Hearings to examine Halloween options

By Stephanie Mofetti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two public hearings will take place today on the topic of what is to be done about Halloween in Carbondale.

The Mayoral/Presidential Task Force on Halloween is conducting the hearings to get the views of members of the university commu-ity as well as the broader community regarding what should be done; according to Patrick Kelley, committee chair.

"Anybody is welcome to come to the two hearings," Kelley, an SIUC law professor, said.

The first hearing is from 1 to 3 p.m. in the Student Center Auditorium. The second is from 7 to 9 p.m. in the City Council Chambers, 607 E. College.

Carin Musak, a student member of the task force, said the committee took a preliminary hearing at the last meeting and voted 13 to 3 to get rid of the Halloween street party altogether.

"I would like to try other options," Musak said. "Drastic measures are going to have to be taken. I encourage students who have ideas and solutions to come to the hearings."
Musak said the theme of the hearings is to look for solutions, not to listen to stories of past Halloweens.

"I have my own ideas. I was one of the three (who voted not to do away with the party)," she said.

However, after reviewing a history of the event in Carbondale, she said, "I have to admit we've tried everything — we need to curb the violence."

USG offers last-chance registration

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Undergraduate Student Government will try to compensate for low registration turnout today, the last day to register for the Carbondale primary election.

The registrars will have until midnight to register students for the upcoming election.

Andrew Hendricks, a coordinator for the drive, said USG has registered a little over 500 students so far.

Hendricks said he would have preferred to have registered at least 1,500 students for the election.

He said the numbers might be low, but they will do for this time.

"The numbers don't have to be that good this time," he said. "They might be enough to win a primary, but they are not going to win a general election."

Tonight, deputy registrars from USG will be visiting several houses on Greek Row to register students and will have a table set up in the Hall of Fame room in the Student Center all day. They also will have a

Technology expands recruiting tactics

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A 1-800 number flashed across monitors in studio A at WSU as a new age in recruiting graduate students began Friday morning.

The infomercial-styled teleconference was aimed at historically black colleges and universities across the Southeastern United States.

Ben Shepherd, vice president of academic affairs and provost, said the teleconference was an excellent recruiting opportunity for the University as well as the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts.

Information given on 1-800 line

"It was viewed as an economic and efficient way to communicate with historically black universities," he said.

The purpose of the graduate program video conference was to allow prospective graduate students from historically black colleges and universities access to information concerning financial aid and academic opportunities, as well as to describe the educational environment.

Michael Starr, chairman of radio-television, and Candice Isberner, instructional TV director, came up with the idea two years ago according to assistant dean Bill Elliott.

Executive producer Anita L. Rife said it was a campus-wide effort that made the teleconference idea a reality.

Joe S. Foote, dean of the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts, and Elliott invited the doctoral candidate, an assistant professor at the University of Northern Colorado, to help coordinate the program.

A panel made up of graduate program directors was formed to field questions coming in from remote locations. The 1-800 number brightened the bottom third of the TV screen to signal viewers to call in.

Callers inquired about professional hands-on opportunities, financial-aid availability and climactic conditions in the region. Questions were

Band to take shot at national competition

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Four gifted SIUC percussionists will showcase their abilities in a national talent show in San Francisco next month, after winning local and regional competitions with their unique use of everyday objects to create music.

Band member Kim Urbanic said the band's name, SyZyGy, is an astronomical term meaning "opposing heavenly bodies coming together

The band won the SIUC MasterCard ACTS (American Collegiate Talent Show) in November 1994, and on Jan. 20 won the regional competition against talent from Iowa, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

SyZyGy founder Tom Zirkle, a graduate student in music performance, said the band is prepared for the national competition but happy to have accomplished what they already have.

"We're not holding our breath, but we are keeping open minds," he said.

Zirkle said the group will perform two pieces, one an original composition involving Brazilian samba rhythms played on pots, pans, egg-shaped shakers and a phone book.

