Gore's daughter to visit SIUC today

E2K Presidential Campaign comes to Shyrock

ALEXA AGUILAR DAILY EGYPTIAN

Karena Gore Schiff, daughter of presidential hopeful Al Gore, will rally SIUC students today on the steps of Shyrock Auditorium at 5 p.m., as part of her attempt to sway young voters toward her father.

Gore Schiff, who will be accompanied by Rebecca Lieberman, daughter of Al Gore's running mate, Joseph Lieberman, will also address a group of about 10 students in a roundtable discussion before the rally.

The roundtable discussion is a part of the "At the Table" series, a campaign initiative kicked off last week in New York by Gore and his daughter.

The SIUC College Democrats, one of more than 600 chapters throughout the country who are Students for Gore, are sponsoring the event.

One of the members, Rob Moon, said Karena's appearance at SIUC proves Gore's commitment to student issues and voter participation.

Gore Schiff

"Students should come to the rally so they can find out more about Gore than what has been in the media," Moon said. "There is a lot at stake for young people in this year's election."

Moon said Gore Schiff has really taken an initiative to seek out young people who are apathetic about politics and show them how it can affect their lives. The 10 students who will attend the roundtable discussion were picked because of their lack of involvement in politics.

Becky Carroll, communications director for the Illinois Democratic Party Coordinating Campaign, said Gore Schiff will use the roundtable forum because she not only wants to inform voters about her dad, but also bring information back to him about the issues and ideas of young people.

But Carroll said that it is first and foremost

Gore Schiff's passion for dispelling voter apathy among young people that brings her to SIUC.

"She wants to get them active, get them passionate, and get them involved," Carroll said.

Barb Brown, Democratic state central committee woman for this congressional district and an SIUC political science instructor, said it is exciting for SIUC to have Karena come to this part of the state.

"I think a lot of young people wonder why they should vote in this year's election," Brown said. "That's why Karena is coming, to stress the message of why voting is so important. And the message is coming from one of that generation."

Silent learning

SIUC sign language club brings information to the hearing impaired

GINNY SKALSKI DAILY EGYPTIAN

Takiyah Harris watches intently as the interpreter forms words with her hands. Excitedly, Harris nods to the interpreter and her hands nimbly sign sentences back.

Harris relies on her hands to communicate her every thought.

Harris is deaf. Despite living in a world of silence, Harris, 24, drives a car, tips at restaurants and enjoys camping and walking in the woods.

"A lot of people have never met a deaf person before. They've never had to deal with it so it's a very awkward spot for them," Harris signed.

Harris, a sophomore in visual communication, was born with the ability to hear. However, at 11-months-old, she became ill with spinal meningitis and lost her hearing.

Spinal meningitis is an inflammation of the meninges, a membrane which surrounds the brain and spinal cord. Meninges encloses the cerebrospinal fluid which bathes the central nervous system. Meningitis can cause seizures, comas and lasting disabilities, such as brain damage, blindness or, in Harris' case, deafness.

Gesturing and oral sounds became the sole form of communication for Harris. Her brother worked to close the communication gap between Harris and her family by gesturing and making an effort to help other family members understand her.

"My brother wanted to make sure I was part of the family," she signed. "I never really felt left out. I was always able to communicate with gesturing and occasionally writing."

Learning to sign

The eighth grade opened up a new world of communication for Harris when she was formally exposed to American Sign Language, a linguistically complete natural language of the deaf community.

With ASL, her communication skills became stronger. When the time to register for high school arose, Harris made the difficult decision to leave the public school system and relocate to the Illinois School for the Deaf in Jacksonville.

Harris lived at the residential school and made many friends who understood her communication needs. "I grew up in a small town; it was very hard to grow up very fast in that environment," Harris signed.

Harris transferred to SIUC during the spring semester from the National Technical Institute for the Deaf in Rochester, N.Y., where she received her associate's degree in applied arts and computer graphics.

Winters heats up SIUC's Provost position

Interim Provost brings strong academic background to the job

CHRISTIAN HALE DAILY EGYPTIAN

Growing up in an academic family, Margaret Winters has been around universities all her life. One of her earliest memories is her father going off to go to school as a graduate student.

Now, she sits in a major position of responsibility at SIUC, as interim provost and vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and Research, SIUC's top academic post.

"I knew the words 'graduate school' long before I knew what they meant," Winters said. "My parents always assumed that I would get a Ph.D."

After graduating from the high school she attended in New York City, Winters stayed in Brooklyn until she finished attending Brooklyn College. Winters studied French, Italian and Latin. She said it was during this time she discovered she didn't really want to do literary theory of any kind.

Winters

There was always strong support at home. Three of Winters' four grandparents were immigrants. Her parents were the first in both families to attend college.

At the University of California in Riverside, Winters completed a master's in French literature. She had just returned from being a third-year university student in France where she learned to read French as fast, and

Simon and Edgar push for Illinois C-SPAN

MATT BRENNAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Public Policy Institute Director Paul Simon and former Gov. Jim Edgar are co-chairing a committee to create an Illinois version of C-SPAN.

