Net service susceptible to hackers

BREAKING AND ENTERING:
Two incidents of illegal access to campus networks have officials giving cautionary advice to students.

CHRISTOPHER MILLER
DAILY EGYP TIAN REPORTER

"A hacker," someone who illegally gains access to a computer and reads data, or another's electronic e-mail to obtain secret information, broke into the computer system at the University of Illinois in December and stole thousands of students' passwords.

"There have been two incidents, involving an unknown hacker who illegally accessed one of SIUC's Internet-accessible computer systems and tried to use the system to hack into other systems. However, with another computer's system and passwords were stolen but proved that SIUC's computer networks, like any other systems, are not immune to hackers," Jerry Looft, an SIUC information technology assistant, said.

"Let's put it this way: It has already happened," Looft said. "It has the potential to happen again.

Looft said there have been two security breaches involving one of more than 20 campus networks since August 1996, though neither was as serious as the incident at the University of Illinois.

Still, some students said they feel more secure using campus networks, specifically the e-mail system.

Dan Hillberg, a freshman in aviation flight from Elgin, said he is comfortable with the security of e-mail and e-mail passwords. Hillberg said he has never changed his password, but if something were to happen, it might affect the way he uses e-mail.

"I'd be upset and definitely change my password — not that what I write is all that private," he said. "I would prefer it's between me and the person I'm writing".

The best way for people to prevent someone from tampering with their accounts is to use a password that cannot easily be guessed and to change it regularly, Looft said.

The keystone password, used to access e-mail and dormitory access, expires every six months. Looft said some students wonder why the system makes them change their Jeanne Hurley Simon said at this time last year, she was watching demonstrations marching down the streets of Washington D.C., to protest the 24th anniversary of the landmark case Roe v. Wade.

Simon, an oncology nurse at SIUC in religious studies, spoke to a crowd of about 30 people Wednesday in the Quigley Hall Auditorium.

The two spoke to celebrate Roe v. Wade, the landmark Supreme Court decision that struck down state laws that made abortion illegal and protected the right of women to choose to terminate a pregnancy.

"I have never heard the term 'pro-life' until now," said Simon.

"What is potentially human should be protected," she said.

"The Rev. Cecil W. Pickert, chaplain at the Newman Catholic Student Center, said he believes the moment life begins is within the egg and sperm meet."

"What is potentially human should be protected," he said.

"Churches in some European countries are not separated from the government like in the United States, so abortion is not as big an issue as it is in European countries," Pickert said.

"Hayward said he cannot understand why in the United States, abortion is in jeopardy for women each day."

"We are supposed to be in the land of the free, yet women one day might have the freedom of getting an abortion taken away from them," he said.

The future of abortion legislation is going to be something to watch, Pickert said, because abortion restrictions will get stronger because of strong public opinion

TREASURES: Collectors value more than a bike’s aesthetic appeal.

LaKEISHA R. GRAY
DAILY EGYPTIAN REDWOOD

A walk into a garage and the sight of a real frame helped Jeff Stearns discover his love and hobby bikes. Stearns, a senior in radio-television from Springfield, said it was coincidental that he adopted the hobby of collecting and fixing bikes 1 1/2 years ago.

"I happened to run into my first two bikes, and I just got hooked," Stearns said. "While I was on vacation with my girlfriend I walked into her aunt’s garage and saw this red bike with missing pieces and covered with dirt, but I offered her $10 and that got me started."

Because collecting bikes is not a common hobby, Stearns said he gets a lot of attention and inquiries about his bikes.

"The first thing people say is, ‘What’s this? That’s a cool bike. Where did you get it?’" he said. "Then they ask me would I sell it and for how much."

Stearns said he has a small but growing collection of rare old bikes. Among those in his collection are a 1950 Schwinn Regency, a 1970 three-speed Schwinn Fastback and a 1977 Schwinn Stingray.

