Few veto overrides expected in House

By Bob Delaney
Staff Writer

 Overrides are expected to be "few and hard to come by" at the House veto session in Springfield this week as lawmakers cope with tight money and an extraordinary number of lame ducks. At least a dozen motions to override Gov. James Thompson's vetoes of House bills will be heard during the session. Representatives wanting to override must file their motions by Friday, when the session is scheduled to end.

Ten of 13 motions to override that were filed on the veto docket by Monday were rejected. The House will appropriate $19 million in construction funding to override requests that Thompson removed from the bills when they reached the desk.

Rep. Ralph Dunn, R-115th District, said the House isn't expected to restore many appropriations because money is tight in Illinois and the House is ready to accept the reductions Thompson made.

There may be restoration, however, of funds for elementary and secondary education, Dunn said. Dunn said he supports increasing education funds as does Rep. House Speaker James R. Dunham, D-13th District, who wants to restore SIU-C funds.

Richmond is ready to blame Republican lame ducks, those not returning to the House in January, if the veto session is a quiet one. He said Republican lame ducks would not have the incentive to vote against Thompson.

Most lame duck legislators may not show up, meaning "it will be difficult to scrounge up a five-fifths vote needed to override," Richmond said. With the amendment reducing the size of the House going into effect in January, new legislation will be debated, there will be 10 lame ducks, Dunn said. The fallback amendment reduced the size of the House by one, or 29, Richmond said.

Richmond said he was concerned with two bills - Food for Century III program funding and the SIU-C budget. Both are Senate bills, and Richmond said he will try to override in the House only if Sen. Ken Buehner, D-46th District, introduces override motions in the Senate. The Senate veto session is Dec. 1 to 3.

Bush, Andropov pledge better relations

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

MOSCOW (AP) - U.S. Vice President George Bush and new Soviet leader, Yuri V. Andropov, met in a half-hour lunch Tuesday to discuss the possibility of improving relations between the two superpowers.

Bush said afterward the talks were "frank, cordial and cooperative.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Tuesday that Andropov and the Kremlin were "prepared to build relations with the United States on the basis of equality, non-interference, mutual respect for the interests of the peoples of both nations and the improvement of the international situation.'

The meeting came four hours after Andropov told the U.S. Senate foreign relations committee, Leonid I. Brezhnev, was given a hero's burial in Red Square.

It was the highest-level U.S.- Soviet meeting since Brezhnev signed the second strategic arms limitation treaty with then-President Carter in June 1979. The Kremlin said Brezhnev's death "meant the failure to ratify that treaty as one major cause of the mutual failure between the superpowers.

Since President Reagan took office in January 1981, East-West relations have also worked for Afghaniastan, Pakistan, Poland, the Middle East, and Central America, as well as the arms race.

Bush said he carried a message from Reagan for Andropov on "the strong desire of the United States to work for an improved relationship with the Soviet Union."

A prepared statement before his departure from Moscow's Sheremetevo Airport, Bush said, "As we leave Moscow, we are aware of the difficult problems that confront us. The challenges, while enormous, are far from insurmountable."

Bush said the leaders Washington is ready to conduct relations "the great desire of the two nations to cooperate to mutual advantage."
Brezhnev laid to rest in military ceremony

MOSCOW (AP) — Leonid I. Brezhnev, the hard-line Union leader who guided the Soviet Union to the superpower heights, was buried Monday in Red Square, in a somber military ceremony attended by tens of thousands abroad. and offered in a meeting with U.S. Vice President George Bush to "burial relations" with the United States.

Andropov warned, however, that the Soviets would "give a crushing rebuff to any attempts at aggression.

Bush, first American president to meet with the new Soviet chief, said the problems of U.S.-Soviet relations are "far from insurmountable.

The farewell to Brezhnev, under the gray skies and chill of the Moscow autumn, was deeply respectful and muted. Hundreds of foreign leaders attended the ceremony, and tens of thousands of Soviet citizens packed the vast central square, silently holding aloft portraits of Brezhnev in red and black of official mourning. Over and over throughout the simple four-hour ceremony, a military band played the mourning strains of Chopin's "Funeral March."

Before the remains were lowered into the grave - in the religious ceremony plot behind Lenin's mausoleum - Brezhnev's widow, Viktoria, bent over the open coffin and weeping, kissed his cheek and hand, which was placed on a book.

Once the coffin was closed and interred, artillery crews fired off volleys, church bells tolled and factory whistles howled in dozens of cities across this huge and, the first and foremost of the world's communist nations. Brezhnev was only the fourth supreme leader in its 64-year history.

He died of an apparent heart attack last Wednesday at age 75. Within two days, the Communist Party Central Committee had selected the 72-year-old Andropov, a former chief of the KGB secret police, to take his place as party general secretary, most powerful position in the Soviet hierarchy.

The presidency, the second position held by Brezhnev, has not yet been filled. Most analysts expect it to go not to Andropov but to another senior member of the ruling Politburo, thereby opening an era of collective leadership.

Brezhnev had and U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz, other foreign leaders from the Red Square funeral included Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, Foreign Minister Huan Hua of China. Poland's martial-law ruler Wojciech Jaruzelski, Cuban President Fidel Castro, and Pakistani President Zia ul-Haq.

Afterward they met briefly with Andropov at a Kremlin reception, and later the new general secretary and Bush held a 90-minute exchange on key questions of Soviet-American relations.

Reagan calls for Western alliance

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Monday the United States is ready to fuel initiatives aimed against a "massive war machine" built by the Soviet Union.

Reagan, making no mention of Brezhnev's funeral and not softening his frequently voiced criticism of the Kremlin's military policies, welcomed West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl to the White House for a two-hour meeting on East-West relations.

Suit malfunction nixes space walk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Their mission in complete, the shuttle crew prepared for Tuesday's return to Earth after NASA's second million mile walk with malfunctioned with two astrosuits standing at the doorstep to open space.

Joe Allen and William LeNoir, Columbia's two mission specialists, had trained months for the opportunity to test the suits.

New high-interest accounts OK'd

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a move that could mean more savings account interest for Americans, regulators voted Monday to allow federally insured banks and savings associations to raise interest rates as high as they want on a new $2,000 minimum account.

