Jury hears FBI wiretap recordings

PROSECUTION RESTS:

Tapes allegedly capture conversations with Neal talking about weapon.

KEVIN WALSH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The prosecution rested its case Monday in the double-murder trial of Labron Neal after the jury heard FBI wiretap recordings of Neal allegedly talking about the murder weapon used to kill two teenagers.

The tapes allegedly capture conversations between Neal and longtime friend and former fellow gang member, LeSean Galloway, 19, of Carbondale. The recordings, barely audible at times, recorded several individuals, one of whom said, "Just keep your mouth shut ... don't tell nobody." Galloway testified that it was Neal's voice.

Neal, 18, of Carbondale, is charged with six counts of first-degree murder for allegedly shooting Terrance Mitchell, 16, of Carbondale, and James Austin Campbell, 15, of Murphysboro. The two were found dead in the pre-dawn hours of Aug. 11 outside a trailer party at Carbondale Mobile Homes on Route 51.

Galloway said Neal called him the morning after the murders occurred and told him there was a "Cisco bottle" under Galloway's porch, located near the murder scene. Neal allegedly told Galloway to throw it away.

The defense contends that a "Cisco bottle" is gang slang for gun, but several of the self-admitted gang member witnesses denied knowledge of the slang term.

When Galloway looked under his porch, he found a gun. After bringing the gun into his trailer and examining it, Galloway said he decided to discard the weapon.

Juror finds dead snake

A dead black snake placed on the sidewalk in front of a juror's house Saturday prompted a courtroom conference prior to Monday's proceedings in the Labron Neal double-murder trial.

Jackson County Circuit Judge William Schwartz conducted the 15-minute conference in the absence of the other 11 jurors.

The juror told the court that after finding the snake on the sidewalk in front of his house, he was startled enough to believe that his life was in danger. The juror said two boys about 11 years

Reunion brings back memories

Standing amid a throng of fellow SIUC alumni at a picnic Saturday, Ralph Moore gazed off into the distance as a huge smile spread across his face.

Refocusing on the scene around him at the SIUC Black Alumni Reunion Picnic, Moore, a 1971 SIUC alumnus, recounted one of his favorite college memories.

"Hazel Scott was elected as SIUC's first black Homecoming queen on Oct. 22, 1967," he said. "I remember my fraternity (Kappa Alpha Psi) serenaded her at the Kappa House by singing 'I'm So Proud.' I played the guitar."

Moore shielded his eyes from the sun's rays beating down on him as he stood in the middle of Crispus Attucks Park on North Wall Street. His smile widened.

"It's nice to be back here," he said.

Last weekend's sixth annual Black Alumni Reunion brought similar heartfelt memories to about 400 African-American SIUC graduates. The reunions are organized every two years by the SIUC Alumni Association.

Greg Scott, assistant director of public and alumni relations with the SIUC Alumni Association, said this year's reunion was among the best.

"I think everything went well," he said. "Some of these people haven't been here for years. You could just see people taking in the atmosphere of the campus and greeting old friends. It was an enjoyable time."

After a pool party mixer kicked off reunion festivities Thursday, alumni participated in educational forums, campus tours, late-night bowling and "steppers" dances among other events.

Attending Friday night's Alumni Talent Show in the Student Center

Ballrooms was a high-light of Carolyn and Keith Davis' reunion weekend.

Carolyn Davis, a 1981 SIUC alumna, said the gathering is an important one for her family to attend.

"The togetherness and the family environment of the African-Americans on campus keeps us coming back," she said.

Her husband, who received a bachelor's degree in 1979 and a law degree in 1982, said the reunion also stirred up old emotions for him.

"I liked Carbondale," Keith Davis said. "Coming back renews old feelings for the school."

For 1972 alumnus Fred Collins, the reunion brought emotions of a different sort. He waved in the direction of a

Fire causes $325,000 in damage

HEADS UP: Quick response by tenants prevents, injuries, further loss to business.

KENDRA HELMER
DE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

A fire Sunday evening caused more than $325,000 in damage to a local business, but authorities say the quick response of two SIUC students living in the building prevented any injuries.

A fire broke out shortly after 9 p.m. on the ground floor of Henry Printing Inc., 118 S. Illinois Ave. The fire, which authorities said started in an electric outlet on the ground floor of the store, was extinguished within 30 minutes.

The fire was confined to the first floor of the building.

John (Mike) Henry, owner of the building and business, silently stood across the street and watched the scene.

The business was founded 20 years ago. "I'm just kind of numb," Henry said. "I'm anxious to get inside and see what it looks like. At least no one was hurt."

The building sustained about $40,000 in damage, and the store sustained about $325,000 in damage. Henry has insurance.

"(The owner) had a lot of computers and printing stuff that couldn't withstand the heat and smoke," Carbondale Assistant Fire Chief John Manis said.

Although there were no injuries, one of the resident's pets died.

Darrell Ramsey, a junior in business management from La Grange, and Sabrina Norris, a senior in sociology from Hyde Park, moved into the apartment above the business in May.

"I was laying down in the bedroom and (Norris) was in the front room," Ramsey said.

"She saw smoke coming up through the hardwood floor. Then there was a cloud of smoke that shot up through the living room floor.

Interns get early career start

PRACTICUM: Competition unites team to win sales contest among 500 campuses.

VASSILIS NEMITSAS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Selling more than $5.6 million worth of insurance has netted a national first-place award for Brent Hillman and 16 other SIUC interns.

Through the Northwestern Mutual Life internship program, the interns won the top award in the company's College Agent Team year-long national competition.

Hillman, a recent SIUC graduate in finance from Carbondale, said the award and his internship experience with the insurance company were outstanding.

"It's an awesome resumé builder," he said. "I learned how to apply (knowledge) I learned in school. I learned how to interact with the main offices, people and how to present and sell a product."

Hillman and the rest of SIUC's winning team of interns are going to celebrate their victory this week in Milwaukee at Northwestern Mutual Life headquarters where they will receive their award.

