Carbondale police stop talks pending arbitration appeal

By Tony Davies
Staff Writer

The Carbondale Police Officer's Association (CPOA) has broken off contract negotiations with the city pending an appeal of a June 27, Jackson County Circuit Court ruling which dismissed a CPOA request for binding arbitration with the city.

"Since the city is not increasing its money offer we can't see continuing negotiations," Robert Goro, CPOA president, said. The CPOA submitted a letter to the city manager's office Monday informing the city of the association's intentions.

City Manager Carroll Fry said he was disappointed the police could not accept the city's most recent contract offer and that talks were being broken off until the appeal is considered by the courts.

The city's latest proposal was a 6.3 percent increase over 10 months, followed by an increase of 6.3 percent for the second year of the 22-month contract. Fry said, "That's all the city can offer because that's all the money that has been budgeted."

The city had offered to consider advisory arbitration, but the police were not interested, Fry said. The CPOA is requesting a 10 percent salary increase for one year. Goro said, "The CPOA is willing to resume negotiations if the city were to offer a reasonable increase."

Carbondale Police have been working without a contract since May 1, when a two year contract expired.

Goro said, "If the appeal process does not come out in the CPOA's favor, we will have to accept what the city has to offer."

No date has been set to appeal the earlier court decision.

Spending cut by $1 billion

Thompson vetoes three tax relief bills

By Bob Springer
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD (AP)—Gov. James R. Thompson Monday announced vetoes of three of the most debated tax relief measures approved by the spring session of the Illinois General Assembly.

His action on one of the vetoes—a measure providing property tax rebates to about two million Illinois households—came before the bill arrived on the governor's desk.

Thompson vetoed a measure that would have allowed state income tax payers to hike their standard $1,000 exemption each year by the rate of inflation. He said Illinois' treasury couldn't afford the $53 million cost.

Also vetoed was a bill to increase from $10,000 to $15,000 the maximum annual income allowed for senior citizens and the disabled to qualify for the "circuit-breaker" property tax rebate program. Thompson said he supports a measure to raise the income ceiling to $12,000 a year for those persons, and said the state couldn't afford the extra $16 million a year to raise the maximum another $3,000.

But the hottest bill of the session—the property tax proposal supported by Thompson's November opponent, Democratic Comptroller Michael J. Bakalis—hadn't hit the governor's desk when he announced his veto of it, Thompson told a news conference.

All told, the governor's vetoes amounted to $1.13 billion in spending authorized by the Legislature, close to the $1.4 billion amount by which Thompson contends lawmakers outspent his budget proposals.

"If the high-spending programs authorized by the Democrat-controlled Legislature were implemented, we'd have to raise taxes to pay for them," Thompson said. "I will not do that."

Most of the vetoes came in the form of reductions to large state agencies' budgets, erasing lawmakers' "pet" road projects in the state transportation budget and cutting capital construction projects. Thompson said the construction projects must go because lawmakers failed to pass a bill to authorize selling bonds to raise the necessary money for the construction.

Thompson said he vetoed the property tax rebate proposal because it "pretends to offer tax relief. All it does is take money out of one pocket and puts it in another, while charging the taxpayer the extra fee to do it."

Thompson said his veto of that bill—which like the others must go back to lawmakers Nov. 14 for their possible override—would save the state treasury $90 million this year. Bakalis has said the property tax rebates would cost only $13 million this year.

Thompson said he has not actually received the tax rebate bill from House Speaker William A. Edmund, D-Bensenville, or Senate President Thomas C. Hynes, D-Chicago, both of whom must sign it before forwarding it to the governor's desk.

Since he made up his mind to veto the bill, Thompson said he wrote his veto message and announced it. He said a delay by Hynes or Redmond in getting it to him would be to no avail while a citizens' group presses for a letter-writing campaign urging Thompson to sign it.

The Illinois Public Action Council, the group that drafted the measure, accused Thompson of trying to kill the concept by vetoing it before it reached his desk.

"If Thompson thinks he's going to make property taxes a dead issue, taxpayers will show him how wrong he is," Leo Jumps, public action's chairman, said in a statement.

Bob Heineman, the group's lobbyist, said the letter-writing campaign urging Thompson to sign the bill would be intensified after the governor's pledge to veto it.

Campaigning in Peoria, Bakalis said Thompson's announcement of the pending veto showed his lack of concern for Illinois citizens.

Other spending vetoes announced by Thompson include:

—More than $40 million in road projects not included in the state Department of Transportation budget but tacked onto its appropriation bill by lawmakers in the waning hours of the

City Council approves code of ethics

By Pat Karlak
Staff Writer

After nearly a year of wrestling with details, the City Council unanimously approved a code of ethics for city employees and officials Monday night.

Numerous drafts of the code have come before the council since last July, following accusations by Mayor Neal Eckert that Council Member Hans Fischer, a partner in the architectural firm of Fischer-Stein Associates, was using his council position to "enhance his personal income."

Fischer was later cleared by City Attorney John Womick of any conflict of interest charges—but the conflict over what the proposed ordinance should include continued.

The final draft was approved without further discussion of the matter.

The code covers more than 400 city employees and officials, including the council, and punishment for violation of the ordinance is suspension, removal from office or termination of employment.

