Pollution Control gets approval for recycling

By Brian Gross
Staff Writer

SIU-C's Pollution Control has received approval from the vice president of campus services to begin a recycling program that will serve the student and campus offices by the end of February.

"We're doing this knowing it's not going to be a winning project," Patrick Glisson, the recycling manager at Pollution Control and a junior in geography, said.

"You can't look at it from an economic viewpoint. You have to look at it from an environmental viewpoint. Pollution Control sent out memos about starting up the program to campus offices after receiving approval of the project from Clarence Dougherty, vice president for campus services.

The program will provide plastic bins for collecting both white paper, such as computer and ledger paper, and aluminum cans. The bins, when full, will be gathered and taken to Southern Recycling, 220 S. Washington Street.

Many campus offices and organizations are already collecting aluminum for fund-raising purposes. Pollution Control will not take cans away from those groups.

However, records on the amount of cans being collected must be kept by groups, he said. The records will be needed to support the state when a recycling law takes effect in 1995. The law requires that counties recycle 25 percent of their waste.

Pollution Control had proposed to recycle newspapers under the program, but market conditions made this prohibitive.

"Right now, there's no market for newspaper," he said. (Southern Recycling) can't afford it and we don't want to sustain what business they are doing," Glisson said.

City council to review allocations for seven locally based groups

The Carbondale City Council will review funding requests from seven community-based organizations for fiscal year 1991 at tonight's meeting and decide on the amounts it will allocate to the various organizations.

The city has allocated $63,667 for the organizations for fiscal year '91, which begins May 1. The requests made by the seven organizations total $92,419 — a 50 percent increase from fiscal year '90 funding.

"The funding in fiscal year '90 scaled $61,693. Any funding exceeding $63,667 will require allocation of funds from other sources," said the program, which has promoted recycling by state workers since 1984.

State employees have been recycling their office waste paper through the program for the past few years, but now the state is taking on a new twist.

CMS Director Eugene Resnik said volunteers will be traveling the state collecting directives from 1989 as well as from other years and he said he anticipates collecting enough to make the numbers harder to read.

GTE, however, is currently conducting research to improve the print quality and binding said customers could see the results of that research within two years.

The state is already one step ahead of GTE.

A state program, spearheaded by the Department of Central Management Services, is using recycled paper to print the new directories as well as gathering outdated state directories as part of the state's I-CYCLE program.

The Women's Center also has requested a 5 percent increase in funds from $8,135 in '90 to $8,544 for '91.

The Youth Services Program of Jackson County is asking for a 48 percent increase in its budget. It has requested $4,500 in '90, pared down to $2,048 it received in fiscal year '90.

Senior Citizens Services of Jackson County is requesting the same amount of funding it received in fiscal year '90.

Thompson makes changes to grand jury bill

CHICAGO (UPI) — Gov. James R. Thompson Monday used his amendatory veto power to suggest changes in legislation that would authorize statewide grand juries to prosecute drug kingpins, an action that could doom the legislation.

The bill (H1487) would give the attorney general power to prosecute multi-county drug dealers and would establish tougher penalties for the sale of drug paraphernalia. Supporters said the bill would pay for itself by seizing drug dealers' proceeds.

Thompson suggested the legislature accept changes making the paraphernalia laws more severe.

He also added provisions to allow wiretapping and prosecution in cases related to drugs and eliminated an expiration date on the bill. It now goes back to the Legislature, where it faces an uncertain fate.

The "concept is good, but the bill — in its present form — is like going after a crime with a gun loaded with blanks," Thompson said. "I intend to put live ammunition in this bill, and I will fight in Springfield for support in my party for the changes I have made." He said the changes were made at the suggestion of several former prominent prosecutors in Illinois, including former U.S. Attorney Antonio Valukas of Chicago.

The sponsor, Rep. Tom Homer, D-Danville, said last week that he had only a fragile coalition when the bill passed both houses by a narrow margin in November. He said Monday the amended legislation faces a shaky future.

"The governor did what he believed was a clever thing by loading it down with such provisions that perhaps it could not survive passage," Homer said. "Homer said he would not ask fellow legislators to accept the governor's veto, "but I have grave concern about GTE's conclusion that the current recycling system will be improved."
Lawrence ices victory as Dawgs get by Bills

The Saluki men's basketball team was in the driver's seat before St. Louis University grabbed the steering wheel. Fortunately for the Salukis, sophomore guard Kelvan Lawrence delivered in the clutch and helped the Dawgs avoid a crash.

