New students at SIUC drop by 927

Colleges seek help in raising fall enrollment

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
General Assignment Writer

Some colleges are trying to ease admission requirements and improve recruiting to help reverse the decrease in new students, which SIUC officials attribute to fewer high school graduates and the appeal of community colleges.

The number of new students for the 1993 fall semester is down 927 from 9,545 in 1992.

The decrease among undergraduate students is even greater, down 999 from 9,278 in 1992.

College, school beat trend

By Erick J.B. Enriquez

While most undergraduate academic areas are experiencing declines in new student admissions, one college and one school beat the trend.

With a 5 percent increase, up 15 students to 302 for fall 1993, the College of Agriculture is experiencing a significant growth, said Donald M. Elkins, associate dean of the college.

Elkins attributes this growth to public awareness of the benefits of the agricultural field.

"Increasing awareness of the importance of agriculture and the rewarding careers available in agriculture are two reasons that admissions has increased," Elkins said. "Especially in certain areas like environment and field and nutrition."

The School of Social Work was the only other undergraduate area to experience an increase in admissions.

Countries endorse aid plan to Russia

The Washington Post

TOKYO—Seven of the world's richest countries Thursday endorsed a broad program of aid for Russia and other former Soviet republics, but U.S. officials said the package could unravel if Russian President Boris Yeltsin fails in an upcoming popular referendum.

The total aid pledged by the Group of Seven industrialized states after a two-day meeting of their foreign and finance ministers here exceeded $30 billion.

That amount includes a separate American package of $1.8 billion, which may face opposition in Congress. Much of the rest of the aid will come in loans from the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, since most other Western governments proved unwilling to follow Washington's direct commitment of money to the beleaguered Russian government.

The aid is meant to have symbolic as well as concrete value in support of Yeltsin, who is campaigning hard in advance of an April 25 referendum that could decide whether he or conservative rivals in the Russian parliament rule the country. The Russian leader is a proponent of market reforms, and the West views him as a prime partner in a wide range of foreign-policy issues, including faltering efforts to bring peace to Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, as he has done in recent days, predicted hard times for democracy and market reform

Clinton guides world leaders in organization

Los Angeles Times

TOKYO—President Clinton has decided to take on the job of leading the world's wealthy countries in organizing aid for Russia—but so far, he is having a hard time persuading others to follow.

True, the seven leading industrial nations of the so-called Group of Seven did close their two-day meeting here with the announcement of a $43.4 billion aid package for Russia.

But little of that was new money or outright gifts. Most of it consisted of debt rescheduling, loans and credit.

Taxing times

Anthony Wyatt of Carbondale signs one of the petitions The Peace Coalition of Southern Illinois had at its demonstration in front of the Carbondale Post Office to show the public where their tax dollars are going. The coalition demonstrates in front of the post office every year around tax filing deadline, and members pass out flyers and have petitions for the public to sign. Wyatt said he believes residents' tax dollars should stay in the United States and help solve problems in our own country.

Clinton furious about budget constraints

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—President Clinton, described as furious that budget constraints threaten to kill his long-term economic plan, is considering delaying or scaling back domestic spending initiatives for 1994 that form the heart of his economic agenda, senior administration officials said Thursday.

The new budget squeeze has prompted the administration to consider identifying elements of Clinton's cherished long-term "investment agenda."

It is willing to scale back or defer until future years, according to White House Budget Director Leon Panetta.

That agenda, which is much bigger than the president's controversial short-term stimulus plan, includes billions of dollars in education, job training, research and public works spending.

Many of those initiatives began in the 1994 budget Clinton released last week.

If they are curtailed, a number of Clinton's most important and visible domestic programs could become little more than small demonstration projects, at least for 1994.

Salukis to face pair of MVC opponents

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

With all the makings of a strong season already put into the works, the SIUC softball team will try to keep it going when it takes on a pair of Missouri Valley Conference opponents this weekend in Carbondale.

Playing with 20 wins already notched on their bats, the Salukis have the best pitching staff and hitter in the MVC to spring on visiting teams Tulsa and Southwest Missouri State.

The Salukis take on Tulsa today at 3 p.m. and SMSU on Saturday at noon, playing both teams in doubleheaders.

The Saluki pitching staff of senior Angie Mick, junior Tania Meier and freshman Kristie Spielman leads the MVC with a combined 1.02 ERA, while Karrie Irvin is one of the Salukis' sluggers, leading the MVC in batting average (.493) and triples (8).

Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said she doesn't want to look ahead, but rather take things game by game.

"As long as we keep playing hard, the record will take care of itself," she said.

The talent on this year's Saluki team has really shined at all the right moments, and the whole team has been involved, Brechtelsbauer said.

"Karrie (Irvin) has had a big bat from day one, but the middle of the lineup has also been a strong force," she said. "Then you look at players like Marua (Hasenstab), Jennie (Klotz) and Marlo (Pecararo) and see how they have contributed, and you find that from the top to the bottom of the lineup, everyone has come through for us."

The Saluki middle order of Colleen Holloway, Laurie Wilson, Irvin and Christine Knotts has all four hitters hitting .379 and accounting for 64 percent of the team's scoring.

Brechtelsbauer said all her hitters are ready to go when they head to the plate.

"Obviously we have gotten a lot of scoring from the middle of the lineup, but the bottom hitters have to be ready too, and they have driven in some key runs for us."

Tulsa will be the first team to try and stop the Salukis' winning ways. TU is in its first year of Division I softball, and is off to a dismal 1-26 start.

The Golden Hurricane's only win came against St. Louis University, and 16 of their losses have been shutouts.

TU's pitching staff has combined for a 5.22 ERA, as freshman Stacy Pinkerton has a team-best 4.33 ERA. Sophomore Krista

Men netters to take on Illinois State, Northern

By Kevin Bergquist

If the weather allows, the SIUC men's tennis team will play host to its final home matches of the season this weekend.

The Salukis will take on Illinois State Saturday at 11 a.m. at the University tennis courts. On Sunday, SIUC will welcome Northern Illinois for an 11 a.m. match.

"Both of them should be very good matches, and we hope to win these two this weekend," SIUC coach John Lefevre said. "It will give us a boost if we can win these two going into the conference tournament."

Another boost could come from the return of senior Jay Merchant. Merchant missed last week's losses to Wichita State and Southwest Missouri State. His absence caused SIUC to forfeit matches at No. 3 doubles, as well as the already vacant No. 6 spot. As a result, the Salukis went into both matches at an 0-2 disadvantage.

"His shot is bothering his shoulder, but he says he can play," Lefevre said of Merchant's possible return to the Saluki lineup.

"It's tough to win a match when you are already down 0-2."

After this weekend's action, the Salukis have one more match scheduled, a non-conference tilt with Murray State, before heading to the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament next weekend. Despite the team's 0-4 league mark, Lefevre believes his squad will be a team to contend with at the tourney.

"If everyone is well, we are probably second in the conference (behind Drake), but it haven't shown it yet," Lefevre said.

No. 22 men's track team to compete at Kansas

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

The nationally ranked Saluki men's track and field team will compete in the Kansas Relays this weekend in Lawrence, Kan. *

The Salukis achieved a No. 22 ranking this week by Collegiate Track Weekly by virtue of its fourth-place finish at the Hot Springs Invitational last weekend.

SIUC topped Big Ten indoor champion Ohio State and others in a field of some of the nation's top teams.

The Kansas Relays, a non-scored meet, will feature a field of over 50 teams.