City Manager Carroll Fry, under the ordinance, is empowered to hear cases of code infractions by employees. The council, upon the advice of a five-member ethics board, is to determine whether the city manager, council members, various board and commission members or city clerk are in violation of the ordinance. The ordinance prohibits officials from using city-owned property for personal convenience or profit, and bans employees from accepting gifts or favors to influence their position.

It also forbids employees from disclosing confidential information concerning the affairs of the city to enhance their personal interests, and says officials may not purchase city property.

The code is designed to discourage officials and employees from granting special considerations to certain citizens and residential areas, or representing a private business which has dealings with the city.

The ethics board, whose members are to be appointed by the mayor with the consent of the council, will serve as an advisory body for investigations of wrongdoing.

Members will serve a four-year term. The code permits the council to take alleged violations to court upon hearing evidence presented by the board.

Gus Bode

Gus says if the new code of ethics is followed to the letter, 90 percent of the city's officials would be looking for new jobs.

Emergency call centralization to be studied by county board

By Mark Peterson
Staff Writer

Getting emergency assistance in Jackson County may soon be as easy as dialing 911 on the telephone.

The emergency dialing program, currently being studied by the Health and Safety Committee of the Jackson County Board, would enable people in the county to quickly contact emergency agencies—police, fire, emergency rescue, etc.—by simply dialing those three digits.

At a recent Health and Safety Committee meeting, details of the 911 program were presented by Jack Houghlan, a 911 program coordinator for General Telephone Co.

Houghlan said that any 911 calls made would be transmitted directly to a Public Safety Answering Point (PSAP) through a foreign exchange line. He said this means the call would not go through any switchboards or other channels before reaching the PSAP station.

Once the call reaches the station, special operators there would dispatch, by radio or telephone, the necessary emergency unit to the location where it is needed.

Houghlan also said that it was likely no prefixes or area codes would be needed to reach the PSAP station. The station, he said, would serve the entire county and its location would be decided by the board.

Some local government officials expressed concern that because different cities or towns in the county share the same exchange there could be confusion as to which fire or police department would respond to the call.

Houghlan said that issue would have to be worked out by the board but added that one possible way of getting around the problem is to give certain areas their own prefixes or suffixes to be dialled along with the 911.

Houghlan also was asked what would be done about cities such as Cartersville that are in Williamson County but have some residents with Jackson County exchanges.

Because these people have Jackson County exchanges they could pick up the phone, dial 911, and an emergency unit from Jackson County would be dispatched.

Houghlan said this is a problem that will have to be dealt with by the Illinois Commerce Commission (ICC). He said the problem is not only technical but political as well.

"General Telephone is not trying to sell this system," Houghlan said. "We are simply trying to provide information about it to local government agencies."

He said that the program, which by federal law must be implemented by 1985, will be as sophisticated as the county board decides it should be. He noted that there is equipment that can be added to the system that will record the time of the incoming call, where it was placed and conversations conducted on the special 911 line.

"If fire departments could cut one minute off their response time, the reduction in property damage would almost pay for the new system," Houghlan said. "Also, criminal apprehension will increase considerably with 911."

Based on national statistics, there would be an average of about 14 calls an hour placed on the 911 system in Jackson County, Houghlan said.

Sharon Kowalzik, chairman of the Health and Safety Committee, said the committee is trying to evaluate the type of equipment that would be best suited for Jackson County and which areas of the county are interested in the program.

Money, paper to be saved by switch to microfiche

By Brenda Hood
Staff Writer

Fewer trees will be sacrificed to SIU this year because of the University's new microfiche system. Reports of more than 70 pages will be recorded on microfiche instead of paper, according to Barry Bateman, executive director of computing services. Administrative units at the library will be the main users of the system, which is being coordinated by Computing Services.

The switch to microfiche was determined feasible based upon a comparison of the amount of paper used by the University with the durability of microfiche and the amount of storage space saved.

Microfiche is a plastic sheet about the size of a 3 by 5 index card, similar to microfilm. About 210 pages of information can be recorded on one sheet of microfiche, Bateman said.

Conversion to microfiche has already begun. About 113 microfiche readers have been placed on campus.

Morris Library's daily circulation record will soon be filed on microfiche, according to Darrell Jenkins, administrative services librarian. The library already has a collection of articles and reports on microfiche, he said.

Because of the cost of conversion, the system is expected to break even the first year, Bateman said. Money will be saved on paper costs (about $30,000 the first year), some of the labor costs, storage costs and some mailing costs. Some reports that would have had to be shipped in boxes can now be mailed in an envelope with a 15-cent stamp, he said.

Material to be put on microfiche will be recorded magnetically on a disc, then transferred to the computer in the basement of Wham. Microfiche are made overnight, he said.

Quite a few schools use microfiche systems, Bateman said. "I think once the conversion is made and everyone uses it and gets used to it, they will be delighted with it," he said.

Microfiche can be stored in a small space for up to 30 years, according to Bateman. The cost of the original is about 3 cents, with duplicates costing only a few cents each.

Student records have been recorded on microfiche for some time, he said, but it had to be made off campus.

The University has two printing machines that have been running constantly to print all the various reports generated at the school, he said. The cost of repairing one of these could be as much as $50,000. The microfiche system should take some of the pressure off these machines, he said.

