Damages, which have left Neckers Building room 102 to sit vacant after a fire broke out June 2 because of a chemical combustion, are expected to cost the university more than $1 million. Although most of the C-Wing has reopened, Jay Means, dean of the College of Science said the room may not be reopened until December.

Neckers cleanup nears completion

Though most of the damage caused by the chemical fire in June in the Neckers Building has been fixed, questions about research equipment have started to flare up.

Jay Means, dean of the College of Science, said although repairs on the chemical fire caused less than two months ago have gone "surprising well" during the past month, not everything is all right in the college.

"Right now we have a serious problem, and that is with the equipment that was damaged," he said. "That we do not have a solution to right now."

The fire broke out June 2, when a student poured chemicals into a sink, which caused a chemical reaction. No one was hurt in the fire, and the student was not held liable for damages.

SIUC spokesman Rod Sievers had said earlier most of the damage was covered by insurance, although some of the equipment was not due to its age. He said most of the C-Wing, where the fire started, classrooms and labs should be ready for use at the beginning of the fall semester, but room 102, where the fire started, would still be closed for awhile.

"They are going to have gut the entire lab; the walls, the doorframes, everything has to been taken out and replaced," Sievers said. "It may be December before that lab is back in operation."

Means said his college has begun to test all the equipment in the wing where the fire happened to see if any of the research equipment has been damaged by smoke or chemicals. He said the cost to replace it could be more than $500,000, but he was not sure where the money would come from to replace the damaged equipment.

"That is the big outstanding question for us at this point," he said. "We're kinda caught in the middle here, because the equipment manufacturers of these expensive pieces of equipment will charge upwards of 20 to 30 percent of the original cost every year for insurance. There's no real way to insure them."

Administrators initially estimated the damage to be more than $1 million, for cleanup and equipment replacement, but Sievers said it could be a little bit more since outside contractors were needed to remove asbestos in the wing. He deferred questions about costs to Phil Gatton, director of the Physical Plant.

Gatton is out of town until later this week, according to his secretary, and could not be reached for comment.

Means said since it is the summer, no classes were interrupted by the cleanup, and everything is coming closer to normalcy in regard to classrooms. However, the college is still waiting for more information about how much money will be needed to replace equipment.

"Right now, we're getting close to what we expect in regards to usable spaces," he said. "But we're still waiting for equipment people to come in and inspect and figure out if we can still use our equipment. We're just beginning with that."

Enrollment undergoes changes with Nicklow

RYAN VOYLES
Daily Egyptian

John Nicklow said he is just like the professor who allows his students to come up with their own research projects — only the project for his employees is to turn around SIUC's sliding enrollment numbers.

Nicklow, who was named the assistant provost for enrollment management June 15, said he has begun to settle into his role as head of enrollment and see what needs to be done to increase enrollment and retention.

"I saw some opportunities to make some changes, but to build off of current strengths and to do things, not in all cases, but to do things differently," Nicklow said. "We can improve as a unit and as an institution."

SIUC enrollment has dropped every year since 2005, including a drop of 1,849 students from fall 2007 to spring 2010. But Angie Royal, director of New Student Programs, said Nicklow has provided a change of direction.

"He's very goal-oriented and outcome-driven and he's really challenged us to establish our own goals," Royal said. "He wants us to set-up our own goals and he will hold us accountable for those. Those can only help us grow as a unit and ultimately increase our enrollment and retention."

Nicklow said it was important to allow the different units of enrollment management to let him know what expectations can be for future enrollment.

"If you give them the research topic, they'll do it — but they won't be passionate about it," he said. "If you let them give me the goals then we can talk about it and work it out, they're going to be more passionate about it. I want to see what they want to do and I'll talk to them individually to clarify just what these goals are and if we are on the same page."

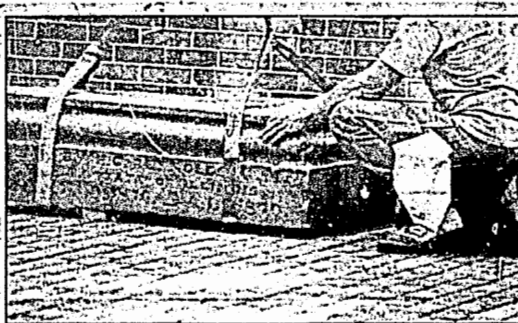

Nicklow, who has served as associate dean of the college of engineering the last three years, said it was especially important for his department to develop communication with the colleges on campus.