The account — its broad outlines authorized by Congress last month — is designed to help banks, savings and loans and other financial institutions try to win back customers they believe they have lost by burgeoning money market mutual funds.

Bishops argue over nuke strategy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's Roman Catholic bishops argued Monday over whether to condemn American nuclear strategy, with some assailing the proposed move as undermining resistance to Soviet aggression.

But other bishops said the disputed declaration, which would preclude even a U.S. threat to use nuclear weapons, uphold Christian teaching and enhances chances for peace.

Chester (AP) - Law enforcement agents from across the country are seeking to question a man convicted of two murders in Chester and linked to 28 other slayings, Illinois authorities said Monday.

Nic Howell, spokesman for the Illinois Department of Corrections, said investigators from several states and law enforcement agents from Illinois officials asking for interviews with the 34-year-old Davis, a drifter convicted of two killings who reportedly confessed to 28 other murders.

Howell said an itinerary will be set up for those interested in helping authorities determine whether Davis has any connection to unsolved murders in their area.

Davis, who escaped from the federal Metropolitan Correctional Center last month, was extradited to Illinois from West Virginia, where he was arrested about a week after he fled the federal prison.

Howell said that Davis has confessed to the 1978 slaying of Joseph Cushman, a 32-year-old prison foreman whose body was discovered the day of Davis' escape. At least 28 victims have been listed in that case.

Meanwhile, a public relations firm said Monday that Davis told West Virginia authorities he had killed at least 28 people, including homosexuals, prompted by a childhood experience in which he said he was raped by an older man, and that he fled Menard after breaking out of prison, fleeing an inmate's advances.

Halloween costs city over $10,000

By Mike Nelson
Staff Writer

The 1982 version of Carbondale's Halloween street party cost the city about $9,700 in cleanup expenses and overtime pay for police.

According to preliminary figures released by the Carbondale police and the city's public works department, police logged 519 overtime hours during the Halloween weekend, at a cost of $6,751.31.

Police Chief Ed Hogan estimated the Oct. 30 Halloween crowd at "well over 10,000." Carbondale police also estimated about 4,000 turned out for Halloween festivities Oct. 29.

Luther Halliday, assistant to Street Superintendent Wayne Halliday, said Monday that the public works department spent $3,950.79 on personnel cost for street cleanup before and after Halloween. Halliday said a total of 99.5 hours -- 14.5 overtime -- were put in by public works employees during the weekend. Halliday said his department workers netted less glass containers and aluminum cans than in last year's haul. He attributed the decrease of glass debris to the city's 1980 Halloween ordinance, which outlawed the sale of beer, hard liquor and certain wines during specified hours the week before Halloween.

"As far as aluminum cans go, there were more can hawks in the street picking up cans than last year," Halliday said. He said his department had no objections to people picking up cans. "If someone wanted to go out there and pick up cans for recycling, I think that's great," he said.

Halliday said that of the 306.5 hours logged by public works employees, 28 were for pre-Halloween cleanup, nine hours went for railroad depot protection. 52 hours were spent installing traffic control signs and barricades and 206.5 hours were logged for the actual post-Halloween cleanup activities.

Halliday said public works employees backed up 254 hours for Halloween cleanup in 1981, of which 174 hours was overtime. He said that the overtime pay was calculated on a special flat rate of $12.89 per hour.

Defense in Teamsters trial says 'commitment' was fair

CHICAGO (AP) — The defense in the Teamsters' conspiracy trial tried on Monday to convince the jury that a 'commitment' made by the senator's personal attorney Roy Williams was not illegal, but merely an effort to obtain fairness in a Las Vegas land deal.

In tapes of a telephone conversation the FBI had wiretapped, the U.S. District Court judge last week heard Williams say, "We made a commitment with Sea Howard Cannon. De-Niro."

The government is trying to prove that the commitment was, in fact, a bribery agreement in which Cannon, a group of his Las Vegas neighbors would get exclusive rights to the sale of one of prime land, in return for payment in the case of the senator and the defense in the Teamsters Central States Pension Fund and an owner of insurance companies.

Weibel, an unindicted co-conspirator, is a reluctant government witness.

Walesa takes cautious position; asks for time to decide future

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa renewed his allegiance to the independent labor movement Monday but took a cautious line toward the martial-law government and urged his supporters to confine themselves to legal action.

He also said he needed at least a month to get acquainted with the situation in Poland and decide his future course of action.

"I was, I am and I will be faithful to the spirit of August," said Walesa, referring to the August 1980 agreement that launched the Solidarity labor federation.

"I will not depart from the letter of that agreement," he told his first news conference since his release after 11 months of detention. But he added, in a vein reminiscent of his earlier agitation for independence on the union before his arrest, "As you know, I feel committed to destroy or knock anything out. I am for peaceful solutions.

He displayed even more caution when asked to define his stand on the new trade unions under Communist Party control. "I don't want to say," he said, "that there is a struggle between old and new unions, that we are a group of communists, that we are not communists.

Even the Solidarity statute had spoken of union 'pluralism,'" he said. "You can join one trade union, you can join another, and you are free to join or not to join.

Walesa said he would "do everything" he could to effect a "peaceful solution" or "peaceful means." Solidarity supporters still in detention. But he pleaded for time, saying:

"I must think about the situation because I don't know the existing situation now. Give me at least one month."

He spoke more forcefully the night before on his arrival in Gdansk.

"We have to reach agreement, but not on our terms," he told a cheering crowd of 300 outside his apartment house. "I will be faithful and there is no force that can divide us. I want everything to go the way we established it. I will not abandon the road and the ideas which we set forth in August."

To buy or not to buy
Bracy is still the question

To buy or not to buy the Bracy building for library storage is still the question. In the past two weeks the SIT-C administration has been seeking to oust the opinion of the university community about whether or not to purchase Bracy. The administration, i.e., Dr. John Guyon, has met with the Faculty Senate, Graduate Council, Deans' Council, Library Affairs Committee, Student Senate Council, and the Undergraduate Student Organization.

This schizophrenic existence is the inevitable result of not clearly separating the executive and legislative functions.

The two separate branches of government should remain separate and, as such, should act as a check and balance against the other.

The U.S. is not unjustly blamed for the troubles in Middle East

I read an article in the DE of Oct. 12 by Mr. Renman Jason Yong in which he claims that the Arabs and the Third World countries unjustly blame the United States for the troubles in the Middle East.