Since reports of less than 70 pages will not be produced on microfiche, few students will actually use the new system. Several readers on campus, will be available for student and faculty use, however.

Each reader costs about $200. Readers will be added as the system expands, with an expected 50 to be added next year.

Each ton of paper not used will save about 28 trees, Jenkins said.

Vance, Dayan, Kamel meet for peace talks

LONDON (AP)—The United States will urge Egypt to spell out security guarantees for Israel in new mideast peace talks opening Tuesday behind the walls of a medieval fortress in south England, U.S. officials said.

The participants—Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Foreign Ministers Moshe Dayan of Israel and Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel of Egypt—arrived separately Monday behind a shield of tough security and flew by helicopter to isolated Leeds Castle.

U.S. officials, who asked not to be named, said Vance hopes that specific assurances from Egypt—particularly on how to cope with extremists on the West Bank of the Jordan River—could lead to matching Israeli concessions.

The purpose is to draw Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin into an acknowledgement that Israel will withdraw from the West Bank, won from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast War.

An Israeli newspaper reported Monday that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's latest peace proposals, which have not been publicly disclosed, call for Israel to turn the West Bank over to Jordan after five years, with Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians jointly administering it in the interim.

Sadat also would agree to a continued

Foundation decision supports apartheid

Members of the SIU Foundation voted unanimously several weeks ago to retain the foundation's investments in U.S. companies doing business in South Africa. The investments are in 11 companies and total nearly half a million dollars.

The decision was based on a five-month investigation by a foundation special committee. Results of this study indicated that it was appropriate for the foundation to hold stock in these companies. But the reasoning behind the decision is often inaccurate, if not completely fallacious.

The committee found that divestiture would be less beneficial to South African blacks than continued investment in the multi-national corporations, according to Joseph Goodman, executive director of the foundation and member of the investigative committee. He contended evidence gathered indicated black leaders would not support an economic boycott.

The United Nations General Assembly has found evidence to the contrary. After hearing testimony by black leaders of various South African organizations, including the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, the assembly adopted a resolution urging all states to cease economic collaboration with South Africa. The vote was 111 to 7, with 22 abstentions. The U.N. Security Council is now considering a similar resolution.

In explaining the conclusions of the foundation committee, Goodman also said that employment with U.S. firms in South Africa is often the best way for blacks to get ahead. It seems the companies are doing all they can to help blacks, according to Goodman.

Yet the overall performance of corporations in South Africa was condemned earlier this year by the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Africa. The committee's findings: some companies do not award equal pay for equal work, most do not promote blacks equally with whites and not one company negotiates with black trade unions.

Black labor unions is a topic not covered by the Sullivan principles, a set of general guidelines developed by a minister who is also on the General Motors board of directors. The six-point pledge requires companies to work for racial equality, including equal and fair employment practices and equal pay for equal work.

The 11 firms which the foundation has stock in have signed this code, which has been termed as a relatively easy way out for the corporations by some supporters of divestiture.

Goodman has said that only a few small liberal arts schools have divested themselves of South African stock. The Oregon Board of Higher Education has sold its holdings in 27 companies that deal in South Africa, a total of $5 million in shares. The University of Massachusetts divested itself of $650,000 in stocks, half the school's total investments. These schools are included with that group of small colleges.

The report's claim that the foundation would not be able to maintain its record of higher than average return if they were to divest themselves of the stocks is more than likely correct. Business in South Africa is highly profitable, since the policy of apartheid keeps unemployment among blacks high and therefore, wages low. The report continues by stating that a reduction in the value of investments would violate the foundation's legal obligation to manage its funds prudently.

But what of the moral and ethical obligation to manage funds prudently? The Carter administration has been unwilling to impose economic sanctions on South Africa. The United States was one of the seven countries that voted against the U.N. resolution to economically boycott the country. Yet, by continued investment in these companies, moral and financial support is being given by the SIU Foundation to the policy of apartheid.

The multi-national companies provide an economic base for South Africa's military-industrial complex. Forty percent of manufacturing investment is provided by these firms, as is 60 percent of the assets of the country's 20 largest banks. A full-scale economic boycott would do much to bring about a national convention, one of the main objectives of the black leaders.

Apartheid is a problem that has gotten worse during the past 10 years. The Security Council recently condemned South Africa's racist regime for "escalating massive repression against all opponents of apartheid and the killings of peaceful demonstrators and political detainees."

A recent report by the U.S. Special Committee Against Apartheid stated that policies and actions of the regime since Oct. 31, 1977 have greatly aggravated the situation in South Africa. During this time, the country's prime minister called early elections to obtain a mandate to reject international pressure toward majority rule.

The SIU Foundation could have helped lead other universities and groups toward fulfillment of basic human equality. But the desire for financial profits overshadowed the morality of the investments. The foundation needs to better research the facts on South Africa. With a more complete pool of information to draw on, members of the foundation's board might reach the only morally correct decision—divestiture.

No-frills medicine curbs high costs

Arthur Hoppe

Threats of Government controls to curb soaring costs have panicked the medical profession. One result has been the recent introduction of the "no-frills operation."