Although the hobby of collecting bikes is uncommon, Stearns is not alone.

Mark Robinson, owner and manager of the Bike Surgeon, 800 W. Sycamore St., said he has been in the bike-collecting business more than 20 years.

Robinson said he has a large collection of bicycles — between 12 and 29 — consisting of a 1954 Heric, 1964 Corvette, 1971 matching bike/trike Typhoon, karate bikes, original mountain bikes and a Volkswagen bug, which is a museum piece because it was never repaired.

It is easy for Robinson to add to his collection because he said people frequently sell or give their bikes to him, sometimes with speculations.

"One guy said he’d rather I have his bike, but I’d have to take care of it and not sell it," Robinson said. "Most people don’t know and even some don’t care what the value of the bikes are. They just want to get rid of it."

While some people may sell their bikes, Robinson said he is not in it for profit because the bikes, mean more to him.

"They are hidden treasures, especially if they are in mint condition," he said. However, for Stearns, bikes are not easy to come by. He said he gets more of his bikes through classified ads or flea markets.

Because he has a hard time finding bikes, the few Stearns has found he said he holds them near and dear to his heart. "I’m very close to my bikes, and I’d be very upset if anything happened to them," Stearns said. "They’re like manic objects to me, and I’m very attached to my regular bike everyday, but I save the collection for special occasions."

"I’ll probably save them to pass on to my kids or something."

In the kitchen with Corinne: Health tips Oprah never offered

This just in... anything you eat, drink, smoke, breath, see or think about is the leading cause of your failing health and eventual death.

I just thought it would be easier if I summed up the health report.

It is common knowledge that what you eat, drink, how much exercise you get and whether or not you are breathing asbestos is directly linked to your physical health.

They tell us by "they" I'm pretty sure referring to the water suppliers who drink one box of mac and cheese serves three) not to eat eggs because they are high in cholesterol.

Stewed skinless, boneless, tasteless chicken is good for you, and you can eat it with steamed vegetables and only drink purified, mountain-grown water.

Decent is out of the question unless you eat exactly one cup of fresh strawberries home grown in treated soil to ensure there are no pesticides and other chemicals.

After you eat this lovely meal, you must exercise.

Do not run because the jerking movement is hard on your knees. Do not do aerobics because you require a routine checkup first. Do not lift weights because it strains the muscles and joints. Do not swim because it is chlorine and your lungs if you swallow the water. Do not play any sport that involves a ball, tackling or hitting because the chances of getting hurt are too great.

Do not go for a brisk walk because you could get jumped and killed.

You can, however, retire your remote controls for the TV, VCR and stereo and get on your chair 25550.932 times for the same results.

Besides those obvious risks, the stress of worrying alone will kill you. What is the solution to maintaining a good diet with moderate exercise?

The following diet is the best suggestion for a long, happy life.

For lunch, eat a boiled chicken breast, a cup of steamed carrots, one slice of plain whole wheat toast, one cup of herbal tea, three ounces of skim milk and one Green cookie.

Then lay into your boss for seven minutes for some apparent reason and throw the heaviest piece of furniture within your reach halfway across the room.

For dinner, you are free to eat two loaves of garlic bread with cheese, a large pepperoni pizza and three bags of peanut M & Ms.

(You can use regular, but you really need the protein in the peanuts)

... Foods with the same color have the same caloric value, such as spinach and pistachio ice cream or mushrooms and white chocolate.

Chocolate, however, is a universal color and may be substituted for any other color.

Then beat up your roommate because he hid the last of the oreos in the cookie jar. For a late evening snack, I recommend an entire frozen cheese cake eaten right out of the freezer, followed by walking to the houses of each and every person you offended or physically harmed to apologize.

There are some modifications to lessen the amount of exercise if it is too much strain.

First, if no one sees you eat any of this, if you eat standing up, or if you eat with someone who eats more than you, then it has no calories.

If you surround yourself with fat people, you look thin.

