held a faculty meeting

Sept. 10 to discuss future changes in the program, including moving responsibilities of biochemists to either the School of Medicine or the College of Science.

There are 10 biochemists in the department.

Next year the department will lose two members, one to tenure and the other to another university.

Of the remaining eight biochemistry faculty members, five have primary appointments through the School of Medicine and three were appointed through the College of Science, said Steve Scheiner, chairman of the chemistry department.

Biochemists have cross appointments and

SIUC men's golfers take first place

By Jay Reed
Sports Writer

This weekend was not the best for Southeast Missouri State sport's teams that competed against the Salukis.

Not only did the Saluki gridders defeat the Indians on the football field Saturday, but the SIUC men's golf team defeated SEMO and 12 other teams at the Bent Creek golf course in Jackson, Mo., to win their first tournament in two years.

The victory at the Capital Bank Bent Creek Intercollegiate tournament, which was hosted by SEMO, was the first for the Saluki golfers since an April 27, 1990 victory at the Drake Relays Golf Classic in Des Moines, Iowa.

SIUC finished with a total of 611, two strokes ahead of second place Morehead State.

"Southern had some kids that really held together better than the other teams," Carroll Williams SEMO golf coach said. "The wind was tough and the greens were hard which made it very competitive."

Saluki Clyde Berning finished the tournament tied for second place individually at 148 with Morehead State's Mike Brumfield and Austin Peay's Bill Maynard.

The individual shooting title was captured by Dave Rhodes of Missouri-St. Louis. Rhodes shot a two over par 146 at the two-day tournament.

Other Saluki golf scores were Sam Scheibal who finished with a 151, Mike Dailing with a 155, Jason Stilley with a 158, Quinn McClure with a 163 and Kevin Amhaus with a 177.

Behind SIUC and Morehead State was Austin Peay at 614, Western Kentucky 615, Arkansas State and Missouri-St. Louis tied with 618 strokes.

Unsigned NFL players asking for free agency

Zapnews

PHILADELPHIA—Philadelphia Eagles' tight end Keith Jackson is among 10 unsigned NFL players who asked a federal court Monday to declare them total free agents, four days after a verdict struck down the league's Plan B system.

The players' request will be heard Wednesday by U.S. District Court Judge David Doty, who presided over the Freeman McNeil Vs. The NFL case last week.

An eight-woman jury reached the verdict Thursday in favor of the players after two days of deliberations.

The jury ruled in favor of the players but awarded a total of only $543,000 to four of the eight plaintiffs. However, under federal antitrust law, the damages will be tripled to $1.63 million.

The jury's decision means that the NFL will no longer be able to enforce its restrictions on free agency.

The players claim the league is using Plan B rules to restrict them from negotiating or signing with any other team.

"This action was not unexpected since there are a handful of players without contracts," an NFL statement said.

"Our hope is that the Players Association at some point soon will move from litigation to negotiation."

Saluki women's golf team finishes eighth at ISU Invite

By Norma Wilke
Sports Editor

The SIUC women's golf team started the season without its full lineup, but the team's performance was encouraging, coach Diane Daugherty said.

The Salukis finished eighth of 19 schools with a total team score of 974 at the three-round Illinois State Invitational.

The University of Illinois finished first with a score of 916, Iowa State finished second with a 937, and Missouri Valley Conference foe ISU, on their home turf, surprised the Salukis to tie for third with Missouri with a score of 940.

Daugherty said she was encouraged by the Salukis performance because they played without junior Lieschen Eller, one of the team's top golfers.

"We broke 320 (in the third round) without Lieschen Eller, and that is great," Daugherty said. "If we had Lieschen in the lineup, even if she had shot 80, we would have beat Northern Illinois and Michigan."

Senior Tracy Pace finished seventh individually with a total score of 231. Pace shot a 78, 77 and 76 in the three rounds.

