Dems sure Dukakis is their man

ATLANTA (UPI) — United Democrats crammed into Omni Coliseum Wednesday night to name Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts as their presidential candidate in a pivotal election to break the eight-year Republican strangle-hold on the White House.

The tone of the convention, on the third night, shifted from fire to ice, from the passion and eloquence of Jesse Jackson to the pragmatism and the toughness of Dukakis.

And the third session also marked a shift from a tribute to the past of the Kennedys, Carters and Mondales to the future of the Democratic Party with accolades for the new generation seeking election to governor's mansions and Senate seats nationwide.

To lead them, Democrats chose Dukakis, the son of Greek immigrants who has served three terms as governor of Massachusetts, and his personally appointed running mate, wealthy Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, 67.

Dukakis was assured of nomination by tightly controlling more than 2,400 of the convention delegates, easily more than twice the number pledged to his final rival for the nomination, Jackson.

Jackson, near the end of his magnificent campaign for the nomination, finally turned philosophical as he waited for Dukakis to claim the prize both men had sought for so hard.

Before a meeting with New York Mayor Mario Cuomo, Jackson, who appeared with his family on the podium before his spellbinding speech Tuesday, called the convention "sweet-sweet" rather than bittersweet for him personally.

He said, "Seeing my children there last night, I realized: I may or may not get to the White House. But in our

Females a rare breed, study says

By Susan Curtis
Staff Writer

The number of female faculty members and students at the University is low compared to other institutions, a report by the task force on the status of women at the University says.

Women made up only 16.9 percent of the instructional faculty in 1986. They accounted for 6.7 percent of full professors, 12.5 percent of associate professors, 26.4 percent of assistant professors, and 33.3 percent of instructors.

The only other Illinois institution included in the survey, Northern Illinois University, had a significantly higher percentage of women, the total being 27.8 percent.

Statistics on instructional faculty in tenure track positions for the fall of 1986 showed that average salaries for women went from $38 lower than men's in the College of Business to $890 lower than men's in the College of Liberal Arts.

The average salaries for women were significantly lower in every college, said the study.

Since there has been no salary increase for the past two years, these figures remain about the same.

The task force recommended in its report that equitable salaries should be allotted after a peer review process that:

- compares women's salaries with their male peers;
- and compares women's salaries with the average for employees with the same degree, rank and years of service.

No restrictions should be placed on who is eligible for equity raises, and limitations of term appointments to five years should be eliminated, the report suggests.

Female enrollment at the University has been between 36 and 39 percent since 1976, according to the report.

Even at the undergraduate level since 1982, only 35 percent of students earning a four-year degree have been female, the report states.

Other universities in Illinois have a female enrollment of slightly over 50 percent.

The report suggests that the University's party school image contributes to lower female enrollment because females have a higher grade point average when they graduate from high school and are more likely to look for a college with an academic atmosphere.

To help increase female enrollment, the University also should work on dispelling its party school image, the report states. The University should introduce high school counselors to its academics programs and survey them to see if they view the University as a party school.

President John C. Guyon, who received the report on Friday, said insufficient data exist to determine whether counselors view the University as a party school. He said he agrees that a survey should be taken to see how they view the University.

Guyon said he agrees 100 percent with the committee that a permanent task force should be established to continue to solve problems faced by women in the University community.

Linda Gannon, chairperson of the task force and a professor in the psychology department, said the implementation of these suggestions should be done in a systematic way.

A permanent task force at the University would be helpful in evaluating the effectiveness of the attempted solutions and deciding if something else needs to be done, she said.

SWFA head seeks new challenge

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

The Director of Student Work and Financial Assistance said he has accepted a position at the University of Missouri at Columbia and will leave the University in late August.

Joseph M. Camille said that he has been at the University for eight years, and "I'm looking for a new challenge."

He will be the director of financial aid at the University of Missouri.

Harvey Welch, vice president for academic affairs, said someone from the University probably will replace Camille.

"We have two or more excellent candidates right here," he said. Welch did not say to whom he was referring.

Welch said that because the office is so important to students he will "put a search committee together and see if we can find a replacement relatively soon."

As director, Camille said his responsibilities include:

- making sure students receive all the federal and state financial aid to which they are entitled.

—overseeing the largest student work program in the country with an average of 3,000 students.

—overseeing the Office of Veteran's Affairs.

"I've enjoyed working at SIU-C very much. I've enjoyed working with the students," Camille said. "I leave with some sense of sadness because I think SIU is a very nice place to be, a very nice place to work."

He declined to say if he will make more money at Missouri.

New programs sought by School of Law dean

The new interim dean for the School of Law wants to start new programs, and will begin a fund-raising effort to follow through with his plans.

"My major priority at the moment is fund-raising," C.

Peter Goplerud III, who took over as interim dean on July 1, said.

Goplerud said the school is working with the SIU Foundation to set up a fund-raising program for the school.

Reactions are mixed about convention

By Robert Baxter
Staff Writer

Reaction to the Democratic National Convention in the Carbondale area is both positive and negative among students and residents.

Millie Porter, supervisor at the Information Station in the Student Center, said that many students who have come up to her counter the last couple of days have mentioned the lack of anything to watch on television because of the convention coverage on the major networks.

"I'm not much of a television fan," Porter said. "But many of the students have complained that there is nothing to watch due to the convention coverage."

Porter said she isn't that impressed with either of the candidates at this point and, unless one candidate is able to show a definite advantage as to why she should vote for him, she'll probably not vote.

Terri Wallace, receptionist in the scheduling and catering department, said she has cable TV and finding something to watch is not a problem.

But she also expressed an interest in the keynote speaker at the convention Monday night.

U.N. to arrange cease-fire between Iran and Iraq

MANAMA, Bahrain (UPI) — The United Nations announced Wednesday it will send negotiators to arrange a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq, hours after both nations appealed for an end to the fighting raging in the Persian Gulf. As the two warring countries reported fresh bombings and clashes on the battlefield, Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz proposed direct peace negotiations with Iran under U.N. auspices "as soon as possible."

