Married Men, Poor Students Face More Draft Pressure

Max Sappenfield, associate professor of government, will discuss national government today with members of the Youth World workshop being held this week.

Other programs scheduled for today are a parliamentary procedure session lead by Arthur Workum, instructor of speech at VTI, and organization of two workshop committees.

Youth World is a workshop to acquaint Illinois high school students with local, state and national government.

This year a mock United Nations will be held during the workshop.

The 67 students participating in the leadership training program have finished their junior year of high school.

Wednesday the workshopers will discuss parliamentary procedure, see a movie on state government and listen to an address on the role of law in society by George Lewis, an attorney from Quincy.

Thursday they will discuss local government with K. Neil Thurmond, postmaster and mayor of Johnston City, and see slides on Viet Nam and Africa.

The workshop will close Friday with the finalizing of a U.S. resolution, and a banquet speech by Afak Haydar, assistant professor of government at Illinois State University. After the banquet, a closing meeting of the workshop General Assembly will be held.

Scholarship Offer To Mao Printed In Chinese Paper

Now it's Mao Tze-tung's move.

Remember that letter in the July 28 Daily Egyptian offering the Chinese Communist boss a swimming scholarship after his infamous trip down the Yangtze River in record-breaking time?

Well, it has been translated into Chinese and recently was reprinted in the Central Daily News on Taipei, a Formosan student attending SIU has reported.

The letter, written by Egyptian reporter Ed Rapetti but signed with a fictitious swimming coach's name, was a joke.

"Almost as big a joke as that swim he allegedly took," Rapetti said. "But who knows—if he believes those stories about his swimming ability maybe he'll believe the letter and accept the scholarship."

Unclaimed 1966 SIU Annuals Are Being Sold at Barracks

Unclaimed 1966 Obelisks are now on sale at the Obelisk office, Barracks H2-A, across from the north entrance of the Agriculture Building.

Students may purchase a 1966 Obelisk for $2, if they have paid the activity fee for three of the four terms of this school year. An additional charge of $1 must be paid for each quarter in which a

Mrs. Alice Rector Named Field Marshal For Faculty at Commencement Exercises

Alice P. Rector, assistant to the director of the Student Work Office, will serve as field marshal for the faculty during the Summer Commencement Sept. 2.

Joining Mrs. Rector in leading the four lines in the faculty procession will be Roland Keene, administrative assistant in the President's office; George T. McClure, assistant professor of philosophy; and Wayne S. Ramp, associate professor in the School of Technology.

The ceremony will begin at 7:15 p.m. in McAndrew Stadium with a concert by the SIU summer band. It will be televised and broadcasted by WSIU-TV and WSIU-Radio from the stadium. WSIU-TV will retelecast the ceremony at 8:30 p.m. Sept. 5.

Milton T. Edelman, associate dean of the Graduate School, will be the speaker. Edelman's selection follows the University's practice of naming as Summer Commencement speaker an outstanding faculty member suggested by members of the graduating class. Edelman also is a professor of economics.

More than 1,150 students on the Carbondale campus have applied for degrees to be awarded at the ceremony.

Mrs. Sue Eberhart of the Registrar's Office said that figure includes 687 seeking bachelor's degrees and 470 applying for advanced degrees.

George Bracewell, chairman of the Convocations Committee, said that in case of rain the ceremony will be moved to the SIU Arena.

A separate program for Edwardsville campus graduates will be held Sept. 3 at Edwardsville.

Teachers' Status Is Also Reviewed

Some married men without children and college students with poor grades are now facing the draft in counties throughout the state.

Teacher deferments were also ordered to be reviewed for possible reclassification. None of the surrounding counties have done this yet although others upstate have.

Most of the men being called from southern Illinois counties are still single men between 19 and 26 years old, but married men under 26 without children are being called.

Jackson County is calling up married men without children for their pre-induction physicals for the first time this month, according to Mrs. Shirley Parrish, clerk of the Jackson County Selective Service Board. Boards in Williamson and Union counties also reported that they are taking married men without children.