Gus Bode

Gus says: "C" is for catnap that helps inform people is a good thing."

Illinois C-SPAN would cover what the state legislative, executive and judicial branches of the government are doing. An Illinois version of C-SPAN would also bring statewide events down to the local level.

"I think it would give people a better chance to get informed about government in Illinois," Simon said. "Anything that helps inform people is a good thing."

In a letter to the editor in Tuesday's Chicago Tribune, Edgar wrote that perhaps the most crucial factor to good government is informed citizenry.

"That is why we are enthusiastically co-chairing a bipartisan, broadly based effort that we hope will lead the establishment of an Illinois C-SPAN," Edgar wrote in his letter.

Simon also said there would be a definite advantage to having an Illinois C-SPAN because it would give people an opportunity to listen to both sides of a government debate.

The University of Illinois at Springfield is conducting the planning committee for the C-SPAN project. They are also in charge of staffing the committee, which is made up of people representing the legislature and various statewide officials.

Mike Lawrence, associate director of the Public Policy Institute, is also a member of the Illinois C-SPAN planning committee.

"The idea is to help people follow government action that has an effect on their daily lives," Lawrence said. "There would also be opportunities to highlight conferences that happen throughout the state."

For example, Lawrence said that Illinois C-SPAN could have televised the recent Gwendolyn Brooks symposium at SIUC throughout the entire state.

In Edgar's letter to the Chicago Tribune, he wrote, "We have the technology to expand the [Illinois Legislature] visitors gallery — to a classroom in Chicago, a business in Joliet and a living room in Carbondale."

The planning committee is working to get approval from the state legislature to televise the proceedings. Members also have to plan how to fund and distribute the program.

TOWN MEETING

THERE WILL BE A TOWN MEETING FROM 11 A.M. TO NOON ON OCT. 19 IN THE OHIO ROOM OF THE STUDENT CENTER. THIS WILL BE AN OPPORTUNITY FOR THE PEOPLE OF SOUTHERN ILLINOIS TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THE CREATION OF ILLINOIS C-SPAN AND OFFER THEIR VIEWS ON WHAT PROGRAMMING THEY WOULD LIKE TO SEE.

NEWS IN BRIEF

SIUC student reports month-old sexual assault

A 20-year-old SIUC student came forward last week to report a sexual assault that took place in Allen 1 in August.

The woman told SIUC Police that she was assaulted by an acquaintance Aug. 20. The assault was reported to have taken place in her room, and the suspect was in the room at her invitation.

SIUC Police Lt. Todd Sigler said no date rape drugs were reported to have been used in this crime, nor did alcohol appear to be a factor.

Sigler said the case is under investigation.

Southern Arts Fund offers grants to art groups

The Southern Arts Fund is offering grants for community groups that provide cultural arts activities. Application materials are available now through the Carbondale Community Arts office, 1115 W. Sycamore St. The application deadline is Oct. 13. For more information, call 457-5100.

Salsa and Merengue classes at the Rec Center

The Salsa and the Merengue, Latin-oriented dances, are being taught in the Recreation Center's dance studio on Fridays until Oct. 6. Class times are from 5 to 6:30 p.m.

For more information, call 453-1263.

LIFE Community Center offering Tai Chi classes for stress relief

The LIFE Community Center, 2500 Sunset Dr., is offering Tai Chi classes for those ages 18 and older.

Tai Chi is a gentle Chinese exercise to reduce stress, reduce weight, improve coordination and increase flexibility and balance. The class begins Monday and will continue through Nov. 6. The class will be Mondays from 5 to 6 p.m. The cost for Carbondale Park District residents is $45. The registration deadline is Thursday.

For more information, call 549-4222.

Landscaping for wildlife

The Carbondale Park District is sponsoring a Landscaping for Wildlife seminar, which focuses on attracting wildlife to your garden. The seminar takes place from 5 to 6 p.m. Tuesday at the Family Tree Garden and Gift Center, 2331 S. Illinois Ave. The cost is free, and the registration deadline is Friday.

For more information, call 549-4222.

NEW YORK

Who wants to get rich and drop out of college?

U-WIRE — ABC's "Who Wants to be a Millionaire," is holding tryouts for a special college edition, to be aired Dec. 19, 20 and 21.

Interested students must be a U.S. residents, 18 years of age and working toward an undergraduate degree (sorry, no grad students). In addition, students must produce a photo ID, proof of age and a copy of their current tuition bill.

Three separate testing sessions will take place at each stop, at 9 a.m., 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. local time. The first 125 eligible students in line will be allowed to take a 30-question exam. And if you're the 126th eligible person in line? Try again next time, or go home.

Students will receive one chance at the exam. Those who pass then face a taped interview with the show's producers, and the decision is then in the hands of the show's sponsors, who will pick 10 finalists for each episode, to be taped Nov. 8-11 in New York.

