SHELTER FROM THE STORM: Students gather around a television in the Big Muddy Room of the Student Center waiting for news on a tornado that was spotted between Murphysboro and the Southern Illinois Airport Wednesday.

A funnel cloud and two tornadoes were spotted in Jackson County Wednesday night as warning sirens bellowed throughout the SIUC campus and the surrounding area.

That same storm system spawned two deadly twisters that ripped through downtown Nashville, Tenn., Thursday.

The National Weather Service in Paducah, Ky., issued the first warning at 8:32 p.m., which lasted until 9:30 p.m. A second warning lasted from 9:28 p.m. to 10:15 p.m., and a final warning issued at 10 p.m. lasted an hour. The storms which spawned the twisters were part of an unstable weather trend that has plagued the nation's mid section throughout the week.

Pat Spoden, science and operations officer of the National Weather Service, said a funnel cloud was spotted at 9:32 p.m. just five miles northwest of SIUC.

At 9:37 p.m., a tornado touched down 7 miles west of De Soto, causing damage to trees and power lines. At 10:34 p.m., a second tornado touched down between Murphysboro and the Southern Illinois Airport.

Wind speed could not be determined until damages had been assessed by officers of the National Weather Service, who were to travel to De Soto and surrounding areas. Bob Watson, a forecaster at the National Weather Service, said severe weather conditions Wednesday fostered the appropriate atmospheric conditions for a tornado.

"The changes in the surface wind patterns created a circulation that caused a funnel cloud," he said. "When the circulation spins counter-clockwise, you will see what we call Wednesday."

SIUC police officers filed about 500 students on campus into the Big Muddy Room of the Student Center, where they were told to remain until further notice.

Undergraduate Student Government elections Wednesday were stalled almost two hours

Progress Party claims victory

ELECTION: Ayres and Smith weather stormy campaign to seize USG presidential seats.

J. MICHAEL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Four Progress Party members huddled around presidential candidate Kristie Ayres nervously gripping her hands as they awaited the final tally of the USG elections Wednesday night.

USG president-elect Ayres and vice president-elect Smith of the Progress Party received 692 votes as Sean Henry and Greg Akers' Saluki Party placed second with 521. The Shakedown Party, led by presidential candidate Rob Taylor and vice presidential candidate Pat Kelly, received 494 votes, placing third.

Screams of joy came from the Progress supporters as Mindy Scott, USG election commissioner, wrote the results of the election on a blackboard at 11:15 p.m.

Smith entered the Cambria Room at 11:10 p.m. coming from a victory celebration at SIUC student trustee-elect Mike Ruta's house. Ruta received word earlier that he won the student trustee spot over Bob Hanfland 1111-607.

The results came after an almost two-hour delay from tornado warnings that kept the minds of the candidates whirling. Ayres said she was excited when she heard the results, but was shocked when she found out that she had beaten Kelly, whose term as SIUC student trustee ends June 30.

"It feels real good that we beat Patrick," she said. "If anyone can say that they're shocked that I beat Pat Kelly, it would be me."

Henry said he had viewed the election more as a two-way race between his party and the Progress Party.

"I knew that it would be close, but I felt that our main competitor was the Progress

Union negotiations go behind closed doors

GAG ORDER: Federal mediator recommends media blackout for rest of process.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DE-MANAGING EDITOR

The SIUC administration and faculty negotiators agreed to a total media blackout on collective bargaining negotiations Thursday after meeting with a federal mediator from St. Louis.

Both teams met with Richard Kirkpatrick, a mediator from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and at Kirkpatrick's request signed an agreement to initiate a media blackout.

The specifics of the agreement are unknown, but Jim Sullivan, faculty union president, said the faculty association will comply with the media blackout.

"We're going to comply to the more general edict of the media blackout," Sullivan said. "We will not engage in public utterances while this process is going on."

It is unclear how long the gag order will exist, but an administration and faculty press release state that both parties will issue joint statements from "time to time."

John Jackson, vice chancellor of Academic Affairs and provost, would not comment about the media blackout. Both Margaret Winters, spokeswoman for the administration, and Kirkpatrick were unavailable for comment.

Kirkpatrick, who also mediated on the rejected interim agreement in August, came to campus Thursday at both the administration's and faculty's request. The mediation marks the first step of a four-point plan developed by faculty members: The plan authorizes union leadership to call for mediation, arbitration, and finally file an intent to strike notice. Union leaders will then meet to consider actions including, but not limited to, a strike.

The gag order comes on the heels of charges by both sides of negotiating in the media. Administrators have said Daily Egyptian advertisements and the faculty's March informational picket represent bargaining in the media. Faculty union leaders also have said Sanders' rejected settlement package was bargaining in the media.

Although the association will comply with the blackout, Walter Jaehrig, faculty association media coordinator, said the association will still inform its membership through newsletters and other means.

"The blackout basically means 'Let's focus on what is on the bargaining table and not get caught up in presenting our messages in a larger public,'" he said.

- Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Relations, Edward H. Hammond, said he would recommend implementation of a proposal designed to increase student responsibility in the operation of the Daily Egyptian. The new plan called for the creation of a student editor-in-chief and a group of subordinate editors, eliminating control over content by the faculty managing editor, a member of the School of Journalism faculty. This is how the Daily Egyptian operates today.
- Nominated for 5 Academy Awards, including Best Picture of the Year, "M*A*S*H," starring Donald Sutherland, was playing at Varsity Theater.

Phoebe Eng was born in New York as a member of the only Asian family on the block. Her parents always told her to make sure all she did was fit in with everyone else.

"They told me to fit in at any cost," she said. "They didn't want me to stick out at all."

Eng, an author, lawyer, and co-founder of A. Magazine, wanted to show how the views of Asian-Americans have changed within the last year, especially in regards to women.

Eng's presentation, "The Emerging Asian-American: The Second Generation Comes of Age," was sponsored by Student Development as part of Asian-American Awareness Month Tuesday evening in the University Museum Auditorium.

Serena Chu, a graduate student in psychology from Columbus, Ohio, was among 25 people who listened to Eng's views of the changes in Asian-American culture.

Chu was able to understand Eng's message because it resembled her way of life.

"I was able to relate to her experiences as an Asian-American woman," she said. "It reminds me of

Name recognition plays key role in USG election

GETTING THE VOTE OUT:

Progress Party also benefited from high student-athlete turnout, tireless campaigning.

SARA BEAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A high level of name recognition and student-athlete turnout, combined with an intense get-out-the-vote drive, propelled

ANALYSIS Progress Party candidates Kristie Ayres and Jackie Smith into Undergraduate Student Government's top offices Wednesday.

Ayres and Smith seized their respective offices with 692 votes. Saluki Party candidates Sean Henry and Greg Akers followed with 521 votes and Shakedown Party candidates Rob Taylor and Pat Kelly finished with 494. In addition to taking the executive seats, the Progress Party captured 22 senate seats. The results surprised some observers who predicted a close race between the Progress and Shakedown parties.

Though the campaigning remained fairly low-key until Tuesday, the final days preceding the election were a whirlwind of grievances and negative advertising.