U.N. avoids blaming U.S. for airliner downing

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The U.N. Security Council issued a mild rebuke Wednesday of the downing of Iran Air Flight 655 by a U.S. warship in the Persian Gulf, expressing "deep distress" and "profound regret" over the deaths of all 290 people on board. The resolution, adopted unanimously by the 15-member Security Council following days of difficult negotiations over the wording, avoided blaming the United States for the July 3 incident as originally requested by Iran.

Kremlin strips Armenian of Soviet citizenship

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Kremlin stripped an Armenian nationalist of his Soviet citizenship Wednesday and ordered him expelled in a bid to end months of ethnic unrest over the disputed Nagorno Karabakh region, but protests persisted. The punishment of Parury Airikyan, reminiscent of regimes before Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, came a day after the Kremlin ordered an end to the months of nationalist unrest.

Pakistan president orders national elections

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI) — President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq Wednesday declared nationwide elections for Nov. 16, ending months of speculation that the former martial law leader would indefinitely suspend staging the polls. Zia on May 29 dismissed the three-year-old government of Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Junejo, citing official corruption, an erosion of law and order and a failure to speed the implementation of Islamic laws.

North's lawyer seeks delay in conspiracy trial

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Oliver North, who complained his Sept. 20 conspiracy trial date coincides with the height of the presidential campaign, moved Wednesday to delay the case. At a pretrial hearing Tuesday, a lawyer for the retired Marine lieutenant colonel said he would outline his reasons for seeking the delay in papers filed late Wednesday with U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesel.

Progress made in South African peace plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The governments of Angola, South Africa and Cuba have accepted a set of 14 principles that could be the basis of a negotiated settlement for peace in southern Africa, the American mediator said Wednesday. The points were agreed to by negotiators in New York and then submitted to their governments.

Colombian drug baron receives life sentence

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Colombian drug czar Carlos Lehder was sentenced to life without parole plus 135 additional years in prison and $350,000 in fines Wednesday for his conviction on drug smuggling, conspiracy and other charges in operating one of the world's largest cocaine empires. In sentencing Lehder, 39, U.S. District Judge Howell Melton said the harsh penalty should send a message that the United States would not tolerate "greedy men like yourself who will take advantage of the plague."

FBI arrests Libyan student group members

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The FBI arrested members of a Libyan student group Wednesday and held them on national security grounds, suggesting some may have been involved in a plot to assassinate U.S. officials. Six current and former members of the People's Committee for Libyan Students were arrested at the organization's headquarters in suburban McLean, Va., and arraigned before a federal magistrate in Alexandria, Va.

Band director still dedicated after 20 years

By Richard Scheffer
Staff Writer

If hard work, dedication and enthusiasm have a price tag, then the University has a valuable asset in Mike Hanes, director of bands.

Hanes has been serving the University for more than 20 years by directing the Marching Salukis, the symphonic band, the opera orchestra, the wind ensemble, the percussion ensemble and the Summer Playhouse.

Hanes received a masters in music education from the University in 1965. That same year, marching band conductor Don Canedy left the University for another job and Hanes was appointed to the position.

"I was at the right place at the right time," he said.

Hanes was retained as an instructor and started getting involved in Summer Playhouse. In 1970, he began directing the orchestra for the program's musical production.

"The summer of 1970 was the first time I really did musical directing in the orchestra," he said.

Hanes said that in 1971 the School of Music and the Department of Theater came together for the first time for Summer Playhouse.

Each department previously did its own productions, and a total of eight productions were done each summer, he said.

"In a lot of colleges, there's no cooperation between the two departments," he said. "That's the good thing we've got going here."

Hanes said that when departments don't work together, often the acting or the music lack quality.

In 1972 Hanes took over as manager of the music portion of the Summer Playhouse when Bill Taylor left the University.

"Bill Taylor really developed the summer musical here," he said.

Hanes said he only is a part of the music team, which includes Margaret Simmonds, the vocal coach, and Jeanine Wagner who directs choral preparation.

"My primary responsibility is conducting the orchestra and holding the whole thing together," he said. "Summer Playhouse doesn't just expose and exploit the performers, it also offers them opportunities for growth in their profession."

From 1965 to 1983, Hanes acted as assistant director of bands working with former director Melvin Siemer. Siemer died in 1983 and Hanes took over the position.

Hanes said he is "real excited" about the appointment of Dan Phillips as assistant director of bands starting this fall.

Phillips, who is from Iowa State University, has been teaching for about seven years and also will be acting as the french horn instructor, he said.

Hanes said that he and Phillips will be co-conductors of the Marching Salukis.

"I've been working with the marching band for over 20 years," Hanes said. "It needs some new blood."

In addition to his other responsibilities, Hanes has worked as guest conductor at band festivals, the Illinois all-state band, festival honor bands and high school band camps.

"I get a chance to know students from all over the state that way," he said, "and sometimes potential students."

Hanes said he believes the music department here offers opportunities that other universities in the state don't.

"We have more opportunities for our music education students to get more hands-on experience," he said.

Hanes got his start in music education. In 1962, he received a bachelor's degree in music education from Millikin University in Decatur.

He taught music to grades kindergarten through 12 for a year in Sandeaval before coming to the University in 1964 to get his masters. A native of Salem, Hanes said his musical interests were influenced by his father who directed the high school band for 30 years.

"He had a very successful band there," he said.

In college Hanes said he made some extra money on the side playing string bass.

"I did dance jobs in the local area — combos and dance bands — playing at places like the American Legion hall, bars and school proms," he said.

Hanes said he played the drums in high school. He said he especially liked timpani — a set of kettledrums usually played by one performer.