Lawrence sank four of eight free throws down the stretch as the Salukis pulled out a hard-fought 67-62 victory over the Billikens at Kiel Auditorium Monday.

The Dawgs took a 17-point lead, 71-54, with 9:16 remaining on a three-point play by senior point guard Sterling Mahan. Mahan scored, career-high 27 points on the evening and sank six 3-point shots.

Mahan's field goal would be the Salukis last in the game as St. Louis forced them to win the game at the line.

A free throw by Senior center Jerry Jones broke a string of 11 minutes, 49 seconds without a field goal for the Billikens before Lawrence put the lead at 72-65, but St. Louis was not finished.

St. Louis Jeff Luechefield, a junior forward, pulled the trigger on a three-point bomb and pulled the Billikens within 1 point, 80-79, with less than a minute to play. Lawrence braced his two free throws for the final margin.

The Salukis pulled a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde impersonation from the line. It seemed the game would end as the Dec. 15 meeting at the Arena when the Salukis couldn't hit their free throws down the stretch and lost 75-72. Not counting Lawrence's free throws, the Salukis managed only six of 13 charity tosses in the effort.

The Salukis were relentless on the boards and held a 51-38 margin in rebounds.

St. Louis started the game by hitting its first five shots for a 16-12 lead in the first 5:11. But after that the Dawgs Saut off with an 11-0 run and took the lead for good. But the success of four 3-pointers by Mahan and two by junior Forward Rick Shipley. The Dawgs kept the pressure on the Billikens by continuing the run and stretched it to 23-3 at a 13-19 lead with 7:35 remaining in the game.

Lawrence's career high 27 points, three pointers, two by Mahan and two by senior forward Rick Shipley.

Developers striving to re-vitalize dying river town

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

Democracy is taking root in Cairo and it, along with a developing firm from Maryland, could put the tiny river town back on the map. Richard Poston, emeritus professor in the community development department, said.

Cairo, which has experienced an economic decline for the past 70 years, is on the verge of taking the climb to a healthy, thriving community, Poston said.

Leo A. Molinaro, from the Molinaro/Ruben Associates development firm in Maryland, will be visiting Cairo over the next few days, talking to people and seeing what their goals for the town are.

"I want to put together a theoretical framework for Cairo during my visit," Molinaro said. "Major redevelopment takes a long time, but Mr. Poston has already put things in motion with the riverfront redevelopment ideas and the state park."

Poston said he hopes the firm will want to help redevelop Cairo.

Richard Poston (right), professor emeritus in community development and Leo Molinaro (left), of Molinaro and Ruben Associates discuss plans for the re-development of Cairo Monday afternoon in the SIU Video Lounge.

"They wouldn't make a zip like this if they didn't think it might be worthwhile," Poston said.

"The city has been suffering misfortune and tragedy for decades and it has said "speak up" for years. It's time Cairo got on the upswing," Poston said.

"For the first time, the people of the town have come together and they want Cairo back up to what it used to be," Poston said.

At the turn of the century, everyone predicted Cairo would be an urban Chicago. Now Cairo is struggling to retain its 5,000 residents.

Poston said he will be a member of the community want to restore Cairo to the showboat city it helped shape early America, but he said the restoration project would do more than just boost the economy.

"Democracy isn't in Springfield or Washington D.C." Poston said. "It's in Cairo."

Poston said preliminary plans for "Operation Enterprise" have already begun which include the construction of Port Defiance State Park and an outdoor amphitheater.

"I think the state park will be a major attraction and that will draw national attention," Poston said.

He said he also has plans to restore an old river showboat and turn it into a dinner and entertainment site. The state police station, which was originally the old toll house for the Kentucky river bridge, has also been targeted for renovation.

New computer system to reorganize psychology class

By Aaron Nauth
Staff Writer

Social-Psychology 307 has extended its self-educational basis into the mainframe computer system to take care of all administrative, management and communication with students.

Dr. Thomas Mitchell, associate professor in psychology, said the Instrucational Support System enables him to put all the class materials on file so students can work at their own pace. He provides access to all the course information on the electronic bulletin board through the terminal in his office.