The SIUC interns competed with about 500 campuses across the nation. The intern team that sells the most insurance within a year becomes Northwestern Mutual Life's top intern team in the nation. The Saluki team of interns has tied for first place twice and has won other awards in the last four years.

Dave Sullivan, field director and intern coordinator at Northwestern Mutual Life, 1001 E. Main St., said the students deserved the prize.

"They are smart and worked together as a team, not as individuals," Sullivan said. "SIUC students are unique."

The road to victory, however, was not an easy one. The interns worked "down to the wire" to beat the competition.

"Last month was crazy," said Candace Crumbliss, a senior in finance from Schamburg. "We were working hard to stay ahead (by selling insurance)."

Hillman said the secret of their success was found in the team effort of all the interns.

Students who intern at Northwestern Mutual Life get all the necessary experience needed for the business world, Sullivan said.

"They get the test drive of the real world of the entrepreneur," Sullivan said.

Jeannie Underwood, a senior in finance from Springfield, said she feels more professional and responsible after winning the award.

"This will help me with what am I going to do after I graduate," Underwood said. "It builds your communication skills, and you deal with people you will be dealing with all your life."

Confidence was the most important thing Crumbliss received from the internship.

"Now I'm not afraid," Crumbliss said. "Now I know what am I going to do in the future, and it gave me an edge against other students who graduated."

Underwood said the effort put into being recognized as Northwestern Mutual Life's top college team in the nation makes her appreciate the experience.

"It feels great," Underwood said. "We deserve this. For me, this is one of the best achievements. I'm proud to be a member of the team."

Russell Bercier, a senior in speech communication from Lake Zurich, said the intern team's victory will help SIUC as an institution.

"We made a good representation of the University," Bercier said. "This will help the University to build a good reputation."

Brown still viable

DECISION TIME: Brown to decide on second senatorial bid by Labor Day.

KIRK MOTTRAM
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The designation of Randolph County commissioner Dan Reitz to the post previously held by Ill. House Rep. Terry Deering, D-DuBois, has left Barb Brown, Reitz's most formidable opponent in the selection, more motivated than ever.

"It has certainly set the wheels spinning again," said Brown, an SIUC lecturer in political science.

A committee composed of the four Democrat county chairmen in the 116th District, including Richard Cooper of Randolph County, Tony Mayville of St. Clair County, Robert Sprague of Washington County and C. Glennon Rau of Monroe County, in a unanimous decision, appointed Reitz in a closed June 16 meeting.

Brown said she fully supports Reitz in his new position, but regrets the committee's final decision.

"From my vantage point, I would have really liked to have had that appointment," Brown said. "It would have been a wonderful opportunity."

Reitz was unavailable for comment.

Brown said the appointment would have given her the chance to discuss the issues detailed in her 1996 senatorial campaign more extensively.

"A very important role for a legislator is to be an educator and to show leadership on complicated and complex issues, but that's not easy to say in the course of a campaign," Brown said. "I would have loved to have that year of incumbency to be able to define myself in a way that would have given me more credibility on some of the issues where I think people would appreciate a balanced

CARBONDALE WEB: Site offers information to potential businesses and students.

ALICE JOHNSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A new Carbondale Web site providing more than 130 links to other Carbondale Internet addresses will promote Carbondale and make Internet access to Carbondale quicker and easier.

The site became operational July 14 and is located at (<http://www.carbondale.il.us>).

Pat Brown, executive director of the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce, said the site will promote Carbondale to potential students and businesses considering locating in Carbondale.

The site, created by the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce Virtual Community Committee, will make accessing information about Carbondale a "one-stop shop," said Andy White, a committee member and director of Midwest Internet, the company providing the server.

"We found a lot of sites with Carbondale-related issues,"

White said. "The links collect them into a one-stop shop for any information about Carbondale."

Brown said that because the site provides one place to find a large number of Carbondale Internet addresses, it is useful to a wide variety of web users, including current and prospective SIUC students.

"It provides many options," Brown said. "Students could look at dorms and apartments, or look in the auto section and pick a car right there."

FBI, rangers in search for missing college mom

The FBI and Texas Rangers are assisting police in the search for a missing University of North Texas student who vanished in broad daylight after touring a police station.

Kelli Ann Cox disappeared Tuesday after locking her keys in her car during visit to the station in Denton north of Dallas.

Cox's mother says the missing 20-year-old woman is devoted to her 19-month-old daughter and would never have abandoned the child voluntarily.

Police Detective Benny Parkey says, "We're looking for any help we can get. Anybody that can assist us we're happy to get it."

Today Rangers and FBI investigators are lending their resources to the search, where door-to-door canvassing of the area turned up no leads in the bizarre disappearance just 100 yards from the police station.

Cox's boyfriend, Lawrence Harris III, of Farmers Branch, says she disappeared after locking her keys in her car and calling him for help at a gas station pay telephone.

Clinton proposes teacher scholarship program

President Clinton announced a $350 million plan to encourage teachers to work in inner-city and rural schools and repeated his call for racial diversity on college campuses.

The president outlined his proposal July 17 to the NAACP's annual convention in Pittsburgh and later to the National Association of Black Journalists in Chicago.

The education initiative is the first proposal since the president's speech in June calling for a yearlong discourse on race.

"Don't tell me that children can't learn because they are children of color, they are children from poor neighborhoods," Clinton told the NAACP. "We cannot stop until we have given the best teachers the opportunity to teach the children to be the best."

The president laid out details of the plan to 3,000 members of the NAJB in Chicago. "What I propose today," he said, "is a series of scholarships that would go to people who say, 'I will teach in a poor area for three years if you help me get an education.'"

SAN DIEGO

Student sentenced for killing professors

A San Diego State University graduate student has been sentenced to life in prison with no hope of parole for killing three engineering professors who were about to review his thesis.

Frederick Martin Davidson pleaded guilty to murder in the case to avoid a possible death sentence.

