Controversy

Students question tonight's USG resolution to oust Housing director

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students attending the Residence Hall Association meeting Tuesday expressed displeasure with a proposed Undergraduate Student Government resolution that says RHA is being misrepresented by University Housing officials.

The resolution, which will be voted on by the USG Senate at 7 p.m. in the Student Center tonight, also asks for the SIU Board of Trustees to replace University Housing Director Ed Jones and Assistant Director of Residence Life Steve Kirk for allegedly using their positions inappropriately.

Ray Owczarzak, RHA president, said after talking with various members of USG, he has received conflicting opinions about the resolution.

"I have talked with the author of the resolution, Andrew Ensor (Southern Hills senator), and according to him, he is speaking for the senators," Owczarzak said. "According to Kim Clemens, USG president, Ensor is talking alone."

Owczarzak said he believes the USG resolution has no basis.

"I feel that this is a drastic and uncalled for act," Owczarzak said. "It is also a childish, high-schoolish act."

University fails to meet accreditation standards

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC search committee has selected a faculty member to lead the University in analyzing its academic programs after the University's failure to meet a mandate by an accreditation group.

Sheila Brutton, associate professor of linguistics, was chosen by a University search committee last semester to lead a group of SIUC educators to assess the academic programs at SIUC. She began working at her new position on Jan. 1.

Brutton said the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools' Commission on Institutions of Higher Education is a university and college accreditation group that requires universities to send in assessment plans during a ten-year accreditation period.

Brutton said the University sent in an assessment program, but North Central sent it back with a letter requesting revision.

"They sent it back for revision,

SIUC music professor honored by council

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Ass't Features Editor

Although he was critically acclaimed for his musical performances worldwide, a late SIUC music professor never gave up his dedication to his students, a friend of the professor says.

This year's Black History Month events are being dedicated to the memory of Edward Romain, Jr., an SIUC music professor and established concert pianist who died in May 1995 from renal failure and complications from AIDS.

Wilfred Delphin, a music professor at SIUC, met Romain in undergraduate school at Xavier University in New Orleans in 1967. The two performed professionally in a duet piano team from 1977 until the late 1980s.

Delphin said at the time, their duet was the only piano team featuring African-American artists on the professional circuit. Delphin said their first professional performance was at Carnegie Hall in New York City in 1977.

Delphin said they had originally entered a contest where the winners would be featured in a recital. He said the judges asked them to drop out of the competition, offering them an opportunity to play in their own recital instead.

"We approached the whole thing with a carefree quality," Delphin said. "If we had been fully aware how important this event was to become to us, we probably would have been more nervous."

Delphin said Romain's pursuit of a concert career never got in the way of his teaching profession, and he and Romain were fortunate to have the opportunity to pursue both without conflict.

"Teaching is something Romain always wanted to do," he said. "In regards to the development of music, performing and teaching are closely united. Students can learn from your performance."

BOUCHARD SWORN IN AS PREMIER OF QUEBEC — TORONTO — Separatist leader Lucien Bouchard was sworn in as premier of Quebec Monday, vowing to lead the French-speaking province to independence from Canada after first bringing it financial stability. In an inaugural speech, almost entirely devoted to economic and cultural issues, Bouchard, 57, pledged to focus his efforts on cutting the nearly $3 billion provincial budget deficit and reducing unemployment, which chronically registers about two percentage points above the national figure and stood at 13.3 percent in December. Quebec has the highest per capita taxes in Canada, and Bouchard said he will try to trim the debt mainly through government spending cuts. "This is our first task; we must not mortgage our future," he said. He vowed to consult all parts of Quebec society, including business leaders who largely oppose separatism, in his economic planning.

BOSNIAN MUSLIM WOMEN STORM RED CROSS — TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Several hundred anguished Muslim women whose male relatives have been missing since July attacked the office of the International Committee of the Red Cross here Monday, heaving bricks and brandishing as weapons the sticks they had brought to hold banners. It was the first violent demonstration in Tuzla, headquarters for the U.S. troops deployed in Bosnia, and the first attack on the ICRC, which is monitoring the release of prisoners and reunification of families in the former Yugoslavia. The women, wearing traditional headscarves and billowy trousers, broke windows of the building and of vehicles outside and then forced their way inside.

POLICE SAY THEY HAVE GUN IN DU PONT CASE — MEDIA, Pa. — Although police still had not identified a motive in the shooting death Friday of Olympic wrestling champion Dave Schultz at the John E. du Pont mansion, officials said Monday that they had found what they believed to be the murder weapon. Patrick Meehan, the Delaware County district attorney, said at a news conference that ballistics tests were being conducted on the gun, a .38-caliber revolver, which was recovered Monday morning. Authorities said the gun was removed from du Pont's study. Du Pont, 57, was arrested Sunday after a two-day standoff on his 800-acre estate outside Philadelphia. He was apprehended after he left his mansion to try to turn on the heat, which had been turned off by law enforcement officials. Du Pont is charged with seven crimes, including first-degree murder. Officials at Monday's news conference said they had not decided whether to seek the death penalty.

TRIAL BEGINS FOR ACCUSED SUIVAY BOMBER — NEW YORK — A New York City woman testified Monday that minutes before a firebomb ripped through a subway car in December 1994, she saw a man she identified as defendant Edward Leary, who had scary, shining eyes and they looked like evil. Leary, 50, went on trial Monday in State Supreme Court in Manhattan on charges of murder, assault and illegal weapons possession in the Dec. 21, 1994, subway bombing. At least 48 people were injured. He is also charged in a Dec. 15, 1994, subway bombing that injured several high school students. Leary's lawyer, however, argued that his client was not responsible because he was under the influence of a mix of anti-depressants and other drugs that affected his thought processes.

ATV groups denied on-ramp to Shawnee litigation

By Erik Bush
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A local all-terrain-vehicle group was denied intervention in litigation involving a lawsuit filed against the Forestry Service by environmental groups which alleges mis-management of the Shawnee National Forest.

Federal Judge Phil Gilbert denied a motion last week filed by three groups — the Southern Illinois All Terrain Vehicle Association, the Recreational Riders Association, and the Blue Ribbon Coalition — seeking involvement in negotiations concerning the management of the Shawnee National Forest. Gilbert said he ruled against the motion because it was not filed in a timely manner.

Last September, Gilbert ruled that there was sufficient evidence in claims from the Regional Association of Concerned Citizens (RACE) and the Sierra Club, both environmental groups, of alleged mismanagement of the Shawnee National Forest by the U.S. Forest Service.