Although boards in some states have reported a lack of men classified 1-A, Illinois still has a good supply of men in this class, according to Col. Robert Heuser of the State Selective Service office in Springfield.

Some draft officials had speculated that current high draft calls might force the drafting of men between 26 and 35 years old. Heuser, however, said he wouldn't speculate on this matter because it would require permission from the federal government before men over 26 could be called.

Heuser added that the Selective Service hadn't "tightened up much on students." He said most students being drafted are those who rank in the lower portion of their classes and who scored below

30 'Student' Educators Complete Experimental Geography Institute

Thirty junior and senior high school teachers recently completed a unique eight-week experimental course in which the learning process went both ways.

The experiment was conducted by the SIU Department of Geography to improve methods which will eventually be applied to the undergraduate geography program. The participants benefitted from the program too. They improve their methods of teaching geography.

Theodore Schmudde, associate professor of geography and director of the experiment, said that the program was designed to up-date teaching methods on the junior high and high school level.

The Geography Institute is one of many programs sponsored across the country by the National Defense Education Act (NDEA). However, planning the course work and program format was left up to the University, Schmudde said.

Schmudde said that study was planned along a series of ideas instead of parallel courses of ideas.

"That is, the group would study a subject like metropolitan growth for a week or so, instead of studying economics and physical geography at the same time," he said.

No tests were given to the participants. The class members were required to submit papers on their research in areas such as urban growth and resources development.

Twelve hours of credit was given for participation in the sessions that were divided into lecture, class discussion and practical exercises. The "students" received practical knowledge by participating in four field trips in the southern Illinois and St. Louis areas.

During the trips, the class members put to use the new concepts learned in class lectures.

Schmudde said that one of the big aids to the program was that teaching was done by "a small group of professors who agree on a philosophy of how the subject should be presented."

"Another aid was the fact that the participants in this experimental program were specially selected by NDEA requirements," he said.

"Our 'students' have to have no more than nine semester hours of geography; they must have had at least three years of practical teaching experience; they must have at least a B.A. degree; and they must be returning to a junior high or high school this fall to teach geography," Schmudde said.

The success of the project is long-range. The results may not be known for several years. The "students" will have to apply their new-found teaching methods to their own courses, the results of which may not be seen for some time. The University will use the knowledge gained to set up an improved undergraduate program.

Reactions Mixed

'Little Boy Look' in for Fall; But It's for Her, Not Him

By Mary Jensen

Sandra Miller, Northbrook, said, "fashion like this is unfeminine. I wouldn't buy any, but then it's so expensive I probably couldn't afford it." It reminded her of the English "mod" look with everyone looking like boys.

If you come back to campus this fall and discover little boys seem to have replaced the girls, don't be upset. Fashion says the "little boy look" is in.

Surprisingly enough, many girls don't seem to like this new fashion trend.

Billie Sue Buechson from Kincaid said, "It mostly depends on the person. I'm not the type to wear it."

Rita O'Toole, Brimfield, agreed and added that on petit girls little pants and caps are all right, but larger girls usually look ridiculous in them.

Sally Slowik, St. Anne, had a different reason for disliking the current fashion. "I have a hard enough time telling the boys from the girls now when they dress differently. I wouldn't dress like that even if I could afford it."

Charlene Weargin, Danville, thought girls should dress like girls. "I wouldn't wear it just because it's fashion and the other girls do."

Some girls feel the conservative clothes that go anywhere are still the best. Darlene I. Goodson, Harrisburg, said she preferred this type of clothes and didn't think the little boy look would last that long.

One girl, Judy Schurtz, Wal-tonville, didn't like the little boy look and said she wished big boys would stop looking like the girls.

Jerri Kemp, Chapin, and Lydia Cabello, Mexico City, Mexico, thought that in time they would probably like it, and might wear it. After all, they did get used to the little girl look.

Girls generally agreed that the "look" definitely had its place like casual dates, parties, but not classes. Dianna Voss, St. Anne, said there were some places where people should dress more conventionally.

"It depends on who is wearing it. Some girls just can't wear this type of clothes, said Karen Kay Clerico, Rockford. I, myself, would wear it, even to classes in the summer."