"In the fourth grade I got a trumpet, but the following Christmas I got braces so I became a drummer," he said. "That's how I ended up in percussion."

DeNiro's, Grodin's abilities save failing 'Midnight Run'

By Kathleen DeBo
Staff Writer

Talented Robert DeNiro shows his comedic side in his newest film, "Midnight Run."

"Midnight Run" has DeNiro as a bounty hunter and Charles Grodin as "The Duke," a white-collar criminal.

It seems everyone is after the Duke. He embezzled money from a mob leader (Dennis Farina) who now wants him dead. The FBI wants to arrest him and a sleazy bail bond company which loaned him money wants him. The Duke wants to hide.

The bail bond company hires DeNiro to bring the Duke back to Los Angeles. DeNiro apprehends the Duke and drags him across scenic America, (stopping in many places including Chicago and Arizona), while the mob and FBI tries to stop them.

Many aspects of the plot are predictable. DeNiro's tough guy role has, if not quite a heart of gold, at least some shabby nobility. He's a former Chicago cop who was driven out of town when he refused to take a bribe. He left his wife and baby daughter behind.

Naturally, the plot reunites him with his family. However, the scene is surprisingly devoid of sappy sentiment. DeNiro plays the scene with enough restraint to salvage what could be a nauseating, trite subplot.

Good acting by the entire cast saves a film that otherwise is little more than a rehash of hundreds of other chase movies. However, most of the jokes are unoriginal.

Possibly the most memorable scene from "Midnight Run" is one with DeNiro and the Duke on a freight train. They have a few laughs and the humor is real.

The Duke surpasses a two-dimensional character and becomes three-dimensional by understating the obvious. His portrayal adds a certain human wickedness that keeps him from being too much of a saint.

The film also stars Yaphet Kotto and John Ashton. Ashton gives a noteworthy performance as a scummy bounty hunter competing with DeNiro.

"Midnight Run" overcomes its plot limitations to become a better than average action-comedy. It's worth seeing, if only once.

'Butterflies Are Free' to fly at SI Airport

By Carrie Ferguson
Entertainment Editor

"Butterflies Are Free," the Stage Company's first summer production, is delightfully heartwarming and endearing.

Theater Review

"Butterflies Are Free" is set in the late '60s and is the story of a young blind man, Don Baker, struggling to cut loose from his over-possessive and over-bearing mother. With the help of a friend, and against his mother's wishes, he moves into a one-room apartment with paper-thin walls in downtown New York City.

Don, (David Flavin), has made a deal with his mother, (Jeri-Lyn Comparon), to try living on his own for two months. If he can not handle life on his own, he must return to Scarsdale and live with mom.

One morning, as Don is talking to his mother, he hears a loud noise coming from next door. It is his neighbor's TV set. He bangs on the wall and tells his neighbor to turn it down. A minute later, Jill Tanner, played by Jeanne Dorsett, comes over.

Jill enters the room looking very '60s — wearing bell-bottom blue jeans and a long, blonde wig. She is talkative, happy-go-lucky, somewhat airy and a little perceptive. She talks (or rambles) about herself; her dream of being an actress and her failed week-long marriage.

As Jill inspects the room with child-like curiosity, she lights a cigarette and moves Don's ashtray. Later, she notices that he is flicking his cigarette ashes onto the floor. He asks her if she moved the ashtray, she says yes, and he tells her he is blind.

Don tells Jill that he is just like other people, only he can't see. He asks her not to feel sorry for him. One thing leads to another and they make love.

As the next scene begins, Don and Jill are in their un-

The play picks up a more serious story line at this point, but yet it retains it's lighthearted humor throughout.

Flavin does a wonderful job of playing Don. He portrays the emotions, such as curiosity, love, fear and anger, that Don experiences and he succeeds in creating a believable character.

Libraries need help to better aid campus

IT'S WORSE THAN you read about and then some. But at SIU-C, reading about it may be next to impossible if something isn't done about the funding problem facing Morris and Lesar Law Library.

We've heard over and over again how much academia are being hurt by the lack of state funding for higher education. Classes, faculty and departments are feeling the crunch. But at the center of the whole ordeal are the two campus libraries which have received little or no attention.

Rising costs of materials and diminishing funds have left both Morris and Lesar fighting to keep on top, but officials say it's an uphill battle.

In 1980, the Association of Research Libraries ranked Morris Library 46th among its 106 members. Today, Morris is ranked 59th.

IN 1984, MORRIS had 14,904 periodicals or serials on its shelves. Four years later the total has dropped to 14,369.

The number of books purchased also has taken a drastic cut, dropping from 23,712 in 1984 to 19,404 in 1987.

In a building full of reading materials, 535 less periodicals and 4,308 less books might sound like a drop in the bucket. Remember that the next time you try to find that important article in a magazine the libraries used to get or can't find that new book the libraries can't afford to get.

The conditions are much the same in the young Lesar Law Library.

As the prices for law materials increase, the amount of funding has change very little.

FROM 1985-86 TO 1986-87, the price of law related monographs increased by 37.5 percent. Over the same period, law serial and periodical prices increased by 11.9 percent. The overall budget for the University rose by a whopping 3 percent. It doesn't take a mathematician to see something wrong with these figures.

In an effort to serve the entire Southern Illinois region, Lesar has attempted to get a wide-range of materials: international law, American law, historical information. But the task is becoming increasingly harder with each new year.

Cuts are being made at both libraries. Cuts that limit access to valuable information.

Both Morris and Lesar recently have reached milestones. Morris added John Milton's "Areopagitica," bringing its volume total to 2 million. Lesar added to its collection a book commemorating the bicentennial of the United States Constitution — its 250 thousandth volume.

But these milestones are being chipped away. A precious asset to the University is crumbling. Just like the pages of an old book. Unless something is done — increased funds, contributions and awareness — both will be just as useful.

