Foulks given 360 days in county jail

By Kendra Helmer
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A Carbondale woman accused of leaving nine children unattended in her home, eight of whom died in an August 1994 fire that swept through her home, was sentenced Thursday to 360 days in the Jackson County Jail; the public defender says.

In January, Camellia Foulks pled guilty to one count of endangering a child, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum sentence of 364 days in jail, two years probation and a fine of $10,000.

Eight children, three of whom were Foulks' children, died in the fire that was believed to have been started by matches or a lighter. One child survived.

In November, Jackson County Judge David W. Watt Jr. dismissed eight felony counts of involuntary manslaughter against Foulks because he said the case was one of causing death, not creating death.

State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec said he was disappointed with the earlier decision to dismiss the involuntary manslaughter charges but was pleased with today's sentencing.

"Today we closed the book on a case," Wepsiec said. "I feel helpless because I can't bring these kids back, but in a New York minute, I would trade those 360 days for those eight lives."

Edward Dorsey, SIUC School of Law assistant dean for admissions and student affairs, said he has closely followed the case and is concerned that the jail sentence was unjust.

"I do not think that Camellia was served justice by the sentencing,"

Dorsey said. "I think that punishment is appropriate in some cases, but in this case, she has already endured enough punishment and trauma. I believe some alternative form of sentencing, such as probation and treatment, would have been more appropriate."

Wepsiec disagreed with Dorsey. "To some extent," she has suffered," Wepsiec said. "But what about the parents of the other children who died? They deserve some sort of retribution."

Dorsey said it is important to consider how the community will be affected by the sentencing.

"Camellia does not pose a threat to the community," he said. "Punishing her by putting her in jail will have no deterrent on members of the community. Putting her in jail does not set an example for others because the fire was an isolated incident."

Wepsiec said although Foulks poses a minimal threat to the community, a message had to be sent to the community.

"Other people need to realize to take care of their kids and not be irresponsible," he said.

Comet passing close to Earth this weekend

By James Lyon
DE Features Editor

Comet Hyakutake will cruise past Earth this weekend in an orbit that makes Halley's look like a cakewalk. And if you miss it this time around, you will have to wait until at least 11,996 A.D. to see it again.

The Department of Physics, as a way of assisting the viewing of the comet, will take people onto the observation deck on the roof of Necker's between 9 p.m. and 11 p.m. this weekend; providing the evenings are clear.

"It will resemble a ball of fuzzy light and will be growing steadily brighter over the next couple of days," Frank Sanders, associate professor of physics, said. "The real reason we are doing this is to point out the best location that people should be looking."

He said the comet was discovered by Yuki Hyakutake, an amateur stargazer, only a few months ago. It is the second comet he has discovered.

Sanders said Hyakutake will come closest to Earth around 2 a.m. Sunday night. He said it will be about 9 1/2 million miles from Earth, which is ten times closer to us than the sun is. On Wednesday, the Earth will pass through some of the particles of the comet's tail, Sanders said.

He said people should look north for the comet, since it will travel by the bright star Arcturus, which can be found by locating the Big Dipper and following the handle out.

Seale: Knowledge, not guns, is power

By Mary Beth Arimond
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Nearly 90 percent of the movie "Panther" was factually wrong in the way it portrayed Black Panther members as hoodlums and thugs, Bobby Seale, co-founder of the Black Panther Party, says.

Seale, who spoke to approximately 650 people in the SIUC Student Center Ballroom D Thursday night, said, in its origin, the Black Panther Party was based on knowledge, intellect and pride in the black community.

"We were made to look like hoodlums, thugs and a threat to American security," he said. "We had guns, but we also had knowledge. Knowledge — that was the real power we had."

Until 1962, Seale said he had no knowledge of politics or his heritage.

He said after he found out about his heritage through authors like W.B. DuBois and other influential African-American writers, he found new ways to channel his intellect.

"I knew science, but I didn't know my own heritage," he said. "It blew my mind when I found that Tarzan didn't run Africa."

He said he has spoken to more than 5 million people in his lifetime since 1966 and 1967. He said he is trying to teach people how to end racism and exploitation.

He said he wants people to develop a mentality of respecting human

'MAD COW DISEASE' HITS BRITISH BEEF INDUSTRY — LONDON—Britain's beef industry plunged into crisis again Thursday as new reports suggesting a possible link between "mad cow disease" and a fatal human ailment caused consumers and governments alike to strike the meat from shopping lists across Europe. France and Belgium banned beef exports from Britain entirely. Germany and Spain were on the verge of imposing bans. Late Thursday, Sweden, Portugal and the Netherlands announced they would ban all imports of British beef, the Associated Press reported. And hundreds of schools throughout Britain removed beef from their menus, as did thousands of ordinary shoppers. For the moment, the beef crisis is a business and political problem, rather than a certified public health problem. While the new research suggested that 10 people may have contracted the disease from infected cattle, it did not purport to prove the link.

CHILDREN'S FUNERALS COMPLETE IN SCOTLAND — LONDON—Dunblane, Scotland, completed five days of funerals Thursday for the 17 people — 16 kindergartners and their teacher — massacred by a gunman last week in a school gym and prepared to resume classes Friday at the school where it happened. Mourning families and friends were spared a media frenzy by a combination of self-restraint by the usually unrestrained press here and by a protective cordon of community members and officials insisting that they be left alone. A crowd of nearly a thousand journalists who had overrun the small town vanished as quickly as they had arrived once the funerals began Monday.

HOUSE PANEL APPROVES BILL FOR SANCTIONS — WASHINGTON—Shrugging off strong objections from U.S. allies, a key House committee voted 32-0 Thursday to impose far-reaching economic sanctions on foreign corporations that do business with the oil industries of Iran or Libya. A similar but somewhat narrower measure has already cleared the Senate, with Clinton administration approval. At least two House committees must approve the bill before it reaches the full House, but congressional sentiment against Iran in particular is so strong that members predicted quick passage. Following on the heels of President Clinton's signature of a new law subjecting foreign companies that invest in Cuba to U.S. court action, the Iran-Libya measure has outraged major U.S. trading partners such as Canada and the 15-nation European Union.