An anonymous student dressed as chicken for Greek Week appeared in the Student Center and Faner Hall telling students to vote for the Progress Party. Several anonymous fliers attacking Taylor and Kelly also appeared across campus. Additionally, almost 20 grievances were filed during the course of the election.

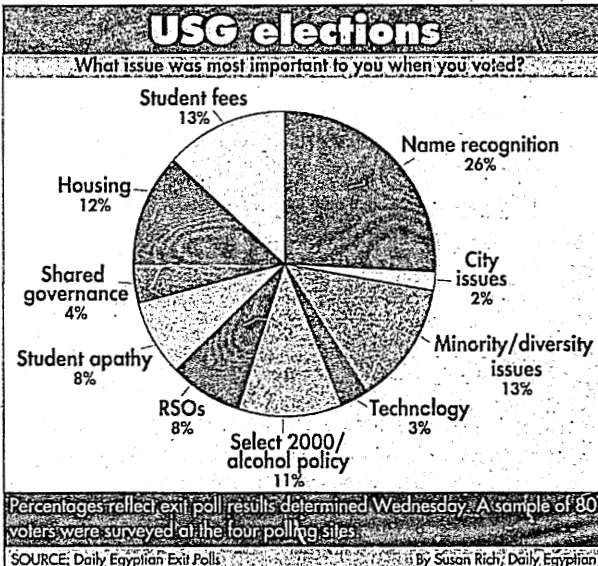

Exit polls Wednesday show name recognition as the most important factor in the USG election, with student fees and diversity also topping the list. The Progress Party's dramatic win could be attributed to its name recognition as the party had at least four workers stationed outside each polling site Wednesday, distributing literature concerning its FAITH (freedoms, academics, input, technology and housing) message. The party's USG insider status also contributed to their win. The party has been crafting strategy and recruiting candidates and energizing supporters for this spring's election all year, using their wealth of administrative resources. The Progress Party also has been campaigning tirelessly for the last two weeks, drawing first blood in residence hall, RSO, and greek system canvassing.

It comes as no surprise that the Progress Party also benefited from an onslaught of athletes coming to the polls, including the entire football, swimming, and tennis teams. Ayres and Smith likely won the hearts of athletes by default because of an intense backlash against Shakedown Party candidates, some of whom have ties to the vocal Students Organized Against the Athletic Fee organization.

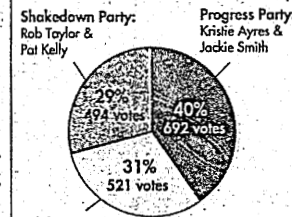

Shakedown Party vice presidential candidate Kelly said his party's turnout Wednesday was a little disappointing as its members were not as motivated as they should have been.

Though the Progress Party and the Saluki Party had campaigners outside all four polling sites, the Shakedown Party left all but the Student Center unattended for most of the day.

Our Word

Sexual Assault Awareness Month deserves everyone's attention

On April 9, as students made their way from class to class, many visited the Student Center to grab a bite to eat or to meet up with friends. Quite a few of those students stopped to look at a clothesline that was full of T-shirts hanging in the Faner breezeway. The shirts displayed the emotions and unfortunate memories of victims of sexual assault. As many might know, this month is Sexual Assault Awareness Month, and unlike other months set aside for a particular segment of the population, this one deserves special attention for it is an issue that affects everyone.

The statistics are staggering: One in three women will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime; every minute a woman is raped in America. The statistics do not apply only to women. One in seven men will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime. The experiences can happen anywhere, anytime, and at any age, sex, color, or socio-economic background. The reasons for the existence of such behavior may never be understood, and it most likely will never go away either.

Sexual assault always has been an issue on college campuses. It has been reported that one in four women have been the targets of sexual assault while in college. What is most unnerving about these statistics is that they do not call into account all of the women and men who stay silent.

The clothesline of T-shirts by victims was sponsored by the Rape Action Committee of Carbondale and was the first of many activities that will be sponsored on campus this month. Those helping out with and sponsoring the events include SIUC Women's Services, the Southern Illinois Men Against Sexual Violence, the Carbondale Women's Center, and Carbondale Crime Stoppers. These groups deserve recognition for the work, time, and dedication they put into this issue, which they deal with all year.

Another group that deserves acknowledgment is the victims of these crimes that have the courage to tell their stories. It is because of them that we all can learn and understand this issue.

Although every month that is set aside to honor a group or cause is important, there are some that hold universal appeal, and this is one of them. While you have been reading this five to 15 women have been raped. It is disgusting that some people feel that they have a right to violate a person in any way. Perhaps, in a combined effort, we can stop the madness.

"Our Word" represents the consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board.

Sometimes the last step is the hardest

"Just do it." That slogan has been posted on just about every surface imaginable for who knows how long. It seems though that "just doing it" is the hardest thing to do. The message behind this statement is simple enough, almost self-explanatory. For those that do need a certain amount of explanation it goes like this: The basic principle is no fear. Regardless of what people think, and even regardless of what you yourself may think, "just do it" is a claim of individuality, for courage.

If this yields to an issue of individuality, then caution must be practiced. What most people dictate as being individuality is being themselves, doing something different, but the reality is no one is doing anything different. They're going along with the crowd.

This isn't in reference to dress style or musical preference because that is really an individualistic expression — well, at least for some people. What it means is something this column continuously has stressed and that is lifestyle. The lifestyle we live as a society is extremely negative concentrating on self/social destruction in ways that most of us are not aware. This is a supposed age of individuality, where people are being themselves and keepin' it real. What some don't realize is that these catch phrases are merely excuses for stagnation. If you really want to make an impression I suggest throwing off the chains of normality in American and world culture. I don't need to go into specifics as to what these chains are, I have faith in your mind that you know exactly what negative aspects I'm talking about.

Now, if you happen to enjoy destroying your mind and body and living an apathetic nature by going along with the flow of the world, you should probably stop reading this column because you have to want change. I can present as many ideas as I want but unless you're seriously interested in bettering yourself then it will just go in one ear and out the other.

Like it was stated at the beginning of this column "just doing it" is the hardest part, and the reason is the commitment it requires. Also, since it is such a change from what is normal to society, people are going to criticize, look down, poke fun, and even hate you. James Baldwin once wrote, "To act is to be committed and to be committed is to be in danger." That best summarizes the idea of commitment.

To strive for change is a dedication that requires a lifetime of commitment. Taking those final steps and crossing that final barrier into this dedication is the hardest thing to do because you feel everything that this commitment will entail. There is an immense amount of fear to deal with because you don't know how the people around you will act. The questions one needs to ask is, "Are you happy?" People do need to do what they feel is right, and it is unfortunate that the negativity that most live in right now is what they think is right. It all comes down to what role you want to play in this life — taker or giver. Just remember that what goes around comes around, eventually.

I honestly feel that most people are not happy. I also feel that people also know the right way to approach, but low self-esteem and fear of rejection from the masses forces them to stay in their current state. I know that not most will not go through with what they know is right for that matter. If you are for the betterment of self, raise your fist when you see me so I know I'm not alone. This is the new revolution.