Quotable Quotes

"And that doesn't even count all the other chickens they've hatched in the last eight years that are coming home to roost on election day this November." — Sen. Edward Kennedy speaking at the Democratic National Convention about the Republicans' chances for election victories.

"When the chickens come home to roost, the fault will not lie with Jim Hart, President (John) Guyon adopted the recipe for failure." School of Journalism faculty member Robert Spellman on gender discrimination at SIU-C, in a Southern Illinoisan guest editorial.

The convention looked promising, then Jackson, Dukakis made peace

ATLANTA — It can't be on the nerves of Jesse Jackson's delegates. Just when they work up a good mad, and their indignation is really bubbling, they're told that everything is swell and they can all start smiling.

On Sunday night, a group of them were in the lobby of Jackson's hotel, gathered around the Rev. Willie Barrow, who runs Operation PUSH for the candidate.

Ms. Barrow, who was reclining regally on a plump sofa, seized the hand of a helpless columnist, squeezed it, and bellowed, "I am glad you are here for this great, historic event."

The columnist thanked her, rescued his hand, then whispered to an intense young man in her entourage: What historic event?

The young man re-lived the great Dukakis snub and said, "She's talking about Jesse. This is going to go down to the wire." And he talked of floor fights, platform fights, walkouts, protests and other good stuff to feed the strife-starved media.

But after a two-hour sitdown the next morning, Jesse and the Little Duke were telling the world what close chums they have become. It was agreed that Jesse was now on the team, but the little Duke was going to be the quarterback. Sort of the Doug Flutie of the Democratic party.

And so ended the big battle of the Democratic convention, even before the convention officially began. There is to be inclusion rather than exclusion.

That means strife addicts in need of a strife fix are finding the pickings thin. It's as if Jesse declared, "Say no to strife."

And as a last hope, there is Gus Savage, who is a member of the Congress of the United States, a fact that shocks those who meet loud Gus for the first time.

Despite the peace pact between Jesse and the Little Duke, Savage has vowed to lead protest marchers who will number in the thousands, if not the hundreds, or maybe the dozens.

He also threatened to lead a walk-out on the convention floor, if he can find someone to walk out with him.

Unfortunately, Savage is not well known outside Chicago. Nor is he a familiar figure in Congress, since he's seldom there. So the question is, who will notice Gus walk out when most people won't be aware that he ever walked in?

In fact, a confused delegate from California asked a Chicagoan who Gus Savage was and why he was walking out.

It was explained to the Californian that Savage is best known for having been carried kicking and screaming from a memorial service for the late Mayor Harold Washington because he disliked Washington's successor. More accurately, observers thought he was kicking and screaming.

They couldn't be 100 percent certain because there is so thin a line between Gus kicking and screaming and Gus being his same old self.

But to get back to Jackson and the sudden peace pact. Many of his supporters are confused because both Jesse and the Little Duke said that there had been no deals made during their two-hour meeting.

If that's true, what did they do for two long hours? Swap recipes for soul food and gyros?

As a Chicagoan, even a part-timer, Jackson should be embarrassed to say he spent two hours with another politician and didn't cut a deal. In two hours, any Chicago alderman could have talked Dukakis out of the price of a pinking ring.

But the closest Jackson came to saying that he has upheld the city's honor was when he said that his name would be placed in nomination, but that he would need a "Chicago miracle."

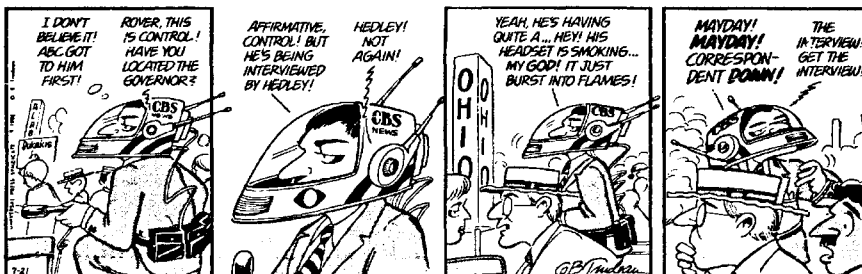

That phrase puzzled the national press.

We explained that a "Chicago miracle" is when a flood of uncounted but decisive votes are suddenly discovered at the last minute, often in cemeteries. It also could mean that Dukakis might turn up in the trunk of a car, but I doubt that Jesse intended it that way.

So as the convention opened, there was calm. Inclusion rather than exclusion had been achieved. That was the popular conclusion. But with Jesse, we can never be sure. The inclusion might be only a delusion, a mere illusion of inclusion. If so, it could lead to even more exclusion and result in confusion.

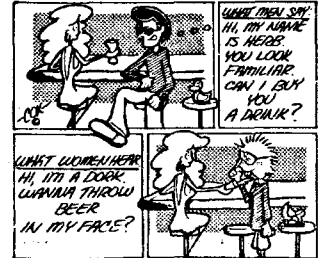

We can always hope.

Judge orders hair samples of defendants in murder case

By John Walblay
Staff Writer

A circuit court judge Wednesday ordered the defendants in a murder case to give hair samples, but took no action on a defense motion to have the defendants tried separately.

Donald Lowery continued the motion to separate the case of Richard and Rita Jo Nitz until 10 a.m. July 26, when he also will rule on a defense motion to have the state pay for an investigator. Lowery set the trial for Aug. 15.

The Nitzes are accused of the April slaying of Michael David Miley. Williamson County State's Attorney Charles Garnati requested samples of hair from their heads and pubic areas.

Defense lawyer Larry Beard requested his client, Rita Jo Nitz, have her case separated from her husband's because it would infringe upon her right to a fair trial.

Lowery said he will continue the motion so the defense could present a basis for the separation of cases.

Beard stated in the motion filed June 10 that the Nitzes plan to end their marriage and their defenses might be antagonistic to each other.

