Gov. Huckabee endorses Brady for governor

Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee fired up an overflow crowd of Republican activists during a party rally Tuesday.

Besides Huckabee, Republican legislators stood behind Brady as they spoke to the crowd at the Williamson County Pavilion. After having been a governor for more than 10 years and lieutenant governor for three years, Huckabee said he had never seen so many legislators come out to back Brady.

"What people want is not only great government but they want good government. They want government that acts with honor, and they also want a government that reflects who they are," he said.

Brady holds a 13-point lead over Quinn and has backing from 40 percent of Republican voters, while Quinn draws support from only 10 percent of Democratic voters, according to a Sept. 12 poll from Rasmussen Reports.

Miss Mattlow, a spokeswoman for Quinn, said Brady's campaign proposals would be discussed in the economy.

"This George W. Bush bailout policy will only set back the progress we've made recently," Mattlow said.

Huckabee, a current former personality from Bloomington, served as Arkansas governor from 1996 to 2007 and after losing the 2008 presidential campaign, he formed a national volunteer team to assist Republican candidates.

University's credit line set at 1.3 percent

RYAN VOYLES
Daily Egyptian

SIU is unlikely to borrow any money this calendar year, though it has established a line of credit for "a worst-case scenario," said SIU President Glenn Paskin. Paskin said the university has established a line of credit of 1.3 percent after discussions between SIU's finance department and agencies who rate debts. He said the rate SIU received is very favorable, with no up-front cost, and most banks would not.

"It is wise to have in a scenario worst-case scenario happening," he said. "If we don't end up getting the money we need, we need to borrow that at some point this year."

SIU is still waiting for more than $18 million from the state for the fiscal year 2010, which ended June 30, Paskin said. He said the state has until the end of December to give its university what it is owed, as the original August 31 deadline for the state to pay back public universities was extended to Dec. 31.

Pointe residents holed up in hotel until further notice

LAUREN LEON
Daily Egyptian

Alexa Chamberlin has been living out of a hotel since the middle of August.

Chamberlin, a senior from Marion studying early childhood education, said she was supposed to move in to The Pointe July 31, one of Carbondale's newest apartment complexes. But Chamberlin said she is staying at the Ramada Inn until her apartment is built. She said she believes she has been lied to by The Pointe administrative staff and continues to push back her move-in date as was stated in the lease agreement.

A week before July 31, Chamberlin received a call from The Pointe administrative saying she couldn't move in to her room until Aug. 15. She is moving in to her apartment on Aug. 15 due to ongoing construction in her building. The Pointe offered her a room at the Ramada Inn, but Chamberlin opted to live with her parents for two weeks. She said she moved into the Ramada Inn Aug. 15 to be closer to the university.

The Pointe had a delay in construction and reserved rooms for the students with the hotel, said Manny Patel, general manager and owner of the Ramada Inn. He said more than 20 students have stayed at the Ramada Inn because of the delay.

Residents have the option to cancel the lease, but Chamberlin said it's difficult finding another apartment at this point in the semester.

Journalism director proposes to take unpaid leave to save jobs

JACOB MAYER
Daily Egyptian

William Finnegan knew the School of Journalism would be in his last year by the proposed 1 percent budget cut.

Finnegan, director of the School of Journalism, said to take a two-year unpaid educational leave that would be spread throughout the school year, a move that would save him about $150,000 but save the school about three positions, he said.

With the university likely to cut an $11.5 million shortfall for fiscal year 2011, Finnegan said retaliation could be severe to faculty positions held by Carolyn Kingpaul and Vicky Kirber, as well as receptionist Shonda Beam, who would have been assigned to another department. The school had to come up with about $100,000 to save the positions, he said.

After being removed during the first week of August about the cuts, Finnegan sent a note to Gary Smith, dean of the College of Mass Communications and Media Arts, to explain how they would affect the school, he said. Finnegan then sent a counter proped that included cuts in the school's operating budget and his decision to take an unpaid educational leave, he said.

Cheng's proposal for faculty senate: cut salaries, enact closure day policy

Cheng said while she has made offers to inform the students on the university's operational needs, her main priority was the welfare of the employees at university.