Cookie pieces have no calories because the breaking process causes leakage.

Things ticked off of a spoon while you are making something do not count i.e. peanut butter while making a sandwich.

And foods with the same color have the same caloric value, such as spinach and pistachio ice cream or mushrooms and white chocolate. Chocolate, however, is a universal color and may be substituted for any other color.

Even more recent developments say that not only is your physical health dependent on your nutrient and chemical intake, but so is your mental health.

Smoking now has some significant link to easing schizophrenia, while at the same time increasing your risk of cancer, emphysema, heart disease and birth defects in unborn children.

We just cannot win. I guess what it all comes down to is everything in moderation.
Pro-lifers march in Washington

ROE VS. WADE: Anti-abortionists rally near the White House.

Both Democrats and Republicans are seeking compromise on one of last year's most controversial issues: the Supreme Court decision, which was passed by Congress but vetoed by President Clinton.

And Wednesday, the day that marked the 24th anniversary of the Roe decision, made Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion nationwide, Clinton administration officials called for finding common ground with anti-abortion groups, especially on the issue of family planning.

All calls for accommodation were refused by the administration, which opposes any form of abortion except in cases of rape, incest, or health risk.

The annual Right to Life march was staged in Washington, D.C., Wednesday, and administration officials pointedly appeared at an abortion-rights event at the same time in another location.

There was apprehension over a small explosion close to an abortion clinic, but the explosion proved to be accidental.

Tens of thousands of abortion opponents rallied near the White House, then marched to Capitol Hill to protest the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision.

The marchers included many school children, who were wearing long black robes bearing religious icons and buses carrying members of the Knights of Columbus, a Catholic men's group.

They were addressed by a range of leaders including Rep. Michael Forbes, R-N.Y., and Randall Terry of the anti-abortion Operation Rescue group, who told marchers their job is to "carry the banner of resistance and replace evil politicians."

Later, members of the marcher commercials, shot and edited newsreels and was owner and manager of a Denver film company write and produced network news segments for ABC-TV in Los Angeles and worked in the public relations office of Oklahoma City television station KWTV.

Williamson County attorney was enthusiastic about his teaching. He was an amiable fellow, he said, "He always gave up his time to help others and to be of service to others if they asked." Mendenhall wrote the book "The Fall of the House of Glory," about the dual personalities of serial killer John Wayne.

He also wrote "Operation Gridlock," a collaboration with Marion Rice, an emeritus journalism professor, and was editor of the School of Journalism alumni newspaper. passwords, but he thinks they should be changed more often.

"If there is something they want to protect, they should change it on a regular basis," Looft said.

Most students, like Jeremy Baker, a freshman in electrical engineering from Freeport, do not send sensitive information via e-mail. Baker said he would telephone a person if he was uncomfortable sending a message via e-mail. He said because he mostly uses it to chat with friends, he would not lose any sensitive data if his password were stolen.

"I would be upset that it didn't get to the person," he said. "But usually people use e-mail more for fun.

Rashida Donner, a junior in radio and television from Chicago, said she does not send e-mail containing any information that might cause harm if it got into the wrong hands. Even if students do not think their e-mail or other files are sensitive, Looft said a hacker still could use their account as a disguise for causing problems on other networks.

"You could be on the receiving end of nasty repercussions, depending on the way your account is used. You are responsible for whatever happens with your account.

"It's a challenge from both sides - for someone trying to keep them out and for someone trying to get in."

HARD EARNED MONEY: Mallory Gary, an unclassified graduate student from Chicago, works on sewing a pair of pants Wednesday at her home.

Capitalizing on talents

SELF-MOTIVATORS: Students utilize skills to make profits.

MINALI J. HARRIS
DAILY EAGLE/STAFF REPORTER

Flipping burgers or dishing up donuts for extra bucks was not how Mallory Gary wanted to make money for her family.