Richard Nitz's attorney, Public Defender Larry Broeking, agrees the cases should be tried separately.

Lowery said Beard represents Richard Nitz in a civil case and that may be a problem in asking for the murder trial to be separate. He didn't elaborate.

Beard also requested that the court appoint a special investigator at the county's expense. He said during discovery hearings there were 254 people listed as potential witnesses and he wouldn't be able to find all of the witnesses to prepare for Rita Jo Nitz's case.

Both Nitzes have been charged with three counts of first-degree murder in connection with Miley's death.

Authorities allege Richard Nitz shot Miley. Rita Jo Nitz is accused of being an accomplice because she aided and abetted her husband.

Lowery said Beard would be able to see his client provided he follow jail regulations.

"Passing notes or paraphernalia from inmate to inmate is prohibited," Lowery said.

Beard also argued that his visiting privileges at the jail had been terminated, but authorities say that Beard passed a note to Rita Jo Nitz during a visit.

Lowery told Beard to mail any written correspondence to Nitz.

Beard also said he had been cut off during phone conversations with his client and told his time was up.

Gary Tyner, jail administrator for Williamson County, testified there are specific times when inmates can use telephones and they are given several warnings of how much time remains before the phones are disconnected.

Beard also requested that his client be provided proper medical attention which required special food and medication.

Garnati contended he has been assured by the medical staff at the jail that Rita Jo Nitz has received proper medical attention.

lifetime, blacks, women, Jews, the handicapped and Hispanics will have a chance to go to the White House."

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, who flirted with the idea of running for the presidency, was set to place Dukakis's name in nomination. William Wimpfinger, president of the International Association of Machinists and a stalwart leader of the party's left wing, was prepared to put up Jackson.

As the convention neared its climactic moment — the nomination of Dukakis as the Democratic candidate for president — the party paraded some of its other candidates for state office in a series of rapid-fire introductions and speeches.

The next-to-last session began in steaming Atlanta with convention chairman, House Speaker Jim Wright, banging the gavel, and a tribute to William (Willie) Valesquez, a major figure in voter registration drives among Hispanics.

because of meager budget appropriations from the legislature.

Goplerud said he hopes the School of Law will be able to present a lecture series with nationally known legal scholars, judges, attorneys, and other public figures associated with the law.

The School of Law also has teamed up with the Medical School to offer students joint law and medical degrees, Goplerud said. The seven-year program will be run with money raised through private donations, but he said eventually state appropriations will be needed.

Goplerud said he is worried about faculty leaving for more lucrative offers from other universities.

A permanent dean for the School of Law was not hired because of the poor funding from the state, Goplerud said.

"There are serious funding reasons for (not) coming to terms with the two finalists" for the dean's position, he said.

Vice President for Academic Affairs Benjamin A. Shepherd said the search for a permanent dean was called off when the finalists asked for more money than the University could supply.

"The applicants demanded that we guarantee certain conditions which we could not," Shepherd said.

He said the finalists asked for starting salaries and pay raises that Shepherd couldn't guarantee.

"We simply thought it would be wise that we suspend the search," he said.

Goplerud's contract as dean lasts for one year. Shepherd said a search for a permanent dean will resume when the University's financial situation is more clear.

Richards speak Monday night and I really enjoyed her," Wallace said. "I really thought she was funny."

Many of the students interviewed believed Dukakis was going to be their candidate of choice and they thought the Democratic Party seemed to be pulling together.

"The Democratic Party definitely has its act together," Tony Orros, senior in food and nutrition, said.

Orros is from the island of Cyprus, located near Greece, where Dukakis's parents are from.

Correction

Congressman Kenneth J. Gray was incorrectly identified in the July 15 paper in a list of officials that accompanied President Reagan on a tour of Southern Illinois.

"No, that's not the only reason I'm voting for Dukakis," Orros said. "I'm impressed with (Dukakis's) education and I like the way he speaks."

Orros said he liked what Jesse Jackson had to say and thought that Jackson was able to open peoples' minds through his communication abilities.

Robert Simpson, senior in speech communication, said Jackson's message Tuesday night was for both blacks and whites.

"Jesse stresses a common bond, a bond for all people, not just blacks," Simpson said. "His message inspired me, and many of my white friends I have talked to were equally impressed."

Simpson thought Jackson could do a lot of good in office, not only for blacks, but for the whole country.

Traci Matthews, a senior in respiratory therapy and health care management, said she thought Jackson "knew what he was doing" when he spoke Tuesday night.

She said Jackson "is from the people for the people." With Dukakis' political abilities and Jackson's ability to communicate, Dukakis and he would have made a "great team," she said.

The inspirational message Jackson carried was among the main topics of conversation among those who had watched the convention.

Clyde Perkins, a retiree, thought the message was thought-provoking.

"I was watching him on CNN, and he gave a most inspirational message," Perkins said.

Perkins said he thought Jackson was "definitely ripped off" in not getting the VP spot.

Benton inventor honored for 'Local Ingenuity'

By University News Service

Had Jesse R. Smith had proper marketing help, we might all be brushing with toothbrushes shaped like a pair of scissors.

Back in the 1930s, the Benton resident invented the rotary toothbrush, a spring-operated, scissors-shaped device. Squeezing the handles against the spring moved the bristles back and forth—roughly the principle behind today's electric toothbrush.

"I think it was before its time," said James G. Smith, professor of electrical engineering at the University.

Smith, the inventor's grandson, has loaned drawings and documents related to the toothbrush and other inventions to the College of Engineering and Technology. These and similar materials about inventions by his uncle, Dudley Smith, make up an exhibit now on display in the Engineering and Technology building. Titled "Local Ingenuity," it is located on the ground floor of the College's A building.

Jesse Smith also invented an automatic film winder for cameras, a machine to replace railroad ties without stopping train traffic and a fishing-line cork that lit up when the angler got a strike.

