Speed is also foremost on the minds of the # Increase in student vote fails to elevate Budsli

TIM CHAMBERLAIN DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Strong student voter turnout still was not enough to capture the mayoral race for John Budslick Tuesday, but it helped catapult Brad Cole into his first term as a Carbondale City Councilman, In the student-dominated precincts, which are precincts 3, 11, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, total turnout, Tuesday was 1,212. This was an increase in turnout for these precincts compared to the turnout at the 1997 general election, which was 1,133. The last two general elections have had a substantial increase in voter turnout in student-dominated precincts since 1995 when turnout was 462.

In the student-dominated precincts, Cole received 700 votes, 275 more votes than his closest opponent in those precincts, Corene McDaniel. Cole acknowledged that the student vote was an important factor in his vic-

Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard handily won his fourth term in office Tuesday, earning 59 percent of the vote in holding off City Councilman Budslick by about Budslick benefited from widespread backing in student-dominated precincts, where he earned more than three times the number of votes Dillard did, but he could not overcome Dillard's substantial comunity-wide base of support.

Dillard clobbered his opposition in precincts 12,13,14,15 ar.J 16 in the city's southwest side. The mayor collected more than 1,100 votes in those precincts, compared to just 235 for Budslick.

"There were a lot of good students out there (Tuesday) working for me," Budslick said, "I'm very proud of them." Budslick, who will vacate his seat on the council in May, added that he intends to return to the council when the next election rolls around in two years.

"We did everything right," he said of the campaign. "The city decided they want

Although disappointed in the results and relieved to have the campaign behind him, Budslick said he will look back fondly on the events of the past several months,

Putting Hollywood on the back burner

AIMING HIGH:

Trainer to the stars reaches for his dreams as an Air Force officer.

MATT SMENOS DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Putting his Hollywood dream on hold, Rick Breen, ex-boxer and trainer to the stars, is aiming higher.

Breen, a graduate student in recreation and a cadet in the Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps, said he believes that positive thinking is the key to success.

"I like to call everybody I meet champ," said Breen. "To me, it seems that everyone — for some people, just getting up in the inorning is a real challenge, but we all have to work hard."

Breen has had a very diverse lifestyle. He has been a personal trainer for Hollywood personalities such as Mickey Rourke, pro-fessional athletes and has worked in television and film. His original goal was to win a world title in one of the martial arts, but lately his mission is to become an officer in the U.S. Air Force.

"A lot of people said that I wasn't smart enough to be an officer in the Air Force, but guess what? I'm commissioning in May '99," he said.

Proving that positive thinking and hard work pay off, Rick Breen, a graduate student in recreation, has lead a life full of personal training, boxing and television and film work.

said he couldn't has been a theme in Breen's life, As a boy growing up in Southern Illinois, Breen described himself as "rowdy."

"I was always a very active kid," he said. "I remember seeing my first martial arts movie and deciding that I wanted to be a champion fighter like Bruce Lee. No one thought I could do it, but I did."

By age 10, Breen said he was in a karate class. He stuck with the martial arts for 18 years and has enjoyed great success, as he is a third-degree black belt in karate. He is a former Golden-Gloves champion and has had the good fortune to work with some of the biggest trainers, stars and athletes in Hollywood.

In Hollywood, Breen said he worked with Rourke at the famed Wildcard Boxing Club. Stars such as Denzel Washington, Mira Sorvino, John Travolta and Robert Forster came in and out of those doors all the time. His time in Hollywood as a boxer and physical trainer exposed him to a whole other world, one of which he instantly wanted to be a part.

'Indecent' material leads to DJ's termination

FRIDAY FREAKOUT:

Scott Miller claims no FCC regulations were broken on show.

CHRIS KENNEDY DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER . . .

Scott Miller returned from a five-day road trip conducting interviews for his local radio show to find the WDBX-FM 91.1 board of directors had fired him, citing "indecent and pro-fane" material in his show, Miller

According to Brian Powell, According to Brian Powell, station manager of WDBX, the board of directors canceled Miller's "Boss Hogg's Funk You, Freak You, Friday Freakout" on Friday mornings as well as firing him from his position as co-host along with Kirsten Keller on their "Morning Mayhem" program on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Miller's termination letter stated: "The board feels these pro-grams are in poor taste and vio-late the mission of Heterodyne Broadcasting."