Under the ISS system, students can have the answers to questions regarding lectures, schedules for class, policies, keys to tests and even access to practice tests.

Mitchell said he thinks this type of course orientation will become the standard within five to ten years.

"[In the future] a faculty member who does not use this system for large classes will be handicapped, and students will be unsatisfied."

—Dr. Thomas Mitchell

Mitchell said the department of psychology has plans to convert GE-B 202, "Introduction to Psychology" in the ISS system by fall semester 1990. GE-B 202 has about 1,400 students per semester.

This influx of students using mainframe and micro-computers could create a glut in the system, but Larry Hengehold, director of Computing Affairs, said he thinks there will be sufficient access points for students using the ISS system on the mainframe and micro-computers.

Mitchell said one disadvantage of this system is that students might not be familiar with the computer system, but he pointed out that they will probably need to get familiar with a computer system sometime soon anyway.
UMWA remains key to miners’ livelihood

COAL MINING, one of the biggest industries in Southern Illinois, has come a long way, baby. As Paul M. Angle recorded in Bloody Williamson, Henry Lee Myers, D-Mont., on June 24, 1922, read several newspaper accounts of the Williamson County killings and then reviewed the history of the industry. By the 1920s, the United Mine Workers of America (UMWA) had become entrenched in the mines, and their demands for safer working conditions, better wages, and union recognition were met with resistance from mine owners and government officials.

Problems stemming from terrible health and safety standards in coal mines often were ignored by mine supervisors and company owners. In the late 1800s, men working in unsafe mines was not uncommon. Deaths and injuries also were commonplace.

But then, unions were in infant stages and change was inevitable.

THOSE MINERS who demanded better working conditions, better wages and acceptable safety standards — and were willing to pay for it with their lives — created the United Mine Workers of America July 25, 1890. As negotiators, officials of the UMWA served as buffers between the miners and company owners to bat.

Not much in that way has changed during the past 100 years. The UMWA was successful in changing other things, though. While company owners refused to face up to minimal safety standards, UMWA stepped in.

AND WHERE miners were powerless to gain health and safety standards, UMWA officials went to bat.

Change again may be on the next doorstep. UMWA membership has declined since its peak in the 1940s at about 600,000. Today, fewer miners need the privileges the union has to offer, and membership has sunk to about 150,000.

In Southern Illinois, union miners outnumber non-union by a wide margin. One coal company official said that the prevalence of unionism has caused some companies to increase health and safety standards, many non-union miners believe they fare better than union members because of the vast and sometimes inhibiting control union officials enjoy.

BIL HAKE, division vice-president for Old Ben Coal Co., said the main differences between union and non-union miners at Old Ben are better medical plans, health standards and union recognition.

Those miners who are union members believe they have the best deals. Then again, so do those who work non-union, Hake said.

Appreciably, although times have changed, the disagreements remain the same.

In commemoration of the UMWA’s 100th anniversary, let’s not forget those long-dead Southern Illinois miners who fought for better working conditions and died for advanced health and safety standards.

Battles to gain a national coal miners’ union were hard won. Caution should be extended when considering the future of something that has done so much for so many.

England in quarantine over racism issue

By B.J. Cutler

This spring a struggle will take place in the House of Commons over Britain’s political soul. It will pit racism versus decency, and in today’s world it may be a poor idea not to fight against racism.

The issue that will bitterly divide Parliament is Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher’s plan to offer refuge in Britain to 5,000 leading residents of Hong Kong before the Chinese Communists take control of the colony.

Mrs. Thatcher is right on humane and practical grounds. Her opponent — many of them in her own Conservative Party — are motivated by political ambition and dislike of foreigners, especially non-whites.

In a telling image of China’s regional military superiority, Britain agreed to end its 140-year rule over Hong Kong. In return, Beijing pledged to let the territory keep its free enterprise system and democratic ways for 50 years after the takeover.

However, after last June’s Tiananmen Square massacre and anti-democracy crackdown, virtually all Hong Kong’s 3.7 million citizens expect China to keep its promises.

Those fears have been deepened by Beijing’s demand that only 18 of Hong Kong’s 60 legislators be directly elected before 1997. The communists intend to appoint the remaining lawmakers and to govern through them.