ANTI-RAP CRUSADER FIGHTING CIVIL LAWSUIT — C. DeLores Tucker captured the outrage of many parents three years ago when she declared war on gangsta rap music. Prominent politicians leaped to her side. The 67-year-old black feminist never stopped the distribution of any music. But now she is embroiled in an increasingly bitter and personal dispute with Death Row Records, home to such rap stars as Dr. Dre, Tupac Shakur and Snoop Doggy Dogg. Instead of leading a moral crusade, she spends her time defending herself against a civil lawsuit that suggests she had an economic motive for criticizing rap music. Her credibility has been challenged by accusations that she misrepresented her educational credentials, profited from ownership of slum properties in Philadelphia and was fired as Pennsylvania's secretary of state for using her post for personal gain.

FEDERAL WORKERS FACE REDUCED PAY HIKES — WASHINGTON—Changes the president has proposed in measuring inflation would mean slightly smaller cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs) in federal and military pay and Social Security retirement benefits. But the budget plan would save taxpayers billions of dollars. Currently, government retirees get annual COLAs to help protect them from inflation, which typically doubles every decade. Partial, occasional COLAs are rare in private pension plans. Full, annual COLAs are unknown. Social Security COLAs are paid each January. That would not change. But under the president's budget, a "temporary" delay in federal-military retiree COLAs (from January until April of each year) would continue for another seven years.

GPSC and USG debate proposals

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two Undergraduate Student Government proposals are in "limbo" now that the Graduate and Professional Student Council passed alternatives to the proposals at the council's Wednesday meeting, USG members say.

SPC is a campus organization that plans events and activities, such as concerts, for the student body. It is funded through student fees allocated to the group by student government.

USG proposed a $2.25 student activity fee increase earlier this month, and in February, the USG Senate proposed an increase in the Student Programming Council's funding. It also called for a special advisory board to monitor the funding and spending of SPC.

GPSC wrote a counter-resolution to prevent the student activity fee increase. The GPSC plan also requests that the increase in SPC funding be postponed until next year while a committee made up of the two organizations reviews SPC's funding and spending procedures.

Scott Pfeiffer, USG chief of staff, said the senate has three options now that GPSC has countered the previous resolutions.

"First, we can see if we can come to a compromise with GPSC over the resolutions," Pfeiffer said. "Second, the senate can review our resolutions. And third, we could just leave it up to the higher levels, like the SIU Board of Trustees or Student Affairs, and let them make the final decision on the matter."

David Vingren, USG Thompson Point senator, said he understands the council's concern with the two proposals and said he was not

Residents protest planned waste incinerator

By Lisa M. Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Concerned area residents say they will protest the dangers of a planned hazardous waste incinerator at the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge Saturday.

The incinerator plan was issued in 1992 to rid Crab Orchard's soils of polychlorinated biphenyl, a hazardous chemical known as PCB. The chemical was dumped into Crab Orchard Lake during a World War II bomb-making project.

Rose Rowell, who is involved

"Since the plan was made, the EPA has learned that dioxin is far more dangerous than thought to be."

Rose Rowell
Member of Southern Coalition on Protecting the Environment with the Southern Coalition on Protecting the Environment, said a dangerous chemical is released during incineration known as dioxin, a cancer causing agent.

Rowell said there is new information discovered by the Environmental Protection Agency that was not known at the time the incineration plan was issued in 1992 that states this kind of incineration is dangerous.

"Since the plan was made, the EPA has learned that dioxin is far more dangerous than thought to be," she said. "We are asking the EPA to revisit the consent decree."

Nan Gowda, the EPA remedial project manager for the Crab Orchard site, said an assessment on dioxin was done in 1985, and a reassessment was done in 1994.

"In 1985, we assumed dioxin to be a probable carcinogen, and it is the same now," he said. "However, the main contaminant of concern at that particular site is PCB, and that is what needs to be corrected."

Gowda said the levels of dioxin released would be very low and the incineration would only better the situation with the PCBs. Gowda also said a risk assessment will be done on the incinerator before the trial incineration is done in May. "We will have the risk assessment done before we even run the trial incineration," he said. "When we do this assessment, we will assume the worst-case scenarios."

"Acadian Gyro," a bronze sculpture by Ed Shay, will be on display at the White House April 14-Sept. 26.

Art professor's sculpture travels to White House

By James Lyon
DE Features Editor

A large bronze sculpture sits at the top of a pole in front of the DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park in Lincoln, Mass. It resembles a unique fish-boat type structure, and it stares longingly out over a pond it will never reach.

But now, through a series of events, this metal fish from a small pond missed the water and landed in the White House garden.

"Acadian Gyro," the above-mentioned sculpture, was the brainchild of Ed Shay, the head of studio programs and a professor in the SIUC School of Art and Design. It will be one of 12 sculptures selected from Northeast museums to be exhibited at the White House.

Shay said the sculpture will be shown April 14-Sept. 26 in a display called "Twentieth Century American Sculpture at the White House: Exhibition IV."

Shay said he began sculpting "Acadian Gyro" after receiving a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in 1985.

"I was trained as a painter, but I had always been interested in sculpting," he said. "I had never had the money or facilities to do that, but when this grant came through, I decided to try it."

He said the sculpture, which took 1 1/2 years to make, is about five feet long and weighs about 800

Students play role in campaign

By Mary Beth Arimond
Daily Egyptian Reporter

"My schedule was crazy and non-stop."

Nicole Mizera
Senior in radio-television

As election results poured in toward the end of the evening, Nicole Mizera had a hunch that her position as a press secretary would come to an end, but she felt secure she had gained the knowledge to pursue a career in politics and the media.

While students were home watching the campaigns on television, Mizera, a senior in radio-television from Litchfield, was behind the scenes assisting the campaign for her brother-in-law, Rick Angel, the defeated Republican candidate for the Illinois 20th District representative seat.

When she started out in November 1994, Mizera said nobody knew who Angel was, but as elections rolled around, he turned into a likely candidate.

"It was something new for our family, and we all wanted to help him out," she said. "It was an effort not just for Rick, but for my mom; dad, my brothers and sister and myself. I have watched our family go through two years of ups and downs through a series of parades and press conferences."

She said Angel offered her the press secretary position because she had media experience from working at WSIU-TV. She said she had the option to quit school and work full time as she became more involved in the campaign, but she decided to go with her original plan, which was to finish school.

Until Tuesday night, Mizera said she worked every school break and weekend, as well as Tuesday's primary.

Besides running errands and directing the campaign staff, she said she put promotional signs up, scheduled radio and television spots and wrote press releases daily.