Jo-Ellen Sefried, Chilli-cothe, thought the little boy look was cute and feminine, but not her. "Those little pants and socks are darling."

Some fashions are fine until someone exaggerates them. Jane Farr, Taylorville, said, "A little is all right and I think if I liked it that I would wear it. I could even afford a couple of outfits."

And what does the University think of the fashions, including the hip-huggers?

Mrs. Loretta Ott, assistant dean of student affairs, said that she didn't approve of hip-huggers and the bare midriff tops the girls wear with them.

"Girls should dress properly for the occasion and place, a college classroom is not the place for such clothes. The University Dress Code is maintained through representatives from the major housing units and serves as a basis for dress. A girl should have enough personal pride and previous training to know how to dress."

As for wearing these clothes to classes, it is left up to the individual instructor. They can remove students from class for improper dress, and some do.

According to Lyle Gohn, coordinator of the Student Activities Office. Mondays and Fridays have been set aside for new student registration during the summer.

Although parents don't enroll in classes—usually, they and the new students go together to a coffee hour where slides are shown and together they share an orientation session.

One other thing, a mother, especially, wants to see where her youngster is going to live.

Johnson and Ho Guilty of Hubris

By Robert M. Hutchins

The Greeks had a word for it. It was "hubris."

Hubris was an infatuation with your own power and success, an overweening pride often produced or accompanied by the malevolent activities of a rather unattractive goddess, whose name may be translated as delusion.

A man afflicted by hubris always suffered a lapse of memory: he forgot about Nemesis, another unattractive but effective goddess, who saw to it that the self-infatuated, self-righteous man was punished for violating what the Greeks engaged in the Trojan War.

The Homeric warrior was chiefly concerned about honor, which would now be called "face." The senseless quarrel between Agamemnon and Achilles, with which the "Illiad" begins, is about an issue of little intrinsic importance to either one. It was "face" that was at stake. As a man became more powerful and successful, he became more and more subject to hubris, if only because his "honor" was more and more important to him. A trivial slight could throw a Homeric hero into frenzy in no time. Delusion would take hold of him, and Nemesis was not far behind.

The Greeks would have seen the colossal failures of history. Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, Napoleon, Hitler and all that ilk, as obvious victims of hubris who came to a thoroughly natural and perfectly predictable end.

What would the Greeks have said of two heroes of our time, Lyndon B. Johnson and Ho Chi Minh?

They would have pronounced them both guilty. The Greeks would have seen them both as carried away by delusion to the point of bringing disaster upon themselves, their people and perhaps the whole world.

Ho Chi Minh must know that he has nothing to lose by going to the conference table. The attitude of the American people is such that he could undoubtedly get a settlement satisfactory to him and get it this time with adequate international guarantees.

Since he is unlikely to get a better settlement in his lifetime, he is forcing his people to undergo enormous sacrifices to save his face.

But if Ho Chi Minh is guilty, Lyndon B. Johnson is guiltier. Ho Chi Minh is not invading a foreign country, burning its houses and crops and massacring its people with all the tremendous power that science and technology can put at the disposal of the richest and most powerful nation in the world.

Ho Chi Minh at least has the excuse of thinking, however mistakenly, that he is defending his people against alien domination. Lyndon B. Johnson has no excuse at all. In effect he justifies a mistaken policy by alleging that he can make it successful only by deepening, widening and multiplying his mistakes.

It is hard to escape the feeling that Nemesis is around the corner.

Concrete Reform Needed

Japanese School Sees Problem In Mass-Production Education

Almost all the barricades constructed in Waseda University have already been undone and the rest will be undone in the near future. But there is doubt that removing barricades will lead to a solution of the Waseda struggle. The school authorities are making an effort to settle the struggle without considering the problem close up. They are not considering how true education should be protected in the present university structure.

A certain professor, not of Waseda University, had resigned before he reached the age limit for the reason that under present university conditions true education cannot be bestowed and true academic research cannot be executed. His view is natural. Recently many persons were inclined to seek a bachelor's degree. Responding to this demand, universities were enlarged. Therefore mass-production education, as the students have labeled it, resulted and true education is sought in vain under present university conditions.