As a result, Gilbert issued a decision to restrict use of ATVs in the forest because of the vehicles possible impact on forest ecosystems.

In January, the ATV groups filed a motion of intervention claiming that the groups interested were not being fairly considered during negotiations on the use of ATV trails in the forest.

Tom Buchele, attorney for RACE, said the ATV groups hurt their case by filing so late.

"One of the requirements for intervention is that it is done in a timely manner. The initial decision was heavily publicized, so they should have known what was going on in September," he said. "We are glad the judge made this decision. It would have only complicated the case."

Mark Donham, RACE member, said this will free up the process for the next hearing.

"This helps us because now we can concentrate on dealing with the Forestry Service," Donham said.

Tim Rush, president of the Southern Illinois All Terrain Vehicle Association, said this was just one step in the legal process.

"We were not surprised by the decision," Rush said. "The motion was just a step we had to go through. We plan on filing a separate lawsuit as soon as possible."

The next court hearing on the RACE/Sierra case to review proposed changes made in forest policy since negotiations began with Forest Service officials in September will be held at the Benton Courthouse Feb. 16 at 1:30 p.m.

Phallic imagery attracts attention to Student Center Art Alley display

By Lisa M. Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Of the three cases full of artwork in the Student Center's Art Alley, one particular painting has stopped some people and turned them into spectators of art.

Mike Beam's particular painting is of an Army man aiming a gun at his jeep. A penis is sketched in white on the Army man.

Beam said his painting is not meant to be deviant.

"I use a lot of sketches, and none of them have any relevance to deviance. It's just my art," Beam said.

Heather Ingram, a junior in radio and television from Hazel Crest who viewed the exhibit, said she was not offended by the painting.

"I don't know what to think," she said. "This is the perfect example of hyping something up to the point where people who wouldn't generally take notice stop and stare. But, maybe that's the point."

In October 1994, there were complaints concerning the Art Alley when parts of a photography exhibit were covered. Some students had said they were concerned about censorship while others said they were concerned about the content of the art.

The 1994 exhibit done by Jay Thomson displayed photos of homophobic slurs on Thomson's body. The slurs were eventually covered by black pieces of paper by the Student Programming Committee.

Brad Epplin, a junior in Civil Engineering from Pinckneyville, who also viewed the exhibit, said he was surprised to see Beam's painting in the Student Center.

"I guess they're allowed to paint what they want, but I think this sort of thing has more relevance in a health book," he said.

Beam is the director of Visual Arts for the council, and he said he decides what is displayed in the Art Alley. He was not the director during the time Thomson's exhibit was on display.

In the case of Beam's display of paintings, no complaints have been made to the Student Programming Council. Beam said he tries not to get involved with censorship.

"Personally I don't like to deal with censorship," Beam said. "Here in the Art Alley, certain levels are necessary because I'm dealing with a different crowd than an art gallery."

Beam said his paintings take a lot of work and thought to become what he feels will be successful.

"Surface animation is very important, as is the juxtaposition of color. In creating a fluctuating yet homogenous surface, the painting becomes successful," Beam said.

No comment could be obtained from other Student Programming Council sources.

City Council approves alcohol consumption at summer Sunset Concerts at Turley Park

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Carbondale City Council voted to approve alcohol consumption during the summer Sunset Concerts Tuesday night despite previous and present opposition.

However, a resolution adding Halloween day to a list of days liquor sales are banned on South Illinois Avenue during the Halloween break was dropped from the agenda.

The City Council approved the "Fair Days" request by the Carbondale Park District to allow the consumption, but not the sale of, alcohol during the Sunset concerts. Two citizens opposed the Park District's request.

Rev. Jeff Scott, from the University Baptist Church, said he opposes alcohol being allowed at the concerts and fears the image it gives Carbondale children.

"What began as a family picnic is now a cooler-lugging, 12-pack-toting, public-sponsored beer bash," he said. "At the summer night concerts small children see beer drinking and are exposed to more drinking in the park than in a bar, where they are not allowed to go."

Scott said the Carbondale Police cannot check every drinker's identification card for age or check every teenager's container for alcohol, so underage drinking is prevalent.

Laser tag game coming soon to University Mall

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Now SIUC students who are at their wits end with their roommates can head down to the mall and settle their differences with laser guns.

Cosmic Adventures, scheduled to open Feb. 2 in the University Mall, 1237 E. Main, will offer Lazer Runner, a competitive laser tag game. The game is played in a 2,400-square-foot maze.

Michael Jessup, Cosmic Adventures manager, said the game is fast action and fun for all ages.

Jessup said when participants come into the store, each is fitted with a vest that has four sensors on it and a hand held laser gun. He said the participants head into the maze. In the maze, there is a light fog, background music, black-light lighting and mines. He said participants shoot at each other and try to hit their opponents' vests with the laser beam to disable their competitors' systems.

"This is not the old style of Lazer Tag (with a large rifle instead of a hand gun and an awkward light instead of a precision laser) where you could be anywhere near the

SIUC should be careful to comply with court order

THE DAILY EGYPTIAN RECENTLY RAN AN editorial disagreeing with a proposed University Housing policy that would require all freshmen under age 21 to live in on-campus dorms. The policy also drew a lawsuit from an SIUC professor who owns Stevenson Arms, a University-approved freshman living center that the DE believes should be an acceptable alternative to on-campus housing.

The DE believes some of the University's actions with the suit may not have been appropriate.

Some background is needed. After the University decided to implement the new policy, Stan Lieber, the owner of Stevenson Arms, filed a complaint against SIUC alleging that since he was not consulted on the decision, due process was violated.

On Dec. 14, an Illinois circuit judge agreed with Lieber and enjoined that the University could not "...interfere with plaintiff's license to operate as an accepted living center for freshmen students without providing for notice and hearing..." The judge said the injunction's intent was to preserve the status quo.

This was subject to broad interpretation, and Lieber went to court again Dec. 29 to get the judge to be more specific about what the University must do to comply with the injunction.

The judge nailed down several specifics pertaining to the injunction, including requiring the University to mail Stevenson Arms brochures to students seeking information on University housing, and including the brochures in any mailings to students the University had already been in contact with.

THE CLARIFICATION ALSO STATED THAT A correction notice must be included with housing literature to let students know the freshman housing policy was not implemented.

Now Lieber has threatened the University with a contempt motion, which alleges that SIUC did not follow the specifics laid out by the judge.

The motion cites two affidavits from people who swore the University gave them materials on Jan. 5 and Jan. 9 that did not include Stevenson Arms brochures or a correction regarding the freshman housing policy.