"My schedule was crazy and non-stop," she said. "I started working full time Friday, the day before spring break, all the way to Tuesday night. It was an exhaustive experience. Anytime I went home to sleep, I got scolded."

Nevertheless, Mizera said the campaign was a positive experience that eventually could advance her career. "My campaign involvement really opened my eyes to my prospective career," she said. "I'm disappointed in some of my fellow media. I thought the press should have reported on both sides of the story, but there were others that didn't."

er, witnessed a victory in two democratic campaigns.

Maggie Bednar, a senior in political science and speech communications from Lansing, said she had no choice but to be involved in all of the Democratic campaigns because she is president of the College Democrats at SIUC.

She said most of her campaign involvement was with Barbara Brewn, Democratic nominee for the 58th Illinois Senate District, and John Rendleman, Democratic nominee for the 115th District representative.

She said she became involved in the Democratic campaigns when she attended a debate in Marion for all the Democratic U.S. senatorial candidates last summer. She said 200 Southern Illinoisans voted on the best candidates and passed their votes to the Jackson County Democratic chairman, who made the final decision.

Bednar said once the candidates were chosen, she became the field organizer for the two campaigns. She said she coordinated events, recruited and scheduled volunteers and notified the media if necessary.

"I thought it was good for myself and everyone else to participate in a campaign because we needed to know how it was run and experience the excitement and dedication of the candidates," she said. "We also had to work with the candidates to understand their views."

Low student voter turnout removes opportunities

IN TUESDAY'S ELECTION, 23 PERCENT OF THE registered Jackson County voters made it to the polls.

This is not a stunning turnout percentage for a county with 34,000 registered voters; though it is better than the 12 percent turnout in last fall's non-partisan school elections.

Unfortunately, on Tuesday, precincts with a noticeable student population did not fare as well as the rest of the county. "Student" precincts had turnouts as low as 2.7 percent.

This type of turnout among students - a group affected greatly by the decisions made in the county, state and federal government - is disheartening at a time when education issues were a focus of local campaigns.

Students might say it doesn't matter. These were just the primaries. No one was elected. No harm, no foul, right?

Yes, no one was elected. The primaries simply decided candidates for the November elections. But it is these primaries where the choices are the most abundant.

REALISTICALLY, THERE ARE NOW ONLY TWO choices for many of the positions being voted upon in November. In Tuesday's election, there were as many as four choices on the Democrat or Republican sides.

Tuesday's election was an opportunity for voters to choose a candidate based upon the individual voter's own checklist, not the "worst of two evils" decision people complain about during other elections.

SIUC students have had their federal and state loan money threatened recently with cuts by politicians. State university funding is being made dependent on a potential gambling boat tax increase.

These issues and policies will be affected by the politicians now running for office. The lack of student involvement in the process of choosing these individuals drives home a message of student apathy to those who make decisions concerning student benefits.

BUT IT IS NOT THE INDIVIDUAL STUDENT voter's fault alone. One-third of the SIUC student population live in or around Chicago, not to mention the percentage from the rest of the state. Many of these students are registered and want to vote, but found out on election day that they are not registered here and could not vote.

Obviously, there is a lack of communication about what is and is not needed to vote when students are away from the area they are registered in. The Undergraduate Student Government is planning a campaign to inform students of these requirements.

This is a worthy campaign but might have served the student population better if it had been instituted at the beginning of the spring semester.

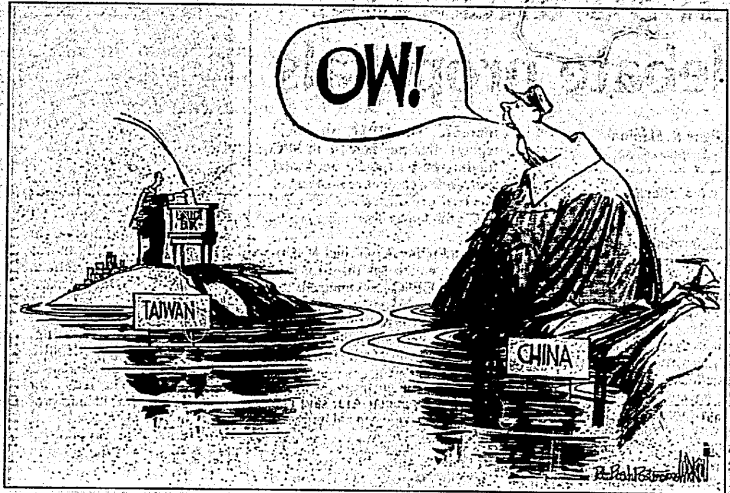

To the students who voted in this election, we applaud and thank you.

For the students who chose not to participate in this election, a chance was missed. With the low voter turnout, your vote would have counted even more. It is a thought we must consider the next time we read about students losing more benefits.

Quotable Quotes

"We'll have to do this another time because of the snow. I thought the U.S. Constitution told me I had the right to vote. And I didn't see anything written there about the weather."

Commentary

Salvi victory a defeat for 'machine'

Al Salvi's victory over Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra was surprising to many — even to those of us who actively campaigned for Mr. Salvi. The conventional wisdom was that Kustra would handily defeat all contenders. Many Republican colleagues and some of my fellow law students supported Kustra because he was supposedly the "front runner." When I explained the ideas of these two men, Kustra supporters often readily (but privately) acknowledged that Mr. Salvi had better ideas than Kustra, but that superior ideas would not matter on our "sinking ship." The Republican establishment was behind Kustra, and that was all that mattered. Politics, not principles, I was tutored, get people the "kickback jobs." However, the Republican machine failed to achieve the nomination of their anointed lieutenant governor. Principles won and cynicism lost.

Now that Salvi has overcome the cynical inertia of his own party he will turn his attention to the Illinois people. Once again, principles will assure victory. Salvi's nomination reflects the change taking place over the political landscape. "Politics as usual" doesn't work anymore, as the shell-shocked Republican machine might tell you. Salvi now take his solid record on taxes, parental rights and individual liberties against Clinton clone Dick Durbin's record of talking the talk and dog-ging the walk. Salvi received the 1995 Leadership Award from the Illinois family institute, the endorsement of the Parent's Right's Organization and is a "friend of the taxpayers" according to the Family Taxpayer's Network. Salvi also stands for the security of all constitutional rights and recognizes the value of all human life.