Newspaper insert one sided and uncalled for

I am writing in response to the insert included in the Daily Egyptian April 8. I personally, and I know this opinion is shared by many others, was outraged by the pro-life insert.

At a school where the on-campus enrollment alone (not counting John A. Logan, SIUC faculty and staff, or local Southern Illinois residents) is 46 percent female, the decision to include such an inflammatory and controversial paid advertisement was a poor one on part of the Egyptian. If the newspaper is in such dire need of funding to open this particular card of worms without regard to the amount of people in its readership it would offend, the Egyptian should at least publish a disclaimer informing its audience that the insert was a paid advertisement and does not reflect the opinions of the Egyptian. While the First Amendment protects free speech, the Egyptian maintains the right to select the type of information it disseminates.

In response, I would urge any pro-choice organizations with the monetary resources to also issue such an advertisement in support of a woman's right to sovereignty of her own physical person.

Exercise should be important to students

Dear Editor,

Students are very busy people during most of their academic life. There is homework, homework you forgot to do, friends, social gatherings, the phone, television and more homework. There is hardly any time for one to do the simple things in life, but somehow we find a way. However, there are those days when all your homework is done, there is nothing on TV, and your girlfriend/boyfriend is just too busy for you.

You feel as though you are about to explode from sheer boredom. Then you look up and notice those old pair of pants that you used to feel were a part of you, they were your favorites.

Now, when you put them on it looks as though you have stolen one of your little sibling's pair of pants in an attempt to recapture your youth. Not because they are too short or out of style, but because they resemble spandex on your behind now and you can't button them any more.

What happened? The past year of eating and sleeping has caught you in a major way. One thing could have prevented this mass of unwanted flesh from creeping upon your person: exercise.

You can think of a variety of excuses why your ID has not seen the scanner at the Recreation Center since you finished English 101. Well, the abundance of inactivity and full Trueblood caryiouts have finally caught up with you.

The deposits of fat around your waist and hips is the direct result of no exercise. Your freshman year you were in the Recreation Center everyday and those excess calories that plague you were burnt off. Now they stick around and create more

The benefits that come along with acting like a freshman again go beyond losing weight. Exercise can also improve and maintain your health.

Exercising for only an hour, three times a week, can lower your blood pressure, reduce the risk of heart attacks and heart diseases later in life, reduce the chance of getting various types of cancers, and reduce the risk of diabetes and arthritis.

Exercising also increases breathing and lung capacity and is a good therapeutic agent. Exercise can even improve our sex life! How about that?

Exercising should be a long term commitment in order to maintain health into later life. This is something that is good for all ages. From the freshmen right out of orientation to the gray-haired senior. So do yourself a favor. Get to the Rec and take advantage of this free facility while you have the chance. Soon you'll graduate and have to pay to exercise at some expensive health club. Besides, soon it will be too hot for that sweatshirt that hides everything.

what I truly am."

Over the years, the media has shaped images of Asian-Americans. Eng said the media has been one of the greatest influences of creating stereotypes of Asian-Americans ever since the beginning of Hollywood.

"Dr. Fu Manchu [an early actor] was one of the first portrayals of Asian-Americans in the media," she said. "He was evil and they had to cover him with make-up to make him look Chinese."

But Eng said the negative images the media used to show of Asian-Americans has changed in recent years.

The media has begun to show more Asian-Americans and other minorities in advertisements and television shows.

Eng said many Asian-American women have changed the way they are perceived — a far cry from earlier stereotypical china doll images. "The image of passive and obedient and all that pink stuff has changed to being outspoken," she said. "But there has been an over-compensation.

"Some [Asian-Americans] have become so bad, they always raise their hand to show everyone in the room that they can speak English." Yohlunda Mosley, coordinator of multi-cultural programs and services for Student Development, said as an African-American, she understands the struggles of Asian-Americans.

"There are a lot of similarities between cultures," she said. "It is important for Asian-Americans, as well as other groups, to have respect for themselves as well as other groups."

because of the tornado warnings, as ballot counters in the Student Center Cambria Room also were ushered to shelter.

When a tornado touched down near the airport, officers instructed people to "duck and cover" for their safety. But some fearless SIUC students stood outside residence halls attempting to witness the possible action — even as stern warnings to take cover boomed loudly from buildings.

Jeff Fullerton, a junior in English from Algonquin, stood outside Neely Hall full of curiosity.

"I am not taking shelter because I have never seen a tornado," he said. "Maybe I should be frightened, but my curiosity is overwhelming." But other students who were frightened by the warnings sought protection in residence hall bathrooms, and in tunnels underneath the residence halls.

The Neely Hall tunnel held about 50 students for the length of the warnings. The heat and humidity in the tunnel contributed to the tense situation while two children, unaware of the imminent danger, wandered aimlessly among the students.

Still, Wilson, a junior in administration of justice from Marion, was glad she was told to seek shelter in the tunnel.

"I've been in two tornadoes and I know what they can do," she said. "I live on the fourth floor, but it is much safer in the tunnel."

Phone sweet home

PRIORITIES: Some international students pay more for their phone service than their monthly rent.

KAREN BLATTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Many students dread the beginning of a month because bills usually are in the mail. Receiving a $1,000 phone bill may make those fears multiply.

But for sophomore Numog Alsharif, talking to his parents in Saudi Arabia every other day is important and worth the high phone bill.

"I miss them and want to talk to them," Alsharif, a sophomore in marketing, said. "Knowing what happens there makes me feel like I am part of the family there."

International students like Gabriela Varela, a senior in music business from Honduras, choose to use the telephone rather than writing letters or e-mail.

Speaking to her loved ones over the telephone is faster and makes her feel closer to her family.

"E-mail and letters are just never the same," she said. I miss not hearing their voices."

Price does not become an issue for international students who are homesick.

Alsharif justifies his frequent phone calls because he has not been home in months.

Alsharif would rather face the high phone bills than go without talking to his family for the length of time that he has not seen them.

"I pay more on my phone bill than I do on rent," he said. "But if you don't pay your phone bill, they cut your phone off right away."

Varela does not pay phone bills as high as Alsharif, but budgeting her money is necessary.

Varela has faced bills as high as $400, but she will not let the money change the amount of time she speaks with her family.

"I always have to talk to them," she said. "I miss hearing their voices."

But staying on top of paying the bills is very important because not having the use of a phone for a week can cause problems.

Alsharif once made a late phone payment, causing his family to worry about him because they did not hear from him.

"We couldn't talk for a whole week," he said. "They were so worried. They thought something happened to me because I wasn't able to call."

Having a support system, even miles away from home, is important to international students because when they arrive in the United States they often do not know many people.

Beth Mochnick, field representative for International Students and Scholars, said international students make the overseas phone calls to keep a support system with their families.

"They have virtually no support system here," she said. "They need to be told they are loved, and that's what they get when they call home."

Since there are a variety of different long distance services available, international student have to find what phone company will offer the best rates to their home country.