Action began Thursday night with the hammer throw, and will continue through Saturday.

Johnathan Hirsh, who has been performing well of late in the javelin, will not be able to make the trip because of a strained knee.

"We hope to be healthy and ready to go this weekend, and we want to continue to improve so we are prepared for conference," SIUC coach Bill Cornell said.

"The competition will be awfully tough this weekend because there are usually 50 to 60 teams there, and a lot of the best teams in the Midwest will be there."

Cameron Wright and Brian Miller will attempt to qualify for the NCAAAs, while Torry King will attempt to improve on his conference-leading mark in the discus.

"We're just happy to be there competing and we'll hopefully see some improvement from our team members," said Cornell.

Saluki women's track to battle Big Ten powers

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

The Saluki women's track and field team will travel to Champaign this weekend to compete in the Illini Classic.

The meet will feature Big Ten powers Indiana, Purdue, host Illinois, ranked sixth in the nation, and Missouri Valley Conference foe Bradley.

"This will really be a quadrangular meet: ourselves, Illinois, Indiana and Purdue," SIUC coach Don DeNoon said.

"I think the key thing we'll be looking for is to knock Purdue and Indiana off and get close to Illinois."

April Cokely will return to competition this weekend, having recovered from an illness.

She will join forces with Cathy Kershaw and Nacolia Moore, who have been top performers in the last two weeks.

DeNoon said the Big Ten powers will not be as strong in the distance events, and SIUC's sprinting corps should be increasingly competitive with them.

"We're putting the strong people in the strong events for them this time around, and I don't see Illinois, Indiana, or Purdue really having a tremendous core of distance runners to compete against us," DeNoon said.

"This week we're going to a sprinter's meet, and at the same time, our sprinters are getting healthy and ready to go and they'll be really competitive as well."

Strong performances are anticipated from athletes Stephanie Smith, Shauraa Winfield, and Crystalla Constantinou in addition to Kershaw, Moore and Cokely.

Pair of SIUC sport events washed out

The rain that has pounded Carbondale the past week caused the postponement of two more SIUC sporting events scheduled for Thursday afternoon.

The Saluki baseball team was set to take on Southeast Missouri State. The game has been rescheduled for 3 p.m. today at Abe Marin Field.

The team will play host to Illinois State for a three-game set this weekend.

The SIUC women's tennis team was slated to face SIUC-Edwardsville. The match has been rescheduled for 3 p.m. Monday at the University tennis courts near the SIUC Arena.

SOUTHERN ECUADOR FLOOD WATERS RISE — More than 40,000 people in southern Ecuador were threatened by floodwaters as a natural dam looked set to break its banks, reports said Thursday. The 4.5 mile water backlog was expected to burst the dam Friday due to heavy rainfall.

MILWAUKEE WATER SAFE TO DRINK AGAIN — Milwaukee residents returned to drinking city tap water Thursday, while city officials contemplated the possibility of a secondary contamination. A group of students participate in the Body Walk exhibit as part of the World Health Day program. Children, grades K-3, entered through the mouth to learn about good health and nutrition at six different body sites at the Student Center Auditorium Thursday.

Fitness fair draws healthy turnout

By Karen Ham and Candace Samolinski

Despite the rain and cold, the turnout for the World Health Day celebration at the Student Center was consistent with expectations, said one coordinator for the event.

"After looking at the evaluations from those who participated, it appears we averaged about 81 people visiting each booth," Joyce Combes said. "The response we received was very positive. "Even though outside it was cold and wet, their spirits were high and dry," she said.

Campus organizations and members of the surrounding business community joined in the celebration by providing giveaways, educational materials and demonstrations.

The focus of the health fair was geared toward diversity with the main theme of "Injuries Hurt Us All."

"Over 3.5 million people die every year as the cause of accidents," Joe Baker, one of the coordinators of this year's fair, said.

"Accidents are the number one cause of death in children and young adults, so it's important that we teach them how to be safe."

Teaching children how the body works and how to keep it safe and healthy is an important part of the health education process, Baker said.

Teaching a balanced, healthy lifestyle to children early-on in life is the purpose for events like the health fair, he said.

The Health Fair, in its fourth year at the Student Center, is held in conjunction with World Health Day, Baker said.

SIUC adviser stresses importance of giving

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Patricia McNeil believes every student has potential to achieve, and in return for that opportunity should contribute back what they have gotten.

"It is what I stress," McNeil said. "Every student is a product of their alma mater and they should give something back to it."

McNeil received the Adviser of the Year award on April 3 at the Student Alumni Association/Student Foundation Network district meeting in Terre Haute, Ind.. She will receive a plaque for her service with the SIUC Student Alumni Council.

Joey Gunn, SAC president and senior in business administration from Peoria, said the council submitted her nomination by writing an extensive paper on McNeil's service and contribution to their lives.

"She has been a second mom to all of us who have family far away," Gunn said. "She is one of a kind. I could go on and on about her and how she has been so great. She is energetic and motivated."

McNeil has been with the Student Alumni Council and Alumni Association since 1986. She has a master's degree in rehabilitation administration from SIUC.

She worked on campus first as a secretary in the football office in 1973 and in the Student Development office, working with the Inter-Greek, Black and Hispanic councils before coming to the Alumni Association.

"I have enjoyed working with all students," McNeil said. "That is what I enjoy."

McNeil said she wanted to share her college experience with other students.

"I want to share with them what I experienced," McNeil said. "I want them to have as good of a time as I did."

McNeil is the fiscal and organizational adviser for SAC. She helps coordinate homecoming events, the extern program and other activities dealing with alumni involvement at SIUC. SAC is also involved with scholarship programs, community affairs and fundraising.

"We have to educate ourselves as well as alumni that we are in dire straits down here," McNeil said. "It is really wonderful getting to work with students."

McNeil attributes her success by being grateful to what she has and knowing what to do. She volunteers with senior citizens and community.

"Students have to realize they have a social responsibility," she said. "We have to reach to other people, cultures and history. If I could come back in another lifetime, I would learn to speak another language. We are too proficient in one language. We have to learn reach out."

Overall, McNeil said she was shocked about the award.

"I was just awarded prior to the meeting when the council members handed me the thick paper about me," she said.

Even USG president must obey fund rules

NOT MANY STUDENTS on campus have as much responsibility as the Undergraduate Student Government president.

After all, the student president is responsible for fairly and honestly distributing about $350,000 in student fee money each year to student organizations that request funding for activities and events.

It is one of USG's primary jobs to make sure each organization has a fair chance to get a portion of funding. A group must fill out the proper paperwork to request money, and then the senate finance committee decides if and how much to allocate.

Once the money is transferred to an organization, only duly appointed officers of the organization may remove it. This is to make sure that each fee dollar is accounted for.

THIS PAST FALL, HOWEVER, something went wrong with the process.

USG President Brad Cole, acting in his appointed role in place of the out-of-session USG finance committee, transferred $450 to the College Republicans' account.

Cole says he and a member of the club requested the money, as members of a registered student organization, to help offset costs for their trip to the Republican National Convention in Houston.

The current and past presidents of the College Republicans said at the time they did not know the money had been transferred into their account. They also debate if Cole, a past vice president of the club, was even a member last year.

Regardless of the truth or falsity of those accusations, the $450 was placed in the group's account as properly dispersed student activity fee funds.

UPON RETURNING FROM THE CONVENTION, Cole, who ended up traveling to Houston alone, signed out the funds from the account as travel reimbursement.