More and more Democrats are leaving the party because of status patronage, social engineering and sham support for deficit control because they realize their party has left them behind for a circus of deviancy and deceit. People are becoming too smart to swallow the old hook about Republican mean-spiritedness and are finding representation for their beliefs in the Republican Party. Republicans are winning because their ideas are winning, not because their machines are more effective. Most state Republicans had already learned this message and now the Illinois Republican Party can join the ranks of the educated. Truth will win over deceit and principles will win over "politics as usual" as Salvi takes his ideas all the way to the U.S. Senate.

Detachment may foil Dole campaign

By Andrew Ward
For the Washington Post

When Bob Dole set out to run for president yet again, there was a lot of concern that the burden of his duties as majority leader of the Senate would detract from his campaign. But as it turned out, it was, I think, the nature and not the burdens of that office that led to his early stumbles and could prove to be his biggest obstacle in the campaigning to come.

The business of a majority leader is to deflate passions enough to get them through the door and onto the table. After all these years, deflation has become part of Dole's nature. It has put to best use his sharpest weapon, which is his irony, and his best qualities, which are his loyalty and, despite all his grumbling and scowling and shadowy jowls, his underlying sympathy for ordinary folks.

You can attribute some of his irony to his sympathy. For all his grouchiness, Dole is a man of such deep loyalties and strong emotions that he can weep uncontrollably at the funeral of our most loathsome president. Like most labile men, Dole employs irony to keep himself from descending into a lot of public blubbering, and I respect him for that.

I think this explains some of Dole's reticence about his war record or his tribulations during the Great Depression. It is to his credit that he feels all that too deeply either to express it or fake it. But as any actor will tell you, sincerity is the important thing; if you can fake sincerity you've got it made. Dole makes it impossible to appear at least to speak from his heart or his gut or any other portion of his anatomy, because he refuses to speak even from his first person singular. When he is on the stump, he almost always refers to himself not as "I" or "me" but as "we," "us," or just "Bob Dole." He tells us what "Bob Dole" is or isn't, what "we" are or are not going to do, what the voters should expect of "us."

Maybe this arises simply from clearly attending too many strategy sessions or watching too many talk shows where celebrities like Bill Cosby take the same tack. But it's as though Dole were running not himself but some remote, heroic conception of himself, the Bob Dole of '88 or '92, perhaps. Great men like Lincoln and Nehru fell into this occasionally. Lincoln wrote his campaign biography in the third person; and Nehru once wrote a third-person attack on himself warning the Indian people of Nehru's capacity for tyranny. I must also concede that most authors, including myself, have a hand in writing their own jacket blurbs.

But those are special cases and beside the point. Despite its common sense and disappointed hopes, the electorate expects a candidate to project something of his authentic self on the campaign trail: When a man like Dole already seems so removed from himself, he cannot afford to detach himself further. This "Bob Dole" business is a habit the senator may have to break if he is ever to capture whatever share of support he actually deserves.

Multi-Color Day Saturday

By Tammy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The University will offer a multicultural presentation for prospective students in an attempt to increase SIUC's African-American and Hispanic student enrollment, an admissions official says.

Debbie Perry, special event coordinator for the Office of Admissions, said Saturday will be Multi-Color Day at the University. She said African-American and Hispanic students are the targeted population for this activity; because of SIUC's attempt to increase enrollment among minority students.

Perry said high school and transfer students of African-American and Hispanic heritage can learn about enrollment procedures, financial aid, choosing a major and academic preparation for careers at the presentation.

This information will be given in special presentations from University Career Services, Office of Admissions, Pre-major Advisement Office and Financial Aid, Perry said.

Perry said the term minority does not appear in the activity's name because of its negative implication to those it represents.

"Minority ... means underrepresented, and that is why the University hosts Multi-Color Day once a year."

"Minority, by definition, means underrepresented, and that is why the University hosts Multi-Color Day once a year," she said.

Perry said it is important to increase the number of students in minority groups on campus so students will no longer feel they are part of a minority.

Michelle Williams, a representative from Financial Aid, said her office will provide general information about financial aid resources available, discuss application procedures and answer questions the students might have.

"I will be there to give parents and students an idea of what to expect when filling out applications for financial aid," Williams said.

"They will also be provided with important information they will need to complete the financial aid process."

Perry said representatives from all of the colleges will answer prospective students' questions about different academic departments. She said several student service agencies will also participate, including University Housing, Student Development, Health Services and Intramural Sports.

Tuesday Ashner, secretary for associate dean for academic programs, said the College of Agriculture will have an information table set up in the Student Center. African-American and Hispanic students who are currently enrolled in the college will answer prospective students' questions about the programs available, she said.

Committee to police campaigns

By Signe K. Skinon
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Playing by the campaign rules is the most important job for this year's Student Trustee Election Committee, the committee chairman said at a meeting Thursday.

The student trustee is the student representative between the SIU Board of Trustees and the student contingencies, the Undergraduate Student Government and the Graduate and Professional Student Council.

Committee Chairman Patrick Smith said the most important aspect of the committee's job will be to make sure that all candidates follow the guidelines of the campaign.

Smith said petitioning for the student trustee position will begin

March 25 at 9 a.m. He said interested parties can pick up the petitions and set of rules in the USG office on the third floor of the Student Center.

The candidates will have to follow all the rules in the packet to be eligible for the position, Smith said.

"One thing that we need to watch is the posters," Smith said. "They have been a problem in the past. The candidates are not allowed to put up posters before announcing candidacy before the pre-election meeting on April 2."

Erika Kohoutek, USG election commissioner, said the rules for the USG elections are the same as the student trustee elections.

"It is very clearly stated in the (USG) guidelines that the people can go up and tell someone that they are running for the position and ask for their signature on the petition," Kohoutek said. "But they cannot begin campaigning for the office before the pre-election meeting."

The student trustee and USG petitions are to be turned in to the USG office by March 29 at 4:30 p.m. The pre-election meeting will be April 2 at 5 p.m. in the Student Center Renaissance Room, and campaigning will begin for the positions April 3.

Debates for students running for USG president and student trustee are scheduled for April 15 in the Student Center Auditorium, but the time has not been determined. The actual elections will be from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. April 17 with locations across campus to be announced.

rights and wants to teach white people how to evolve a future of cooperation of humanism.

Seale said he also wants the youth to understand that they need to integrate cyberspace and technology with social change.

"The whole cyberspace and technology aspect could help aid this future world, and we could use that Internet framework," he said. "It needs to be with all human liberation."