Certainly it is difficult to explain what is true education and what is a true solution to the Waseda struggle. But we can say that the distinguished phenomena of education is now separated from academic research and that there is no educational background linking education with research. Such a condition should not exist.

Radical reform is needed on this point, but the authorities have said that radical reform is difficult to achieve immediately. Yet their attitude does not convince us. Only talks are maintained: talks between students and authorities about the problem presented by the struggle. Considering this attitude of the authorities, we wonder if they realize that students will be students for only four years; sophomores, three years; juniors, two years; and seniors, only one year.

If the authorities cannot reform immediately, they must have the will to abolish Waseda University. At best this would partially justify the society in which the university career is highly thought of and where true education is not bestowed. But we do not carry logic to extreme, and therefore do not demand the abolishment of the university.

The authorities must decide whether the university is fitted or not for its own role. This attitude should also be applied to high school, secondary school and elementary school. We think that all education is in the same position as Waseda concerning the need for abolishment.

The authorities desire to maintain the university because they think it dishonorable to abolish Waseda University which has an 80-year history. But actually it is the honor of a university to exist only for studies and education. The authorities' attitude is in reality upside down.

As far as the authorities make an effort to maintain "Glorious Waseda," a radical reform is impossible. The illusion that true education can be bestowed in the lecture hall will not fade away from the authorities' attitude.

If we reconsider the fact that seeking education under present conditions is fruitless and that there is no background which links education and academic research, we know what the authorities must do. It is not to remove the barricades, but to first present a concrete plan of radical reform. Undoing barricades should only follow the reform. An upside down solution should not be used.

Now is a good opportunity for changing the university into an institution where true education is available and true academic research executed. Waseda University's authorities have a key role not only to Waseda's possible reform, but to all Japanese universities.

Higher Education Act to Help Students Obtain Private Loans

In the past decade the number of college students has doubled and is still climbing. College expenses are also rising.

Since 1954 the average basic cost of attending a public institution has risen from $1,190 to $1,600 and for a private college from $1,700 to nearly $2,500. Within four years these costs will rise another 20 per cent.

It is therefore both timely and appropriate that the American Bankers Association is urging its members to participate fully in the program made possible by the 1965 Higher Education Act.

Under the act, loans to students by banks and other lending institutions will be guaranteed against default by state and private nonprofit agencies.

The federal government's role will be confined to paying interest on loans where a student's family income is below $15,000, and to bolstering reserves of the guarantee agencies.

There are several advantages to keeping such loans in the private sector. First it removes the necessity for middle-income families to worry about taking a government "means test;" they can get a loan in a routine, businesslike way without worrying if they may be earning too much to qualify.

Private loans by banks also are free of the oath of allegiance requirement still attached to the 1958 National Defense Education Act. Although the law's offensive clause regarding membership in subversive organizations was dropped in 1962, there is still something gratuitous in questioning the loyalty of every student who wants money to attend college.

Students will borrow an estimated $400 million this fall to attend college, compared to $150 million last year under state and private loan programs. A bank can hardly put its money into a sounder investment for the future of the country.

Can All Services Fly One Type?

TFX Plane Squabble Flares Anew

By Bem Price

NEW YORK (AP)—There is more riding on the success of the controversial TFX, now called the F111, than whether the United States can save $1 billion by building an all-purpose warplane.

Both the United Kingdom and Australia reportedly are building their strategic air plans around the Air Force version of the variable wing "air superiority aircraft."

The four-year-old controversy over the TFX, meanwhile, has flared anew over the overweight Navy version of the plane known as the F111B.

A decision on whether the Navy will buy the F111B is due in December. Secretary of the Navy Paul Nitze has described the aircraft weapons system as one "we must make work."

The controversy stems from the question of whether an all-purpose aircraft can be built to meet the needs of the Air Force, Navy and Marines.

Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara has maintained such an aircraft can be built, and that by using an air frame with a high degree of identical parts, the nation would save $1 billion.

The Marines, however, already have told Congress they find the F111 unsuitable for close air support and do not intend to buy it.