My first experience with this innovative procedure came last week when I had a nasty accident while shaving. I immediately called Attila General Hospital and, after six or seven minutes of listening to Montovani, was connected with the Emergency Room.

"I seem to have carelessly severed my left ear," I explained. "Do you think you might sew it back on?"

"Thank you for calling Attila," said a pleasant female voice. "Yes, we are now offering a no-frills ear connection for only $241.93."

"I'll be right there," I said.
"Not so fast, sir," she said. "To qualify, you must book your operation at least thirty days in advance and agree to stay in the hospital no less than three nor more than six days. And don't forget to bring your own sheets, towels and pajamas."

I said that thirty days seemed like a long time to be sitting around with my ear in my lap.
"Why don't you put it in the freezer?" she suggested.

I said I supposed I could. But three days of hospital food...

"Not in our no-frills section, sir. I was just going to recommend you bring nine box lunches. And don't forget your Band-Aids and iodine."
"And scalpel?"

"Not at all. Attila offers for rent a complete line of scalpels, forceps, wooden mallets and whatever else you might need to make your operation as pleasant as possible."

"Wooden mallets?"

"Either is available only in first class. But each of our wide-bodied rooms with eight beds across comes with a hot plate for boiling water. And we can arrange to have a self-propelled Econo-Gurney waiting at the door to take you to the operating room."

"Self-propelled?"

"It comes with a six-foot-long rubber-tipped pole." I said I thought I'd better come right in as I was bleeding rather profusely.

"How many are there in your party?" she asked.

"Just me and my ear."

"That's a shame. I thought you might take advantage of our 33-percent-off Family Plan. Or if you happen to have twenty-four lodge brothers who would like ear connections, we can offer a most attractive group rate. Failing that, could you wait until after midnight? It's 40-percent-off on Nightowl Surgery. You wouldn't believe the number of nightowls who are moonlighting these days."

"Hang the expense," I said. "I'll go first class."

"Well," she said, "you must admit we're doing our best to prove the spirit of competition and not Government controls is the way to keep medical costs down."

"Right," I said. "And how are no-frills operations working?"

"I don't know," she said. "No one's ever tried one."

Van service future uncertain

By Deb Browne
Staff Writer

Sponsors of the Women's Transit Authority (WTA), a three-month-old nighttime bus service for women, intend to continue the service at least until students return in the fall, to see if the number of riders increases.

Existing funding for the WTA will last only through August, according to Marie Kingsbury, coordinator of the project. The budget for the service through April of 1979 is $4,650, with $2,000 coming from both SIU and the Carbondale City Council and $650 from the Women's Center.

For the year from May 1, 1978 to April 30, 1979, the projected budget is based on van rental costing $3,000, gas and oil costing $1,300, two part-time drivers being paid $5,004, publicity costing $350, and a wheelchair ramp which would cost about $500. WTA also has $1,125 left to pay on insurance. Kingsbury's salary as coordinator is being paid through half-time SIU assistantships in both student services and rehabilitation instruction.

Kingsbury plans to approach student government and the Graduate Student Council for more funds. She said, however, that grant possibilities do not look good.

The WTA started running on March 15 as a pilot project with $1,200 from both SIU and the city as well as $150 and driver fringe benefits paid by the Women's Center. Fliers were put up and wallet-sized cards outlining the route were made available in the dorms. An ad was run in the Daily Egyptian. Laminated paper signs posted on three-foot high stakes marked the stops.

"We were getting regulars before the semester ended," said Mary Kay Bachman, one of the drivers. The regulars were women going to and from night classes and student jobs. Ridership at that time averaged 9.7 a night. When the semester ended, ridership dropped to five a night, according to Kingsbury, but increased slightly after a news article about the WTA appeared June 27.

"I think it's worth trying to get the money together to go at least into fall," Kingsbury said. "When the students come back, they should give us a good idea of whether or not women want it."

George Everingham, human resources coordinator acting as liaison between the City Council and the WTA, said the WTA will stand or fall on its own merits regardless of ridership. He added that the council had found the Women's Center to be a credible group that would not carry the service on unless they believe it was needed.

While WTA organizers are not convinced that enough women want the service to justify its continued funding, they are not sure if low ridership is due to lack of awareness of the service, low awareness of the number of rapes and assaults of women, or the structure of the route itself.

"We hear about the assaults," said Bachman, who also worked for the Rape Action Committee conducted by the Women's Center. "Sure, there's no need for caution if you never see it."

Some women who utilize the center's services come from wife-battering situations, Bachman said. "They are fearful to even go out to the grocery store," she said, explaining the need for occasional door-step service to places like Evergreen Terrace and Southern Hills.

The timing of the route was set up so that deviations could be made without missing a designated departure time. A woman can call the Women's Center at 529-2224 for such individual service. The driver then picks up the message when she returns to the center on the hour.

Kingsbury said that in the fall, when hearings were held to sound out the desire for a women's bus service, more women were "afraid and concerned about the number of assaults." Since then, Kingsbury said, the press has not picked up on them.

She said the Rape Action Committee received nine calls since January from women who said they had been raped.

Moonshine, matchbooks helped build Powell's political fortune

VIENNA (AP)—"We knew Paul had a lot of money, never thought it was more than a million, though," says a member of the Spit-Whittle club.