There is no need to go back in history and show the contributions the United States made in the Israeli establishment; instead, it seems better to limit our discussion to the recent crisis in Lebanon and see if the United States tried to blame or not.

The United States is guilty for its behavior before the real invasion took place. A few days before the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, the Israeli ambassador to Great Britain was shot. The strongest verbal reaction came from the United States through the mouth of its President, who called the assassination attempt "cowardly act." Instead of calming Israel and trying to look at the incident through the overall perspective of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, the United States ordered three of its gigantic aircraft carriers to enter the Lebanese coast. A reasonable Arab, whether conservative or extremist, concludes that these carriers sailed in the Mediterranean for the purpose of helping Israel in the case the CIA and Israel had underestimated and the United States and the other Arab countries interfered on the PLO side. It becomes fair if the Arabs blame the United States for this action.

Furthermore, the United States is blameworthy for its action during the invasion. In a press conference, the U.S. President failed to follow the truth claiming that he had momentarily stopped the bomb shipment.

One of the three TV networks contacted an official in the White House stating that the manufacturing company of these bombs in St. Louis never received an order from any government official to hold the shipment. The official confirmed the network stations statement that shipments never stopped.

The United States is to blame for creating tension. The Phalangist party, headed by Jemayel, was created by the CIA. The money, the guns, the strategy, and the intelligence this party employs, come from the CIA. Moreover, I think all the activities and operations this party perpetuates are planned and coordinated by the CIA. The CIA knew in advance that the Phalangists advanced behind the Israeli soldiers when the latter invaded West Beirut. The CIA cannot wring its hands and pretend that the carnage took place, as International Law requires.

The United States is also blameworthy for its moral support of Israel. When the Israelis invaded West Beirut, the United States on the surface, condemned the invasion, but Mr. Reagan rationalized it claiming that the Israelis were provoked by the "remnants of the PLO."

The United States is to blame for its financial and military support of Israel. It provides Israel with $4 billion a year. In addition to vast amounts of sophisticated weapons. The United States purportedly wants to maintain a balance of power but it knows perfectly well that the majority of Arab countries will never fight Israel. To insist on this balance of power is another way of saying that Israel should be the only country in the Middle East that dictates its policy on the people and the governments of the region. Isn't that exactly what happened in Lebanon? It seems unfair if the Arabs blame any other government other than the United States.

A short and quick question to Mr. Yong. Who do you think will pay the cost of the Israeli invasion since Israel cannot afford it? The U.S. government. What the United States is paying for is the killing of the Palestinians and Lebanon. The uprising of the revolutionary voice in the Arab world, and the demolishing of the shrines, the mosques, and the houses that sheltered the Palestinians. The Lebanese are left now to face the fierce and bitting cold of winter. In short, the United States is fairly and reasonably blamed for its policy in the Middle East. - Hilmi Adas, Graduate Student, English.

Campaigns should focus on issues, not money spent

In the Nov. 11 DE, staff writer Andrew Shao comments on runaway campaign spending and how elections are being bought with dollars and television exposure, I agree that this "pay to win" system is certainly not in the best interests of the voters or the nation. However, a campaign chest doesn't necessarily equal talent and ability to serve in government.

Mr. Gemayel suggests that the solution to this problem is to establish a campaign spending limit. Since an election is a contest, each candidate should be given an equal chance to win without an unfair advantage. However, such a ceiling would make it difficult for candidates to appeal to all voters, and it still wouldn't change the primary deficiency of political campaigning, which is that votes are won through advertising rather than careful planning and thought.

Perhaps if the ceiling was low enough, candidates would be forced to rely more on public forums to sell themselves, which is a sales job that would be much more honest and realistic. The debate sponsored by the League of Voters is in the right direction. However, the cost is too high, and it isn't nearly enough.

A focus on issues rather than personalities needs to be the primary influence on elections. Only then will we be able to make informed decisions based on the actual needs and problems. In the case of candidates for student government, we have to raise and spend fortunes, and truly qualified individuals might be discouraged from running for office. - Martin Loich, Senator, Design.

The sack of the Undergraduate Student Organization's interim finance commissioner, Michael Olowu, by USO President Jerry Cook, is as some disturbing practices within this body elected to serve students.

Some say Olowu was fired because he opposed funding for USO's public relations director and suggested that funding for WDBJ Radio, Cook maintains that the acting finance commissioner was removed because he failed to follow procedure.

The charges, the countercharges, the screams and the yelling -- while unfortunate and uncalled for -- are not the real issue. The issue is the lack of a mechanism to handle complaints in an unfortunate move the USO made earlier this semester.

The USO rewrote its constitution, fusing the executive and legislative branches and elected the members of commissions and headed by commissioners appointed by Olowu.

The change gave student senators more work to do. It was made to enhance communication, to enable the USO to better serve students.

Instead, political infighting resulted, at the expense of effective student government.

Olowu was both senate and finance commissioner. As a senator, voicing his opinions, even if counter to the USO president's position was not to vacation but to perform a specific task. This schizophrenic existence is the inevitable result of not clearly separating the executive and legislative functions.

The two separate branches of government should remain separate and, as such, should act as a check and balance against the other.

Women's rugby: Starting a new tradition

It has been called a traditional sport. At a time when expletives deleted are commonly tossed around on the field, the players and officials are addressed as "ladies" and "sir."

The women's rugby club at SIU-C is trying to build its own tradition. Although the 6-5 season record was nothing to write home about, the team did upset one of the best teams in the state, Lakeshore of Chicago, 12-0 in its final game on Saturday.

Although called "ladies," it is evident that these women play the game hard. There are no frills and lace at an SIU-C women's rugby game.

Five law professionals will represent the American Bar Association Wednesday through Friday to review SIU-C's School of Law for its second accreditation.

Don Gardner, coordinator of the accreditation process, said SIU-C's School of Law was originally accredited in August 1980, when the Lee Student Building was completed. The first review and the review SIU-C is preparing for, occur three years after the initial inspection. After the first review, inspections occur every seven years.

A self-study questionnaire and evaluation is used to prepare the law school for review. Gardner said the self-study consists of three reports of "extensive documentation" that identify the school's strengths and weaknesses. The study is only one requirement of the review panel.