Part of the controversy is the fact that McNamara awarded the contract to General Dynamics after a 235-man evaluation board had four times recommended the selection of a design by the Boeing Co. of Seattle.

Further, the Boeing Co. proposed originally to build the 23 test aircraft for $466 million. The General Dynamics bid was $543 million.

McNamara called the Boeing cost proposals "unrealistic."

As for the U.S. allies, the British are planning to buy 50 of the F111s at a cost of $840 million, including spare parts and engines.

The Australians are planning to buy 24 at a price to be negotiated. New Zealand reportedly is also interested in acquiring the F111.

What makes the plane attractive to the British and Australians, aside from savings on research and development, is the range of the F111—3,300 miles on internal fuel.

The range of the F111 with wing tanks has not been made public, but there is scant doubt the plane could reach deep into Europe or the Middle East from Great Britain and far into Asia for the Australians. This range was reportedly a factor in Britain's decision to abandon its old and expensive aircraft carriers.

At present time most problems with the F111 seem centered on the Navy version. Even so, the Air Force F111A still has some, including drag; that is, resistance offered to passage through the air due to friction. The more air resistance, the shorter a plane's range.

The No. 12 version of the F111A—18 research planes are projected—has, according to General Dynamics, reduced the drag problem by nine per cent.

Otherwise, the F111A is re-

ROBERT McNAMARA

ported by Air Force sources to be progressing well.

The F111B is being put together for General Dynamics at Calverton on Long Island by the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Co. Four of the scheduled five Navy prototypes have been built, and the fifth is due off the assembly lines this month.

The first three prototypes were so vastly overweight they were unsuited for use on carriers. No. 3 had a reported gross weight of 78,000 pounds.

The No. 4 F111B, however, is down reportedly to 65,000 pounds. This, however, is still well above the 55,000 pound aircraft the Navy asked for originally.

While General Dynamics reports the F111, A and B, versions have 85 per cent identical airframe parts, they are viewed generally as separate aircraft.

The Navy aircraft has a blunter nose and a three-foot longer wing. Further, the electronic equipment, designed for different missions, differ greatly.

Whether the Pentagon will realize a $1 billion saving on the development and procurement of the aircraft is already subject to serious dispute. Research costs have soared.

Testimony before the House Appropriations Committee last March indicated the program is running about 30 per cent above the original estimates.

In Monsoon Down-Pour

GIs Lose Contact With Enemy; Helicopter Downed, Four Killed

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP)—In a monsoon downpour, U.S. air cavalrymen dug in on a jungled mountainside near the bloody Ia Drang Valley Monday night after losing contact with North Vietnamese troops they had been trying to trap in a 24-hour battle. Both sides were reinforcing.

Red ground fire downed a U.S. rocket helicopter, killing its four-man crew.

U.S. commanders at the scene said the remnants of possibly three North Vietnamese battalions with a regimental command post held positions to the west of the cavalrymen, two miles from Cambodia's border. A North Vietnamese battalion numbers between 300 and 600 men, depending on its mission.

The American commanders said they regarded any forthcoming fight as the climactic battle of the war in the strategic central highlands, about 200 miles northeast of Saigon.

Accounts from the Ia Drang battleground capped a day that produced these other developments:

—The U.S. Command reported the loss of two more American planes over North Viet Nam Sunday, bringing to 17 the number lost in eight days and 339 the total shot down since raids began in February 1965. Both pilots were reported missing.

—U.S. and South Vietnamese officials investigated reports of two more mistaken attacks on friendly villages, taking a toll of nine civilians killed and 50 others wounded. The attacks supposedly were carried out Friday and Saturday. The U.S. Command said it had no evidence immediately that Americans were responsible.

—The allied troop buildup continued. Three hundred South Korean soldiers landed in South Viet Nam as the vanguard of a 17,000-man division due in September, boosting Korean man power there to 41,500. U.S. man power swelled to 292,000 Sunday with the arrival of a 3,800-man light infantry brigade from Ft. Devens, Mass.