Musicians come to answer questions

The Altgeld Chamber of Players answer musical questions proposed in piece by Charles Ives

JENNIFER WIG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

JESSE DRURY — DAILY EGYPTIAN

The Altgeld Chamber of Players practice to perfect their orchestrated performance.

Four voices shrilly respond, fully irritated with the repeated question.

The voices, a clarinet, an oboe and two flutes played together Monday in a sectional rehearsal of Charles Ives' "The Unanswered Question," which features a string quartet, a woodwind quartet and a solo trumpet.

In the selection, the string section is used as a quiet background while the solo trumpet "asks" a question.

"The woodwinds answer the question, becoming more and more agitated with it until they give up and there's nothing left but the trumpet," said Eric Mandat, a professor in the School of Music.

The song is one of four to be played at this evening's performance by the Altgeld Chamber Players. The group started four years ago providing the School of Music faculty an opportunity to perform publicly.

Chamber players differ from other groups because they usually do not incorporate a conductor. Because Ives' piece utilizes multiple tempos, Mandat, the programming director, will conduct the group for that piece.

"The Unanswered Question" is a piece not often played by groups because of the difficulty, but Mandat chose it for that reason.

Mandat explained that Ives' works are an involved process because his techniques are unusual. For example, one of Ives' compositions required three orchestras with three separate conductors.

QUOTE

It's sort of like patting your head and rubbing your stomach at the same time, but at different speeds.

music professor and flutist

Suzanne Lord, another music professor and a flutist with the group, compares this song to a child and his parents.

"I can just hear him saying, 'Hey are we there yet?'" said Lord, singing the words in the trumpet's tone. "[The woodwinds] start by answering gently and then we get testy."

Lord, who has been a member of the Chamber players from the group's beginning, said the song is a challenge because of the different rhythms.

"It's sort of like patting your head and rubbing your stomach at the same time, but at different speeds," she said.

Charles Ives, who made money in the early 1900s as an insurance salesman, originally composed music as a hobby. He studied music freely, allowing him to rely on unusual influences, such as the mixture of strange sounds together.

"Because Ives wasn't bound to follow traditional rules of Western artistic music he developed a personal style," Mandat said. "He didn't have to adhere. As a result, many of his pieces were not played for decades after their composition."

Officials unite to discuss school law

Conference addresses Decatur controversy, gives updates on school law issues

ANNE MARIE TAVELLA
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The attorney for a Marion elementary school teacher argued on Monday that Donna Parks was within her rights to tie up a student in one of her classes as a disciplinary measure.

The argument is part of an ongoing civil lawsuit against Parks and the Marion School District by the student and his parents. Not every situation involving school law is challenged in court. In fact, school law is integrated into many areas of school life.

Brad Colwell, an assistant professor in educational administration and higher education, said school law probably permeates 90 percent of anything that happens at school. Everything from days students attend school to what they are taught is prescribed to schools in the "Illinois School Code" book.

"People don't realize the role of the law in school," said Colwell, paging through the 2000 edition of the book, with the words "Illinois school law is fantastic" scrolling on the computer screen behind him.

Colwell teaches school law at SIUC, and has helped organize the SIU School Administrators' Legal Roundtable for the past four years. The conference is for administrators, instructors and other school officials.

This year's conference will be on Thursday in the Student Center. There is a registration fee of $45, which includes lunch, materials and parking. The event is co-sponsored by the College of Educational Administration and Higher Education and area regional superintendents.

The roundtable will begin with a keynote address from Ed Boehm, principal of MacArthur High School, Jackie Goetter, board president of Decatur Public School District 61 and Thomas Kelly, an attorney from Kelly Law Offices. The address will discuss the incident last September when seven Decatur students were expelled for two years following a fight at a football game. The fight and the expulsions triggered a national debate on school discipline policies.

Kelly, whose law firm represented the school district in the case, said they will provide advice

Salukis just need loyal fans

DEAR EDITOR:

This is directed to the critics, the complainers and most of all the fair-weather fans at SIU. According to the dictionary, a fan is an enthusiastic devotee of a sport as a spectator rather than a participant. Notice that nowhere in that definition does it mention the words winning or losing. That is because, to a true fan, it doesn't matter.

Many SIU students seem to have the attitude of "win and then we'll support you" when it should be "we'll support you no matter what," just because a team loses doesn't mean that they aren't talented or hard working.

Maybe if more people came to the games, the team would feel the support they deserve and feel like they have someone to play for. The stands in the student section at the first home game were almost empty. We should pack the place and show other teams they're in our house — the Dawg house! In response to suggesting that we just scrap the whole team I say GET REAL! Last time I checked, the Cubs still have a baseball team and they don't win all that much. They do, however, have one thing we're missing at SIU — true fans! When a team is losing, it isn't time to turn your back on them; it is time to show them your support even more.

Those players and coaches work hard and they deserve your respect and your support. A little support can go a long way. Who knows, you might even have fun at the game! So I urge everyone to come out and do something unusual — support our football team!