EFFORT RENEWED TO CURB U.S. PROGRAMMING — BRUSSELS, Belgium—A new campaign has begun in the long-running war waged by some European nations to curtail the import of American films and television productions. This time the battlefield is the drafting of a five year-old European Union regulation calling for broadcasters operating within the 15-nation EU to devote a majority of their transmission time— not: counting news, sports or advertising—"where practicable" to programs of European origin. Some countries, led notably by France, want to close a loophole that has let many stations ignore the quota by eliminating the words "where practicable."

COPYRIGHT TALKS PUSH U.S., CHINA TO BRINK — BEIJING—Pushing their commercial relations toward a brink, U.S. and Chinese negotiators broke off talks over the weekend without reaching an agreement to end Chinese piracy of compact discs and other copyrighted material. U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said in Washington that, if an agreement is not reached by this Saturday, the Clinton administration would make good on its threat to impose tariffs doubling the price of some Chinese goods.

SOUTH AFRICA DESEGREGATES PUBLIC SCHOOLS — PRETORIA, South Africa—Not a politician has stood in the schoolhouse door. Not a national guardsman has been summoned. Barely a ripple of white flight has materialized. January is back-to-school month in South Africa, and this year its new black-led government is taking a first crack at the forced desegregation of schools. The quiet has been thundering. With trepidation and misgiving, but without incident, doors of formerly all-white schools are being thrown open to children of all races. Even in Ventersdorp, the symbolic heart of small-town racism, there wasn't a murmur of protest when blacks walked into a formerly all-white school just down the road from the headquarters of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement, the neo-Nazi group that is South Africa's rough equivalent of the Ku Klux Klan.

EARTHQUAKE TARGETS SEATTLE-TACOMA AREA — SEATTLE—In a sharp reminder that western Washington sits astride the seismically active Pacific Rim, an earthquake with a magnitude of 5.0 rumbled through the Seattle-Tacoma area Saturday night. Though no injuries or major damage were immediately reported, the quake, which hit at 7:11 p.m., was felt from Canada to central Oregon and as far east as Yakima, Wash. Seismologists at the University of Washington said it was the most significant earthquake to hit the area in 30 years, when a 6.5 temblor caused substantial damage around Puget Sound.

ANTI-IMMIGRANT ACTIVISTS NOW AGAINST AID — LOS ANGELES—The Proposition 187 activists had gathered on the Glendale, Calif., courthouse steps to publicize a familiar goal: denying public education to illegal immigrants. But as the news cameras began to roll, one of their leaders wanted to talk about something else: the Clinton administration's proposed $40 billion aid package to Mexico. "This is a shotgun marriage of the Mexican and U.S. economies, and that baby ain't ours," declared Glenn Spencer, founder of the Voice of Citizens Together.

FOR-PROFIT PRIVATE FIRM WILL RUN SCHOOLS — NEW YORK—The Edison Project, an aggressive national effort to provide public education as a profit-making business, has won approval to take over schools in Kansas and Michigan despite the financial troubles of its founder, educational entrepreneur Christopher Whittle. Monday's approval of an Edison Project plan to run a Wichita elementary school and the appointment Wednesday night of an Edison Project principal for a new school in Mount Clemens, Mich., appear to ensure that both schools will open in August with private management.

Democrats set up task force to review welfare fraud

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An Illinois Democratic task force is looking at enacting tougher laws against welfare fraud and at ways to help recipients work toward self-sufficiency.

Representative David Phelps, D-Eldorado, is chairman of the new state Task Force on Welfare Reform. The task force was formed by Illinois House Democratic Leader Michael J. Madigan just a few weeks ago.

"Everyone agrees the system is broke, but there are very different ideas on how to fix it," Phelps said. "The purpose of this Task Force is to sift through all the different ideas, find the best solutions and move forward with them legislatively."

He said the committee has met several times since forming and will meet with Gov. Jim Edgar this week to discuss the governor's views and how they compare to the views of the committee.

Phelps said his goals for the task force include defining who actually receives welfare services, establishing tough laws to end abuse of the system and moving recipients toward self-sufficiency.

"We want to design something that will focus on time-limited benefits," Phelps said.