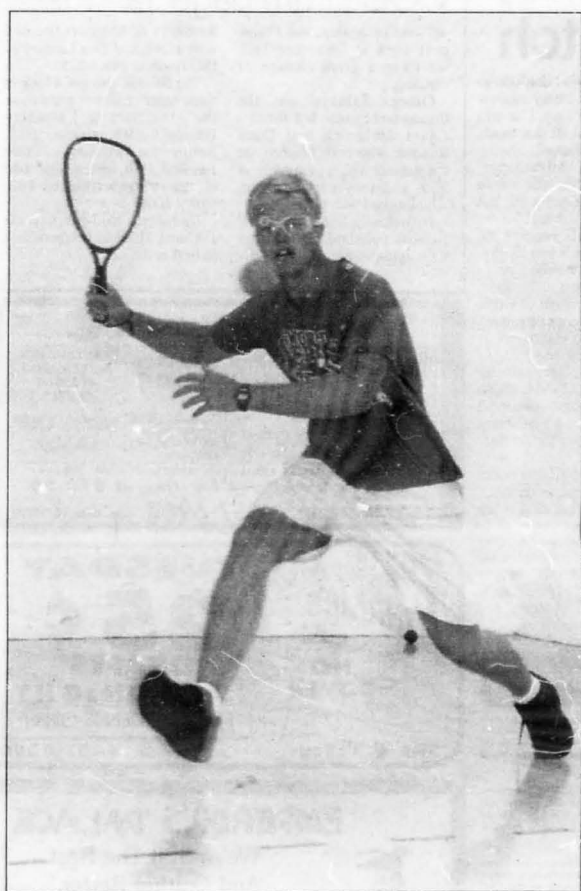

"Tracy Pace had really good rounds," Daugherty said. "(Sophomore) Carrie Hall showed that there would be a lot of good things to come from her this season."

Hall, who was redshirted last season, finished with a 243 for the three rounds. Hall shot a 85, 82 and a 76.

"The first two days I was just feeling myself around, and I don't think I played as well as I could have," Hall said. "I was pleased with my score on the last day."

"I think we did pretty well for the teams

Saluki basketball to gain exposure

By Sanjay Seth
Sports Writer

The first telecast of a Missouri Valley Conference women's basketball game on ESPN by the MVC Television Network will feature the Salukis pitted against Southwest Missouri State.

This game at SMSU on Jan. 8, will be one of the five nationally televised games on ESPN.

MVC Commissioner Doug Elgin said this was a tremendous step forward in the MVC and the various programs.

"Both teams (SIUC and SMSU) are deserving as they were NCAA qualifiers last year," Elgin said. "The Salukis advanced to the second round and the Lady Bears were final four participants."

SIUC women's basketball coach

Cindy Scott said both she and the team are very excited at this opportunity.

"National Broadcast exposure is always great," Scott said. "It is additionally great for us as we are one of the few teams selected to be on ESPN. This will be positive for both SIUC and for women's basketball."

Scott said events like these will ensure the future growth of basketball within the MVC and nationally as well.

The National Coaches Association have been lobbying for years to receive these privileges, and Scott said this was a good start.

The SIUC men's team will also be featured on ESPN in a game at SMSU on Jan. 30.

Saluki men's basketball coach

Rich Herrin said it is important the Dawgs receive national television exposure.

"It is very important to get exposure for our university and it's great for our basketball program," Herrin said.

Elgin said it was coincidental that SIUC was up against SMSU in both the men's and women's category and that both were being televised nationally on ESPN.

"It will be tremendous exposure for both sides," Elgin said. "And that will be a plus for the various programs of the respective schools."

Another highlight will be the national coverage of the men's basketball championship final of the 1993 Diet Pepsi MVC Tournament, which returns to St. Louis for the third straight year.

Limited practice hurts play of SIUC softball

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

Limited practice time in the early weeks of school played a huge factor in the three losses the Saluki softball team suffered, head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said.

"With the bad weather we ran in to, we did not get a lot of practice time outside so we could not get a feel of where we were," she said. "This tournament gave us more playing experience than in the total practice time we were getting."

The Salukis suffered losses to Missouri, Eastern Illinois and Evansville while racking up a win against Indiana State in their first weekend of play at the Fall Ball Festival in Decatur.

Even with the losses, many bright spots seemed to shine out of the Salukis game, Brechtelsbauer said.

"We outfit every team we played and our pitchers did extremely well for their first time out," she said.

FEDERAL SPENDING ON MEDICARE RISES — Spending on the federal Medicare program increased from $109.7 billion in fiscal year 1990 to $117.8 billion in 1991, a growth rate of 7.4 percent, said William Toby, Jr., acting administrator of Care Financing Administration. The number of Medicare beneficiaries totaled 34.9 million in fiscal year 1991, an increase of 1.9 percent from the 34.2 million beneficiaries in 1990, he said. The volume of claims submitted to Medicare increased nearly 11 percent in fiscal year 1991.JACKSON LAWSUIT SURVIVES COURT TESTS — A lawsuit alleging singer Michael Jackson used an inventor's sound effect technology without paying for it survived several courtroom challenges today, but a judge still may throw out parts of it. Local police may soon aid in patrol of parking at mall

By Jeremy Finley
City Writer

Carbondale police soon may have the official authority to patrol handicap parking at the University Mall in a Carbondale City Council decision.

The council will vote on an official agreement for city police to aid mall police with ticketing illegally parked vehicles in fire zones and handicapped spaces.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said the mall and city police already have the authority to ticket cars, but this agreement will finalize it.

"The city police has the authority to ticket anywhere in the community where there are the designated spaces," he said. "We enforce this to the public. We have to keep these spaces open in case of emergency."

Kathleen Plesko, SIUC coordinator of Disabled Student Services, said the main problem with handicap parking is the public perception of disabled persons.

"People may see someone get out of their car and see someone that doesn't look handicapped, even though they might have a heart problem or arthritis," she said. "Many disabled people require special services, even though they might not appear that they need it."

