U.S. destroys Iraqi radar site

The Washington Post

U.S. Air Force warplanes, "illuminated" by enemy anti-aircraft radar Sunday, attacked and apparently destroyed the radar site south of the no-fly zone in northern Iraq, a Defense Department spokesman said.

Although the Iraqi radar was located outside the no-fly zone, its activity constituted a "direct threat" to two U.S. Air Force F-4G "Wild Weasel" aircraft patrolling over the zone, said U.S. Navy Lt. Cdr. Brian Cullin, the Pentagon spokesman.

Such radars are used to track enemy aircraft and mark them as targets for surface-to-air missiles, Cullin said.

Follow-up reports confirmed the presence of an Iraqi SAM-2 missile site close enough to fire upon the U.S. warplanes, he said. The jets returned safely to their operating base at Incirlik, Turkey.

The Associated Press said the British Broadcasting Company had monitored an official Iraqi News Agency report that three Iraqi soldiers were wounded in the incident.

The Reuters news agency said INA quoted a foreign ministry spokesman describing the U.S. attack as "provocative, hostile behavior."

Cullin confirmed that the attack marked the first time that U.S. aircraft had fired at an Iraqi target south of the 36th parallel, the line marking the southern limit of the so-called "no-fly" or "exclusion" zone.

U.N. coalition forces delineated the zone after the Gulf War to forestall Iraqi attacks against rebellious Kurds in northern Iraq.

A similar zone exists in the South to provide protection for Shiite Muslims.

A Defense Department statement said the two patrolling U.S. F-4Gs detected the Iraqi radar tracking signal at 1 p.m. Sunday.

Meister sentenced to 5 years for theft

By Joe Littrell
Police Writer

A former SIUC employee was sentenced to five years in jail and fined for embezzling more than $90,000 from the University between 1987 and 1991.

John F. Meister, former pollution control director, was sentenced to five years in the Illinois Department of Corrections by Jackson County Judge Bill Schwartz on two counts of theft and one count of theft by deception.

The case was prosecuted jointly by Jackson County State's Attorney Chuck Grace and Illinois

Attorney General Roland W. Burris.

In addition, he was fined $10,000 and ordered to pay $40,000 restitution to SIUC.

The charges stem from Meister's use of an unauthorized SIUC Credit Union checking account while he was pollution control director at SIUC, where he deposited checks totalling $92,245 for work done for outside companies by members of the pollution control department.

According to the prosecutors, Meister then wrote checks totalling $52,472 against that account to his girlfriend, local car dealers and his personal credit card companies.

The remainder of the money was later frozen and recovered by authorities.

William Meehan, Meister's lawyer, told Schwartz in a pretrial statement that Meister took responsibility for the case but that he was being victimized because Meister's actions were "not uncommon" at SIUC.

"If a crime has been committed, it was by the SIUC Credit Union," Meehan said.

Schwartz later read statements from pretrial investigations that quoted Meister as saying he often transferred money between his accounts to "cover his tracks."

"By any stretch of the imagination, that shows intent," Schwartz said.

Shari Rhode, SIUC legal counsel, said after the sentencing she disputed Meehan and Meister's allegations.

The school was working to inform local financial institutions that only a select group of individuals were authorized to open accounts in SIUC's name, she said.

Before sentencing Meister, Schwartz took him to task for the actions that brought about the case, especially his "abuse of his position at SIUC."

Alcohol, bar reform top list of concerns in city

By Jeremy Finley and Sanjay Seth
Special Assignment Writers

A sampling of SIUC constituency opinion on city issues shows that alcohol problems and bar reforms are the biggest concerns, followed by economic and downtown development and mass transit.

The scientific survey asked 45 constituency members which three issues or problems in Carbondale are most important.

The groups included the Faculty Senate, Administrative/Professional Staff Council, Civil Service Employees Council, Undergraduate Student Government and Graduate and Professional Student Council.

Three City Council candidates' top priorities matched the issues raised by the group members for the most part, but differed in some key areas.

Committee to discuss $450 transferred by USG official

By Chris Davies
Special Assignment Writer

An internal affairs committee of the student government will meet today to discuss whether to look into Brad Cole's transfer of $450 in fees he used for a trip to Houston.

But Cole, the Undergraduate Student Government president, said the group has nothing to investigate and that the situation is politically motivated.

Cole transferred $450 of funds from the College Republicans without authorization from the club to reimburse Cole for a trip to the Republican National Convention in September.

Anna Lundsteen, chairwoman for the committee, said procedures for an investigation have been discussed in a closed meeting.

"We have to make sure we follow procedure in case any action is taken to impeach Cole."

Correction

High school graduation rates for the Southern Illinois counties of Union, Franklin and Williamson were incorrect in the April 12 Daily Egyptian. The figures were for people 25 and older who attained at least 12 years of education. The actual high school graduation rate for Anna, one of three districts in Union County, is obviously higher. The editors apologize that the stories on Anna's multicultural efforts were not better balanced.

Salukis keep rolling along in Valley

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

In a weekend filled with ups and downs for the SIUC softball team, it still managed to dominate and take three of four games from two visiting Missouri Valley Conference teams.

The Salukis arsenal proved deadly again, as the sluggers of SIUC hit for a whopping 45 hits and 33 runs against their MVC opponents.

In the first game of Saturday's doubleheader against Southwest Missouri State, the Bears put the Salukis in situation they were not familiar with.

The Bears jumped out for five runs in the first four innings, and added three more to take an 8-1 advantage on the Salukis, making it the first time the Salukis have been down by more than four runs this season.

Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said it is hard for a team to come back when it falls so far behind.

"When you are seven runs down, it's hard to make a comeback, because every bat counts and there is a lot of pressure involved," she said. "We dug ourselves into a hole for the first time this season, and we tried, but we could not get out of it."

The Salukis made a three-run comeback to make the score 8-4, but could not get any closer.

The Bears were able to drop bunts and use their speed, while capitalizing on the Salukis mistakes, Brechtelsbauer said.

"We did not do a very good job on defense and that was our main problem," Brechtelsbauer said. "We made some mistakes at the wrong time and did not execute very well."

Senior pitcher Angie Mick (10-4), pitched four innings, giving up 10 hits and eight runs. She was relieved by freshman Kristie Spielman, who gave up only two hits in her appearance.

SIUC was able to do what it takes in the second game, squeezing by SMSU to win the game 2-1, and get its third win of the weekend.

Junior Tania Meier (9-3) pitched a complete game for SIUC, allowing one run on seven hits.

Third baseman Maura Hasenstab was 2-for-2 with a double and an RBI.

Brechtelsbauer said she was glad to chalk up the last game as a win.

"Southwest is a tough team, and we cannot take them for granted when we play them," she said. "They played us very tough in the second game, and we are lucky to have come out on top."

Friday was a bit of a different scenario for the Salukis when they faced MVC for Tulsa, which is in its first stint as a Division I team this season.

The first game of the doubleheader proved that the Golden Hurricane can hold its own if it bears down, as the Salukis edged Tulsa for a 3-1 win.

Senior centerfielder Colleen Holloway was 1-for-3 with a triple and an RBI, while teammate Christine Knotts carried a hot bat going 2-for-3 with a double.

Meier pitched the complete game, giving up only three hits and clocking seven batters for strikeouts.

The second game got out of control.

SIUC mutilated the Hurricane with 24 runs on 24 hits, scoring 22 runs in the first three innings.

Brechtelsbauer said the team got going and never stopped.