He and other members of the oldtimers' club were speaking about Paul Powell after the courts last week closed the book on Powell's $4.7 million estate, which included $750,000 cash found in a shoebox. The Spit-Whittle club is composed of retirees who spend most of their days on gray, tree-shaded benches just outside the Johnson County courthouse or in the drug store across from the town square.

Powell, longtime legislator and former secretary of state, died in 1970 at the Mayo Clinic. He was 68. His will was in the pocket of his jacket in a Rochester, Minn., hotel and spelled out gifts to his secretaries, aides, charities, service institutions and political organizations.

The biggest beneficiary was Margaret Hensley, Powell's secretary and companion, who was with him when he died. She received $695,200 worth of Chicago Downs Race stock, $15,000 cash and a car valued at $3,000.

By the time the long legal wrangling was over, the Internal Revenue service received $1.7 million, the state of Illinois $322,590 and attorneys' and executor's fees totaled $512,000.

A retired dentist recalled that Powell once told him: "I didn't know what money was until I went to Springfield. I watched those Chicago boys taking it in and said to myself, 'You country boy. Who needs to run a restaurant when you can get into this?'"

Powell ran a confectionery, diner and cafe in Vienna and before going to the legislature was on the local school board and was elected mayor.

Paul O'Neal, 83, recalls how he was Democratic county chairman in 1934 and searching for a candidate for the legislature.

Leisure service battles boredom

By Pamela Retilly
Staff Writer

Students who are bored by Carbondale's bar scene can find other ways to spend their free time by contacting the Leisure Exploration service, a year-old program that gives information about activities within a 50-mile radius of Carbondale.

Hiking, camping, horseback riding and other outdoor activities are the most asked about, according to Linda Bernard, supervisor of the program.

Leisure Exploration also has information on things to do in St. Louis and has files on the more than 100 state parks in Southern Illinois, Bernard said. The service can find antique shops, special historical sites or music festivals in the area.

The service also provides leisure awareness workshops and individual leisure counseling, Bernard said.

More than 700 students participated in workshops that started in the spring of 1978 and 100 are participating this summer, Bernard said. The workshop helps people find what they like to do with their free time and how to do it.

Bernard said that through exercises and group discussion in a three-week workshop, the students learn what they value most in leisure activities, how to integrate what they like to do with the time they have and how to decide about all the alternative choices they can make.

The summer staff of eight and the 10 to 12 in the fall and spring are all trained in paracounseling for leisure, Bernard said.

Unemployed to clean Chicago?

CHICAGO-AP—Rubblestrewn neighborhoods can be made into pictures of beauty by putting to work those persons who have the most difficulty in finding a job, a coalition of community groups believes.

The chronically unemployed—the young, the elderly and minorities—can be put to work on mundane and creative projects to make their neighborhoods cheerier and more productive places to live.

"The work that most needs doing is in the very places where people who live most need work," says the Chicago Coalition on the Right to Earn a Living.

One of the coalition's projects is the Center for Neighborhood Technology, which operates out of a storefront office. It argues there is plenty of work to do in Chicago's low-income neighborhoods.

Why not put unemployed residents to work sprucing up littered parkways, cleaning up park lagoons, building and tending hundreds of rooftop solar greenhouses, and managing fish farms that could be built in the basements of factories, the center asks.

The coalition believes the $7.3 billion flood protection tunnel project of the Metropolitan Sanitary District should be scuttled. It would be wiser to invest money in water retention and waste management projects, including ponds, reservoirs and belts of green, all built in city neighborhoods while providing jobs for unemployed residents there, the coalition says.

Alfred Portis, a member of the center's board, also talks about urban agricultural programs such as the rooftop greenhouses which would give employment not only to neighborhood laborers but also to greenhouse farmers and product marketers.

One greenhouse has already been built, another is under construction, seven are planned for this summer and fall with another half-dozen still in the planning stages, said Scott Bernstein, center director.

He said most of the greenhouses contain about 800 square feet but the center is negotiating to take over a 15,000 square-foot abandoned greenhouse.

Food from the greenhouses is nutritious and can be purchased by residents at reasonable cost. The rooftop greenhouses help conserve energy by cooling the roof during the summer and keeping heat from escaping through the roof when the weather is cold, Portis said.

"The potential is definitely there for using agricultural programs in the city," he said. "It's a tremendous idea. It's hard for some of us to picture that happening because the only inner city we've known is a concrete one. But technology is there, and it's feasible in terms of cost."

Vets unaware of benefits according to VA official

By Jill Michellie
Staff Writer

Vietnam veterans could be paid up to $10,986 in benefits while attending school, according to Tim Lithgow, media representative at the Office of Veteran Affairs.

Lithgow said that many veterans are unaware of these benefits and do not apply for them in the 10 year time period of eligibility.

A single veteran attending school full time is paid $311 per month for 48 months, Lithgow said. A married student can earn $370 for the same time period. Part-time students can receive $156 a month for 96 months, he said.

"Monetary benefits of using the GI Bill are great," said Lithgow. "The real advantage is that with the assistance of educational benefits, veterans can have a richer life and a better standard of living."

Institutions approved for training include public schools, vocational schools, business schools, correspondence schools, community colleges, universities and professional, trade, or technical schools.