Sgt. Bob Gallimore of the University Mall security said people need to know about the $50 fine for illegal parking.

"If people were aware of the penalty, they wouldn't park where they shouldn't," he said.

The council also will review a request to fund the Carbondale Community Arts and a resolution for traffic signal improvements.

Former DE editor wins award

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

A former student editor of the Daily Egyptian won an award from the Society of Professional Journalists.

Jackie Spinner won the 1991 National Mark of Excellence Award for Sports Writing. Spinner won the award for "Broken Ladder," a series of articles on women in college sports. She wrote the series when she was sports editor for the DE in summer 1991.

Peggy Tennis, the SPJ awards coordinator, said the society received 1,500 entries in 20 awards categories.

"There were about 70 entries for the sports writing award," Tennis said. "Jackie's story went to regional and was No. 1. Then she went to the national competition against the other first place winners from 12 regions. Out of those 12, her story was voted the best."

Spinner, who served as DE student editor in the 1991-1992 school year and is now an editor on fellowship at U. magazine, said she was happy that national judges recognized a sports story written by a woman about women in sports.

"The series that won the award was important to me because it addressed a serious shortcoming in college athletics," Spinner said. "I hope this isn't the last story anyone does on the subject."

Wanda Brandon, faculty managing editor of the DE, said the award speaks for Spinner's ability to work in all topic areas.

"It was sports coverage that was totally different than what we are used to seeing," Brandon said. "It was not about covering regular sports events, but the problems and issues that we can find just beneath the surface in athletics. It

Half of those taxed need representation

TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION resulted in the legendary Boston Tea Party of 1773.

People did not appreciate being taxed without representation then and they still do not now. But that age-old lesson has not been learned by the Carbondale City Council.

THE SALES TAX WAS INCREASED Aug. 31 from 6.25 to 7 percent. The beneficiaries of this tax are those who live in Carbondale. How those taxes are used is decided by the City Council.

But about half of those being taxed are students who have less than half to say in the City Council: they have no direct vote.

RESIDENTS AND STUDENTS ARE PROJECTED to pay the city about $13,567,294 in total tax revenues in FY93. About $6,236,062 of that is expected from sales and service taxes.

According to the 1990 census, Carbondale residents numbered 27,033. In spring 1992, SIUC student population was 23,483. Almost half the total taxpayers are students, and they should have an active role in governing the city.

WHEN SALES AND SERVICES TAX was targeted for an increase, the Carbondale Business Development Corp. took sides with the city saying it would prefer sales tax to property tax because sales tax would leave businesses virtually unaffected.

The sales tax increase is estimated to generate $1.3 million. Property tax would have to be doubled to cover the amount and would weigh heavy on store owners.

THE CITY EXPECTS property taxes to bring in $1,250,207 for FY93. But that only makes up about 11 percent of the total tax revenues.

If students represent half of the people affected by the tax increase, then they should be allowed to have council voting power.

BUT STUDENTS SHOULD NOT WAIT for Council representation. They should register to vote so they can at least help elect city officials.

SIUC does have at least two influences within the City Council: Carbondale Mayor Dillard serves at the director of the office of economic development and Keith Tuxhorn is involved with Community Development in Quigley Hall. But the students, those on a four-year visit, need to be represented as well.

STUDENTS PAY TAXES on food. Students pay taxes on clothing. Students pay taxes on household supplies. And if students are to be taxed they should have a say about how high those taxes will be and for what they will be spent.

A tea party might be nice this time of year.

Use of Native American names unfair, Nazi titles better suit spirit of football

Recently there has been some debate as to whether the use of Indian names or symbols is demeaning towards the Indian people. Well, to me the names of such tribes celebrates the fighting spirit of the Indians and is not meant to demean the Indian people at all. They should be proud that America recognizes their spirit as a formidable foe for our expansion.

But there is another group that deserves more recognition as a formidable enemy than the Indians.

I think a name like Nazis would really be an appropriate name to celebrate the fighting spirit for a football team. Remember your history, a country the size of New Hampshire almost took over the world. And $3.5 million people died and 1700 towns and villages were destroyed as a result of them. If they didn't have fighting spirit, who did?

I can see it now. The team could wear swastikas on their helmets and their version of the tomahawk chop could be the Nazi goose step, to symbolize them stomping over the other team. I won't even begin to list the colorful names that they could have for their stadium.

Think of the possibilities of names from them that could be used for cars and trucks right here in America. Picture a truck with 48-inch wheels sitting four feet off the ground with GESTAPO written on it's fender. I'd buy one right now!

You'd be hard pressed to find another name that commanded more respect and power. A good commercial for it could be a GESTAPO driving down the Strip and everyone running and hiding when they see it.

All comedy aside. Imagine if you were German or Jewish, how would you react to a team or a vehicle with such a name?