OUR WORD

Let the music industry fight their own fight — universities shouldn't ban Napster

A year ago, the word "Napster" was still sneaking into the vernacular of college campuses. But by the celebration of the new millennium, it was as prevalent as the word iMac, bringing with it once-obscure phrases like "MP3," "file-sharing" and the ever-popular "pirating of intellectual property."

Founded by a 19-year-old student at Northeastern University in Boston, Napster began as a way for a couple of guys to trade music with their friends. But the file-sharing website's popularity spread like credit card applications across the campuses of America. It didn't take long for the website to attract the attention of the music industry's legal departments — and they weren't happy.

Music icons Metallica and Dr. Dre have now rewritten their roles in history by deciding to enter the ring up against Napster. They want the website shut down, and although they seem to be fighting a losing battle in public opinion, they are determined to claim their victories in the courtroom and, eventually, in their royalty checks.

Recently, letters were sent to prominent universities across the country asking that students be blocked from the controversial website. This is the second time the parties suing Napster have attempted to bring their fight into academia. Last year, several universities were named as codefendants in a lawsuit against Napster. They were then dropped from the suit after agreeing to ban students from accessing Napster through their servers.

Universities should not be caving to what amounts to industry pressure to block Napster. We don't deny that artists have valid concerns with the implications Napster-type websites bring with them; the consumers, while they may be winning now by getting music for free, could lose in the end if artists cease to be able to support themselves with their creative endeavors.

But it won't come to that. The beauty of capitalism is that it always finds a way. To close down or block file-sharing technology will only create electronic prohibition to proportions that will put the bootlegging of the 1920s to shame.

The information age is here. And as every industry begins to feel the overwhelming effects of it, they will face a choice: embrace it, using it to better their products and their profitability, or build the biggest, strongest dam they can muster — and hope against hope that the tide of technology will stop coming in.

Most universities don't block websites that showcase child pornography, and not because they support those enterprises. Universities don't block websites because it isn't their place to do so.

Nobody knows what the music industry or Napster-like websites will look like when this issue is finally resolved; it is more likely they will fuse than it is that one will overtake the other. But what we do know is this: most universities don't block websites that teach how to make a bomb or that showcase child pornography, and not because they support those enterprises. Universities don't block websites because it isn't their place to do so.

Academia has long held itself as the last bastion of intellectual exploration. To voluntarily pick a side in what is sure to become a defining battle in technological cultural and free-market history only serves to undermine the ideals that separate research institutions like SIUC from trade schools:

SIUC could corner the market on criminals

I was disturbed to see in Monday's paper that four more of our students are going to jail. It's not so much that they committed crimes, but these guys will no longer be able to contribute to the overall well being of the University.

Each was worth more than $3,600 in fees alone. Projected across five years, that's $72,000 we don't have.

At Student Affairs, they're working their tails off to come up with more students, but were not losing kids to Penn State, we're losing them to the state pen. Now, either we've got to teach our Salukis how not to get caught, or we've got to figure on some way to recoup. A couple Dawgs to the pound a week, and we're talking serious scratch.

Some look across campus and see fledgling young minds struggling to grasp complex notions of reality. But you don't have to be an econ major to know that just 3,000 more students will jangle another eleven million dollars in our pockets — per year.

Imagine those pockets. No more arguments about faculty pay raises. No more hiring freezes. They might even be able to fix the Morris Library clock.

For years the University has been struggling to find more money. And more money, as all Americans know, is always good. We could try to attract more students by raising our standards, but then we risk losing some of our fledgling young revenue.

What we need to do is siphon off some of that public works juice that's flowing to some of the less deserving communities of Southern Illinois. As everyone knows, next to SIU, penitentiaries are the largest employer in the region.

We're not in competition with U of I or Northwestern, we're in competition with Marion and Westopolis.

What this campus needs is a prison. It's reckoned that taxpayers pay around $40,000 a year for each prisoner. We could be rolling in dough.

Instead of feeling guilty about admitting students who can't read and write just because we like cut of their check, we can do a service to society and build a new stadium.

Forget Hispanics, our country's fastest growing population is prisoners. For God's sake, they outnumber Episcopalians. In 1970, counting all the big houses and little Podunk pokies, we only had something like 200,000 bad guys behind bars.

We now boast close to two million. Imagine how dangerous 1970 must have been. No wonder Nixon got re-elected.

But thanks to the Reagan-Bush-Clinton war on drugs and poverty, most of our wretched refuse will soon be behind bars. No longer will the best of us need to huddle behind our gated communities yearning to breathe free.

And if it ever looks like we might run out of criminals, we'll just make tougher laws. I for one think students with low grades could benefit from a little less time going to bars and a little bit more time behind

But like George "double-you-refund" Bush, I'd be happy if we just enforced the wonderful laws we have. As we all know, most students, even future presidential candidates, "experiment" with drugs. (What these experiments entail, I'm not sure, but I think they brought us chocolate covered pretzels, pineapple on pizza and the ability to turn anything in the house, including appliances, lamps and trophies, into a bong.)

Recruiters could go with the FBI to Phish concerts and help entrap future students into our system.