"This is truly a collaborative effort, if any one of us tried to do it ourselves we wouldn't be as effective as we could if we stand together," he said. "It's the idea to get 22 of our ideas out on the table and understand what each of us needs and understand what we want so we can collectively work towards that goal."

SIUC receives more than $360,000 in grant money

The university has caught grant money left and right — and has received more than $360,000 this week. Congressman Jerry Costello announced in a press release this week SIUC would receive $200,000 from the U.S. Department of Energy, $119,987 from the National Science Foundation and $45,000 through the European Union-United States Atlantis Program of the U.S. Department of Education.

"Projects such as these help fulfill the academic mission of the university, and I will continue to work to ensure that we adequately fund federal research and development programs," Costello said in the release.

The $200,000 grant will be used for a project titled "Understanding Compound Phase Transition in New Heusler Alloy Colossal Magnetocaloric Materials" under the School of Social Work in the College Education and Human Services.

The $119,987 grant will be used for a project titled "Integral representation of Langlands L functions," under the direction of Joseph Hundley.

The $45,000 grant will support projects that develop organizational frameworks for transatlantic student mobility, including work placements and internships that will provide adequate language preparation and full academic credit, according to the release.

"This funding will help the university promote opportunities for advanced learning with a strong international emphasis," Costello said.

Local businesses strip off Route 51

MICHARA CANTY
Daily Egyptian

Community-based businesses on the Strip have faced uncertainty due to poor funds and a lack of name recognition.

Melange Restaurant was the latest establishment to leave on the Strip, as it closed its doors Sunday after 17 years in Carbondale. Gary Edgren, co-creator and interior designer of the restaurant said the goal of the restaurant was to create a place where different people could be themselves and interact with others and not conform to more franchise restaurants.

Mark Garwin, owner of Melange, wrote on the restaurant's website he thanks all those who have asked if they could help keep the restaurant open.

"I would like to thank everybody who has expressed his or her appreciation for what we have tried to accomplish," he stated on the website.

The work atmosphere was unpredictable considering a low volume of customers, said Courtney Cavanagh, 24, a waitress and bartender at Melange. She said the business rarely stayed busy.

City Manager Allen Gill said privately-owned restaurants, like Melange, are more prone to business closure due to turnover rates.

"Two-thirds of restaurant startups fail especially in privately owned business due to lack of market research and deeper pockets," he said.

Small independent businesses that have been established in Carbondale for years do not have a large corporate backing. Therefore, the businesses suffer from both local and state platforms.

DAN DWYER DAILY EGYPTIAN

Melange, a restaurant located on the Strip, closed its doors at 3 p.m. Sunday. Local businesses face several obstacles such as a decline in student enrollment in an attempt to maintain profitability.

said Marlyhyn Marlin, owner of Mary Lou's Grill.

"The market gets saturated with all the new businesses, but we do not get the tax breaks the city offers these new businesses," Martin said. "I sit by the grace of God that He will keep us here."

Gill said the Strip population has shifted to East Grand Avenue, and foot traffic has decreased because of apartment construction on both the east and west sides of Carbondale.

Some residents like Joy Wright said they support franchise development in the city instead of privately owned businesses.

Wright, a senior from Broadview studying paralegal studies, said it would not be a bad idea for the city to consider corporate businesses and new directions.

"Carbondale is stuck in a rut. It needs more curb-side appeal," Wright said. "Keeping these old Mom and Pop stores hampers the community to grow."

Gill said he sees a bright future for the Strip's future and the Carbondale community.

"Businesses are opening. There are areas of expansions and remodeled areas on the Strip such as Paglia's restaurant," he said.

Hangar 9, a bar located on the Strip that was leveled during the May 8 storm, is under reconstruction next to the new Paglia's restaurant.

The city council plans to discuss the reshaping of the Strip with use of the Comprehensive Plan approved at a city council meeting held June 22, Gill said.

"It is a matter of matching business with customer traffic. It is nothing we can dictate," Gill said. "It is up to entrepreneurial owners to find their niche and take advantage of customer traffic."