He said some of the society thought the Black Panther Party was dangerous because of politicians like Ronald Reagan, Governor of California, and J. Edgar Hoover, whom Seale called racist.

"Those guys stereotyped us as a militant black hate group," he said. "It's not true. It was a boldfaced lie. As a black group, we ran our own organization, but we were able to cross the racial lines. Many of our best friends were white liberal radicals in the group."

Seale said the Party did not hate white people. Instead, he said they hated oppression.

"I hope the students got a correct understanding of what went on in the 1960's and the history of the Black Panther Party," he said.

Jamal Hooks, a senior in history from Chicago, said he learned the interpretation and insight of Seale Thursday.

"I felt the emotion and intelligence all wrapped up in one," he said. "I learned the difference between a negro and a black man because Seale taught me to use my own mind to control my destiny and soul."

'95 Best Picture winner hard for Oscar watchers to predict

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD—If this year's Academy Awards competition were a major motion picture, "Oscar's Revenge" would be the title.

After a series of contests that were child's play to predict, the race for the 1995 statuette has been the despair of veteran Oscar watchers. While in previous years it was clear that "Unforgiven," "Schindler's List" and "Forrest Gump" were going to dominate, no such consensus has emerged as yet.

That's partly because the contest for best picture has proven fiendishly difficult to get a handle on, with the momentum for the various contenders ebbing and flowing like the passions of a teen-ager's heart.

surprised that GPSC opposed the student fee increase.

Vingren said when the senate voted on the fee increase, he opposed it because his constituency was against it. He said the people he talked with felt the increase would be unnecessary at this time.

"Basically, it was pretty much a dead bill after I found out that GPSC and the Board of Trustees were opposed to it," Vingren said.

However, Vingren said the SPC advisory board is needed.

He said he believes that through the board, GPSC's concerns can be answered.

Vingren said he sees two problems both organizations agree on arising from the GPSC counter-resolution.

One is how to pay for SPC, and the other is a need for an investigation into the funding and spending procedures of the organization.

Pfeiffer said there will be a lot of discussion among USG members before any decisions are made on the proposals. "In all honesty, we'll have to wait and see what kind of feedback we receive," he said.

pounds. He said it was put on display at the Roy Boyd Gallery in Chicago, where he has been doing shows for many years.

"It was originally presented at eye level," Shay said. "But I had this idea that I wanted it to be up higher, suspended in the air almost like an offering to the spirits. That was when it was put up on poles outside the DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park."

Shay said he had visited the museum as a kid, and he wanted it to be put on permanent display there. The museum, however, had a policy where sculptures were put on a two-year revolving schedule.

He said the sculpture became a favorite of museum spectators, and at the end of two years, the museum decided to keep it there.

"I had dedicated the piece to my grandfather, who helped me get through school financially," he said.

"It overlooks a lake right next to the one where I learned to swim as a kid, so it really means something special to me."

He said affiliates of the New Museum of Contemporary Art in New York City knew of the piece, and after a series of submissions, he was notified that it had been picked as part of the White House series.

"Like I said, I can't take all of the credit for this. The thing I am looking forward to most is for myself, my wife and my daughter to be introduced to the President and the First Lady."

Shay said he currently is working on a piece called "Vacancy" to fill the spot in front of the museum while "Acadian" is at the White House.

international community, including the United States, hesitate when it comes to recognizing Taiwan as an independent nation, said Hsiang-Ming Teng, a doctoral candidate from Taiwan studying international studies at the University of Denver who is visiting friends at SIUC.

"The PRC believes they are sovereign over Taiwan, and this is not true," he said. "I believe, as do many of my friends from Taiwan, that this is a matter best handled government to government, not soldier to soldier."

The Chinese government, in response to Taiwan's drive toward independence, is ordering the maneuvers, which include strategic missile launches, as they attempt to intimidate Taiwanese citizens to vote for a candidate who supports the return of Taiwan to Chinese control.

In 1949, as a result of a political civil war, the Nationalists Party left China to begin a separate government in Taiwan. The Communist Party, or People's Republic of China (PRC), remained in China and has never officially recognized Taiwan as an independent country.

Charles Hammond, associate professor of foreign language and international trade, said he sees valid reasons for Taiwanese students' concern because Taiwan's independence is the last thing on China's mind.

"When your coast is being attacked and you are unsure of your family's welfare, sure I can see why they would be upset," he said. "For China, it is a question of national sovereignty—of once again having control of that region and people."

Many of the missile tests being

"I called my brother ... he said they are prepared to fight a war."

*Hsiang-Ming Teng
Doctoral candidate from Taiwan*

conducted by China could financially hurt Taiwanese students at SIUC, depending on how long the tests continue, Hammond said.

"These missile tests are being done dangerously close to shipping and air-traffic lanes," he said. "Investors are leaving the area, and this in turn hurts Taiwan's economy greatly. Some students could definitely start to see results of this."

These tensions have contributed to what Teng said is a feeling among many of his countrymen that no price may be too much to pay for the protection of Taiwan.

"I called my brother in Eastern Taiwan recently," Teng said. "He said they are prepared to fight a war."

Adrian Yong, president of the SIUC Chinese Student Organization and a senior in marketing from Malaysia, said he has friends from both sides and understands the concern.

"I have friends who their parents are telling them to stay here for the summer," Yong said. "It is very uncertain. The students want to protest, and we hope to see a compromise. But the power is still in the hands of the government."

While their respective governments are poised for a possible military showdown, some SIUC students from China and Taiwan are doing their best to show the decision-makers a possible way to maintain peace.

"I see no arguments between students from either side toward the other," Teng said. "Some do not talk about it, and most get along very well. This is something the politicians should handle."

Vivian Yang, president of the SIUC Taiwanese Student Organization, said her group believes demonstrating for peace is important. She sponsored an informational protest Monday, with another scheduled from 11:30 p.m.-1:30 p.m. in the Free-Forum Area Friday.

As the elections come and go, students will have to carry on the burden of the repercussions of Taiwan's decision. Whether this means war or peace, turmoil or peace of mind, remains in the hands of Taiwanese voters and Chinese politicians, Yong said.

external affairs at the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts, said the college will have students at Multi-Color Day to answer questions and provide information. Belcher said faculty and students in the department will also give a tour at 10 a.m.

Perry said there will be a Multi-Cultural Showcase which will give students a chance to speak with on-campus organization members from groups including Black Affairs Council, Hispanic Student Council and various sororities and fraternities.