That is when an alleged violation occurred: According to the College Republicans' constitution, only the club's president or treasurer may sign out money from the account.

The only person who signed for the transfer of funds from the club's account was Cole. The officers and the faculty adviser say they were not aware of Cole's actions at the time.

Brian Ellis, the group's then-president who paid for his trip to the convention out of his own pocket, says he was not made aware of Cole's actions until after the fact.

But Cole says everything had been approved by the group, and that the matter was written off as routine — until some of his decisions as USG president prompted a political attack by the College Republicans.

HE HAS A POINT. After all, the matter was not brought to light until more than seven months later, and just one week before the student elections.

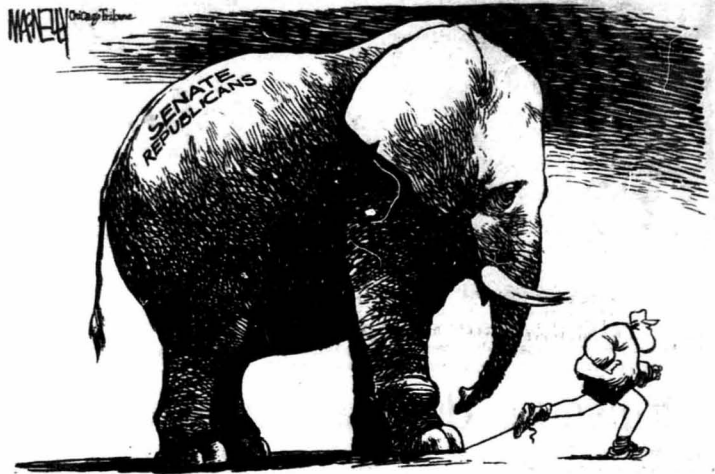

Cole says USG's decision to support student health insurance coverage on elected termination of pregnancy, along with his desire to set up a coalition with representatives from all minority groups on campus, were not in line with the club's goals.

The dissatisfaction with USG decisions caused the club to "turn on their own," he says.

BUT THE FACT REMAINS that he improperly signed out $450 of student fee money to pay for a trip. It is not all his fault because the Office of Student Development should have allowed the transaction to occur.

The USG president, however, should know the rules.

And as a powerful leader who is sworn to uphold and enforce proper procedure, Brad Cole should have followed the rules to the letter.

Letters to the Editor

Mass transit requires student voice

For some time now the issue of a bus system has been in the news. Personally I think that is great, and I like the publicity.

My major concern is what does everyone else think about having a bus system? Everyone I've talked to likes the idea, and feels that the $20 price tag is very reasonable because every time they (SIU students) use the bus it will be free.

Most of these people know me and want to see the bus system succeed. Of course there is my one friend Clay, he does not like the idea. Why? That is the question. Why do some students like the bus system and why do others not like it?

SIU students will have their chance to vote on the bus system the 21st of April, but let's get some feedback now. I know I think the bus is a good idea, and everyone else who has read the articles, or heard the media know how I feel about the bus, but what does everyone think? In 1988 the largest student survey ever at SIU showed that 85% of the students supported a $15 fee for the bus system. 93% said SIU needed a bus system. In 1986 and 1988 the transit referendums passed by a 3 to 1 margin. That was then, this is now!

Between now and the election on the 21st, the transit committee will be advertising the transit referendum. We want everyone to vote yes. The truth of the matter is that everyone won't think the $20 fee, or the bus system is such a grand idea. I know what I think, and the reader knows what I think, but what does everyone else think?

This is a challenge to all readers of this letter. If you are in favor, or against the $20 fee for the bus system, which includes unlimited free ridership with an id then let us know. Your letter to the DE will make an impact, your vote will make the difference. — Dave Madlener, trp.at@chairman

Notion of mental illness needs compassionate understanding

On Monday, April 5, there were several letters criticizing Marc Perry's letter of March 31, "Homosexuality a Mental Illness."

Although these were quality arguments against Perry's absurd theory of sexual preference, there is another issue that needs to be addressed.

For some reason we are very cautious about the way we refer to most illnesses and disabilities in everyday discourse, but this is not so in regard to mental illness.

A person suffering from mental illness must battle the symptoms of their particular condition and the widespread misunderstanding of other people. Perry's letter is an example of the way those suffering from mental illness are treated as sub-human, in much the same way as other minority groups. I would like to now list some corrections of the erroneous letter.

The mentally ill are a minority group, and the Alliance for the Mentally Ill, a national organization, works to secure the rights of these people. Employers do not have the right to deny someone employment because they are mentally ill. Doing so would be discrimination. There are no laws preventing people with mental illnesses from voting, depressives is extremely unjust.

Perry's association suggests we should fear someone suffering from a mental illness. Many people misunderstand mental illness and refer to it wrongly. I would hesitate using Perry as an example if it were not his blatant disinterest in accuracy.

It is nice that we all have a right to express our opinions in print, but I wish people would consider who they may be hurting in the process. It pains me to think of all the people suffering from mental illness who came across Perry's letter, and I wonder why compassion is such a difficult concept to embrace. — Craig Strimel, graduate student, speech communication

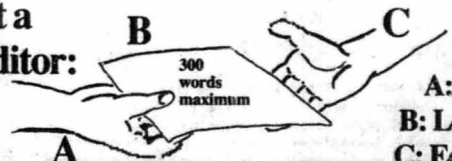

Anti-gay letters waste of space

As soon as I read the infamous "Mr. Perry commentary" on March 31, we said, "Watch! There's going to be a deluge of contradicting commentaries!"

We guessed right. First of all, I suggest to Mr. Perry that you work alongside Mr. Striegel and start a club for yourselves. Second, anti-homosexual letters won't change the views of homosexuals and their supporters and vice-versa.

Instead, save commentary space for questions like where are the 160+ vehicles for the guests and staff of the new campus hotel going to park or where exactly "next to the Student Center" will it be located? — Terrence M. Lawlor, senior, aviation management / Kimberly S. Kolosh, senior, paralegal studies historical allies the luxury of seeing their national interests differently. When Moscow was a threat, all shared the American goal of deterring Soviet aggression. Now that the threat is gone, consensus is much more difficult to achieve across a broad range of issues.

The just-concluded conference here of G-7 foreign and finance ministers was a case in point. Two weeks ago, at his Vancouver summit with Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin, Clinton publicly urged the other G-7 members—Japan, Germany, France, Italy, Britain and Canada—to join the United States in pledging substantial new direct aid to Russia, especially in the short time before an April 25 referendum that may decide the fate of Yeltsin's presidency.

Japan, Britain and Canada responded. But Germany's finance minister, Theo Waigel, said his country had already given enough: "Our national interest does not permit us to do more," he said.

His implication was clear: To yield to U.S. entreaties would be to betray Germany.

Other issues turn up a similar pattern:

For instance, the United States has been pressing Japan for months to adopt an economic stimulus package to heat up Japan's recession-dulled economy.

Not coincidentally, such an economic plan would also stimulate Japanese purchases.

1993 to 1994." Keim said colleges will not see an upturn in high school graduates until the spring of 1997. According to Keim, the decline in high school graduate population can be attributed to the low birth rate two decades ago.

Keim said the second reason is that more students are attending community colleges this year.

"We are sensing nationwide that larger numbers of high school graduates are going to community colleges," Keim said. "We are not sure why this is, but to speculate, it could be a number of reasons including the cost of a college education and the distance between their town and SIUC."