"They played us tough in the first game, but in the second, we got out to such a great start, and it got everybody going in the rhythm," she said. "Once you get out by that much, there is no pressure in the box, and our hitters were hitting more easily."

Senior left-fielder Karrie Irvin was the game's standout, going 4-for-5 with seven RBIs, and collecting two triples, a home run and a stolen base. Knotts was also 4-for-5 with a triple and three RBIs.

Junior catcher Laurie Wilson also hit a triple, going 2-for-3 with three RBIs.

Every starting SIUC player had at least one RBI to add to their total, as freshman Jaime Koss, sophomore Mario Pecoraro, and Maura Hasenstab hit doubles to round out the Saluki extra-base hitters.

The game ended in the fifth inning, which is the first inning that the 10-run rule can be put into effect.

SIUC high jumper leaps into NCAA qualification

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

Cameron Wright won the high jump at the Kansas Relay during the weekend, jumping 7-4 1/4 to qualify for the U.S. Track and Field Championships and strengthen his position among the provisional qualifiers.

Wright also set a personal record in the high jump, which will all but assure him of going to New Orleans, La., to compete at the NCAA championships.

"I was really happy with it. I've reached one of my goals," Wright said. "It was really exciting to finally qualify for the U.S. Track and Field Championships. I haven't felt that good in a while."

SIUC coach Bill Cornell said Wright's jump was the best performance of his life.

"Cameron realized this was the best jump he's ever had in his life," Cornell said. He never missed once on the way up."

Wright's mother, Janice Buegger, said she is happy to see Wright reach his goals.

"I'm pretty excited. I know he's set some goals and it's nice to see him reach those goals," Buegger said.

Cornell attributed Wright's performance to setting his take-off foot farther back from where he has set it before, giving him more time to develop his form going over the bar.

Wright said he was initially afraid that setting his foot farther back would compromise his height, but it actually enhanced his performance.

"I feel I'm on my way up," Wright said. "Coach (Darren) Barber has really helped me prepare for the bigger meets."

Salukis supply big hits, give up big runs in 2-2 weekend

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

The SIUC baseball team won two thrillers over the weekend, but also lost two one-sided games to Missouri Valley Conference foe Illinois State.

In Sunday's finale against ISU, Saluki hurler Mike Van Gilder had a no-hitter going through five innings, but had it broken up by Mark Aguilar's solo home run that cut the Saluki lead to 4-1.

The Salukis (19-16, 4-2) held a 4-2 advantage when the Redbirds came to bat in the ninth, but the lead did not last long. Illinois State pounded a couple doubles and a couple singles off of Van Gilder to turn the 4-2 deficit into a 5-4 lead.

The Dawgs refused to quit in the ninth. After Chris Sawitch earned a walk, Dan Esplin put down a perfect bunt to reach base and put runners on first and second with no outs. After an out advanced the runners to second and third, Scott DeNoyer stepped to the plate. ISU hurler Casey Fisk worked the count to 1-2 before DeNoyer lifted a sacrifice fly to tie the game at 5-5.

With two outs in the 10th, the Redbirds put together another rally to take a 6-5 lead.

The Salukis answered the call again in the 10th. After pinch runner Brian Hampton scored on Tim Kratochvil's single, Dan Esplin came up with men on first and third and one out. Esplin made another big play, hitting a sacrifice fly to score Kratochvil, and give the Salukis the 7-6 victory.

Van Gilder (4-5) pitched the duration to earn the victory.

DeNoyer and Kratochvil each picked up two RBIs in the victory. Kratochvil had an impressive weekend at the plate, going 7-for-10 with two homers, a double and four RBIs.

In Saturday's doubleheader, there was not much to cheer about if you were a Saluki fan. SIUC pitchers got roughed up early and often in the 12-3 and 12-4 losses.

Dan Linton took the loss in the first game to drop his record to 2-3.

Mike McArdle (4-3) allowed seven earned runs in five innings in the second game in a losing effort.

In Friday's non-conference game against Southeast Missouri, the Salukis went extra-innings to beat SEMO, 9-8.

The game saw several lead changes, and the Salukis trailed 8-6 in the ninth. An error staved the ninth, and then Clint Schlosser, DeNoyer and Pete Schlosser hit singles to tie the game.

In the 11th, Dave Bernhard delivered a two-out single past third to score Schlosser and give the Dawgs the 9-8 win.

Red Cross prepares for blood drive

By Karen Ham
Health Writer

The Red Cross wants to get its blood drive in Carbondale off to a strong start today and to keep blood supplies steady, a regional coordinator said.

"We really need a strong showing at the beginning of the week to keep an adequate supply of blood for the region," said Vivian Ugent, regional coordinator of the blood drive.

The goal for this week's drive is 715 pints. Today's goal is 150 pints.

To encourage first-time blood donors to attend, the coordinators have set up a buddy system to help guide first-timers through the experience of giving blood.

"We have people who have given blood before pair up with people who have fears or questions about the process of giving blood," Ugent said. "The buddy will take them through all of the steps."

Transportation and babysitting will also be available for those who need it, Ugent said.

"We're trying to accommodate everyone's needs," Ugent said. "We want to give donors a variety of options, locations and longer hours."

The blood drive will be noon to 8 p.m. today at the Student Recreation Center; 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday at K-Mart; 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday at the Student Center, and 1:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Friday at St. Francis Xavier Church.

Prizes will be given away today from Z-100 radio station and pizza will be provided by Papa John's.

Donors needing transportation can call Ugent before 10 a.m. at 457-5258 or at the Recreation Center at 536-5531.

State school funding needs reform—Netsch

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Illinois Comptroller Dawn Clark Netsch told SIU law students it is impossible to depend on property taxes for funding schools.

Netsch traveled to Carbondale on Friday to discuss her support for an income tax increase in aid of public schools and her possible candidacy for governor.

"We have got to reform the process," Netsch said. "I understand this is not favorable but we got to make budgets more honest and to impose discipline. It has got to be paid. It just has been paid out of the wrong sources."

"You cannot both have the state give a larger share to schools and have property-tax relief without additional revenues," she said. "Those revenues would come from an income tax."

The income tax would cover a lot of options, she said.

"We have to bite the bullet and take it out of income tax," Netsch said. "It would be more fair and it would provide a relief on property taxes."

Netsch said she is looking into a possible governor candidacy.

"I got into government because I thought I could make a difference; stand up and be counted," Netsch said. "I am interested in running for governor and looking at it seriously. You never know if it is winnable but I will if able if it is a respectable race, if there are enough funds and support."

About 40 law students at the Lesar courtroom received advice about being professional and having civility when working in public service.

"You need to live up to the responsibility and pedestal that you will be sitting on because people have put you there," she said. "In recognition of the growing problem of declining sense of civility in political campaigns, school board meetings and other public sectors, many law schools are looking into expanding their ethic courses."

"Law school could only give a sense of diligent perspective but the student has to be more honest," she said. "It is the responsibility of a law institution."

Netsch also said many problems in legislature and between professionals is because there is a lack of civility and understanding.

"Many problems are because people do not understand one another or where they are coming from and they cannot sort through the important issues," she said. "It is discovery, a part of an idea that you do not go for what is important. Try to get to the heart of the matter, law school could help with giving a sense of this perspective."

The example given was when Netsch was a legislator from Chicago and she pushed for the inheritance tax. The tax was collected when an estate was passed down to a family.

"I thought it was a good idea because of the wealthy families in Chicago," she said.

