'Scud busters' foil latest Iraq attack

EASTERN SAUDI ARABIA (UPI) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, under siege by massive allied bombings, marked the end of the first week of the Persian Gulf war Wednesday night with simultaneous missile attacks against Saudi Arabia and Israel.

"Scud busters," foiled the attack by blowing the Scuds out of the sky.

The Patriots' success was a big morale boost for the United States and Israel, which together, have battled efforts by Saddam to draw the Jewish state into the war, which could complicate the U.S.-Arab alliance against Iraq.

On Tuesday night, Patriots, which have intercepted many Scuds launched into Saudi Arabia, failed to pick off one that crashed into Tel Aviv in the third and bloodiest Iraqi attack on Israel.

Saddam's assaults on Saudi Arabia and Israel began Wednesday. The U.S. Central Command said the attacks on Saudi Arabia targeted the capital, Riyadh, the Persian Gulf city of Dhahran and a third site identified only as being in north-central Saudi Arabia.

There were no figures on the number of Scuds or Patriot interceptions, and there were no reports of injury or damage.

Local television stations interrupted live coverage of a briefing on the war in Washington by Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to inform listeners of an air raid and instruct them to put on gas masks.

Within 15 to 30 minutes, the all-clear sounded, indicating that the Patriot-destroyed Scuds carried no chemical payloads.

U.S. students abroad urged to travel safely

By Amy Cooper
Staff Writer

Illinois students studying abroad are being asked to use common sense and take precautions as war rages in the Middle East.

The U.S. State Department travel advisory is encouraging people currently in the Middle East to leave and those traveling to the Middle East to alter their plans.

The travel advisory offers no specific recommendations but urges travelers to be careful and watchful.

SIUC does not have any students in a formal program going to the Middle East, said Thomas Saville, coordinator of Study Abroad Programs.

Although no exchange programs at SIUC have been cancelled or greatly affected, safety is still a big concern for students traveling to other countries in the world, Saville said.

Most of SIUC's Study Abroad programs are in Japan and maintain a low-profile, he said.

Saville said the danger in traveling overseas is in the traveling itself because of students' high visibility. Once the student has arrived at the overseas university, he or she is able to blend in and danger is minimized.

Saville said he does not see any reasons for program cancellations.

SIUC given new date to upgrade waste plan

By Brandi Tipps
Staff Writer

Illinois' Environmental Protection Agency set a new deadline for SIUC's Pollution Control department to meet minimum requirements for a hazardous waste storage application.

John Meister, director of Pollution Control, said the University has been given until July 15 to re-submit an application for the storage of hazardous waste at the chemical storage room in the basement of Neckers.

The University hired Hanson Engineers from Springfield as a consultant to draw up the new application, Meister said.

The new application must correct deficiencies in the old application, including facility description, larger topographic maps, more information on the extent of traffic and traffic patterns and characteristics of the waste, said Mara McGuinnis, public involvement coordinator for the IEPA.

Some of the information in the last application was not even legible, McGuinnis said.

If the University's proposal is denied again, it will have to pay $250,000 to $300,000 in disposal fees annually, the Daily Egyptian reported last fall.

Hanson also is responsible for developing a proposal to clean up the storage rooms in question, said James Tyrrell, chairman of the Hazardous Waste Oversight Advisory Committee and a professor in the Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry.

Tyrrell said the proposal would be submitted to IEPA later this week.

He estimated Hanson will be paid $10,000 for the proposal and $40,000 for the hazardous waste storage application.

"We're trying to get a handle on the overall problem of storing hazardous waste," Tyrrell said.

The University now operates under a Type A storage permit that states the school is a generator of Experts: Public knows little about gulf war

By Jackie Spinner
Staff Writer

Despite a bombardment of media coverage in the first week of the Persian Gulf war, press experts say the American public has very little information about the war.

Los Angeles Times media critic David Shaw says what America knows about the gulf war can be said in 23 seconds.

"We don't know much," Shaw said. "We just don't have access to important information."

Shaw and other media critics believe the U.S. government is restricting information to the press—restrictions they say go overboard even in wartime.

Robert Spellman, SIUC associate professor of journalism, said journalists covering the Persian Gulf war face tougher restrictions than the guidelines that covered the press in Vietnam.

"Journalists could go wherever they wanted in Vietnam," Spellman said. "That's not true in the gulf.

"Pool groups are escorted by public affairs specialists and aren't getting any place the military doesn't want them to get," he said.

Tom Goldstein, dean of the graduate school of journalism at the University of California at Berkeley, said along with military censorship, the media are playing by a whole new set of rules led by technology.

Satellites enable television crews to transmit a war live to viewers for the first time. As missiles flare and bombs fall, TV correspondents, clutching gas masks, are able to bring the war home as it happens.

But Jay Rosen, fellow at the Gannett Foundation for Media Studies, said television originally was very powerful and compelling as viewers were able to see the events as they happened. As the crisis wore on, however, coverage became too much like a TV show.

"Television is in some way presenting the war as a drama," he said.

Joe Foote, chairman of the SIUC radio-television department, said intense coverage for a long period of time can be too much coverage.

"There's too much air-time and

Edgar in area to discuss educational funding

By John Patterson
Staff Writer

Governor Jim Edgar says education is his number one priority for the state, and local educators and administrators said they are hoping he lives up to his word.

Edgar will be in Murphysboro at 11 this morning to talk about elementary education in Southern Illinois.

Edgar met with the State Board of Education last week to stress cooperation between his office and school officials. It was his first official meeting with a state policy-making body since he was inaugurated Jan. 14.

"That is not a coincidence, because education is the most important priority of the Edgar Administration," he said in a press release Wednesday.

Edgar continued his support of education funding and the wish to better the quality of education in Illinois.

"I said throughout the campaign that we should make our school system second to none in the nation, and I intend to keep that promise," Edgar said. "The future of Illinois is being determined right now in our classrooms."

Although Edgar did not directly mention funding for higher education, SIUC Chancellor Lawrence Pettit said University officials are looking forward to working with Edgar to improve support for education at all levels.

"Although it wouldn't go to us, I think the state needs to give attention to disabled pre-elementary students," Pettit said. "Until that problem is resolved, we're going to be sliding backwards. The students at the university level have survived the system. We need to be concerned with those who are lost before first grade."

The future of education may be bleak if a two-year temporary income tax surcharge established in 1989 is not extended or made

SIUC big man ready for big games

Amaya continues to dazzle Saluki fans from inside paint

By Eric Bugger
Staff Writer

Two bit, four bits, six bits, a dollar...everyone is standing up and hollering for Ashraf Amaya's monstrous dunks.

Nothing stirs a reaction from SIUC fans quite like it, and the 6-foot-8 sophomore center from Oac Park knows it.

"It gets the crowd in the game and brings a lot of momentum to the team," Amaya said. "It's great to get that kind of response from just one shot. A lot of times when you get the ball at the low post you're going to get hammered a lot so you have to go up over the rim and jam it in."

Amaya came to SIUC last season and made an immediate impact. He dumped in 7.4 points and grabbed 6.3 rebounds a game, while earning the Missouri Valley Conference Freshman-of-the-Year honors.

This year, Amaya has quieted the talk of a possible sophomore jinx.

"Honestly, that's something (sophomore jinx) I've never heard of," Amaya said. "Anything, I was more worried my freshman year with trying to build confidence. I think my confidence is a lot better. I'm expecting a lot more out of myself than anyone else is expecting from me."

What more could they expect? Through 15 games he leads the team in rebounding with a 9.3 average and is second in points, averaging just under 14 a game.

"I'd say Amaya has had a very fine season this year," Coach Rich Herrin said. "The thing about it, he probably should be having a better year, but we haven't been getting the ball to him as much as we should."

Saluki fans were worried about the inside game when center Jerry Jones graduated last season, but Amaya has brought his own dominating style to the SIUC post position.

"He's quick, he's strong and he's improved so much since last year, it's unbelievable," senior forward Rick Shipley said. "I think he filled in for Jerry (Jones) as well as we could have asked him too."

Individual statistics are the least of Amaya's concerns though.