Out of fairness, since we don't have names for teams and vehicles like the ones mentioned above for our most formidable enemy in history, why do we have them for Indians? I personally don't mind names like Redskin, Brave or Cherokee. But I'm not a full blooded Native American.

Apparently there are some Native Americans who do mind and I think we should listen to them for a change.

They have enough problems with toxic waste dumps and nuclear testing on their land. I think we could cut them a little slack on the name issue. — Trace Cleveland, junior, aviation management.

Cops should stop people committing crimes instead of parties who might break the law

In rebuttal to Cheryl Grasher's letter of my letter to the Daily Egyptian, I would like to clear up some of her misconceptions she has about the police force and myself.

Miss Grasher stated in her article that arresting keg parties "may prevent crime that some belligerent drunks commit after getting wasted for a few bucks a cup," and will prevent "criminal damage to property, fights, driving under the influence and rape."

In the above quote I personally saw three incidents that night that were occurring, not incidents that may occur. My point is that the police should have been using their energies to stop the people who are committing the crimes and not search for people who are at a party who might commit a crime. The fact that a party like this is illegal is true, however, it is my argument that fights, driving under the influence, criminal damage to property, and people waving weapons are a much more important duty than trying to create a problem.

I did give a description to the police in the rock throwing incident I saw, however, the police were unable to locate the vandals (maybe they were busy arresting the party).

As for having a "narrow mind" I believe this to be untrue. For example, I do not let things such as the "Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement" lead me to believe that any police force is second to none. I make judgements on the performance of individuals by what they do.

I don't want the reader to feel that I resent or dislike the police force in the city or on campus. I do appreciate the fact that they are here. I however feel as many students feel that the police are either unconcerned or unwilling to pursue the real threat to students, and are more concerned or willing to bust what seems like, compared to other things, an innocent gathering of college students. If I were a parent and my son or daughter were a victim of serious crime while the police were bust writing class "C" misdemeanors, I believe I would bring suit against the city and the school for incompetency.

In closing, I would be happy to debate this issue with Miss Grasher or any other "open minded" student or citizen. — David McGraw, junior, secondary education, history / political science joint responsibilities with the medical school and COS. Some have more responsibility to the medical school and others have more responsibility to COS.

The split of the department requires biochemists to have 100 percent responsibilities in one of the areas instead of both. Five of the biochemists have had their responsibilities moved to the medical school and the other three must decide whether to stay with the College of Science or move to the medical school.

James Tyrell, professor of chemistry and director for the Center of Environmental Health and Safety, said the decision to restructure the department is a disaster.

"The chemistry and biochemistry doctoral program is one of the strongest programs in the University," he said. "What was done on Thursday will destroy it."

Tyrell said he was not notified about the meeting until the afternoon before and had no idea a decision was going to be made.

research dollars said a college chairman.

Albert Kent, chairman for Mechanical Engineering and Energy Processes, said the cuts have affected research dollars as well as faculty work load.

"We have lost about $300,000 in research funds and have had to consolidate some courses on the undergraduate and graduate levels," he said. "We have tried to protect our graduate assistantships."

Mechanical Engineering and Energy Processes does coal research for Illinois.

development program created to provide child care on campus at a reduced cost for student parents. Students already pay $1 to help finance the cost of day care for student parents at Rainbow's End.

Many University faculty and staff also use the center but pay standard child care rates.

Nancy Hunter Pei, director of student development, said Rainbow's End lost its lease last year when the school in which it shared a facility needed additional space because of higher enrollment.

Rainbow's End is located temporarily at the Recreation Center. But Pei said the center is in desperate need of a permanent, licensed facility.

Pei said the child development center had to discontinue infant and toddler programs while located in the Recreation Center.

A new facility would provide more space and allow Rainbow's End to provide care for children between the ages of six weeks and 10 years," she said.

She said the demand for a child care facility is growing because of the increasing amount of non-traditional students.

"Demographics suggest many parents both go to school and care for a child," she said, "and several are single parents."

The University does not know the exact amount of student parents on campus. Pei said about 100 student parents use the facility.

DeArmon said he would like to have a child care facility on campus but he thinks some students may "resent paying for something that is not their responsibility."

Brad Cole, president of the Undergraduate Student Government, said he is "leaning toward supporting the resolution" but wants to get students' reactions before his organization makes an official decision.

Cole said he does not want fees to be increased higher than what students should be paying, based on the services they receive.

He also wants to make certain the money raised from the increase will go toward housing Rainbow's End and not to something that tuition costs should cover.

Student fees are used to "support non-academic activities," he said.

USG will vote at its Oct. 7 meeting whether to support the fee increase.

Susan Hall, president of Graduate and Professional Student Council, said the council is "very supportive" of the proposal.

Hall said GPSC supported the proposal in April because although only a small percentage of enrollment at the University are students with children, people should look at a "wider picture" and recognize the importance of acceptable child care.

GPSC passed the proposal with the stipulation that the additional $3 increase will cease after housing for Rainbow's End is complete. The council also said the University should provide funds for costs of operation and maintenance of the facility.