"I was talking to Southern Illinois constituencies and how it was effecting family farms. I did not realize the harm on those families who had to sell their farms to cover the tax when the father died and gave it to them. It is a question of understanding each other."

Votes must precede students' gripe rights

ADDRESSING A CROWD at SIUC during the presidential campaign, Hillary Rodham Clinton quipped that those who do not vote should lose all griping rights.

Although her remark was meant to rally the masses in support of the presidential general election, the same idea should be adopted by SIUC students this week.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, students are offered a unique opportunity to influence public policy at the city and the University level.

The city election is Tuesday and will enable students and city residents to choose two council members from four City Council candidates. The Undergraduate Student Government election follows on Wednesday and will provide students with another vehicle to directly impact what happens on the SIUC campus.

WHEN STUDENTS VOTE TUESDAY FOR the two members who will be elected to the Carbondale City Council, they are choosing members that will make laws, taxes and zoning and licensing decisions that affect everyone within city limits.

Students must choose carefully the two City Council members who will be chosen from the four candidates: retired businessman John Yow, businessman Mike Henry, SIUC graduate student Keith Tuxhorn and SIUC adult education specialist Maggie Flanagan.

It is even more pressing that students vote in the city election, considering the council will address several important student issues. Among those are topics such as the bar entry age and whether or not there should be mandatory checks for rental property.

THESE DECISIONS WILL ALSO BE made by the Undergraduate Student Government. The USG acts as a voice for the students in relation to these and academic topics that necessitate student input.

Perhaps foremost, students must decide Wednesday who they will choose as the USG president, incumbent Brad Cole or challenger Mike Spiwak. The student president is not only responsible for dividing about $350,000 among student organizations but in ultimately representing the entire student body.

Students must also vote for a trustee who will act as a liaison between the student body and the Board of Trustees. These candidates are Al Cano and Mark Kochan. Students will also choose senators from the East and West sides of the campus as well as from the different departments of the University.

In addition, there will be a referendum for a mass transit system that if implemented would provide students with access day and night but would also raise student fees $20 a semester.

CONSIDERING THE IMPORTANCE OF these responsibilities and the impact their decisions will have upon the entire student body, students should run, not walk, to the polls.

But this is not so. In 13 precincts where students formed the majority of the population, turnout in the primary was under 11 percent and averaged only 4.6 percent.

Granted, some students are registered at home and cannot vote locally. But at least 7,900 students are registered to vote in Carbondale, according to census data and voter registration figures.

In the case of the USG election, all students need to cast a ballot is a student ID. Voting places are Trueblood Hall, Lentz Hall, the Student Center and Kesnar Hall.

Voting affords students with the means to make their decisions count. Those who do not might remember that griping rights should be entitled only to those who do.

Letters to the Editor

USG leader responds to group's accusations

This letter is in response to the accusations which have risen concerning my attendance at the 1992 Republican National Convention.

Early last summer a number of individuals (and past officers) of the College Republicans submitted a request for funding through the USG general funding process. That request was properly reviewed and approved for funding.

Later that summer, due to the other students having conflicts with the Illinois State Fair, I attended the convention alone. After returning, I was partially reimbursed for my expenses at the convention.

At the beginning of the fall semester this and all other expenditures were reported to the student senate. At that time, with full documentation and legitimacy, no questions were raised by any member of the group.

However, after nearly eight months, and based on policy disagreements (regarding elective termination of pregnancy coverage on student insurance, as well as my formation of the Unity Coalition — an advisory group of representatives from minority student organizations) the leadership of the College Republicans have now made a malicious attack on my character.

My membership status within the College Republicans has also been questioned. It should be made clear that I withdrew from active membership in an attempt to avoid possible conflicts and biases as I served as student body president.

In addition, with the Daily Egyptian acting as a prosecutor, judge and jury, the student body has been left without a fair and objective presentation of the information. It is unfortunate that the politically motivated personal vendettas of the College Republicans and the Daily Egyptian take front page over issues that truly affect students at SIUC.

Let us move on and address topics that directly concern students; issues such as academic cuts, financial aid, campus jobs and educated representation. — Brad Cole, president, Undergraduate Student Government

Questions still exist about funding of trip

Brad,

I am surprised at you for thinking that this is simply an attempt to get at you because you are up for re-election.

This is hardly the case. The crux of the matter is two-fold:

ONE: Why was it that Brian Ellis, then president of College Republicans, was never informed of the funds, even though he did go to Houston and paid for it out his own pocket?

TWO: This is not a matter of "turning on their own," as you so stated to the Daily Egyptian. This is a matter of integrity, honesty, and equality.

Equality? What does this election have to do with equality, one may ask?

Simply stated, it means that Mr. Cole has been an USG officer two years, as chief of staff, and president.

And yet during this time a large number of students (one could say a majority) have felt that student government was nothing more than a resumé enhancer for those on the USG.

Brad, this is nothing personal — it is merely politics.

And in politics there is a factor of trust, a trust that you have violated. That is why the story came out.

This is not a partisan election, but a student election.

This is why I encourage all students, no matter what their political affiliation, to vote for Mike Spiwak. — Eric J. Scott, junior, political science; president, College Republicans

Topnotch debate team got no support

SIUC's nationally ranked Debate Team has been one of the few truly nationally competitive activities that this University has seen in recent years.

Only one other school in the country, UCLA, can claim they were National Champions four years running.

Jeff Bile's resignation (according to the article in the DE on April 14) as the debate coach is due to declining support from the University.

It defies logic to try to understand why an administration trying to fight the "party school" image would not actively increase support for an activity that has brought SIUC to the national spotlight in recent years.

Having had the opportunity to be an active member of the debate squad and captain for my last two years, I understand the loss that this University will suffer.

The funding problem is nothing new to any of us involved in the University.

However, the cuts that have happened to the squad over the past few years are not only unjustified, but I believe they show a lack of concern by the administration.

If this University is truly dedicated to higher education, it needs to get its priorities straight.

Dean Gerald Stone's argument that "the debate program was so thinly funded that they would have trouble competing anyway, so they were cut as well as all the other programs" totally misses the point of how the team got into such weak financial condition in the first place.

Could it be that the same administration that made those budget cuts put the squad in the position they are in now?

This is all "academic" now. The coach has resigned, talented debaters will leave, and the big loser will be SIUC. — Christopher Carey, graduate student, law the predominantly black-populated South Central Los Angeles area, where the verdict was greeted with relief, and in many cases jubilation.

However, King himself was said by his lawyer Milton Grimes to be "deeply disappointed" that only two of the four white policemen were convicted.

A first trial last year in which the four policemen were largely acquitted triggered massive riots in which 53 people were killed.

Laurence Powell, 30, the key defendant, was found guilty of using excessive force, and Sergeant Stacey Koon, 42, guilty of permitting excessive force.

Officer Theodore Briseno, 40, who was found to have tried to stop the beating at a later time, and Timothy Wind, 32, a newcomer to the police force, were found not guilty.

If the two convicted police officers are given prison time when they are sentenced Aug. 4, experts said, they may be strong candidates for a minimum-security facility.

Koon and Powell could get up to 10 years in federal prison when they are sentenced by U.S. District Judge John Davies.

One legal expert said it was unlikely the two would receive no prison time.

It is up to the federal Bureau of Prisons to decide where the two officers should serve their time. Experts said Koon and Powell might be strong candidates for the minimum-security federal prison camp in Lompoc, Calif. - home to mostly white-collar criminals.

That's because they have no prior criminal records and because they could be in danger from other inmates at a prison that houses violent felons.