Benefits can also be used for farm cooperative programs, apprenticeships and any other on-the-job training programs, Lithgow said.

A veteran's eligibility for the assistance is terminated 10 years after his military separation date. Some veterans who were prevented from beginning or completing a program because of physical or mental disability may receive an extension of this date under current Veteran's Administration (VA) regulations, he said.

To be eligible for GI Bill benefits, a veteran must have served more than 180 days of active military service. A veteran is also qualified if he served from Feb. 1, 1955 and Dec. 31, 1976 and received an honorable discharge. "Even if a veteran is in doubt about his eligibility, he should file anyway," he said.

To qualify for the military scholarship, a veteran must have entered the service from Illinois for more than 180 days of continuous active duty, received an honorable discharge and have returned to Illinois within six months after separation from the service.

The Doobie Brothers

Doobie Brothers shine at MRF

By Jim McCarty
Staff Writer

The Doobie Brothers delighted their fans at the Mississippi River Festival Friday night with a slick show that included most of the Doobie's familiar classics as well as some new music from their next album which is due for release in September.

The band opened the hour-and-a-half-long set with a string of familiar tunes like "Jesus is Just All Right With Me," "Without Love," and "It Keeps You Runnin'."

Then, as guitarist Patrick Simmons picked the opening notes to a power-rocker called "I Cheat the Hangman," a thick fog bursted the stage as well as the first five rows of seats. They seemed to turn it up for this number and with the help of the fog, multi-colored flashing lights and a spanning mirror ball, they had the audience on its feet before the concert was twenty minutes old.

As if they knew they had the audience where they wanted them, which they did, the Doobies took advantage of the opportunity to introduce some new music that included some solid rock-and-rollers segued together by free form jazz passages. The best of the new material however, was a country pickin' tune that was led with authority by lead guitarist Jeff "Skunk" Baxter.

Baxter, who was influential in the success of many fine Steely Dan albums, was superb all night long. His quick, clear riffs remind the listener of the I-can-play-twelve-bars-faster-than-anyone work done by Jeff Beck on some of his earlier albums. This style is a perfect compliment: to the Doobie Brothers' other guitarist, Patrick Simmons, whose heavy chords and hard-hitting leads are a trademark of many of the Doobie Brothers hit songs that have become so familiar to radio listeners over the years.

A Review

Baxter and Simmons took to the front of the stage a few times during the show for some electrifying guitar work, but throughout most of the set Baxter remained perched on a stool wearing a pair of headphones. With his feet propped up on the stage monitor and his eyes hidden behind a pair of dark glasses Baxter at times seemed oblivious to the roars of the crowd, leaving Simmons to handle most of the grandstanding, a task he handled well and with pleasure.

But Baxter and Simmons weren't the only ones the crowd responded to. Keyboard player Michael McDonald took command of the stage every time he sang. His throaty, somewhat somber voice has made songs like "It Keeps You Runnin'," and "Takin' it to the Streets," classics in their own time.

The fact that everyone in this band sings, and sings well, is an important asset for the Doobie Brothers. Since the lead vocals are passed around, each song has a slightly different sound to it and none of the singers seems to get tired or dry-throated. This allows the band to move from song to song quickly, pausing just long enough to say a few friendly words to the audience.

The brilliant vocal work of the band was especially apparent on their sing-a-long tune "Black Water." The harmonies on this number sound almost barber-shoppy despite its country flavor. Simmons encouraged the audience to join in on the chorus and they seemed happy to participate.

As if this weren't enough, the band invited a friend of theirs, Keith Knudson, on stage to sing a blues number and help out with background vocals the rest of the night. Knudson, who sounded a little, and looked a lot like Joe Cocker, was a crowd pleaser.

The Doobies' front men are backed up by a strong percussion section featuring two drummers who play drums, bongos, bells and an oversized gong. The drummers, Tom Johnson and John Hartman, also contributed to the background vocals.

The band wrapped up the evening with yet another familiar tune, "China Grove." They stretched the song out a bit to allow for some more jamming from Baxter and Simmons, then finished it up with a bang as a flash bomb exploded while Simmons took a flying leap off the top of an amplifier.

In response to the lengthy applause the band returned for an encore of McDonald's powerful "Takin' it to the Streets." Then, just as I thought they had played all their old songs they came back once more to play a rousing version of "Take Me in Your Arms," to top off a sparkling evening of driving rock and country roll.

Although the show was scheduled to begin at 8 p.m., the Doobie Brothers didn't begin their set until almost ten o'clock. The warm-up act, Toby Beau, didn't get things started till almost 9 p.m. This didn't make much difference to the fans seated under the tent, but to those who sat out on the lawn in the rain, it was rather irritating.

Despite their late start, Toby Beau managed to warm the crowd up with a series of country-rock songs spiced up at the end by a version of "Dueling Banjos" from the movie, "Deliverance." Most of Toby Beau's songs featured strong vocals that sounded a little like those of Pure Prairie League. Unfortunately, the lyrics were rather corny and the instrumentation continuously fell into repetitive three-chord beats.

SIU wins cost-cutting award

By University News Service

A financial innovation which is expected to save SIU more than $1 million over the next 30 years has brought additional dividends.