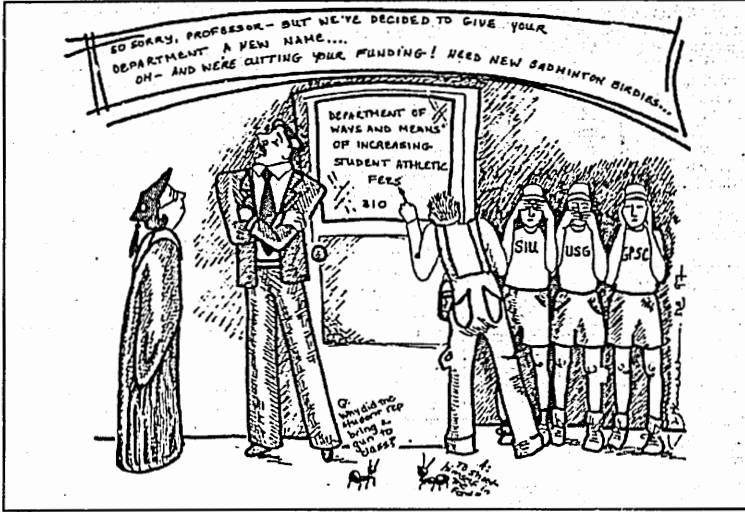

He was charged with three counts of first-degree murder for shooting to death Chen Liang, D. Preston Lowrey III and Constantinos Lyrintzis. The charges carried special circumstance allegations that could have sent Davidson to his death if he was convicted.

Before the plea was entered, the families of all three victims urged the court to not push for the death penalty, fearing that the families would be caught up in years of trial and appeals.

Police said Davidson pulled a gun he had hidden inside a first-aid kit and shot the professors to death in the university's Engineering Building last August.

Davidson was upset about his master's thesis being rejected once before and was scheduled to defend it for a final time before the three-member jury.

Their Word

Military might

U.S. must get by with limited resources in uncertain times

GEN. HENRY H. SHELTON, PRESIDENT Clinton's nominee to be chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is a combat-tested soldier with a specialty in unconventional warfare, and with certain ideas about the future that some of his colleagues might find uncomfortably unconventional. The United States, Shelton has written, must prepare itself for an era in which the major threats are likely to come from terrorism, ethnic conflicts and chemical and biological weapons. For the next decade, "operations short of war" could prove to be the norm, he says. That may turn out to be true, but the most plausible exception — a major localized conflict, in the Persian Gulf or Korea, say — can't be ruled out. It too must be prepared for.

How well that is being done under the latest strategic defense plan is a matter of debate and concern. To fight even a limited war takes a lot of resources — material and human. But since the end of the Gulf War in 1991 the ranks of active-duty personnel have been cut by 27 percent, while overall military spending has declined by 24 percent. The Air Force has lost tactical squadrons and airlift capacity, the Navy has far fewer warships and support vessels. But under the new defense plan the Air Force will still retain 20 squadrons while the Navy will continue to operate 12 carrier battle groups. The big hits once again fall on the Army, which has shrunk from 18 divisions six years ago to 10 today. The Army has lost nearly one-third of its personnel, along with a major part of its ability to deploy what remains.

THERE IS OF COURSE NO NEED TO RESTORE the defense spending and manpower levels of the Cold War. But the disappearance of a global enemy like the Soviet Union hasn't left the world without local threats that affect U.S. interests, whether those involve the security of oil resources or the freedom of friends and allies. Given the great-power commitments that fall to the United States, does the nation risk finding itself spread too thin should some unforeseen crisis arise while its armed forces are depleted?

The usual focus on military costs and the competition for dollars to buy new equipment too often obscures the most basic of military considerations: the limits of human endurance. Ships can stay at sea only so many months before crew morale and efficiency suffer over concerns about disrupted family life. Pilots can fly only so many hours before exhaustion takes over. Ground troops can serve in peacekeeping missions for only so long before they lose the sharp edge they must have for their primary war-fighting mission.

SHELTON COMES ONTO THE WASHINGTON scene with a reputation for thoughtfulness and compassion, a warrior with demonstrated diplomatic skills. The chairman of the JCS is the president's top military adviser and Congress' chief military briefer. Both the president and Congress can expect to hear more of Shelton's ideas about what unconventional challenges the military is likely to face. But Shelton also knows that small wars remain a threat. The armed forces — especially on the ground — may have to be ready to respond quickly and effectively to such conflicts. Right now a lot of specialists are worried that they won't be.

Campus should put junk bicycles to creative use

Dear Editor:

I would like to propose a solution to a growing problem on our campus. The problem is the seemingly increasing number of disabled and/or abandoned bicycles locked up at just about every bike rack. As I tour through campus, I notice bike rims without bikes and bicycle frames without rims. I have noticed kicked-over and severely damaged bikes that have been in the same place for at least a year.

These disfigured bikes and scattered bike parts locked to our bike racks gives one the impression that there is a serious bicycle thief and a vandalism problem at SIUC. This is not a good image to have on display for our visitors, prospective students or current student body.

By leaving this mess of junked reminders of crime, we are basically promoting the action. When there are scattered bike frames and rims everywhere, students may be enticed into creating a similar crime, because their actions will just blend in with the rest of the mess. An illusion is created, indicating that their chances of getting caught are less.

I propose a solution — one that is similar to the method of using "The Boot" for cars. Officers should go around and stick red tags on all unrideable bicycles, as well as the remains of bikes that are parked locked or unlocked at campus bike racks. These red tags will indicate that if the object is not removed in a given time period, it will be cut loose and put into campus security's custody. All confiscated goods should be held for at least one month. If people want to claim their goods and have serial numbers to prove ownership, they can still do so.

After the determined time period has expired, we move into the final stage of the solution. I predict there will be a lot of unclaimed parts. These should be put to use by building safe, rideable bicycles that will be auctioned off.

The money made at the auction will be used to further the beautification of our campus' bicycle paths and walkways.