"Adequate child care is something that everyone should have access to," she said. "There's a certain responsibility that all of us have to try to help our entire world, not just (focus on) our own needs and concerns."

Tan Kah Hui, an SIUC freshman from Malaysia, said the $3 increase will not pinch student's wallets.

"Most people practically spend that much for a pack of beer," she said. "In the future, (the new child care building) will benefit students and improve school facilities."

"Some of the senators believe they should not act on any more nominations since it is so close to the election," Schufreider said.

"Senators who oppose this think it's because Congress is mostly Democratic, and they don't want to vote on someone nominated by a Republican president," he said.

David Carle, spokesman for Simon said the Senate Judiciary Committee will vote Thursday, after which the Senate floor will vote.

Most of the controversy will materialize in the floor discussion, he said.

"Partisan issues have been a factor in the past," Carle said, "but there's no way of knowing until after the (Senate) voting."

Simon and Dixon both endorse Gilbert, Schufreider said, because they believe party affiliations are not as important as Gilbert's experience and record.

SIUC political science professor David Kenney said the hearings and election process have not taken an unusually long time, indicating Gilbert's appointment probably will not be delayed until after the election.

"It's possible that a delay could occur, but so far they have followed the standard procedure, which usually takes several weeks," Kenney said.

"I don't think there's going to be a delay," he said.

Gilbert was nominated for the Federal District Court position on July 2, after being chosen by the Justice Department from three candidates, including former Williamson County State's Attorney Randy Patchett of Marion and U.S. Attorney Frederick Hess, of Belleville.

Gilbert said most of the Senate discussion toward his nomination deals with his background and record in a similar fashion as done with other appointees to federal judicial posts, like Supreme Court nominees.

He said as part of the nomination hearing process, the Federal Bureau of Investigation conducted a background investigation on him, as with all federal judges, based on the elevated responsibility involved with the position.

Gilbert was admitted to the Bar in 1974 approximately upon graduation from Loyola University Law School.

He then became an Assistant City Attorney in Carbondale from 1975 to 1978, and practiced law with the Southern Illinois firm of Gilbert, Kimmell, Huffman & Prosser Ltd. from 1983 to 1988.

In 1988 Gilbert was appointed as judge to the First Judicial Circuit, a position that he still holds.

Dietitian: Weight-loss obsession causes people unnecessary grief

By Rebecca Campbell
Health Writer

A good way to lose weight is to stop worrying about it, a registered dietitian said.

Jan Sundberg, a private practice registered dietitian in Carbondale, said most people are too conscious of their weight.

The clients who go to Sundberg to lose weight for health reasons usually see improvements. They shed 20, 30 or even 40 pounds.

Most of her clients are women who repeatedly have lost and gained weight and want to lose weight for self-esteem reasons.

Kate Zager, registered dietitian in the Wellness Center, said men and women who weigh more than 20 percent above the height-weight chart should probably lose some weight for health reasons.

However, the majority of people who want to shed some pounds do so for cosmetic reasons, she said.

"Very few people need to lose weight," Zager said. "Ninety-nine percent of it is cultural."

Zager said she sees many women in the Student Center who worry about their weight that really do not need to weigh less.

"It takes over their whole life," she said.

Martha Smith, NutriSystem Weightloss Center manager in Carbondale, said many people quit trying to lose weight because eating healthier is too time-consuming.

"Many people give up because they don't have time to weigh, de-bone and de-fat all their food," she said.

Sundberg said her goal is to help clients achieve good health in all aspects of their lives — physical, emotional, mental and spiritual.

"People often label themselves as a food-aholic," she said.

Sundberg said the focus is in the wrong place, and dealing with the reason why people eat and gain weight is the important part.

It does not matter how much weight people want or need to lose, she said.

"The mental anguish is just as severe for some that only wants to lose five pounds as if they had an extra hundred pounds added on," Sundberg said.

Zager said the last 10 pounds "that just won't come off" probably should not be lost.

"If you find a healthy lifestyle eating when you're full and stopping when you're satisfied, exercising and following a well-balanced diet whatever happens to you weight-wise is probably your healthiest weight," she said.

This weight that people tend to stay within a few pounds of is called a set point, she said.

Why this happens has not really been determined, she said, but nutrition professionals have done studies that show there is something that keeps a person's weight about the same.

Often people are struggling to get to a certain goal on the scale, essentially starving themselves, to fit into our society's concept of acceptable, Zager said.

"Wouldn't it be nice if we could just accept each other the way we are?" she said.

Airwaves sizzle over proposed bill designed to regulate cable rates

Los Angeles Times

The cable TV and broadcasting industries are squaring off in a multimillion-dollar public relations battle aimed at drawing consumers into the fray over proposed price controls on cable TV rates.

Viewers are being bombarded with TV spots concerning the cable bill, which is expected to be approved by the House and Senate this week. President Bush is expected to veto the bill, and it is uncertain whether there are enough votes in Congress for an override.