The National Association of College and University Business Officers has awarded SIU $7,500 as second-place prize in a national cost reduction incentive competition. The award was made Friday at the association's annual meeting in Montreal.

Board of Trustees treasurer R. Dean Isbell, who came up with the innovation, accepted the cash award for the University.

Under Isbell's plan, SIU in December sold $34.7 million worth of revenue bonds to a consortium of

R. Dean Isbell

Chicago banks, and used the proceeds to refund in advance about $37 million in higher-priced construction bonds issued in the 1950's and 1960's. Because of an upgrading in SIU's bond rating, the newer bonds brought a lower rate of interest than the older bonds, saving the University an estimated $11.1 million over the 30-year life of the bonds.

SIU officials said the sale marked the first time such a technique had been used in higher education.

"Mr. Isbell conceived the idea and worked on it for a year and a half with a number of people in financial circles in Springfield and Chicago," said James Brown, general secretary to the SIU system.

Brown said SIU has received inquiries from several other universities on the refinancing technique.

New facility opened

Baptists aid unwed mothers

Southern Baptists in Illinois have opened a facility to care for unwed mothers, including hospitalization and delivery.

The facility is on the campus of the Baptist Children's Home in Carmi which since 1919 has cared for homeless or unwanted children.

Leon Talley, director of social services for the Home, said applications are now being accepted from girls and young women who wish to give birth to their babies, rather than choosing abortions.

"We want unmarried youth in Illinois to know there's an alternative to abortion, that we will care for them during their pregnancy, and that also, if desired by the mother, will place the baby with adoptive parents."

There is no charge for the service, although Talley said the Home hopes to recover basic costs, where the mother, her parents, or the father can afford to pay.

Talley said interested persons may contact him by telephone or mail, without obligation, even if they are not ready to make formal applications.

His address is Baptist Children's Home, Carmi, 62821. His telephone is 618-382-4164.

Logan College summer term enrollment up

Summer term baccalaureate and vocational-technical student enrollment at John A. Logan College numbers 803 according to an announcement by Don Middleton, Associate Dean of Student Services. This enrollment represents an increase of 34 students in the baccalaureate and vocational-technical enrollment in comparison to the summer term 1977. Of the 803 students currently enrolled, 439 are baccalaureate and 364 are occupational. Enrollment for the summer term shows 410 full-time students and 393 part-time students.

The summer term at John A. Logan College began on Monday, June 12.

Birds shot by hunters healed by doctor's team

By Richard Lowe Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Patching up birds of prey, shot from the sky by careless hunters, is a team effort. It takes a doctor, a trainer and a little help from the U.S. Interior Department.

For 30 years, Carl Schreiber has handled wounded red-tailed hawks, broad-winged hawks, screech owls, great horned owls and bald and golden eagles.

He takes them to veterinarian Mark Ingram, who cuts, pins and stitches until they're ready for trussing and, perhaps, release. Two often, as with a golden eagle wounded last winter, the birds are shot too severely to ever leave captivity. Some die after months on the mend.

"This one was shot in the wing with a high powered rifle," Schreiber said. "Its bones, similar to those in our forearms, were broken."

In shock and nearly comatose, the eagle underwent 90 minutes of surgery.

"He came to me first for amputation," Dr. Ingram said. "Then we tried to save it. We pinned both broken bones in the right wing and kept it wrapped for about three and a half weeks, checking for movement periodically."

"He's jumping to my fist and exercising as much as he can," Ingram said. "I'll be shortening his wing so he can use it better. He's using it fairly well now but I'm afraid it might break on him. When he leaves for the zoo I want to make sure I don't see him back here."

Another golden eagle Schreiber nursed and trained died en route to the zoo.

"We have three priorities in mind in crippled eagles," Willie Parker, an agent of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said. "The foremost is returning the bird to the wild. The second is a captive breeding ground if it can't be returned."

CPA receives gold as payment for services

By Cheryl Debes
AP Business Writer

CHICAGO (AP)—Like most Americans, Josiah Bailey, a certified public accountant, worries about inflation. So he began a new billing system April 1. He now charges his clients 0.2723 Troy ounces of gold for an hour's work.

Of course, the Morehead City, N.C., businessman still collects his fees in dollars. The difference is that they're dollars pegged to the price of gold.

Since early April, gold prices have fluctuated between $167.30 and $186.60 an ounce. Accordingly, Bailey's hourly rate slumped to $46.56 on April 24, then gradually increased to a peak $50.81 in mid-June.

But despite the fluctuations, Bailey is perfectly satisfied with his system. "When the price went down to $178 an ounce, I even sent a letter to my clients suggesting they take advantage of the decline," he chuckled.

Bailey says that's "my way of coping with inflation. I think that gold will retain its purchasing power better than paper currencies."

Bailey is among the first to take advantage of a federal law that last October restored the legality of receiving gold as payment for goods or services. Specifically, it makes contracts denominated in gold, or currencies linked to gold's price, enforceable in court.

Ancient Egyptian arthritis case interests disease researchers

CHICAGO (AP)—As mummies go, Harwa was something of a nobody. But an autopsy has made him a somebody, a prize of medical research.

No Pharaoh was Harwa. According to the inscription on his coffin, Harwa's job 3,500 years ago near Thebes was that of a caretaker at an Egyptian storehouse.