Arts endowment allows artistic voices to be heard

Dear editor:

I would like to respond to Josh Robison's July 16 column "Artists don't need NEA funds." In his column, Robison concluded that while NEA funds directly affect the quality of our lives for a minimum of tax dollars, the program is unfair and unnecessary.

The reasons for his decision are particularly interesting. He contends that a funded artist might create a work that all taxpayers would have to pay for regardless of their personal appreciation of that piece of art. Somehow, this situation is construed as being antithetical to representative democracy. In a nation as diverse as ours, it is naive to assume that we could ever come to an agreement on what art deserves government funding. Likewise, many who object to the massive military and corporate welfare budget still are expected to pay their taxes despite their grievances. Admittedly, there are many unjust government programs, but the National Endowment for the Arts is not one of them.

The assertion that "the truly great creators" will always find a way to create without government assistance is offensive. It assumes a privilege that many Americans do not have. Historically oppressed people often do not have access to the funds, equipment and contacts that it takes to create many forms of art.

It takes money (thousands of dollars for films, for example), and to presume that everyone endowed with creative genius is able to raise the capital needed to bring their art into existence in addition to feeding themselves and their families is unrealistic. Many very talented people live from bill to bill. To flippantly state that only "those not as gifted or driven", might have to work "real jobs" during the day ignores the situation of many Americans.

The United States cannot afford to lose any of our creators because of the pettiness of a few politicians. If we allow the artistic voices of our poor and minorities to be stifled, we will lose a piece of our culture as well as some of our freedom.

"I took the gun down the street and kicked it in the sewer," Galloway said.
Later, when Galloway confronted Neal at a friend's house, he asked Neal about the murder.

"I asked him did he do it ... He said 'no' at first. Then he said 'yes.'"
Neal looked at Galloway during much of the cross examination, but Galloway tried to avoid eye contact with Neal.

Galloway said Neal told him that after he shot Mitchell, Campbell ran.

Galloway testified Neal said that after chasing and shooting Campbell in the shoulder, Neal told Campbell to "hold on" and that he wanted to talk to him.

When Campbell stopped, Neal "went up to him and shot him in the head," Galloway said.

Shortly after his conversation with Neal, Galloway said that he began to feel troubled by the role he had played in concealing what he thought he knew about the killings.

"I was scared," Galloway said. "I felt I helped him with the murders because I hid the gun."

After Galloway informed investigators that Neal had contacted him and allegedly admitted to the murders, authorities obtained an order authorizing the use of wiretap surveillance of Neal.

In a transcript of selected recorded conversations with Galloway, the prosecution asserts that Neal assures Galloway that "you ain't going down for this. If anybody do, it's going to be me."

Neal's Attorney, Paul Christenson, said during his cross examination of Galloway that the FBI tape recordings contain no admission by Neal that he committed the murders.

"At no time does Labron Neal say 'I shot Terrance Mitchell or Austin Campbell.' ... Would you agree with me on that, sir?" Christenson asked Galloway.

"Yes, sir," Galloway answered.
Christenson also questioned Galloway about the extent to which he rehearsed his testimony with Jackson County State's Attorney Mike Wespice, and whether investigators offered him a deal to testify against Neal.

"Did the police promise you a deal in exchange for testifying against my client?" Christenson asked.

"No," Galloway replied.
Galloway was not charged for hiding the murder weapon.

When investigators attempted to serve Neal the warrant for his arrest, they discovered that he had fled. Neal remained at large for more than seven weeks until he was apprehended in Sacramento, Calif., in October. After his arrest in California, Neal spent some time in a juvenile detention center.

Several other witnesses, including two Sacramento juvenile detention center employees, testified that Neal told them that he killed two people in Illinois.

Don Cranston, a teacher at the juvenile detention center, and Bruce Woodard, another employee of the center, testified that during a discussion with several juvenile detainees, Neal was anxious to discuss "stuff he did back in Illinois."

Cranston said Neal told him "he was having nightmares, he was seeing the devil, he couldn't live with himself."

After reportedly attempting to stop Neal from disclosing any more information, Cranston said Neal made reference to a murder in Illinois. Neal reportedly said he had gone into a mobile home and had a confrontation with two individuals. Neal allegedly said that one of the individuals was reaching for a gun, a panic ensued, and he shot an individual.
Cranston said that Neal told him that "he shot one," and chased another down and shot him.

Christenson attempted to discredit part of Woodard's statements by pointing out discrepancies between his testimony in court and the report filed several days after Neal allegedly admitted in November to the murders.

The report states that the date of the incident was Nov. 11; when actually it occurred Nov. 5. The witness seemed unsure of where Neal allegedly said he was when he shot the teens.

"You couldn't remember if it was in Chicago or Southern Illinois," Christenson asked angrily. "You reported an inaccuracy in a very critical piece of testimony."

Christenson objected to the admission of the FBI tape recordings because Neal was not clearly identified on the tapes.

The trial resumes at 9 a.m. today at the Jackson County Courthouse in Murphysboro.

building he recalls no longer exists on campus.

"I had English and literature classes in Old Main and I remember when someone torched Old Main," he said. "It was during the riots and protests on campus against the Vietnam War, and the National Guard was called to the campus."

"They (SIUC administration) sent us home, and that, for me, was one of the most memorable experiences."

Although that experience was unsettling for him, Collins said his SIUC experience holds a special place in his heart.

"I did have fun here," he said, "and I'm glad to be back. SIUC is still home, still a home away from home."

As Salim Jahbriel Kenyatta watched the alumni hug and share experiences last weekend, the senior in history from Chicago was moved by what he saw as an alumni participant.

"I'm enjoying myself by watching everyone enjoy themselves. More African-American students should get involved with these reunions," he said, as he took in the picnic scene.

Standing a few feet away from Moore, who was happily greeting old friends, Kenyatta looked at the crowd of about 200 at Saturday's picnic. He could not help but smile himself as he realized that those the experiences of those alumni, good and bad, had paved the way for him to obtain an education at SIUC.