"This is temporary, then the payroll system kicks back to normal," Cheng said. "This is just a step.

Since the start of the fall semester, there was a $15.3 million shortfall in the university's budget. Cheng said. With a 4 percent budget reduction, $7.3 million was cut from the budget, leaving an $8 million shortfall. The university's core deficit should be approximately $4 million, which leaves a $2.5 million shortage on the university's base budget, excluding cash flow, she said.

In other news, university enrollment increased in some categories, Cheng said.

Graduate enrollment increased by 111 students with 4,682 students, international student enrollment increased by 7 percent and transfer student by 8 percent, Cheng said. However, between sophomore and freshman classes, decline was witnessed.

"We have to look for ways that we reach out to local school students, transfer students and returning adult students in a more deliberate way," Cheng said.

Cheng said she wants to ensure the quality of education and the student learning experience despite hard circumstances. "Over time we need to look for different structures and different ways to do things," she said.

Children take a day off

MICHAEL CANTY
Daily Egyptian

A new program allows elementary children to exchange school days off for game days.

Recreational Sports and Services officials instituted a new program called School Daze Off for children on scheduled half days and holidays. The program seeks to provide youths in first through eighth grade with theme-related activities, which include arts, crafts, learning modules, swimming and recreational entertainment, said Kathy Hollister, assistant director of recreational sports and services.

She said this program gives parents an opportunity to have their children involved with other children their age while parents are working and not able to have childcare.

"School Daze will have a camp flavor," Hollister said. "A lot of kids are unable to have these opportunities. I think it will be a chance for students to receive physical activity for health purposes. It is a choice for kids to build friendships and parents to say what the Rec (Center) has to offer."

Service days offered are Sept. 17, Oct. 8 and Nov. 24, according to the program's flyer. For half days, SIU recreational members pay $35 while non-members pay $40. For full days, members pay $35 while non-members pay $50. For each additional child brought to the camp, there is an additional $5 off for that student.

The program initiative started in the spring with input from the Salki/Single Parent Program, faculty and staff, she said.

A graduate assistant in recreation from Pensacola, Fla., and Hollister's graduate research assistant, said she began contacting schools in surrounding areas for days applicable to holidays and half days during the summer.

G Caban said she investigated within the Carbondale, Carterville and Murphysboro communities to gather information on in-service days and off school days for students.

"The main targets were elementary students," he said. "School days off for students are different from days off for parents. So, I found off days that overlapped from the university's schedule and elementary schools."

G caban said he contacted schools such as Carbondale Elementary School, Unity Point School and Carterville Community School, and looked at the school's calendars to compare holidays and half days.

The program requires a minimum of 15 students in order to be sustainable, Hollister said. She said the staff would determine whether to continue the initiative in the spring semester based on the popularity of the program with members and non-members of the community.

Aldrich said it is important for the children in the community to have a program like Daze to give them another outlet.

"What we see a lot of times are kids unsupervised in Evergreen Terrace, one of our public housing facilities for students with children," Aldrich said. "I think that out of those children who do feel like they are part of the school because they're on campus".

Alexa Chamberlin, a senior from Marion studying early childhood education, studies Sept. 8 in her room at the Ramada Inn in Carbondale. Chamberlin was supposed to move into her apartment July 31 at the Pointe apartment complex, however, just days before her move-in date, she was told she would not be able to move in due to construction. Chamberlin said her move-in date has been changed several times in the last few weeks but that her stay at the hotel has not been bad. "It could be a lot worse," she said.

FREIVOGEL

Freivogel said he would take parts of the issue around Christmas break, spring break and the end of the school year to minimize in effect as much as possible.

Freivogel has a terrific job since he came to the position and has pushed for new initiatives within the ship, such as multimedia projects and the redesign of the Journalism curriculum.

Freivogel entered the School of Journalism as interim director in 2006 after 31 years at the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. He said he became the permanent director the following year.

He said he was caught off guard when he first received Freivogel's proposal because neither he nor the university had anyone to take an unpaid leave. However, he said he was not surprised that Freivogel would be willing to do something that would help the school.