The presentations and exhibit tables will be at the Student Center in the Ballrooms and International and Gallery Lounges from 9-11 a.m., she said. A Cultural Festival featuring performances by the Black Fire Dancers, the gospel choir Voices and student poets will begin at 11 a.m., Perry said.

"The purpose of the festival is to give students a chance to see what kinds of activities are available in addition to academic studies," Perry said. "I feel this is a holistic approach to bringing new students to SIUC."

Wilbur the pig and Charlotte the spider to play McLeod

By Travis Alkin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The story of Wilbur the pig and Charlotte the spider comes to life in a dramatic adaptation of E.B. White's "Charlotte's Web" in a way that will explore life in the midst of tragedy, director Carolyn Cope says.

Joseph Robinette, a graduate of SIUC's playwrighting program, has adapted the book in script form. The story takes place on a farm where Wilbur the pig becomes famous with the help of his friend Charlotte. It is a play about growing up and about experiencing the loss of a good friend, Cope said.

"The wonderful thing about White's story is that it is not one of those heavy stories about death," she said. "There is so much about the joys of living. The children who watch the show will be able to feel and remember how the animals worked together."

"Charlotte's Web" will be presented Saturday at McLeod Theater. The performance is the beginning of a tour that will take the production to 30 schools in Southern Illinois.

Cope said the show illustrates the importance of developing good friendships.

"The show teaches children about loyalty, love and friendship," she said. "It may be their first introduction to loss. The play shows the whole life cycle. Wilbur is born, he grows up, finds a friend and then loses his best friend."

The children do not just learn from the show, but they become an instrumental part of it, Don Moore, the Narrator, said.

"Children have the most honest responses," he said. "The feedback is a little more understandable and readable."

Moore said the show would be fun to do because he would have the opportunity to do a different performance for each show. The fun for him was not doing the same thing twice, he said.

Ross Strauss, a theater and cinema major who plays Templeton the rat, said he is looking forward to taking part in a show that allows the actor to do a part in different ways and locations. It has prepared him for what he hopes to do in the future, he said.

"I think this really prepares me for film," he said. "You do the same film for months. I appreciate this production more for what you have to do to accomplish it."

Strauss said he has enjoyed the show because it has given him the unique experience of playing an animal.

"It gives you so much freedom to let loose of yourself," he said. "I like acting with my body as well as my voice."

In creating these animals, costume designer Tara Marshall said she designed the costumes to suggest identity, but she let the children use their imaginations.

"I wanted the kids to see animals, but I did not want to be totally realistic," she said. "The animals have shoes and hats. For instance, the rat has features of a rat, but there is nothing on his face. You don't have to give children everything."

Marshall said she worked with set designer Lee Maples to create the costumes.

"Lee and I tried to complement each other with the colors," she said.

Color was an important part of the set design because the bright colors help draw the children into the show, Maples said.

"There is a ground cloth that has different animals painted on it," he said. "The kids will see the different things on the ground and recognize them. Wilbur has even incorporated looking at the animals on the ground in his performance."

Maples said his idea was to create a barn without actually building a whole barn.

"I wanted to give instant recognition that it was a farm without it having to be implied," he said. "I used the single barn door to provide the children instant recognition of where they were."

Maples said he would like to use the set for children's shows in the future.

"I enjoy doing storybook theater, and I am looking for new ways to do children's theater," he said. "This could be a wonderful base to add on to and a foundation for children's stories to be read or performed."

"Charlotte's Web" will be presented at 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. Saturday in McLeod Theater. Tickets are $4.

Web Sites of the Week

Politics

<http://politicsusa.com/PoliticsUSA/campaign96>

This Campaign '96 site guides visitors through a politics primer, introduces them to the upcoming contests, serves up news as it happens, and has a seven-year archive of stories on the presidential candidates. Other races worth watching are covered too, with headlines from key elections across the country. The site provides guides to House and Senate elections as well.

Science

<http://best.gdb.org>

This Community of Science Web server combines several huge research databases. Researchers can search for projects like their own, find other researchers with similar interests or visit research facilities on the Web. Federally funded research projects, government contracts and sales of government property can be searched, and access to the U.S. Patent Citation Database recently was added.

Entertainment

<http://www.swatch-art.com>

True, it's all just one big watch commercial, but Swatch has organized a pretty exciting Web-wide treasure hunt. Cult video artist Nam June Paik is featured as the treasure — his picture, or ten pieces of it, is scattered across the Web. If you find all 10 pieces before anybody else, you win a free trip to visit a fellow treasure hunter anywhere in the world. While hanging out at the site you can view work by Paik and other unconventional artists; and, of course, buy a watch.

Counterculture

<http://www.warhol.com/warhol>

The Andy Warhol Museum is "essential to the understanding of the most influential artist of the second half of the 20th century," this site claims. Thanks to a high-speed connection, sample images of the artist's work and a tour through the museum won't take hours to browse. Visitors also can access exhibit and film schedules and directions to the physical museum in Pittsburgh.

Web Sites of the Week is compiled by DE Online Editor Aaron Butler.

Golf squad gets back into swing of things for MVC tournament

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC women's golf team spent Thursday afternoon on the greens getting back into the groove of the things on its home course preparing for its 36-hole tourney at Hickory Ridge Golf Course this weekend.

Junior co-captain Molly Hudgins said the team was working on familiarizing themselves with the course since the weather prohibited them from practicing the last few days.

"We were working on getting back to being comfortable with our swing," Hudgins said.

"It felt good to be back on the greens since we haven't been here in a while."

Senior Kristen Oglesby said their performance will not be affected by the excess water on the course, nor the bumpiness from the weather.

"We will have the upper hand because we've been playing on it all season so we know what to expect," Oglesby said.

Hudgins said her closing in the LSU tournament March 15-17 with 79 and 75 scores boosted her assurance in her game.

"Coming off of last week performance has given me a lot of confidence," she said.

This will be the third time the Salukis have hosted their invitational at Hickory ridge Golf Course.

The women finished third last year. The invitational is similar to a preview of the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament since SIUC will host the conference tournament and five of the teams competing this weekend are members of the MVC.

"A lot of competition from the MVC will be here; and finishing with Illinois State will give us an opportunity to see how we stand in the conference," Hudgins said.

The Salukis have attracted some well known schools for the March 24-25 invitational such as two Big-10 teams, Michigan and Purdue University, Big-8 entry Missouri, Cincinnati will represent the Conference USA and, Baylor University will represent the Southwest Conference.