SIU-C's panel will include Kenneth Penegar, dean of the University of Tennessee Law School; Michael Davis, dean of the University of Kansas School of Law and Susan Webster, visiting professor at Louisiana State University. Also on the panel is Richard Sloan, librarian at the University of Pennsylvania and Edward Debbie, a practicing attorney from Atlanta.

According to Gardner, the panel's work consists of achieving discussions with SIU-C faculty, the dean of SIU-C's School of Law and President Albert Somit. The panel will also visit law classes as part of a general effort to determine if the School of Law is in compliance with ABA standards.

The conference will feature the theme, "What Can Be Done: Community Development in a Time of Restructuring."

This is a statewide conference, said Paul S. Denise, faculty member in the Social and Community Services Department of the College of Human Resources. "This conference is designed to show people in community governments possible ways of handling community governmental problems," Denise said.

Denise said that part of the conference will deal with the discussion of different types of government programs and funding. Guest speakers at the conference will be Joe Maloney, from the University of Tennessee; Lee Cary, from the University of Missouri and state Sen. Kenneth Bynbee of Carbondale.

According to Denise, the workshop sessions will focus on state and local issues. Although many of the conference subjects deal with political issues, Denise said that the Community Development Society is "not a political organization."

"We don't take political sides," Denise said. "We bring in experienced people who can help give insight in community governmental problems."

The conference is being sponsored by the Illinois Chapter of the Community Development Society, the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, SIU-C's Office of Community Development, and the Community Development Graduate Student Association.

Cost for conference participation is $25 per person.

The fourth annual Illinois Community Development Society Conference will be held Friday and Saturday at the Student Center.

The conference will feature the theme, "What Can Be Done: Community Development in a Time of Restructuring."

This is a statewide conference, said Paul S. Denise, faculty member in the Social and Community Services Department of the College of Human Resources. "This conference is designed to show people in community governments possible ways of handling community governmental problems," Denise said.

Denise said that part of the conference will deal with the discussion of different types of government programs and funding. Guest speakers at the conference will be Joe Maloney, from the University of Tennessee; Lee Cary, from the University of Missouri and state Sen. Kenneth Bynbee of Carbondale.

According to Denise, the workshop sessions will focus on state and local issues. Although many of the conference subjects deal with political issues, Denise said that the Community Development Society is "not a political organization."

"We don't take political sides," Denise said. "We bring in experienced people who can help give insight in community governmental problems."

The conference is being sponsored by the Illinois Chapter of the Community Development Society, the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, SIU-C's Office of Community Development, and the Community Development Graduate Student Association.

Cost for conference participation is $25 per person.
Owners try to help people

Main Street not a typical bar

By Cynthia Rector
Staff Writer

Paul Amato from Massachusetts and Paulette Curkin from Connecticut have brought their common convictions together to manage Carbondale's only gay night spot, Main Street East.

They are conventional bar owners, out to sell drinks and reap a profit. Instead, they say they see themselves as serving individuals in both the gay and straight communities.

Amato says he wouldn't want to own just any bar. "I don't see myself as a bar owner in the traditional respect," he said. "But being gay and helping gay people find a meaningful social atmosphere, he says, makes the business aspect worthwhile.

Curkin and Amato said they try to perform a consciousness raising role within the community by promoting sexual freedom, by introducing people to vital issues through music and by offering financial support for other causes.

Amato says many gay people "center their social lives around bars because they're being excluded from other social groups," said Amato. "Therefore, there are few places for us and Curkin want to make their bar experience as rewarding as possible by providing a non-oppressive atmosphere and performing quality live music.

Music is an important vehicle which they use to initiate clients to various social issues, such as nuclear concerns and sexual equality. During the bar's happy hours, 5 to 8 p.m., owners have been鲸fish-performing," playing political music — men's music and women's music — as well as musicals such as "I Am a Man" by Les Brown and the Fifth Dimension.

Also, in the two and a half months they've been open, they've hosted a women's music festival and other events to benefit four causes for such purposes as United Way, "Paul and I are both feminists," Amato said. Curkin said, "We've known since she was 13 that she was gay and since she was 16 that she wanted to own a gay bar or a gay bar.

She said that the gay people don't have many places they can go to relax and feel comfortable. She experimented with two less fulfilling careers, she said, before returning to her early defined career goal. She first tried teaching gym and then managed university housing in Connecticu., the latter being Amato's background also.

Curkin said "I was the type who did my bachelor in four years, then went right after my teaching degree, got my masters at SIUC in the prescribed time, etc." So, when she took the risk of coming to Carbondale again last March, looking for a business to buy and finding the tavern that was then The Bar, she was thrilled.

Curkin and Amato don't blame the Bar's clientele for the loss of The Bar's license. Instead they view it as a problem of mismanagement. In fact, many of the Bar's clientele still frequent Main Street East. Amato said, and the owners are pleased at their behavior. He said some vendors are also impressed by the care with which clientele socialize. For example, most local bars need to have pool stick tips replaced every other weekend. "But we've had the same pool cues since we've opened," said Curkin. "They don't want to lose this place."

It is more diverse than most bars on the strip, both owners said. Not only do gays feel free to relax and mix with straight people, but blacks and whites mix as well. Amato says more community people come to Main Street East than many other Carbondale bars, which cater mostly to SIUC students.

This is not to say that harmony always reigns at Carbondale's only gay bar. "There are people who come in here specifically to hassle us because we're gay," Curkin said. And owners make sure they're protected when they leave the bar at night. "I had a bouncer put through my car window while I was in the car," said Amato. "The owners said police have been helpful in such instances and that, in general, they have a good working relationship with the police."

Museum director will discuss myth of Osiris Tuesday

The director of the University Museum will discuss the Egyptian myth of Osiris at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, part of a special fine arts colloquium

Whittlesey will give a slide-lecture presentation entitled "Osiris to Osiris" in the University Museum Auditorium. Osiris was a mythical Egyptian king and judge of the dead. Whatser presentation will include slides taken during two visits in Egypt.

A graduate of Indiana University with a doctorate in education, Whittlesey is a former director of the Brooks Memorial Art Gallery in Memphis, Tenn. He came to SIUC in 1978.