Most Hong Kong residents are of Chinese origin and know their masters-to-be well. Rather than live under Beijing’s regime, many are emigrating — 42,000 last year, an expected 55,000 this year.

To keep the colony functioning, Mrs. Thatcher wishes to offer the right to asylum to about 100,000 business and professional people and their families, 225,000 in all.

She believes that with this “life-line” they will dare to stay in Hong Kong and make it work.

She failed to count on prejudice. Britain essentially was lily-white before World War II. With the end of empire, non-whites arrived and now number 2.4 million — 4.5 percent of the population of 57.1 million.

A minority population of 4.5 percent is about one-fourth the level in the United States, it is too high for many British whites.

Hence the howls over the prime minister’s proposal, which requires changes in the British law.

While the “Iron Lady” usually has her way, she could lose this time. The opposition Labor Party says her invitation to only 50,000 people is lily-white, which is shock hypocrisy.

If Mrs. Thatcher asked to take in more, Labor would be apoplectic.

The anti-Thatcher revolt in Commons is led by Norman Tebbit, a former Conservative Party chairman who hopes to succeed to her office.

A dam this demogoguery lies a wonderful opportunity for the United States. Among Hong Kong’s millions, Britain has carefully identified the best educated and most productive — with extremely promising children.

Washington should amend its own immigration law and ease these people asylum here. They would be an asset to American society and an impetus to the economy, more than repaying this country’s great debt.

And, of course, Britain might wise up, notice that America was attempting a “brain drain” and let Mrs. Thatcher’s plan take effect.

Wherever the 50,000 went, a deal is a deal — Britain or the United States — would win. The only losers would be the old tyrant in Beijing.

Super Bowl generates campaign contributions and a reception, as well as the ticket. The profits from about 50! packages went to Cranston’s personal political action committee.

Scrub Howard News Service

Politicians are using Super Bowl tickets as a lure to big campaign contributions.

For example, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., turned $125 tickets to Sunday’s football extravaganza into $2,500 donations. That handsome paid for a package that included transportation, four nights’ lodging, a lunch, a brunch tickets to raise money.

People can get arrested in most places for scalping tickets to sporting events, but apparently it’s OK for politicians to use them as bait for large campaign contributions.

And isn’t it interesting that politicians apparently have little trouble getting dozens of Super Bowl tickets while ordinary citizens usually can’t buy them for love or money?

Politicians are using Super Bowl tickets as a lure to big campaign contributions.

For example, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., turned $125 tickets to Sunday’s football extravaganza into $2,500 donations. That handsome paid for a package that included transportation, four nights’ lodging, a lunch, a brunch tickets to raise money.

People can get arrested in most places for scalping tickets to sporting events, but apparently it’s OK for politicians to use them as bait for large campaign contributions. And isn’t it interesting that politicians apparently have little trouble getting dozens of Super Bowl tickets while ordinary citizens usually can’t buy them for love or money?

The new argument is that it is necessary to impose a tax to benefit the wealthiest taxpayers when all wage earners are paying higher Social Security taxes. However, some are using this to offset the budget deficit. A proposal to cut the Social Security tax for the wealthy has met with strong opposition from economists. A tax increase of at least $12 billion is needed to fund the programs without affecting economic reasons other than economic ones.

"The city didn't get into this to make money," Tom Redmond, city planner, said. "There's some money available, but that's not the main reason we went into it. It's a lot more environmentally sensitive to have (paper) recycled than for it to be unsigned or landfilled." Redmond said fewer trees are cut down and less pollution is created when paper is recycled.

"In the long term, it's going to have some positive effects," he said.

Carbondale's Clean and Green talked with both the city and the university in advising the groups what to do.

"People are beginning to show an awareness," Jean Foster, coordinator of the Clean and Green, said. "(The University) is an important place to start. A tremendous amount of recyclables are generated by the University. It's a terrible thing to have all go into a landfill."

Clean and Green also will be advertising the University's program to help it get started.

about whether I would be successful with such a motion.

The Legislature could accept the governor's proposed changes with a simple majority in each house. A two-thirds majority would be required in each house to override the veto and make the original bill law.

Thompson said Honor and other legislators should rise above political considerations.