Government prosecutors declined comment Saturday when asked whether they would make any recommendation at the sentencing. Defense attorneys also will have a chance to argue for a lighter sentence.

Koon's lawyer also said he would ask the judge to consider granting a new trial.

Before Davies hands down a decision, he will get a detailed report from federal probation officers, who will review the case, investigate the officers' backgrounds and interview King if he agrees.

college hold positions that would allow them to do what you did," Schwartz said. "But their ethics, personal pride, honesty, and integrity keep them from it."

Schwartz also told Meister that his actions had the potential for causing serious harm to the University, both by setting a bad example for students and tarnishing the reputation and name of SIUC by abusing his position.

Jim Leach, spokesman for the Attorney General, said that his office was pleased by the sentence.

COLE, from page 1

Lundsteen said, "I find this whole situation rather disturbing, but I do not want to pass judgment without hearing Cole's side."

Lundsteen said she was hoping the University would get involved and do something about the violation of student funding.

"If Cole took money from the University and the students for his own personal use," she said. "He is not only cheating the University; he is also cheating the students."

Cole said the whole situation is a political move to discredit him.

"There isn't anything for the administration to get involved in," he said. "My opponents are looking to discredit me during election time."

In addition to an investigation by the CIA, a group of Undergraduate Student Government senators led by Denise Young is trying to begin impeachment procedures against

"Attorney General Burriss has felt that he (Meister) has exhibited a pattern of abusing his authority," Leach said. "He took his knowledge and turned it against his employer."

Meister was convicted of 12 counts of forgery and one count of theft by deception in July after he supplied forms and forged signatures that allowed the illegal dumping of oil-contaminated and asbestos-contaminated waste into area landfills.

Meister is scheduled to turn himself over to authorities on May 1.

constituency members included:

- Drinking problems, bar entry age and alternative activities, mentioned in more than half of the responses.

- Improving the economy and revitalizing downtown, mentioned by two out of five respondents.

- A proposed bus system for Carbondale was mentioned on one out of three responses.

- Taxes were mentioned on one out of five responses.

- University/city relations also were mentioned on one out of five responses.

A proposal that has been before the City Council this spring, licensing for rental property, was only mentioned as an issue six times.

The importance of issues differed widely among students, graduate students and University employees.

Undergraduates were most interested in mass transit and alcohol issues; graduates were more interested in economic development and rental property licensing.

Faculty responses varied, but bar entry age and business development led the way. AP staff members reflected these issues, too, but most often cited relations problems between the city and SIUC.

Civil service employees mentioned mass transit the most, followed by school and children's issues.

Jervis Underwood, president of the faculty senate, said it comes as no surprise to him that the bar entry age issue tops the list of importance to faculty at the University.

"A lot of it is the image of SIUC - the ill perception of a party school," he said. "There is a real concern about drunken driving, excessive drinking and high school kids in bars."

City Council candidate Maggie Flanagan said her top issues include economic development, recycling issues and a tax base for homes.

Flanagan said the bar entry issue may be a side issue to the underage drinking problem, and that more attention should be placed on social interactions.

"This is an issue that came up

Cole.

Young, a USG senator who lost last year's election to Cole, said she is circulating a petition urging senators to call a special session with Cole.

"I need 10 signatures from USG senators if we are to hold an impeachment session," she said. "It is obvious Cole has violated policy by not having the appropriate authorization to transfer funds from the College Republican's account."

Young said the administration, as well as Cole, is in violation of not following proper procedure.

"Nancy Hunter Pei was wrong for issuing the funds without having the appropriate signatures," he said. "I think this shows how much pull Cole has with the administration."

The president of the College Republicans, the former president and the faculty adviser deny that Cole had any authorization.

with Jose Waight's death, and I think we need to spend more time thinking about how we treat each other," she said. "I do think if we can't control this, we're going to have to raise the age. But this is more about improvements with social interactions and communication."

Flanagan said she is confident the mass transit will pass in a student referendum Wednesday asking for a $20 fee increase.

Candidate Keith Tuxhorn said his top three issues are downtown revitalizing, housing improvements and solving the transportation problem.

Tuxhorn said he supports raising the bar entry age to 19.

Tuxhorn said for taxes, he relies on the finance director to give him good advice when the city needs tax increases, and he needs to see a justification before he raises taxes.

Candidate Mike Henry said he believes economic development, improving rental property and dealing with the bar entry age and possible training of bar employees are the important issues.

"Obviously we need some good paying jobs better than minimum wage in this area," Henry said. "By expanding the tax base we have more services and it will be good for the University and the city."

As rental property deteriorates, the city loses housing, and it leads to the problem of safety, Henry said.

"Mandatory inspections, at the very least, are necessary," he said. "What licensing will and will not do for us will only be determined after the licensing hearings."

On the bar entry age, Henry said he has been concerned about since he first began campaigning.

Candidate John Yow could not be reached.

Other issues mentioned in the sampling included:

- race relations,
- disabilities access,
- student representation in the city,
- improved park district and more fitness trails,
- day care facilities,
- monitoring of teaching,
- and more teen activities.

Lifestyle changes help allergy sufferers

By Karen Ham
Health Writer

Hay fever, a common spring allergy, can be controlled by adjusting your lifestyle to understand what elements bother you, a Health Service nurse said.

"One of the best ways to treat allergies is to adjust your environment," said Elizabeth James, a nurse who treats allergies.

James said allergies are brought on by an over-reaction in the immune system when foreign substances, such as pollen or dust, are present.

Hay fever, also known as allergic rhinitis, starts in the spring and can last into early summer.

Allergens, the molecules that trigger allergies, come from pollen in trees, grasses and weeds.

Many hay fever sufferers experience sneezing, itchy and watery eyes, runny noses and a burning throat.

Although allergy symptoms may resemble a cold, hay fever occurs at the same time every year, James said.

For this reason, the person must be aware of their medical history to distinguish a seasonal allergy from the common cold.

James said diagnosing allergies can be difficult because they can occur at any age, even if you have never experienced them before.

A combination of factors must be present, including an inherited tendency to allergies and exposure to allergens.

James said a careful medical history and physical examination are the first steps in treating allergies.

Recurring symptoms may be associated with a change of season, location, job, diet or habits can help identify the allergen.

To treat mild allergies, over-the-counter medications may be helpful in reducing the symptoms, James said, but adjusting your environment is crucial.

For example, if you are allergic to tree pollen, avoid being outdoors for long periods of time.

"Being aware of your surroundings, getting rest and lowering stress will help if you suffer from allergies," James said.

With all medical problems, however, treatment depends on the individual.

"It's very important that you know what bothers you — especially your environment," James said.

"What works for one person may not work for you," she added.

Severe cases can be tested to identify the allergens causing problems. After the allergen has been identified, the patient is advised to avoid exposure to the allergen.

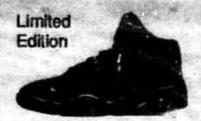

If the patient cannot avoid exposure, over-the-counter medication is suggested.

Immunotherapy, allergy shots, also are used in severe cases to build a tolerance to the allergen.

Allergies also can disappear or become milder after a few years, James said.

International council elects leader

By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

The new International Student Council president wants to expand the International Festival to include more international students and reach out to the surrounding community.

John Abolaji, president of the Nigerian Student Association, was elected as the new ISC president Friday. Abolaji is a graduate student in plant biology.

"We plan to focus a lot on expanding the International Festival," he said. "We want to review past festivals and see what people like best. We want to try to involve all students and make a larger impact."