Phelps said the task force members are in agreement that welfare should be a temporary status for recipients working toward self-sufficiency.

He said he would like to look into how the government can help welfare recipients move into the working world without expanding government.

Measures need to be taken against fraud, Phelps said.

"I introduced a significant reform proposal, contained in House Bill 5, against welfare fraud," Phelps said. "It is based on a highly successful California program that establishes anti-fraud and quality control programs."

Phelps said California has already saved money in a short time period. "We need to identify what kind of money is going to who and clarify some of the general public's misconceptions," Phelps said.

"Many times, recipients are senior citizens and children in our

Market control

Permit process could curb use of ag chemicals

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC researcher has concluded issuing farmers chemical use permits in a market-based control system is the most efficient way to control chemical use in agriculture, but an Illinois Department of Agriculture official has reservations about the plan.

Business Agriculture Professor Charles Matthew Rendleman said because chemical use restrictions are becoming an issue in farming, the government, state or federal, will most likely enact some type of control system to stem any contamination the chemicals cause.

According to Rendleman's six-month research project, the most efficient way to restrict usage would be a market-based control system.

"Let's say you want to cut chemical use by 90 percent. The government could sell permits to farmers which would allow for only 90 percent of chemical use overall," Rendleman, who is a former staff member of the USDA, said. "The permits could be traded and sold among chemical users."

"This would allow a market to develop, and our conclusions show that would be the most efficient way."

Rendleman's research team included Ken Reinert, an economist from Kalamazoo College, and James Tobey, a former USDA staff member.

"The goal is to cut chemical use overall," Rendleman said. "This system would also allow for regional sensitivity to come into play." He explained some areas use different amounts of chemicals, and one farmer could trade or sell his excess permits to another who may need to use more.

But this type of system could create some problems according to Warren Goetsch, chief of the Illinois Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Environmental Programs.

He said Rendleman's plan oversimplifies the situation and that it would be difficult to use that kind of approach to solve chemical use problems.

"I see two problems developing with that type of system," Goetsch said. "First, somebody that can afford it could continue to avoid the restrictions by purchasing more permits from other farmers."

However, Goetsch also said this practice would not be beneficial if the farmer wants to make money

Law students working as volunteers to improve profession's reputation

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIU law students worked to improve the reputation of lawyers by volunteering to help in the community on the third annual National Work-A-Day.

Volunteer work crews from the SIU Law School folded children's clothing at the Women's Center and provided services at the Good Samaritan House. Students also painted walls and did repairs at the migrant camp and provided services for the GTE phonebook-recycling program in Carbondale Saturday.

Shayne Aldridge, first-year American Bar Association representative, said providing free services for the community is something that students need to do and carry into practice once they become lawyers.

"It is to show that we do care about the community and not just to sponge off of the people," he said.

Frank Choi, third-year law student from Springfield said it makes him feel good to volunteer his time to help out people who are in need of help.

"There is an image of lawyers that they are only out for themselves," he said.

George Shoufani, second-year law student from Morton Grove said he has friends to help him out, and it makes him feel good to help others.

"I feel good about doing a good deed," he said.

He said that lawyers have a really bad reputation, and he is trying to show people that this is not true. He encourages all law students and lawyers to participate in the community.

"Many people cannot afford to fight for their rights, and lawyers should provide free services," he said.

Tania Koles, second-year law student from Boston, said that the community needs to see that law students are not just out for the money.

"I think the community needs to see law students interested in the community and not just interested in taking people's money," she said.

Koles said she volunteered because he wants to help any way that she possibly can.

Innovation promised

McIntyre to coordinate student teacher program

By Dustin Coleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The new coordinator of student teaching in SIUC's college of education has pledged to add new innovations and opportunities to the program, and to build on the wisdom of the former coordinator.

D. John McIntyre, director of professional educational experiences, was appointed to the position, effective Jan. 1.

McIntyre, who was first hired at SIUC in 1977 as an assistant professor in curriculum and instruction, said he hopes to keep the standard of the student teaching program as high as it was before.