"The choice is very simple," the governor said. "Either the people who are in charge of running this country or the people."

Regarding the possible veto of the original bill, Thompson said the veto would have to be overridden unanimously. The veto of the original bill would have to be overridden by a two-thirds majority in each house to override the veto and make the original bill into law.

These four organizations were joined by the good Samaritan Ministries, New Opportunities, Inc. and the Carbondale chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in making funding requests for fiscal year '91.

Elishelev Speck of the Good Samaritan Ministries, said the $10,000 requested would go toward setting up a money bank and money shelter and staffing for transitional housing at 701 S. Marion and women's housing at 306 N. Marion.

"We hope the city will show some interest in helping us do something for people who need homes. We are not asking for money from people with money. We are not asking to be given a commitment. We are asking for a commitment in this fund to be a way of showing they mean it (fiscal year '91)."

Julie Clausen, executive director of the Women's Center, said the funding from the city will help the center receive additional funding from the Illinois Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

"If the city gives us $10 that enables us to get an additional $100 from the ICADV. That 5 percent increase will multiply with funds from ICADV," Clausen said.

Clausen said the Women's Center anticipates it could serve at least 250 more people with the 5 percent increase predicted with the funds anticipated from ICADV.

"If the funding request is granted, the Women's Center plans on hiring an individual counselor for victims of domestic violence and the children and at least one bilingual Spanish-English staff member," Chairman John Woy said.

Clausen said the funds for the organizations are quite limited.

"How do we fund one agency 5 percent versus another 48 percent? I believe we should fund all agencies the same. All are important agencies and all very necessary," Woy said.

He said he does not know who they could afford to fund the new organizations and stay in line with other funding.

fill almost two semi-truck trailers, more than 45,000 pounds.

Recycling the old and using the recycled material to fabricate the new is known as "closuring the loop," or making the most of our natural resources, Rondeau said.

In addition to recycling the directories, the city will also use recycled paper to print 37,000 of the 1992 edition telephone directories and 5.8 million 1989 state income tax and circuit breaker instruction books.

"Coupled with the directory recycling, these initiatives will divert 157 tons of paper from the waste stream," Gov. James R. Thompson said in a release. "These initiatives will help preserve our natural resources and prolong the lives of our rapidly diminishing landfill sites.

Thompson also said conservation efforts demonstrate recycling efforts can save 2,670 trees, conserve 1 million gallons of water, keep 9,420 pounds of pollutants from entering the environment and extend available space in Illinois landfills by 471 cubic yards.

Future mine engineers targeted by $9,500 grant from Amoco coal

By Peter Zalewski
Staff Writer

Qualified coal mine engineers, while in short supply, are direly needed by the industry.

There is a steady demand each year for 300 mining engineers, but the nation only produces about 100 qualified graduates and five of last year's graduates came from SIU-C, said Dr. John Logan, professor and chairman of the Department of Mining Engineering, said.

Amoco Coal Co. of Marion is trying to attract students into the occupation through a $9,500 grant to the University's mine engineering and research program.

"It's very important to Amoco that new technology and research continue to look for something new, something better for the future. It could come from here, and we'd like it here if it did!" Mike Michell, a spokesman for Amoco, said.

"Amoco Coal Co. has donated every year, but this year is the most we've ever gotten," Chugh said.

Every year, money for undergraduates is offered to students who have the need and grade point average.

The mining engineering department seeks applications for industry scholarships because of the lack of students.

Chugh speculated the grant would be broken down into four $2,500 scholarships. Of the remaining $5,500, $3,000 would go for research and $2,500 to the mining engineering program.

"There is significant shortage of mining engineers right now; the money will go a long way," Chugh said.

"The research will try to optimize mining systems in all operating mines. This may require instrumentation in the mine, data gathering and data analysis. The ultimate goal is to mine all coal at a cheaper cost in Southern Illinois," Chugh said.

"The mining engineering program will look at new ways to utilize the disposal of coal mining. SIU-C was chosen because it has a quality mining program that may be able to turn out the manpower for the needs of the company," Chugh added.

"Anyone who deserves a scholarship has a scholarship in the department. There is a steady demand each year for 300 mining engineers, but the nation only produces about 100 qualified graduates and five of last year's graduates came from SIU-C," Chugh said.