When asked by attorneys for both sides if he could continue his jury duty in an impartial manner without fear of reprisals against him, the juror replied, "Yes, I'm not a scared man. I will not be intimidated."

Authorities would not comment on whether they believe the incident was intended to represent a veiled threat to the juror's life.

The Jackson County Sheriff's Department conducted the investigation after being contacted by the Carbondale Police Department.

Play encourages examining self

PLAY PREVIEW: "If These Walls..." tells three tales with heart and a realistic message.

MICHAEL B. MAROY
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A play debuting tonight will encourage people to examine the walls they build around themselves as protection from the outside world, the play's writer and director says.

MESSAGES

CULTURAL LESSON

"If These Walls..." is showing at 7 tonight and Wednesday night in the Student Center Auditorium. Tickets are $3.

from the outside world. But eventually things happen that makes the walls crash down, and we have to face reality."

The play, which debuts tonight at the Student Center Auditorium, is composed of three intertwined stories focusing on the lives of three groups of people.

All three groups live in the same condemned building slated to be torn down in a week. The people living in the building refuse to leave because they all are battling their own personal wars.

The first story, "Peacetime War," is about Harvey (Reggie Weathersby), who has "Gulf War Syndrome." He lives in the building because it is a representation of how he feels about himself. Harvey finds a love interest in Allison (Ayolandra Holt), and the love story starts to take a tragic turn.

The second story, "Dinner's Ready," is about a woman named Elice (Sherri Perry) who awaits the return of her lover, Zander (Umar Foster). Zander is believed to have been killed in the Vietnam War. Elice refuses to leave the building because she hopes Zander will come back. In the meantime, Zander's friend, Patrick (Mario Collins), is trying to persuade Elice to accept that Zander is dead, hoping she will begin a relationship with him.

The final story, "Spring in December," is about a 70-year-old man named Lester (Jeff McGoy) who served in World War II. Lester refuses to move out of the building simply because he is stubborn. As the story reaches its climax, he begins to fall in love with his caretaker, Clair (Gina Coleman), a dead ringer for his deceased wife.

The play contains strong language, sexual themes and stylized violence. Major, who wrote and directed "In These Walls..." with the assistance of Charles Davis III, said children under 13 at the play need to be accompanied by an adult. She said young people need to see the play, however, because of its message.

"Just as you can't censor what happens in real life, we didn't censor what is in the play," Major said.

Oops! Entertainment is a Registered Student Organization founded in 1996 by Perry, McGoy and Holt that is sponsoring the play.

Major said the group tries to give African-American students an outlet to sharpen their artistic talents.

Collins, a senior in recreation from Chicago, said his work with the play is fulfilling because, unlike other local productions, "If These Walls..." is an African-American written play that deals with serious issues rather than comedy.

"I strongly encourage other students to present their own plays, become actors, directors and so on," Collins said. "Blacks need to come out and support [Oops! Entertainment]."

Memories return at Black Alumni Reunion

TOGETHERNESS:

Alumni reunion brings old friends-together.

TAMEKA L. HICKS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Returning to SIUC this past weekend for the Black Alumni Reunion gave Howard Peters III the chance to shine as keynote speaker as well as show off his fraternity letters.

Prior to his keynote speech Saturday night, Peters, now the first secretary of the Illinois Department of Human Services, said he wanted to express the responsibilities that alumni have to the future students of SIUC.

"People who have gone through this learning process and are out in the world have some obligations to make sure that there is a new generation of college students coming to SIUC and graduating," he said at the reunion's picnic.

Festivities for last weekend's sixth annual Black Alumni

Reunion included a talent show, an African-style open market, a business card exchange and a banquet.

with young people and helping them aspire to go to college and to achieve important things. So it's very consistent with our creed and oath as well."

From setting up displays in the Student Center to offering free sent the letters of his fraternity.

"In lieu of all the bad publicity that greeks have gotten in past years, it's overwhelming to see the bonding that they still have," Jones said. "This is great."

Digging through the paraphernalia display table of the many greek organizations on campus, Cybil Mulokwa, a recent SIUC graduate, said the Kappa's involvement encouraged other greek members to participate in the event.

"It feels good because there are other organizations out here that are representing," Mulokwa, a member of Zeta Phi Beta sorority, said. "I feel good that they are giving out free food and stuff, seeing that it's so hot."

Lamar Gentry, a Kappa member and president of the Black Alumni Group, assisted the Gamma Epsilon Chapter of the fraternity with incorporating its ideas to the reunion.

Gentry, owner of The Gentry Group Inc. in East St. Louis, said it was an honor to come back to SIUC after almost 30 years.

"This was mainly to bring all the organizations, undergraduate, graduate and folks in the neighborhood back together, because this is a family," he said. "A lot of times we've gone our own ways, and haven't come back."

Also as the undergraduate adviser to the fraternity, Gentry said he is proud of the activities the group has been involved.

"It brings me back to campus to find out what's going on," Gentry said, "and to make sure the undergraduates are keeping the same pace and taking care of things on campus."

Chris Hicks, Kappa member, said having activities in conjunction with the reunion was the best possible way to get past and present SIUC students together as well as fraternity members.

"There are a lot of people down here who haven't seen people in 10 to 20 years," Hicks, a graduate student in industrial technology from Chicago, said. "It'll be a good memory thing. And it was nice to see older brothers that I had never met."

In lieu of all the bad publicity that greeks have gotten in the past years, it's overwhelming to see the bonding that they still have.

CARL JONES
SIUC ALUMNUS

Peters, a member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, said the reunion's unification with the activities of Kappa Alpha Psi's Gamma Epsilon chapter of the fraternity exemplifies the fraternity's pledge of helping young people.

"I am a Kappa," he said. "And our program deals with working food for students, members of the fraternity said their involvement with the reunion was positive representation for black organizations on campus.

said the site also is helpful to business owners considering operating in Carbondale.

"Fifty percent of the people who call us want information. This provides access to information on Carbondale government, education, businesses, organizations and recreation," Brown said.