"The reputation of SIUC teachers is high. They are well prepared," McIntyre said. "They have an expectation that they will be quality teachers."

Job includes placement duties

As coordinator of Student Teaching, he will be in charge of placing SIUC students in public schools for their student teaching degree requirement, he said.

McIntyre said he was not surprised he was offered the job, because of his experience.

"I have been very active nationally in the area of teaching education," he said.

McIntyre served as national president of the Association of Teacher Educators during the 1992 school year and served as the association's state president from 1982 to 1983.

McIntyre said he hopes to seek innovations and opportunities for SIUC students.

"We want to try to investigate an electronic bulletin board so that when teachers have problems or questions, they can be answered," he said. "This will make it easier for teachers to share information."

He'll retain teaching-skills lab

Before becoming coordinator of student teaching, McIntyre was head of the teaching skills lab, a position he will retain. Juggling the two jobs will not be a problem, says McIntyre.

"The department hired two new graduate assistants for the lab," McIntyre said. "It is just a matter of coordinating with the personnel, and make sure lab needs are met."

The position became vacant with the resignation of William Robert Norris. McIntyre said there are many qualities Norris brought to the job.

"He had a commitment to excellence," McIntyre said. "He made sure the staff was prepared and committed, and that's what I plan to do."

McIntyre will bring many different aspects to the job, said Nancy L. Quisenberry, associate dean of SIUC's College of Education. She said that McIntyre and Norris are different people.

"He brings a whole new set of experiences to the job," she said.

Quisenberry said that McIntyre's experience is not the only reason he was offered the job.

"He is very responsible and fair," she said. "He will work with the students."

'Motor-Voter' plan worth state support

A FUNDAMENTAL DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLE OF our nation may be on its way to court, since the state of Illinois has refused to implement a federally mandated voter registration program. The program, nicknamed Motor-Voter, would allow citizens to register as voters for federal elections while taking care of other business at state drivers' license facilities. This would be a beneficial program that the state should approve rather than disputing in court. By refusing to implement the program, the state government has proclaimed that it does not stand behind one of the nation's building blocks.

When the United States was founded, citizens' right to vote was insurance against tyranny. The desire for common people to have a say in their governance was a cry against the oppressive nature of the European regimes many had fled.

ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR ARGUMENTS used by the Illinois government against the Motor-Voter program is that it is another requirement handed to the state by the national government for which Washington will not pay.

This seems like a legitimate concern at face value, since the federal government imposes many unfunded mandates on the states. But if this is the argument, why is the state allowing this to go to court when it does not contest other more costly unfunded mandates?

The entire Motor-Voter program is estimated to cost Illinois $20 million, according to a spokesman for Gov. Jim Edgar's office. The spokesman said this would break down to between $1 million and $2 million per year. Meanwhile, other unfunded mandates — such as the Medicaid program, which cost the state $220 million — go unchallenged. Nor is the $170 million cost of illegal immigration being disputed. Yet Illinois is willing to dispute in a court of law a substantially less costly mandate that promotes a guaranteed right of our Constitution.

ANOTHER REASON THE STATE CLAIMS THE Motor-Voter program should not be implemented is its potential for voter fraud. According to the governor's office, the post-card mail-in registration system that would exist under this plan would allow for increased voter fraud.

It would seem that a possible solution to this quandary would be a tighter and more thorough checking of identification of voters at polling locations. Voter fraud is an unfortunate part of the election process, but fear of this injustice should not inhibit the state from enacting a useful program for voting citizens.

In short, the reasoning behind the state's dispute of the Motor-Voter program lacks enough fuel to legitimately stall out the mandate. On the highway of political costs, the program is merely a pebble in a road of boulders. In the realm of individual citizens' rights, it is a rock which mirrors the solid foundation of popular sovereignty in a nation "of the people, by the people and for the people."

Registration ends today

ON THAT NOTE, STUDENTS SHOULD BE reminded of their right and social obligation to register to vote. Today is the last day to register for the Carbondale primary elections, which decide what names will be on the ballot for city council candidates. Students and all University personnel should register immediately with a deputy registrar at the Undergraduate Student Government if they have not yet done so. After registration, they then should use their voting power for the good of their lives and for the good of society.