The letter goes on (to state) or volunteer handbook and FCC regulations clearly prohibit the broadcast of material that is obscene, profane or indecent. The handbook prescribes the immediate removal of anyone airing such material."

The FCC was not involved directly in this decision.

According to Miller, a junior in radio and television, he only recently received the volunteer handbook and he never broke any

"[Some of the material] came as close to right there that I could get," Miller said. "But I don't think I broke any FCC rules." According to Powell, it is true that Miller might not have broken any specific FCC rules, but his actions could be construed as indecent and profane.

The content of Miller's show, which the board felt were inappropriate, revolved around dou-ble-entendre, prank calls, the use of questionable language and a disregard of the purpose of public radio by using a shock-radio format for his show.

The show had content which could be seen as vulgar or pro-fane," Powell said, "There were certainly things that were indecent. He put the station at risk of violating our license. It's fully in their right as the licensees to take action when material that is broadcast is considered obscene.

Powell said the rules of the FCC are subject to interpretation and most boards of directors stay on the conservative side, whereas Miller took a very liberal view on what he could do.

Powell could not point to one incident that resulted in termination but said it was the general tone of the show that resulted in the board of directors decision to cancel it.

According to Miller, he has had minor scrapes with the board of directors resulting from prank phone calls Keller and he had made during early January.

"The board of directors called an emergency meeting and said we couldn't make crank calls and [Powell] had to come in every morning," Miller said, "[Powell] has been at the studio every show and there have been no inci-dences. We've had no problems at all. The board of directors did not call and complain to [Powell]."

That all changed April 2 during. Miller's morning shows According to Miller, during that broadcast Gene Turk, a member of the board of directors and local attorney, called and said that shock radio had no place at a shock radio had no place at a community radio station. Turk accused Miller of disregarding the station's mission station and breaking FCC rules by emphasizing "freak" and "funk you" and by using the word "prick."

Miller said he gave Powell a tage of their protections.

tape of that particular show and Powell told him there was nothing on the tape that directly broke FCC rules or could have directly resulted in termination.

According to Miller's co-host Keller, the board of directors was wary of Miller from the begin-

"I think they were offended by him — period," Keller said, "I think they thought he might screw up. The board of directors got imitated by pretty petty stuff with us."

According to Miller, the material on his show the station con-sidered indecent pales in comparison to what other disc jockeys have done on their shows

Housing fee increase benefits on-campus residents

The students have spoken, and improved housing in Carbondale could be on its way, only it's not thanks to any landlords or task forces. These improvements could be made to residences right here on campus pending a May 13 SIU Board of Trustees vote.

The vote would call for a 4.5-percent increase above the annual 3-percent increase cap instituted in 1997 for a total room and board rate increase of 7.5 percent throughout two years, or 5.99 percent throughout three years. The funds would go toward four-proposal package that would improve deferred maintenance, institute an energy efficient heating/air conditioning ventilation system, connect East. Campus residents to the Ethernet and give a facelift to the dining cafeterias.

If you now live or ever have lived on-campus, you know much of the existing furniture looks like something from a Brady Bunch episode. On campus residents live in rooms with orange and Mylantagreen walls with chipped dressers and lumpy, stained mattresses. Our cafeterias have torn chairs and wobbly tables surrounded by walls with ugly, perplexing white blocks hung on them. With the increase, University Housing says much of this uncomfortable atmosphere decreases. Residents will see new room furniture, millennium-worthy cafeterias and speedy computer connections.

The DAILY EGYPTIAN is in favor of fee and tuition increases when there is a tangible benefit to be seen that is worthy of the requested funds. These benefits, at least the major ones, won't be seen by most of us that are here right now, but University Housing promises the incoming fall class will see them before they graduate. This is because housing rates are set for fall 1999 and the increase is for fiscal year 2001, which begins in July 2000. Unlike the hotly protested athletic fee, this is a monetary increase that will benefit every on-campus resident and only residence hall students would absorb this increase. There's also an out for residents who don't want to pay the increase — live off-campus.

Undergraduate Student Government is already sold on the issue and passed a resolution calling for an increase to improve the quality of housing, and as they're supposed to be representative of the student body opinion, their vote strengthens our call for board approval of this cap exception.