Varela has looked into several phone companies for the cheapest rates before deciding on her present phone company.

"I wish all the rates were cheaper," she said. "Some phone companies have a good deal but they only last for a couple of months. It changes without you knowing it and then you are stuck with a high phone bill."

Phone bills sometimes plague the minds of international students, but the fear of high bills does not keep Varela off the phone with her family back home.

"When I am talking to them I don't think about the time I am on the phone," she said. "But when I get the bill it is totally different."

Cambodian leader dies at 73

WASHINGTON POST

He has been described as the Hitler of Cambodia, a genocidal tyrant whose brief but brutal rule claimed more than a million lives. Yet the man who terrorized his country in the 1970s and haunted Cambodians' memories for years afterward struck those who met him as modest, soft-spoken, almost gentle in his countenance, a reclusive figure who shunned the trappings of power even as he exercised it with devastating consequences.

The incongruity was part of the enigma of Pol Pot, who died Wednesday night in the jungles of northern Cambodia — apparently of natural causes — while being held under house arrest by former followers who had turned against him. He was 73.

USG ELECTION

Party," Henry said. Henry said he would stay active in student affairs and try to keep as many students as possible involved in the process but would not become involved in USG next year. Henry will not run for USG president next year.

By contrast, Taylor said he is interested in any vacant senate seat. "I'm fired up, and I'm ready to go," Taylor said. "I was disappointed that we didn't win, but at the same time, I'm looking forward to doing some more things."

Kelly said it is in his nature to stay active and said the defeat will not affect his participation.

"I'm bound to stay active," Kelly said. "I don't have any reservations toward taking a different position. I'm a student activist. I'm not a politician."

Taylor said misinformation about his group, Students Organized Against the Athletic Fee Increase, played a part in his party's third-place finish.

"I don't feel that I lost anything," he said. "I didn't gain as much as I wanted, but we got some senators out of there that voted for the [athletic] fee increase.

"I'm frustrated that I was portrayed as anti-greek and anti-athlete. I'm thoroughly against paying back on department screw-ups."

Taylor said, despite his stance on the athletic fee, he credits the Progress Party for their aggressiveness on election day.

"It boils down to that they're the incumbent party. They had a whole year to get things together they had a whole slate of senators. We did n't. "They were out there from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at every poll. That is work, and I was impressed by that."

Ayres said she was not the only party passing out literature. Saluki Party members were passing out literature at 8 a.m. She said the effort may have improved the Saluki Party's numbers in the final count.

She was surprised when she realized that three women, future Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger and the Progress Party leaders, will be serving decision-making positions for the fiscal year 1999 and said it was "a damn good thing."

Ayres said the win was not easy, and it was more than just the efforts of her campaign executives.

"It took a whole team," she said. "We took firm stances on issues and people heard us. I couldn't have done it without my team."

dance expresso

STORY BY KELLY E. HERTLEIN
PHOTOS BY CYNTHIA SHEETS

A unique and emotional performance takes place tonight for Donna Wilson as she takes the stage at Shryock Auditorium performing a dance routine in remembrance of a friend and past student who perished in the Pyramid Apartment fire of 1992.

"I choreographed the solo (Flute Quartet Op. 5, No. 1 in D Major) in '86 and in '92 Lai Hung Tam performed the piece," Wilson said. "This year I'll be dancing in her memory. I think there has been enough time passed that it is not so difficult for me to do, but I do think about her often still."

Wilson's performance is part of the Southern Illinois Repertory Dance Theater's annual spring concert, "Dance Expresso." The repertory consists of 17 women who will perform several interpretations of modern, jazz and ballet dance. The showcase will begin at 8 p.m. tonight in Shryock Auditorium.

Wilson, faculty advisor of the program, has high expectations for the entire showcase of performances. She modestly said the advanced routines are sure to delight any crowd.

"We have included historic, student and faculty pieces. We are also paying royalties for the piece 'Partita V,' which should show that our routines are difficult and involved," Wilson said. "There is a lot of variety in terms of style and that is what makes this show so interesting."

"I hope people leave entertained and wanting to see more."

Seven separate pieces are scheduled for the concert tonight, and Jennifer Nowacki, president of the organization, will partake in one of the pieces presented titled, "Activate." The jazz performance she choreographed will be the last performance of the evening.

Nowacki, a junior in radio and television from Mt. Prospect, explained that her piece is an intense and elaborate form of jazz that might enthrall the audience.

"It is a very fast-paced song, something similar to what you would hear in a club," Nowacki said.

"With our variety of dancers it keeps the audience guessing what will come next. It is a constant movement with an upbeat flow."

Wilson said the addition of talented women such as Nowacki is an asset to the organization and the women work very diligently to provide an uplifting showcase.

"Each dance has a two-hour rehearsal time per week, and we've been rehearsing for the show since the third week of this semester," Wilson said. "The girls have worked very hard for this."

"It is during auditions that we look for intermediate and advanced dancers. The results are always pleasing to us."

Despite the vigorous conditions of auditions and time involved in perfecting the techniques, Nowacki said she feels the opportunity to dance is a reward within itself, and she will never turn away from this fortune.

"Dancing, for me, is an escape from everything. I don't consider it something I have to go to or a chore," she said. "I simply can't wait to go and dance."

Nowacki also feels that dancing is a personalized art form and there should never be any tension involved. She said the members of "Dance Expresso" are a team, and there is no room in the showcase for competition.

"We all work together even though we all have our individual styles," she said. "The dances and forms in the show are so different there is no comparison, so we can't compete with one another. It would be like comparing apples to oranges."

Many elements are needed to create the utmost effectiveness for the show. Spacing and lighting props become crucial to the look and feel of the dancers.

Hours are spent with the technical crew of Shryock Auditorium and compromises must be made between the technical crew and the choreographers.

Nowacki said the challenge to adapt a piece into an elaborate show is worth every effort put forth.

"When you add lights to the piece and hear the music over the sound system, it totally creates a full and different picture than when you're practicing with a little boom box," she said. "We work with the lighting crew in Shryock and play around to see what we like the best and what works out for our piece."

"It is just amazing to see it all mesh together after the dedication involved."

Lighting became the key addition to Nowacki's piece after she realized the appearance of her costumes where beginning to take on a new and interesting look.

"We're wearing silver costumes that appear to be almost a hologram in the light," she said. "I know the lighting will have an enormous effect on my piece. It has definitely added something that was not present before."

Funding for the women's costumes derive from ticket sales, and like many organizations, if funds are low they must improvise.

"The only money we get is from the tickets and many times we have to end up making our own costumes, or use the ones from last year," Nowacki said. "But there are times when we order them."

But it is the realm of dancing that captures the love and affections of the women, a feeling almost indescribable.

"It is hard to describe the feeling I get when I dance, but I would say I get wrapped up in the movements," Nowacki said. "And with the music you get to create a mood through expressing your body. It is something you just can't do or feel in every normal day life."

Dragon's stage features guitars, guitars and guitars

TRIPLE PLAY: Hum heads three-band, low-cost musical extravaganza Friday.