Cost of peacekeeping missions needs bipartisan reassessment

The Washington Post

Say this for the Republicans: "Contract" proposals: They are forcing scrutiny of programs and problems much in need of it.

Take the question of paying for international peacekeeping missions. The United Nations has lurched from crisis to crisis, alarm to alarm, and is billions in the red.

The United States has its own raggedness: The executive branch may vote for a U.N. intervention, which brings with it a new assessment, but Congress must decide whether to allocate the money.

Heading into this tangle, the Republican Contract addresses the complaint of "double-billing": that the United States pays a first time for peacekeeping operations as assessed by the United Nations, and a second time in voluntary in-kind payments for humanitarian relief, international peace and law on its own.

Credit the in-kind payments against the assessed contributions. Republicans suggest. Certainly it sounds like an idea worth considering.

But Secretary of State Warren Christopher laid out compelling objections to it last week: The United States will always want to undertake some operations on its own to advance its national interests, he overnight. Christopher warned. At each new emergency, the Republican proposal would force an unacceptable option between "acting alone and doing nothing."

Few now deny that some of the post-Cold War peacekeeping missions that the United Nations was ordered to launch by its members (in every case including the United States) were carelessly conceived and executed.

The Clinton administration itself has retreated from its earlier embrace of a hopeful multilateralism into a more selective approach. It asserts a right to intervene on its own to serve American "vital interests" and holds open the door for U.N. peacekeeping elsewhere "under the right conditions."

American casualties in Somalia came to make the U.N. operation there a metaphor of failure.

The United States now sees Haiti, where an American-led regional coalition operates under U.N. mandate, as a model for the future — at least in places where a responsible and strong regional power is on hand.

Democrats and Republicans now share a responsibility to make it come out right.

told Congress.

Currently, such operations include the arms embargo against Serbia, the no-fly zone in Bosnia and support of Kurds in northern Iraq.

But to credit the cost of such voluntary actions against U.N. assessments would encourage others to follow suit, and — the numbers being what they are — would shut down all U.N. peacekeeping missions

Health-insurance refunds available

Brother, can you spare $200?

Many SIUC students may not be aware that they are eligible for a hefty refund from the University. Most folks probably missed the advertisement for the deadline (Feb. 3) to apply for the medical insurance fee refund (in the Jan. 18) DE.

In short, if a student was enrolled last semester and can prove that they were covered by insurance other than the University's coverage, then they can apply for a refund. The amount of the refund can vary, but it is generally around $200.00. For most students, this is nothing to sneeze at.

Information on the refund and applications can be found in room 118 in Kesnar Hall, located on Greek Row.

Panel member Roya-Akhavan Majid, the graduate program director of the school of journalism, elaborated on the internship and externship laboratories available at the University for a caller inquiring about pre-professional opportunities.

Associate dean of the graduate school, Harry Daniels, revealed to callers the two-year financial aid guarantees the program provides for students who are involved in assistantships.

According to Shepherd, the teleconference may replace traditional recruiting techniques with the high-tech communication methods utilized by the University. Informational literature packets and visiting representatives from the University are the traditional recruiting techniques.

The teleconference provided an opportunity for interested parties to confer directly with the dean of the schools as well as with departmental heads.

Schools were selected to participate in the teleconference with help from a study titled, "Overlooked Faculty Resources in Historically Black Colleges."

The study was completed and published in the Journalism Educator in 1990 by SIUC professor Anna Paddon. Lona Cobb, a doctoral student at SIUC at the time, isolated historically black colleges with journalism and media arts programs.

Engineer of broadcasting services Robert Henderson, with his knowledge of available satellite down-link locations, completed the list of participants and expertise involved in creating the teleconference.

Seven institutions were on the receiving end of satellite communications originating from Carbondale.