If this testimony is accurate, the DE believes the University did not act appropriately.

Hopefully, the testimony is not true or there was a logistical problem that caused the University to fail to include the corrections with the material cited in the affidavits. Two alleged instances of non-compliance may seem trivial, but this is a situation under the scrutiny of the judicial system. The University should be more careful if these were simply errors.

IF THE UNIVERSITY KNOWINGLY EXCLUDED the information from the literature, the DE believes this is serious mistake.

SIUC's legal counsel has indicated that the University will challenge the interpretation of the injunction on procedural grounds.

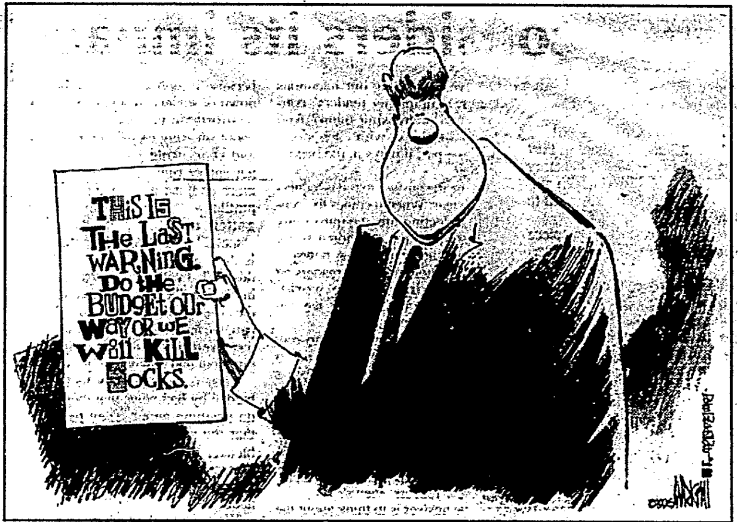

In the meantime the DE believes the University should do exactly what the judge instructed when he interpreted the injunction at the end of last year.

If he said the University should mail brochures and correction notices, the University should mail brochures and correction notices. If the University thinks the judge is wrong in ordering them to do so, mail them anyway.

SIUC attorneys say following any court order is their whole-hearted intention. When testimony says otherwise, even in only two instances, there may be reason to reconsider how complying with the order is being carried out.

Lieber has postponed the contempt hearing to negotiate with SIUC lawyers on what the injunction meant.

The DE hopes the two sides can come to an agreement instead of having the University in a position where it must defend itself against contempt charges.

Poet's legacy lives in his passion

The Los Angeles Times

The world has lost Joseph Brodsky, a great poet who had the rare ability to cross the divide between East and West.

Born in 1940 in Leningrad, Brodsky began writing poetry at 15 and soon, as Irish poet and Nobel laureate Seamus Heaney wrote, he "established personal relations with the whole pantheon of the classical and vernacular literatures of Europe and the Americas." The poetry of John Donne inspired him to learn English.

Soviet bureaucrats declared him a "parasite" because he spent much of his time writing. He was sent to prison in the Arctic and twice was put into mental institutions. Expelled from his country in 1972, Brodsky moved to the Soviet bureaucrats declared him a "parasite" because he spent much of his time writing.

History of late Russian poet Joseph Brodsky

United States and 15 years later won the Nobel Prize. He became U.S. poet laureate in 1991. His poetry, which stresses the transcendence of the individual, reflects his personal confrontation with tyranny:

I wish you good night, May 1, too, sleep soundly.

Won't you bid a goodnight to my native country For settling accounts with me—from that distance where, by the massing of miles, or simple miracle, you have been changed to only a postal address.

Brodsky believed the world would be better if leaders were chosen on the basis of what they read. "As a form of moral insurance ... literature is more dependable than a system of beliefs or a philosophical doctrine," he argued.

Joseph Brodsky's legacy will live on in the many fine poems who have been influenced by his universal message and elegance.

Russia still hesitating on START II

The Washington Post

The missile treaty just ratified by the Senate seems out of another age, and it is. Called START II—the second strategic arms reduction treaty—it was designed to reduce and make safer the nuclear confrontation of the now-gone Cold War.

Begun in Soviet times, it was signed by the new Russia's president, Boris Yeltsin, and former U.S. President George Bush in January 1993. The Senate dragged but now has approved by a resounding and worthy vote of 87 to 4 a pact that halves the two countries' stocks of strategic nuclear warheads and bans Moscow's fabled "heavy" missiles, the SS-18s.

Not, however, that there is no longer a point in revising the two countries' nuclear arsenals. With no strategic threat anymore in existence or on the horizon, the new warhead level of 3,500 is far beyond any conceivable requirement of deterrence or defense.

But conclusion of this pact will make it possible to lower that level. It will help the two signers finish buying out and dismantling the remaining nuclear arms in formerly Soviet Ukraine, Belarus and Kazakhstan. It will let them press the priority post-Cold War program—Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., is its leading advocate—of preventing diversion of Russian nuclear arms, materials and facilities to terrorism and smuggling.

There is mumbling in Moscow that Duma ratification of the new treaty won't come easily. Russia's earlier expectation of good nuclear times with Washington has yielded to criticism of the terms Yeltsin accepted in START II, a nostalgia for nuclear arms as instruments of national power and a keen dismay over the growing American interest in missile defense.

Russia faces a difficult choice. It can ratify the treaty to save the upkeep on a larger arsenal and take its chances on missile defense, or it can refuse to ratify and risk seeing its forces disadvantaged anyway.

Russians are myopic to back off the new treaty reducing offensive arms. But their concern over the rapid progress toward a national missile defense favored by some in Washington is not trivial.

For Americans, local or "theater" missile defense, under terms to be agreed with Russia, makes sense. But so far a more ambitious national defense does not.

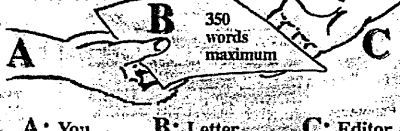

Russia might consider taking a page from the American book and ratifying the new treaty with an asterisk—contingent on American regard for the 1972 treaty restricting missile defense, still the basic text of international nuclear stability.

Paper considers its impact

By Geneva Overholser
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—"Pablo's Choice," a recent Washington Post Sunday feature, was the local story of an 18-year-old who is both student and drug dealer, and poised to pick his future.

I found it an extraordinary piece of work, skillfully written, powerful in its look at a life few see but many fear or deplore or both. However unwelcome, it offered a slice of a little understood reality, rendered with force and grace and clarity.