Chad Stafko, an graduate student in business who designed the layout, said the location will help attract businesses to Carbondale.

"It gives them the demographics of the city and an idea of the businesses already in the area," Stafko said. "It gives them a clearer picture of what the community is like."

Stafko said it also promotes Carbondale businesses. "Some of the lesser-known businesses are more easily contacted, and you can find where they are located," Stafko said.

Monty Smith, sales manager at Vogler Ford, 1170 E. Main St., said

Vogler Ford recently became part of the site, and he likes the idea of putting local business on the Internet. "It has the potential to reach a lot of people in the area," Smith said. "In an academic community such as this one, there are more people on the Internet."

White said Midwest-Internet Consulting Group Inc. will be updating and improving the site.

"We are considering expanding by adding a real-time chat room, a bulletin board and a directory similar to the white pages," White said.

He said the site also may have other benefits for students in the future such as the ability to order pizza on-line or have books delivered.

Brown said other future options being considered may allow Carbondale citizens to give feedback to local, city, state and federal government employees.

The Web site is a non-profit project, but businesses can donate money.

discussion rather than a knee-jerk reaction."

The seat became vacant when Deering died in an automobile accident June 26, eliding a field of Democratic candidates, all labeled by the chairmen as proficient and qualified.

The field included Reitz and Brown of Randolph County, Tony Mayville and Gerald Deering of Washington County, and Dan McGuire and Ken Joseph of St. Clair County.

Some of the county chairmen said they favored a candidate from Randolph County.

Besides Reitz, Brown was the only other Randolph County applicant. Cooper said this, coupled with the fact that Brown amassed an impressive vote total in her November 1996 race against Sen. Dave Luechtefeld, R-Okaville, for the district's state Senate seat, made the SIUC political science lecturer a sound choice.

However, he said, in the end, Reitz was a "better fit." Reitz, apart from his position as county commissioner, also served as a lobbyist for the Southern Illinois coal industry. Cooper said this weighed heavily in the committee's decision.

"There's a solid base for Dan (Reitz) in Randolph County," Cooper said. "He's been with the coal mine forever. He knows all the legislators (in Springfield), he knows how to talk to them, he knows where they drink, and he knows the area."

"It will be a deal for our district that we're not walking in (to Springfield) with a freshman who doesn't know anything about anything."

Brown said she is dubious about

Reitz's lobbying activities factoring into the decision. She said voters tend to be cynical about political lobbying and apprehensive about endorsing the process.

"I think it's extremely difficult to ask voters to support someone who's been a lobbyist," Brown said. "Dan will have to learn how to deal with that."

Brown said Republican efforts to unseat Reitz in 1998 will probably include an attack on the lobbying issue. "It's an issue he's going to have to face square on, and it will not be easy for him," she said.

However, Cooper said Reitz's experience as a lobbyist outweighs the position's negative connotation in the minds of the voters.

Mayville said the committee's decision was based primarily on ideology and elective potential. He said Brown's position on abortion worked against her.

"Deering had been a pro-life candidate, and this district is a pro-life district," Mayville said. "Barb is a pro-choice candidate, and Reitz is pro-life, so we had to go with him."

Also, he said, there was considerable concern on the part of the committee that Brown could not secure the post in 1998 when it would be up for election. This was evident in her failed Senate bid, he said.

"She didn't mend her fences, that's why she didn't win (the Senate race)," Mayville said.

Cooper disagreed with this analysis and said the main reason Brown lost the appointment was because she does have the potential to beat Luechtefeld in 1998.

"What it really came down to is that Barb is stronger in the senatorial district," Cooper said. "She's such a great vote-getter. She's going to be a hammer next time (in the 1998 Senate race), just watch."

Rau said Reitz was given the position because he is a more viable candidate for the district.

"It might have had something to do with gender," Rau said. "There was some feeling among some of the county chairmen that the seat would be more suited to a man running." However, Cooper said gender was never an issue in the selection process and said he deplores the thought.

"I don't remember anybody saying that (Brown was disqualified because of gender)," Cooper said. "That would have stuck in my mind. 'We never said anything about her (Brown) being a woman.'"

Rau also said the committee decided to focus on two primary issues. "We'd all agreed that we'd look at abortion rights and gun control," Rough said. "You have to be more mainstream with the issues in the district, and Dan's more compatible with the 116th District." Sprague was not available for comment.

Brown said Reitz's appointment has motivated her again for a possible run against Luechtefeld in 1998.

"There's still some unfinished business here," Brown said.

However, she will not make a decision until Labor Day and in deciding, will consider if another senatorial campaign is appropriate for her and her family.

"It is much more challenging and intriguing, to me personally, to represent the whole Senate district because you have such diversity of views, and that really is exciting," Brown said.

"And to have an opportunity to sort of bring people together from both ends of the district, as you have an opportunity to do as a senator, is something that I relish the thought of having the chance to do."

"We couldn't grab anything. The fire was just starting to burn through the floor. They said if it had been 10 minutes longer, the floor would have caught on fire and the fire would've shot up the walls."

Norris' pet, an Amazon parrot, died in the blaze.

"(Norris) wanted to know if I could get it out, but there wasn't any way we could get it out," Manis said. "There was already so much smoke."

The upstairs apartment and two neighboring businesses, Mary Lou's Grill and Sound Core, sustained some smoke damage.

But Manis said the fire could have been much worse.

"We got a break on it because (the tenants) were at home and they called as soon as they started seeing smoke coming up in the apartment," he said. "Then they got out of the apartment. If it hadn't been for that, it probably would've got upstairs and we would've had a whole lot worse fire."

Agassi's mediocre play hurting tennis

UNDERACHIEVER? Tennis needs Agassi, but only if he plays like he needs tennis.

JULIE CART
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Andre Agassi has spent more than a year questioning whether he needs tennis. It has taken tennis less time to affirm its need for Agassi.