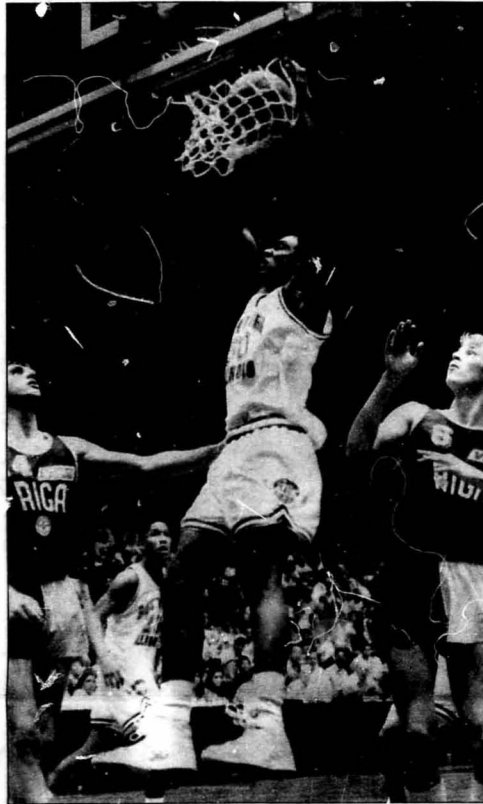

"My goals have changed somewhat," Amaya said. "I would have liked to have gone undefeated in conference—I thought we could have done that. The goal I'm looking forward to most is to win the conference championship, then to win the Valley Tournament. After that I want to do the best we possible can in the NCAA Tournament."

One of Amaya's best nights since donning a Saluki uniform came last year against Bradley, SIUC's opponent tonight. Amaya dominated the boards against the Braves, snatching 18 rebounds, while also pumping in 17 points.

One aspect of Amaya's game he would like to see improve is his outside shooting. He said he has been eyeing up some 3-pointers.

"If I was left open I would definitely take a 3-point shot," Amaya said. "I've been working on my outside shot and I've yet to

Salukis meet Braves tonight

By Eric Bugger
Staff Writer

Taking care of business at home is the key to the Salukis' success, SIUC men's basketball coach Rich Herrin said.

If so, the next three games on the SIUC schedule are crucial.

The Salukis are 2-2 in the Missouri Valley Conference, 8-7 overall, and in six games are yet to win on an opposing team's court. SIUC jumped out to a 2-0 mark in the Valley, but slid to 2-2 with losses at Tulsa and Wichita State last week.

"I think we feel good about coming in here," senior forward Rick Shipley said. "Our goal is still to win every game at home and take our chances on the road. We were at this point (2-2) last year and it's just a matter of us coming on strong at the end of the year like we did last year."

Sophomore center Ashraf Amaya said there is no reason for losing at home.

"You need to be undefeated at home because you have an advantage," he said. "They (opponents) are coming to your home to play you. Like Coach (Sam) Weaver says, 'Don't let anyone come into your house and drink your Kool-aid unless they ask first.'"

SIUC welcomes Bradley to the Arena tonight at 7:30. Drake comes to town Saturday and MVC preseason favorite Creighton takes the Arena floor Monday.

"Obviously it will be an

SIUC women hit road trying to keep top spot in Gateway

By Paul Pabst
Staff Writer

There's nothing that can throw a monkey wrench into a winning streak like a long road trip.

The Saluki women's basketball team is hoping that will not be the case as it takes its seven-game winning streak for a four-game vacation from SIUC's Arena.

The 12-3 Salukis, 7-0 in the Gateway Conference, will begin the trip with Drake Thursday night and then move on to the University of Northern Iowa Saturday afternoon. Adding to the challenge is the fact that Drake and UNI are as different as night and day.

While Drake is a dismal 6-12 overall, they possess a player who is a flat-out offensive machine. Senior forward Jan Jensen ranks as the No. 2 scorer in the nation at 29.5 points a game. Her supporting cast consists of only one player averaging more than 10 points a game.

Jensen has to contend with a Saluki defense that is giving up a sparse 59.3 points a game, as opponents are shooting an average of .393 percent from the field.

But Jensen is not one to be denied when an entire defense is geared to stop her. She has had games of 37, 41 and a career-high 48 points during the 1990-91 season.

"We don't have any one player that can stop Jensen," SIUC head coach Cindy Scott said. "We'll have to try to get some help from a number of people to slow her down."

The Panthers of UNI will give the Salukis a totally different look than the one-gun show of Drake. The Panthers have four players averaging just over 10 points a game. Also unlike Drake, UNI adds to its tough starting five by rotating deep into its bench.

In last season's contest at UNI, the Salukis had to come up with a 23-6 run in the final seven minutes to down the Panthers 75-61. UNI remembers the game at UNI very well.

"We will have to be mentally ready to play against a vastly improved team," Scott said. UNI is a tough place to play."

Panther coach Terry Lazwell sees a defensive battle on the horizon.

"Since we're at home, I can see it being a defensive contest," Lazwell said. "One of the teams will try to force the other team into doing something different than they usually do. We're going to come out and force the issue on defense."

The Salukis depth at the guard position might not be as good as usual for the road trip as junior point guard Colleen Heimstead remains questionable after spraining her ankle last Saturday against the Illinois State Redbirds.

The Drake game will begin at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, while the UNI game will tip-off at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Following those two Gateway Conference contests the Saluki women venture to Charleston to face Eastern Illinois Feb. 1 and to Bowling Green, Ky. to battle Western Kentucky Feb. 3.

Wild Dogs struggling to stay alive at SIUC

By Eric Bugger
Staff Writer

It takes a rare breed of student to be a Wild Dog.

The SIUC Hockey Club, nicknamed the Wild Dogs, has been around for nearly eight years. Having a home in Carbondale, where the temperature usually isn't cold long enough to freeze a popsicle, has been a challenge for the team. In Carbondale, sunbathers are just beginning to wrap up their towels in November, which is when hockey season begins.

It takes a real hockey lover to put up with the hassles of trying to go to school at SIUC and play hockey, said Heath Doty, a junior in aviation from Hoffman Estates and vice president of the hockey club.

"I guess what we have is about 20 guys who really want to play hockey," Doty said.

"Everyone else in the student body that has played hockey before maybe doesn't have the drive and the desire to make this kind of effort to play hockey."

The closest ice for the Wild Dogs is in Evansville, Ind., over 100 miles away and at $65 an hour rental fee. Adding on gas money to get there, each player is burdened with a cost of about $15 just to practice.

"The only regular practice time we get is on dry land," said Ed Domarracki, a junior in aviation from Hoffman Estates and vice president of the hockey club. "We've got Pulliam Hall on Monday nights. It's not the same as being on ice, but you can go over the fundamentals over and over."

Much of the cost is picked up by profits from nonstop fund raisers. Selling hot dogs, raffling off gift certificates and begging

Lithuanian building seized; Latvia makes concession

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet troops seized Lithuania's main paper and printing materials in a warehouse Wednesday in the Soviet government's persistent campaign to reassert power in the Baltics. But in a major concession in the sister republic of Latvia, its president, Aratolijs Gorbunovs, agreed to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's demand for a referendum on independence. Gorbunovs accepted the idea in a meeting with Gorbachev Tuesday night. Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis told his Parliament that Moscow must return all seized buildings to resume a dialogue with the Baltic republic.

Shippers avoid Suez Canal route to Europe

SINGAPORE (UPI) — International shipping lines in Asia are shunning the Suez Canal route to Europe and diverting around South Africa to avoid the potential danger of missiles and mines in the Persian Gulf. Faced by warnings that vessels enter the war-torn Gulf at their own risk, soaring insurance premiums and increased surcharges and fuel costs, shippers carrying freight between Asia and Europe are increasingly opting for the longer trip around the Cape of Good Hope.

German embargo breakers risk 10 years in jail

BONN, Germany (UPI) — German exporters convicted of breaking the United Nations trade embargo against Iraq risk up to 10 years in prison, Economics Minister Juergen Moelleman said Wednesday. He said anyone found breaking the embargo should be dealt with in the same manner as "those who commit murder and homicide." He made the announcement at a news conference after outlining government proposals for a further tightening of legislation to thwart the illegal export of military and other sensitive technology to potential conflict areas.