The air cavalrymen were dug in along the Chu Pong Mountain chain southwest of the division's base at Pleiku and west of Plei Me, site of the North Vietnamese attack on a U.S. Special Forces camp that touched off the bloodiest battle of the war last November for the cavalry troopers.

Units of the cavalry had been in the area since late July on a hunt and kill mission.

New Teachers to Lose Draft Status Preference

SPRINGFIELD (AP)—Local draft boards have been advised that beginning teachers are not considered as essential as those who have been in the profession several years, Illinois Selective Service headquarters said Monday.

John H. Hammack, state director, said teachers who have just been graduated from college may be called up if they had no previous military service and are not in critical areas such as science and mathematics.

2nd Airline Settlement Proposed to Machinists

WASHINGTON (AP)—Leaders of the machinists union reached a second tentative settlement Monday of the 39-day airlines strike and then moved to make certain the union rank and file is informed on details of the agreement.

The 35,400 machinists are expected to vote within a day or two on whether to accept the proposal. Two weeks ago they rejected a settlement engineered by the White House between the machinists and five strikbound airlines.

Terse telegrams had been sent to the locals informing them of the earlier agreement which was announced by President Johnson in a televised broadcast from the White House.

In the case of the agreement Twins (Twice) Tax Mother's Ingenuity

LONDON (AP)—The mother of two pairs of twins says she is rapidly learning how to bring up four sons born within 20 months of one another. "It's largely a question of super organization," explained Mrs. Peter Zentner, "of making every moment count."

Laurence and Adam are 2 years, 3 months old. Quentin and Marcus are 6 1/2 months. Mrs. Zentner also has a daughter, Victoria, 10.

She had to deal with two boys who were walking, climbing and learning to talk. At the same time she had to handle a new set of twins who had to be fed every four hours and changed at least 10 times a day.

In addition to the twins, the mother had to cook for her daughter and her husband—not to mention herself.

"There's too much to do to spend all my time washing dishes," Mrs. Zentner said Monday.

Transport is another big headache.

"Our station wagon is quite incapable of carrying us and our baggage," she said. "Even the 15-seater bus we borrowed for our first vacation was barely big enough."

reached early Monday morning, the union leadership prepared a detailed report of its terms for mailing to the locals.

The House delayed action on proposed legislation that would have ordered an end to the walkout for up to 180 days. The Rules Committee had been scheduled to take up the legislation but adjourned after a brief closed session.

In San Antonio, Tex., White House press secretary Bill D. Moyers said the White House had no comment on the tentative agreement.

A union source said officials spent most of the morning and early afternoon preparing a report "to spell out in an intelligent manner" the details of the agreement so that the members will be able to tell the difference between what was agreed upon today and what they voted on before. Union sources declined to give details of the agreement.

Officials at several locals across the country indicated they could hold a ratification vote 24 hours after they received details of the agreement.

Wednesday would be the earliest time such balloting could take place.

Orbiter Practices Radioing Pictures

PASADENA, Calif.—(AP)—Warming up for its television debut Thursday, the U.S. spacecraft Lunar Orbiter radioed simulated scenes of the moon Monday from a new orbit that takes it as close as 117 miles to the lunar surface.

Officials at jet propulsion laboratory said the test pictures—photographs of a model of the moon stored in the craft before its launch Wednesday—indicated Lunar Orbiter's transmitting system was working well.

If all continues to go well, the 850-pound vehicle will start snapping actual pictures about midday Thursday and televise them to network audiences that night.

Housing Bias Study Asked By Dirksen

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen said Monday the problem of racial discrimination in housing requires more study.

He told newsmen he had spent the weekend poring over the House-passed civil rights bill and is as convinced as ever that its open housing section is unconstitutional.

But Dirksen said he doesn't like to leave "a gaping hole in a bill," and talked about the possibility of expanding a provision in the House measure for a government study of discriminatory housing practices.

Although not specifically saying so, the Illinois Republican sounded as though he was considering this as a possible alternative to the limited open housing section to the measure.

Dirksen said government agencies could be directed to make a comprehensive study and submit recommendations to Congress within two years. "You don't hit on a solution overnight or off the top of your head in a matter as complicated as this," he said.