JASON ADRIAN
DE ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

John Denver was known at times to look out past his back yard at the massive Rocky Mountains for songwriting inspiration. The Beach Boys scored hit after hit while writing about the California sand beneath their feet, and Lou Reed penned songs after becoming mesmerized by the filth and tender beauty of New York City.

But for the rock band Hum, the endless flat fields of corn surrounding the Champaign-Urbana area didn't offer much in the way of scenic inspiration. Luckily, the local music scene encompassing the town and the University of Illinois was strong enough to get the band's musical career going.

"I think it's just a matter of hooking up with the right people. If you want to be a musician and be in a band, it's easy to do that here," guitarist/vocalist Matt Talbott said. "There're venues that will book bands before they're any good, and we needed that. Along with the parties, it's all kind of conducive to getting the whole thing started."

"As far as inspiration, [Champaign] is just a nice town. It's good for your mind to live in a town like this."

Hum is the headlining act in a three-band showcase tonight at the Copper Dragon Brewing Co., 700 E. Grand Ave. Also on the bill are the Kansas City natives Shiner and the opening act Cruces. Although Hum garners anywhere from $8 to $12 for club shows, the rock showcase tonight will be only $5.

Hum released its fourth full-length album, "Downward is Heavenward," earlier this year. The band's last record, "You'd Prefer an Astronaut," in 1995 sold 250,000 copies in the United States.

Selling massive amounts of records, getting radio airplay and having a video played on MTV are major accomplishments for a rock band. But it also means that the music is getting heard by an immeasurable amount of people, all with differing opinions.

"It was really flattering to hear our stuff on the radio. It was an easy way for a lot of people to hear our music," Talbott said. "I certainly like that we play shows to a lot of people as opposed to hardly anyone."

"But it also makes the whole notion like, 'Sh—, People are hearing this stuff, and I wished this was better or that was better — maybe more pronounced. You start having to deal with the idea of people writing about your band and critiquing your band. All that stuff is a little hard to swallow when you bust your ass to make a record."

The effort on the latest release was well worth the butt-breaking. Hum sticks with guitar-driven rock, molding fuzz tones, effects and the electronic fury of a two-guitar attack. Talbott's vocals take on a subtle approach that submerge his voice deep within the intertwining guitars.

"I think the way the two guitars work together make them sound like one guitar," Talbott said. "They kind of weave and dance around each other.

"Clarity isn't really a big issue with Hum, and that's fine with me."

Taking up the middle slot of the night is the rock band Shiner who comes from the hopping Kansas City music scene. Like Hum, the trio is driven by the electric guitar.

While some independent bands look for adjective-laden classification terms such as alt-rock, agri-rock or indie-punk to specify just how different their music is from everything else, guitarist/vocalist Allen Epley sticks with the broader term "rock band" — even if it sometimes applies to other bands far away from Shiner's style of music.

"Rock band" connotes Twisted Sister and Aerosmith, but that's not what we are," he said. "Ultimately, all this indie sh— in the last 10 years is just rock when you really break it down."

"I think some people would really think we're indie if they heard us, but that's not what I'm really looking for."

What Shiner is on the lookout for is to take the next step into making music a full-time career. Judging by the strong sound of the band's latest album, "Lula Divinia," with its well-rounded, elastic mix of the core rock elements, Shiner may soon be on the road to major-label status.

"We haven't signed with a major label to where we can just do this. I think it's possible that will happen because I don't want to work at restaurants anymore," Epley said. "We still have to work jobs, so it gets difficult. Motel rooms are definitely needed because I can't stay on people's floors forever. That sh— gets old."

One-time performance: Alright Blues Band reunites

FEELIN' ALRIGHT: After two-year absence, band feels the need to get together and do what they do best.

JASON ADRIAN
DE ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Jane's Addiction and Fleetwood Mac did it. For better or worse, The Beatles will never do it. Jake and Elwood Blues did it in "The Blues Brothers." And, for a one-time engagement, the Alright Blues Band got the band back together again.

But the guys in the Alright Blues Band didn't make the decision to raise money for a church like The Blues Brothers or even to cash in on their good name to put money in their own pockets like any other reunion bands. The members have simply felt the fever of days gone by.

A conversation trumpeter player Chad Minier had with guitarist Travis Laschover did not spark the reunion, but it got their minds back on the band, which disbanded in 1996.

"[Travis] said, 'Chad, I thought I was going to have to get some therapy when the band quit,' and I agreed because it was more than a band. It was almost a family, and it was almost more than that," Minier said. "The chemistry was there. Everybody enjoyed what we did, and it was a good time, good music."

The Alright Blues Band, which will take the stage around 10 p.m. Saturday at Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave., formed about three and a half years ago and soon became a staple on the local music scene. Three of the members will be coming in for the show from Albuquerque, N.M., Seattle and Chicago.

"The reason we broke up in the first place is that a few of the guys moved away," guitarist/vocalist Andy Gerzel said. "I was just talking to the harmonica player — he lives in New Mexico now — and he mentioned that he wanted to play again. We just decided to do it and called up the rest of the guys and got them all to come back here. They said, 'sure, just pick a date.'

"Everybody missed playing, so we decided to do it for that reason pretty much."

In its heyday, the band played as far north as Wisconsin and in places as large as the House of Blues in Chicago. Like the way of many bands formed in college music scenes, the Alright Blues Band consisted of college students. It was imminent that some of the members would soon be finished with school and leave town to pursue a career, so instead of dragging the end out too much, the Alright Blues Band eventually quit playing gigs.

"Instead of letting the band linger and linger, we reached a point that we thought, 'This is nice. It's great. Let's leave it at that,'" Minier said. "A little after the House of Blues gig, we pretty much called it quits."

The Alright Blues Band was the first band experience Minier had aside from school ensembles and marching bands.

By the time he wandered into the practice basement of the band, the Alright Blues Band was almost complete and ready to start booking gigs. But Minier recalls the first encounter with his future bandmates as a little uncomfortable for him.

"I was this little marching band geek getting just off of marching practice. I went to this house, walk in and go to the basement — this ratty, old basement that should have been condemned," Minier said. "I walk down the steps and here are these seedy looking guys. One's got dragon tattoos, and they've got leather pants on while drinking whiskey and Black Label beer. I felt so out of place."

After the first song, the musicians felt like the band would definitely work out, and Minier found just the band he was looking for. He had always loved jazz and the blues because of the improvisational aspect that goes along with the music.

While a lot of blues and jazz bands do not call for their horn sections to solo a great deal, the Alright Blues Band sets itself apart because it uses each instrument to its fullest extreme without limiting any member to a set time to solo.

"Some bands don't want you to solo too much, but with these guys everybody soloed," Minier said. "A lot of blues bands — especially on recordings — horn players don't solo. We almost soloed every tune, and that was great."

FOXFIRE

A haunting tale of romance in rustic Appalachia

LONDON R. WILLIAMS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Carbondale's community theater, The Stage Co., brings the story of the people of Appalachia to Southern Illinois in its production of "Foxfire," the theater's final play of the 1997-98 season.