None of them ever made much money, although the elder Smith did get an offer for the railroad tie gadget from the Chicago-based Brennan Company.

"Will you accept $150,000 for the patent railroad tie renewer," reads a yellowed, Western Union telegram displayed in the exhibit. "Answer quick."

The answer was no. "He'd probably read somewhere that whatever you do, don't sell your inventions," Smith said. "And I'm sure he had all the talents needed to exploit his inventions properly. In those days, if you didn't make the right connections with the right people, you didn't get rich."

Although Smith was 25 when his grandfather died in 1957, he never saw any of the inventor's work except the fishing cork.

In fact, he knew very little of his grandfather's wizardry.

"You didn't mention inventions in my family," Smith said. "My father went to work in a coal mine when he was 14. He took his paycheck home and handed it over to his father. As far as he was concerned, inventions were simply an infinitely deep rathole."

Smith remained aware of the scope of his grandfather's work until the death of a relative living in the family home at 715 E. Main in Benton. The heirs, charged with disposing of the personal effects, found "stacks and stacks" of journals, patents and accounts books.

"Every dresser, sideboard, trunk and desk in the house had some kind of papers in it," he said.

Smith asked for a trunk, a sideboard and his grandfather's desk. "They all had papers, and I wanted the history," Smith said.

He had a particular interest in Jesse Smith's journals.

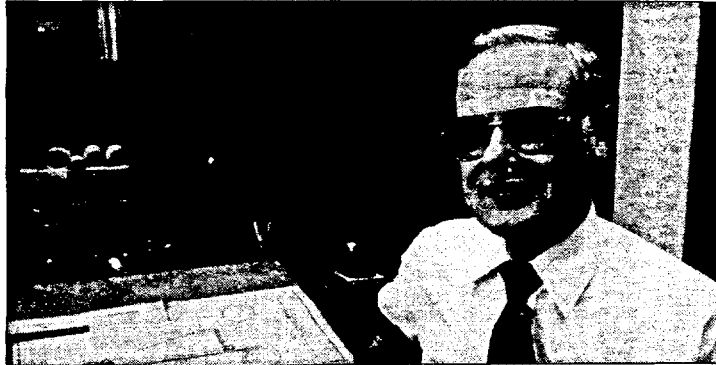

"He got into the habit of writing on the opposite page happenings of the day," Smith said. "He'd write in one sentence on one line because he each line numbered."

The cryptic nature of such one-sentence summaries has an oddly gripping quality. A quick glance through June, 1919, reveals that on the first of the month, the new Christian church was dedicated. On the second, Smith worked in his garden. And on the third Duncan McKenzie committed suicide.

Such daily details of a time long gone excite Smith, an amateur genealogist and self-proclaimed history buff. He has yet to sift through the bulk of his inheritance and is considering studying the papers as a possible retirement hobby. But at age 58, retirement seems a long time away.

The exhibit is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays and will continue through Aug. 5.

University professor James Smith has loaned documents and drawings of his uncle's inventions to the school of engineering and technology.

COBA may cut classes

By Amy L. Miller
Student Writer

Non-business majors may find it harder than ever to get into classes in the College of Business and Administration because of budget cuts.

In time, decisions may have to be made at the undergraduate level, as to "who can we serve — one COBA student or five COBA students," Thomas Gutteridge, dean of the College of Business and Administration, said.

"A spigot is not going to turn on and flood us with funds, but (COBA) also knows that those spigots will not be completely turned off."

—Thomas Gutteridge

Budget cuts make it almost impossible to satisfy both business and non-business students, Gutteridge said. But the college will not "bleed to death" over future budget cuts, he said.

The college knows that "a spigot is not going to turn on and flood us with funds, but it also knows that those spigots will not be completely turned off," Gutteridge said.

The college is going to plan on where the cuts will be made by revising a five-year plan to tighten budgets, Gutteridge said.

"There will possibly have to be changes in the objectives, the strategy, and unfortunately, maybe even the mission statements themselves," Gutteridge said.

The changes will have to be decided on "priorities, the time factor involved, exploring other objectives, and alternatives," he said.

"Anything in the report associated with money may have to be put off a little longer than expected or it may have to be cut off," Gutteridge said.

SIU-C grows energy trees

CARBONDALE, (UPI) — There may be a silver lining in the nation's energy future and farmers' pocketbooks in the form of silver maple trees, a researcher says.

The fast-growing silver maples are being studied by scientists in the Southern Illinois University-Carbondale School of Agriculture as a future source of farm-grown energy.

The seven-year project, which began two years ago, is sponsored by Martin-Marietta Energy Systems and the U.S. Department of Energy.

"The trees can be grown quite rapidly, harvested and then changed into alcohol, gasified or used in wood-burning boilers," John E. Preece, associate professor of plant and soil science, said.

Preece sees non-prime farmland as the ideal location for silver maple trees as fossil fuel supplies dwindle. "In the future, this tree crop could be an important source of revenue for farmers in areas where yields of food crops are relatively low," he said.

Silver maples have a potentially bright future as an important biomass crop because they grow rapidly, resist pests and disease and thrive on a variety of sites.

Preece and his research team have successfully cloned and propagated a select group of silver maples to be tested at sites of some 5 acres each in Southern Illinois, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York and Oklahoma with planting to begin next fall.

"I fear that in the future, when fossil fuels become depleted and population rises, we will make the mistake of using prime farmland for energy plantations," said Preece.

Mason does Turley Park

Flutist Michael Mason will perform at 7 p.m. for tonight's Sunset Concert at Turley Park. Mason's music is a combination of jazz forms of rock, Latin, progressive, classical and R&B.

Mason, a self-taught musician, has self-produced two singles which made an instant hit on Chicago airwaves. His songs "Martini" and "Lake Effect" led to the eventual release of a five-tune demo EP and it quickly sold out.