"The shortage will become worse before it gets any better. There is a significant shortage of students," Chugh said.

Coast Guard encourages young boaters to attend certification course in February

By Phil Pearson
Staff Writer

Youngs wanting to operate a boat without supervision should attend a new boating license course beginning Feb. 5, said Colleen Bogard, public education officer with the local U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary.

State law requires that youths between 12 and 18 years old be certified to operate a boat without adult supervision, Bogard said.

Attendance of at least five of the 10 class meetings and passing an end of course test is required to get the Illinois Youth Certification, she said.

Bogard said the course, "Boating Skills and Seamanship," will cover rules on boat handling, safety and legal requirements, marine radio use and all aspects of safe boating.

"The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary is dedicated to boating safety," Bogard said. "That's our purpose."

Bogard said registration of the course can only be done at the first class meeting. A fee of $5 will billed through John A. Logan College, Carbondale, she said.

A book for the course, not required but recommended, can be bought from the Auxiliary for $10, Bogard said.

The class will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. every Monday for 10 weeks beginning Feb. 5 in Room 12 of the John A. Logan College Automotive building, she said.

Asian-American lifestyles focus of 12th annual Big Muddy Festival

By Stephanie Steere
Staff Writer

The 12th annual Big Muddy Film Festival offers students and the Carbondale community a cultural insight into the Asian-American experience.

This year's festival, which runs Feb. 5 through Feb. 11, focuses on Asian-American films and filmmakers, featuring over 100 film entries and over 30 feature films by professionals and independent filmmakers.

Alex Baird, the director of this year's festival, said, "Big Muddy caters to the independent filmmaker getting started in the business of low budget filmmaking."

The Big Muddy Film Festival, which is internationally known, accepts films from all over the United States and for the first time this year's festival will include films from Canada. The films focus on Asian-American problems and lifestyles as seen through the eyes of the filmmakers.

A series of feature film shorts will be shown 7 p.m. Feb. 5 in the Student Center Auditorium.

The first three shorts, "Reflection," "Sideview" and "Beyond the Z-Quan," demonstrate the off-beat animation and humor of animator Tom Yasumi. Also scheduled for the opening night of the festival is "To the Ones I Love," a film shot on the brief historical and personal account of a Chinese family's immigration by Chester Wong.

The documentary film, "Some Name, Given Name Nam," by Trinh T. Minh-ha, will be shown at 7 p.m. Feb. 7. In making this film, Minh-ha used interviews with Vietnamese women, archival footage and folk poetry to show the history of women's resistance in Vietnam. A videotaped panel discussion with Trinh T. Minh-ha will be shown after the documentary.

The films are just a few of the highlights that can be seen at the Big Muddy Film Festival. Judging the films this year are a team of three distinguished guest filmmakers, including Revere Tajima, Barbara Hammer and Chris Spotted Eagle, whose backgrounds in filmmaking varies from narrative and documentary to animation and experimental.

Tajima, an award-winning filmmaker from New York who earned an Academy Award nomination for the documentary, "Who Killed Vincent Chin?" will feature this film at the festival's Guest Filmmaker presentation at 7 p.m. on Feb. 5. Hammer, who is an independent experimental filmmaker, features seven of her short films at 7 p.m. Feb. 9.

Spotted Eagle, from Minneapolis, is a native American independent producer and director of films and videotapes concerning American Indian issues, will feature "The Great Spirit Within the Hole" and "Our Sacred Land" at 7 p.m. Feb. 10.

The film entries will be judged on film type, such as narrative or documentary, and cash prizes totaling $5,000 will be awarded to the films or films exhibiting the highest ratings in quality and content as deemed by the judges.

A public screening of the entries, in addition to the feature events, will run everyday of the festival. Admission to the Big Muddy Film Festival is $2.

Bowl-a-thon to raise money for immigrating Soviet Jews

By Dale Walker Staff Writer

Now that restrictions on immigration have eased up in the Soviet Union, more than 60,000 Jews left the Soviet Union, the highest number since record-keeping began in 1968, Robin Gross, interim director of the B’nai B’rith Hillel Foundation, said. Almost 300,000 Soviet Jews have initiated the immigration process by requesting sponsors from abroad, Gross said. "The lightening up of restrictions is a result of the new reforms in the Soviet Union and the vast amount of pressure from demonstrators there," she said.