ENROLLMENT

Royal said the connection to the colleges is something that has not been a focus of enrollment before Nicklow.

"His experience gives us a much-needed bridge between the colleges and enrollment management," Royal said. "He's providing us with a perspective we haven't had before. We've never had a person from the academic side leading our team, so we have a lot to learn from each other. We have a lot to learn about what the college's needs are, and the colleges have a lot to learn just what we do."

Besides reaching out to the different college deans, Nicklow said another major change would be the creation of the "enrollment technology services", which would use cost-efficient technology to create a closer connection to students.

"With the new software we are able to communicate with all prospective students and quickly contact any of the students on our list," he said. "Once they're here, we have another system where we can connect with almost all first-year students. We can track performance, we can intervene and we can send messages and reminders. It's also data processing, to see how many students are here and what the enrollment is going to look like."

Nicklow said he will also look to reorganize some staff into a campus relations group, which would handle questions or complaints from students, faculty or parents.

6 m excited. The challenges are there, but I'm ready to face them.

— John Nicklow
assistant provost for enrollment management

Interim Provost Don Rice said there has been no talk of a search for a long-term replacement for head of enrollment.

"We're looking at results right now," Rice said. "John has to decide long-term right now what he wants to do in his future. He could go back to associate dean (of Engineering), he could remain with enrollment or take another role inside the provost's office. It's a free-flowing field right now."

Nicklow said his main focus is to turn the tides on SIUC's declining enrollment.

"I would like to turn the trend around and I'd like to increase the number of students who are enrolled and are graduating from this institution," he said. "I'd also like to focus more on retention and build collaboration with the other units on campus. There's the opportunity for significant collaboration, and because of that progress, we will see progress and a turnaround in these trends."

"I'm excited. The challenges are there, but I'm ready to face them."

Study abroad group travels to Morocco

LAUREN LEONE
Daily Egyptian

In May, Rebecca Warren was sitting in an academic conference in Morocco among Muslim women. Some faces were veiled; some were not — but all of them had confidence.

"It was not what Americans stereotypically think — Muslim women being quiet and uninvited to participate," she said.

Warren, a second-year Law student from Lexington, Ky., traveled to Morocco with a group of five women and one instructor as part of a non-traditional study abroad program focusing on gender issues and Muslim women's accomplishments.

Warren said she believes her 14-day experience within Morocco, an Islamic country in North Africa, changed her's and rest of the group's perspectives.

"We noticed these female college students were very confident and bold about speaking up in class and sharing their views and opinions," she said.

Trusha Crawshaw, a junior from Desoto studying sociology, was on the all-female trip and said the women's confidence is what stood out the most.

Naseem Ahmed, instructor for the study abroad class and education coordinator for international programs and services, said she chose Morocco because she wanted her students to have a more accurate understanding of Muslim women. She said she wanted the group to see the women's progress and accomplishments, rather than hearing "harrowing tales" of misfortune.

"American's have an image of Islam that has permeated our education and created a fear," she said. "Both of what we know, and of everything else we don't know," she said.

Being a Muslim woman from Bangladesh, she said she feels the face of Islam has been misconstrued since 9/11.

"Arab Muslims are only a small number of the entire population," she said. "But whenever we think of Muslim countries, we tend to think of women being completely out of public space, being segregated."

Ahmed said the group visited the University of Al-Karouine in Fes, which is one of the oldest universities in the Muslim world — and one of the only universities to be founded by a woman, Ahmed said.

Crawshaw said she saw things changing for the better for women in Morocco.

"Everything was changing, from how the courts would treat women who came to them as a domestic abuse case, to more help available to treat women trying to escape domestic abuse," she said. Ahmed said she wants to see more short-term, non-traditional study abroad programs similar to the trip to Morocco at SIU.

"We normally see study abroad programs go to Japan, France and Italy," she said. "But with lesser-known countries, there's a broadening of the mind."

Study abroad programs such as the Morocco trip are more intense than a classroom setting, Ahmed said.

"It is a learning experience that doesn't end in Morocco," she said.

If any student is interested in participating in the Study Abroad Program, call 453-7670 or visit www.ips.siu.edu/sa for more information.