"Foxfire" is a drama about Annie Nations, who after the death of her husband is left living alone on an Appalachian mountaintop. Her son, a noted folk singer, wants her to move to his home in Atlanta, but Annie refuses to leave the land to keep in touch with the ghost of her husband Hector.

Director Kimberly Welker said everyone will be able to relate to this story in some way, shape or form.

"It's Annie, Hector or Dillard that people are going to laugh or cry with the characters because the characters take you on an emotional journey," she said.

"Foxfire" is based on a story from a collection of magazines produced by ninth and 10th grade students of Rabun Gap-Nacoochee school in Mountain City, Ga.

In 1966, Elliot Wigginton, a teacher from Cornell University, threw away the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee students' textbooks and challenged them to write a magazine. The collective efforts of the students produced Foxfire magazine. The magazine is still published today by students of Rabun school.

The characters of the play are fictional, but the lead role of Aunt Annie was inspired by interviews with Aunt Arrie from the first Foxfire magazine.

Hume Cravyn (Hector) and Jessica Tandy (Annie) starred in the first stage production of "Foxfire." John Denver played Dillard in the Hallmark movie production of "Foxfire".

Theodora "Tippy" Bach, a retired Carbondale Community High School speech and English teacher, plays the role of Annie in The Stage Co.'s production of "Foxfire."

Bach said the play is a sad story about a differing set of opinions with situations which are closely related to real life. Bach also said she loves the Smoky Mountains and the character of Annie Nations.

"I like the role because some of the lines from the play were taken directly from the magazine," she said. "It's like living, her life."

Bach visited the Smoky Mountains last October. She said she likes the story for its content, the area for its beauty and the tenaciousness of the people.

Welker and her husband visited Highlands, N.C., and Rabun Gap, Ga., to research and record the area and its people in an attempt to accurately portray the setting, the accents and the nature of the characters in the play.

"The scenery was gorgeous. This was an inspiration for the set," she said. "No one treated us like a stranger. Everywhere we went we were welcomed."

After their trip, the Welkers were determined to bring a piece of the Smoky Mountains home with them.

"We felt that the set is in many ways another character in the play, and it required a distinct and colorful personality," she said.

The Welkers and the rest of the cast and crew at the Stage Co. did a phenomenal job in creating the highland ambiance.

The stage is wide with a big country oak wood porch on the right. The working front door leads to a realistic kitchen. The small tool shed that sits stage left serves as a dominant foreground object, but the cool blue cloudless sky that touches the tips of the mountain commands the stage.

The finishing touches of the set are just as strategically constructed and placed as the major pieces of the set.

The atmosphere is further captured by the honeysuckle branches, old fencing, small garden tools and other decorations surrounding (Right) Danny Korbacher croons as folk singer Dillard Nations. Korbacher learned to play guitar in a month's time to belt out ballads in his role as a rising performer trying his luck in big-city show business.

Welker said the collaboration of the cast and crew will make The Stage Co.'s production of "Foxfire" a memorable experience.

"The effort of the six actors who dedicated two months of their lives working to bring their characters to life and the crew who spent countless hours duplicating the look and feel of Stony Lonesome will make Foxfire an emotional experience," she said.

'Angels' just another wasted remake

JASON ADRIAN

I've always believed that remakes of good, imaginative movies were a waste of time, and filmmakers should concentrate on redoing movies that had promise, such as a well-written script, but failed to deliver a deserving final product for one reason or another. So goes the story of "City of Angels," a major studio remake of German writer-director Wim Wenders' "Wings of Desire," a brilliant marriage of philosophy and sensuality about an angel who takes the plunge from eternal life to human being for the love of one woman.

While not an entirely bad movie, "City of Angels" lacks the poetic and ethereal all-around feel of "Wings of Desire." The remake spends so much time on the angel, Seth (Nicholas Cage), trying to win over the nose-bleed heart surgeon Maggie (Meg Ryan) that the philosophical elements of why Seth wants to give up what he is remain buried beneath fuzzy dialogue and quirky innuendo.

"City of Angels" sparkles with cinematography. It turns Los Angeles into the perfect backdrop for a love story showing us truly immaculate settings from sunsets on the beach to lighted skylines along Sunset Boulevard.

Strategically placed angels complete the scenes, dressed in black overcoats while constantly overlooking the people of the city.

The invisible angels hear the thoughts of the people and give warm hugs and gracious touches to them for immediate solace or to help troubled humans make morally correct decisions.

Enter Maggie, a successful heart surgeon who cranks Jimi Hendrix tunes while operating deep inside the chest of her patients. Troubled after realizing she cannot beat death, Maggie suffers insomnia and breaks down after losing a patient on her operating table. Watching over Maggie while coming to take the dying patient "home," Seth falls in love with Maggie. When he begins to show himself to her, the story begins to grow unlikely through odd encounters with each other. Seth's emotion becomes overbearing (he talks to and stares at Maggie as if about to cry all the time), and we're left to believe this doctor is interested in a strange man who wears the same clothes every day and asks her why people cry. Seth comes across as a psycho more than an angel in search of answers.

Nathaniel Messinger (SIUC alumni Dennis Franz) befriends Seth because years ago he, too, fell in love with a woman and chose to become human to feel love, compassion, hunger and pain. Franz adds needed humor to the film in contrast to the stale relationship building between Seth and Maggie.

Taking a break from action films like "Face/Off" and "Con-Air," Cage turns in a pretty good performance. Though he normally excels in any genre, it took a while to get used to him as a dramatic actor, and he actually gets better as the movie progresses.

Ryan is her cute, cuddly and charming self — again. She only seems to show up in these one-dimensional roles — and she's not bad — but how many "woman on the verge of a big relationship" roles can she do without them looking the same?

Director Brad Silberling ("Casper") takes some cool risks toward tactful and stylistic shots such as when Seth makes his big decision, but he gambles in the same scenes Wenders gambled with in the original film.

Wenders' story remains brilliant in both films because the powerful ending — one of my all-time favorites — opens up a lot of questions, not just to the story but life as well. Definitely listen to your artistic side and check out "Wings of Desire" for a more deep-thinking and spiritual cinematic ride before you see "City of Angels."

Goodie Mob
 STILL STANDING
 LaFace — 1998

Atlanta's Goodie Mob shines on its sophomore album appropriately titled "Still Standing." Goodie Mob takes a strong stylistic change since their first album "Soul Food," but the change is definitely beneficial because it allows them to expand as artists and secure a solid sound.

Showing the true sound of the "dirty south," Goodie Mob expresses the everyday struggle within the ghetto but also urges a path to spiritual life and understanding.

The album opens with "The Experience," which lays out the tone of the album with group member Cee-lo almost incoherently describing what he feels is the root of the problems among African-Americans, mostly encompassing issues of self-esteem.

There are really no weak points on the album except the attempt Goodie Mob makes at merging hip-hop and rock on "It's Almost Over," a noble venture that almost succeeds, the title track, and the slow moving "I Refuse Limitations." Don't get it wrong. Those last songs are worthy of a listen, but they could have been tighter. All in all, Goodie Mob delivers a jewel that may not go down in hip-hop history, even though it should.