Oglesby said as a senior playing in her last season her goal is to play well and have low scores.

"Everybody wants to do a good job in front of the home crowd, and we are playing against teams we will have a good showing," she said.

Hudgins who has another season of eligibility considers the invitational important because it is on their home course.

"It's important because we want to make a great showing at home," Hudgins said.

"We want others to see how well we do on our own course."

Jami Koss provided much of Southern's offense on the road. Knotts led the Salukis with a .333 average and a .429 on-base percentage, while Koss went 9-29 at the plate to record a .310 average.

"We are hitting the ball well at times, but we are hitting it at people," Brechtelsbauer said.

"The more times you put the ball into play hard, the more opportunity you have for runs to score."

Koss said the team learned a lot from the bitter road trip South, and is confident that it can get the job done in the tournament.

"I think we are going to look a lot better now, especially on our home turf."

"I think we are looking to putting it all together this weekend," she said.

Knotts said the team knows the ability to win is there, it is just a matter of attacking each and every game with intensity.

"After beating FSU we realized that we do have the potential to play well," Knotts said.

"We just need to learn how to raise our intensity level that high before every game."

Saturday Southern takes on St. Louis at noon, then Evansville at 2:00 at the north field.

a panic situation by any stretch of the imagination."

While Southern enters the conference season with a 6-9 record, and Bradley rolls into town at 9-2, Henderson said the Salukis record is easily misjudged because of the caliber of teams SIUC played early this season.

"We know we've played good people, and teams that are every bit as good as Bradley," he said.

"We played good people, and we did that on purpose to prepare ourselves for the conference so we don't see any surprises and we know what kind of club we have."

Junior transfer Tory Hatten is expected to start game one of the series for the Salukis.

In his last outing March 13, Hatten fanned 15 Indiana Hoosiers, and has compiled a 1.39 earned run average with a 2-2 record — which is misleading because of the low run support from the offense.

"Tory Hatten has done a great job for us, and I don't see any reason why he won't continue to throw well and give us a good start," Henderson said.

Fans should look for strong pitching performances from both clubs, as Bradley's main strength is its pitching, and not its offense which tries to create runs through situational hitting.

"Pitching is always their emphasis. I know they have three of their starters back from last year, and the things we've heard on them is that they pitch extremely well," he said.

"If we go out and throw like we're capable of, throw strikes, and have good command, we'll be all right."

Mansavage said the Salukis are going to have to perform better than on their spring trip, and proper execution is the key to the team's success.

The four game series this weekend will be played in a set of double-headers Saturday and Sunday at Abe Martin Field starting at noon each day.

football, but at 5-foot-8 inches, he is more physically apt to play baseball.

"He's an unbelievable football player," he said.

"You can play both sports and be good, but to be great you need to concentrate on one of those. He's a good competitive baseball player, and has the potential to go to the pros."

Callahan said, at the time the Saluki baseball team was recruiting Schley, the SIUC football team also had an interest in him.

"From talking to him I had the impression he wanted to play both," Callahan said.

"But since spring, I think he has gotten football out of his mind, and has figured baseball is his ticket."

Schley said he misses football, but thinks his football experience has helped him improve his baseball game.

"I miss the atmosphere and running," he said.

"Football has more action. It definitely has more of a competitive edge, which I think has helped me in my ball playing."

As lead-off hitter, Schley's .317 batting average ranks in the middle of the Saluki starting line-up.

Callahan said he is impressed with the freshman's consistency to get on base.

"A freshman hitting above .300 is an exceptional sign," he said.

"He has started every game we've have had this season. Hitting-wise he has made the transition better than expected."

Senior catcher Tim Kratochvil, said Schley brings much needed versatility to the Saluki team.

"He brings some speed to the team," he said.

"When you have a strong lead-off hitter who can get on base and steal, he sets the table for the rest of the team."

Schley said his job as lead-off hitter is easier than he expected.

"I just get on base and let the big guys hit me around."

Callahan said Schley's offensive performance is exceptional, but he needs to pick up on the defensive end.

"His arm needs to get a little stronger, and there have been a couple of instances where he has misread or judged line balls wrong," Callahan said.

"We know in time, things will improve."

Schley comes from an athletic family background. His older brother Jeff, played baseball for University of Iowa and his sister, Julie, played softball for Ball State. Joe's father, Dennis Schley, said the adjustment period from high school to college athletics takes time.

"I see him make mistakes that I know he won't make in a month," Dennis said. "He's not used to playing at such a high level of competition. He's been thrown out four times already, and he was never thrown out at the high school level."

Schley said college athletics are more mentally challenging than high school sports. He said his performance can only improve from now to the end of the season.

"I'm learning so much each time I play," he said. "Coach Callahan is preparing me to be in the major leagues. I know it's a dream of all the players, but if I get a little bigger and play harder maybe it will happen."

Softball team to take on all comers at Saluki Invite

By Michael DeFord
DE Assistant Sports Editor

Confidence and aggressiveness will decide whether or not the SIUC women's softball team can produce some wins in this year's annual Saluki Invitational.

The 3-6 Salukis return home following an eight-game road trip to host the 16th annual tournament, which begins today.

Southern opens up the invitational against Loyola University at noon on the IAW North Field, and then face Northern Iowa at 2:00 at the IAW Fields.

Returning from a tough road trip that saw few highlights, the Salukis are hoping to fare better at home and produce some wins this weekend.

Southern was shutout twice on the road and scored only 20 runs during the trip. The Salukis also committed two errors per game, while striking out 28 times, and hit a mere .194 with runners in scoring position.

But Southern hopes to turn things around and be back on the winning track by tournament's end.

Saluki softball coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said her squad has played with the intensity level that she expects it to play with, but has yet to reach its full potential as a team.

"We have played competitively," she said. "But we haven't quite gotten over that hill yet, and that's what we need to do. We would like to make some progress and take a couple of steps forward after this tournament."

During the Florida State Invitational March 15-17, the Salukis proved they have the capability to beat top teams when they knocked off nationally ranked Florida State University 4-3. FSU was ranked No. 9 in the nation prior to the loss.

Brechtelsbauer said this weekend will be a real test for her squad, but maintains she is optimistic toward the tournament.

"This weekend will be a test for us at home," she said. "We need to play hard and take it to the other team from the first pitch to the last pitch. We have to go out there with confidence and take it to them."