As for me, my vote's for one of those female prisons. For years, we've been complaining because there's not enough chicks on campus; here we can instantly level the field.

I can't speak for everyone, but I think it would make me a better person. The thought of 3,000 kittens in chains and jumpsuits has got me thinking prison ministry.

And that's the beauty of this: we're first. First with this new style prison university, this Uni-son or Pri-versity, so we get to pick and choose.

Imagine how great our football team could be with all those bad seeds from Nebraska, Notre Dame and Miami.

And not only would the administration probably not mind the free labor and the ability to place folks in solitary, but wouldn't our business students benefit by hearing from some of Wall Street's most creative minds? Our political science students could rub elbows with actual alderman and White House aides. "Hey, isn't that Leon Panetta?"

Now if only we can teach these White House punks how to build B-2 bombers, we'll be in real business.

Tech fee to be used for new computers

Grad School asking for proposals on surcharge allocations

JASON COKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Updating computers for graduate students is how the new technology surcharge placed on graduate students will probably be spent, pending approval from an advisory board.

The Graduate School expects to receive between $40,000 to 45,000 on the new technology surcharge, according to John Koropchak, interim dean of the Graduate School.

The Graduate School has a committee, the Graduate Technology Surcharge Advisory Board, that will review proposals for allocating the surcharge.

The board has sent out letters to all members of the graduate faculty asking for proposals for what to do with the money. The board will welcome any recommendations from faculty, staff and graduate students. All proposals have to be turned in by Oct. 15.

The tuition surcharge this semester added $2 for every credit hour a student takes. In the past, surcharge fees were not related to instruction. Instead, they were used for other things on campus, like health and recreation.

A year ago, the Graduate and Professional Student Council voted to oppose the surcharge. At the time, it argued that such a move was not a good precedent because there could be more instructional-related surcharges in the future.

According to the board's Technology Enhancement Guide, the selections for each proposal are "based on criteria that include the quality of the proposed project and the breadth of the impact of the project on the overall graduate student population."

Matching funds will be given priority.

Koropchak said technology has more applications than just computers, and other equipment can be included.

There are three advisory boards on campus: for the law school, undergraduates and graduates. The portion of the fee that is generated from the graduate students will go to improving technology on the parts of the campus they use most directly.

Indian students making their voices heard

New president of ISA wants to raise organization awareness

CODELL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Aashish Lakhani thinks it is about time for Indian students in the SIUC campus to make their presence felt.

Lakhani, a junior in information systems technology from Nairobi, Kenya, was elected Sept. 9 to serve as president of the Indian Student Association.

Because ISA is the second largest international student organization at SIUC, Lakhani has a lot of responsibility and is ready to take it on.

"I want to make them a better association," said Lakhani, whose parents are native Indians. "I want them to be recognized."

To do this, Lakhani has several ideas. One is to have a stronger role in the International Student Council. Lakhani plans to involve the group in more council activities like the soccer tournament. He said the ISA has a good team this year and will be a contender.

Lakhani also wants to spread Indian culture through film. He hopes to use the Student Center Auditorium to show Indian movies.

In addition to the new events, Lakhani plans to keep the old ones around as well. This will include celebrating Diwali, a festival of lights symbolizing the victory of righteousness and the lifting of spiritual darkness. The celebration will be in the Carbondale Civic Center.

Diwali commemorates the return of Lord Rama, the seventh incarnation of the god Vishnu, to his kingdom Ayodhya after completing his 14-year exile. It also marks the beginning of the Hindu new year. The god, Ganesh, and the goddess, Lakshmi, are usually worshipped on this day.

Lakhani will also continue the celebration of an annual utsav, or, Indian celebration.

There is a strong presence of Indian students on campus. That presence is made up of 152 Indian students. Out of all those students, about 120 of them belong to the ISA.

Among the most populated international Registered Student Organizations on campus, second only to the Japanese Student Association, Lakhani sees a lot of promise in the organization this semester.

He is not oblivious to being in positions of importance. Before becoming president of the ISA, Lakhani served as a senator in the Undergraduate Student Government and was the president of the International Student Council for the Spring 2000 semester.

Now Lakhani is forgetting about the duties he had in the past and is concentrating on the ISA.

"I saw a lot of new students who were enthusiastic to work as a team," Lakhani said.

Lakhani is taking over the presidency after Lily Sinha headed the group for about two years. Sinha left the position when she graduated.

Carla Coppi, adviser to the International Student Council and associate director to International Students and Scholars, worked a lot with Sinha and said her energy and work ethic made her a great president. However, she is confident Lakhani will have similar success.

"As a former (International Student Council) president, I think he will be able to fill Lily's shoes quite easily," Coppi said.

If you think rape can't happen to you, you're in for a real education.

Because statistics show that a college-aged woman is vulnerable to rape. Very often by someone she knows. A fellow student. Even a date.

And that's a crime. Because any time a woman is forced to have sex against her will it's a felony.

Rape, It's a subject no one should take lightly.