"Other programs we plan to institute involve expanding our reach outside of SIUC and into the surrounding community," Abolaji said. "We also want to assist and promote enrollment among international students. The enrollment has gone down some."

Abolaji said the vote of the council indicated support for new ideas.

"I was glad when I found out. The first week has been very hectic," Abolaji said. "I was also happy that the council felt we needed a change in leadership and direction."

Abolaji's opponents included incumbent ISC president Nicholas Agrotis and Dong Won Kim of the Korean Student Association. Also up for re-election were vice president of internal affairs and vice president of financial affairs.

Kashid S. Niaz, election chair, said Wan Kamal Wan Napi of the Malaysian Student Association and incumbent vice president of internal affairs ran unopposed.

He said there were two candidates for the office of vice president for financial affairs: Ali Khan Mohammed of the Pakistan Student Association, incumbent vice president, and Rajasegar Gobindasami of the Malaysian Student Association. Mohammed retained his office.

Abolaji said in the campaign he stressed increased involvement of all the international community and he plans to focus on that first.

The ISC also had its annual dance party at Checkers Saturday night.

"Although it wasn't wall to wall people the night was successful considering the large international population of SIUC," Erick Enriquez, organizer for the dance, said.

Enriquez said American students joined the international community at the dance.

"I guess the turnout was about 40 percent American students and 60 percent international," he said.

Snipes' new movie reaches 'Boring Point'

By Christian Kennerly
Entertainment Writer

Film Review

As if the world needed another worn-out cop movie with a tired plot, director James B. Harris answers the call with his latest endeavor, "Boiling Point."

Starring Wesley Snipes as a cop who loses his partner in a deal gone bad, "Boiling Point" fails to deliver from the start. Snipes is an actor who has proven his potential in past projects (Mo' Better Blues, Jungle Fever), but as of late seems determined to do only trashy, poorly written action flicks. "Boiling Point," or more accurately, "Boring Point," disappoints in the script, the action, and the performances.

Snipes, playing a renegade treasury officer hell-bent on bringing the killers to justice, is unconvincing, and the lack of script is painfully apparent. The fact that Harris scripted as well as directed the film seems to explain this. Snipes is in a situation with a script so bad good acting cannot rescue it.

Veteran actor Dennis Hopper plays the mastermind behind the film's evil but fails to make any real contribution. Again, Hopper is an actor who has done fantastic work in the past with "Hoosiers" and David Lynch's "Blue Velvet" but is given nothing to work with.

The end result is a film that feels about two hours too long. Snipes flounders in a sea of bad dialogue and the action is bland, bordering on nonexistent. Harris has nothing new to offer and keeps the temperature of "Boiling Point" at bath water level.

Program helping learning disabled earn college degree

By Tracy Moss
Special Assignment Writer

The green caterpillar that emerges from its cocoon with its brightly colored wings is a symbol of change. For students in the SIUC Achieve Program, it symbolizes the changes they have experienced as college students.

The Achieve Program provides students with learning disabilities the tools they need to get a college education.

Barbara Cordoni, director of SIUC's Achieve Program, said most of her students are in a cocoon of frustration and low self-esteem when they enter the program, but by providing the tools they need to learn, the students gain their confidence and emerge from that cocoon.

"Students get here and they discover that they can learn and that professors are going to treat them as human beings who are worthy of something," she said. "They are not going to be in the high school LD classes with everyone under the sun, the drug dealers, the truants, the kids who are always in trouble."

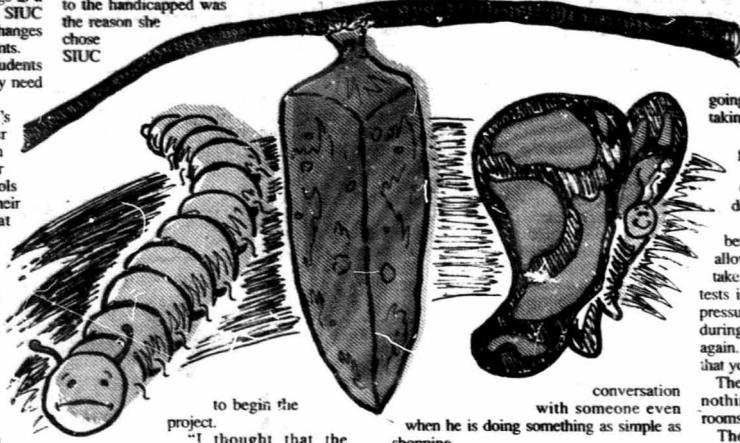

Learning disabilities stem from a neurological condition that affects a person's senses, language abilities and thought organization in a way that forces them to learn differently than most people. Students may be unable to read, write, spell, organize thoughts or may have all of these conditions, but the Achieve Program allows these students to defeat their disabilities.

The Achieve Program began in 1978, when Cordoni came to the SIUC campus and gathered administration and faculty support for such a program.

SIUC internally funded the project, which was only the second of its kind in the nation. Two years later, the program received a three-year federal grant and SIUC made it a permanent part of the campus, making it the first program in the nation to be institutionalized.

Cordoni said the SIUC community was a key to the success of this pioneering program. The University's commitment to the handicapped was the reason she chose SIUC.

to begin the project.

"I thought that the attitude of professors and administration was different here, because they saw how a person in a wheelchair could learn and a person who came to school with a guide dog wasn't intellectually impaired," she said. "Since they already accepted handicapped students, then maybe that door would be open a little crack to let in people with a different kind of handicapping condition."

Mike, a student in the program, said students with learning disabilities have a difficult time comprehending things they may understand.

"When a person's eyes see something, the brain is at the same speed, so it comprehends that something," he said. "But for me, my eyes and ears take in information so fast that my brain can't keep up with it."

Mike said for this reason he cannot hold a conversation with someone even when he is doing something as simple as shopping.

above average IQs. The condition of each student is different, so applicants to the program must endure two full days of diagnostic testing to determine exactly what services they will need.

The staff provides tutoring to help students understand the course material, study and prepare for exams, manage time and complete homework, projects and written work.

Three other program administrators along with 14 graduate assistants aid about 150 students enrolled in the program.

Student workers provide most of the notetaking for the students by going to every class with the students and taking notes for them.

Students with difficulty reading are given their textbooks on tape and some may be required to take remediation classes in spelling, reading, math or developmental writing.

"These benefits aren't extra special benefits to allow me advantages. They allow me to be equal," she said. "If you take my intelligence and you make me take tests in class, being timed, with the added pressure of a class full of students moving during the test, it's like being in Wal-mart again. You notice everything and you forget that you're supposed to be taking a test."

The rooms they take their tests in have nothing on the walls and nothing in the rooms that can be considered distracting.

The Achieve Program began in 1978, when Cordoni came to the SIUC campus and gathered administration and faculty support for such a program.

Students face obstacles in completing education

By Tracy Moss
Special Assignment Writer

A girl with a learning disability once wrote that she felt like she was put in a rocket ship when she was born and blasted to another planet—Earth.

Mike, a student in the SIUC Achieve Program, said he felt the same way before he came to college, but he has finally found happiness with who he is.

"For the first time in my life I can go into a classroom and learn," he said.

The SIUC Achieve Program provides students with learning disabilities the tools they need to get a college education, and Mike is a student being helped by the program.

Mike's planet Earth was very frustrating as a child.

He constantly listened to teachers tell him that he was lazy and unintelligent when he knew they were wrong.

Learning disabled people do not suffer from low IQs. Mike actually has an above average IQ, but he still could not read in the fourth grade.