The Artist
 CRYSTAL BALL
 NPG — 1998

Fans of the Artist had been waiting for a motherlode collection of his massive out-takes, remixes and unreleased work ever since "The Hits/The B-Sides" whetted their appetites for hard-to-find Artist tracks in 1993. The "Crystal Ball" four-disc compilation is more than satisfying for true Artist devotees.

Routinely ransacking compact disc and vinyl boutiques for rare bootlegs of much of the material found on "Crystal Ball" used to be an expensive and disappointing hobby.

By the time precious gems like "Movie Star" and "Sexual Suicide" hit fans' ears, they usually sounded as if they were recorded underwater. On this new release, these favorite underground '80s tracks sound closer to their original masters than most fans could have dreamt. Outside of Vanity, Apollonia, Kim Basinger or Maybe, perhaps, few people have heard these songs in their full glory.

Guitar fans will enjoy "The Truth," the fourth disc of the set comprised of new acoustic tracks. Still, the real meat of this collection is rare — the 3 discs of cuts formerly known as bootleg.

—Mikal J. Harris

Laurnea
 BETTA LISTEN
 Sony — 1997

Music lovers across America "Beta Listen" to the smooth and diverse sounds of newcomer Laurnea. She may smooth some people over with the whispering tones of Prince and the monotone pitch of Dionne Farris. And she is bound to perk ears as her gentle, but powerful voice streams onto each track.

On "Beta Listen," released late in 1997, Laurnea comes across like a musical veteran with a refreshing sound. In its entirety, the album is composed — what some may say — professionally. Instruments are played in perfect sequence with Laurnea's vocals. And besides, she brings something different to each song without goofing up anything, like some new artists.

But, there are a couple exceptions. The song, "Days of Youth," has well-written lyrics but are the least bit moving. In this song, Laurnea sings to her audience about her childhood. The song most likely relates to the childhood of many listeners. However, the track is missing the perfect melody to compliment Laurnea's flow.

Overall, this album places Laurnea in a league with the biggest stars. As long as she keeps her style fresh, she will attain the greatest success.

Diamond Dawgs crank out 17 hits in 20-3 pounding of MSU

VICTORY

from Winters' strikeouts, who improved her record to 11-6.

Brechtelsbauer said both of her pitchers had strong outings on the day.

"I felt both of our pitchers went and gave a great effort," Brechtelsbauer said. "Carisa had the changeup going and seemed to get in her zone as the game progressed."

Feldmeier did her share of the hitting for the Salukis with a 3-4 effort, including two RBIs. Feldmeier was 5-7 on the day.

The Salukis scored two runs in the second on an error by Aces pitcher Lissa Conn (7-4), and that was all the support Winters needed.

The Salukis went on to score four more runs in the fourth, which gave them their 6-0 victory.

Brechtelsbauer hopes the victories will give the Salukis a boost heading into the weekend where they will battle Bradley University Saturday in a double-header and Northern Iowa University Sunday in a double-header.

"This has to give us a confidence boost," Brechtelsbauer said.

"They were eager to play. They wanted to show that they were better than what they showed on Sunday."

Murray State University paid the price for SIUC's three-game losing streak.

The wind was blowing out of the park as the Salukis took on Murray State University on the road. SIUC hit five round-trippers and had 17 hits as the Salukis crushed Murray State 20-3 in a game that ended after seven innings because of the 12-run rule.

The Salukis are 14-24 overall while Murray State moves to 14-27 on the season.

Baseball coach Dan Callahan said he was pleased with the way his team scored early and played well defensively to keep MSU out of the game.

"When you jump out early that does not mean that you can maintain that throughout the game," Callahan said. "You've still got to pitch, and you've still got to play defense. Those are two areas that we did a good job on. (Chris) Schullian pitched very good."

"By the second or third inning, he had pretty good command with his breaking ball. I thought he and (Brian) Phelan were working well together as far as pitch sequences. And we made some good plays along the way too."

Schullian went six innings, gave up all three runs and got his fourth victory of the season. The runs came from Robert Weatherly's three-run homer in the sixth.

Junior pitcher Justin Kees also played well when he finished the final inning, retiring all three hitters he faced. Callahan said if Kees can stay healthy, his velocity will be back in full force in about two or three weeks.

The pitching situation continues to be a problem for the Salukis. With only three starters, it is important for relievers such as Kees to continue to pitch well.

The starter for the Saturday matchup against Austin Peay State University will more than likely be junior pitcher Dave Piazza.

The Salukis will play Austin Peay on the road Saturday and then come back home for a game Sunday against the Governors. Austin Peay has a record of 17-25, and the Governors have lost six of their last 10 games.

Callahan said the Salukis have a good shot of taking both games, but they have to continue to play consistently or they will find themselves in another slump.

"You look at their record and look at our record, and say, 'Which one is the better team or which team is going to show up?'" Callahan said. "We have shown signs this year of being a very good team. Other times they are not very good."

"Murray State is the same way. We talked to the coach after the game, and he said the same thing I've said countless times — 'I just don't know which team is going to show up.'"

"As well as we played [Wednesday], you like to think that was a little bit of a momentum builder for the game Saturday. If there was a formula where you could bottle consistency, somebody would be very wealthy."

Men's tennis team looking for easy entry

MVC TOURNAMENT:
Game against University of Northern Iowa expected to be easy win.

PAUL WLEKLINSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC men's tennis coach Brad Ifner could not be more excited about his team's chances to achieve its season-long goal this weekend.

The Salukis' first goal of the season was to enter the Missouri Valley Conference tournament as a No. 5 or No. 6 seed. A middle seed in the 10-team league would allow the Salukis to enjoy an easier road throughout the tournament as they would play one game each day with later starting times.

This weekend's three-match schedule will determine whether the Salukis obtain a middle seed. Ifner believes his team must win two of the three matches to have an chance for a No. 6 seed. The Salukis have a 2-4 MVC record and a 7-11 season mark.

SIUC finishes the regular season on the road facing its final MVC opponents before the MVC Tournament begins April 24. The Salukis begin the weekend today as they battle the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls, Iowa. SIUC travels to Des Moines, Iowa to face Drake University Saturday, followed by a trip to Omaha, Neb., to play Creighton University Sunday.

Ifner believes his team will be able to pick up its first victory against UNI. UNI

“Our realistic goal is two wins this weekend, but it is possible to win all three. If we play at the level we did last weekend, we are raising our level of play at the right time.”

BRAD IFNER
SIUC MEN'S TENNIS COACH

finished 10th in last year's MVC Tournament, two spots behind the Salukis.

“I consider us to be the favorite,” Ifner said. “But (sophomore) Kenny [Hutz] needs to be healthy.”

Hutz, the Salukis' No. 1 player, suffered a groin injury last weekend, forcing him to sit out against Indiana State University. Hutz received treatment all week and is expected to play today.