Provost search nears

CHRISTIAN HALE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Since SIU has completed the search for its new president, a search for a permanent SIUC chancellor will soon begin. Once a permanent chancellor is named, the new chancellor will open the search for a permanent provost and vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and Research.

Interim Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Research Margaret Winters remains uncertain about her future, but will stay in the position until the search begins for a permanent replacement.

"The idea is that you want permanence above and allow it to work its way down," Winters said. "I'm allowed to run for the position, which is part of my taking of the interim provost position."

"I presume there will be a search for permanent provost. I will see how things go. I haven't decided yet."

WINTERS

in the same way, as English.

Winters attained her doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania where she studied romance, comparative romance languages and medieval literature.

John Jackson, interim SIUC chancellor, appreciates Winters' diplomatic skills, which are necessary when dealing with strong minded people. Her job in keeping communications open between her office and the colleges' deans is difficult and important, Jackson said.

"She manages to get along with almost everyone," Jackson said. "She is certainly able to state her position and let you know if she disagrees without being disagreeable."

Winters came to SIU in 1977 on a one-year appointment. The appointment opened into a tenure track job, which she applied for and eventually attained. Winters went through the academic ranks normally, climbing up the tenure and promotion at the right time, eventually becoming chair of the Department of Foreign Languages.

The department had a maximum limit of two terms, equaling six years. Winters opted for the second term and during its time, became intrigued, particularly with the personnel side of administration.

When an opening occurred at Anthony Hall for an associate vice chancellor position, Winters applied.

"It was 1994 and it has simply went from there," Winters said.

Jean Paratore, associate vice chancellor of Student Affairs and Dean of Students, worked with Winters when Paratore served as interim vice chancellor for Student Affairs from January to April of this year.

It was during this time that Winters became interim provost. Winters is still unsure if she will apply for the position when a search for a permanent provost begins.

"Since Winters has been interim provost, the relationship between the offices of Student Affairs and Academic Affairs has been fabulous," Paratore said. "It's stronger than it has ever been."

Paratore said the importance in this is that at most institutions, and for a number of years at SIUC, Student Affairs and Academic Affairs didn't work well together.

ASL

"SIUC has a good art program and its accessibility," Harris signed. "[SIUC] has note takers, interpreters — services that I need."

Harris explained despite being deaf, school is not particularly challenging. She uses about three different interpreters throughout the course of a day in her classes.

The interpreter sits in front of her and signs for her during the class while a note taker completes her notes for her.

Outside of class Harris does not have an interpreter with her, which can cause confusion when other students stop to ask her a question or talk to her and do not realize she is deaf.

"Sometimes I can read their lips, but it depends on their lips and how they speak. Some people are willing to write back and forth," Harris signed.

"Some people are a little afraid and stand-offish and I try to help them."

Teaching Others

Harris recently developed the Silent ASL Club, a group of students who meet to learn basic Sign Language and to coordinate events that are fun and informative for the hearing impaired and those interested in learning more about them.

"I created the idea to increase the awareness here at SIU," Harris said. "It's not an official program; we're learning as we go along."

The club meets Mondays from 4 to 6 p.m. in Woody Hall B-142 to discuss ideas and events for the group. On Wednesdays the club meets from 3:15 to 5:15 p.m. at the same location.

But even with the ability to sign, Harris and her interpreters still have occasional miscommunications. As Harris signed Wednesday's time of the club meeting to her interpreter Sandra Samples, services coordinator for disability support services, she had trouble communicating the number 15.

"We just experienced a different way of saying 15," Samples explained as she confirmed the time with Harris via sign language. "They sign 15 differently in New York."

Harris teaches sign language to the club despite the language barrier between her and most of the other 30 students who are not deaf. Harris described her knowledge of ASL as somewhere between an expert and an experienced signer.

"I can give to students who want to learn sign language and they can give to me," Harris signed to Samples. "I want to encourage people to communicate with the deaf community."

Instead of dwelling on her hearing impairment, Harris only wishes more role models existed to give inspiration to deaf people.

"We need more deaf role models so deaf children can look up to someone who is successful," she signed.

"We all need to be courageous and be willing to be ourselves and go after the things we want in life."

on how to handle a similar situation. They will look at how the school district dealt with the situation and the legal ramifications of the actions made.

Kelly said events like the conference contribute to the continuing education of school professionals.

"These administrators and superintendents need to know how they can deal with these kinds of issues," Kelly said.

After the address, the roundtable will break into two consecutive sessions. During the sessions, participants will have a choice of four or five talks on topics ranging from teacher recertification from the view of administration to dispensing of student medication.

The second keynote address "The ACLU and Public Education: A Shared Vision," will be given during lunch by Edwin Yohnka, director of communications for the American Civil Liberties Union in Chicago.

Yohnka will discuss the relationship between public education and the ACLU, Colwell said.

Two more sessions will follow lunch with talks covering student residency, teacher tenure, public schools and the Division of Children and Family Services and individual education programs.