Gary, an unclassified graduate student from Chicago, said she had other needs to consider when it came to employment after she and her husband started a family.

"A minimum wage job would be too little to take care of our needs," she said. "Day care was too expensive. But I needed to go to school." Instead, Gary said she now averages about $250 a week in profits from dressmaking, hair-braiding and babysitting to complement her husband's income.

Rather than getting an on-campus job or working at a fast-food restaurant, students like Gary are starting their own business as an alternative way of making money.

Gary said using her talents for profit has a variety of benefits for her.

"I get to make my own hours," she said.

Gary said she gets about six hours of sleep, and studies late at night after spending most of the day at her chem's residence. She said there are disadvantages in self-employment for those who need motivation and cannot manage time wisely.

"One of the downfalls is nobody's there to push me," she said. "If I don't motivate myself, I won't get paid." she said.

Eric Weems, assistant director of financial aid, said students who are thinking of starting their own business should be aware of the unpredictable nature involved in the effort.

"When you work on your own, you don't have a guaranteed income," he said. "If you type papers and no one brings you a paper to type, then you won't get any money."

One student said that an unpredictable factor caused her attempt at enterprise to fall short of her expectations.

Web page designer Sally Vandermoon, a graduate student in secondary education from Sherman, said she thought teaching Hyper Text Markup Language (HTML) for creating web sites on the Internet would be a good way to make money on a college campus. Vandermoon said she charged $5 per hour for her tutoring. Unfortunately, she said Morris Library offered the same instruction for free. Vandermoon said the fliers she placed around the campus got no response.

But Vandermoon said she was not discouraged. She said programming in HTML is a long process, and decided to capitalize on that in a way the library did not offer.

"Now I do HTML for $100 per page," she said.

Vandermoon said she meets a lot of different people by also offering other profitable services on campus.

"I proofread papers at $1 per page, and I type papers at $2 per page," she said. "A lot of foreign students use me to proofread their papers, and I eventually end up typing them."

Vandermoon said she has another steady job as a main source of income, so she does not feel pressured to make as much money as she could with her secondary enterprise.

"If I pursued it like I should, I would make $50 a week," she said. "If I did it as a business I could make $50 a day."

Vandermoon said students hoping to make money with an business of their own should realize the amount of advertising done plays a large role in their success.

"If I want to make a little extra money, I just put some fliers in the Student Center," she said. "If I really need some money I have to paper the whole town.

"You should make at least enough for grocery money." Despite success stories like Gary's and Vandermoon's, Weems said students should consider other reliable opportunities to earn extra money before plunging into their own business.

"With a tremendous variety of jobs on and off campus, it would be worthwhile to view the lists of the available on-campus jobs in the Financial Aid Office," he said.

"Unless you have a real desire to be self-employed, you would do well to check some things out. There are a lot of options out there."
Vigil

Attacks on abortion clinics continue.

Marjorie Flora, a former coordinator in Cleveland, Ohio, and a member of the Women for Choice, said the vigil was in honor of the 24th anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, a 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

Flora said the vigil was also to raise the awareness of students about violence against abortion clinics and those who provide medical services.

The vigil was prompted in part by the Jan. 16 bombing of an abortion clinic in Atlanta. Two blasts rocked the clinic, injuring six people.

"We want to make people aware that this is not something that hapsens once in a while, but it is a deadly problem, and it is very real," Flora said.

Some students spoke about the need for women to take a stand and support pro-choice.

Sara McGhee, a senior in geography from Georgia and the president of Voices for Choice, said this was the first time her organization hosted a vigil of this kind.

McGhee said she was disappointed by the low turnout of less than 10 people.

"Unfortunately, we don't see a lot of people out here, and we hoped for a lot more of a response," she said.

Although few people were present at the vigil, those who were there felt a strong sense of determination and motivation.

Laura Thomas, a senior in psychology from Springfield, said she attended the vigil to show her support. She said she is distraught and upset by the acts of terrorism.