However, his facial features were remarkably well preserved, and that was about the only thing he had going for him. That and the fact he was chosen as the mummy that visitors to the Field Museum of Natural History could view through a fluoroscope. When the X ray machine developed problems, Harwa was retired to a storage room.

Researchers got permission to examine his mummified body in 1975. They found that Harwa died at the age of about 30 in unremitting pain from spinal arthritis.

Harwa, who was given to the museum as a gift in 1904, was put back on display in a remodeled Egypt hall last year, a spokesman said Monday.

Dr. Frederick Stenn, a part-time faculty member at Northwestern University, said death was brought on by an obscure degenerative bone disease called ochronosis. He said it was so seldom seen in the modern Western world that its incidence is estimated at one case for every 40 million persons.

Stenn said after ochronosis has run its course for a few years, disabling arthritis results and is frequently fatal. He said its cause is unknown and there is no cure.

Field curators would not permit the mummy's bandages to be disturbed. So Stenn and his colleagues used X-ray machines for what amounted to an autopsy.

Dr. James Milgram, an orthopedic surgeon, thrust a biopsy needle through the bandages into the right hip, withdrawing a tiny specimen of bone and tissue. Chemical analysis confirmed the diagnosis the X ray suggested, Stenn said.

"This kind of thing opens up a whole new field of interest on the part of the medical profession," said Stenn. "There's much to be learned in that which is dead. Our interest is to open up this field in a larger way, just as we now do with routine postmortem examination (modern autopsies). We need many more mummies. We need to know which diseases have changed over the centuries and which have not."

Stenn said Harwa was incapacitated by spinal arthritis.

"If he lived today, he would earn his living only in a very non-strenuous office job," he said. "We know something of the life of this man and his job (as caretaker) would seem to have recognized his disability."

Stenn and his team have published two studies of Harwa, one in Science magazine and the other in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Jobs on Campus

Dave Stieb signs with Toronto

By Doug Wilson
Staff Writer

All-America Saluki outfielder Dave Stieb will not be returning to play baseball at SIU next year. He has signed a contract that includes a $28,000 bonus to play for the Toronto Blue Jays organization.

Stieb, a junior from San Jose, Calif., signed Sunday and has been assigned to the Blue Jays' Class A farm team in Florida.

Stieb led the team in virtually all categories of hitting last season including a .394 batting average, 12 home runs and 48 runs batted in. He also pitched in six games, posting a 3-0 won-lost record.

The signing of Stieb increases the number of players of the 1978 Saluki team who have signed professional contracts to four.

Pitcher Rick Keeton signed with the Milwaukee Brewer organization. Rob Simond, another pitcher, signed with the Seattle Mariners and first baseman Craig Robinson signed with the San Francisco Giants.

Prior to his signing, Stieb had been playing baseball in Alaska for a team managed by SIU assistant baseball coach Mark Newman.

Keeton won his first game as a minor leaguer last week. He pitches for the Brewers' Holyoke team in the Class AA Eastern League.

The hard-throwing righthander shut out Jersey City on four hits for the win. He had lost his first two decisions at Holyoke.

Another former Saluki pitching ace, Dewey Robinson, who was signed by the White Sox after the 1977 season, has been tearing up the Midwestern Class A league.

Robinson, who pitches for Appleton, has a 5-2 record and leads the league with an incredible 0.64 earned run average.

Meanwhile, two more Salukis who signed with the St. Louis Cardinal organization last year have been in the news lately.

St. Louisan Neil Fiala is hitting .341 for the Cards' St. Petersburg Class A team, which is second in the league.

Murphysboro native Jim Reeves has been demoted from St. Petersburg to Gastonia of the Western Carolinas League. It is also Class A, but is a step below Petersburg.

Women v-ballers to play Germans

By Bill Theobald
Student Writer

The SIU women's volleyball team will combine with players from Florissant Valley Community College to play West Germany at 8 p.m. July 27 in the Arena.

West Germany's team members, from the Schwartz Club, have a "great opportunity both for the individual girls, the team and Southern Illinois volleyball."

West Germany's team members, from the Schwartz Club, have won the last two European Championships.

Mike Deterding, assistant coach for the SIU team believes it is a "great opportunity both for the individual girls, the team and Southern Illinois volleyball."

According to Deterding, volleyball at SIU is "going everywhere; it is bigger and better than ever."

A few weeks ago, 35 high school girls attended a summer volleyball camp at SIU which lasted through four sessions. In addition, SIU will sponsor an Olympic Development camp Aug. 8-15. The Olympic Development camp was originated by Sports Camps International, in Grand Rapids, Mich. Sports Camps International hires Olympic coaches to travel to different universities.

SIU's coach Debbie Hunter

recently was named representative for the United States Volleyball Association by the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (IAIWA).

SIU will also play host to the Women's Japanese gold medal winning team in October as they take on the United States national volleyball team here in Carbondale.

Overby hired as MVC supervisor

Mickey Holmes, commissioner of the Missouri Valley Conference (MVC), has announced the hiring of Johnny Overby as the new supervisor of officials.

Overby replaces Bobby Scott, who resigned in May.

The 47-year-old Overby brings 22 years of officiating experience in both football and basketball to his new position.