"With an IQ that high, you realize that you can't read and you don't know why you can't read," Mike said. "I'm intelligent enough to know just how stupid I am. It is a curse."

By the fourth grade the frustration had taken its toll on Mike. He was diagnosed with a nervous breakdown, a common condition for kids with learning disabilities.

"They kind of got a clue when I picked up a desk and threw it across the room," he said.

His parents found a doctor that began tutoring Mike and he eventually learned to read, but he still had no confidence in his abilities and found ways to get around schoolwork.

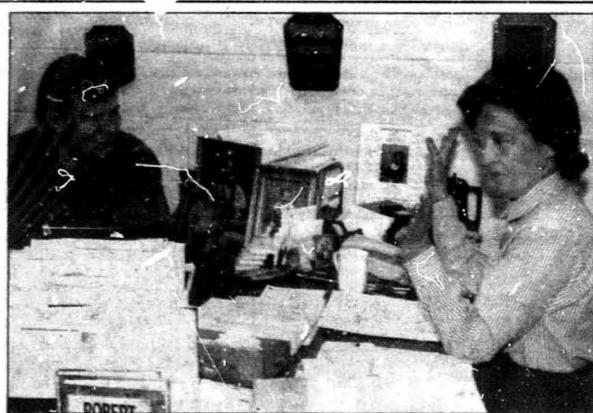

Mike was in the sixth grade when his first teacher, a small town who had a math teacher who became his hero.

"He had more confidence in me and my abilities than I did, although that's not saying a whole lot," Mike said. "He was the first person besides my parents to tell me, 'Look, you are intelligent; you just can't transfer your negative skills.'"

Mike got through high school by charming his teachers who did not have the time or the resources to give him the assistance he needed.

"The way I got through my senior English class was to basically cheat. I was in a computer class so I told about 15 of the best students in my English class that I would type their assignments for them. What I did was save all of their stuff on the computer throughout the semester," Mike said.

Then the final week of school, he took bits and pieces out of every one of the papers and combined, reworded and restructured them, and the English teacher let him turn

Program head pioneers work in special ed

By Tracy Moss
Special Assignment Writer

The day Barbara Cordoni's son, Lance, graduated from medical school marked a milestone in a long fight that began the day he was diagnosed with a learning disability.

And her fight for a good education for Lance ultimately made her a pioneer in the field of special education when she started one of the first college-level special education programs in the nation.

Cordoni initiated the program, entitled simply the Achieve Program, at SIUC to provide students with learning disabilities the tools they need for a college education.

Lance many of her colleagues in special education, she got into the field because two of her four children have learning disabilities. Lance was the first.

"Because of a significant lack of volunteers we (mothers) decided to learn about it ourselves, so that our children could be educated, supported and helped in ways that simply weren't happening for them in the public schools," she said.

Cordoni travels the nation visiting other universities to assist them in starting similar programs like Achieve. Many of the graduate assistants that work in the Achieve Program began similar programs at other universities.

Cordoni was a certified teacher and a speech pathologist which helped her realize that something was different about 4-year-old Lance.

"I knew that something was different because he was reading my lips," she said. "And I had noticed unusual speech patterns from the time he was tiny."

A teacher in the local school district tested him and diagnosed him as having a learning disability.

"The teacher said just take him home and love him," Barbara said. "I thought that was a dumb

Early education must suit needs of curious kids

By Tina Davis

Inner happiness is what every being must strive for in the early stages of education, but according to David L. Norton, the American curriculum is not doing its job. Norton, a professor at the University of Delaware, was the guest speaker of the 18th annual Leys Lecture last Friday, talking on "Education for Self-Knowledge and Worthy Living."

Norton said children need to be educated out of their own curiosity instead of being forced to learn.

"Teachers have a habit of ignoring what children want to learn about and substitute that with the curriculum," he said.

His solution is to stress intrinsic rewards in primary and secondary education stage because children are fluid and eager to learn.

Three basic needs for worthy living according to Norton are:

- Gaining the sufficient knowledge, learning without being forced,

- self-knowledge, or knowing your personal truth and what you want and

- integrity, which means not worrying about what others have or what they think about you.

When Norton took a survey in his class, he found that 8 percent of his students were doing or have done something significant for other people; 2 percent worked in their chosen career and 3 percent had jobs that were prospectively interesting.

"In order to learn the concept of intrinsic rewards, students from kindergarten through college need to explore work in a larger society, do community service to see how it feels to help other people, and go on internships or apprenticeship to see their career in real life," Norton said.

He said education should be taught through more hands-experience instead of memorization of a textbook.

Future of state coal industry still alive—company official

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
General Assignment Writer

Illinois coal companies, laborers and the state government will have to combine efforts to keep the coal industry alive in the future, said a coal company president.

In his address to SIUC mining engineering and Midwest Coal Section Thursday, George S. Shiflett, president of Peabody Coal Company, discussed issues facing the coal industry including observations of the Clean Air Act and union worker negotiations.

Shiflett said the coal industry still has the opportunity to market coal after the 20th Century.

"We still have the opportunity to market coal after 1999," Shiflett said. "But we have to be aggressive and creative by considering social and economic costs and utilize our resources at the same time."

"The state of Illinois has to be able to maintain a coal market as we move through the phase one compliance period and approach the phase two compliance period (the acid rain amendment to the Clean Air Amendment)," Shiflett said.

Shiflett said everyone involved will have to make some tough decisions about technology and their dedication as an industry, laborer, state government and utility commission as how they will deal with it.

Taylor Penoneau, vice president of the Illinois Coal Association, said the whole industry is aggressive in many facets.

"The industry is really quite aggressive on numerous fronts," Penoneau said. "With individual companies, the marketing people have never been more aggressive in trying to keep the current contracts enforced and to try to get new ones in this difficult market situation."

Shiflett said it in phase one there will be a decrease in coal mining jobs in Illinois.

"Hopefully we can find ways to build this back as we approach phase two and there are improvements in technology to comply with the sulfur dioxide removal process that is required with the Clean Air Act," Shiflett said.

Shiflett said even when alternative energy sources present themselves in the future, the coal industry must always stay competitive to stay in the marketplace.

"You always have to keep the product competitive as an energy source," Shiflett said. "We also have to strive to do that so we can

Communication key to trade

Southern Illinois potential grows with agreement

By Mikael Pyrtel
Business Writer

Under the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), there is tremendous potential for the Southern Illinois region in many areas, according to SIUC officials.

The eighth annual International Business Day at the Small Business Incubator gave SIUC students, business and community leaders the opportunity to discuss the NAFTA and what it means to Illinois.

Iqbal Mathur, interim dean for the College of Business and Administration, said there is tremendous potential for the Southern Illinois region under NAFTA.

Mathur said SIUC and Louisiana State University have applied for a grant through the Department of Education to help develop small business.

"One of our activities is to focus on the small businesses in this area and the Mississippi Delta area," he said.

"If the proposal is accepted strategies will be developed to help export to Latin America and Mexico," he added.

"This means an increase in jobs and possibly attracting new businesses to this area," he continued.

According to "Business America," NAFTA will eliminate trade and investment barriers between the United States, Canada and Mexico, making them the largest and richest market in the world, with 360 million consumers and $6 trillion in annual output.

"The ultimate goal of NAFTA is to have a Western Hemisphere free trade area," said Merriam Mashatt of the U.S. Department of Commerce's Mexico office.

"Illinois has 142,000 jobs in the manufacturing and exporting areas," she said.

"The whole state will see the growth in the economy—not just in Chicago," she continued.