"I think it's important to show your support even if the weather is horrible," Thomas said of the chilly wind. "It's important to show you are against terrorism.

"The bombings are horrible.
Killing people when you are supposedly trying to save, plus a mother, you are saying a child's life is worth more than a mother's. It's kind and seems as anti-woman as you can go.

And while McGhee said she appreciates anyone who supported the vigil by attending, she said the fight for pro-choice does not stop here.

"Most people, especially women, do not realize that although there are a great number of people against abortion, there's always somebody fighting to reverse Roe vs. Wade, which is why we our group exists because we have to keep fighting every day."

Parents a chance to say goodbye to their children.

One SIUC student who attended the meeting said she felt the future of abortion is uncertain.

Hamilton Arcand, a senior in political science from Madison, said she attended the rally because it is important to attend pro-choice events so the issue will con-
"With a conservative Congress what lies ahead for abortion is unknown, so it is important to keep the public informed."

against abortion.

"See a box on partial-birth abortions in the future and a restriction on abortion that marks it only legal to the first trimester," he said.

Allison Hilt, director of public information and education for the Hope Clinic for Women in St.
Louis, said the term partial-birth abortion was created by a public relations person, and the correct term is D.N.X.

"It is only used when a mother is ill or in such cases when the fetus' brain is developing outside its skull," she said. "It is only used when the pregnancy was doomed from the beginning."

Then it said in the box, is injected with a drug that stops its heart and its head is deformed, so it can pass through the mother's cervix without harming her so the mother can have children again.

"We love a child," she said.

"With this procedure, it gives the something, but I don't know why he's yelling at people at the Student Center," said Lohman.

Joel Feldman, an
and design professor, said performance art such as Lohman's is quite accepted in the art community.

"Performance art as a venue is very much in the mainstream," Feldman said. "It is difficult to accept, though, because it does not fit into traditional categories of art. I once did a piece involving dance and sculpture.

"I choreographed the dancers, and created the sculpture on stage to the music and the dance."

Lohman said his performances are designed to make people stare, or do a double-take.

"It is more interesting to perform for a live audience in an obscure place," Lohman said. "It's more risky than a gallery. Besides, there's a real cultural backing in Carbondale. "Most people have never been exposed to such bizarre forms of communication."

Lohman said there is another reason behind the strange activities and performances, though.

"The whole premise is school spirit," Lohman said. "People that see us on the sidewalk didn't smile or talk to us. When you get to college, you seem to lose that feeling of student body. I wanted to bring that person back somehow.

Lohman said he does not believe he "fits the mold" of the traditional involved student, but still says he is the best person to get people involved.

A lot of people say I'm the worst person to promote school spirit or campus, but I don't think anyone else seems to have any better idea."

SIUC students run for City Council

POLITICS: Five candidates discuss University, city relationship.

JENNIFER CAMDEN

Three students and two SIUC graduates, all running for the Carbondale City Council, discussed the relationship between the city and the University, downtown development and student representation with students Wednesday in the Student Center.

The five candidates spoke before a crowd of about 20 College Republicans during their meeting Wednesday, addressing student issues and asking for campaign volunteers.

In the primary, the nine-candidate field for the two-year seats will be cut to four candidates, and the five-candidate field for the two-year seat will be cut to two candidates.

Mike Mandis, a graduate in workforce education and development from Murphysboro, who is running for a four-year council seat, said he thought some student-oriented businesses are in trouble.

He said SIUC student spending maintains many businesses.

"Bookstores, restaurants, the mall - all of these businesses' revenue usually drops off about 75 percent during summer breaks. If that doesn't prove the economic impact students make, nothing will."

Chris Medlin, a 1995 SIUC graduate from Carbondale running for a four-year council term, also said downtown businesses need attention.