Allied aircraft losses may increase, Aspin says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin warned Wednesday that the rate of allied aircraft losses, which has been surprisingly low so far, may increase as the gulf war continues. Aspin, D-Wis., also said Iraq may be able to retain its ability to launch Scud missiles until the end of the war. Aspin said it appears the first phase of the war, the air campaign against strategic and military targets principally in Iraq, "is almost over" and that we will be turning increasingly to phase two, the tactical campaign against Iraqi forces in or near Kuwait.

'Bonding' with adult can improve child's life

MUNCIE, Ind. (UPI) — The lives of emotionally starved children can be improved through regular time shared with a caring adult, says a Ball State University professor. Roger Hutchinson, a Ball State counseling psychology professor, believes "problem" children have a strong desire and a need to "bond" with an adult. During his 22 years at the children's home and his work with other troubled youngsters, Hutchinson has seen a contrasting lifestyle pattern develop between children with strong relationships with adults and those who have little or no bonding.

Cairo minister's trial begins; fifth attorney court-appointed

BENTON (UPI) — The trial of a Southern Illinois minister charged with embezzlement, arson and insurance fraud began Wednesday but the Rev. Charles Koen has been forced to be represented by a court-appointed attorney. The fourth attorney to represent Koen withdrew Tuesday, only hours before his trial was scheduled to begin in federal court in Benton, U.S. District Judge James Foreman ordered the trial to proceed on Wednesday and he appointed East St. Louis attorney Phillip Kavanaugh to represent the minister.

William White, junior in special education from St. Louis, addresses Bill Ramsey, a speaker, Tuesday night at the teach-in on the gulf war.

Teach-in offers forum for gulf views

By Christina Hall
Staff Writer

In a packed Student Center Auditorium Tuesday evening, speakers said they opposed war in the Persian Gulf.

There were about 300 people during most of the teach-in sponsored by the Coalition for Mid-East Peace, Friends for Native Americans and the Southern Illinois Latin America Solidarity Committee.

The teach-in provided a forum for speakers and audience to express their views on the war in the Persian Gulf.

All of the speakers opposed U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf, but each offered his own insight.

A.J. Auerbach, SIU emeritus professor of social work, said when the war is over the United States will have destroyed Iraq, a country that has a lot to offer the world.

As was the case after World War II, the United States will have to help rebuild Iraq after the war, and the needs of Americans will once again be set aside, Auerbach said.

For every dollar spent on the war in the Persian Gulf, the less there will be for the poor, education and other domestic programs in the United States, he said.

Haihem El-Zabri, marketing major from Palestine and a representative of the Committee for Peace in the Middle East, noted the inconsistency with which the United States government has chosen to maintain relations with Middle Eastern countries.

Bill Ramsey, American Friends Service Committee Officer, said the debate on the gulf war did not end after the first attack on Iraq.

Ramsey said some people still oppose the war.

Within the six days since war started, 1,600 people have been arrested in the United States because they refuse to allow the country to wage war, Ramsey said.

Ramsey also said the media and the government gave the impression the United Nations and Congress had months of input into the decision to go to war. When in actuality the issue was decided with little consideration for alternatives to a war, he said.

Dean Allison, assistant professor of mathematics and member of the Coalition for Mid-East Peace, said he was surprised to see so many people interested in alternatives to a gulf war.

Most of the audience seemed sympathetic to the speakers' viewpoints, Allison said.

CCFA dean search narrowed to three

By Natalie Boehme
Staff Writer

THE COLLEGE OF Communications and Fine Arts' search for a new dean is drawing to a close.

A search committee, formed last summer to find a dean, submitted the names of the three remaining candidates to Benjamin A. Shepherd, vice president of academic affairs and research, Friday.

The committee has representatives from the college's departments, constituency and students, CCFA Dean Marvin Kleinau said.

"The committee's three candidates have been sent to Vice President Shepherd," Kleinau said.

Marvin Kleinau

SHEPHERD SAID he was unable to release any names because the candidates have not been notified.

"I haven't seen if the candidates are still interested in the position," Shepherd said. "Before I can release the candidates' names, I need to call them, congratulate them and see if they still want the job."

THE CANDIDATES should be notified by next week, and the names will be released at that time, Shepherd said.

If the candidates are still interested in the position, they will be invited to SIUC to be interviewed by Shepherd, the committee and the college.

The five-hour meeting completed the committee's role in the search for a new dean, Kleinau said.

COMMITTEE SUBGROUPS, each assigned to research one of the seven finalists, briefed the committee on findings from the finalists' resumes and references in Friday's meeting, said Eric Mandat, committee member and associate professor at the School of Music.

Candis Isberner, committee member representing the broadcasting service, said although the committee has yet to see the candidates face to face she is pleased with the results.

"A very thorough job has been done talking to the candidates and their references," said Isberner, instructional TV director for broadcasting.

KLEINAU WAS named acting CCFA dean in June 1989 when Keith Sanders left the position to become chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Stevens Point.

Costly stamps flunk test of better service

THE LATEST "F" STAMPS ISSUED by the Postal Service to represent the 4-cent increase may indicate the grade that the general public gives the service.

Effective Feb. 3, postal users will need to pay 29 cents for stamps on first-class letters and 19 cents for stamped postcards.

Not only that, companies favoring third-class mail face a 25-percent price increase, priority mail will jump 19 percent and express mail will cost 15 percent more.

FOR THE AVERAGE CONSUMER, $8 to $10 more will be shelled out for postage per year.

And the Postal Service has not announced a plan to provide better services for this increase.

The problem unfortunately lies not in the U.S. Postal Service but in the general economic sphere.

Quite simply, the service needs more money to break even to cover its costs; to keep operating, the service must keep abreast of the inflation rate.

BUT WHILE THE AVERAGE citizen complains, companies relying on third-class mail to run their businesses will express even more outrage.

Companies with little financial backing that face such an increase would be forced to increase their own costs in some way to keep up or even worse, declare bankruptcy.

Yes, companies on the brink could fall through with just this kind of increase in a worst-case scenario.

ONE CONCERN FACING CITIZENS and companies lies in the trend of raising stamp costs every few years.

Before 1970, they increased every 16.5 years on the average. Since then, the prices have increased 2.5 years on the average.

So expect an increase sometime around 1994. Although the efficiency of the Postal Service may not increase, its prices most likely will.

Leaders not in touch with reality

On Jan. 22, a man named Sgt. Rock enlightened the whole campus with his views on war. He has every right to express his love of war and his grasp on reality. This is what I think: War sucks.

Sgt. Rock, or Rock, as I will refer to him, unjustly referred to those in opposition to war as a "pathetic minority".

Rock also boldly stated that the running of this country should be left to those who have a firm grip on reality, like himself I presume.

I have never burned a flag, nor have I defaced property. What I have done is written President Bush to voice my concern of war.

I asked him what his commitment is. Is it to liberate

Kuwait? Is it to secure more oil so we can continue our overconsumptive lifestyles? Or is it to rid the world of Saddam Hussein? It has been a month and no reply as of yet.

The reported atrocities committed by Hussein on the Kurdish people sicken me. And from the information I have I think he should be stopped. However war isn't an option I agree with. War is the easy way out.

It stimulates our economy, and justifies our out of control defense budget, while covering up pressing issues like environmental destruction, the homeless, poverty and our collapsing savings and loan institutions.

The people who run this country who have a "firm grip on reality" know what they are doing. And that is what I disagree with.

I disagree with the manipulation of public opinion through propaganda. I disagree with the United States using its awesome power in situations where the ruling class sees it can benefit from war. And I disagree with people dying for reasons unclear.

I am proud of those who were called on the fight this war. I realize that it is their job. I also share concern with friends and families who want their loved ones home safely. So let's get them home.—Matt Fey, senior, visual communications

Turn off media to tune out war

Not only are people going to get sick of hearing about the war, some are sick of hearing about it already. It makes them nervous and sick, so they're starting to shut their televisions and radios off.

And since the networks and the radios and even the newspapers, it's my bet, are going to start losing money because people are shutting them off, don't you think it's reason enough to call this thing quits?!

Dear people, the government has no intention of making this a short war because the state economy is thriving on the profits. Only you can make the difference. Shut the war off.