In the latest salvo, the National Association of Broadcasters has sent a memo to its members urging them to use their news departments to produce on-air stories "that give the lie" to cable's claims. "Tell it like it is!" the memo says. "Generate the news stories!"

Cable industry lobbyists call the memo a blatant attempt by broadcasters to use their news departments to generate anti-cable stories. Some TV news executives have also criticized the memo.

"It looks like a disguised effort to slant the news. I find this tactic very disturbing," said David Bartlett, president of the Radio-TV

News Directors Assn. in Washington.

The NAB said the memo was no different than routine briefing papers it sends to more than 200 print journalists. Despite the strong wording, the group also denies that the memo pressures TV journalists to take a partisan stand.

"We're asking (TV journalists) to cover both sides of the story," said Lynn McReynolds, a spokeswoman for the NAB. "Broadcasters have traditionally shied away from covering stories that affect them."

But Robert Kalihoff, government relations chair for NBC affiliates and one of the six broadcasters who signed off on the memo, acknowledged that the memo may have gone too far. "In hindsight, I wish it had been written a different way."

Kalihoff and other broadcasters said they are fighting a hard-ball public relations campaign against the well-heeled cable TV industry.

Indeed, few businesses have the cable TV industry's resources for getting out their message. Anti-cable TV bill messages are being stuffed into monthly cable TV bills and being carried on a dozen different cable TV networks such as CNN and The Discovery Channel.

The bill includes provisions to regulate the most basic level of service such as local over-the-air channels, public TV stations and public access channels. Left largely unregulated would be channels such as CNN, ESPN, HBO and Showtime.

The cable industry most objects to provisions in the bill that would require it to pay to carry local TV stations and force cable networks to make their programming available to competitors, such as satellite services and microwave distributors.

Cable executives said these extra provisions would have the effect of raising prices.

Not so, said cable opponent Gene Kimmelman, legislative director of Consumer Federation of America: "They have no factual basis for claiming this bill will drive up cable prices. They're using scare tactics to confuse the issues."

reported that island roads remain blocked by downed power and telegraph poles and palm fronds.

"There's no structure on the island that has not been affected by the storm," said Waihee, who estimated public and private damage at $1 billion.

Waihee praised the federal relief effort and said "we are probably the beneficiary" from the controversy about slow response of federal officials when Hurricane Andrew hit South Florida Aug. 24 and moved on to Louisiana.

Inaki claimed three lives, one here on lightly hit Oahu, and injured more than 100 people. Federal officials said 10,000 of Kauai's 21,000 homes and most of its 70 hotels were badly damaged.

But Waihee said damage to the hotels, concentrated on the south coast, generally was limited to ground floors filled with water by the storm's tidal surge.

Light rain fell Monday morning on southern and eastern Kauai, but a major tropical storm that had been forecast broke up before reaching the island, according to officials here.

Thousands of tourists abandoned rental cars in fields or along roads and lined up at Lihue Airport, waiting patiently for free Hawaiian Airlines shuttles to take them off the island.

Population problems: Officials say society must make changes to avoid imminent environmental disaster

By John Rezanka
Environmental Writer

The world population increases by 2.9 people every second, 172 people a minute, 1.7 million people a week and 90 million people a year.

Problems related to the growing population were addressed when representatives from 180 countries met at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro in June to discuss the environmental problems threatening the planet.

In pre-summit negotiations, the United States and other industrial nations with relatively low population growth rates said overpopulation is the primary cause of environmental degradation.

Third World nations, which consume less than the developed nations, said overconsumption of resources is the primary cause.

Jennifer Merrill, a spokeswoman for Zero Population Growth, said both groups made valid points.

Although people in developing nations consume less as individuals, high populations in those nations put a tremendous amount of stress on the environment, Merrill said.

Population explosions in third world nations have resulted in poverty and starvation. About 12 million people die of starvation each year and 30 million people more die from diseases made worse by hunger, according to the textbook Environmental Science.

However, the impact of population growth in industrial nations, especially the United States, is huge when the individual rate of resource consumption is considered, Merrill said.

"The United States is the fastest growing industrialized nation in the world," Merrill said. "Our population is growing by more than two million people per year."

"Population growth has a tremendous impact because we consume more than any other nation on earth," she said. "Even though the rate of increase in the United States is lower than that of Third World nations the increase has as much, if not more impact than rapidly expanding populations in the developing world."

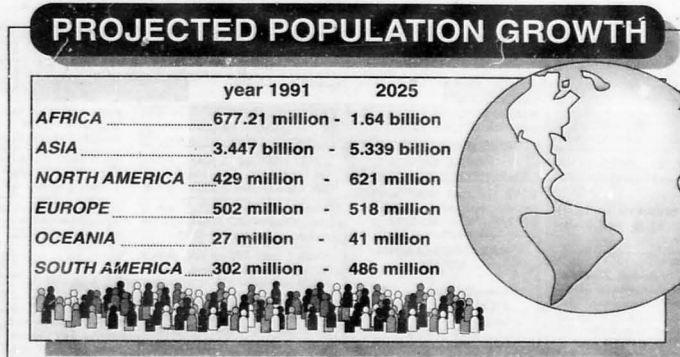

Merrill said it is crucial for U.S. citizens to understand how their lifestyles contribute to environmental problems.