"Given Bill's character, it doesn't surprise me that he was willing to do that," Kolb said.

Kolb, an advertising professor, who was able to remain in his position in part because of Freivogel, said he proposed unpaid leave, said his decision means a lot to her.

"It means that I have a job, and not just a job," she said. "It means I'm here, I'm still part of this.

Kolb said she has worked for many companies and Freivogel is one of the few bosses she has worked for who doesn't have a personal agenda. She also said she is impressed with the level of trust Freivogel has in his faculty.

"He treats us and that's something that's rare," she said. "It's the sign of a really good leader.

Freivogel said he gave in during a time when the faculty was divided, but with time, he has been able to create relationships among the faculty based on trust.

"I think that we all have been able over the years since then to pull together and have a lot of trust in each other," he said. "I have trust in every member of the faculty who we send into the classroom.

Kolb said Freivogel has worked to provide students opportunities to succeed and is willing to look in new directions.

"He's open to ideas," she said. "He's really always looking for better ways to serve the students, better ways to improve the educational experience for students, and he's great to work for.

William Freivogel, director of the School of Journalism, talks to students while enjoying a gift from faculty members, an autographed Stan Musial Baseball, Tuesday in his office in the Communications Building. Freivogel has proposed to take two one-month leaves of absence, meaning a substantial pay cut, to save money in the school's budget.

Trapped miners have a thousand job offers

Chile's mining sector is booming, with $30 billion in new investment expected in the next five years, making skilled mining workers increasingly hard to find.

When asked about the government-organized job offers, the miners shouldn't lack for work in the industry. Chile's mining sector is booming, with $30 billion in new investment expected in the next five years, making skilled mining workers increasingly hard to find. "It already difficult today to find certain kinds of operators," L EI said.

Some of the jobs being referred to the miners seem risky — like the constant monitoring of Chile's San Germain gold mining company Kinross.

None of the trapped miners should have to venture back into marginal mines like San Jose that struggle to meet Chile's modern safety standards. Many of these jobs come from some of the world's most advanced mining companies — major international players making huge investments in Chile.

Companies are prepared to have the miners work as truck or bulldozer drivers, heavy equipment operators, and supervisors and engineers in several jobs on the surface. Kinslon alone survived the miners, including risk reduction specialist.

"As the name suggests, it's to prevent mining accidents, a very risky activity ... it's a very important role," Letelier said.

Primaries finale: GOP establishment vs Tea Party

With unemployment high and President Barack Obama's popularity below 50 percent, Republicans said the primaries reflected an enthusiasm that would serve the party well in the fall, when control of Congress will be at stake. Turley noted Republican Andrew Cuomo faced no opposition for the party's nomination in New York, the seat he would win.

Former Rep. Rick Lazio voted with political novice Carl Paladino, a wealthy developer who got the party's support, for the Republican nomination.

The states' new electronic voting machines made the debut, and there were scattered reports of problems that resulted in delays and long lines.

In Maryland, former Republican Gov. Bob Ehrlich sought the nomination for a rematch against the man who ousted him from office four years ago, Democrat Martin O'Malley.

There were gubernatorial nominations in New Hampshire, New Mexico, and South Carolina, where voter turnout was expected to be even lower than usual for the primary season.

Thank you from Dr. Larry Dietz, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dr. Peter Gillow, Associate Vice Chancellor/Dean of Students, and Dr. Katie Semersheim, Director of Student Development.

"College is not a spectator sport...get involved!"
Dear Campus and Community Members:

We are proud to announce that individual students and members of Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) listed below voluntarily contributed over 42,900 hours of service to benefit the region and the campus. From August 2009 to July 2010, over 400 students were involved in service through Student Development’s Saluki Volunteer Corps (SVC), the campus civic engagement program. According to Independent Sector; a coalition of foundations and private voluntary organizations, the value of volunteer time in 2009 was $25.85 per hour. Thus, the efforts of our students are worth $1,066,846.90.

The students who volunteer are great ambassadors for SIUC and fine examples of engaged, aware and responsible citizen-scholars. In addition, our students raised over $61,985.00 to help local non-profits, state and international organizations.