I recognize that this war has saved our country from entering another recession. But it's accomplished that, so now, let's bring it to a speedy end. Let's not drag it out for the sake of greed and the reshaping of our freedom into a new socialist order.

Dear protesters, though it is a part of the issue, this war is not about "blood for oil." It's about the President's plan for a New World Order. He means well. He hasn't lied to us.

He just hasn't explained. The scheme he plans means a reduction of our freedoms and the adoption of a system of government and rule perhaps best described through reference to the militant disciplining of the Soviet peoples by the KGB: Fear and loathing, internal terror and mistrust, the loss of free speech and the equivalent of lies.

I'm providing you a means to your ends, America. Turn it off. Don't buy it. If you watch, listen and read, you're financially showing your support and the war has good reason to continue.

We live under a very sly politic. With a TV in most every home, building, every pub and diner... we're doomed. But you can make a difference. Challenge the fashion and shut it off!

You want to do your part to "reality" support our troops? You want to save their lives by bringing them home? You want to help bring this war to a speedy end? Don't pay for it. Turn it off.—Kurt M. Faccio, graduate, English

Flag wavers need to look beyond hype

Most of those who have suddenly patriotism as if by divine revelation are waving the flag with such fervor that they have failed to look farther than President Bush's lips for their reasons for supporting war.

While they rally behind their troops, Americans in our country are homeless, malnourished, abused, discriminated against and poisoned with pollution (even children). Patriotism is defined as love for your country. So why are the war mongers waving flags while their peers die for an oil-rich monarchy.

Is it about freedom? Not for Americans. Before the shooting started, no Americans were at risk. Now thousands are. It's definitely not about democracy.

Human rights? Bush savored every word of Amnesty International's report on human rights abuses in Kuwait but has ignored reports in El Salvador, South Africa, Israeli occupied Palestinian lands, Panama and many more heinous regimes that receive full U.S. backing.

We are a nation that takes pride in its own revolution, which freed us from a monarchy.

Now we are trying to liberate one. The patriots condemn another nation for taking over the resource-rich land of other people, but they walk on ground that was taken from natives who had lived on this land years before Columbus stumbled upon it.

Why weren't the patriots condemning Saddam "Hitler" Hussein when he was killing Kurds in his own country?

Perhaps because the U.S. was supporting him. And if Saddam is a threat to world stability, why was he in a 10-year war with Iran, which got him practically nothing.

The patriots might want to turn on the TV for a while so they can look into the real problems in our country.

We're spending a $100 million a day and who knows how many human lives to liberate Kuwait, while Americans right here at home continue to suffer. With liberty and justice for all?—Britt Farrott, senior, philosophy permanent, said Larry Jacober, Carbondale Elementary School District No. 95 Superintendent. "We are very dependent. Approximately 40 percent of our revenue comes from state funds, but it's supposed to be 50 percent," Jacober said. "The state has failed to come up with their end of the 50 percent."

The funds generated by the income tax surcharge are split by the Education Assistance Fund and local governments.

"Fifty percent of the funds go to municipalities and the other 50 percent goes toward education," said SIUC Chancellor Lawrence Pettit. "Two-thirds of that goes to kindergarten through 12th grade and one-third goes to higher education. So we're getting one-third of one-half."

The Illinois education system received $111.2 million from the income tax surcharge for the 1991 fiscal year, and SIU received $7.8 million.

Illinois Sen. Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin, said he expects a rough time for education in Illinois.

"The Board of Higher Education usually asks for more money than the Governor gives them," Dunn said. "This year they're not asking for a raise over what they had last year. They hope to hold at that level. I don't see how they can unless we make the temporary surtax permanent."

Dunn said areas other than education also will be primary concerns for the state government.

"You also have to feed people," he said. "You can't study if you're hungry. Public aid and human services are also going to have to be funded."

Dunn said he supports all state funding for education that is available but said this year will be trying.

"I hope the surtax works," Dunn said. "I think this year will be a tough one because of budgeting restrictions."

Jacober expressed wishes that Edgar's funding plans and goals to emerge successful from the black hole of budget cutting.

"He has been very supportive of education even before the campaign for governor," Jacober said. "I hope he can pull it off. But if you only have so much in the basket, you have to decide who gets it."

Edgar also outlined many of the goals he wants to incorporate into the state education program.

The goals include: increasing parental involvement in their children's education; improving early childhood education programs so by 1996 every child entering kindergarten is ready to learn; and allowing more decision-making at the local level by empowering teachers, principals and parents to participate more in the process.

"Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra and I want to work with you to address these concerns," Edgar told members of the board. "I want us to go together to the Legislature and to the people to see them implemented."

Jacober said he agreed the connection between a student's home life and school life greatly affects their education.

too little coverage," Foote said of CNN and the networks' 24-hour coverage of the first couple days of the war.

Foote said the networks would be foolish to have what one CBS anchor called "wall-to-wall" coverage.

"Financially (24-hour coverage) is not a good thing for the networks," he said. "CNN has been at this long enough that their bread and butter is ongoing crisis coverage. That same coverage hurts the networks."

Foote said CNN has dominated coverage of the war—a defining moment for the cable network.

"CNN doesn't have competition," he said. "It's the first and only global news network."

"It's more important in the rest of the world than it is here," Foote said. "It's no coincidence CNN correspondents are the only ones left in Baghdad."

For the print media, however, Rosen said extensive video coverage makes it harder for them to find their niche.

"Print hasn't had much of a role because people are watching so much television," he said.

Spellman said that should change as the war progresses.

"As the war goes on, you're not going to see 24-hour coverage," he said. "The print media will continue to provide strong coverage day after day."

That coverage, Spellman said, will be digging out information and providing the human side of the war.

"Visual media can really give wrong impressions," he said. "Print media has to concentrate on probing the significance of various events."

But Shaw says that might be hard to do.

"The print media should do what it always has done—more insight and analysis," he said. "But that's hard to do when you don't know what the hell to analyze."

SIUC exchange programs work with the International Student Exchange Program in Washington, D.C., and other professional organizations to form a network of communication to ensure the safety of students studying abroad, Saville said.

"They work together to minimize problems," he said.

The Study Abroad program at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana keeps tabs on its students and encourages them to take the State Department's advisements in addition to their own recommendations, said Joan Solaun, director of UI Study Abroad programs.

"We are asking the students to use common sense and not get involved with any discussions that may get too emotional," Solaun said.

"It's a time to use lots of precautions," she said.

UI advised its students planning to study this semester in the Middle East to change their plans, said Solaun.

Of 600 of UI's Study Abroad students, six were enrolled to study in the Middle East for a semester or the full academic year, said Solaun.

Four students have returned to the United States of which two are planning on returning to the Middle East. One of the students is enrolled for the academic year at Hebrew University and one is enrolled for the spring 1991 semester.

Solaun and Saville said the major concern for student safety involves the actual travelling.

Northern Illinois University's exchange programs have remained unaffected by the crisis in the Middle East. A source from NIU's international student services department said only a small number of people have canceled travel for the spring 1991 semester.

waste, Tyrrell said. But instead the University is now functioning as if it had a Type B permit that allows the treatment, storage and disposal of chemicals.

"The EPA has given us a period of time to decide whether we want to re-apply for the Type B permit or remain under the Type A permit," Tyrrell said.

SIUC has been rejected three times for a draft application that would allow the University to store and treat hazardous waste, he said.

"The proposals failed to meet the requirements of the EPA in terms of details and in more substantial problems as well," Tyrrell said.

Tyrrell said if the University does not re-apply for the Type B permit then the school would have to develop a plan, which also must be submitted by July 15, for closing down all the treatment and storage capabilities on campus.

Tyrrell said the the chemical storage room in Neckers would remain open only for persons that have been trained in the use of self-contained breathing apparatus, and then they may only enter if they are in pairs.

He also said that no chemicals could be taken into the storage room or removed from the storage room by orders from the IEPA.

The storage room in Neckers will eventually be closed and cleaned, McGuinnis said.

After the room is closed, the chemicals would be removed and disposed of properly, McGuinnis said. The IEPA would then do sampling to determine whether the walls and floor have been contaminated, she said.