Keim said another factor that could have played a role in a decreased student admissions population is a new mandate by the Illinois Board of Higher Education and the state legislature that college applicants are required to have more high school course units.

But it will not be until the fall semester that SIUC will know for sure what the reasons are behind the decline in new student admissions.

"We'll have to wait until some of the smoke clears this fall before we know," Keim said.

The College of Business and Administration, which experienced the biggest percentage decrease, is developing two strategies to attract more students, said Marcia Cornett, associate dean of the college.

"We have formed a concentrated effort for recruiting new students," Cornett said. "COBA LINKS is formed of 10 students selected on the basis of high academic performance. These students go to different high schools all over the area to try and get the word out about SIUC."

A second objective that COBA is reviewing the possibility of lowering the cumulative 2.5 GPA required of graduating high school graduates to enter the college.

Ike Mathur, dean of the College of Business and Administration, said the decline in admissions is not limited to their college but is a trend throughout SIUC as well as the state of Illinois.

"Our decline is in line with the rest of the University," Mathur said. "The trend is also statewide and maybe regional, having nothing to do with this college, which is only consistent with the trend."

Elaine Viello, dean of the College of Technical Careers, which had the second largest decrease, said the decline of new students in her college lies mainly in the flight program.

"Our flight program will be full next semester, but we've had fewer inquiries," Viello said. "You have to look at the industry in terms of flights, it's up sometimes and down other times."

Will Travelstead, assistant dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts, said one way the college is trying to increase admissions is by enrolling a greater percentage of new students admitted.

"Each unit sends out their own letters to students inviting them to take advantage of registration programs," Travelstead said.

Cornett said even though COBA admissions are down for the fall semester, the future still looks good.

"If you're looking at projections of three or four years from now it's likely to go up," Cornett said.

School of Social Work, said some credit naturally belongs to the work of the faculty, but increasing recognition of the field also helps.

"Over the years the role of social work as a profession has been increasingly recognized," Davidson said. "These days students are interested in entering a profession that can not only contribute to society, but where they can join the ranks of a worldwide profession."

Elkins said an increase in health awareness also has played a role in the growth of administration to the College of Agriculture.

"People are watching nutrition these days more than five or 10 years ago," Elkins said.

Elkins said recruitment has worked hard, all the way from the dean's office to ambassadors, specialized student recruiters.

Robert Arthur, chairman of animal science/food and nutrition, said more job opportunities in equine science and the veterinary field are attracting more students.

"For the past six years our equine science program has been the only one in the state of Illinois," Arthur said. "Now that the word is out that we have this program, SIUC is developing a reputation."

Because of an interest in health, Arthur said dietetics also is becoming a popular field of study.

"The general population is becoming more educated about the food they eat," Arthur said. "What they read in magazines, see on television and hear on the radio, has really sparked the interest of students."

in Russia if Yeltsin loses and the conservatives take power. "It will be a bleaker picture" in Russia, he said.

Said a closing communique from the meeting of the United States, Britain, France, Germany, Japan, Italy and Canada: "Russian reform and progress toward democratization are essential to world peace."

We assure the Russian people of our support in coping with the inevitable hardships of the transition period."

A victorious Yeltsin would be able to get the country's turbulent economy under control and use the new aid effectively, a senior U.S. official said.

A $24 billion aid package approved by the Group of Seven last year was only partially disbursed because of the Yeltsin government's inability to carry out such measures in the face of strong opposition.

The first steps Yeltsin must take, the U.S. official said, would be curtailing easy credits to inefficient state industries and halting the inflationary printing of money.

An inconclusive or negative result in the referendum, on the other hand, would be disastrous for the aid program, the senior official concluded.

"Everything starts to unravel and the aid package will go nowhere," he said.

While the aid is not formally linked to the referendum, a Yeltsin defeat could prompt reconsideration of the package by the industrialized nations.

Furthermore, if Yeltsin's conservative foes take power, it would be unlikely they would carry out the needed economic steps such as controlling domestic credit.

WSIU to seek listeners' help during fund-raising program

By Tina Davis
General Assignment Writer

Fund raising is becoming increasingly important for public broadcasting because federal support is remaining the same while the number of radio stations across the country continues to grow, said the station manager for WSIU/WUSI-FM.

A week long fund-raiser for SIUC's public radio stations will begin Saturday in an effort to raise $15,000 to cover programming increases at WSIU/WUSI-FM.

Tom Godell, station manager, said the support from listeners is going down and the cost of doing business is going up.

"This year we're going to get a $100,000 bill for news programming for national public radio, which is nearly a 50 percent increase over the last six years," Godell said.

Leshare Edwards, assistant to corporate support, said a lot of people do not realize the importance of providing in-depth news.

"We are trying to raise money for the programs aired such as 'Morning Edition,' 'All Things Cons' Jered,' and 'Market Place,' (early morning, afternoon news and a business magazine)," Edwards said.

Godell said membership to the station is a minimum of $30, but listeners can donate less.

"We plan to hold the drive while sticking to our regular programming schedule," Godell said.

"There will be a lot of staff members on the air and some humorous skits as well as national celebrities pre-recorded on tape such as Bob Edwards and Noah Adams from National Public Radio in Washington D.C."

The drive will broadcast April 17 to the 24th. Supporters may call in pledges from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. at 453-9784.

Members who give $30 will receive a year's subscription to "Previews," a monthly program guide to SIUC's public radio and TV broadcasts.

Violent South African strike erupts after leader's death

Zapnews

South African President Frederik de Klerk said Wednesday a bloody one-day general strike called to mourn the slaying of Communist Party general secretary Chris Hani was "a dark day" in the history of the country.

Speaking on state-run television, de Klerk announced a beefing up of security forces and other measures to prevent "the country from falling into the hands of the radicals."

At least four people were killed as violence marred the one-day general strike, the largest mass campaign in the history of the country, the television said. Hundreds of people were injured in several cities as police using teargas and rubber bullets to move in to stop looting and arson attacks.

Over 1.5 million people took to the streets in 84 ceremonies throughout the country to mourn Hani's murder last Sunday, Cyril Ramaphosa, general-secretary of the African National Congress (ANC).

The worst violence occurred in the black township of Soweto near Johannesburg where police shot dead at least three people, including regional ANC leader Sam Tambane, 35, and injured more than 150 others.

Ceremony to recognize, reward AFROTC cadets' achievements

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
General Assignment Writer

Cadets in the Air Force ROTC program will be recognized this evening for outstanding achievements in three different fields.

Alan Closson, captain and faculty in the AFROTC program, said the awards are a way to motivate cadets to perform at their highest capacity.

"It gives them an incentive to do better in school rather than just squeaking by with a low GPA," Closson said.

The evening will begin with a dinner at 7 p.m. and the awards ceremony at 7:45 p.m. in Ballroom D of the Student Center.

Awards recognizing academic achievement, leadership and warrior spirit will be handed out.

"Warrior spirit means a strong interest in the Air Force and outstanding physical fitness performance," Closson said. Edward Schneider, an AFROTC cadet and senior in criminal justice from Dubois, Ind., said the awards come from several benefactors.

"Warrior spirit means a strong interest in the Air Force and outstanding physical fitness performance."

—Alan Closson

"It is a mixture of recognition with awards from the Air Force, awards from within Air Force ROTC and the community in general," he said. "These awards are not only good for morale, but they represent a good influence for the well rounded person."