How much of the current angst in the sport — Are we popular? Can we compete with golf? Where is the next generation of American players? — can be traced to Agassi's absence? It was all made worse with Boris Becker's announcement that he intended not to enter Grand Slam events and the general stagnancy afflicting the upper levels of men's tennis.

It has been a summer of massive change in the sport, but the obsession has been fixed on what and who are missing.

The argument goes, "There's Pete Sampras, but who will follow?" That's precisely not the point. What would baseball give to have a Pete Sampras, with all of his professional dignity, once-in-an-era ability and, most notably, his lack of police record? Sampras is on pace to win more Grand Slam titles than any other man in history. Oooh, what a liability.

An example of the convoluted thinking presented itself at the French Open. As daily upsets denuded the men's field of seeded players, the talk was about how little interest the tournament was generating. Wait a minute. This is the sport that gets criticized for its beige sameness, for its lack of new names and fresh faces.

Take the Final Four as an example: Fans get most excited in the tournament when one or two basketball factories are picked off by a tiny liberal arts college. Upsets are what drive such competitions and get fans talking.

Women's tennis has the same strange situation. Steffi Graf's extended hiatus after knee surgery has had the effect of wearing down the fingernails of the tennis establishment. That would be understandable if Graf's absence created a void, but that is not the case.

Talk about a lack of spin control. Women's tennis has a 16-year-old phenomenon as its ranking star, causing nitwits like John McEnroe to remark that that fact signals a problem in women's tennis. How's that? If Martina Hingis's biggest problem is she shoots off her mouth a little bit, that makes her immensely more professional on her worst day than McEnroe ever was on his best.

In the United States, too often the "problem with tennis" has been a code phrase for, "the problem with American tennis." Different issues. There is a problem with grass-roots tennis in this country and the U.S. Tennis Assn.'s inability to reach a new, non-private club generation of players. To say nothing of guiding those young players through the snake pit of junior tennis and onto the tour as a successful pro and functional human.

That's a real issue, but quite apart from the parochial concern about the lack of Americans in the top 10 on either tour. Do Americans always have to cheer for Americans? Can American tennis fans appreciate talent only when it resides in an American player?

Tennis, to its shame, seldom embraces diversity as an issue. Yet, in a less narrow frame, there is diversity in the sport. Tennis has brilliant maniacs like Goran Ivanisevic. It has hugely talented but spectacular under-achievers like Jana Novotna. Tennis has stories and clowns and wildly unpredictable players who make matches interesting.

Tennis has Europeans and Asians and South Americans as its stars. It is capable of shocking surprises: The young Brazilian, Gustavo Kuerten, should be rewarded with more than the French Open title for his service to the sport. A happy, grateful winner is as refreshing as it is unusual.

This all comes back to Agassi. His mere presence in the sport will not automatically elevate tennis. Graf playing injured or Agassi playing indifferently does more harm than good. It's not them, it's their game and their passion that compel fans to watch.

Good tennis elevates tennis. Rivalries elevate tennis. A logical season with a sensible rankings system elevates tennis. Committed professionals bringing their honest effort to the job elevates tennis.

shot. His shot from 18 to 25 feet rarely hit any part of the rim on its way through the hoop.

Roger Ollie, the SIUC ball boy during Glenn's years, remembers how much work Glenn put into shooting the ball.

"He'd be in the gym two hours before practice or a game," Ollie said. "He had the sweetest release on a jump shot."

Glenn did not limit his success to basketball. As a junior, he was named first-team academic All-American.

With both of his parents being schoolteachers, Glenn said academic achievement was as important to him as athletics.

"They pushed me in both areas," he said. "Even in the summer, I would have to read books and magazines."

Glenn received a bachelor's degree in mathematics in 1977.

Herman Williams, SIUC assistant coach from 1974-78, said Glenn's ability to do well in the classroom made his basketball accomplishments more impressive.

"As a person, Mike is one of the best I've run across," he said. "He was a student first and then a player."

"After a road game, I would look back, and there would always be one light on in the plane. It would be Mike reading or studying."

Glenn said his years at SIUC sometimes made it difficult to study and practice with the team.

"It (SIUC) had a reputation for being a huge party school," he said. "The parties were available, but I allocated my time to be responsible."

Glenn said he worked hard to be successful, but with his success, tries to help others as often as he can.

"He was always courteous to others," Ollie said. "One time, there was a deaf person in the crowd who wanted to talk to Mike after the game. He didn't have time, but gave me a message in sign language that said 'I'll see you next time.'"

TAYLOR

focused the whole year."

Despite missing two games, Taylor had eight interceptions, 96 yards and one touchdown. At the end of the 1983 season, he was named to the All-American team.

He also was drafted in the first round of the NFL draft in 1983 by the Seattle Seahawks.

Waiting for that call made Taylor a little anxious.

"I was kind of nervous during the whole thing, and I couldn't sleep that night," he said. "There were two guys at my grandmother's house that night. There was a guy from Pittsburgh and a guy from Seattle. The guy from Seattle told the one from Pittsburgh to go home because Seattle had the higher pick. When the 22nd pick came up, I got the call."

Taylor also played for the Detroit Lions, the Cleveland Browns and the Atlanta Falcons.

He enjoyed playing with Cleveland the most because he was close to home.

"I'm from Youngstown and so my mother and my grandmother were able to come to the games," he said. "It (Cleveland) is a first-class organization."

Taylor retired at the end of the 1995 season. He said the only thing he misses is the camaraderie of the players on the team.

But he does not keep up with football the way he did when he was playing.

"I might watch the highlights, but I don't watch any games," he said. "I went to a football game in Seattle, and I left after halftime. It was boring."

He said football players today do not work hard enough.

"Some of them don't give enough effort," he said. "They are always nagging and have gotten softer. I look at some of the defensive backs today and tell my mom she had me 10 years too early."

Taylor now is part of an alumni association with the Seahawks and is enjoying spending the time with his wife and two children in Seattle.

His 10-year-old son plays baseball, and Taylor said he hopes he never decides to play football.