We invite all students and RSOs to be involved in service and outreach and to ensure that they document their volunteer hours and philanthropy efforts with Student Development’s Saluki Volunteer Corps. Inducing us so can continue to highlight the good work of our students. Thank you for your commitment to make a difference.

We are very proud of you!

NIU has replacement if needed for ailing head coach Jerry Kill

The Associated Press

DEKALB - Northern Illinois Athletic Director Jeff Compher says defensive coordinator Tracy Claeys will fill in for head coach Jerry Kill against Illinois if doctors say Kill isn't able.

Compher said Tuesday he isn't sure yet whether Kill will be able to make the trip with NIU (1-1) for Saturday's game against the Illini (1-1). Kill has been hospitalized since the weekend after he became dehydrated during Saturday's win over North Dakota. Compher says Kill's illness isn't related to his previous battle with kidney cancer.

In Champagn, Illinois coach Ron Zook said his thoughts and prayers are with Kill. Zook says he doesn't know how Kill will fare during the healing process.

County clerk says voter safeguards in place

The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD - State election officials have been alerted about possible irregularities in Alexander County's voter registration file, but the county clerk says safeguards are in place to help prevent problems in November.

A newspaper report suggested the number of registered voters may exceed the number of residents eligible to vote in the southern Illinois county. County Clerk Francis Lee says he hasn't had time to purge the rolls since taking office last year, but it's her intention to get a cleaned up.

A spokesman says the Illinois State Board of Elections is aware of the irregularities but isn't currently investigating. The Illinois Attorney General's office also isn't investigating.

The county has experienced voting problems in the past. An incident in 2000 had former clerk Louis Mazzaro indicted for voter fraud.

Damaged portion of Illinois oil pipeline replaced

The Associated Press

CHICAGO - A 12-foot section of a damaged pipeline that sent oil bubbling to the surface outside Chicago was being replaced Tuesday, and a federal official said he hopes to fill in the excavation site this week.

A water main beneath the pipeline was scheduled to be repaired Wednesday, said Sam Borries, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's on-scene coordinator.

If all goes well, workers could begin repairing the street in Romeoville by the end of the week, he said. But the spill and resulting pipeline shutdown meant a spike in regional gas prices, and federal officials say it could take weeks to clean up contamination.

A 2-inch diameter hole was found in the bottom of the pipe directly above the water main, and two leaks were found in the top of the water main, but the cause of the oil leak won't be known until the National Transportation Safety Board tests the damaged pipe, investigator Matthew Nicholson said. The damaged section should arrive in Washington by Thursday, he said.

"We got the primary piece of evidence," he said.

New Orleans Saints running back Reggie Bush announced Tuesday he will willingly forgo his 2005 Heisman Trophy in the wake of a four-year NCAA investigation that ended this semester with new punishments for his alma mater, the University of Southern California. Bush and his family received hundreds of thousands of dollars in gift cards from marketing agents while he was attending USC, former Heisman winners Eric Crutchfield and Eddie George have both said Bush may not have made the right choice. Did Bush do the right thing by giving up the coveted Heisman?

NICK JOHNSON

Bush gave up the award only because he knew the NCAA wanted to take the Heisman from him. It was only a matter of time before the powers that be came calling down on him. One is to blame.

I don't think he's showing incredible maturity with this move. Giving up the award for fear alone in the country requires incredible allowances. It's not a scenario that many of the greatest professional football players were also the most humble ones.

SIU survive Skyhawks, earns eighth shutout

BRANDON LACHANCE

Daily Egyptian

Though they struggled with errors and had to draw out of a come-from-behind win, the Salukis recorded their eighth shutout of the season in a 3-0 home victory over University of Tennessee-Martin on Saturday.

The Salukis (9-1) defeated the Skyhawks (2-9) 25-19, 25-23 and 25-23 in three games. SIU started each game on a run, then let UT Martin make runs of its own to get back in the game.

Skyhawk outside hitter Katie Krasniak (13 kills) and errors by the Salukis, such as net and service errors, kept Tennessee-Martin in each game, head coach Brenda Winkelcr said.