Tour de France marred by drug scandal, death

LIMOGES, France (UPI) — Gianni Bugno of Italy edged Jan Nevens of Belgium by one second to capture the 18th stage of the Tour de France Wednesday, a day marred by controversy and tragedy.

Pedro Delgado of Spain, who hours before the stage began was informed he had submitted a positive drug test last Friday and faced a possible 10-minute penalty, maintained his overall lead of 4 minutes, 6 seconds over Steven Rooks of Holland.

Bugno, 24, finished the stage in 2 hours, 12 minutes, 45 seconds, edging Nevens in a sprint at the end of the 58-mile run from Ruelle-sur-Touvre to Limoges. Nevens was followed by Martial Gayant of France, 44 seconds behind Bugno.

Wednesday's stage was marred by tragedy when a 6-year-old boy was run over by one of the cars that travel the course in front of the cyclists. The French child, who was in the southwestern part of the country on vacation with his parents, died while being taken to a hospital by helicopter.

Delgado finished in the middle of a huge pack of racers 46 seconds behind Bugno to preserve his comfortable margin atop the overall standings.

But the Spaniard's lead was threatened by the positive drug test. Unless a second examination of the specimen scheduled for Thursday morning produces a different result, he will be penalized 10 minutes and fall out of the lead.

Everyone blamed but source

Tour de France leader 'should have known' not to use drugs

By Rob Gloster
United Press International

PARIS (UPI) — In the wake of a doping test that showed drug use by Tour de France leader Pedro Delgado, blame is being focused on spectators, the drug-testing system and Tour officials accused of being "out to get" the Spaniard.

Everyone is being accused of impropriety, it seems, except Delgado himself.

Delgado, who led the race by more than four minutes after Wednesday's 18th stage, was in commanding position to win the three-week Tour that ends Sunday. He tested positive for an undisclosed drug in a urinalysis test after a stage last weekend.

Unless a second examination reveals a different result, Delgado will be penalized 10 minutes and which would drop him to eighth overall. He threatened to quit the race if the second test also is positive.

Sports Analysis

Fellow cyclists blamed an unfair drug-testing system, while one Spanish sports leader accused Tour de France organizers of being "out to get" Delgado. The racer and his coach suggested he might have been "sabotaged" by spectators giving him drugged refreshments.

The rush by athletes and sports officials to defend the Spaniard is reminiscent of the way they rallied to world champion women's cyclist Jeannie Longo last fall, when she tested positive for drugs.

Longo had to forfeit a world record performance because of the positive test result. Instead of giving her an automatic six-month suspension, French cycling officials cleared Longo of wrongdoing and insinuated the test result was an attempt by the United States to keep her from adequately preparing for the 1988 Summer Olympics.

The simple fact is that Delgado, like Longo, should have known better. When rumors of his drug use cropped up, Delgado claimed he took cold medicine or an allergy treatment, asserting, "I take medicine like everyone else."

Even if Delgado is penalized 10 minutes, he still could win the race. It is impossible to know how much, if any, advantage he may have gained by his alleged use of drugs — but in the extreme case, he could prove that cheating pays.

The solution is tougher sanctions. Instead of a 10-minute penalty, anyone caught using banned drugs during an athletic event such as the Tour de France should be disqualified and suspended for a significant period.

Open winner of 3 years ago will try again

LUTHERVILLE, Md. (UPI) — Kathy Baker-Guadagnino, the surprise winner of the U.S. Women's Open three years ago, is looking for a victory in another major tournament to revive her sagging career.

"This game has a lot to do with confidence," she said Wednesday on the eve of the 1988 U.S. Women's Open at the Baltimore Country Club. "If you're not relaxed, or worried about missing the cut, it's tough to play the game. Believe me, I know."

Baker-Guadagnino, 27, is one of only two active players on the tour to have won the U.S. Women's Open and nothing else. The other is Janet Anderson, the Open titlist in 1982.

Labeled by many as the "next superstar" of women's golf after winning the 1985 Open with a three-stroke victory over Judy Clark, Baker-Guadagnino has had trouble finishing in the top 10 ever since.

"When I won the Open, it just happened," she said. "I was kind of in shock. Now, looking back, I realize just how special it was. I don't think I realized that before."

"Once you do win a major, especially the Open, it's hard to settle for anything," she added. "It all pales in comparison. But at this point, I'll take any victory I can get."

Baker-Guadagnino, of Deerfield Beach, Fla., is very religious person and readily admits winning another title is not her top priority.

"(Religion) is the biggest part of my life right now," she said. "And my marriage. If golf isn't your first love then the tour can be real tough. For so many people, the tour is everything. For me, it's not. I guess something had to give."

Swimming recruits try Olympics

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

A men's swim team recruit will go to the Olympic trials Aug. 6 in Austin, Texas.

Mark Canterbury, a transfer student from Auburn University in Alabama, will swim the 100- and 200-meter breaststroke in the trials, Rick Walker, assistant swim coach, said.

He also will swim the breaststroke for the SIU team, Doug Ingram, head swim coach, said.

In a phone interview from his home in Charlotte, N.C., Canterbury said he feels good about the trials. "My goal right now is to make the finals," Canterbury said.

To make the finals he must be one of the top eight of more than 30 swimmers in the preliminary heats. To make the 1988 Olympic team he has to finish in the top two during the finals.

Canterbury is also excited about coming to SIU, but said he will miss the first half of the semester.

He won't be able to compete the first semester because he has to establish his eligibility, Ingram said. He will train with the team, though, and go to club meets, Ingram said.

A 2.0 grade point average is required of athletes.

"Mark will be a big part of our squad in the future," Ingram said.

Eight other SIU swimmers are also participating in the Olympic trials: Kevin Nagy, Jeff Goetz, Scott Roberts, Lee Carry, Chris Gally, Bruce Brockschmidt, and, from the women's team, Lori Rea and Karen McIntyre.