Dozens of readers protested. They said the story glorified unlawfulness. They found it pointless, hurtful, depressing. They said it fed a relentless and cruelly unfair stereotype. They urged that we cease our tales of troubled young black men and write about kids who are making it. They called it tabloidism, sensationalism, junk.

To most of us in newspapering, to say that a story gives an accurate look at a piece of reality is to say enough. That's what we do. The rest is up to the reader.

Yet this reader reaction raises a question I find more and more compelling: What is a newspaper's responsibility to its readers? How much can we — how much should we — think about the impact of a story? Can we make our work more effective by making our intentions clearer, anticipating readers' concerns and addressing them? And should we think, with each story, about the part it plays in the overall picture?

To me the answer to the last question is clear: When it comes to accurately reflecting life, we must think not just about the individual story, but about the aggregate. A newspaper should hold up for its readers an accurate mirror of the world. Consumed by the unusual, we can skew the reflection.

This conflicts with day-to-day news instincts, which tell us to focus on the exception. "Pablo's Choice" is an example: However accurate, it raises the question: When young black men appear in The Post, are they overwhelmingly those in trouble with the law? Do we thus show an inaccurate picture and skew readers' views?

If one answer is to think about the newspaper cumulatively, seeking to ensure that the stories we print add up over time to an accurate picture, another is to give as much context as possible to each individual story. How representative is Pablo?

In addition to more context, I believe that, far more than we have traditionally done, we must let readers in on our deliberations. What do we see as the reason for a story?

I have a feeling that "Pablo's Choice" was troubling partly because it represents such a break-down of society. If a young man is comfortable talking to The Post about smoking reefer, selling crack and shoplifting jackets — if the newspaper runs such a story pretty much as if it were just another nice profile — then where have we all gotten to? How will the cops respond? Will anyone help the kid? Is there anything we can do about this? What with the lively and inviting layout, the cheerful pictures and the absence of remorse on the kid's part, we left readers feeling that they had taken in something deeply troubling but had nowhere to go with it.

Readers say that they feel humiliated by bad news that they can't do anything about. They feel sure that the media make things seem bleaker than they really are. And where bleakness does exist, they resent not being able to do anything about it.

We must think of accuracy in the aggregate as well as the specific. And we must accept responsibility for the impact of our work. The idea that we exist to give citizens the tools for self-government is our finest time-honored principle. "Pablo's Choice" can remind us that, as society changes, we must look for new ways to abide by it.

and the University has to put something together that North Central will accept," she said.

Brutten said a letter from the group said SIUC's assessment did not meet the commission's expectations.

Allen Kyle Perkins, vice-chancellor for academic affairs, said the assessment plan was sent back because SIUC did not have an overall assessment plan related to the University's focus.

"We sent in what each department academic plans were," he said. "I collected each college assessment of their department and put them together."

Perkins said accredited universities meet the guidelines stipulated by North Central.

The campus-wide assessment committee is co-chaired by Perkins and Donald Beggs, Dean of the College of Education. Representatives from eight academic colleges and the Faculty Senate are also on the committee.

Perkins said Brutten was selected because she is a self-starter and her past research has focused on testing and assessment.

Brutten said the assessment program is vitally important.

Brutten will be responsible for developing a master plan with the assistance of a committee of college administrators for ongoing student assessments by all academic units, Perkins said.

"Brutten is responsible for coordinating, implementing and supervising the assessment program at department levels," Perkins said.

Beggs said the committee is planning to let students know how well they are doing in their programs.

"The effort in the assessment program is to provide feedback to students and let them know how well they are doing and the criteria they will be judged by," he said.

Brutten said the committee meets regularly to establish a protocol from each of the appropriate degree programs, core curriculum, undergraduate programs and graduate programs.

"Once all the additional information is received from the various departments and faculty, an entirely new document will have to be sent in by this June," she said.

After the various departments assess the objectives of the programs and how students are meeting those objectives, positive changes will be made to enhance the education students are receiving, Brutten said.

"We want to offer the best possible education to students. By looking at programs and seeing how we can make them better will only help students," she said. "We are trying to gather information in order to make improvements where improvements need to be made."

Brutten said SIUC's goal is not to harm the students but to improve the education they are receiving, ultimately improving the students themselves.

Once programs are assessed, courses will be added and changed, she said.

she said they want students to be better prepared when they leave this University.

The assessment is not just for the North Central report, Brutten said.

"The assessment is not a one-shot deal," she said. "It is an ongoing process."

Brutten, originally from New York, has been with the University since 1968. She received a bachelor of arts degree in speech and English from Adelphi University in New York and a master's degree in speech pathology and audiology at SIUC.

Lincoln Middle School in Carbondale, studied under Romain as a graduate student. Reed said he was fortunate to be taught by an accomplished pianist.

Delphin said during his life, Romain supported the efforts of international artists, but spoke on the importance of supporting local and regional artists.

Romain spoke, publicly on behalf of the National Task Force on Humanities, which promotes efforts in the arts and reviews grant applicants for the National Endowment for the Arts.

Delphin said Romain's drive to promote local and regional artists developed after performing at the Spoleto, a world music showcase in Charleston, S.C.

For ten years, Romain was active in series of performances that showcased local music, visual arts and stage artists at SIUC and other places, Delphin said.

Delphin said Romain was a gifted public speaker, even though he was a private person.

"He was really a homebody for a public person," Delphin said. "I think that would surprise people who did not know him well. He was a convincing speaker, but he spoke about things he felt passionate about."

Delphin said Romain promoted the efforts of African-Americans in the arts. He said Romain was very active in the commission of African-American musical pieces and played works by African-American composers.

"Everyone needs a champion,"

Delphin said. "The cause of music has to be taken up by new artists. Romain made sure additional efforts were made by African-American men and women."

Romain developed problems with his kidney shortly after joining the SIUC faculty. Delphin said Romain's condition caused him to curtail performances and activities until he eventually retired.

Harriet Wilson Barlow, a Student Development coordinator, said the decision to dedicate the month's activities to Romain's memory was the general consensus of the Black History Month Council.

A musical memorial tribute for Romain will be performed by various SIUC music professors at 8 p.m. on Feb. 16 in Shryock Auditorium.

person and hit their vest," he said. "This requires you to hit the sensor with the laser exactly."

The fog in the maze helps participants to see where their lasers are pointed, but there is no time to sit and aim, Jessup said.

Jessup said if a participant is hit, their system shuts down for five seconds.

During this time, the player cannot shoot but is still in the game, he said.