Cap exceptions are allowed for badly needed infrastructure improvements and the EGYPTIAN recognizes this instance as such an exception, but we also trust these exceptions will be limited in the future. The cap was initiated in 1997 and only two years later we're breaking it. While we support the call for improvements in housing and a rapidly deteriorating infrastructure, we don't want such exceptions to become common practice. Stay competitive with other universities, give students quality, comfortable, modern residence halls to attract and keep them here, but don't raise tuition and fees indiscriminately.

Affordability is one of our biggest assets. It's the kind of positive quality we get recognition for in "U.S. News and World Report" because our students don't graduate owing their first 50 real-world paychecks to their student loans. Quality housing is great, but not if students can't afford to come here in the first place, so let's not forget most incoming freshmen are required to live on campus. Having said that, the EGYPTIAN encourages the board to allow this exception request, as it provides quality and necessary improvement for a large number of students while still keeping our tuition competitive with other universities.

We must improve orcal health care in Illinois

Dear Editor,

Dental hygienists throughout Illinois have been visiting their legislators to talk about the 50 percent of Americans who do not receive regular oral health care because the current law under which licensed hygienists must practice creates a barrier to access to preventive care for many seg-ments of the Illinois population. Dental hygienists' services are centered

Oral health preventive services as proorded by dental hygienists are some of the least-costly health services available. According to information released by the Coalition on Oral Health, every dollar invested in preventive care saves between $8 and $50 of more-costly care.

Increased access to care is needed Increased access to care is needed throughout Illinois to provide unmet pre-ventive care to the poor, the elderly, dis-abled and those who live in rural areas as well as additional providers to aid the "ail-ing" sealant and fluoride programs for chil-

The No. 1 barrier in Illinois to access to oral health care is the restrictive supervision laws for dental hygienists.

The current direct supervision law in Illinois requires the dentist to not only authorize the procedure but also to be physically present while it is being performed.

We are talking about routine preventive oral care services by a licensed health professional who is required by law to main-tain current CPR certification as well as a required number of continuing-education hours yearly. It is not the proximity of the identist that assures quality care but rather the education and skills of the licensed provider of the care, which in this case is the dental hygienist.

A less restrictive form of supervision called general supervision, which is already in place in 34 other states, would mean that the dentist would authorize the hygienist to perform the procedure, but the dentist would not need to be present in the treat-ment facility while the care is delivered.

General supervision of hygienists in Illinois would allow dental hygienists to perform preventive services to those receiving little or no oral care.
It would allow hygienists to provide preventive care in hospitals, public health settings, schools, nursing homes and prisons. It could encourage oral health facilities to expand their hours to evenings and weekends to meet the demands of the work-ing patient. It could allow continuity of services in the private dental practice when the dentist is ill or on vacation.

Oral health is an integral part of a patient's total health, and the Illinois Dental Hygienists Association is eager to be a catain improving the access to preventive oral care because they are licensed and edu-cated to provide safe, effective quality care to the citizens of Illinois.

Tips for running the humiliating job search treadmill

As spring semester winds down, students are contemplating one of three things. The lucky are looking forward to a break from school, while the slightly less fortunate are trying to schedule classes around spillway-hop-ping and Sunset Concerts. Then there are the really tragic ones — the near-graduates. Many of them have already begun running on the treadmill of humiliation called "The Job Search."

I know from experience that look ing for a job is more work than most jobs. Not only do you put in long hours, but you also have to exude enthusiasm for every enterprise that interviews you.

Four years of pretending to care about the opinions of the person you're trying to pick up on the Strip does nothing to prepare you for the truly heinous lies you will tell an interviewer. No one realizes what an effort lying can be until he sits across the desk from someone and says, "Why yes, I've been fascinated with polymer plastics since I discovered dry-cleaning bags as a child." Just writing that sentence, I had to slam my head in the desk drawer to ward off a seizure. There's a great sense of relief when I've finally landed a job and can get down to the business of being indifferent.

The first step to landing the Great American lab is gentiage security.

American job is creating a resumé. The first thing a career counselor will tell you is how vitally important this is and that you should spend weeks constructing a meticulous profile of yourself. Then they tell you that the average employer spends about 30 seconds reading it. This is to prepare you for the utter disregard that your boss will show your work in the future.