"However, we know that there are various reasons that Soviet Jews want to immigrate. Basically, those nationalist uprisings occur there are certain groups scapegoated, and, historically, Jews have been one of those groups," Gross said.

Anti-Semitism is rife in the Soviet Asian republics region where there have been reports of ethnic violence, anti-Semitic outbursts and ethnic strife caused by the growing influence of Islamic fundamentalists, Simcha Dimitz, chairman of the World Zionist Organization said in a Dec. 20, 1989 article in the Palm Beach Jewish Journal. "Now that the door is open, Soviet Jews want to take advantage of it," Gross said. "The United States and Israel are the nations that the majority of Soviet Jews immigrate to, Gross said. "There has been some clampdown in U.S. immigration policy, so now Israeli is absorbing so many," she said.

Since Oct. 1, 1989, Jews leaving the Soviet Union on Israeli visas have not been eligible to come to the United States as refugees. Those who wish to settle in the United States now must apply for American visas at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, Gross said.

By 1,000 immigrants per day could be flown to Israel from the Soviet Union, as soon as the two countries ratify an agreement just reached between their respective airlines, Uri Gordon, head of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency's Immigration and Aliens Department, said in the Palm Beach Jewish Journal.

Funds are needed for resettlement of these immigrants, Gross said.

The second annual bowling party will be hosted by the Hillel Foundation to raise money for Jewish immigrants who need housing, medical care, job training and other basic resources, Gross said. The bowl-a-thon will be held from 2 to 5 p.m.

The bowl-a-thon is part of a national Appeal fund-raising campaign called "Exodus II," which is devoted to the absorption of Soviet Jews in Israel, Gross said.

Human rights attorney to discuss Nicaraguan slayings investigation

By Dale Walker Staff Writer

Mary Dutcher, a human rights attorney who was part of a delegation investigating Jan. 1 slaying of two Catholic nuns — one of them a U.S. citizen — will speak on "The Nicaraguan Elections and the Continuing Contra War," at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the News Central.

Dutcher was a member of the Americas Watch delegation sent to Nicaragua to investigate the night-time ambush in which U.S. citizen Sister Maureen Courtney and Nicaraguan Sister Teresa Rosales were killed. Another sister and a bishop also were wounded in the attack.

A report published Jan. 28 by Americas Watch attributes the ambush to the Contras, Dutcher said. "We are killing our own with our (the United States) misguided pol-

Dutcher said she believes the State Department wants to resist believing that the Jan. 1 slaying of two nuns was done by Contra rebels.

"1 believe the State Department wants to resist believing that it was the Contra force that did the Jan. 1 ambush," she said.

The delegation returned to the U.S. with videotaped interviews of witnesses to the Jan. 1 incident. Those interviewed claimed the assault was carried out by units of the Nicaraguan Contras, Dutcher said. The videotape has been turned over to the State Department, she said.

"What's awful is the Soviet Union is allowing self-determination in Eastern Europe but the United States is stifling, in a very bloody fashion, self-determination in Central America," she said.

Opening of golden arches in Red Square first sign of perestroika to Soviet citizens

MOSCOW (UPI) — The fading Cold War literally will leap from the fire into the frying pan — or at least the griddle — with the opening of the first McDonald's in the world's biggest McDonald's, East or West.

One Russian described the newest American fast-food franchise Monday as the "first dove of perestroika." 51 other countries feasted on Big Macs before they became a symbol in the heart of the new world. But it is a stroke of political restructuring — perestroika. It took 14 years of planning and bargaining for the golden arches to vie with the colored cupolas of St. Basil's Cathedral as the country's chief landmark.

"It will be like a pilgrimage here," Tolya Nikitin said. "There will be a line from the opening hour (10 a.m.) until closing (10 p.m.). People will hear what a clean restaurant it is. It will never be empty."

But another, more cynical Russian, who said her name was Sonya, said, "I hope we will not be getting just another line in Moscow." The reference was to long lines of people who sometimes wait for hours to get consumer goods.

George Kohon, who has sheeped the press for all of its 14 years of pestation, said he and his staff of Russians, trained at McDonald's schools abroad, will do their best to ensure they are not adding to the long lines in the Soviet capital.