The fine arts colloquium is sponsored by the School of Art, Arts Students League, University Museum and the Museum and Art Galleries Association (MAGA).
Tumor doesn’t limit student’s goals

At first glance, Roger Holt doesn’t seem out of the ordinary on campus – one of the countless students hurrying between classes. Upon closer examination, however, it becomes obvious that Roger is different. He suffers from a malignant brain tumor.

Because of chemotherapy treatments, Holt has lost two-thirds of his light brown hair. He wears a ski cap often, even in the middle of summer.

"People tend to sometimes look at me funny," Holt said.

Holt, 29, has been operated on medulla blastoma, a tumor on the stem of the brain, for the past four years.

"The definition scared the hell out of me when I first looked it up in the medical dictionary," Holt said. "I thought I was going to die tomorrow."

A senior majoring in advertising, Holt’s ambition is to graduate in December. Upon closer examination, however, it becomes obvious that Roger is different.

They cross the court, struggling to put the ball through the hoop. The winner of the first game will take on the KFVS-TV All Stars in the championship match, to be held after intermission. There will be a "Lady Godiva" race during intermission.

Tickets are $3.50 for adults and $2.50 for students and will be on sale at the door. Advance tickets are also available by calling 457-6127. All proceeds will go to Glendale School’s sports program.

Maybe not in the NBA, but the action will still be hot and heavy when the Faculty Male Skaters collide with the School Board Tail Twisters in the first game of the single elimination tournament, at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Glendale School, 600 N. Illinois Ave. in Carbondale.

Donkey basketball is played just the way it sounds — on donkeys. Four riders must manipulate the furry beasts as they cross the court, struggling to put the ball through the hoop.

Workshop could help smokers quit

By Doris K. Harrah
Student Writer

A person trying to give up smoking, through the same stages of grief as if a lover once died, according to Joyce Ann Combes, coordinator of lifestyle programs at the Wellness Center.

But smokers don't have to give up alone. The center is running a six-week "Stop Smoking Now" program. Sixteen joined the program that began last month. The center's goal is to create a support group to help people try to quit smoking, and many more group programs are planned for spring.

The program attempts to teach the whole person. Combes said, "It involves diet, exercise and your spiritual and psychological selves." She said.

There's some dispute on which approach is more effective - group or individual. - works better, however. "Actually, statistics show individuals have greater success than groups. But, what the statistics don't show are how many of those individuals have been involved in group therapy before," Combes said.

Support group therapy seems to be instrumental in getting people to quit smoking successfully, she said. Also important, Combes said, is support from spouses, roommates and friends. So she sends a letter to spouses and roommates of program participants that warn of possible withdrawal symptoms including impatience, irritability, nervousness, headaches and fatigue. The letter also suggests ways friends and spouses can help the program participant quit.

The key to successful quitting is, "You have to want to quit for you," Combes said. "When something is important enough, you make time for it.

Combes said she would encourage those who attempt to quit for the Smokeout to call the Wellness Center for help and support.

Although most people agree that the best way to quit is to do it "cold turkey," it's an individual choice, Combes said. "Many people choose to fade out cigarettes gradually. They choose cigarettes which are lower in tar and nicotine and there are fewer withdrawal symptoms," Combes said.

The center's program helps individuals set daily goals, but they must stop sometime during the program. Combes said, "By the fourth week, everyone should be at zero." She said.

Aside from the Wellness Center program, the American Cancer Society is sponsoring its annual "Great American Smokeout" on Thursday. The society urges smokers to quit for at least that one day.

Combes said she would encourage those who attempt to quit for the Smokeout to call the Wellness Center for help and support.

CAYCE, KY. - 1AP - The rusty iron tracks where Casey Jones began his railroad career are being ripped up, tearing at the links between the "Brave Engineer" and this tiny town that gave him his name. "Casey's tracks," which have not been used for a decade, are being removed by the Illinois Central Gulf Railroad. The abandoned line passes through Cayce and runs by a field marking the boyhood home of the hero of song and folklore.

"Seems like they're taking away our last link with Casey," said Charles B. Mason, of nearby Outlook.

"He probably was my first hero, and he still is a hero to me," Mason said while gazing at the remnants of the ripped-up railroad last week.

Mason wasn't born until 10 years after Jones was killed April 30, 1894, when his Cannon Ball express crashed into a stalled freight train near Vaughan, Miss.

Jones was made famous by a ballad written in 1902 called the "Brave Engineer."

Ironically, the last train to pass through town came to haul away the wreckage from the tracks. The rails inside the town were pulled up in September and crews are still working on carrying the ties out of Cayce and pulling up track surrounding the town.

Some people say the town was named Jones, but historians say it was the other way around.

R.E.M. rocks Student Center crowd

By Mike Nelson
Staff Writer

R.E.M. Markable.
That is the best summation of the electrifying, near-brilliant performance rendered by R.E.M., a foursome from Athens, Ga. on November 6.

The band played to a crowd of around 3,000 at the Student Center Roman Room. At any given time during R.E.M.'s 90-minute set, about half the crowd was dancing. From the opening, "Gardening at Night," to the last encore, "Carnival of Sorts/Recreants," dozens of tightly packed, sweating people danced and thrashed their instruments.

Many of those dancers were already exhausted by the energetic rockabilly of the opening act, the Delta Momma and the Fabulous Texas Mothers. The band, comprised of two former members of the Boppin' 885, a favorite Carbondale band which recently split up.

The concert moved quickly to the stage around 10:30 p.m., after a brief introduction by WIDB Program Director James Somberly dressed in a gray overcoat and black hat. Lead singer Michael Stipe took a brief look at the crowd before grabbing his microphone stand and plunging into "Gardening at Night." The band played close to the recorded versions of the songs on "Chronic Town," with guitarist Peter Buck's ringing Rickenbacker couplets and shimmering chords dominating R.E.M.'s internal stage. The band moved quickly through a set which included "Wolves,""Loser," and "1,000,000," from "Chronic Town." R.E.M.'s presence on stage is nearly as compelling as its sound.

Stipe's haunted, vowel-rich interpretation of pianist Floyd Cramer's "Last Date." Buck's articulate, compelling guitar transformed the song from a simple piano exercise into a riveting, eclectic masterpiece. Stipe returned to stage to deliver two more songs, ending the show with a dazzling rendition of "Carnival of Sorts/Rosencrantz." Buck's ample, ringing guitar rhythms. Stipe's haunting, sometimes yearning, sometimes jubilant vocals.