When writing a resumé, get the truth out of the way immediately by putting your name and phone number putting your name and phone number at the very top. Nearly everything that follows has to be falsified to keep a better liar from getting your job. The first section should state your profes-sional objectives. The heading "Professional Objectives" is a lie all by itself since most of us have none other than food, shelter and paying off the student loans that supposedly make us employable. If I stated mine honestly, it would read something like, "I want to spend most of my days reading 'Rolling Stone' in an environment where no one is quite sure what it is I do." Ironically, I held several such jobs in the Army.

Many guides suggest that you use "high impact verbs" while describing work experience. For example, "As a student secretary, I repaired office equipment by punching, beating and kicking the Xerox machine." This sentence will probably get you a job at SIUC with the Oracle project.

You may not get a job, but there is always the booby prize — the rejec-tion letter. They are usually written to soften the blow by reminding you that you didn't get a job which you applied for and forgot about two months ago. A typical one goes:

Dear Pathetic Schlub,

Although your skills and qualifica-tions would be outstanding for the position of crash-test dummy, we regret to inform you that we gave the assistant manager's job to someone smarter, more articulate and better looking than you. We will bear you in mind, however, if a low-paying posi-tion, guaranteed to destroy your selfesteem opens up.

Sincerely, Someone with a Better Job Than You'll Ever Have

It may not help your ego, but after six months of job hunting, you should have enough of these to insulate the refrigerator crate you're living in.

Campus police charged the three 18-yearold students with reckless endangerment April 6 after officers said the students admitted their role in the explosion. The bomb, a homemade device constructed from a pipe, shattered the lower windows of the room and caused ear injuries to the 22-year-old student who was inside the room at the time. Police said the bomb could have caused more serious dam-age, but the victim's drapes were closed at the time, blocking more glass from flying into the Entering the world Sunday night, a newborn filly will be nicknamed after she develops a distinct personality.

STORY BY Burke Speaker & Rhonda Sciarra / PHOTOS BY Justin Jones-

Carri Perez and Bryan Ault actively take part in the imprinting process of the newborn filly Sunday night. Imprinting begins moments after the birth of a newborn fool.

Tuesday afternoon at the pastures outside of the Horse Center. It vas the first time the newborn had been outside neneath the barn rafters of the SIUC Horse Center, a sweating mare lies heaving in the corner of her stall. A small hoof, encased in placenta, emerges into the crisp, midnight air. Bryan Ault and J.J. Stovall stand nearby like proud fathers, waiting in mounting anticipation for the birthing process to continue.

Shortly before midnight Sunday, the two SIUC students slowly pull the newborn foal from the warmth and comfort of her mother's natural incubator. The damp foal is forced into a world of straw, strange figures and the melody of a country song.

Stephanie Speiser, herdsperson at the Horse Center — located southwest of the campus on Union Hill Road — arrives just in time to witness the foal break forth from her mother's womb.

"The wait is like watching paint dry on the wall night after night," Speiser said. "But when you see the birth, well, it's just a miracle every time."

An 11-month wait and a 96-hour vigil has finally ended in 15 minutes of labor. The saga of a new life

Just a Touch of Love

Shivering as a result of the 60-degree difference between her mother's warmth and the outside temperature, the 80-pound chestnut filly is bombarded within seconds by human contact.

The filly's mother — "Lassie," a 19-year-old chestnut Thoroughbred mare — looks on restlessly as she recovers from exhaustion.

Equine science students Stovall, Ault and last-minute arrival Carri Perez wipe the remaining embry-otic fluid from the filly and add dry straw to the stall to prevent chills and hypothermia.

BIRTH

As students in Sheryl King's stable management class, the trio keeps night watch, monitor-ing Lassie and the two remaining pregnant mares. Students in the class take turns at foal watch, which lasts from dusk until dawn during the foaling season. The foaling season begins prior to when the first foal of the spring is expected

King, a professor in animal science, said the students are "required to take the major responsibility" of SIUC's 50

As part of the imprinting process, the students rub their hands over every part of the filly's body until she no longer twitches at their touch.

Then the students use a trash bag and then a newspaper, desensitizing the filly to foreign sensations. They flex and extend her legs, tap her hooves and spray her with a water bottle. The students, weary as the night progresses, continue with the other side once they finish one side of the body.