TRANSFER

"When someone leaves your team, a lot of things can happen you can't foresee when you recruit someone," Moccia said. "Either they get homesick, there is a coaching change, they don't like the direction of the team or they have a family member that's ill."

He said college athletic programs also have to be weary of the NCAA's academic progress rate. Moccia said the rule puts a point value on students' academics and whether a school can retain them.

Shafer said one point is given to an athlete for being eligible to participate in sports and another is given if the athlete comes back instead of transferring. He added the standard point score for every individual sports team is 925. If a team drops below 925, the NCAA can endorse penalties such as taking scholarships away. Shafer said post-season appearances could be erased as well if failing to meet the score becomes routine.

Moccia said he likes that the rule has been attached to every sport and program in every university or college because of what it prevents.

"They enforced the rule because they don't want people running kids out of programs or limit the amount of kids transferring," Moccia said.

He said the positives of transfers leaving or coming is a unique balancing act. Moccia said it might be the best idea for student-athletes to leave because they don't fit in a program, but it might be sad to see other students leave.

"You might take a transfer that is a bad fit for the team or you might work out great like a Brandon Jacobs or Deji Karim," Moccia said.

"I think it will work in our benefit because the defense won't be able to focus in on one guy and they won't know where we are coming from because we can use multiple backs in the backfield which will keep the defense honest," Strother said.

Strother said he hopes to be able to put what he learned from Karim to good use this season. He said one of his personal goals this season is to make it into the end zone for the first time.

"I learned a lot from Deji," Strother said. "I learned how to be patient when running the ball and to not run all crazy when I get the ball and also how to read defenses to know where my possible cutback lanes might be."

ATHLETICS

Transfers becoming the new trend

BRANDON LACHANCE
Daily Egyptian

Professional athletes are not the only ones switching area codes as transfer rates have increased in collegiate athletics.

John Shafer, director of athletics at Southeast Missouri State University, said transferring is at the highest rate it has ever been in his 40 years of experience in intercollegiate athletics.

Shafer's resume includes 37 years with four different teams in the South-eastern Conference. He said losing a student athlete is a wash when it comes to finances, but costs institutions when it comes to education and time coaches spend finding players and teaching them once they have committed.

"The only money lost, would be money on recruiting," Shafer said. "If a scholarship player is lost, we use it on someone else. The major loss is in time academically, it's not like we will lose $100,000 on a kid!"

Transfers have been more common at SIU recently as well with athletes such as Kevin Dillard, Anthony Booker, Nick Evans, Dana Olsen, Ellen Young, Eric West and Chase Miller — among many others — all departing their respective programs within the last four years.

SIU Athletic Director Mario Moccia said transfer student-athletes affect SIU in three different areas: team aspect, finances and possibility of penalties authorized by the NCAA. Moccia said a dollar amount can't be put on a student's education but a transfer student is an investment containing funds on education, housing and meals.

Mark Scally, SIU associate athletic director, also said a dollar figure cannot be assigned to losing or gaining a transfer athlete. He said a checkbook could not be figured out when it comes to recruiting cost either.

"When our coaches travel, they go all over the country," Scally said. "So, I don't know if you can put a dollar figure on, hey, it cost $23 to go see somebody play at SWIC (Southwestern Illinois College) or $5,000 to go see someone play in Orlando."

Moccia said no one could predict if a student will leave early after coaches have heavily recruited him or her. He said it doesn't matter which issue sends a student packing — it always affects the team.

FOOTBALL

Running backs will work as pack

15 minutes with:
Lucien Walker

RYAN SIMONINX
Daily Egyptian

As the SIU football team holds its first official practice Aug. 6 just shy of a month before the season starts, the DAILY EGYPTIAN caught up with senior running back Lucien Walker.

In 2008, Walker played in 10 games and had 50 carries accruing 201 yards along with one touchdown. His best performance came against Northwestern where he posted 46 rushing yards on six carries as well as one reception for 28 yards.

Last year, Walker played in 12 games and picked up 243 rushing yards and arose as the third leading rusher on the team. He also averaged 25.9 yards on nine kickoff returns.

DE: If you didn't play the position of running back at SIU what position would you like to play?

LW: It would be quarterback because I played QB in high school and then I switched to running back my senior year. I have always been a natural quarterback though.