"Participants play for six minutes, and there can be up to 14 people in the maze at any given time," Jessup said.

"The other places the game has been set up there is an excellent response," he said.

"It is very popular," Jessup said if parents want to know more about the game they can come in and watch people play.

"The maze will have an area where people can sit and watch the action without being seen by the players," he said.

The store will be next to Challenges video arcade.

Tom Biggs, manager of Challenges, said he is excited to see Cosmic Adventures come in.

"I hope we can do some cross promotions," Biggs said.

Jessup said in nine months, Cosmic Adventures plans to expand to a large family-style entertainment store with a restaurant, soft play (padded playground equipment) and an arcade.

When that is built, they will move the Lazer Runner to that store, he said.

"There is nothing in this area that focuses on family entertainment. This is something the whole family can enjoy," Jessup said.

"If you were to compare it, it would be like a Chuck E. Cheese," he said.

For now, Jessup said he is concentrating on the store in the mall.

"This (Lazer Runner) is something the whole family can enjoy."

Defendant claims Catholic faith gave him right to rape wife; judge gives him a year

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—A man who claimed that his Catholic faith gave him the religious and constitutional right to have sex with his wife was sentenced Tuesday to a year in county jail for attempted spousal rape and spousal abuse.

Raimiro Espinosa, 54, also was sentenced to three years' probation and ordered by Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Robert P. O'Neill to pay $500 to a battered women's shelter.

"Mr. Espinosa has to understand certain things," O'Neill said from the bench. "He doesn't have the right to hit his wife. He didn't have the right to hit his wife."

Espinosa, a self-employed upholsterer, was convicted last July of the two felonies in connection with an Aug. 20, 1994, assault on his wife of 30 years, Imelda.

At the trial, Espinosa had testified that he believed that the Catholic marriage vows gave a husband or wife "a right over the body" of the other.

Church leaders said official Catholic doctrine teaches that a spouse should accede to a request from the other for sex, but only if that request is reasonable.

After conviction, Espinosa asked for a new trial—on the grounds that the California law making a crime of attempted spousal rape was unconstitutionally vague.

Espinosa made no statement in court Tuesday and declined to comment afterward. Instead, he handed reporters a one-page typed statement reiterating the claim that the law is flawed because it does not explicitly set forth what is foreplay and what is a felony.

Referring to Espinosa, the statement said, "He should not have to go throughout his marriage guessing when he might be violating the law."

O'Neill declared in court that there was no guesswork in the case. Proof of Espinosa's guilt, he said, was "overwhelming."

The evidence at the trial, the judge said, was that Espinosa used a butter knife to open the locked door to his wife's room, then slapped her and ripped her clothes when she resisted.

Park, said at the meeting that he has known Ensor for a long time and believes this resolution to be factually incorrect.

"As a resident, I know when Andrew Ensor speaks, he tends not to have all of his facts straight," Halket said. "And to say that Ed Jones would not listen to the students — I find him (Ensor) to be wrong." Alex Goodson, resident of Baldwin Hall, located in Thompson Point, said she believes the resolution shows a need for cohesiveness between the two organizations. "If they (USG and RHA) would just stop blaming each other and start doing something together, they could get a lot more done, and there wouldn't be so many problems," Goodson said. Paulette Curkin, housing program coordinator, said she has known and worked with Jones and Kirk for a number of years and has never seen any reason to believe they do not do their job appropriately. "Nobody always agrees with the administration," Curkin said. "But I have never seen anyone who cares more for the students than Ed and Steve do. In fact, I don't see many administrators who go out of their way to help the students like they do." Owczarzak said he will be at the USG meeting tonight in defense of RHA. He said he will address any questions the USG Senate might have about his organization.

He said the alcohol will only lead to more trouble, including criminal activity.

"All it takes is one drunken driver or one tanked-up pedophile to bring a tragedy to this city we will never forget," Scott said.

Several council members said they disagreed with Scott. "I attended the concerts for years and do not see the activity described in the papers," Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan said. "My daughter (who attended the concerts) is healthy. She is not adversely affected."

Mayor Neil Dillard said he appreciated the concern of citizens and said he said he hopes responsible activity will prevail.

One of the plans of the Park District is to move the more popular concerts to the steps of Shryock Auditorium to avoid parking problems at Turkey Park, east of the Mundale Shopping Center, Dillard said.

Despite these steps, Councilman

John Yow voted against the action.

"This is the 10th time I have voted against this (alcohol consumption at public events) because I believe it will send a mixed message to our children," Yow said.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said the council removed a resolution from the agenda calling for the extension of control over business hours on the Strip during the Halloween break. The control would include a ban on all alcohol sales on the Strip Oct. 31 which was not covered in the first regulation which took effect last fall.

Case Permits

SIUC group to help hungry

By Lori D. Clark
DE Assistant Politics Editor

Every day 40,000 children around the world, particularly in Third World countries, will die from hunger-related diseases, an SIUC student says.

A program that would train volunteers to speak to political officials and the media in an effort to end global poverty and help save these children is in the process of being formed at SIUC, Brian K. Clardy, a doctoral student in the SIUC History Department said.

The first meeting of the Responsibility for Ending Starvation through Legislation, Trim-tabbing and Support (RESULTS) program was on Monday.

Clardy said he believes a chapter of RESULTS at SIUC would provide a vehicle for students who want to fight global poverty and hunger.

"I think once people see what the issues are, they will be moved," he said. "If they know nearly 40,000 children are dying around the world, seven days a week, I believe they will be moved."

Clardy said RESULTS is not a revolutionary organization and is not affiliated with any political party.

"It (RESULTS) is an international citizen lobby committed to breaking through the widespread belief, 'I don't make a difference,'" Clardy said. "We are involved because we are wrapped up in mankind. Our aims and goals are universal because we see the problem and want to bring a response."

The next step in the organization of the RESULTS program, Clardy said, is to hold another meeting to generate more interest and eventually become a Registered Student Organization.

"I want to raise the level of consciousness on this campus by March," Clardy said. "I would like to see this organization become an RSO. It may not happen this year or next year, but I want to get the ball rolling so RESULTS can become a program."

Clardy said the organization will work by writing letters to Congress. He also said the group will not require a lot of time from its members.

Tanya Price, a lecturer in SIUC Black American Studies, said she is interested in RESULTS because she wants to become involved in changing things for the better.

"I have a strong inclination to get involved in policy and making a positive impact in the world outside the University," Price said. "I see it as something beyond teaching textbooks and subjects."