Imprinting is the process of introducing the foal to different sensations it will experience during its lifetime. The process of imprinting is conducted immediately following birth and is reinforced during the next four days

According to King, the time frame immediately after a horse's birth is when a foal mentaliy "hooks on" to its envimnment.

"During this period of time they are a completely unwritten page," King said. "You are introducing them to the kinds of things they will experience during their lifetime."

King said the few hours spent imprinting will leave a lasting impression on the horse's behavior throughout its

"It is the very primary part of their learning experience, a part of their makeup from then on and nothing phases them," she said. "They are much easier to train and become very used to

Stovall, a junior in animal science from Eldorado, said although he has witnessed "numerous" births, the birthing process continues to leave him

"I think it is always an amazing thing -- just to see the life cycle start and to know you are one of the first stimuli that the animal has ever experienced," Stovall said, "And she's getting more than she bargained for.' Speiser said the vigorous touching during imprinting improves muscle coordination, which allows the filly to stand and maneuver more efficiently "If we didn't do this, they usually bounce off the wall every time they try to get up," Speiser said. "Nobody likes to see baby foals falling into walls head first."

There's Your Trouble After the group thoroughly imprinted the foal for 45 minutes, their night wore on as they warmed frozen chlostnim for the filly. Chlostrum is the milk produced by a mare in the days before birth that contains antibodies vital to a newborn's immune system.

She's never felt the sun on her back or the wind through her mane before.

> - MARCY CHRISTIANSEN HORSE CENTER

The foal will be dependent upon her mother's milk until it is weaned from its mother, usually at six months of age

Because Lassie had dripped most of her chlostrum in the days prior to the filly's birth, it was unknown if the filly would receive an adequate amount from her mother.

King said while the lack of Lassie's chlostrum was the only problem in the birth of her filly, other complications can lead to dire results.

"The vast majority of the time there are no problems whatsoever," King said. "The problem is when there is a complication, things go bad very quickly.

Two nights before the birth of Lassie's foal, the Horse Center lost both a mare and foal. King said because of that foal's extremely large size, the mare ruptured a uteral artery and hemorrhaged to death.

King said the two deaths caused emotional strain for everyone involved. The tragedy "It is the first time any of my students have experienced that," King said. "They were absolutely devastated — it was extremely emotional for all of them.

Off to the Races

In the next year and a half, the newborn filly will learn ground manners and how to survive in a herd situation. At auctioned along with other Thoroughbred yearlings. She will not be named until she is registered as a thoroughbred in Illinois within a few months. Students working at the farm will give the filly a nickname as soon as she develops her own distinct personality.

Lassie's newborn is her seventh filly born at the Horse Center. Like her other siblings, who have all made it to the race track, this filly may have a future on the turf galloping in stride and bringing home winnings.

But for now, the filly is adjusting to her new life.

As the sun broke through a cloudy sky Tuesday after soon, Lassie and her filly were turned out into a lush pasture for the first time together. Marcy Christiansen, associate herdsperson at the Horse Center, coaxed the foal to follow her mother's lead from the stall and into the field. Lassie and her filly were brought into the pasture and turned loose.

. Absorbing her new surroundings, the filly was wary to leave her mother's side and remained wobbly on her strengthening legs.

Christiansen, a graduate student in equine reproduction, said leaving the security of the barn exposes the filly to a plethora of new sights and

"She's never felt the sun on her back or the wind through her mane before," Christiansen said. "The baby doesn't know quite what to think."

Staying at her mother's shoulder, the filly followed in an unsteady semblance of a gallop. As she gained footing, she moved naturally in cadence with her mom.

After a few minutes of observing the mother-daughter duo, Christiansen reluctantly headed back into the barn and left the pair to an afternoon of enjoyment and discovery.

marked the first time a man had died in labor throughout King's 15 years at SIUC.

up with the best design and the dest material.
"It's the little things that help improve yourmix," said cance team captain Tabitha Poggenpohl, a sophomore in civil engineering from Raymond. "It's just a big a engineering task to come up with a concrete that's light enough to float and is kind of a new innovation in concrete testing."

Last year, a rival team even used ceramic in its concrete mix to make it light. This year's. SIUC entry, "Greased Lightning," uses hollow glass beads to offer strength without adding too much weight. Building a light cance out of concrete presented difficult technical challenges.

Development of the concrete began in . Poggenpohl's team tested different materials for four months before deciding on their innovative concrete mix, which even includes Styrofoam.