"When the Russians get to the front of the line, they will find food, piping hot, smiling faces to wait on them, to thank them and tell them to come back," he said.

Welcoming the expected lines that might snare down Gorky Street to the Kremlin, Kohon said McDonald's Moscow-style hopes to break the McDonald's opening day record of 9,100 transactions set in Budapest and, possibly, the all-time record for any single day, 14,000 in Hong Kong.

Unlike nearly all foreign food ventures in the Soviet Union, Kohon's will be selling Big Macs with fries and milkshakes for rubles, not dollars, breaking what the government calls "the ruble apartheid." 51 other countries keep most Russkins out while foreigners or privileged citizens with dollars can er load their cars with groceries.

Kohon, 32, president of McDonald's-Canada, sat in thespankin clean restaurant of gleaming metal counters and formaica tables and described the decision to sell for rubles as most gratifying.

Realignment of conferences becoming a hot issue again

Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Conference realignment, driven by football and basketball interests, has again become a hot issue. Independents increasingly are warning up to the idea of joining conferences and some conference schools are just getting restless.

TALK IN recent years of Arkansas, Texas and Texas A&M leaving the Southwest Conference to join a Southeastern Superconference has died down, although the possibility still exists. Another realignment issue affecting the SWC is that — as has long been speculated — Arkansas could leave to join the Big Eight, which in turn would lose Nebraska to the Big Ten, which is already the Big Eleven with the addition of Penn State.

PENN STATE's move from independent status in football could be the first of many falling dominoes. There has been talk of Pittsburgh being the next school to sign on. This might even mean that the Pac-10 Conference — the Big Ten's partner in a current ABC-TV deal — might want to follow suit. Don't laugh.

"A couple members of our staff...ked it around informally as to whether the Pac-10 would want to respond as the Big Ten's move," UCLA chancellor Charles Young said.

"I THINK it (the Penn State Big Ten deal) will cause some general interest in reshuffling conference alignments. But I don't have any notions about predicting what the outcome might be."

Penn State's move does have other independents scratching their heads and stepping up in-house discussions about conference affiliations. Even Akron's ringing conference doorbells, hoping to get invited in.

"WE NEED A conference to survive," Akron assistant athletic director Rob Fournier said. "We're certainly not at a level like Notre Dame or Miami, where schools go to their schol ars. One reason for joining a confere nce would be to get some of that TV money from basketball, even if we don't win. Two years ago, we won like 21 or 22 games and didn't have a chance at a post-season tournament."

AT STAKE for these independents are future football and basketball schedules. As schools such as Penn State join or form conferences, the more the remaining independents are left holding the bag. "The Big Ten move has precipitated some degree of urgency in conferences and independents...to re-evaluate their positions individually and collectively," Syracuse athletic director Jake Crouthamel said. "If the Big Ten can pluck — Penn State out, there could be some other conferences ready to do that. Everybody is now saying 'How do we position ourselves so that our strengths are preserved?'

CROUTHAMEL is pumping some diplomatic iron. Syracuse is among a group of independents discussing formation of an Eastern Scoudball all-sports conference. If it goes through, the list of major independents in football and basketball would be cut almost in half.

Other schools — all football independents — involved in this discussion are Miami, Florida State, West Virginia, Pitt, Boston College, Temple, Rutgers, South Carolina and Virginia Tech.

FORMATION OF such an all-sports conference would be difficult. Those 10 schools are spread among the Big East, Metro and Atlantic 10 conferences. Slicing up three leagues to build a fourth could weaken those conferences or even lead to the formation of a new basketball-only conference of "leftovers."

The 1987 calendar included three photographs of Ruth's heirs, Dorothy Ruth Prince and Julia Ruth teammate, watching Elway was like watching an apparatus butcher chop off his fingers.

By halftime, Montana had completed 15 of 23 for 189 yards and 3 touchdowns. Elway was 6 for 20 for 64 yards.

The final numbers were 22 completions in 29 attempts for 297 yards and 3 touchdowns for Montana. Elway was only 10 of 26 for 108 yards, with 2 interceptions. In Denver, Broncos fans were sorting through their closets and drawers, filling trash bags with everything they owned that was orange.

There is always, of course, the chance that record will be broken — as long as the AFC is allowed to send a team to the Super Bowl.