Also attending the first meeting of RESULTS was Dr. Paul Gibson, associate professor in Plant and Soil Science. He said he attended the meeting because he is concerned about hunger prevention.

"I'm interested in the welfare of developing countries," Gibson said. "We here in America have much, and we are responsible morally to using the assets we have to help those who do not have the same amount of assets."

The next meeting of RESULTS has not yet been scheduled.

GPSC to consider electronic loan-check distribution system

By Donita Polly
and Signe Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporters

A system that electronically transfers funds to SIUC students' accounts allowing students to get their loan checks quickly will be considered at tonight's Graduate and Professional Student Council meeting, a member says.

Bill Karrow, GPSC president, said instead of the University sending loan checks to students through the mail, it would be faster to have the funds electronically sent to students' accounts.

GPSC invited guest speakers Jeff Holder, of the SIUC Controller's Office, and Pam Britton, director of Financial Aid, to tonight's regularly scheduled council meeting. Karrow said the speakers will discuss the possibility of providing SIUC students with the electronic funds transfer service.

Karrow said other universities in the state have the service, and it would be beneficial to students here.

"Anything to get money to the student faster is a good thing," Karrow said.

Britton said the Controller's Office is in charge of the electronic funds transfer, and she did not want to comment on the service.

But she said the Financial Aid Office is in support of it.

Holder could not be reached for comment.

Karrow said GPSC also will vote on spending $700 for a computer to be hooked up to a University web site.

White House attorney abducted by gunmen

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—A pair of heavily armed gunmen abducted White House attorney Mark Fabiani after he left an Alexandria, Va., Metrorail subway station Friday night, police said, and forced him to withdraw $1,500 from bank teller machines before releasing him unharmed hours later.

Fabiani, 38, the administration's public point man for the Whitewater investigation, was walking home from the King Street station about 10 p.m. when a man brandished a gun and forced the lawyer into a car.

The bandits then drove into Washington for two quick cash transactions, Alexandria police told The Post's Steve Bates Monday. No arrests have been made.

Throughout the ordeal, a colleague said, Fabiani stayed calm. "He has that reputation — to be cool under pressure — and it doesn't get much rougher than this," said the colleague.

The thieves also lifted Fabiani's watch, cell phone and briefcase, then had a change of heart and gave them back — along with $10 for cab fare.

"Maybe they were afraid," joked the colleague, "that they'd be subpoenaed for those documents in the briefcase."

Said Fabiani, whose trying experience began hours after Hillary Rodham Clinton finished her grand jury testimony. "It was a perfect ending to a very long week."

Flavor enhancers help elderly

The Washington Post

To millions of older Americans, food just isn't the same. Taste and smell seem to decline naturally with age, leaving them able to experience only weak versions of the flavors and aromas they once enjoyed.

Many Americans also take medications that can further dull their ability to taste and smell. Adding butter, margarine, oil, salt and other ingredients to make food more palatable is usually not an option, since many older people have to keep blood cholesterol levels and high blood pressure in check.

What's the answer? At Duke University Hospital in Durham, N.C., a National Institute on Aging project has found that flavor enhancers can provide one solution. Susan Shiffman, professor of medical psychology in the department of psychiatry at the hospital, and her colleagues have spent 20 years developing these substances, which add flavor without adding calories, fat,

"When foods are enhanced, they are eaten more than foods that are not."

*Judith Finklestein Program Director,
National Institute on Aging*

sodium or other unwanted ingredients.

The natural flavors range from roast beef to chocolate, Irish cream, orange, butter and bacon. They were originally developed to help make hospital food more palatable for patients, such as those who have undergone open heart surgery and need extra protein to help repair their wounds.

An often-unrecognized side effect of surgery is that it compromises taste and smell, Shiffman said. Taste receptors take at least 10 days to recover; smell can take as long as 30 days to return to normal.

In the meantime, many patients, especially older ones, must be placed on expensive parenteral (intravenous) nutrition to boost calories, protein and vitamins.

At Duke, the goal is to get patients "to eat the best way, which is regular eating," Shiffman said.

Studies of the enhancers suggest they increase food consumption, said Judith Finklestein, program director for sensory motor disorders at the National Institute on Aging.

A study of nursing-home patients who spent three weeks eating regular food and three weeks eating flavor-enhanced meals showed that "when foods are enhanced, they are eaten more than foods that are not," Finklestein said.

Japanese comic books graphic best-sellers

Los Angeles Times

TOKYO—Many Japanese look to Kosaku Shima to teach them the impeccable corporate etiquette that will take them to the top of the business world.

When this young, hard-working, irresistibly debonair Hatsuba Electric worker was promoted to division chief in 1992, it made national headlines.

Many also look to Rintaro, a visionary, idealistic bureaucrat in the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, to teach them about the secret machinations of the nation's ministries and to share his insights on energy policy. Now, politicians in Washington want to hear what he has to say.

Rintaro and Shima boast social influence, salaries and celebrity that Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto and Los Angeles Dodgers star Hideo Nomo would envy.

Never heard of Rintaro and Shima? That may be because they aren't real. They are characters in “ Among Japanese media, manga are unquestionably the most powerful.”

Kuzu Haruo,
creator of Rintaro

Japanese “manga,” or comic books.

Manga are a billion-dollar industry. Sales of these fat comics, which go for about $3.50 each, account for close to a third of the total output of publishing houses here and amount to a whopping 553 million copies a year.

More than 500 categories of manga are released each month. Some playful commentators once estimated that the Japanese use more paper for the telephone-book-size comics than for toilet paper.

Many analysts say this medium is more influential than television or newspapers. Manga play a vital social function, supplying the flamboyant heroes that a highly controlled society can't produce, experts say.

The comics also offer a rich fantasy world in a society where conformity is deemed a necessity, assertion of individual will is viewed as unacceptable and life itself is often eye-glazingly predictable.

All this, while gently reinforcing the values of working hard and supporting the status quo.

“Among Japanese media, manga are unquestionably the most powerful,” says the creator of Rintaro, who uses the pen name Kuzu Haruo.

In their subject matter and approach, manga range from fantastic, such as Doraemon the robot cat, to realistic, such as businessman Shima Kosaku, to educational, such as the world-famous “Japan Inc.,” a 1,000-page tome laying out the labyrinthine ways of the country's corporate economy.

Their stories often blend real news events with outlandish fantasies, unsavory words, undoable feats and—for a best seller—graphic sex scenes.

So ubiquitous is their cast of characters that for millions of manga maniacs the line between comics and reality often blurs.