By Candace Somolinski
International Writer

The key to success in international business is understanding the cultural differences between business partners and minimizing potential problems by using unique approaches, a speaker at International Business Day said.

"The key is to be aware of how other people view time and their personal sensitivity to the way issues are approached," Odilia McBride, SIUC professor of foreign languages, said.

McBride addressed the issue of cultural differences between Mexicans and Americans at International Business Day Friday. The event was at the Business Incubator and focused on the North American Free Trade Agreement between the United States, Mexico and Canada.

Eric Bethard, president of SIU International Business Association, said he was pleased with the speakers present at the event. He said the goal of the day was to educate local businesses and give them a better appreciation of Mexico and the NAFTA agreement.

"The differences between Mexican and American perceptions on certain issues will be vital to the success of businesses developing under NAFTA," McBride said.

McBride said Mexicans view time differently than Americans.

"Mexicans are very concerned with appearances and giving people what they want," she said.

"If someone asks them if they can have a product ready on Saturday, they will say yes even though it may not be ready," McBride said. "They mean well, but often fail to perform."

Several students from Costa Rica disagreed with McBride and said people in that country are reliable and perform consistent with expectations.

McBride pointed out other differences between the two cultures. She said Mexicans work to live where Americans live to work.

In the area of control McBride said Mexicans are often leery of evaluations of their work. She said this was an example of the differences in personal sensitivity.

"They do not like to feel as if they are being checked-up on," she said. "If their supervisor wants to do an evaluation of their work, they may think he or she does not trust them."

McBride offered some solutions to dealing with problem areas.

"Never say to a Latino 'you are wrong.' Instead approach it diplomatically," she said. "Encourage them to correct mistakes by telling them it is not the end of the world."

She said by suggesting Mexican workers develop a time schedule and stick to it delays may be prevented.

McBride said the various regions of Mexico approach business differently and not all people within those regions fit the stereotypes attached to them.

"In the north the people are very aggressive, near the central areas the businesses are middle-sized and more family oriented," she said. "The southern areas close to the Yucatan the people are the most traditional and so are the approaches to business."

in an entire semester of essay assignments at once.

"We were not allowed to turn in the same research paper for two classes, but I changed the title of my English paper and turned it in for my physics class," he said. "And it was such a small school that the teachers knew."

A couple years later Mike visited his high school and he spoke with his English teacher, who informed him she was aware of his cheating. But she said she ignored it to help him.

"Someday, some way, some how you are going to find a way to make it and I can't see stopping you because you're going to be one of the better students that has come through my class," she said.

Her words meant a great deal to Mike, because he never had confidence or faith in himself until he entered the Achieve Program.

Manipulating his teachers and others was one of the things Mike had to give up when he entered the Program.

"I had to stop that because I finally had the opportunity for a true education, although I didn't think I would ever make it through a four-year school," he said.

"Because I am here and I am actively seeking out information, I have improved my reading skills. I have probably completed close to three or four hundred books in the last three or four years."

Mike has excelled with the help of the Achieve Program.

He was one B from a 4.0 GPA last semester.

A tutor and notetaker work with him throughout the semester and his tests are proctored by the Achieve staff.

Mike said Achieve has helped him by surrounding him with other learning disabled people.

"I've spent most of my life thinking I was alone in the world because nobody could relate to me," he said. "Nobody understood what I was talking about."

Mike said some students say they wish they could have someone take their notes for them.

"I say, no you don't, because you haven't gone through the crap I have," he said.

"It wasn't until I got in the Achieve Program that I realized I had surpassed almost every dream I ever dreamed," Mike said. "I've had a dream since I was 9 to someday publish something. That's actually a possibility now."

For Terry Grewe, a graduate of the Achieve Program, his dreams have also come true.

Terry cannot spell, but he is a successful property manager and retail specialist and owns his own business in St. Louis.

Before Terry entered Achieve, he never received special attention or assistance in grade school or high school.

He said no one would give him the assistance he needed, so he was forced to attend school 12 months out of the year to catch up.

"It was a nightmare," he said. "I don't remember a time when I didn't have to go to summer school. It got to the point where I decided not to try anymore, because even when I did I still had to attend summer school."

Terry's disability does not allow him to spell. The Achieve Program provided him with books on tape, notetakers and tutors.

The staff gave him the special attention he needed to use his talents.

Terry said the Achieve staff did more for him than just give him books on tape.

"They were able to determine my strong points, like my social skills and my speech skills and they capitalized on those," he said.

Terry took spelling classes at Achieve, but he just could not spell so his tests were given orally throughout his college education.

As a businessman, he writes on a computer as best as he can, but his secretaries will take dictation most of the time.

"I've got a great job, a great life and things are rolling my way," he said. "I owe it all to my mom and the Achieve Program."

His mother, Jane Grewey, discovered the Achieve program and got Terry accepted.

"If it wasn't for her persistence, I would never be where I am today," Terry said. "She was always searching for the next seminar or the next class to attend and learn about disabilities."

When Terry graduated from high school, his mother promised him she would find a college with a program for him.

Terry and his mother visited a college in the Ozarks that had boasted of a support program.

"It was a hoax, because there was no support program," he said. "My mother was so distraught and upset, but she promised me she would keep looking."

A year later, Mrs. Grewey stumbled upon the Achieve Program.

Terry credits the staff of the program, especially Sally DeDecker, the assistant coordinator, for his success as a college student.

"If it weren't for Sally, I would not have graduated from that program," he said.

"She kept on my back and encouraged me to study," he added.

Terry said he believes in the Achieve Program and the University, because he has a degree and he is carrying out his dream.

thing to say because I loved him and I had every intention of taking him home, so I asked her what else I could do."

The teacher told Cordoni there was nothing she could do for her son because there was no one within 100 miles who was trained to work with him.

Cordoni refused to remain helpless.

"When you are the mother of a child with a difference in learning, you learn that even though you may not have been a fighter when you started, you become one," she said. "because you don't have a choice."

Cordoni became a fighter the day her son was diagnosed, and her fight began with a search for someone with the knowledge to help.

Finally she learned of a convention in New York for dyslexias, a term often used to refer to all learning disabilities.

She flew to New York and taped every speaker so she could listen to the lectures and learn from them.

"I even accused people at the breakfast table saying, 'Excuse me, I have this son, could you help me?'" she said.

That marked her initiation into the field, because soon after she began taking classes at the University of Florida in addition to her teaching.

During this time, she realized that if her child had a learning disability, which she had never heard of before the diagnosis of her son, then there had to be other parents and children in the same situation.

After Barbara put an article in the paper inviting people to come to a meeting at her house, parents showed up with children who had the same needs as her son.

So began the first meeting of the Ravard County Dyslexia Society.

The society, led by Cordoni, collected money and invited Dr. Sylvia Richardson, a specialist in learning disabilities, to speak to the group.

"We became very good friends for what has been 25 years now," Cordoni said. "From her I learned a great deal."

She learned a great deal more at Duke University, where she was offered a grant for study in special ed.

"The grants for my work just kept coming and in three years I had my master's and my doctorate," Cordoni said. "I finally decided that I had to get enough letters behind my name for people to start paying attention to me, because the things that were being taught to me about learning disabilities, I knew were not true."

Cordoni had been taught that the disability disappeared at puberty, when it actually is a life-long phenomenon that simply means one learns differently.

"The issue was not whether the children could learn, because they were very capable of learning," she said. "How to teach was the issue."

That issue led her to SIUC, where she became an associate professor in the special education department and eventually began the Achieve Program.