If the room is contaminated, a plan for cleaning the walls and floor would be devised, McGuinnis said.

After this process is completed, the room could be used for storage for 90 days at a time, but the waste would have to be disposed of after that time, she said.

According to Daily Egyptian files, the last draft application, in June 1990, included plans to correct the problems with a vivarium incinerator in Life Science II, a concrete septic tank and the Neckers' chemical storeroom.

Costly stamps flunk test of better service

THE LATEST "F" STAMPS ISSUED by the Postal Service to represent the 4-cent increase may indicate the grade that the general public gives the service.

Effective Feb. 3, postal users will need to pay 29 cents for stamps on first-class letters and 19 cents for stamped postcards.

Not only that, companies favoring third-class mail face a 25-percent price increase, priority mail will jump 19 percent and express mail will cost 15 percent more.

FOR THE AVERAGE CONSUMER, $8 to $10 more will be shelled out for postage per year.

And the Postal Service has not announced a plan to provide better services for this increase.

The problem unfortunately lies not in the U.S. Postal Service but in the general economic sphere.

Quite simply, the service needs more money to break even to cover its costs; to keep operating, the service must keep abreast of the inflation rate.

BUT WHILE THE AVERAGE citizen complains, companies relying on third-class mail to run their businesses will express even more outrage.

Companies with little financial backing that face such an increase would be forced to increase their own costs in some way to keep up or even worse, declare bankruptcy.

Yes, companies on the brink could fall through with just this kind of increase in a worst-case scenario.

ONE CONCERN FACING CITIZENS and companies lies in the trend of raising stamp costs every few years.

Before 1970, they increased every 16.5 years on the average. Since then, the prices have increased 2.5 years on the average.

So expect an increase sometime around 1994. Although the efficiency of the Postal Service may not increase, its prices most likely will.

"The EPA has given us a period of time to decide whether we want to re-apply for the Type B permit or remain under the Type A permit," Tyrrell said.

SIUC has been rejected three times for a draft application that would allow the University to store and treat hazardous waste, he said.

"The proposals failed to meet the requirements of the EPA in terms of details and in more substantial problems as well," Tyrrell said.

Tyrrell said if the University does not re-apply for the Type B permit then the school would have to develop a plan, which also must be submitted by July 15, for closing down all the treatment and storage capabilities on campus.

Tyrrell said the chemical storage room in Neckers would remain open only for persons that have been trained in the use of self-contained breathing apparatus, and then they may only enter if they are in pairs.

He also said that no chemicals could be taken into the storage room or removed from the storage room by orders from the IEPA.

The storage room in Necker's will eventually be closed and cleaned, McGuinnis said.

After the room is closed, the chemicals would be removed and disposed of properly, McGuinnis said. The IEPA would then do sampling to determine whether the walls and floor have been contaminated, she said.

If the room is contaminated, a plan for cleaning the walls and floor would be devised, McGuinnis said.

After this process is completed, the room could be used for storage for 90 days at a time, but the waste would have to be disposed of after that time, she said.

According to Daily Egyptian files, the last draft application, in June 1990, included plans to correct the problems with a vivarium incinerator in Life Science II, a concrete septic tank and the Necker's chemical storeroom.

Youngsters from Chicago's South Side pose in their Easter finery for photographer Russell Lee in a picture taken 50 years ago as part of a New Deal program

By Tracy Saegert
Entertainment Editor

Simple images on paper—on the surface that's all photographs really are.

But when the photographer captures the essence of time, place and people, photographs become little slices of history.

The University Museum currently is showing 80 photographs taken during the New Deal era of Franklin D. Roosevelt's presidency. Many of the photographs record the images of Chicago African Americans during the late 1930s and early 1940s.

Jo Nast, curator of history for the University Museum, said the exhibit is derived from a book arranged by Larry Viskochil and Robert Reid, co-curators of the show.

Viskochil, historical society curator of prints and photographs for the Chicago Historical Society, put together the museum show after reviewing more than 2,400 pictures taken during that era.

The book, which usually is sold at the exhibit, is not going to be offered at SIUC because all the books on order have been sold, Nast said.

Copies of the book are available through the Chicago Historical Society. The book also includes pictures taken between 1936 and 1943 and photos of Southern Illinois residents.

Works by famous photographers such as Esther Bubley, Dorothea Lange, Russell Lee and Jack

Delano will be featured in the show, but a lot of the photographers' work, which has never been shown before, is being included for the first time.

The show's subjects include many of the issues and images of Chicago's African-American community as extensively documented for the first time by Farm Security Administration photographs.

Nast said the photos are large in size, mostly 11 by 14 inches, and are all reprints from the original works.

University Museum is located in the north end of Faner Hall and is open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. weekdays and 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Sundays. The exhibit will be on display until Feb. 24.

Billiards bounced for better balance of bands, bopping at remodeled bar

By Stephanie Steirer
Staff Writer

AFTER MANY WEEKS OF renovation, Gatsby's has transformed itself into a club with something to offer for everyone.

Now that Gatsby's has remodeled its downstairs bar by removing the pool tables and adding a 22-foot by 30-foot dance floor, fans of both live music and dance music can gather under one roof.

THE DANCE ROOM features a new lighting and sound system, and a remodeled bar area, said Mike Lefler, Gatsby's new manager.

When Lefler took over as manager in October, he wanted to do something a little different.

"There wasn't a dance bar on the Strip," he said. "So I thought there was room for one here."

ALONG WITH GATSBY'S new look, the bar also has remodeled its schedule of events, Lefler said.

Live entertainment can be found in the upstairs stage Saturday nights. SIUC theater improvisation group Gig Street will perform this Sunday.

Acoustic open band night will be featured on Monday's.

"This night will be open to any group, musical or otherwise, free of charge, as long as it is scheduled in advance," Lefler said.

TUESDAY NIGHTS will feature comedy, Wednesdays will be jazz and rhythm and blues night, and Thursdays will continue to feature "Battle of the Bands."

On Fridays, local bands will play and on Saturdays top national and regional acts will be featured.

The schedules for the weekend can change, said Robbie Stokes, Gatsby's chief sound technician and live entertainment producer.

"A national or regional act could be scheduled on Friday, depending on what fits best with a band's schedule," Stokes said.

ONE NATIONAL ACT scheduled to perform is the 1960s classic rock group Spirit, appearing Feb. 8.

The idea of having both a live band stage and a dance room combined under one roof is patterned after the Cabaret Metro Star bar, located on Clark Street in Chicago, Stokes said.

"We were tired of having the dance crowded into the rock 'n' roll stage area," he said. "We thought we could make better use of the space that we had in the billiards room. So now we have the best of both worlds."

GATSBY'S ALSO IS trying to get away from the image of being a heavy metal music bar, Stokes said.

"We want to diversify ourselves," he said. "We believe in giving everyone in Carbondale a shot. We want to broaden our base, but we still will feature some hard rock and metal acts."

Mystery of turtles origin close to being solved by scientists

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Clues provided by 250-million-year-old fossils unearthed in South Africa have added a new twist to a long-standing scientific mystery: the origin of turtles, researchers said Wednesday.

The oldest known turtles date back about 200 million years and have shells and other features similar to modern-day turtles. What has baffled scientists is the apparent lack of animals to fill the 50-million-year or so evolutionary gap between very primitive reptile-like animals and the appearance of turtles.

Researchers have tracked down fossils of intermediate animals that appear to have bridged the gap between very primitive reptiles and modern-day mammals, birds and reptiles like crocodiles.

However, for the past 40 or 50 years, scientists have searched vainly for turtle's ancestral counterparts.

Now, Robert Reisz and Michel Laurin of the University of Toronto at Mississauga, Ontario, report their research may point to the animal line that gave rise to turtles.

A computer analysis shows Owenetta, a fossilized, primitive reptile found about 15 years ago near Bethulie, South Africa, appears to be the closest known relative of turtles, Reisz and Laurin said.

Owenetta belonged to a family called Procolophonidae and lived about 250 million years ago.

The animals did not have a turtle-like shell and probably looked like small, rather stumpy lizards.

However, the makeup of their skulls appears to tie them to modern-day turtles, researchers said.