Kelly said although he is relatively new to Carbondale, he could be an effective councilman. "There are a lot of people new to this town," he said. "The City Council needs a shot in the arm of youth. They need representation of the underrepresented, and that's the youth." He said he does not necessarily want the bar-entry age to be lowered, but that young students need engagement.

If the city will adequately fund alternative entertainment for students under 21, I'd be all for that," he said. "But a late-night movie with a bus trip to and from campus is not adequate."

Kelly said alternative entertainment, such as Springfield or Halloween celebrations should be reconsidered. "I support a less confrontational approach when the city deals with issues like Springfield and Hallo- ween," he said. A student turnou for City Council elections, historically, has been low. In 1995, the council's general election attracted about 10 percent of registered voters in cities predominated by students.

On Wednesday, the candidates said they will build student support by speaking to groups such as the College Republicans and College Democrats. Andy Vonder, College Republicans president and a senior in education from Danville, said club members have been registering students to vote in the council primary since the semester began. He said through the elections are nonpartisan, members of the club are very active in registering candidates.

Hamilton Ardus, College Democrats president and a senior in speech communications from Madison, Wis., said the Democrats also are registering students to vote and recruiting seat candidates. The deadline for registering to vote in the Feb. 23 council primary is Monday. Only people living in the city limits may vote in the primary or in the general election April 1.

Kareem defends TV ads

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said he is mystified by criticism of his appearance in a television beer commercial, pointing out that throughout his career his photo has been used in beer ads and he has never espoused the use of alcohol.

The NBA Hall of Famer was denounced last Friday by the Islamic Society of North America, a conservative group based in Plainfield, Ind. The group interpreted Abdul-Jabbar's appearance in a television commercial, pointing out that he has been used in beer ads and he has never espoused the use of alcohol.

Abdul-Jabbar appears intercepting a pass taken a public posture of not drinking. I think it was tastefully done."

The commercial shows young men playing basketball among snow-covered peaks. Abdul-Jabbar appears intercepting a pass then shooting a skyhook.

"I didn't see too much problem with it," he said. "We made sure they understood that I do not drink. Coors knew that I have taken a public posture of not drinking. I think it was tastefully done."

The play of the Salukis has been very inconsistent, minus senior guard and co-captain Kasia McClendon, Scott said.

"The key to the win is to play 40 minutes of intense basketball," she said. "We can't have any lapses."

"I saw the team lost an important home game against the University of Evansville Jan. 11, and then were blown out 84-48, at Drake University Saturday. Our just weren't feeling good about ourselves," she said. "And when you don't feel good about yourself, you don't play hard. And when you don't play hard, you don't win."

Sophomore guard Jessie Phillips said it is essential that the team plays at its best for both conference play and a potential NCAA Tournament appearance in March.

"If I lose my cool, it would really destroy the team," she said. "Keeping my cool allowed us to pull out that win at Creighton."

A True Confession

I don't know how it happened... at first I was going to SIU, living at Thompson Point doing what SIU students normally do on the weekends; going down to the Strip and standing around, going to bars where I have never been before and with the rest of the people pretending to have fun. Then one day I went to FRED's. I couldn't believe it! Everyday was dancing, well maybe 75%, but when you've been there last time you've seen more than 10% of the crowd dancing uptown? Even my friends who said they didn't like country music were dancing up a storm. You know, all those places say they are "The place to party," well they don't even know the meaning of the word. So, anyway, now I'm hooked on expanded record. FRED's has really spoiled me - Dana Davidson

TRACK team aims at records

READY FOR INDY:
Coach DeNoon hopes to make history in

LEON DEVANCE
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The possibility of watching his track break school records this week has both the men's and women's track and field coach Don DeNoon excited about Saturday's Butler Invitational in Evansville.

Both the men's and women's track and field teams will compete in a challenging field against the University of Kentucky, University of Illinois, University of Southern Indiana, and SIU. The Salukis have a solid contender in the shot put and weight throw, Stearns had two strong performances in the Saluki Booster Invitational Jan. 11, finishing second in the weight throw and third in the shot put.