"We can afford to change our lifestyles so all people on the earth could live better," Merrill said.

Gerald Gaffney, a professor of forestry, said people need to change their lifestyles.

Overconsumption and overpopulation are interconnected, Gaffney said.

"For example, a person living in a shed in Bangladesh has little impact on the environment," he said. "Each person in the United States consumes and pollutes at a rate several hundred times higher than a person from Bangladesh."

Each baby born in the United States has several hundred times more impact on the environment than a child born in a Third World nation, Gaffney said.

Society needs to make three changes to avoid environmental disaster, he said.

"We have to move towards zero population growth," Gaffney said. "We have a finite amount of resources on our planet and every time we add a person we place more stress on the environment."

We need to move away from automobile use and rely more on bicycles and our own two feet, he said.

Finally, we have to become a society which relies on solar energy.

James Glover, a professor of recreation who teaches an environmental issues course, said problems are complicated by developing nations' desires to raise their standard of living.

"Both overpopulation and overconsumption are huge problems," Glover said. "What scares me is that the majority of the world's people live in Third World countries and aspire to the same standard of living we have."

The United States has about 5 percent of the world's population but uses 25 to 33 percent of the world's energy, Glover said.

Christopher Lant, a professor of geography, said a direct relationship exists between economic production, resource consumption and environmental degradation.

"The direct cause of environmental problems is economic production," Lant said. "Population growth can be the cause of increases in production but sometimes it is not. Economic production always intervenes in the relationship between population and the environment."

First impressions of Yount at 19 lasting, vivid

By Jim Henneman
The Baltimore Sun

Robin Yount has been an All-Star at two demanding positions.

It's easy now, 3,000 hits and one position later, to recognize the greatness of the longtime Milwaukee Brewer.

But first impressions really are the most lasting, and in this case they are vivid. So, too, is the recollection of an absolutely brilliant comparison made by ex-Baltimore Orioles third-base coach Bill Hunter 18 years ago.

It is difficult to make a rash judgment on an 18-year-old playing in the major leagues after only three months in the minors. The fact that the Brewers were an expansion team in the sixth year of their existence undoubtedly hastened what many considered Yount's premature arrival in the big leagues.

But there he was, playing shortstop, five months before his 19th birthday. Obviously this was a unique talent. From the first day he stepped into the big-league spotlight, there was something special about Yount.

Eddie Murray evoked a similar feeling four years later—and Alan Trammell a year after that. There was something about their presence on the field that demanded attention. You had a sense that, at any time, you could see something spectacular.

Early in Yount's career, that could be anything from a line drive into an outfield gap to a miraculous catch and a blatantly wild throw from deep in the hole at shortstop. Even his errors were exciting—and he made an astounding 44 in his second season (1975), many of them the result of a 19-year-old's youthful exuberance.

But there was never any doubt about the ability stored inside the kid's skinny body. Even then he had the loping strides and graceful style that said something special was in the making.

Having witnessed Yount's first big-league hit (a single to center field off Dave McNally in the Brewers' fifth game of the season, April 12, 1974), it was a special treat to watch on television Wednesday night as No. 3,000 landed about 50 feet from the spot where No. 1 came to rest.

It's impossible to anticipate or predict Hall of Fame greatness, but watching Yount reach his milestone, it was impossible not to recall the conversation with Hunter 18 years ago. A former shortstop who had been around the game for a quarter of a century, Hunter was asked for his opinion of the Milwaukee wonderkid, who would finish that first year with a respectable .250 batting average.

It was midseason, after the Orioles had seen the Brewers a second time, and Hunter did not hesitate to make a bold comparison. "He reminds me of Al Kaline as a kid."

Navratilova, Connors to play in cable pay-per-view match

Los Angeles Times

In tennis, a sport where love gets you nothing, $24.95 gets you a peek at a battle of the sexes.

Martina Navratilova will try to increase women's advantage over men when she takes on Jimmy Connors Friday in a best-of-three sets match at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Nev.

Barry Tomkins, Vitas Gerulaitis, Betsy Nagelsen and Jim Hill will report on this pay-per-view telecast. There will also be a celebrity one-set doublesmatch.

This is the sixth formal man-vs.-woman match. On Mother's Day, 1973, Bobby Riggs defeated Margaret Court, 6-2, 6-3, 6-3. Sports Illustrated put Riggs on its cover that week, with the warning, "Never bet against this man."