For them, the characters take their place alongside real people in everyday life, capturing headlines, offering testimonials for advertising and winning the public's love and respect.

“Manga made me what I am today,” says Haruko Saio, 30, a self-proclaimed manga nerd. “After I read the manga on the French Revolution—liberty, equality, fraternity and all that—I knew what I wanted to do.”

Cultural critics call manga Japan's postwar literature, its social commentary and a repository for its most creative minds.

They also call them a window into the Japanese psyche, shedding light on what motivates, inspires and titillates readers.

Universities teach manga, psychologists analyze them and there is even a museum in Osaka to memorialize them.

Publishers also throw in large doses of porn to woo readers: Huge, sexually insatiable white women are often the subject of sexual attentions from mighty Japanese manga heroes.

“While people are laughing at manga, they are also unconsciously learning how to behave and what not to do,” says Dr. Masahiko Ito, a pediatrician who co-wrote a book psychoanalyzing one of Japan's most famous manga heroes.

Gay 'wedding' ceremonies legal in San Francisco under new law

Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO—Gay couples will soon be able to hold "wedding" ceremonies at City Hall to recognize their domestic partnerships under a measure approved unanimously Monday by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors.

The civil ceremony, to be performed by city officials or others designated by the city, will be available to any two people who register as domestic partners and pay a fee of $30. Couples joined in the new ceremony will not be legally married. But under a 1991 city law, registering as domestic partners gives them certain legal benefits, including hospital visitation rights.

No significant opposition to the measure has surfaced and newly elected Mayor Willie Brown is expected to sign it into law. The first ceremony could take place as early as April.

pass interference penalties, poor defensive skills and simply not measuring up to Cowboy standards.

To add insult to injury, Brown was beaten twice last year by the San Francisco 49ers' Jerry Rice — once for a 57-yard touchdown in a regular season game and then on a 28-yard touchdown in the playoffs.

Because of that, Cowboys owner Jerry Jones hired another cornerback by the name of Deion Sanders. Brown's days as a starter seemed numbered.

Then on Nov. 16, as if there weren't enough turmoil in Brown's life, he and his wife suffered the worst tragedy possible.

They lost their infant son Kristopher, who was born 10 weeks premature nearly three weeks earlier.

Kristopher, who weighed only one pound at birth, was taken off life-support systems and died.

Just one day after his son's funeral, Brown was back on the field playing against the Oakland Raiders, stunning players and coaches alike. It was his way of dealing with his family's loss.

Criticism on the field is one thing all professional athletes must face during their career. Coping with the death of a loved one while continuing to play the game is yet another.

It's for those reasons Brown is so deserving of the title hero, not for picking off two interceptions in a game surrounded in hype and the almighty dollar.

Brown could have easily given in to all the pressure he was undoubtedly under at the time. He would have been justified had he chosen to do so.

On a team known for its stars, Brown could have easily sat idly by and let Sanders, Aikman, Smith and Irvin lead the team to victory as is often the case. After all, would anyone really notice.

But, Brown did not sit idly by, nor did he succumb to the pressure. Instead he took what life has to offer, turning tragedy into triumph. His personal achievement on the football field will not erase the tragedy his family has suffered. Nor will it ease their suffering. However, it does say something about Larry Brown's will to overcome personal tragedy and prove to everyone he can play with the best of them.

In a sport ruled by the almighty dollar, governed by greedy owners and played by overrated players, it's nice to know unlikely heroes with simple names like Brown still exist.

Agassi waffles on issue of No. 1 ranking

By Julie Cart
The Los Angeles Times

It's time for eating crow, and for reviewing the always controversial rankings.

Looking to move up from No. 2 in the ranking, Andre Agassi said during the early stages of the just-completed Australian Open: "If I don't win this tournament, I don't want to be ranked No. 1."

Oops. That was said after then-No. 1 Pete Sampras was ousted in the third round and it looked as if Agassi would encounter little resistance on his way to reclaiming the title. It was also well before Agassi got his racket handed to him by Michael Chang in the semifinals.

After losing to Chang, Agassi revised his earlier statement to note that the ranking is also a reflection of an entire year's work, not the measure of performance at a single tournament—a self-serving reassessment if ever there was one.

Agassi gained the No. 1 ranking, but his play and attitude during the Australian Open have damaged a reputation he had carefully reconstructed. For the first time in the two years since his return after wrist surgery, Agassi is showing signs of his underachieving former self.

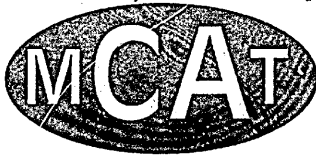

The unconvincing chest injury that kept Agassi out of the Davis Cup final was presumably the problem that sent him to Australia out of shape and overweight. His tennis was mercurial, to say the least. He looked shabby and needed five sets to defeat a qualifier, then showed pluck in coming back from two sets down to beat Jim Courier.

It was the Chang match that did the damage. Agassi didn't so much lose to Chang as capitulate. Where he had shown courage and skill in coming back against Courier, Agassi showed only lethargy and lack of interest against Chang. He didn't move to the ball, and when he did connect, his shots were wild and lacking conviction.

Worse, it didn't appear that he cared.

Still, thanks to the convulsions of the ATP computer, Agassi comes away with the No. 1 ranking.

Johnson's absence was actually good for game

By Shaun Powell
Newsday

His timing was always impeccable, anyway. He came to the NBA a bubbly, innocent rookie in 1979, when the state league needed life. He brought flash and showmanship to a team that happened to play in Hollywood.

His arrival coincided with Larry Bird and together they formed an irresistible rivalry for a decade.

With the bounce pass, the three-point shot or the junior, junior sky hook, Magic Johnson was always right on time.

This is no different. While announcing plans Monday for his comeback to the NBA, Johnson said he was "disappointed" and "frustrated" that he hadn't returned sooner.

But in truth, Johnson needed to take those four years off. The league needed him to take the time off. Everyone needed him to take some time off.

Johnson needed to go away because folks had to clear their heads. There was a deadly virus snaking through his veins. No one was fully aware of the dangers, if there were any.

There were fears—reasonable fears—about whether Johnson was putting his life at risk and risking the lives of others. Karl Malone spoke up and was immediately chastised for being insensitive, but The Mailman was only delivering a message others were too timid to articulate.

There was plenty Johnson needed to learn about his condition. Everyone needed to be educated, too, and that's why Magic isn't returning two years, two months or even two days too soon.

In four years, he managed to do what others thought impossible: He squashed the concerns and fears. Time has placed a muzzle on Malone, and in the NBA's Manhattan offices, commissioner David Stern no longer sweats.