Included in the teleconference were Alcorn State University in Lorman, Mississippi; from Jackson, Mississippi, Jackson State University; Morgan State University in Baltimore, Maryland; Shaw University in Raleigh, North Carolina; from Tuscaloosa, Alabama, Stillman College; Howard University from Washington, D.C.; and Alabama State University from Montgomery.

They also registered about 65 people by going door-to-door in Neely Hall Friday night and have had tables set up in the cafeterias during the dinner hours.

Hendricks said results have been better when student groups organize a time for the registrars to come and register groups of people all at once.

Gingrich contributions studied by committee

Newspday

WASHINGTON - Last August, Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., learned that a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson faced a federal roadblock to sales of a new product worth an estimated $300 million a year.

The Food and Drug Administration had yet to approve marketing of a home AIDS test kit. It would permit Americans to make a private determination that a blood sample contained the virus that leads to the fatal immune deficiency disease.

Direct Access Diagnostics, a Rahway, N.J., subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson, was the lead applicant for FDA marketing approval.

The firm's Washington consultant, Steve Hoffman, explained the situation to Gingrich during a meeting in August, according to the congressman's aides. Hoffman said he merely supplied details to Gingrich.

Four days later, on Sept. 2, Gingrich threw the weight of his Republican leadership into the issue, complaining about "stonewalling and needless delay" by the FDA in a fiery letter to President Clinton's chief of staff, Leon Panetta.

A week later, sources said, Elliott Millenson, president of Direct Access, rewarded Gingrich for his help, and made a personal contribution of almost $5,000.

In December, after it was certain that Gingrich would become speaker, Direct Access made a contribution that sources with the company said was about $25,000.

But the money didn't go directly to Gingrich or his political campaign. Instead, the estimated $30,000 went to a tax-exempt organization in Washington, the Progress and Freedom Foundation, run by a Gingrich associate. The donation entitled Direct Access and its president to a tax deduction.

In the past two years, the Progress and Freedom Foundation and its president, Jeffrey Eisenach, have funneled $432,500 into Gingrich's weekly college lecture series broadcast nationwide to his supporters. Gingrich insists the lectures are educational, not political.

But Democratic critics contend that the lecture series is a taxpayersubsidized partisan program that violates federal tax and campaign laws with largely secret contributions from corporations and wealthy individuals.

Gingrich has agreed to a review of such allegations by a special House ethics committee.

Five Republicans and five Democrats led by Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn., will decide whether a full-fledged investigation is warranted.

The panel will be resuming a review begun last fall of charges brought by Ben Jones, a former Democratic congressman defeated by Gingrich in November. Jones amended his original charges against Gingrich last week to include details of a $4.5 million book advance from HarperCollins and a meeting between Gingrich and Rupert Murdoch, owner of the publishing house.

Murdoch, who also owns the New York Post, has acknowledged discussing a challenge to federal licenses for his Fox Broadcasting network with Gingrich while negotiations were under way on the new speaker's book contract.

Under pressure, Gingrich decided to forgo the advance but will accept customary royalties. He wants the ethics committee to appoint an outside special counsel to conduct a wide-ranging investigation that would include Gingrich's role as director of GOPAC, an organization that raises an estimated $2 million a year from secret contributors.

Gingrich uses the GOPAC money to travel in states where Republican candidates are conducting campaigns. In most cases he lectures them on his conservative ideals.

Because most of the money goes to training Republican candidates, Gingrich argues that he does not have to make public the names of contributors as is required for political action committees directly financing partisan campaigns.

But a portion of the money does go to Republican campaigns.

For example, Rep. Porter Goss, R-Ga., got $5,000 from GOPAC last year. Goss is a member of the special ethics panel that will review Gingrich's dealing.

'Improper' campaign funds probed in Whitewater case

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr is investigating possible improper payments to black ministers by Bill Clinton's gubernatorial campaigns in Arkansas, according to sources familiar with the probe.

Starr is examining allegations that Clinton campaign workers distributed cash in amounts of up to several thousand dollars to ministers with the understanding they would endorse Clinton and help get out the vote, according to sources. Much of the effort to get out the black vote was handled by a long-time Clinton aide who is now a high-ranking official with the Democratic National Committee.