But Poggenpohl explains it is not just a competition to build a canoe out of concrete but who can build it the best.

"People don't think it can happen, so it's our job as engineers to make it happen," she canoe team will be displaying the cance from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Friday at the Arena. Because the canoe is named after the famous hot-rod from the musical "Grease," the team designed its display area to resemble the 1950s-era cafe in the musical - the Prosty Palace: Even the canoe is painted in the same red with silver lightening bolt scheme as the original "Greased Lightning" car featured

DAILY EGYPTIAN

The real test for the canoe will be at Campus Beach when the canoe must carry up to four people in five separate races on Campus Lake. Last year the Saluki civil engi-neering students placed third, but this year's competition will be different with a four-person race.

"We've never had a four-person race before, so we're worried that our canoe will be able to carry 650 pounds," Poggenpohl

The 130-pound canoe has not yet been tested in Campus Lake, but the team is confi-dent it will float. The team has been practicing their strokes in last year's canoe.

Material design is a factor for the bridge competition; too, This year's bridge is 120 pounds lighter than last year's 190 pound steel bridge. The key to the bridge's light construction lies in the steel west to make it. String the steel west to make it. tion lies in the steel used to make it. Stine, who designed the bridge, selected aircraft steel rather than regular steel because it is

"This steel is almost three times stronger than usual steel," Stine said. "I had to look all over the country for a month to find this

Developing lighter construction materials is important for engineering students to learn because it results in cheaper transportation and construction costs in real bridge building projects.

The bridges will be judged on stiffness, construction speed, efficiency and even aes-thetics. The structures will have various weights placed to test its stability and weightbearing capabilities. This competition will take place from 1 to 5:30 p.m. at the Arena today. SIUE is the bridge team's biggest rival they have won the competition three years in a row.

In the same student-dominated precincts, Budslick gamered 903 votes, more than three times the total received by Dillard, who received 257 votes. However, this student support could not overcome Dillard, who received 2,327 votes outside of student-dominated precincts while Budslick only managed 880 votes.

Despite the outcome of the election, Budslick was very happy with the effort his student supporters gave

"They really went out and worked hard," Budslick said of his student supporters. "I'm really proud of them."
The trend of increased voter tumout at general elections for all of Carbondale also continued Tuesday. Total voter turnout in Carbondale was 4,539, an increase of 682 voters compared to turnout in 1997 and an increase of 1,836 voters compared to 1995.

County Clerk Larry Reinhardt thought the increased numbers in Carbondale were encouraging, though the increased turnout did not carry over to the rest of Jackson County.

"I think the active campaigns for mayor and City Council in Carbondale contributed to the rise in voter turnout," Reinhardt said. "But the rest of the county still; had an average turnout."

misconception about him in the community. Budslick did say he hopes to work with Dillard for Carbondale's betterment during the next four years.

A longtime Carbondale businessman, Budslick became something of a black sheep among the more conrvative elements of the community for his willingness to cater to student issues. In addition, he was criticized for what some church leaders described as "playing the race card."

race card.

In light of Budslick's persistent admonishments of city leadership for its handling of veteran Carbondale policeman Gerald Edwards, Rock Hills Baptist. Church Paster the Rev. B.R. Hollins called the matter "a political ploy that backfired."

Edwards; an African-American, sued the Carbondale Police Department for racial discrimination after 14 years of failing to receive a promotion and received monetary compensation along with a promotion to sergeant in the 1998 lawsuit settlement.

"Like a boomerang, it came back to hurt him," said Hollins, who added he was considering supporting Budslick before the racial issues became so prevalent in his campaign.

When he crossed the line by playing the race card, I knew I couldn't encour age others to support him, and certainly I couldn't support him myself," Hollins

Corene McDaniel, who like City Council candidate Carl Flowers said she plans to embark upon a future push for a council seat following her failed bid Tuesday, said she wished Budslick had not thrust the Edwards lawsuit back into the campaign spotlight.

"To bring that up again — I do not think that was in the best interest of the community," McDaniel said. Rob Taylor, an SIUC student and mayoral write-in candidate who made lobbying for increased funding for SIUC the focus of his platform, said Budslick's extremist reputation became apparent by because of strict eligibility rules. "My gut feeling is that he is not going to want to burn up a year of eligibility," Callahan said. "He's not going to be ready to play for around three weeks anyway, and that's assuming that he's got the ability."