The Salukis then travel to Des Moines, Iowa, where they will face their toughest opponent of the weekend in Drake. The Bulldogs finished second in last year's MVC tournament.

Drake is coming off of a disappointing weekend in which the Bulldogs dropped two matches to Wichita State University and Southwest Missouri State University. The losses dropped the Bulldogs to 4-3 in the conference and 6-10 overall.

“I was encouraged about the way they played last weekend,” Ifner said. “Hopefully we can catch them while they're down.”

The Salukis will face another tough opponent in Creighton, but the match should be very close, Ifner said. Ifner knows Creighton is very similar to Drake but lacking depth. The Blue Jays finished one spot ahead of the Salukis in last year's MVC Championships with at seventh.

“Our realistic goal is two wins this weekend,” Ifner said. “But it is possible to win all three. If we play at the level we did last weekend, we are raising our level of play at the right time.”

Track and Field teams hoping to beat out rivals this weekend

ROAD TRIP: Underdog men's team to compete in Tyson Invitational.

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC men's track and field team hopes to play the role of Buster Douglas this weekend at the Tyson Invitational.

The underdog men's team will travel to Fayetteville, Ark., to compete in the highly competitive meet, while the women's team will battle conference foes at Indiana State University.

The men's team is preparing to compete in its second straight difficult meet following last weekend's unscored Sea Ray Invitational in Knoxville, Tenn.

The men will battle the Southeastern Conference's University of Arkansas, University of Auburn and the Big Eight's University of Missouri, University of Kansas, Kansas State University, Iowa State University and Oklahoma State University. There is expected to be 584 competitors at the meet.

Men's coach Bill Cornell said the team is hoping to compete with full strength and nice weather.

“I understand there's about 20 teams down there this year,” Cornell said. “We hope to take the whole team down there, and we're just praying for good weather.”

The women's track and field team will battle conference rivals Indiana State University, Illinois State University and Bradley University at the Indiana State Invitational Saturday.

Women's coach Don DeNoon expects conference favorite Indiana State to take the meet, but he wants to challenge the rest of the field.

“I just don't see us beating Indiana State,” DeNoon said. “They're really competing well, but as far as the other schools go, it is pretty much a toss-up.”

The women's team is looking forward to having the whole team competing together after last weekend's split squad. A few members participated at the Sea Ray Invitational while the rest of the team competed at Edwardsville.

“It's just going to be a solid track and field meet,” DeNoon said. “This may be the first time in the outdoor season some of our runners will be able to run their events.”

NASCAR honors 'Alabama Gang' at Die Hard 500 in April

WASHINGTON POST

The Alabama Gang has been a big part of NASCAR and Talladega Superspeedway history and some of the group will be the grand marshals for the DieHard 500 on April 26.

The Allison family is a major branch of the Alabama Gang.

Bobby Allison won five times at Talladega. In 1971, Donnie Allison won the spring Winston Cup race and Bobby won the summer event. Donnie Allison also won there in 1977. Sadly, Davey Allison died in a helicopter crash at the track.

Bobby and Donnie will be joined as grand marshals by Red Farmer and Susan Bonnett, the widow of Neil Bonnett. Farmer won two races in the ARCA division, while Neil Bonnett won the 1980 Winston Cup Series summer event at his home track.

“Talladega and NASCAR have been our life for so many years,” Donnie Allison said in a statement released by the track. “I feel honored even to be considered for something like this. This is pretty exciting.”

Every state in the country will be represented at the DieHard 500. Track officials said recently that fans from all 50 states, including 19 from Hawaii and eight from Alaska, have bought tickets for the first of two Winston Cup races (the other is in October) at Talladega. Fans from Canada, Switzerland, Germany, England and Finland also have bought tickets.

“I think it says a lot for NASCAR and Talladega Superspeedway to be able to attract fans from all over,” said Grant Lynch, who has been track president since 1993. “In the amount of time I've been here, I'm amazed at the popularity of our track throughout the world.”

Weaver tired as new Northern Iowa coach

Two years after leaving a head coaching job to become an assistant, Sam Weaver is back in charge again.

Weaver, the associate head coach at Iowa State, was introduced Thursday as the new basketball coach at Northern Iowa. He was selected over five other finalists to succeed Eldon Miller, who resigned last month.

"It's been a long trip," Weaver said. "I took 39 years to get here, but I'm here and I'm going to give you the best I've got every day."

Weaver, 39, worked under Iowa State coach Tim Floyd the last two years after three seasons as head coach at Alcorn State, where he was 20-60.

The announcement effectively ended speculation the former SIUC assistant coach would return to replace Rich Herrin. Weaver had been mentioned as a candidate to replace Herrin, who resigned April 10 after 13 years on the Saluki bench.

Other candidates who have applied for the SIUC job include Centralia High School coach Rick Moss and University of Illinois assistant Robert McCullum. Former University of Michigan coach Steve Fisher and Detroit Pistons assistant coach John Hammond have also been mentioned.

Houston's Lewis prepares for leap to pro basketball!

Rashard Lewis, a 6-foot-10 high school standout from Houston, seems ready to try for the NBA without going to college.

He would join Korleone Young of Wichita, Kan., as the latest prep stars to attempt that leap.

Lewis said he is not concerned about those who say he should go to college for a few years first.

"I'm sure people told [Los Angeles guard] Kobe [Bryant] that and people told [Minnesota forward Kevin] Garnett that, so it doesn't bother me," Lewis said. "If the whole world says that about me, then I'll shock the world."

Softball team chills red-hot Evansville Aces for two-game sweep at IAW Fields

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Something had to give. The SIUC softball team, which has the lowest ERA in the Missouri Valley Conference, swept the University of Evansville, the best offensive team in the conference, in a doubleheader Thursday.

The Salukis pitching staff's ERA is 1.20 while Evansville leads the MVC in hits (275), runs (186) and RBIs (154) entering the game.

The pitching duo of freshman Erin Stremsterfer and sophomore Carisa Winters proved to be too much for the Aces however.

The duo chilled Evansville's offense 4-2, 6-0, yielding one earned run for the day.

In game one, Stremsterfer gave herself run support by doubling in junior Jen Feldmeier in the first inning.

The Aces tied it up 1-1 in the sixth inning after three costly errors by the Saluki defense.

The Salukis answered right back in the bottom of the inning with two home runs by freshmen Julie Meier and Marta Viehhaus to give the Salukis (25-10-1 overall, 7-3 MVC) a 4-1 lead, which they held on to win 4-2.

Stremsterfer (9-2) earned the victory in six innings of work. Winters came on in the seventh to pick up her fourth save of the season.

Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer was pleased with the team's recovery after Sunday's poor outing at Southwest Missouri State University where they lost two games of a doubleheader, including a 13-6 defeat in the second game.

"We played much better obviously," Brechtelsbauer said. "We forced their pitchers to bring the ball to us."

"They won't throw strikes if we swing at balls. It was good to get back on track and prove that we are still the same team as before."

Game two was highlighted by Winters' 15 strikeouts, one short of the school record, as she went the distance for the shutout.

Nine of the last 10 outs by the Aces came