Nancy Mundschenk, an SIUC associate professor in educational psychology and special education, will speak about individual educational programs for students with disabilities. Mundschenk will address the IEP document, which is a contract between a student with a disability and the school. The document details the special education and services the school will provide.

She said it is important for school administrators to know as much as they can about special education and IEP.

"It's really imperative that they understand how important the IEP is and how they can use the IEP in the process to improve service delivery rather than as an obstacle to it," Mundschenk said.

This is the first year Mundschenk will participate at the conference. Mundschenk said the event is an excellent opportunity for school officials to learn about the latest legal developments.

"It's a very powerful service that the University and those who are involved can provide to administration in the field," Mundschenk said.

Colwell began the conference four years ago when he thought there may be an interest from school officials to spend a day looking at "hot topics" involving school law.

The first year of the event attracted about 130 participants. Colwell said he was surprised by the turnout and expanded the event the next year. This year, Colwell expects more than 200 participants.

The event also gives the participants a chance to network with each other.

"If I can coordinate a conference where they can have access to a number of different types of groups and associations, then that's fantastic," Colwell said.

were not played for decades after their composition."

"The Unanswered Question" was originally composed in 1906. Even after Ives reconstructed it between 1930 and 1935, the piece was not played in the 1940s.

Tonight's musical styles range from baroque to late romantic to late classical.

"There's a little something for everyone," Mandat said.

Mandat has been part of the chamber players since their beginning because it allows him an opportunity to play with his colleagues in a different environment, and also to play songs not usually performed, such as the Ives piece.

"We get to take turns being players and followers. That interactive approach is exciting for me," he said. "It's different than the band or orchestra concerts that are normally heard at universities."

SPORTS BRIEFS

Papachrysanthou competes in Sydney

SIU swimmer Chrysanthos Papachrysanthou swam in the 100-meter freestyle for his home country of Cyprus at the Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, early Tuesday morning. His time of 52.82 seconds was not among the top 16 which qualify for the semifinals. He is not expected to compete in any events for his native country.

Saluki Booster Club meets Thursday

The Saluki Booster Club will have their monthly luncheon at noon Thursday at Mugsy McGuire's, 1620 W. Main St. This week's featured speaker will be SIU head football coach Jan Quarless. The Saluki Booster Club luncheons are open to the public and are on the first and third Thursday of every month during the season.

He adds to an already strong program with a dedicated work ethic that revolves around intelligent training.

"We need to recruit excellent student-athletes. Academic is the most important thing, then track," German said. "We want to teach them how to work out, so they can understand what they are doing."

"I like to work a lot on technique, mechanics and power. It will be challenging because I will have to unteach things so they can improve on technique. We have to be more efficient."

German coached efficient success stories at the University of Arkansas-Little Rock. Chris Phillips, a top-notch 110-meter hurdler with a personal record of 13.57 seconds from UA, found flight under the guidance of German. In 1998 after training under German, Phillips brought his time down by the first meet in the season.

By the end of the year, Phillips had dramatically improved his personal record to 13.27 and ran it consistently. He went on to compete around the globe, including a respectable performance at the Olympic trials in '99.

Despite suffering from an ankle injury, Phillips qualified all the way to the finals in the Olympic trials where he ran against the best in the nation, but was unable to make the final cut.

German has also coached Olympic hopefuls in the 200-meter run and the long jump. These are just some of the success stories that German hopes to bring to SIU.

"I have helped a lot of athletes accomplish the goals they have set for themselves. My philosophy is to work smart," German said. "We have to be strong mentally and that comes with every day workouts. Confidence levels grow with practice."

Wright was proud to have helped German to his coaching staff. Wright said after completing open interviews, German stuck out and was the obvious choice.

"He has a good rapport with his athletes, and our guys like and respect him," Wright said. "What I'm interested in is winning, and I want the best man for the job that will come in and do that for us. He is that man."

Likewise, German is excited about the level of professionalism he has come into contact with at SIU.

"I will be very comfortable over here. The people I work with are easy going, and we have communicated well together," German said.

German brings a flexible attitude to the program. He understands that each athlete is unique and wants to help each one find individual motivation.

"I want them to think about what they are doing. They need to come in and work smart and we will do well," German said. "I key into the strengths and differences of athletes, then balance these components so we can run our goals."

WOMEN'S GOLF

For the second week in a row, the Saluks finished third. Unlike the previous tournament though, where SIU finished behind Missouri Valley Conference schools Bradley University and the University of Northern Iowa, it finished atop of the MVC pack in the Panthe Classic.

Iowa State University scored 610 to win the tourney, while Arkansas State scored 626 for second. Bradley finished in fourth place, finishing six strokes behind SIU with a score of 633, and host Northern Iowa scored 636 to finish in fifth place.

"While we were a little disappointed that we didn't get second, were pleased that we beat our rivals," Daugherty said, referring to Bradley and Northern Iowa.

Five of the six Saluki players posted scores that the team would use in their team total — only the top four of each round are counted.