Berry's persuasively pumping bass and Mills's staccato drumbeats combine to make up the most unique sound in rock today. While Stipe admits that R.E.M. is influenced by bands like the Patti Smith Group, Pere Ubu and the now-defunct Television, he says that "R.E.M. has basically an orchestral sound."

Physically drained, Stipe, a former SIU-Edwardsville student, said he was pleased with the response of the Carbondale crowd. "We are very happy to see so many people dancing," he said. "We've played places where no one dances, and it's frightening."

Stipe said R.E.M. will record an album in January and plans to return to Carbondale around April.
Story Enterprises bridges age gap

By Sheila Washington
Staff Writer

The special bond between the innocence of youth and the experience of college life is portrayed at a time when the members of Story Enterprises relate poetry, short stories and folk tales to children.

The performances, which are usually 15 minutes long, are unique because they are housed in a transparent bubble. Story Enterprises members said the bubble "puts the children in their own world" and helps them develop listening skills in addition to lengthening their attention spans.

The bubble focuses the children's attention on what's happening inside because they are not easily distracted," said Rose Anne St. Romain, graduate assistant in speech communications, who performed at the First Presbyterian Church Infant Day Care Center Friday.

Lynne Pace, a senior in creative dramatics for children, took the children on an imaginary trip to a rain forest, simulating falling rain, storm sounds and acting like trees by swaying their limbs and stamping their bodies.

St. Romain said Story Enterprises is trying to keep the oral tradition of storytelling alive by entertaining children with what has been "taken over by the media."

"Children are accustomed to television and book reading to learn tales. This way is more personal," she said.

The six-member group has performed in nine different places this semester, held more than 20 performances and reached about 600 children, St. Romain said.

The name was changed from the Bubble Factory, which was exclusively improvised theater, to Story Enterprises because the group now uses all forms of story performance, said James VanOosting, founder of the organization.

VanOosting said those who study child development, anthropology and elementary education could get involved because it gives a chance to work with children as practicum experience. St. Romain said they have booked 15 performances next semester.

Membership in Story Enterprises, which offers experiences of college life is trying to bridge an age gap.

The performances, which were reached in nine different places, are performed by members who perform at least three times during a semester, as sponsored by the Speech Communication Department under the direction of VanOosting and Marion Kleinau, professor in speech communication.

Kleinau and St. Romain share story telling activities with Ken Hawkinson, Beth McDaniel, Beth Perry and Jeff Remsch.

Kid's carefree days gone, expert says

Settling down and having children is no longer a solid part of the American dream, as adults become less enchanted with the idea of marriage and having children, according to John Guidubaldi, a psychology professor at Kent State University.

Guidubaldi, who has been working on a nationwide study of how divorce affects children, spoke Friday to about 100 psychology students at a symposium at the Student Center, which was sponsored by the SIU-C Department of Guidance and Educational Psychology and the College of Education.

The study, which is called the "Divorce Project," looks into 700 cases of children with divorced parents in 37 states, Guidubaldi said.

As these changes have taken hold of the traditional family setting, children of divorced parents -- especially males -- are stumbling through their school years trying to cope with the disruptions.

An early analysis of Guidubaldi's study, which is being supported by the National Association of Children's Psychologists, indicates that these children are losing control levels from children from intact families. Despite the fact that they do not necessarily have lower intelligence levels, Guidubaldi said.

"There is no difference on verbal performance or full scale IQ," he said, "yet we get these substantial differences because of the environment that these children are brought up in. It is an environmentally induced relationship.

Children of parents who are together show a better ability to learn and to be more attentive, are less likely to place blame on anyone else, and have better grades in reading and mathematics, Guidubaldi said.

While the actual breakup of a marriage may have no direct impact on children, the real source of problems is the continuing disruption after the divorce, he said.

"It is not so much the separation from parents," Guidubaldi said, "but the continuing exposure to their problems after the breakup which causes problems for the children.

In addition, divorce takes many things away from children that were formerly sources of stability for them, he said. The child loses time with one of the parents -- usually the father -- and may also lose the time of the other parent as well.

"They may lose a great deal of time of the custodial parent, particularly if she is a woman who has to get out and work," Guidubaldi said.

Children also often lose residential stability after a divorce, which leads to the loss of friends, extended family and other important connections, he said.

Divorce may also decrease the economic stability of parents, Guidubaldi said, which affects the child's lifestyle as well as his parents.

The problem is very widespread, affecting a majority of the school-age children in this country, Guidubaldi said.

"Major disruptions in family life are occurring for a majority of school children," he said.

In 1981, about 20 percent, or 12.6 million, of American children were living with a single parent, Guidubaldi said. Ninety percent of those children were living with their mothers, while the other 10 percent were living with their fathers, he said.

It is estimated that 68 to 70 percent of the children born in the last decade will spend some time in single parent households, Guidubaldi said. The average amount of time that a child will spend in these homes will be six years.

"During the coming decade, children will have much less parental support," Guidubaldi said. There may be many factors, such as increasing mobility, less neighborhood stability, less contact with extended family and maternal employees.

Guidubaldi said that as children spend less time with parents, they look for something to occupy their time and interest beyond the replacement.

More than 50 percent of children between 7 and 11 years old say that they watch television whenever they want, he said, and 33 percent say that they watch whatever they want.

"Television is the great desensitizer from the taboos that the churches and parents talk," Guidubaldi said. A steady diet of television promotes desensitization of sexual taboos.

Guidubaldi suggested that preventative methods could be developed in order to eliminate or at least lessen the impact of the sources of these problems. One way would be to increase the amount of father custody and make fathers more responsible for the welfare of their children, he said.

Increased father custody would "minimize economic deterioration, particularly in the case of boys," Guidubaldi said. "As we have seen that boys are those who are suffering the most. I think that it's a crime that only 10 percent of the fathers receive custody today.

Along the same line, Guidubaldi said that mothers who have insisted on having custody of their children in order to insure their own economic stability should take another look at what is best for the children.

While these changes would be primarily home-oriented, the school may end up to be the best setting for change which would be most beneficial for the children, he said.

"The schools may ultimately give us our biggest leads," Guidubaldi said.