In those four years, Johnson stayed healthy and strong. He played basketball around the world. Whenever he did make news, he stayed in the sports section, not the medical section.

continue, and the Salukis must stay focused the rest of the season in order to claim the MVC title. McClendon said.

"Especially this road trip," she said "We need to beat Creighton and Drake. I think they're in the top half, anyway, probably ranked three and four in the conference."

"We need to keep those two teams contained so we can stay in second place until it's time to play Southwest."

Senior guard Tracy Holscher said the squad can still improve in the second half of the season.

"We had our little trials and troubles at the beginning of the year, but I expected us to do a little bit better than we have," she said. "I think we'll end up doing a lot better than where we're at right now. I think we have a lot more potential than we've shown even yet."

Freshman forward O'Desha Proctor said being in second place at this point in the season gives the squad incentive to play hard.

"I'd rather be second at the middle of the season and be first when it all ends," she said. "They only count who is first, last. So, I'd rather be first last if it means being second now."

been the man at the post for the Salukis, and sophomore guard Troy Hudson added a new dimension to his game with the new back-door cuts installed by Herrin.

Both players and the team have benefited from the change, and the improved 48-percent shooting speaks for itself.

"He (Tucker) is a great post-up player because he's 6'4", and with our three guard rotation, he usually has someone who is either slower or smaller on him," Hawkins said.

"He's a great player down there, and we have to take advantage of that."

Hawkins also said that the back-door cuts will help the Salukis with dribble penetration, and help the team react: the free-throw line more often.

"I think it gives an added dimension because we haven't been getting to the free-throw line, and that's why he (Herrin) put it in" he said.

"(He did it) just to get us some dribble drives towards the hoop, and we'll get to the free-throw line."

"We've been outshot mercifully from the free-throw line all year, and that's something we have to get points from."

"Against Evansville we had the same number of field goals, they go to the free-throw line, and we get beat by 12. That's something you have to have. You have to score inside, outside, and from the free-throw line."

Hawkins said the team has not lost its intensity through the losing streak, and confidence and execution are the keys to a Saluki victory.

"We were fired up last night (at Creighton), and we've been ready to play every night," Hawkins said.

"Last night's effort was great. You can't complain about the effort that was there. I think it's executing, and finding a way to win."

"We know we're struggling right now, and maybe instead of thinking we can win down the stretch, maybe we were thinking 'we've lost three in a row, how are we going to lose this one.' I think the effort was there, and that's a positive."

Dawgs seek end of losing streak

Salukis to take on Indiana State tonight

By Chad Anderson
DE Sports Editor

Tonight is the night for the men's basketball team as it hosts Indiana State University, trying to end its four-game losing streak at 7:05 p.m. in SIU Arena.

The Salukis, 9-10, 2-6, are in danger of losing their fifth consecutive game, something no Saluki team has done since the 1987-88 season, and a spot in the Missouri Valley Conference depends on the team's ability to play well down the home stretch of the season.

That losing streak also happened to the 1985-86 and 1986-87 teams when SIUC coach Rich Herrin took the helm of the program in 1985, and started a rebuilding process that would eventually lead to a three-peat of the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament Championship.

The team remains optimistic, though, and sophomore guard Shane Hawkins said the team played well enough to win by shooting 48-percent from the floor Jan. 29 at Creighton.

"I think it's positive because it's the first game in a while that we've finally shot the ball well," he said.

"We have to shoot the ball well, but we have to do other things."

Rich Herrin
Saluki basketball coach

"For us to win, we have to shoot the ball well, but we have to do other things. We have to rebound, and last night (Jan. 29 at Creighton) was uncharacteristic of us turning the ball over 20 times. That is something we haven't been doing, but you have to find ways to win around that, and we're not doing that right now."

Against Creighton, the Saluki offense took a slightly different look with the addition of back-door cuts and a dominate post player, which gave SIUC 12 free-throw attempts, and added 10 points to the score—something that has been missing this season.

Salukis hitting stride, look for MVC lead

By Melanie Gray
DE Assistant Sports Editor

Second place is good, but first place is better.

SIUC's women's basketball team is tied with Illinois State for second place in the Missouri Valley Conference with a 7-2 record, and with nine regular season games left, the Salukis have their eye on first place.

The team struggled at the start of the season, not playing at full strength.

SIUC weathered losses of senior forwards Robin Downs and Heather Slater, and senior guard Nikki Gilmore. The Salukis were also waiting for junior forward Niki Washington to arrive.

Downs was sidelined indefinitely with an irregular heartbeat, while Slater was academically ineligible for the first five games of the season. Gilmore missed four games because of a leg injury received Nov. 27 in drive-by shooting. Washington transferred to SIUC at the start of second semester.

The squad has recovered from a shaky start to win six of its last eight games, and Slater said the team is confident going into the last half of the season.

"We knew once we got everybody back that we could make a run for the title," she said. "We always knew in our minds that we had a chance to win. We're just now putting it together."

Kasia McClendon, junior guard for SIUC, said even with the return of Gilmore and Slater, she is not comfortable at the number two position.

"I wouldn't say comfortable, because anything can happen, but I feel our chemistry has improved, it's more consistent now," McClendon said. "I feel good about that, but I wouldn't say comfortable."

The chemistry and consistent play must continue, and the Salukis must

Brown: Super Bowl MVP caps year full of personal turmoil

"My heroes have always been cowboys," country music star Waylon Jennings once sang.

In all likelihood, a 12th-round draft pick out of Texas Christian University may not have been what Jennings had in mind when he wrote the ballad, but, Larry Brown of the Dallas Cowboys definitely meets the standards of a hero.

If ever a player was deserving of the title it's Brown, who will long be remembered as Super Bowl XXX's Most Valuable Player, and only the fifth defensive player in Super Bowl history to garner the award.

Brown, a seemingly unheard of

cornerback prior to Dallas' 27-17 triumph over the Pittsburgh Steelers Sunday, rose to the occasion by picking off two Neil O'Donnell passes, helping pace the Cowboys to their third Super Bowl victory in four years.

However, Sunday's performance is not the only event which qualifies Brown as a hero prospect. For most, two interceptions during the NFL's biggest game is hardly enough to qualify him as a hero, but overcoming personal tragedy off the field, while at the same time facing criticism on it, does make Brown a likely candidate for the award.

Earlier in the season, life as a Cowboy looked anything but good for Brown. In fact, the future looked very bleak for.

In his fifth year as a Cowboy, Brown was being criticized for