But Billie Jean King proved the magazine wrong when she defeated the 55-year-old Riggs, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3, four months later. The match drew a television rating of 28.1 and record-high audiences of 50 million viewers and 30,472 at the Astrodome in Houston.

But Riggs, a fast talker who readily used male chauvinism to hype his matches, wasn't done yet. He took on a then-13-year-old Tracy Austin in 1976, and lost, 6-2.

In 1981, Riggs paired with Pancho Segura for a pair of doubles wins over little-known women professionals. At age 67 in 1985, he teamed with Vitas Gerulaitis in a 2-6, 3-6, 4-6 loss to Navratilova and Pam Shriver in a pay-per-view match.

"Bobby was too old and Vitas was not that much of a doubles player anyway," Navratilova recalls. "It didn't matter who Bobby would have played with. We would have won. Bobby was too much of a handicap."

While Riggs' handicap was age, Ilie Nastase was limited to one serve instead of two and had to defend the doubles alleys in a 1975 loss to Evonne Goolagong.

Connors will be under similar limitations Friday, although Navratilova has only been given half of the 4-foot doubles alley.

Navratilova, 35, admits she does need a bit of rules edge to be competitive against Connors.

"I can't run as fast, jump as far, I'm not as strong as Jimmy is and haven't played against men," Navratilova says. "When I practice against the guys at first I don't do so well, but the more I play against those balls, the better I get. I haven't seen that kind of ball all that much, so that's another handicap."

Without the advantages, Navratilova estimates she would "win a couple of games a set, but I'm not going to win a match."

Each player will receive an appearance fee, which is a highly-guarded secret, but, "nowhere near" the $500,000 the winner will receive, says Rick Kulis, president of Event Entertainment, the event's promoter.

Both players admit that money is one of the reasons they are playing.

"(A half-million dollars) will pay a lot of lawyers' bills," Navratilova says, referring to costs incurred defending herself against a palimony suit by Judy Nelson, her former live-in companion.

"Playing for a half-million bucks is one important reason to do this," Connors says. "The question is not why play, but why not?"

The Jimmy Connors-Martina Navratilova match airs Friday on pay-per-view channels for a suggested price of $24.95. Check with your cable system for availability.

we were up against, and I think next week at Tennessee Tech we have a good chance of winning."

Other Salukis in the tournament included juniors Laura Stefanich and Dana Rasmus, who both finished the tournament with a total score of 250, and senior Liz Arnold, who finished with a 266.

Individually, Renee Heiken of Illinois finished first with a three-round score of 216. Amy Smethers of Missouri finished with a 244, and Tina Lindsey of ISU finished with a 225.

The Salukis also got a look at three other conference teams at the tournament. Bradley finished 13th with a 1048, Southwest Missouri State finished 15th with a 1067 and Northern Iowa finished 16th with a 1068.

Daugherty said she expects ISU and Tulsa to be the teams to beat in the valley.

Lindros: no special attention

Zapnews

PHILADELPHIA—Okay, so he's signed a six-year, $20 million contract that the NHL Players Association says is the biggest of any rookie in the history of hockey.

Is that any reason to single Eric Lindros out for special treatment?

This is what Eric Lindros says he wants: to be no more than one of 20 Flyers dressed on any given game night, to be just one of the guys. To not be hassled or singled out.

So far, Lindros's teammates seem sympathetic and accepting, rather than jealous or bitter. After all, if he flourishes here, they'll probably flourish, too. If he doesn't, they probably won't.

Mark Recchi, a proven 100-point scorer (113 points with Pittsburgh in (1990-91), figures to be the second highest-paid Flyer this season at between $800,000 and $900,000, or about a fourth of what Lindros will make. He says he doesn't have a problem with Lindros's salary.

Saluki hurler Angie Mick started the first game for the Salukis against Missouri which turned out to be an offensive struggle in which the teams battled into extra innings. The game went nine innings with the Tigers on top 6-5.

Lefthander Tanya Meier hurled a three-hitter in the Salukis only win of the tournament against Indiana State 7-1.

Pitching coach Gary Buckles said Meier threw a good selection of pitches that worked well for her against the competition.

"All of her pitches were impressive except for the rise, which could use some work, and it will get worked on in practice," he said.

Freshman Kristie Spielman pitched the first game of her collegiate career against Evansville in which the Salukis lost 8-3.

Part of Spielman's trouble was that the team did not help her out by playing good defense behind her, Brechtelsbauer said.

"Every time we made a mistake on the defensive side, the other team would take advantage of it and it hurt us in the end," she said.

Buckles said the defense should improve considerably with the practice time they have this week.

"We now know where our strong points and weaknesses are and we will try to find the right combination that we will be able to execute with," he said.

Brechtelsbauer said she was pleased a lot of individual performances, and was able to move the line-up around and see what her team was capable of.

Senior slugger Colleen Holloway was 6 for 12 at the plate to give her an overall batting average of .500 for the tournament, while Jenny Klotz showed overall improvement from last season with a good tournament offensive tournament.