The guest speaker for the evening will be David M. Randerson, a U.S. Air Force Col.

and 1970 SIUC graduate in political science.

Closson said the AFROTC guest speaker is usually a member of their Hall of Fame.

"We usually choose someone who has risen towards the top of the Air Force and has helped our program in some way," Closson said. "We really wanted to bring him back."

The awards include:

- American Legion Auxiliary Air Force ROTC Awards
- Arnold Air Force Society Honors Award of $100,
- Illinois ROTC Tuition Waivers,
- the President John C. Guyon Scholarship,
- the Vice President's Scholarship For Student Affairs,
- the Bank of Carbondale GMC Service Award,
- the E.T. Simonds Award,
- the Order of the Daedalians Scholarship,
- and the Hall of Fame Award.

Federal pay hikes stagnant

The Washington Post

Predicting future federal pay raises is more than an academic exercise in Washington, D.C., where 430,000 federal and military personnel are on the government payroll.

According to administration estimates, government personnel will get no pay raise next year, a 2 percent adjustment in 1995, 1.7 percent in 1996, 1.6 percent in 1997 and 2.3 percent in 1998.

That assumes Congress goes along with the 1994 pay freeze and also approves President Clinton's plan to trim future raises that were designed to close the federal-private sector pay gap.

McCartney gives audience feeling of intimacy in latest stadium tour

Los Angeles Times

Paul McCartney's "New World Tour" lacks the drama of his triumphant 1989-90 shows, during which the former Beatle returned from a 13-year concert absence to reclaim his place in contemporary rock music.

Yet the new tour compensates with its intimacy.

"Intimacy" may be an odd word to use in describing stadium rock, but McCartney's performance before an estimated 30,000 enthusiastic fans Wednesday night at the Sam Boyd Silver Bowl was a warm, inviting affair.

The personal feeling was due in part to both the design of the show — especially a four-song acoustic sequence — and McCartney's generally playful, appealing manner.

Much like Keith Richards at the Universal Amphitheatre recently, McCartney came across as a masterful rock force delighted to be back on stage — and it was endearing to watch him having fun.

"Viva Las Vegas," McCartney yelled into the microphone early in the 2-hour set, referring to a popular movie starring his first musical hero, Elvis Presley.

Later, he toasted Presley again by opening the "Unplugged"-like acoustic segment with an accordion-spiked version of "Good Rockin' Tonight," one of the late rock star's earliest recordings.

Also like Richards, McCartney refuses to be intimidated by his legendary status in contemporary pop.

McCartney's 1989-90 tour, his first in 13 years, was such an overwhelming success that he easily could have given us largely a spring-summer rerun, especially since he is playing several different cities this time.

Instead, he shows respect for his audience by designing an almost totally new package, including almost two dozen songs that were not done on the last tour. They included such Beatles hits as "Lady Madonna" and "Penny Lane."

McCartney and the band — the same unit as the last trip except for the addition of drummer Blair Cunningham — also did not simply rest with the familiar arrangements. The sound and lighting, too, were state-of-the-art.

Not everything about the show worked. The pacing was rough in spots, the material from the new "Off the Ground" album is not nearly as strong as the "Flowers in the Dirt" music showcased on the last tour, and the vocals were wobbly in places.

A representative from the SIUC Recreation Center said he was trying to make students more aware of the types of services the center made available. The recreation center presented a demonstration of massage therapy.

"We have many different services including instructional programs, youth and intramural activities," Tony Daniels, a graduate student in recreation, said. "In addition, we offer a multi-sport court and outdoor adventure activities."

This year's fair offered a variety of topics including nutrition, ground water safety, CPR and epilepsy.

"I believe all the groups were represented and that was something we were working for," Combes said.

To hold the interest of children, many familiar faces were around to teach them health facts: Sesame Streets' Big Bird taught children earthquake preparedness; the Crash Test Dummies, Vince and Larry, taught the important use of seatbelts; and Louie the Lightbulb taught electrical safety.

One special attraction for the children was the Bodywalk. The walk explained how the body works by having participants walk through units of the body.

Jennifer Ring, a senior in Dental Hygiene, said the mouth section of the walk taught children the importance of dental care.

"We showed the kids the proper way to brush and floss, how to keep from getting cavities, what good snacks to eat and what bad snacks to avoid," Ring said.

Karen Youngberg, a mother from Carruthers School in Murphysboro, said the Bodywalk was a good experience for the children.

"The brain was the best," Youngberg said. "The speaker was good and answered all of the kids' questions very well."

The kids also had their own favorites.

"I like the heart," said Blake Canning, a first grader at Carruthers.

At the heart unit, the children were given the opportunity to listen to their own heart through a stethoscope.

Demonstrations were an important aspect of the fair, especially to keep the children interested, said Cindy Sims, a nursing student from McKendree College in Lebanon.

Sims' booth taught children the importance of washing their hands before and after eating by showing them microscope slides of common germs carried on the hands.

Another exhibit that sparked the children's interest was the display presented by CIPS. The presentation explained the hazards of playing near electrical powerlines and demonstrated danger with the help of electrically charged lines. The lines would zap and spark when touched with a metal wand, Vince Davidson, a customer service representative with CIPS said.

"The kids love the sparks," Davidson said. "This is a very informative tool that kids will understand."

Another attraction was sponsored by International Programs and Services. The International Agriculture booth featured products from all over the world.

"We want to expose people to foods from around the world," Victor Njii, a graduate student in plants and soil sciences, said. "Many of these foods you can buy in the local grocery stores, but some people are afraid to try them."

Bob Illis, a graduate student in agricultural mechanization, agreed and said if people knew how to prepare many of these foods they would buy them.

The SIUC AIDS task force was on hand to make educational information available to students regarding protection and prevention.

"We are here to try and educate people on how to be more aware," said Steve Edfors from the Wellness Center.

National museum to offer reprise of early artists' work

The Washington Post

As we approach the close of the American Century, the Smithsonian is offering an enthralling reprise of how America's artists helped signal the opening of our era of world-shaking influence and affluence.

Nothing could be simpler, than the method used by the curators of this joint exhibition by the National Museum of American Art and the National Portrait Gallery: cocurators Carolyn Carr and George Gurney chose 100 of the 1,184 paintings and sculptures that were exhibited at the 1893 World Columbian Exposition in Chicago.

Submissions for the original show were by invitations extended only to the leading American artists of the time; and it was so severely juried that fewer than one in seven of the submissions was accepted. Since but one in eight of those hangs in the current show, it can fairly be said to represent the best and the brightest of our art of the era.

SIUC graduate student heals pain of losing mother by creating film

By Thomas Gibson
Minorities Writer

Feminist filmmaker and photographer Jennifer Johns heals the pain of losing her mother to breast cancer with her art.

Johns, a graduate student at SIUC in Cinema and Photography, made her mother's five-year battle the topic of her master thesis film, "Beneath the Surface."

Johns' film will be shown at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Student Center Auditorium.

"My mother's experience was so horrible. I wanted to take it and make it positive somehow," she said.

Some things have improved since then, like the treatment options, Johns said.

"My mother had a radical mastectomy and today they have lumpectomies, but the appalling thing is the rate of occurrence," she said.

"I realized that what happened to my mother was what was important to me," she said.

She said her films talk about what it feels like to have this disease — something doctors should hear.

Johns said she worked on the film for two years. She said she started out wanting to do a traditional documentary on breast cancer.