DeNoon said the Salukis have the best talent in the field at the eight-team event. "I feel that we are the best women's team," DeNoon said. "We've had a few good performances lately. The two weeks off allowed us to rest and get ready for the Invitational." The women's team is looking to continue their success in the upcoming meet.

Saturday

Tucker, who was suspended for tending SIU Arena at halftime of the Salukis' 76-73 loss to Illinois State Jan. 12, returned Wednesday to action as the Southwestern Missouri State University game. But Tucker's return had little effect as the Salukis shot just 20 percent from the field in a 73-58 loss to the Bearcats. After a lackluster second half, junior guard Shane Hawkins said the Salukis need to concentrate on playing with more unity in order to be successful.

"Southwest spanked us pretty good," Hawkins said. "We have to focus on our job at hand and then things will start going the right way for us."

Sophomore forward Monte Jenkins, who sprained his left wrist in Wednesday's loss, but practiced with the team Thursday, said Southwest was just too big for the Salukis' poor shooting to score several easy baskets.

"We just got killed on the boards," Jenkins said. "When you go to the boards hard every time, you're going to out rebound people, but we haven't been doing that.

"The three-game home stand not only gives the Salukis a chance to play in front of the home crowd for a change, but also gives them the opportunity to mop up against some of the league's less successful teams.

Following Saturday's game against sixth-place Indiana State, the Salukis host fourth-place Missouri State at SIU Arena at 7:05 p.m.

Southwest out rebounded SIUC 25-11 and took advantage of the Salukis' poor shooting to score several easy baskets.

"We just got killed on the boards (Wednesday)," Hawkins said. "When you go to the boards hard every time, you're going to out rebound people, but we haven't been doing that.

"The three-game home stand not only gives the Salukis a chance to play in front of the home crowd for a change, but also gives them the opportunity to mop up against some of the league's less successful teams.

"I'm pretty confident we'll play well this weekend."

Reeves brings five coaches to Atlanta from New York

Recently-hired Atlanta Falcons head coach Dan Reeves began his coaching career in Atlanta by hiring five assistant coaches Thursday.

Reeves, who is also the team's vice president of football operations, hired Don Blackmon as linebackers' coach, James Daniel as tight-ends' coach, Joe DeCamillas as special teams' coach, George Seff as running backs' coach and AI Miller as strength and conditioning coach. All five coaches held those positions with Reeves in New York, where he was fired Dec. 23 after four seasons.

Jones critically injured in wreck during practice

Auto racer Davy Jones suffered a critical head injury in a crash while practicing at the Walt Disney World Speedway in Bay Lake, Fla., Thursday. Jones' car hit the outside wall on a turn after flipping over onto the infield grass. Jones, who was practicing for Saturday's Indy 300, was transported by helicopter to Orlando Regional Medical Center. Jones was in critical, but stable condition as of Thursday afternoon.

Human error, winds blamed for fatal crash

Human error and high winds have been found to be the cause of a plane crash that claimed the lives of former Nebraska quarterback Brock Berringer and a friend last spring. The National Transportation Safety Board concluded Thursday that Berringer, 22, failed to properly start the cockpit fuel lever in, causing the plane to crash upon takeoff near Raymond, Neb., April 18.

Berringer, who helped the Cornhuskers to national championships in 1994 and 1995, was expected to be picked in last year's NFL Draft.

Murray State names new coach for football Racers

Murray State University named former Oklahoma University assistant coach Denver Johnson as its new head football coach Thursday. Johnson, who will be formally introduced as coach at a press conference Saturday, was offensive line coach for Oklahoma last season and has spent eight seasons as a college assistant coach.

Johnson replaces Houston Nutt, who guided the Racers to a 31-16 record in four seasons and an 11-2 mark in 1996 before taking the head coaching position at Boise State in December.