Police Will Control Actions Of Cyclists at Illinois Fair

SPRINGFIELD, (AP)—State, city and county authorities announced plans Monday for strict policing of motorcyclists who come to Springfield this week for motorcycle races at the State Fair.

At a joint news conference, State Police Supt. William Morris, Police Chief Silver Suarez and Sangamon County Sheriff James Christensen said 250 men will be on duty at the Fairgrounds and downtown Springfield.

A year ago on Saturday night, the eve of the race, 70 motorcycle riders were arrested for causing disturbances.

In a statement, the three police officials said:

"Based on the premise that performers will not perform without an audience, a concerted effort on the part of all news media in Springfield could serve to reduce the near riotous havoc of the invasion of Springfield by thousands of motorcyclists during the closing days of the fair."

Suarez said police preparations were being made "because of incidents which have happened throughout the country."

N. Y. Herald Tribune Goes Out of Existence

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York Herald Tribune, whose roots went back to Horace Greeley and James Gordon Bennett, formally went out of existence Monday, 114 days after it last appeared in print.

Owners of the World Journal Tribune, Inc., a corporation formed with the merger of the morning Herald Tribune and the afternoon Journal-American and the World Telegram & the Sun, announced the Tribune's death to union leaders.

Scotland Yard Draws Net On Killers of 3 Policemen

LONDON (AP)—Scotland Yard's murder squad was reported closing in Monday on the killers who murdered three unarmed London policemen last Friday.

A police spokesman said armed detectives, engaged in the biggest manhunt in London's history, expect to pounce soon. The hunted men have criminal records and are known to be associated with one or another of the big gangs operating in the capital, the spokesman added. He said they were not top leaders but brutal strongarm "executives."

Nearly 20,000 police and detectives have been thrown into the hunt since the three Yard men, members of the capital's undercover squad against big time crime, were shot within sight of London's Wormwood Scrubs jail.

Witnesses said the policemen were slain as they stopped to question three men in an aged, pale blue standard Vanguard, registration number PGT 726. It had a souped-up engine capable of more than 90 miles an hour.

It was found Sunday in a dingy garage underneath a railway arch near London's Waterloo station. Police were tipped of the hideaway by a woman. Her name is being withheld.

A murder squad spokesman disclosed there has been an almost unprecedented flow of information from London's underworld. British criminals traditionally avoid—and are revolted by—killing of a policeman.

Girls' Softball Teams Compile 8-1 Record

By Mike Schwebel

The SIU women's softball teams have ended a very successful summer season, coming up with a composite record of eight victories against a lone defeat.

The A team wound up with a 7-0 slate, with the B team showing a 1-1 mark.

The final victims of the A team were the Kennedy Kids of Paducah, Ky., and the Carbondale Open Class team.

The Kentucky club went down to an 8-2 defeat at Paducah over the weekend, before the season ended with an 11-1 victory over the local Open Class team. The final contest was played on the University School diamond.

Pitching star Carol Stearns found herself in somewhat of a spot in the last game. Her father is the manager of the Open Class team, and Carol has often pitched for that team.

She sided with Southern, however, and experienced little trouble in gaining the victory, leaving her undefeated for the season.

The women's softball program has been under the direction of Kathy Phipps of the Department of Physical Education for Women.

Draft Breathes Down Necks

70 on the qualification tests this spring.

Heuser said those students in the lower portion of their class who scored below 70 on the test "don't have much going for them" with the draft calls so high.

The national quota for the October draft is 46,200 men, which is the highest since the Korean War. The call for September was increased recently from 31,300 to 37,300. Illinois' quota for the October draft will probably be about 3,200 men.

Local draft boards are instructed to call men by a priority system that places men in six categories within the 1-A classification. Highest on the list are men who are classed as "delinquents" for failing to register. These men are followed by those who volunteer for the draft, bachelors between 19 and 26 and men who were married after Aug. 26, 1965 and have no children.

The fourth category within 1-A are men married before Aug. 26, 1965 who have no children. The fifth and sixth categories are bachelors over 26, and men under 19.