"You can not convey a political message in a traditional film," Johns said. "I got into films (not only as a means of personal artistic expression, but also because I was frustrated with what I saw coming out of Hollywood, especially its portrayal of women and the lesbian and gay community."

"It's nice to give people an alternative to the mainstream," she said. "The films I do have an interest to women, so most of my films have a feminist edge to them.

"The more I got into making the film, the more emotional it became," she added.

Johns said she has no inclination to work in the mainstream film industry.

"Hollywood would not allow me to do the films I want," she said.

The SIUC cinema and photography department is very open to what one wants to do, she said.

SIUC's C and P program is a strong institution, and it also allows the filmmaker to move in his or her own direction creatively, she said.

Johns said her inspiration is British director Sally Potter because she works outside the system.

"Her ideas are complex yet you can still understand what she is saying," Johns said.

Johns said her goal is to always work in the field of visual representation. Teaching film is a viable tool, she said.

"I'm interested in teaching because there are not many women in the field," she said.

Volunteers learn from experience

Louis Renner, Peace Corp coordinator, said his organization helps countries in Africa help themselves.

The College of Agriculture hosted the event, which discussed the Peace Corp presence in Africa, for African Awareness Week.

The Kennedy administration started the Peace Corp in the early 1960s.

When Peace Corp got underway, there were thousands of students who wanted to participate in the program, Renner said.

He said volunteers are invited because of special skills or advanced degrees.

Renner said his ministry was stationed in Swaziland near South Africa.

"The volunteers are accepted into the community as they were a lost son who returned home," he said.

Renner said volunteers become members of the communities where they are stationed.

But, the volunteers know when they are overstepping their boundaries, and they do not interfere with domestic disputes, he said.

"Social sensitivity and cultural awareness are an importance."

—Louis Renner

Tom Bik, a graduate student in geography who served two years in Peace Corp, said the people in the villages made him feel at home. Bik was assigned a guide to insure that he would not get into any trouble.

He said he does not think that Americans are as willing to open up their homes to visitors.

"I bet there are not many foreign students who can say that they have been into an American home," he added.

"It is a shame that we do not make the foreign students feel as welcome here as I was in Africa," he continued.

Renner said Peace Corp work lasts two years in the country.

Most of the people who join the Peace Corp do not come back the same way they left the country.

Bik said Africa changed his perspective on his life goals.

Bik's ministry was stationed in Sierra Leone in West Africa.

The Corp is not a foreign policy, Renner said.

"Social sensitivity and cultural awareness are an importance," Renner said.

"This dimension measures the willingness and the potential ability to observe, accept and cope with others' ideas, behaviors and customs," he added.

Renner said the ultimate goal is to understand the problems and experiences of other people, and to communicate a genuine respect and true caring for others.

"We'll be getting them about the same time the video stores will," he said.

Ellsworth said he feels the movie channel will not only be an excellent form of entertainment, but will save students money as well.

The introduction of "Saluki Cinema" this year could be an indicator of things to come in terms of future programming at SPC-TV, and Ellsworth said he hopes the student reception is good.

"I personally would like to see these films become part of our regular programming next year," he said. "If the students like what they see, I'd like to tell them to see their R.A. and their floor representative and voice their support for the program."

However, Ellsworth said the channel is by no means definite, and without active student support, "Saluki Cinema" would have no chance of going through next year.

Regarding the cost to students for the added services, Ellsworth said the cost would boil down to about $1 a month, or $9 for the entire school year.

He said University Housing currently has two unused channels that could possibly be used for added features next year, and offer expanded viewing services similar to "Saluki Cinema."

"It (Saluki Cinema) is a sign that SPC is continuing to grow as a diverse programming channel that will appeal to every student," he said.

Play looks at mind of deranged

By Christian Kennerly
Entertainment Writer

A series of bizarre and mysterious murders occurred in Britain during the 1920s and '30s, and playwright Emlyn Williams wanted to answer the question: "Why does someone commit a murder?"

Williams' interest in the sociological aspects of the human psyche, coupled with a particular curiosity with killers led him to create the psychological thriller "Night Must Fall," which premieres tonight at The Stage Co.

A common thread between all of the British murders was the killers were all "normal" types who interacted with others successfully and appeared to be ordinary, everyday people.

"Night Must Fall" deals with this type of man, Dan, who becomes part of the Bramsun household by charming old Mrs. Bramsun with an onslaught of sympathy and praise.

Dan arrives on the scene, and soon after a murder investigation begins after a headless girl is found in a nearby rubbish pit.

The story of the play is based on taking a look inside the deranged mind of Dan and how he is able to mask his true identity from those around him.

Director Elizabeth Lehr, said when she read the play initially, she saw it as a fairly straightforward story, but her views changed as she got deeper into the plot.

"It is a complicated play," she said.

"The characters are very complex. Dan is

Local band translates feelings into powerful blues music

Gravediggers move listeners with soulful blues, strong rhythm

By Andy Graham
Entertainment Writer

The blues are a feeling that cannot be taught in a music school; they are translated emotions.

The Gravediggers, a Carbondale-based blues band, successfully incorporate their feelings into music that moves the listener.

"I think that we capture the blues, and that's why we are the band that we are," guitarist Dibi said. "You get kind of limited sometimes, but it's all in the feeling."

The Gravediggers' lineup of guitarist Joe Fee, bassist Dibi and drummer Taz has been constant for one year of the band's three-year history.

Dibi, the last to join the current version of The Gravediggers, witnessed tension amongst the band when he saw it play at a party for the first time, he said.

"I saw them at a party, and I saw a couple of people arguing and I thought, 'well, they're not getting along, maybe I could jump in with these guys,'" Dibi said. "I was hurtin' to play the blues, you know. I was good friends with Mortimer, though, so I wouldn't want to tell them to get rid of him. As fate had it, I guess they gave me a ring later."

Taz is a veteran of many local bands that primarily would get together and jam or play parties. His most successful band, the legendary punk band, Diet Christ is his most notable affiliation, he said.

"We would say 'hey, lets get together and jam, we'll call ourselves this, we'll play this party, we'll play the same song five times in a row,' stuff like that," Taz said. "I was in Diet Christ for three years most notably, but we stopped playing in 1989. I kind of just needed a change."

The Gravediggers' style of music is very different from punk.

The trio's sound is pure blues with a strong rhythm section that forms a foundation for Fee's crying guitar.

The rhythm section of Dibi and Taz strongly have been influenced by jazz. Taz played drums in his high school jazz band and always has been impressed by jazz drummers.

"Everyone that I always thought was untouchable were the jazz drummers, cause they would fly, and bass players were always right there," he said.

The Gravediggers is not just a college project that will fizzle out once its members, who are all SIUC students, graduate. Even though its primary reason for playing is fun, the Gravediggers would like to see some success, Taz said.

"It's for fun, but it's what it makes it-elf out to be," he said. "There's months when we work constantly, and it feels like it's really workin' out good. We could be making half way decent money doing it and have a blast, other times it's a total pain in the butt."

Dibi said his only goal for the Members of the blues band Gravedigger are guitarist Joe Fee, bassist Dibi and drummer Taz. The Gravediggers, who have a live tape out, play around Carbondale about three times a month.

Gravediggers is to play good music. Success and money do not mean much if the band does not play well, he said.

"Our goal is to play good music, to play our best all the time," Dibi said. "We try to play the best that we can play as a band, the best that three people can play together."