DE: What is your favorite part about being a running back for SIU?

LW: Just taking pride in what I do. I like being the heart and soul of the team because every year we have had a great running back. I like how everybody on the team depends on me.

DE: What was it like to be in the locker room after SIU beat Northern Iowa?

LW: It was just a feeling of joy because we had finally accomplished it, there is no other way to describe it.

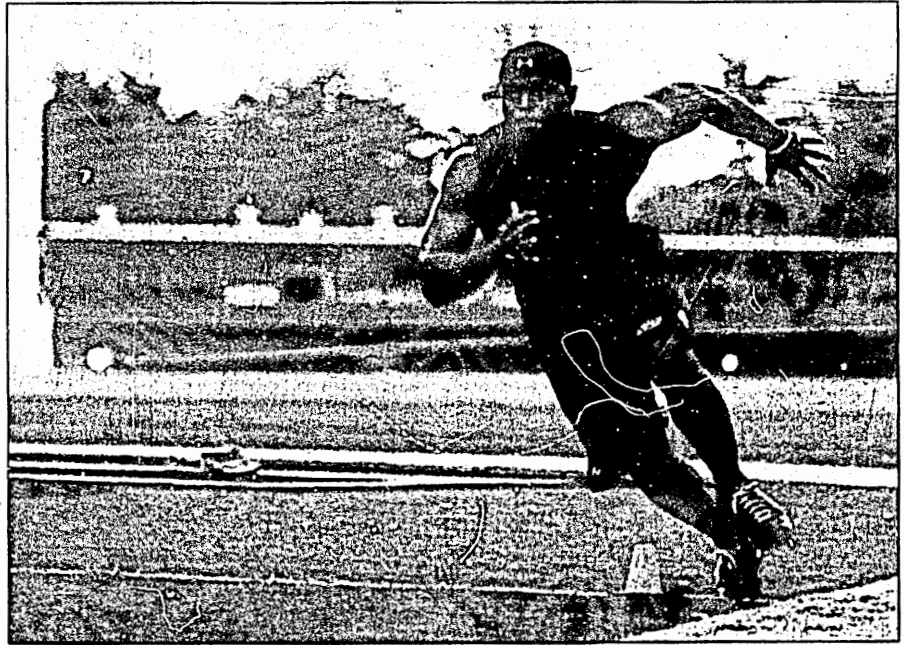

DE: What is your favorite Dale Lennon moment?

LW: He always tells stories the night before a game and I really enjoy those.

DE: What is your favorite professional sports team?

LW: For football it would have to be the 49ers. I have always been a 49ers fan.

DAN DWYER | DAILY EGYPTIAN

Senior running back Lucien Walker takes part in summer conditioning Tuesday at McAndrew Stadium. Walker ranked as the Salukis third-leading rusher with 243 yards in 12 games last season.

RYAN SIMONINX

The SIU football team will look for strength in numbers at the running back position after losing the school record holder for most all-purpose yards in a single season in All-American Deji Karim.

Steve Crutchley, the running backs coach for SIU, said Karim was a great running back but the production from that position will continue to be a strong point on the offense.

"We don't have a back that is as fast as Deji but we are confident that we can find some one who is as durable and who can highlight the position in a different way for us," Crutchley said.

He said the combination of Lucien Walker, Steve Strother, Shariff Harris and Richard White should work well off each other. He said he has high expectations for all of the running backs on the team.

"I hope that we can have a couple of guys from the position that can emerge and separate themselves from the rest of the pack," Crutchley said. "I am hoping a couple of guys can become difference makers and play day in and day out to move the chains."

Senior running back Lucien Walker said Karim is hard to replace, but he is ready to be a major contributor at the running back position.

"I am a power runner and I am not afraid of that contact with the defender, which I think they will count on me for that," Walker said. "I have good hands so I think that I will be useful in that way, too."

Sophomore Steven Strother said this year the running back position will be a combination of different backs instead of relying on just one to carry the position.

"If Deji was having a bad day in a game last year we were in trouble, but this year if somebody is having a bad game hopefully another one of us can pick it up and keep it rolling," Strother said.

Strother said having more than one running back in the game might be an advantage to the offense this year.