Sophomore setter Rachael Brown started a community outreach called Athletics C.A.R.E. that houses children from different homes.

"It's definitely different playing in the middle of the week instead of on a Friday because we are in the middle of school," Brown said. "But that is not an excuse for us not to play."

The Salukis were down 21-19 in the second game but bounced back with solid defense. Senior outside hitter Jennifer Herwanger tied the game 21-21 with an ace. Tennessee-Martin scored two more times before sophomore outside hitter Laura Thoie scored on a block and two kills to take the game for the Salukis. Thoie finished the game with seven digs and three kills.

Senior middle blocker Jasmine Connor said the Salukis' game plan was to get their hands up and stop the aggressive Skyhawk hitters.

"Coach said 'shut down the outside and right side hitters!' They have some good hitters, smart hitters, so it's not like we could just pound it through. We had to be smart where we placed the ball," Connor said.

The final game was a replay of the second, with SIU edging out its opponent with strong defensive net play.

SIU had nine blocks in the match, six more than Tennessee-Martin, and senior right side hitter Alicia Johnson led SIU with 12 kills.

Winkelcr said she talked to her players about not giving away games to opponents with mediocre records.

"We didn't do the small things that we always talk about. We got saved by some good performance by a few people in the end," Winkelcr said.

Tuesday's match was the last pre-season game for the Salukis. Beginning Friday, SIU will play tough conference opponents who make the Mountain Valley Conference the seventh toughest in volleyball, according to NCAA rankings.

Winkelcr said her team is ready to play against MVC opponents, who have compiled a record of 76-26 in their pre-season matches. The match against Tennessee-Martin was a good final test to make sure her team was fully prepared, she said.

"It was good opportunity to get out on the floor and I think it's a good reminder that any great right anything can happen," Winkelcr said.

SIU hosts Creighton 7 p.m. Friday and Drake 4 p.m. Saturday.

For junior Saluki left guard George Danilkowicz, sports were always his area of interest and talent. That's why he decided to use sports to help the community that gave him so many opportunities, he said.

In 2009, the program received the Outstanding Youth in Philanthropy award from the Association of Professional Fund raisers Professional Fund Raisers of Chicago.

When he saw him, "It was shocked. I didn't realize how big it had grown and how much recognition it had received," Danilkowicz said.

MEN'S & WOMEN'S TENNIS

International students add variety, depth to Saluki teams

CHEYENNE ADAMS

Women's tennis head coach Audra Northwrit likes having the flavor of a multicultural team, she said.

"We purposely recruit from different countries," Northwrit said.

But not all athletic teams at SIU are as diverse as Northwrit's, said Dan Rohrer, assistant athletic director for compliance. The number of international student athletes at SIU is low, at approximately 25 to 30 students, he said. These students are primarily involved with tennis and swimming, with a few participating in track, Rohrer said.

On the women's tennis team, for example, three of nine players are international students, Northwrit said. On the men's tennis team, six of the nine players are international students.

"The international students are more easily able to translate their talents to these arenas," Rohrer said. He said tennis and swimming are more global sports, and therefore apply to the majority of the international students.

Northwrit said athletics and academics are not combined in most other countries. If a student wants to participate in a sport while attending a university, the U.S. is most likely his or her best option, she said.

Perhaps this is why the tennis team, consisting of an average half, Northwrit said. This is a striking contrast to football, basketball and volleyball, which Rohrer said currently have no international players.

Northwrit and sophomore tennis player Jennifer Dien said the presence of international students has a positive effect on the team. Dien, who is from Overland Park, Kan., said she had no prior experience playing with international students and the diversity of the players helps avoid one-sided thinking.

"It gives us different depths...like a little variety," Dien said.

Northwrit said she especially loves international students from developing countries.

"They are usually harder workers...That's the kind of kid I want to recruit," Dien said.

Anastasia Simons, a sophomore tennis player from South Africa, gets instruction along with teammates at practice Tuesday at the tennis courts. In addition to Simons, the team has two other international players, Vishakha Sheoran, a senior from India, and Melanie Delsart, a junior from Argentina.

"They are usually harder workers...That's the kind of kid I want to recruit," Dien said.