Women's Center anniversary spawns talk of future growth

By Joanna Hunter
Staff Writer

About 150 people reminisced and then speculated about the future of the Carbondale Women's Center at its 11th anniversary celebration and reunion Sunday at the Holiday Inn.

"Let's build a new addition," Genevieve Houghton, director of the Shelter Program at the Women's Center, said, pushing for expansion of the center.

The audience listened as she described life at the center as hectic, as a place where "counseling goes on while a parade of people walk through," as a place where "three or four women share a bedroom," and as a place where "women can't cry in peace."

"A quiet place doesn't exist," Houghton said. "The only space is crowded on by a desk and a chair."

"Let's have a community room for the community, not a catch all space," she added. "Above all, let's have a place where we can dream again."

Houghton joined other speakers in lauding the center. "The center is still a wonderful, caring place. You can see it by visiting."

Janet Calhoun, a volunteer and a former guest of the center, described her feelings for the help she received there. "I got one of the greatest educations I'll ever get in my life," she said. "The women that were there in other crises were the ones who helped pull me through."

Another volunteer, Harry Baernfiend, described his work for the center. "Part of my job is to provide transportation. I try to help wherever possible. I'll keep doing whatever I can."

The Women's Center began as an idea in December 1971. The house opened about 10 years ago, Joyce Webb, president of the board of directors for the center, said. The center is at 406 W. Freeman.

The center has three main divisions, the Shelter Program, which provides shelter for women from abusive situations, the Community Program which is involved in the rape action committee and pregnancy counseling, and the Displaced Homemakers Program which helps provide women with education or training to support themselves after they have lost or been separated from their spouse, Webb said.

At the banquet, everybody who was at sometime in some way connected with the center was recognized.

Antique fashion clothing exhibit held at museum

The Form of Fashion," an exhibit that opened last week at the historical museum here, has captured the attention of both museum and fashion enthusiasts. The exhibit, which runs through April 1976, is a comprehensive look at the evolution of fashion from the 17th to the 19th century, highlighting key figures and moments in the history of fashion.

The exhibit features a wide range of garments and accessories from various eras, including a 19th-century sewing machine, a 17th-century corset, and a collection of 18th-century hats. Visitors can learn about the social and cultural influences that have shaped fashion throughout history, from the wealthy elite to the working class.

The exhibit is housed in the museum's main building, which is a 19th-century mansion that has been converted into a museum. The museum is located at 123 Main Street, and is open from 10 am to 5 pm, Tuesday through Sunday. Admission is free, and the museum is accessible by public transportation. Visitors are encouraged to dress in period attire to fully enjoy the exhibit.

The museum's director, Mr. Smith, said that the exhibit has attracted a diverse audience, from fashion historians to casual visitors. He added that the exhibit has sparked interest in the history of fashion, and has helped visitors to appreciate the evolution of fashion as a reflection of social and cultural changes.

The exhibit is part of a larger project at the museum, which is focused on the history of fashion in this region. The museum is currently working on a project to document and exhibit the history of fashion in this area, which includes a collection of garments and accessories from local museums and private collections.

The Form of Fashion exhibit is a must-see for anyone interested in fashion or history. Visitors will leave with a new appreciation for the evolution of fashion and its role in shaping our society.
Priest takes ministry to prostitutes

CHICAGO - Ten years ago, he gave up the comfortable life of his retreat house ministry to the message he says is needed on the Chicago-area street corners.

The Rev. DePaul Genoka is a pastor to prostitutes in a congregation he finds in the bars, massage parlors and back alleys of Chicago's North Side and in such South Side suburbs as Chicago Heights and Calument.

"Some people believe that this is the way I get my kicks," says the heavy-set 31-year-old Franciscan priest.

"And others think that I have no business being with 'those kinds of people,' but that's the point - prostitutes are people, and the church's ministry is to all the people in the world.

"Genoka's people came early last spring to a group meeting at a夠 street ministry where a woman and a man..."

Player's Union dealt setback
By Bruce Lowell
AP Staff Writer

NEW YORK (AP) -- The National Labor Relations Board in Washington dealt the striking National Football League players' union a major setback Monday and spurred talk of an impending settlement when it refused to seek an injunction to force the Management Council to bargain "in good faith."

A source close to management negotiators told The Associated Press the union has "agreed to scale down its pay demand and that, as a result, the Management Council has started to modify its offer."
The source made specific but the statement "has moved closer to management's position.

Union officials declined to comment on the report but hinted that there might be developments later Monday in the six-day-old strike.

The Management Council said there has been no direct communication between Jack Delany, the owners' chief negotiator, and Ed Garvey, the union's executive director. But the AP learned that Paul Marshall, a former NFL player and now a lawyer, has been acting as a go-between since Saturday.

Martha, a running back with Pittsburgh during 1964-69 and with Denver in 1976, was selected as a non-injury griever arbitrator when the union refused to be bound by a no-strike agreement was signed in 1972.

The union had sought the NFL injunction to force the Management Council to bargain in good faith. But in a brief statement from the board headquarters, the NFL said it "declined authorization to seek a preliminary injunction in the U.S. District Court... in the case involving allegations that the NFL has refused to bargain in good faith with the NFL Players Association."

The pending unfair labor practice case against the league is not affected by Monday's NLRB decision. That case, involving 17 complaints, was to have been heard Monday, but at Management Council's request, last week was postponed to Nov. 28. The complaints include the allegation that the Management Council attempted to bypass the union and bargain directly with the players.

Houston looks to end losing streak

HOUSTON (AP) -- The Houston Rockets' 2-1 start in the National Basketball Association this season has Coach Del Harris looking for signs of the "lone's syndrome" and also a winning combination.

The Rockets, off to their worst start in history, following the trade of center Moses Malone to Philadelphia during the off-season, will try to break an losing streak Tuesday night against the Knicks at New York.

"A coach doesn't want to see players accepting losing as a way of doing business," Harris said. Two first signs are complaining about the system of the coach, or talk of, or any injuries cropping up that wouldn't normally matter.

That's the lone's syndrome. The worse times definitely are when you have the guts and personality to go through the tough times.

The tough times definitely are here for the Rockets. They have not rebounded well, rank last in the NBA in shooting percentage and have been trying to adjust in three new players in the starting lineup.