Mells has been practicing with the baseball team for the past three days and is hoping to rub off some of the basketball team's success to the struggling Salukis. Wednesday's baseball game against Murray State University was canceled because of rain. According to Callahan, Mells ran the fastest 60-yerd time of anyone in tryouts last fall and has decent arm strength. Despite playing shortstop in high school, Callahan believes Mells best chances of success at the college level is at second base or in the

"He didn't necessarily show us enough arm strength at short to be a bonafide Division-I shortstop, but at the same time we haven't been around him long enough," Callahan said.

However, even with talent in the game of baseball, Callahan believes sole dedication to the sport might be what prohibits Mells from being an everyday player.

"One thing that we thought when we saw Brandon is that if he's serious about baseball and wants to be a Division-I player, we are going to need him down here in the fall, as opposed to jumping in into the season," Callahan said, Mells would not be able to play for the baseball team until the middle of March because of his basketball scholarship. He most likely would miss only 15 games.

There will also be the factor of being physically fit for baseball. Mells appears to be one of two Saluki basketball players attempting to play baseball. Kent Williams, a standout at Mount Vernon and top basketball recruit for the 1999 season, plans to join baseball as well this fall.

"[Williams] definitely wanted to go somewhere where he could play baseball and basketball," Callahan said. "Once again, he is going to have to be the one to have to find a way to balance the com-mitment to both sports and the academics. It's not easy, but that's something that he wants to do.'

nents this year 23-6, the Salukis are one home run away from breaking the school record set last year, pri-marily by this same Saluki squad.

Leading the Salukis has been sophomore center fielder Marta Viefhaus with seven home runs, followed by junior second baseman Lori Greiner with five. Sophomore pitcher/designated hitter Erin

Stremsterfer has four homers, while senior utility player Jaymie Cowell — who was named MVC player of have hit three each. However, the Aces' (36-13, 4-4) arsenal includes a few long ball hitters themselves, most notably sophomore standout catcher Jessica Huff's league-leading 10 home runs this season surpasses the Aces entire season total of nine last year. Huff is also batting .357 (sixth in MVC) with a league-leading 43 RBIs

"They have a great young catcher in Huff," Saluki softball coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said. "She's their biggest hitter — she can hit a ball out of the park. She's just an outstanding athlete and an all-conference type player."
The key to stopping Huff will lie in the hands, or rather the arms, of Saluki pitchers junior Carisa Winters (11-8) and Stremsterfer

"We have a great deal of respect for the Saluki pitching staff," Evansville coach Gwen Lewis said. "Carisa Winters and Erin (Stremsterfer) are going to switch speeds on us, and our goal is to not fall behind in the count."

Evansville, the preseason No. 4 pick in the Valley, is in a three-way tie with Wichita State University and the University of No thern Iowa for fifth place. They will attempt to improve in the standings with a win over the 32nd-ranked team in the

"They're going to be at home, d they're ready for us." and they're ready for us," Brechtelsbauer said. "They want nothing more than to knock us off and move up in the Valley standings. If we're not ready to play they'll do just that."

Lewis said playing on the road in the Valley, the No. 8 ranked softball conference in the nation, is a tough chore for anyone - including the preseason conference favorite.

"You can't look at records when it comes to conference play," Lewis said. "When playing anyone in the league, you cannot have a bad day or you're probably going to lose."

Evansville's 36 wins this season is a school record, but unlike the Salukis, the Aces' pre-conference schedule did not feature the national powers of Fresno State University, the University of Michigan or a slew of other top 25

Michigan or a siew of other top 25 nationally ranked teams.

"I don't think you want to look at that record and say, 'Well, they haven't played any strong teams,' Brechtelsbauer said, 'They have played some strong teams, but they haven't played as many strong teams as we have."

Sophomore guard looks to hit the ball instead of shooting it

MIKE BIORKLUND DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Brandon Mells is at it again A month and a half after help-ing the SIUC men's basketball team to a 15-12 record, the sophomore guard is ready to take on a new challenge — college base-

Mells, who averaged 4.4 points and 18 minutes per game for the Salukis last season, is now taking his game off the hardwood and onto the greener grasses of the haseball diamond.