Team captain Liz Uthoff scored a three-over-par 75 in round one for a fifth place standing, but shot an 81 in round two to fall into a six-way tie for ninth place, along with teammate Andrea Turner. Al'on Hiller tied for 17th with a score of 158, and Jennifer Shurt scored 161 to tie for 22nd place.

Hiller is confident the team is more aware of its mistakes, and the results are showing up in the scores. The team is set on repeating as MVC Champions, which for the first time would grant them an automatic bid in the NCAA women's championships.

"We know where we're losing some strokes, and we've been able to work on those things," Hiller said.

Illinois is an important state in deciding the next president, so campaign appearances are common. There have only been two times in history that the candidate who won Illinois did not win the presidency.

"It is a gesture of respect toward us," Brown said. "There were many other places Kareema could be tomorrow, but she is coming to share her message here."

Gore Schiff is no stranger to the rigors of campaigning. A recent graduate of the Columbia University School of Law, she has been an instrumental part of the Gore campaign since announcing her father's candidacy last June.

Gore Schiff, who was only three when her father announced he was running for Congress, grew up among politics in the Washington, D.C., area and spent her summers in Tennessee.

As she watched her father's tenure as a congressman, his failed presidential bid in 1988, and then his win of the vice-presidency, she came interested in politics.

Now, she is considered a key adviser and has headed Gorenex, a campaign initiative geared specifically toward young people.

Social issues, like working mothers and abortion, and voter apathy among young people are issues with which Gore Schiff is especially concerned. She and her husband, Andrew Schiff, have a 14-month-old son, Wyatt.

Salukis stare down first Division I-A opponent in five years

Quarless believes the game against KU is winnable

ANDY EGENSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

It's been 14 years since SIU football head coach Jan Quarless stepped foot on the campus of the University of Kansas.

Now, he's headed back to the prairie again, but this time, the scenery will be a little different.

Quarless, who served as offensive line coach at KU in 1986-87, will make the trip back to Lawrence, Kan., when the Salukis travel to face Division I-A opponent Kansas Saturday.

Coach Q said the Jayhawks are team that can both challenge his football team and provide financial support, an opportunity Quarless did not want to waste.

But a lot has changed since Quarless departed KU.

"What happened back to us in '86 when I was on the other side of the field, I know what kind of football team we had at Kansas and it wasn't very good," said Quarless at his weekly press conference Tuesday.

KU has improved since, but Quarless believes his program has developed enough after three recruiting classes to compete with an opponent like Kansas.

"I think if you can get a solid foundation, then why not go for the marbles," Quarless said.

The Salukis have not played a game against I-A competition since 1995. SIU will receive a significant game purse of $250,000 for the KU contest, but Quarless said these type of opponents need to be picked with care. Coach Q joked that the University of Nebraska wanted to play a game in the future, but he wanted nothing to do with it.

"I know Nebraska had called a couple of weeks ago and [SIU Athletic Director] Paul [Kowalzyk] has really been involved in the scheduling, but I didn't turn over that sheet of paper to him," Quarless said. "I didn't walk down the hall and say, 'Nebraska wants to call.'"

"I'm sure they could have given us a guarantee that would eliminate the deficit and I didn't want to buy into that."

Quarless said the game will help the football program on a monetary basis and provides a competitive matchup as well. This will be the third meeting between SIU and Kansas. KU claimed victories in the '86 and '87 meetings, 35-23 and 16-15, respectively.

The Jayhawks are 1-1 this season after earning a tough win against the University of Alabama-Birmingham and dropping a 31-17 decision to Southern Methodist University in the season opener.

Kansas gets into the meat of its schedule after SIU leaves town. The Jayhawks will have to battle other Big 12 teams such as the University of Oklahoma, Kansas State University and the University of Missouri, along with late season games versus Nebraska and the University of Texas.

But first, the Jayhawks must contend with a Saluki team that's coming off a much needed win against the University of Northern Iowa. Quarless realizes there will be no room for error and the Salukis (1-2, 1-0) must capitalize on any given opportunity Saturday.

But he said he wouldn't have scheduled this game if he did not think he could win it.

"I told [the team Monday] that if any of us believe we can't win the football game, then I asked them to leave," Quarless said.

SIU WOMEN'S GOLF

THE NEXT STOP FOR THE SALUKIS WILL BE SEPT. 25 AND 26 AT THE NORTHERN ARIZONA UNIVERSITY INVITATIONAL IN FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ.

One stroke.

That was the difference between the SIU women's golf team's score and that of Arkansas State University, who ranked 48th in the last Mastercard Collegiate Golf Rankings. The one stroke meant the difference between second and third place in last weekend's Panther Fall Classic in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Unfortunately for SIU, the team played later in the day than Arkansas State Monday and the wind that picked up in the afternoon may have been a factor on the final score sheet.

While SIU scored a 318 in that round, Arkansas State, who scored 321 in the previous round, shot 16 strokes better on the second day to edge the Salukis.

"I think Arkansas State benefited from not having to play in the wind, and the score shows that," said SIU head coach Diane Daugherty.