"Football is a dangerous sport," he said. "It takes an exceptional athlete to play the game. I have seen two players get paralyzed while I was playing. I was fortunate to get out of there pretty healthy."

Three holes cut down Woods

LOS ANGELES TIMES

6 and a three-footer at No. 7.

"If I had made those two putts, I might have got it going. I never got any putts at all."

TROON, Scotland—After spending a large portion of his time Sunday at Royal Troon ankle deep in grass or on the green watching his golf ball stay out of the hole, Tiger Woods knew his fourth round wasn't going to be anything like his third round.

He was right. Woods had a course record-tying 64 Saturday but slashed his way to a 74 in the final round to finish at even-par 284.

Woods tied for 24th, his worst finish in a major this year, after his victory at the Masters and a tie for 19th at the U.S. Open.

It wasn't all that bad a week, he said.

"Overall, it was a good experience," Woods said. "To win today, I felt I had to shoot a round like yesterday, but I had to get off to a good start. It didn't happen."

Woods birdied No. 4 and No. 5 and had chances on the next two holes, but he missed an eight-footer at No.

6 and a three-footer at No. 7.

"I had made those two putts, I might have got it going. I never got any putts at all."

Then there was his experience at No. 8, the 126-yard "Postage Stamp." Woods drove his 9-iron into a bunker and the ball was buried. He blasted out, but the ball rolled right back in. Woods blasted out again and three-putted for a triple-bogey 6.

"I knew I couldn't win then," he said. "But if I had sunk those putts at the 6th and 7th, it might have been a different story."

And it also may have been a different story if Woods had played a couple of holes very, much differently—like the triple-bogey he took on No. 10 in the first round and the quadruple bogey he took on No. 11 in the second round.

"The week wasn't bad, but I had three bad holes, and you can't afford to do that in a major. You can't let it happen."

BEST WISHES: Mike Glenn, 1977 SIUC alumnus, former NBA player and co-host of CNN's sports shows "This Week in the NBA" and "College Basketball Weekly," signs an autograph for Pearl Hicks, a 1962 SIUC alumnus from Greensboro, N.C., in his new book, "Lessons in Success from the NBA's Top Players." Glenn was signing autographs Saturday at the SIUC Black Alumni Reunion picnic.

Glenn in town to promote his book on success stories.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Former SIUC basketball guard Mike Glenn's visit to Carbondale last weekend brought back some memories that began when he once turned down University of North Carolina head basketball coach Dean Smith to become a Saluki.

"Dean Smith came to my house on occasion," Glenn said. "But I came to SIUC because of the diversity of students and it graduates a lot of African-Americans."

Glenn traveled from his home in Atlanta to sign copies of his new book, "Lessons in Success from the NBA's Top Players," at the 1997 Black Alumni Reunion picnic Saturday at Crispus

Attucks Park on North Wall Street.

Glenn, who played at SIUC from 1973-76, is the co-host of CNN's "This Week in the NBA" and "College Basketball Weekly."

In his book, Glenn talked with several NBA players, including Latrell Sprewell of the Golden State Warriors, the Detroit Pistons' Grant Hill and Mitch Richmond of the Sacramento Kings.

"I went to the top players on every team and asked them two questions — what are the most important lessons they've learned to be successful in basketball and life," Glenn said. "I wanted to know the essence of their success as a human being and a player."

Glenn said the responses from the players were no different than those of any other profession.

"I recognized their (NBA players) thoughts are very similar to other people with success," he said. "Pro players are not given as much credit with their success as others."

Glenn, who played 10 seasons in the NBA, has enjoyed success on and off the court.

He finished his career at SIUC second on the school's all-time scoring list with 1,878 points and owns the record for most field goals made in a career (885).

In 1977, Glenn was drafted by the Chicago Bulls. He suffered a broken vertebra in an automobile accident during his rookie season.

After rehabilitation, Glenn had stints with the Buffalo Braves, New York Knicks, Atlanta Hawks and Milwaukee Bucks.

Glenn ended his professional career in 1987. He averaged 7.6 points per game and he scored 4,496 points.

Nicknamed the "Stinger," Glenn was best known for his near-perfect jump

Ex-NFL star inducted into SIUC Hall of Fame

ALL-AMERICAN:
Taylor a member of 1983 Division I-AA championship team.

DE SPORTS EDITOR

Taylor

Even though Saluki Hall of Famer Terry Taylor played 10 years in the NFL, his favorite memories of playing football stem from lettering at SIUC.

"My best four years were in college," he said. "Being on my own, I learned a lot here. Carbondale is a little town, but it is a good place."

Taylor, along with five other athletes, recently was named to the SIUC Hall of Fame. The ceremony will be Sept. 13 at the SIUC home opening football game.

He said things have changed in Carbondale since he attended. "When I was here, there were about 25,000 students," Taylor said. "It is a lot smaller now."

When SIUC head football coach Jan Quarless was an assistant coach for the Salukis, he recruited Taylor in 1980.

Quarless said Taylor is more than qualified for the distinction.

"This is an honor that is well deserved," Quarless said. "He was able to perform here at a high level, and he was one of the players who was instrumental in the championship year."

Quarless said there were two reasons he recruited Taylor.

"First he had tremendous speed," Quarless said. "He ran the 100-yard dash in 4.3 [seconds]. He also had tremendous jumping ability. I saw him on the basketball court, and he could dunk the ball every way but upside down. He about a 42-43 inch vertical leap."

Taylor played on the 1983 team that won the Division I-AA National Championship.

Taylor said he knew he was coming into a winning program when he came to play in 1980, and each year he played, his numbers went up. In 1980 and 1981, he had three interceptions.

In 1982, he led the team in interceptions with six and yards returned with 93.

Before his year final year at SIUC, Taylor wanted to make some improvements because he knew NFL scouts would be watching.

"At the beginning of the year, I took it upon myself to play hard," he said. "I missed a couple of games because of a knee injury, but I stayed