"Our chance is as good as anyone to win the tournament, but we can't let up for any team."

Brechtelsbauer said Southern has been making good contact with ball, but has not been able to find the gaps that are needed to produce runs.

Baseball is a game of the present, and not the past, as the SIUC baseball team prepares to open its conference schedule at home against Bradley this weekend, and forget about some of its earlier games this season.

During its spring trip to Las Vegas, Nev. and San Antonio, Texas over spring break, the team dropped seven of its nine games, and ended the trip with 26 consecutive scoreless innings.

Both the players and coaches are looking at the trip as their spring training, and this weekend as the first day of the regular season.

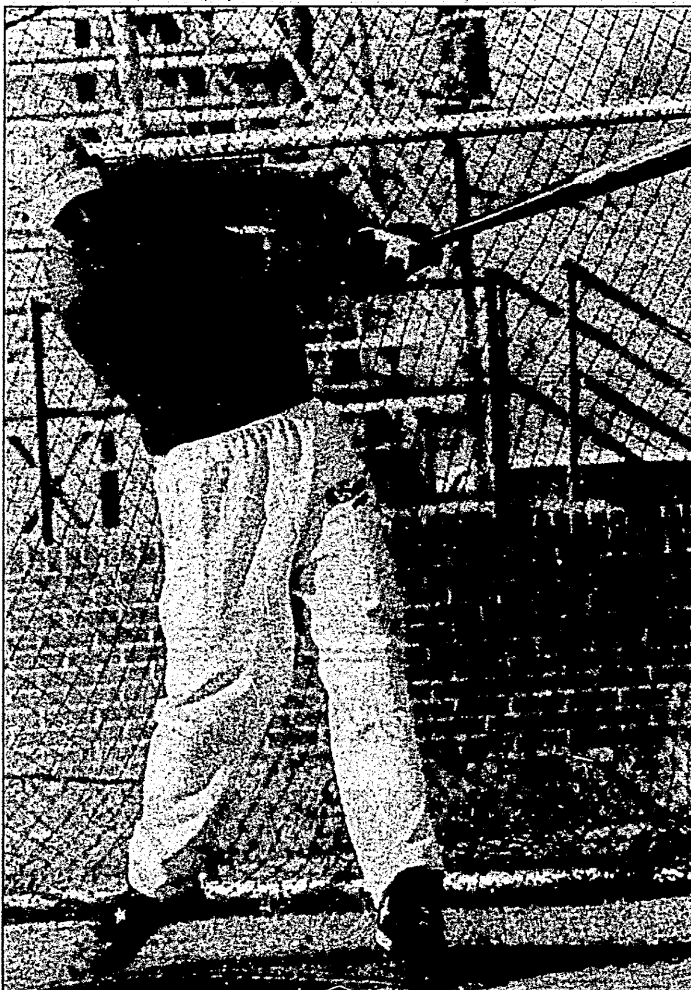

"The whole point of the spring trip is to gear-up for the conference," junior second baseman Jay Mansavage said. "Last year we got off to a really good start by taking three-of-four from Bradley, and then we started our downfall. I think it's really important for us this year, especially coming off a long spring trip where we didn't fare so well."

Saluki hitting coach Ken Henderson said the absence of scoring is "hard to explain", but he still has confidence in his hitting pupils.

"Obviously we went into a little funk towards the end (of the spring trip), but we're still a good offensive ball club. We swung the bats well most of the trip, and I think part of it was that we got a little fatigued and we saw some pretty good pitching," he said. "Who knows why that happened, but it's not a major concern and we've got a lot of kids who swing the bat extremely well."

"It's not as bad as it sounds. We didn't hit like we did early in the trip, but we hit some balls hard and it's not

Speedster fills much needed roster gap

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Assistant Features Editor

With the graduation of the SIUC baseball team's two fastest runners, Bill True and Jason Smith, the Salukis needed some immediate help—in other words—freshman Joe Schley.

Dan Callahan, SIUC's baseball coach, said after he witnessed Schley play this summer, he knew the freshman would be an asset to the Saluki roster.

"College baseball is starting to be a reflection of major league baseball with an increased emphasis on speed," Callahan said. "Joe adds that dimension."

Schley, an All-State player at Providence (Joliet) High School, holds the Illinois high school record for stolen bases (59). The starting center fielder leads SIUC this season with five.

Schley said he has always performed with agility, but his speed is something he constantly works on. He said attending different speed clinics has helped him develop a quicker reaction time for base running and an improved running form.

"Once you get fast, you can always get faster," he said. "You can't stop working at it."

Not only was Schley an All-State selection in baseball, he was an All-State running back on the football team his senior year at Providence. He holds the school's touchdown record at 41 and lead the team with 1,970 yards rushing.

Mike Napoleon, Providence varsity baseball coach, said Schley could have easily played college

Between the Lines

On Saturday, both the SIUC men and women's track and field teams will be hosting the only home meet of the outdoor season—the Saluki Invitational.

Among the field of men's teams competing will be Southeast Missouri State, Illinois State, and Indiana State.

The women's meet will pit Southern against Southeast Missouri, Indiana State, Illinois

State, Austin Peay, and Southern Indiana.

According to women's track and field coach Don DeNoon, the only tough competition for his team might come from ISU, Indiana State, and Southwest Missouri State.

"It's going to be tight," DeNoon said. "If Indiana State brings (sprinter) Omega Keyes back healthy, they should be up there."

"I think ISU and Indiana State should be banging it out for second place, and I think we have a good shot at winning it (the meet)."

DeNoon also said the one team he thinks that has a good shot at the outdoor MVC title is Southwest Missouri. Southwest Missouri finished third in the 1995-96 indoor season.

For the SIUC men's team, coach Bill Cornell said the pressure from the visiting teams might be more prevalent due to injuries.

"As a team, we're still going to be down a little bit," Cornell said.

"It's just one of those years where things are just not clicking together."

One area of competition where Cornell is confident his team will hold its own is in the high jump.

"Indiana State has a couple of guys (high jumpers) who are pretty good," Cornell said. "Of course if (Neophytos) Kalogerou is jumping well, he should be the cream of the crop."

"It's time for them to realize now that Cameron (Wright) is gone and we need their points," he said.

DeNoon also said if his team does well Saturday, it will be encouraging for the team.

"If we do well, it's certainly going to encourage us through the rest of the season," he said.

"We need some really good early season marks."