She began the program by convincing the administration and professors of the students' need of such services as notetaking, test proctoring, etc.

After the convincing, the SIUC administration internally funded the program and two years later made it a permanent part of the University when she received a three-year federal grant.

Since then the program only has grown in size, reputation and quality.

The University has given the program the green light to double its size in the next few years and there still is a large waiting list of applicants to the program.

COAL, from page 8

"You always have to keep the product competitive as an energy source," Shifflett said.

While some customers are switching to coal from western states, Pensoneau said many still are doing well at keeping current contracts.

"A number of the companies in view of the federal legislation and the challenges presented by that are really doing a good job in keeping the contracts they've now got enforced," Pensoneau said.

"When obviously some of the customers (utilities and some others), if given their druthers probably would like to turn away from our coal and go to low sulfur western coal or some other to some other fuel source," he added.

Even as other fuel sources exist,

Pensoneau said technology presents itself as an answer to many problems.

"In some cases technology is the answer," he said. "The state is still going full speed ahead on underwriting and developing various kinds of clean coal technology. In other cases, some companies are streamlining their mining operations."

Shifflett, president of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association which represents a majority of coal companies, also addressed the negotiations in new wage agreements between his organization and the United Mine Workers of America.

"When you're getting all the issues on the table from both sides and get down into the final days of negotiation then you can really start understanding the needs of each party and try to find a way that satisfies the needs of the respective parties," Shifflett said. "I think it's possible to get it done."

Even as the coal industry cuts costs over the next decade, Pensoneau said that the sacrifices being made today will pay off later.

"They're still cutting costs," Pensoneau said. "They've done a lot of that over the last 14 years in Illinois coal mining, but they're still doing a lot more. That presents some perhaps lean economic times over the next few years for some of the companies, but they're making that sacrifice to keep the mines in operation in expectation of the day that we think will come late in the 1990s."

SIUC netters top Redbirds, fall to NIU in weekend split

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Editor

The SIUC men's tennis team was once again bitten by the injury bug in splitting a pair of home matches during the weekend.

The Salukis made quick work of Illinois State Saturday, pitching a shutout at the Redbirds, 7-0. SIUC's momentum was halted in Sunday's match with Northern Illinois, a 5-2 loss, in which the Salukis were forced to forfeit two points off the top.

No. 2 player Jay Merchant was unable to play against the Huskies, as he was suffering from shoulder troubles. Merchant also sat out last weekend's matches, and SIUC was forced to go into a pair of matches with an 0-2 disadvantage.

"He didn't take it as easy as he should have in the first match," SIUC coach John Lefevre said.

Lefevre said it is doubtful Jay Merchant will play Tuesday when the team travels to Murray State for a non-conference match.

Down 0-2, the Salukis played out four three-set matches, but were unable to catch the Huskies.

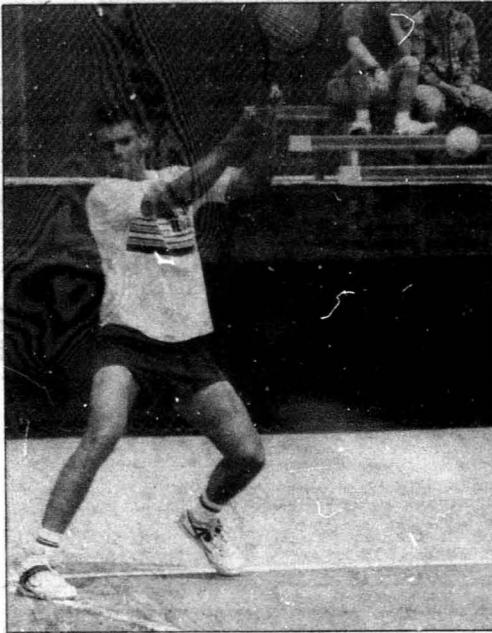

SIUC's two points came at the the No. 2 and 5 positions. Atlas Merchant dusted Dustin Dobrin, 7-5, 6-0 in the second set, while Juan Garcia bested Andy Caldwell at No. 5, 4-6, 6-0, 6-1.

Tim Derouin was clipped at the No. 1 spot, 6-2, 3-6, 7-6, by Marty Engel. Andre Goransson stretched David Stottlemeyer to three sets at No. 3 before falling, 6-4, 2-6, 6-1. Bojan Vuckovic also went to three sets with Steve Center at No. 4, 3-6, 6-1, 6-1.

The No. 1 doubles squad of Derouin and Goransson defeated Settlemeyer and Center, 8-4, but the duo of Vuckovic and Atlas Merchant lost, 8-6, and SIUC defaulted at the No. 3 slot.

"It was a pretty close match. We could have won even with the defaults," Lefevre said.

SIUC's No. 1 singles player Tim Derouin returns a serve of his Illinois State opponent. Derouin won the match, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4, to help the Salukis shut out the Redbirds 7-0 Saturday at the University tennis courts.

Redbirds with a sweep of the singles bracket.

At No. 1 singles, Derouin defeated Stephen Bell, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4. Jay Merchant briefly stepped back into the No. 2 slot and topped Adrian Camelleri, 6-4, 7-5. At No. 3 singles, Atlas Merchant bested Paul Besley, 6-4, 6-1.

The second half of the singles bracket was equally productive. At the No. 4 position, Goransson beat John Brown, 7-6, 2-6, 6-2. In the No. 5 slot, Vuckovic won a 6-0, 5-7, 4-1 decision when his opponent, Bryan Edmunds was forced to retire because of cramps. Garcia completed the singles sweep with a 6-2, 6-2 win over Steve Moeht at No. 6.

SIUC took two of the three doubles contests to take the final point and complete the shutout.

Jay Merchant and Garcia teamed up at No. 2 doubles and took out Besley and Edmunds, 9-8 (7-4). The No. 3 duo of Vuckovic and Atlas Merchant was also victorious, 8-6. The No. 1 tandem of Derouin and Goransson dropped the only match for SIUC, 8-4, to Bell and Brown.

Tracksters add to all-time bests in 4th-place finish at Illini Classic

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

The Saluki women's track and field team once again tacked on entries to the top 10 all-time school list in a fourth-place performance at the Illini Classic.

Despite the entries into the top 10 school record list, the Salukis finished fourth behind Illinois, Indiana and Purdue.

"I thought we held our own against the other schools, but I would have liked to have seen us come out ahead," SIUC coach Don DeNoon said.

Dawn Barefoot hit fourth on the all-time list with her win in the 3,000 meters, running the race in 9:53.78.

Cynthia Grammer also made fourth on the all-time list in the discus, placing third in the event with a throw of 144-7.

Leann Reed made fifth on the all-time list with a time of 4:36.77 in the 1,500 meters.

Stefany Saracco followed Grammer with a sixth all-time discus throw of 135-4, and added to that an eighth all-time throw of 42- (third at the meet) in the shot put.

April Cokely made seventh on the all-time list, placing second in the shot put with a throw of 42-4 1/4.

Other highlights of the meet included Nacolia Moore's second-place finishes in the long jump (17-10 1/2) and the triple jump (36-11 1/2), and a sweep of second through fourth in the high jump by Annette Klett (second, 5-4 1/2), Rhonda Brown (third, 5-4 1/2), and Stephanie Smith (fourth, 5-2 1/2).

More strong performances were made by Crystallo Constantinou, who finished third in the 100 meters with a time of 12.27, just .02 away from first place, and Elissa Pierce, who finished fourth in the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 68.69.