The Gravediggers made a live tape last summer of a show at Booby's bar. The 14-song tape recorded by Sound Core has been for sale at various stores in town and has sold fairly well, Taz said.

"People like it from what I have heard," he said. "We were using them for getting work in town and make back some money."

The Gravediggers play out about three or four times a month at bars like the Pinch Penny Pub, Tres Hombres, PKs and Boobies. The audiences at these bars suit the Gravediggers' style of mature music, Taz said.

"We are pretty much a reflection of the crowd that comes to see us," Taz said. "Compared to a lot of other bands in town, we're probably considered to be pretty tame about what we do. Some of the rowdiest shows I have ever been to were the ones that we were playing at."

The Gravediggers' next outing will be at Sidetracks bar on Saturday afternoon, where it will play a fund raiser for the Public Relations Student Society of America

Local play to open with intriguing plot, skillful performers

By Christian Kennerly
Entertainment Writer

"Night Must Fall," opening this Friday at The Stage Co., is a work that intrigues by presenting the profile of a murderer, and eventually showing the man behind the mask.

Dan enters the scene as an instantly personable guy, who is welcomed into the Bramsun household by everyone, save for Olivia, who recognizes Dan's actions as having underlying motivation. After a beheaded girl is found, Olivia's suspicions grow and Dan begins fading in and out of his normally composed self. As the plot thickens and the walls close in on Dan, we are given a glimpse of the real person behind all of his chameleon-like demeanor.

Dan, played by Kirk Hawkins, enters onto the stage with the same effortless movements that he enters the Bramsun house. He comes off as a likable guy, but Hawkins plays his role with an unsettling edge, and is interesting to watch as he puts on a different face for everyone.

As the play progresses, Hawkins takes Dan through a series of changes that show his loss of control. Dan's momentary lapses in character, particularly with Olivia, give clear signs that the walls are crumbling around him. Hawkins knows the role and impresses with his ability to pull himself back together when he needs to.

The cast of "Night Must Fall" is first rate. Although the dominant feel of the work is of doom and derangement, supporting roles such

Associated Artists Gallery combines creations of locals, nationally known

By William Rogan
Entertainment Editor

More than a decade ago, the Associated Artists Gallery was a faint glimmer in the minds of a handful of local artists.

Each wanted to establish Southern Illinois' first visual arts gallery but lacked the patience and the funds to undertake the task individually.

But 10 years later, through the hard work and dedication of its charter members, the gallery flourishes at 213 S. Illinois Ave. and continues to provide an example of the way the arts community can thrive through cooperation.

The idea for the gallery began when Kathy Sanjabi, a Carbondale resident and artist, looked for studio space in town.

She soon realized that securing a studio was a task too big for her to handle, so she recruited 12 local artists to help with finances and labor.

"It was easy for her to get a bunch of us together," recalled charter member Lois Lembecke. "We went in there and pounded nails and cleaned and painted. That's how it started. We did a lot of hard work."

After the physical labor was over and the Associated Artists Gallery was ready to open in April of 1983, the mental work began as the charter members decided on a format for the gallery.

The consensus decision was that members should dictate what would be included in shows, and each have a chance to display their work on a rotating schedule.

"We knew that displaying art was going to be helpful to artists," Sanjabi said. "We also felt the need to have a peer group, a place to get together to discuss mutual issues."

As talk circulated around Carbondale about the newly-opened gallery, membership swelled.

Soon the Associated Artists Gallery became a mini-incubator for overlooked art talent in Southern Illinois, said charter member Dick Lawson.

"We have artists all the way from Mt. Vernon to Cobden and Murphysboro," he said. "We're covering a pretty good size area and we structured ourselves in such a way that we could keep (the gallery) in the black and keep functioning."

The gallery continued to expand, adding a gift shop and leasing space to a local business, Choice Books. The gallery received its funds through membership dues, concession fees and Illinois Arts Council grants.

However, recent financial developments, including the payment of back taxes and the imminent moving of Choice Books, cast some doubt on the future of the gallery.

However, the current 28 members of the gallery pulled together to insure that it would survive. Now, the artists' only dilemma is trying to reserve space for exhibits, which are planned as far ahead as 1994.

Not only does the Associated Artists Gallery display work by its members, but it brings nationally-renowned artists to Southern Illinois through the exhibit.

Fine arts exhibits and outreach programs also help the visual arts in Southern Illinois, and keep the gallery's ties to the community, and to each other, strong and healthy.

"It's always a joy to meet the people who become members," Sanjabi said. "We've all benefited from being exposed to the way other people work in addition to their points of view and ideas."

The works of 11 charter members of the Association Artists Gallery will be on display through May 1.

The exhibit features a variety of works, including fibers, photography, painting, ceramics and metals.

The Associated Artists Gallery is open from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

as family friend Mrs. Terrence (Barbara Farris) keep the play moving.

Farris makes a worthwhile contribution by expertly delivering well placed jabs, and keeps Mrs. Bramsun from getting too far out of line.

Another appearance of note comes from Scotland Yard Inspector Belsize (Bob Lehr), who gives a credible portrayal of the ever-suspicious sleuth.

Olivia, played by Laura Murphy, provides the one person who questions Dan's demeanor.

Whenever the room becomes too overwhelmed with Dan's goodness, it is Murphy who provides the much needed reality check.

Mrs. Bramsun (Joan Vaughan) is a bit overwhelming initially, but is the desired effect. She steam-rolls Dan and the other characters with a barrage of complaints, orders and insults.

The characters and the well-timed stage direction of Lehr combine to create a suspenseful play.

Williams created a work that takes an intense look at a man trapped inside himself, but also is moving and amusing. And, The Stage Company gives an interesting and unsettling performance.

Grenadine blasts big band style

Romantic lyrics, jazzy percussion challenge pop music sound

RECORD REVIEW

By Andy Graham
Entertainment Writer

An album of strikingly elegant compositions, "Goya" by Grenadine, is a peaceful and enjoyable ensemble of original music.

The brainchild of Mark Robinson and Jenny Toomey, members of relevant indie pop bands Urtest and Tsunami, Grenadine flows swiftly from song to song in a way that has never been captured on a recording before.

Grenadine is a slow, anti-grunge project of romantic proportions. Lots of treble, even in the bass end, brushed jazz percussion stylings and romantic lyrics reminiscent of 40s big band ballads take the listener to a smoky dreamworld of ardors and red velvet tuxedos.

Toomey is able to take her voice to two different dimensions of mysterious sexuality. Beginning in whisper tone, changing dark lyrics with emotive intensity, Toomey builds up into a climactic vocal release after covering the whole spectrum of dynamic capabilities.

"Goya" is the bass dominated instrumental that begins the album, an up-keep, and at times quirky one that sets the mood for a sensitive listening experience.

Members of the pop trio Grenadine promote their latest album "Goya."

The best track on the album, "Demarest," features Robinson singing about a town in New Jersey, coincidentally (or not so) where the album was produced.

"Demarest" has a surprising kick in the rapid fire chord strumming and an opening of off-beat drumming. Although the credits in the liner notes claim false composers, like Vernon Duke, Cole Porter and Frank Sinatra, one of the true covers on "Goya," "I Only Have Eyes For You," goes to a far off place where the band wore blue tuxedos and sat on risers behind the singer. "Goya" is an album that has the potential to change the sound of pop music and the face of pop culture forever.

a classic serial killer type with absolutely no guilt," she said. Lehr said the play's author looked inward to develop a character who was capable of murder, but able to hide his feelings at the same time.