In a study published in the British journal Nature, Reisz and Laurin cited nine unique skull features shared by Owenetta and modern-day turtles, including a striking similarity between bones in the ear region.

"People have had a general idea that the ancestry of turtles may lie among procolophonids, but nobody has been able to document this in any detail," Reisz said in a telephone interview.

However, other paleontologists said they still are not convinced that procolophonids are the forerunners of turtles.

Gene Gaffney of the American Museum of Natural History in New York and Robert Carroll of McGill University in Montreal said they think members of a different group of primitive reptiles, the captorhinids, were the closest relatives of turtles.

For example, Owenetta lack the strong attachment between the brain case and the back of the skull seen in turtles and some captorhinids, Carroll said.

Gaffney said the University of Toronto study provides a "valid alternative" to the theory that captorhinids are the nearest relatives of turtles, but added that "it is not the one I would pick right now."

Cops close on cracking case of campus killer

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Arrests are expected "in the near future" in the serial killings of five college students, police said Wednesday amid reports that genetic tests had tentatively linked one man to a death site.

"We have made significant progress. There will be arrests in the near future," Gainesville Police Chief Wayland Clifton said in a brief statement to reporters.

"The case has become more and more focused and we're confident in the near future ... we feel like this case will reach a successful conclusion, and that means apprehension."

Several times, Clifton used the plural terms "arrests" and "apprehensions," indicating there were at least two suspects.

His statements followed a Wednesday newspaper report that genetic tests had tentatively linked one man already in custody to the August murders.

The Gainesville Sun quoted unidentified sources as saying police were awaiting more conclusive DNA tests that are expected to link the suspect to the killings through semen left at a crime scene.

The man is not Edward Humphrey, a mentally disturbed former University of Florida student once identified as a key suspect.

The newspaper said that because the latest suspect was in custody, authorities likely would seek a grand jury indictment before making an arrest.

The man apparently was not in Alachua County, although it was unclear where he was held, the newspaper said.

The police chief did not comment directly on the newspaper report.

"We are being incredibly cautious," he said.

However, he said he had been confident the case would be solved, and said, "If ever I was confident, I'm confident today."

Report: State agency losing track of children

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Illinois Department of Children and Family Services is so mismanaged and underfunded that it sometimes loses track of the children entrusted to its care, according to a report prepared in an effort to settle a lawsuit against the department.

The agency, which is responsible for 20,000 homeless, neglected and abused children, "does not always know where its wards are located or what is happening to them," the report said.

Although the department's mission is to provide a "safety net" for the state's most vulnerable children, the report says children entrusted to its care "remain at risk until they are finally pushed from or exit the system."

The report was produced by a panel of child-care experts appointed in August 1990 by U.S. District Court Judge John Grady. Grady is hearing a class-action suit filed in 1988 by the American Civil Liberties Union, seeking reorganization and reform of DCFCS.

The agency had no immediate comment on the report. A spokesman said Director Sue Suter, appointed last week to head DCFCS under new Gov. Jim Edgar, is working on reorganization and will ask the court for more time to put her plans in place.

The report said children are "often" placed in foster care without adequate record-keeping in a department still heavily reliant on physical papershuffling, resulting in long periods in which the children effectively are without supervision and sometimes not enrolled in school.

It charged DCFCS has no uniform case-management system, deals with less than 50 percent of proved cases of abuse or neglect, places its wards in available homes without sufficient regard to their suitability and fails to take full advantage of available federal funds because of its disorganization.

"Timelines are not met, paperwork is not maintained and procedures are not followed. Record keeping is found to be so bad that any meaningful supervision, quality assurance or planning is next to impossible," the report said.

It is unlikely DCFCS will have access to additional state money to solve its problems. "New money is highly questionable" for DCFCS, Edgar told the Chicago Tribune.

Court: Sexual harassment should be defined by women

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A "reasonable woman" should decide what constitutes sexual harassment because so-called sex-blind legal standards are biased toward males, a federal appeals court ruled Wednesday.

The U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals said commonly held standards of what is appropriate conduct between men and women often fail to take into account the fact women are almost always the victims of sexual assault and perceive comments and actions differently than men.

"We adopt the perspective of a 'reasonable woman' primarily because we believe that a sex-blind reasonable-person standard tends to be male-biased and tends to systematically ignore the experiences of women," wrote Justice Robert R. Beezer.

The decision came in the case of a San Mateo, Calif. IRS agent who said the reinstatement of a male co-worker who had written her sexually explicit love notes created an unfair, hostile environment in her office.

A district court judge dismissed her claim without allowing the case to go to trial and the agent appealed.

Wednesday's decision ordered the district court to more fully investigate whether the agent's claim of a hostile environment was accurate. But it also set a new standard for such cases in the nine-state circuit and one that could be cited in all federal courts.

Beezer wrote that a "reasonable person" might consider some behavior acceptable that a woman would find offensive. That behavior could easily poison the workplace and make it impossible for the woman employee to stay on the job.

He noted that women are disproportionately victims of sexual assaults and, therefore, "have a stronger incentive to be concerned with sexual behavior."

Cheney: Air battle going well; gulf war may not end quickly

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A week into the coalition war against Iraq, senior U.S. military leaders said Wednesday the air battle had gone well and attention is turning to isolating Iraq's half-million man army in the Kuwaiti theater and efforts to "cut it off ... to kill it."

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell, in an hour-long briefing detailing the first week of operations of the 28-nation war against Saddam Hussein, also cautioned that the war may not end quickly.

"We believe that it's gone very well," Cheney said.

Powell, too, said the campaign had gone about as planned, but noted that cloudy weather slowed the pace of the air attacks and Iraq's use of the Scud missile prompted the reassignment of aircraft to devote more effort to finding and knocking out mobile Scud launchers.

Powell said he is pleased with week one, noting allied control of the air and the fact that no Iraqi plane has managed an attack on a coalition target.

Powell said that with control of the skies established over Iraq, attention will turn to cutting supply and communication lines between Baghdad and the theater where there are 545,000 Iraqi troops in place, to pounding the 110,000 elite Republican Guards in the hopes they will collapse, and to knocking out battlefield air defenses so troop support planes can safely fly lower in the event of a ground war.

"Our strategy to go after this army is very, very simple. First, we're going to cut it off, and then we're going to kill it. To cut it off, that began last week when we started to go after the nerve center, the brains of the operation, the command and control of the operation, and the lines of communication that come out of Baghdad and other places in the country," Powell said.

Cheney noted that Saddam has what has been calculated to be the fourth largest army in the world and it could take time to root him out of Kuwait.

"I urged caution in describing the events in the Persian Gulf, especially in claiming victory too soon. The next day the president expressed his concern about what he called the initial euphoria in some of the early reactions and stories about the operation. I also said that this operation was likely to run for a long period of time," Cheney said.

Cheney said that even if Saddam is trying to hunker down and wait, it will not work.

"The reason he will not be successful with a wait-it-out strategy is because as long as he is sitting there waiting, we are steadily and progressively destroying his unconventional warfare capability, finding and destroying his Scuds, taking out his air forces and now aggressively working over his ground forces in Kuwait," Cheney said.

Israeli officials want to fight back for Iraq attack

United Press International

Israel held an emergency Cabinet meeting Wednesday to discuss the latest and bloodiest Iraqi missile attack — an assault that killed three people and injured 96. Iraq said it was suspending fuel sales to civilians, an indication allied bombings were taking an economic toll.

The Israeli officials also sought to determine why the U.S.-manned Patriot air defense system failed to destroy the Scud missile that slammed into a Tel Aviv neighborhood Tuesday night. The attack renewed concern that Israel would enter the Gulf war by striking Iraq and threaten the fragile allied coalition.

"Every person in the state of Israel ... would say to you that (we) must hit them back so hard that their screams of pain will be heard to the edges of the earth for a long time," Health Minister Ehud Olmert said shortly before the Cabinet meeting began in Tel Aviv. "Fight them back, the bastards," echoed Zevi Maimon, a Tel Aviv resident carrying belongings out of a damaged office. "I have five wars behind me, now (this is) one more."