"We've dead last in the league in rebounding, but I tell the players that they can't dwell on the mistakes they'll tighten up," Harris said. We can concentrate on rebounding first and then rebounding, and then rebounding first and then rebounding, and then rebounding first and then rebounding. Poor shooting has hampered the rest of the Rockets' game. Harris said

What has happened when we weren't shooting well is that we let it destroy our rebounding defense, defensive attitude," Harris said. "We were playing with a guilty conscience. We knew we shouldn't be in the game unless we made the next shot. A guy can make two or three shots in a row if he's rebounding and playing defense.

The Rockets' had their best game of the season in a 102-99 loss to Seattle Sunday night with a new lineup that included rookie first-round draft choice Tom Ford. He was the team's high scorer with 22 points and has earned a starting position, Harris said.

"I have no idea how he will bounce back," Wolf said of Maneini. "This thing is going to affect him the rest of his life, not just his boxing career. He is a very sensitive man, and it's going to affect him a lot now," Harris said.

Looming over the trainers is the fear that Arum called for softer gloves or some other kind of headgear that could be worn without impeding a fighter's vision.

"They should develop some kind of helmet. When they put helmets on baseball players, they said it would ruin the game, but it didn't," Arum said.

Kim, the WBA's top-ranked contender received $2,000 for the bout.

has a great attitude. He talks a lot about classes and was very enthusiastic about them.

'Not a lot of people would be interested in playing.' The basketball coach also said that Hemphill talked over the phone to Saluki basketball coach Roy Dampney, and several of his assistants last week.

Hemphill also said that he heard the Saluki swimming coach.

...said Hemphill. "I was surprised to hear from them. It was real nice."

Hemphill still hasn't heard anything about his effort to gain workman's compensation for his injury. That case went to an arbitrator of the Illinois Industrial Commission on October 25. A decision could be handed down before December 2.

"There hasn't been anything yet," said Hemphill. "All I can do is hope for the best." He admits being torn between waiting for the decision, or putting it out of his mind. He has waited for the final outcome of the matter for almost three years.

"I don't sit around thinking about it, but it's on my mind," he said, and then, "It's going to affect my life, so I have to think about it."

said "I don't want to quit playing."

When she does close out her career, she hopes it will be at the NCAA National tournament. First, though, the Salukis will have to win the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference crown this weekend, as only the conference winner will get the NCAA bid.

WSIU looks at Saluki cagers

"Saluki Pride. Fighting for a Dream," is the motto of the 1982 Saluki basketball team.

Fans can find out just what that means when WSIU-TV airs a special pre-season look at Coach Allen Van Winkle's team on channels 8 and 16 Tuesday night at 9 p.m.

The program features interviews with Van Winkle and players Ken Byrd, Johnny Payne, Darrell Jones and Brain Welch, as well as highlights from recent Saluki practices.

Locke uses enthusiasm to propel volleyball squad

By Jackie Rodgers
Sports Editor

Sonia Locke will be the first to admit that she has been the SIUC women’s volleyball team’s biggest fan. Yet in Coach Debbie Hunter’s galaxy of talent, it is hard not to notice that Locke’s star shines a little brighter than the others.

Locke, after all, became the first Suburban Baptist Church player to be named an All-American in volleyball last year. She was also named to the All-American Tournament team at the Illinois College Invitational and participated in the National Sports Festival. She also picked up the SIUC Female Athlete of the Year award, and was given the Pacheco-McBrier Award as the outstanding Black athlete at SIUC.

Yet the senior shuns publicity, saying it bothers her. She was quoted instead of "me" when talking about the Saluki team. She points out that volleyball is a team sport in the truest sense, and gives credit to her teammates for their success.

"There are too many things around what you do," Locke said. "I know I can’t do it by myself."

It took him eight months, Hemphill said, for him to get her in shape to run, but he’s glad to have her here. Locke got a feel for the game, and then was ready to go.

Last week was final proof of that.

Coach Bob Steele and ex-Saluki swimmer Roger VonJouanne visited him in St. Louis. VonJouanne told the SIU-C players his story of coming up with a starter and twelve batteries. The result was another small triumph for the ex-Saluki wide receiver who was cut from the SIU-C football team in October of 1979.

It’s running, but I gotta do a few adjustments,” said Hemphill cheerfully. “I gotta do some adjustments because it ran into the wall.”

He said he had a computer program in and it crashed the Thursday before, worrying about it, so that he was going to have to wait for the weekend.

Hemphill said he was glad to see Steele and VonJouanne, who were in St. Louis to speak at a banquet. Steele said Hemphill was glad for the company. He had given careful directions and had been waiting outside his apartment for the visitors.

"He was real happy and real glad to see us," said Steele. "He was looking forward to the visit."

Recreation Center usage is thriving

By Brian Higgens
Staff Writer

If you’re like most SIUC students, you’ve probably utilized the facilities at the Recreation Center at some point. Unless you are one of the world’s most versatile competitors, however, you probably haven’t made use of even a small fraction of what is available in the Grand Avenue complex.

Inside the Rec Center, a dichotomy of events are at the disposal of virtually every student. Rated as one of the top three college facilities in the country, the Rec Center hosts every type of activity from aerobics to weightlifting.

To borrow a phrase we use at the Rec Center, "you’re a member of the community, but the Rec Center is your center."

Indeed, the impressive list of activities maintained in the north campus confines would make almost any grace or scroll. Among the novelties available at the Rec Center are such events as basketball, racquetball and swimming, which, when combined, compose the most popular activities.

Besides the indoor sports, which currently attract between 3,600 and 4,200 persons daily, the facility also sponsors many outdoor activities. Along with the various intramural programs, Dunne’s department supports SIUC’s Ultimate Frisbee teams, golf at Midland Hills and frisbee golf, as well as maintaining the various activities connected with the tennis center.

Dunne echoed the assessment made by the president of the National Intramural Recreation Sports Association last year, labeling SIUC’S Rec Center as one of the top three complexes in the nation.

"You can go to other places where they’ve geared toward facilities," Dunne said, noting that the Rec Center’s facilities contain 150,000 square feet of floor space. "There’s also some that deal with competitive programs, while others concentrate on non-competitive programming. I think at SIUC we have a really excellent balance of competitive and non-competitive programs."