"(Williams) wrote the play and the character Dan with himself in mind," she said.

From the onset of the play the audience knows that the murderer will hang for his crimes. Given this knowledge, the audience is free to take a hard look inside the killer's mind and determine what kind of man could commit such acts.

"It is an unfolding of what makes this guy tick," she said.

Lehr said her goal was to present the audience with every facet of Williams' writing in the play.

"The challenge was trying to create an atmosphere of suspense and tension while at the same time trying to enjoy the humor of the play," he said.

Kirk Hawkins, who plays the murderer Dan, describes his role very simply.

"This guy is nuts," Hawkins said. "Everything he does throughout the play is calculated. He has an ulterior motive for everything he does."

Hawkins said the character of Dan was a two-fold challenge due to the dual persona of the murderer vs. the personable man. He said not only was he an actor portraying a character, but the character Dan was acting for those around him as well.

It is Dan's ability to manipulate people, according to Hawkins, that makes him so dangerous.

"The play is about the way he affects everyone he comes in contact with. He exploits their weaknesses," he said. "He can see the weakness and mine it for all it's worth."

"Night Must Fall" opens Friday with an 8 p.m. curtain. Performances follow on Saturday at 8 p.m. and a Sunday matinee at 2. Show times and performances are the same for the weekends of the 23-25 and April 30-May 2. Tickets for evening shows and matinees are $7 and $5, and are available at 549-5466.

SPC-TV presents premiere channel for cable viewers

By Christian Kennerly
Entertainment Writer

It's Friday night and instead of a night on the strip, you decide to kick back and take it easy in your room.

The problem is, there is usually nothing worth watching on TV, and chances are anything worth renting at the video store was gone hours ago.

In response to the lack of new and different programming, SPC-TV has come up with it's own response to the multitude of movie channels.

"Saluki Cinema" is a premium movie channel featuring films that are between 6 and 12 months newer than anything other channels, HBO, Cinemax, or Showtime, can offer.

Monday the 12th marked the beginning SPC-TV and University Housing's free preview of 20 different feature films that run on a rotating schedule with five films a day. The first group of films, running through Sunday 18th, feature titles including "Under Siege," "Beauty and the Beast," "South Central" and "Death Becomes Her."

The second wave of films begins Monday 19th with movies such as "The Cutting Edge," "Sneakers," "Henry and June," "Thelma and Louise" and "Sister Act."

Carl Ellsworth, SPC-TV hairperson for the 93-'94 school year, said the idea for a school sponsored movie channel came from looking at what other campuses were offering.

"We were told that a lot of other schools are trying these types of programs and we thought it would further enhance SPC's programming," he said.

Ellsworth said "Saluki Cinema" could be competitive in terms of movie titles.

Clinton, Japanese leader to talk trade

The Washington Post

TOKYO—No matter what President Clinton and Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa announce after their White House meeting today, one central question will loom: What are the Japanese doing to bring down their stubborn trade surplus with the United States?

Miyazawa will tell Clinton that Japan is better to bring its trade into letting better balance by implementing a record government spending package intended to boost the Japanese economy, according to Japanese officials.

And, the officials said, he will indicate that Japan is willing to allow the yen to rise, making foreign goods cheaper and more attractive relative to Japanese goods.

The yen has already surged close to an all-time high against the U.S. dollar in recent days.

The idea is to increase Japan's appetite for foreign goods and, ultimately, reduce its trade surplus rather than busting markets open or lowering invisible trade barriers such as the cozy alliances among Japanese companies.

Such "macro" policies that try to boost demand seem to work. They have helped Japan significantly increase imports and reduce its surplus in the past, and, if properly implemented, probably will do so again, many economists say.

But even Japanese officials admit that the measures Tokyo is contemplating will not eliminate Japan's chronic trade surplus, which hit a record $111 billion in the fiscal year that ended March 31.

Neither will the measures address the complaints that foreign companies find it exceptionally difficult to compete in Japan in particular sectors such as glass, construction and supercomputers.

"The big money, in terms of increasing U.S. jobs and helping the U.S. economy, lies with the macro factors—the rate of Japanese economic growth and the exchange rate of the yen versus the dollar," said C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics and a prominent advocate of the macro approach.

Bergsten's institute calculates that a 1 percent increase in the Japanese growth rate reduces the nation's surplus by about $5 billion, of which something in excess of $1 billion represents increased sales of U.S. products in Japan. And a 1 percent rise in the value of the yen against the dollar also causes the Japanese surplus to shrink by about $5 billion, although it usually takes a year or two for such an effect to show up in the trade numbers.

Under pressure from Washington, Japan adopted a strong macro policy in the mid-1980s, spurring its economy to grow at very fast rates and allowing the yen to more than double in value. The result: Japanese imports increased by about 60 percent in volume terms from 1985 to 1990. And when the economy slumped in 1992, so did imports.

The apparent effectiveness of macro policies explains why Clinton administration officials have been prodding Tokyo to adopt as big a pump-priming package as possible.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen has made it clear that he is skeptical that the $115 billion plan unveiled Tuesday is adequate.

Meeting with Japanese Foreign Minister Kabuo Muto this week, Secretary of State Warren Christopher even urged Japan to return to the economic policies of the late 1980s—a bit of a snarler for the Japanese, since the boom of that time was accompanied by a destabilizing "bubble" in stock and land prices.

The effectiveness of raising the yen explains why Japanese officials have been willing to see the currency appreciate over time, although they have warned in recent days that its ascent has been too fast.

The yen has surged more than 10 percent against the dollar since the beginning of the year, arousing fears that Japanese exporters might be hit so hard that the recession would deepen anew.

POW document raises questions

Zapnews

WASHINGTON — The official text of a purported Vietnamese document indicating that Hanoi held more prisoners of war (POWs) than publically admitted was released Wednesday by the Department of Defense.

The September 1972 report by Vietnamese Lieutenant General Tran Van Quang said 1,205 servicemen were prisoners in what was then North Vietnam.

Of that number, 671 were captured in the North, 426 in South Vietnam, 43 in Laos and 65 in Cambodia.

Only a few months later, in early 1973, Vietnam and the Viet Cong released a total of 591 prisoners, saying they were all that were being held - an assertion Hanoi continues to maintain.

"The total number of American POWs captured to date on the fronts of Indochina ... totals 1,205 people," the report says.

"The U.S. government does not know the precise number of POWs in (North Vietnam) since the (North Vietnamese) command holds this information in strict secrecy, and up until now a list of (only) 368 prisoners has been published officially."

A Russian version of the report by Quar, 2nd deputy chief of staff for his country's army, was found recently in the archives of the Soviet Communist Party in Moscow by a Harvard University researcher.

Moscow formally presented a copy of the report, which Vietnam calls a fake, to U.S. Ambassador Malcolm Toon last Thursday.

The number of 1,205 prisoners is consistent with the number of servicemen in the Vietnam War who were considered missing and whose fates were unknown, according to experts.

The POW report threatens to shoot down Vietnamese efforts to normalize relations with the U.S. and end its diplomatic isolation.

It also feeds public suspicion that Hanoi has never told the full story of American prisoners and those still listed as missing in action.

Its discovery also comes just prior to a scheduled trip to Vietnam by retired Army General John Vessey, a special presidential envoy.

The general, who will discuss POW issues with Hanoi, will make the Vietnamese report his "first order of business," the Pentagon said.