Meanwhile, Baghdad Radio reported Wednesday that Iraq halted all sales of heating fuel and gasoline to the public. The station radio quoted a Ministry of Transport statement as saying the action was taken "for a short period of time." It gave no reason for the move that came in the wake of allied bombings.

The Guardian newspaper reported in London that Iraqi security forces shot and killed two senior members of the ruling Baath party. The newspaper said five other Iraqis were shot when they tried to occupy a Baghdad television center last week to broadcast calls for the overthrow of the government.

The Guardian, quoting exiled Shiite opposition leader Abdul Aziz al-Hakim, said the seven men had "planned to broadcast a message to the nation blaming President Saddam Hussein for starting another war and urging a general uprising."

Iraq said Wednesday it shot down four more allied aerial targets during heavy overnight bombing raids, and that the nation was bracing for possible Israeli retaliation for its latest attack on the Jewish state.

The Scud attack on Israel was Iraq's third and the first to cause substantial damage and casualties. The U.S.-made Patriot missiles, which performed so well in defending Saudi Arabia from Scuds, were launched on Israel's behalf, but a Scud managed to get through with a conventional warhead.

An army spokesman said 20 surrounding buildings and dozens of cars sustained varying degrees of damage. "It was a hit, a very hard hit," the spokesman said.

Israel television showed rescue workers carrying blood-covered victims on stretchers to

Going nowhere: Flights cancelled; travelers stranded in Saudi Arabia

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia (UPI) — War has turned the gleaming marble passenger terminals at Saudi Arabia's airports into mob scenes where fleeing expatriates get bumped by the hundreds and shrieking women with babies beg for flights out.

With the skies cluttered by bombers and military cargo planes, the national airline, Saudia, has chopped outgoing commercial flights to no more than three a day.

In the process, thousands of travelers frightened by the daily wave of Iraqi Scud missiles — no matter how often they miss their targets — have been stranded for days on end.

"It's terribly frustrating. Every morning they tell us to wait in the terminal and then four hours later, they say 'Sorry, no room,'" Ghulam Dasgir, 64, a retired engineer from Islamabad, Pakistan, said Tuesday.

Dasgir, who came to Saudi Arabia to pray at the holy mosque in Mecca, held a ticket home with the departure date marked Jan. 17.

To make up for the hardship, the airline has paid for his stay at a nearby hotel.

Until the war started, Saudia and dozens of international airlines ran a full schedule of flights from the kingdom's three international airports in Dhahran, Riyadh and Jeddah.

Since the bombing started, Dhahran, the eastern outpost that sits on the Persian Gulf and catches the most Iraqi Scuds, has been closed to all but military air traffic.

One sees fighter jets taking off nearly every two minutes.

At King Khalid International Airport, the ultra-modern jewel of the Saudi air network outside the capital, the only commercial flights are to the western city of Jeddah, where the bottleneck has formed.

For the most part, airline officials are apologetic and gracious, even to the black-robed women whose veils are lifted only to scream at the attendants, revealing tear-stained faces streaked with mascara.

One woman, carrying a child, burst out crying when told there were 250 people ahead of her on a waiting list for the flight to Cairo.

The two other flights for the day to London and Karachi were similarly overbooked.

Meanwhile, scores of airliners sit idly on the tarmac, their flight schedules canceled.

Airline managers say they would add more flights if they could, but they had a hard time getting the Defense Ministry to allow even the three flights daily out of Jeddah.

To handle the flood of Americans seeking to flee Dhahran, the U.S. Consulate has organized several military flights to European countries that have taken out nearly 600 people, officials said.

More are planned.

Saddam not to escape war crimes trial—Dixon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein made "a major mistake" if he mistreated U.S. prisoners of war and could face a war crimes trial if he survives the conflict with the U.S.-led coalition, U.S. Sen. Alan Dixon said Tuesday.

Dixon, voicing outrage along with many others lawmakers on Capitol Hill over the latest Iraqi moves, said Iraq would be held accountable if captured U.S. airmen have been tortured either physically or mentally.

"I think if there was any chance that Saddam Hussein personally could emerge from this, that has been ended by this treatment accorded the prisoners, because I believe everybody would expect him to be brought to justice for that kind of thing," Dixon said.

U.S. television networks have broadcast clips showing at least three U.S. airmen with bruised faces who submitted to so-called interviews with their Iraqi captors. However, it is possible the U.S. flyers were hurt while ejecting from their damaged planes.

After World War II, Nazi leaders were put on trial. Some were executed while others were handed long prison terms.

Dixon said he would support a trial of that kind for Saddam Hussein for violating agreements on the humane treatment of war prisoners.

"I would, assuming the facts to be what I believe they indicate, that there has been probably physical cruelty and certainly psychological efforts made to force these men to do these things," the Illinois Democrat said.

U.S. broadcasts have shown the prisoners answering questions about their identities, their missions, how they were shot down, and their feelings about the Persian Gulf war.

The men spoke mechanically as if they were reading a prepared text.

A man identifying himself as Navy flier Jeffrey Zaun, said, "I think our leaders and our people have wrongly attacked the peaceful people of Iraq."

Another airman, who identified himself as Warrant Officer Guy Hunter, said, "I think this war is crazy and should never have happened. I condemn this aggression against peaceful Iraq."

"That's really an outrage," Dixon said. "That's an absolute violation of the Geneva Conventions and every civilized agreement between civilized nations."

"This man has made a major mistake because he thought, I think, that would somehow compromise us. What it's done is anger people."

U.S. Sen. John McCain, R-Az., who was tortured and held prisoner by the North Vietnamese for nearly six years, said it was obvious to him several allied pilots shown on Iraqi television had been mistreated and coerced into making anti-American statements.

McCain said the bruised faces of two of the seven pilots shown also "leads one to believe that they have been mistreated ... They could have been bruised, possibly by ejection, but I don't think so."

On Monday, House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel also spoke out against Iraq's mistreatment of U.S. flyers.

Judge marries soldier, student over telephone

MUNCIE, Ind. (UPI) — Kandy Green Lee's honeymoon was a telephone conversation with her husband, who was thousands of miles away in Saudi Arabia.

John Lee, 25, an Army reservist, and Kandy, 19, a student at Ball State University, were married by telephone Monday, even though county offices were scheduled to be closed in observance of the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

Delaware Superior Court Judge Richard Dailey, sympathetic to the couple's plight, had agreed to come into his office that day and perform the ceremony.

"There is precedent that goes back to World War II," Dailey said. "But not just anybody, obviously, can have a telephone wedding. You have to have a national emergency situation."

The threat of renewed Iraqi attacks on Dhahran forced the couple to be married an hour earlier than planned.

"He was afraid they were going to start bombing again," she said.

The bride recalled that her "heart hit the floor" when the phone rang in Dailey's office at the pre-arranged time. After a brief exchange of vows, Dailey said: "John, are you still on the line? All right, we hope you and Kandy have a long and happy lifetime together — as soon as you get together."

Levy disregards news conference for playbook

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — Buffalo Bills Coach Marv Levy said Wednesday he missed his team's first news conference because he was too busy working on Super Bowl strategy.

"This is a game I have been preparing for all my life," he said. "And I'm not going to cut a corner on it."

Levy's absence Tuesday constituted what the league called a "clear breach of club obligations." The NFL will review his conduct after the Super Bowl and could fine him.

Levy, 62, says he is getting by on five hours of sleep a night. He denies being overly tense for Sunday's championship game with the New York Giants.

"I'm up-tight for every game," he said. "I'm up-tight for the rookie game with the Browns in the summer. I don't think I'm too consumed, I think I'm adequately involved."

The Buffalo coach apologized for skipping his news conference, but expressed little regret. He said he was behind on his game plan and needed time to catch up.

"I will apologize to you and the league," Levy told the media Wednesday. "I got up with the intention of coming, but I got immersed in the game plan. I thought I was a little bit late with our preparations. I made a decision not to come. I know it wasn't a popular one."

NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said Bills General Manager Bill Polian assured him Levy will be available to the media the rest of the week.

Levy, in his fourth year as Bills coach, said his staff fell behind in Super Bowl preparations because the Bills did not know their opponent.

Most of Monday was spent packing and traveling from Buffalo to Tampa. He says the team has now caught up.