New position to raise funds

Fund-raiser title gets redefined

By Beth Clavin
Staff Writer

Action to hire a new fund-raiser is under way, the executive director of the SIU Foundation said.

Rex Ball met with Jim Hart, athletics director, Tuesday to begin discussing the fund-raising position, which has been vacant since the resignation of Paul Bubbs last month.

"We talked about how we wanted to structure the position," Ball said.

Ball said they came up with two or three possible ways of doing this, and Hart plans to meet President John C. Guyor to discuss them.

Ball said the discussions included how the fund-raiser would be paid and what his functions would be.

"The position will be redefined," he said.

Bubbs's salary was funded by the Foundation and the athletics department, each paying 50 percent.

Ball said the new fund-raiser would be named by him and Hart.

"We're the ones that will work closely with the fund-raiser."

"We'll move quickly, but we won't make any decisions without clearly thinking it through," he said.

Hart already has made progress with raising money by implementing his "First Fifty" fund-raising campaign. Its goal is to raise $50,000 for Saluki athletics in 50 days and is sponsored by buttons and bumper stickers.

The campaign began last week and already has brought in more than $15,000, Fred Huff, sports information director, said.

Bubbs left the University to take a job at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa.

Hart was unavailable for comment.

Ex-Saluki qualifies for Olympic team

By Brad Bushue

Former Saluki Connie Price advanced to the qualifying round for the Olympic discus team Wednesday, according to Olympics press center information.

Price's second throw of 178 feet, 8 inches was enough to give her fifth-place standing and qualification for the next round of the Olympic trials in Indianapolis. Carol Cady, Stanford, Cal., placed first with a 192-7 throw.

She was required to be in the top 12 distances to go on to the final round, so, with fouls on her first and third throws and a fifth place standing on her second, Price passed on her last two.

One of the top three distances will be needed Thursday for Price to join the Summer Olympic team.

Price threw the shotput and discus for the women's track and field team and was a second-place SIU-C record holder in each event.

Michael Franks, a former men's track and field athlete and SIU-C's fastest 100-meter runner, was eliminated from the Olympic trials Sunday when his 45.57 seconds time in the preliminary 400 was one place short of qualifying for the Olympic trial round.

Two-time Saluki All-American Ron Harter will throw the discus in the preliminary round Friday. He must finish in the top three to go on to the next qualifying round.

Stars have no advantage in Women's Open

LUTHERVILLE, Md. (UPI)

— If recent form holds true, stars such as Nancy Lopez, Amy Alcott, JoAnne Carner and Sherri Turner may as well pack their golf clubs and head home before the 43rd U.S. Women's Open begins Thursday morning.

The last three winners of the U.S. Women's Open — considered the most prestigious event in women's golf — had never before claimed a professional victory in this country.

Last year, Briton Laura Davies defeated Carner and Ayako Okamoto in an 18-hole playoff to give her an emphatic introduction to American golf fans. Jane Geddes (the Open winner in 1986) and Kathy Baker (1985) also were part of the trend, as were five of the past nine Open champions.

The $400,000 tournament begins Thursday morning on the 6,233, par-71 Five Farms course at Baltimore Country Club. The course, which favors long-hitters such as Davies and Carner, was built in 1926 and has hosted a PGA Championship, a U.S. Amateur Championship and Walker Cup competition.

Thirteen former champions are included in the field of 129 professionals and 24 amateurs vying for the $70,000 first place check and international recognition on the long fairways and tricky greens at Baltimore Country Club.

Davies, a powerful hitter who never had a golf lesson in her life, is seeking to become the first golfer to win consecutive Open titles since Hollis Stacy in 1977 and 1978.

Tour de France leader gets positive drug test

RUELLE-SUR-TOUVRE, France (UPI) — Tour de France leader Pedro Delgado of Spain tested positive for drugs last weekend and faces a 10-minute penalty that would drop him to eighth place in the cycling classic, officials said Wednesday.

Delgado, who led the Tour by a comfortable margin of 4 minutes, 6 seconds as he began Wednesday's 18th stage from Ruelle-sur-Touvre to Limoges, denied he had taken any illicit or other drugs during the Tour. "I have never taken doping products, I have not taken any medications during the Tour," he said. "I have taken nothing.

I'm waiting now for the results of a second examination to know more."

The 28-year-old Spaniard, who finished second in the Tour last year and had built up a formidable lead with only five days left in this year's race, suggested Tuesday night he could have been sabotaged by a spectator handing him a doped refreshment.

Softball playoffs postponed

By Brad Bushue

Rain Wednesday forced Intramural Sports Recreation to postpone four softball playoff games and cancel basketball league games, intramural coordinator Sarah Simonson said.

Two men's 12-inch teams and two co-recreational 12-inch teams will play Monday in the playoffs because of sloppy playing fields.

The men's teams will play at 4 p.m. and the co-recreational teams will play at the times they were scheduled to play Wednesday. Teams that advance will play again the following hour.

Intramural basketball games behind on the courts Lesar Law Building were canceled because of wet playing surfaces, and were awarded wins by intramural regulations.

Leonard may return to fight WBC champ

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sugar Ray Leonard may come out of retirement a third time to fight current WBC light heavyweight champion Don Lalonde, possibly as soon as November, Leonard's attorney said Wednesday.

Leonard, a three-time champion, wants to become the first fighter to own five titles, something he can do with a victory over Lalonde. Should Leonard defeat the Lalonde he would capture the 175-pound title and a newly established super middleweight crown.

Both Leonard's attorney, Mike Trainer, and Lalonde's manager, Dave Wolf, said they expect a contract to be reached within 10 days, and the fight to take place as early as November.

"He's fascinated with the idea of winning five titles," said Trainer. "Technically, Lalonde would have to agree to put his (WBC) light heavyweight title on line too, he's already agreed to do that."