"We're ready for practice now," he said. "We have our game plan in, and I feel good about where we are."

U.S. Davis Cup match delayed by Gulf War

LONDON (UPI) — The International Tennis Federation Wednesday agreed to postpone next month's first-round Davis Cup matches between the defending champion United States and Mexico.

"The United States Tennis Association was concerned about the safety of their players at this time," said Thomas Hallberg, the ITF's director of men's tennis, said. "The match has now been moved to a tentative new date of March 29-31."

USTA President David Markin made the request in light of war in the Persian Gulf.

"We feel that world conditions and the atmosphere surrounding this event are not in the best interest of tennis and the U.S. Davis Cup team," Markin said. "We have an obligation to our players and believe the postponement is best for all concerned."

The United States won the 1990 Davis Cup with a victory over Australia in December. The matches in Mexico City were initially scheduled for Feb. 1-3.

The request by the Americans followed the postponement of seven first-round matches, including the World Group competition between France and Israel at Marseille, France.

The others are: Syria at Sri Lanka, Kuwait at Singapore, Saudi Arabia at Malaysia, Bangladesh at Bahrain, Senegal at Egypt, and Ivory Coast at Algeria.

Those seven matches, also scheduled for Feb. 1-3, also have been tentatively planned for March 29-31.

"We'll try to catch up as we can," said Brian Tobin, executive vice president of the ITF, had said from Melbourne, site of the Australian Open.

He said Israel requested the delay of its match with France.

"They just can't get their team together and prepared," Tobin said. "We didn't have a request from France, but I think there is some unease. It just perhaps provides an opportunity for terrorism."

make one this year. I'm very confident I can make the shot though."

Possibly one of Amaya's toughest test will come when the "Dynamic Duo" storm the Arena Monday night. He will have the job of keeping Creighton's 6-foot-10 Chad Gallagher and 6-foot-6 Bob Harstad from dominating the ballgame inside.

"I think it's something I look forward to," Amaya said. "I really looked forward to the game last year. Everyone was talking about how good the 'Dynamic Duo' was. It's something to really get pumped up for."

In high school at Walther Lutheran, Amaya posted senior averages of 19.7 points and 10.9 rebounds a game. He lifted his team to a 24-5 finish while notching MVP honors in Chicago's private school league.

"The program was very small," Amaya said, "but we got the most we could out of it. We had some very good athletes come through the system.

Unlike the stereotype many people have placed on college basketball players, Amaya, a marketing major, is looking to something other than professional basketball as a career.

"I'd like to continue playing basketball," Amaya said, "but that's not necessarily a goal of mine. I'd like to get my degree and maybe get into sports administration or investments."

As for his future at SIUC, Herrin says it's all up to Amaya.

"It all depends on how much time he wants to spend working in the off-season," Herrin said. "I think if he really works at it he could be a real tremendous basketball player."

important home stand for us," Herrin said, "but fortunately we've played well in the Arena this season and there's no reason for me to believe that we won't meet the challenge in the next few days."

Bradley has been in a slump dating back to last season, losing 17 of its last 22 and seven of its last eight.

One bright spot for the Braves has been the play of 6-foot-1 senior guard Curtis Stuckey. Through 15 games, Stuckey is averaging 27.8 points a game, which not only leads Bradley, but is tops in the MVC. His most productive night came against Chicago State, when he pumped 39 points.

Sophomore Tyrone Bell will draw the assignment of guarding Stuckey. But Herrin will probably use as many people as necessary to contain the sharp-shooting guard.

"It'll take a great effort," Herrin said. "He is very, very talented, that's for sure."

Once SIUC gets past Stuckey, there isn't much to talk about. No other Brave is averaging more than 10 points a game, but Herrin thinks Bradley is a team of sleepers.

"I think they have a lot more talent than they have ever shown this season," Herrin said. "We'll have to go out after them to win the ballgame."

Bradley leads its series with SIUC—as it does with every MVC team—by a record of 22-1. But SIUC has won the last two meetings between the two teams.

The biggest problem for SIUC lately has been turnovers, averaging almost 16 a game.

"It's just concentration," Shipley said. "It's just a matter of spending time on it and getting in sync with the entire team."

Rec Center offers workshop for new aerobic instructors

Intramural-Recreational Office

If you've ever wanted to join "the few, the proud, the SIUC aerobic fitness instructors," now is the time because the Recreation Center is looking for a few good people.

The Office of Intramural-Recreational Sports is holding a mandatory Aerobic Instructor Workshop for those interested in becoming aerobic fitness instructors from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday in the aerobic room of the Recreation Center. The workshop is designed to give participants the resources they need to be effective aerobic instructors.

Those interested in participating in the workshop must register at the information center in the Recreation Center by 4:30 p.m. Friday.

This free workshop is open to all SIUC students and use pass holders. All SIUC aerobic instructors start at $4.65. For more information, call Kathy Rankin at 536-5531.

Barbara Tyler, fitness graduate assistant at the Recreation Center, and veteran aerobic instructor Pat Shockley will discuss how to construct a safe and effective aerobic routine.

The various stages which make up a routine will be covered, along with topics such as pattern building, chorus-verse and choreography.

"This workshop is geared to establishing the foundation upon which good instructors will emerge," Tyler said. "I am mainly concerned with proper body alignment, treating the body with respect and instructor-participant rapport."

Important topics such as the aerobic curve and heart rate will be discussed. Participants will learn how to develop an adequate warm-up and cool-down.

Tyler will briefly discuss kinesiology, the study of movement.

In an effort to help prospective aerobic dance instructors decide which level of classes they would like to teach, the various aerobic classes offered at the Recreation Center will be discussed.

Tips will also be given on making the transition from aerobic dance participant to instructor an easy one. Workshop participants will learn ways to overcome their initial shyness and learn to feel at ease in front of their class members.

"New instructors often feel as if they're alone because they're up on stage and in front of the whole class," Ann Koffsen, aerobic administrative assistant said. "They need to learn to communicate with their classes and get their students involved, then they won't feel so alone."

Chicago signs outfielder Dave Clark

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago Cubs avoided arbitration by signing outfielder Dave Clark to a one-year pact Wednesday.

Details of the agreement were not disclosed.

Clark, 28, appeared in 84 games and batted .275 with five homers and 20 RBI for the Cubs in the 1990 season. He was acquired from Cleveland Nov. 29, 1989, for outfielder Mitch Webster.

Clark had been eligible for salary arbitration.

The SIUC Hockey Club travels to Cahokia many times in the winter to find ice for practices or games.

for donations has become as much a tradition for the Wild Dogs as humming along to the national anthem before a game.

"Our fund raisers have been pretty successful," Domaracki said. "We can usually raise enough money to pay for some ice time and that helps a lot."

Getting money to play the game is just a beginning. The ice time usually available to the hockey club, is worse than the times ESPN leaves open for Saluki basketball games.

The club plans to solicit the University to get club sport status, which will help in the burden of cost. Right now, the team is a registered student organization and pays for everything itself.

With club sport status, the University would match funds raised through fund raisers. This would allow the team to practice more, get better equipment and pay for some of the gas to get to these far away places that have ice.

The University is already getting publicity from the team uniforms that have Southern Illinois written on them and the numerous jackets with SIUC Hockey displayed on the back.

"If nothing else, it makes people realize that there is a hockey team down here," Doty said. "When I wear my jacket I get asked at least two or three times a night about the team. A lot of people don't know SIUC has a hockey team."

Not only is there a hockey team at SIUC, but a successful one too.

In 1988 the Wild Dogs were up for the Tri-State Amateur Hockey League Championship in Evansville, Ind. This year, the team was more or less not invited to return to Cahokia's division of Amateur Hockey Association of the United States because of its dominance in 1990.

Last year we pretty much ran away with the league in Cahokia," Doty said. "I don't think they really liked us playing in their league because we were generally younger than most of the teams and we were the team from out of town."

The players on the hockey team are not just weekend warriors, when they pick up a hockey stick it immediately becomes an instrument in their hands. Like a violinist uses a bow or a guitarist uses a pick, these athletes can do the unbelievable with a hockey stick.

The Wild Dogs plan to return to the Tri-State Tournament this season to get another chance at the title.