Starr's office and the FBI are examining Clinton's gubernatorial races during the 1980s up through 1990, and are particularly interested in cash contributions and cash payments, sources said.

Arkansas law bars cash disbursements of more than $50 by a campaign.

The Rev. Famous Smith of West Memphis, Ark., said Saturday he was questioned by the FBI in December about $500 in cash he received from the 1990 campaign and about a $1,000 check he received from Clinton's 1992 presidential campaign.

"They asked me all kinds of questions -- what did I do with the money and what was it for," said Smith. He said he told the FBI the money went to campaign activities, "passing out literature and getting people to the polls."

The White House Saturday released a statement from senior presidential adviser Bruce Lindsey, treasurer of the 1990 campaign, in which Lindsey defended the practice of making small cash payments to people in the black community for election services.

Police, students form joint group

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students and police will work to narrow the gap between them at the first meeting of the SIUC — Carbondale Student and Police Committee Friday.

Chris Ballard, USG senator of University Park and sole member of the Police Affairs Commission, said the new committee is designed to facilitate open communication between students and police.

"We're trying to get students and police to come together," he said. "This is not a complaint forum. We're just trying to open up a dialog."

Ballard said Police Chief Don Strom originally came up with the idea for the committee at least two years ago and has been waiting for students willing to work on the committee.

"I met with Chief Strom back in September," he said. "At the meeting, I said we should have something where students and police talk to each other. He left and came back with a file on the committee and asked us if it was something we would want to do."

The committee's mission statement is "To create and maintain a panel of students and members of the Carbondale police force and SIUC Security Police in order to facilitate the open communication and sharing of ideas as they relate to the needs and concerns of the students of SIUC and the Carbondale community."

Ballard said he hopes the group will do just that.

"I'd like to have (the meeting) where it is open," he said. "We don't want a bunch of people who have a problem with the Carbondale police or a problem with USG. We want a constructive dialog."

Ballard said topics such as traffic safety and police patrols in areas with high student concentration may be discussed by the committee.

USG City Affairs Commissioner Mike Nolan said although SIUC Security Director Sam Jordan is not yet committed to the committee, he is hopeful SIUC Police will be represented.

"We have contacted Sam Jordan about it," he said. "He hasn't committed yet but he has expressed an interest. We hope he commits by Friday."

The committee will meet at 4 p.m. on the first Friday of every month. The meetings will alternate between the Carbondale Police Department and the SIUC Student Center.

Nolan said with the exception of the first meeting, the meetings will probably be open to the public.

USG nominates two to join committee in chancellor search

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Undergraduate Student Council nominated two students to the Chancellor Search Committee, completing the student nominations from SIUC.

The nominations from USG and the Graduate and Professional Student Council have been submitted to Chancellor James Brown who will review the candidates and make a recommendation to the Board of Trustees, SIUC officials said.

Jack Dyer, executive director of University Relations, said he expects the Board of Trustees to make a decision on the student representative at their next board meeting on Feb. 9.

USG passed a resolution at their last meeting urging administrators to choose an undergraduate for the search committee to represent the SIUC student body.

Edwin Sawyer, USG President, said an undergraduate student could represent the student body better than a graduate student.

"I think because there are more of us, an undergraduate should be chosen to the Chancellor Search Committee. There are about 18,000 of us and only about 3,000 of them," he said.

The two students nominated are Marco Nascia, a sophomore in political science from Lake Zurich, and Keith Wesselmann, a senior in food and nutrition from Carlyle. The student representative to the board will be chosen from the two USG nominees and the two Graduate and Professional Student Council nominees, Jon Coleman and Kevin Green.

Sawyer described the two USG candidates as good people and strong leaders.

Carin Musak, USG vice president, said the students were chosen based on their character and leadership ability. She said the candidates are the kind of people who are not afraid to express themselves and fight for student interests at SIUC.

Edwin Sawyer
USG president

Nascia said he would give 110 percent to the committee if he were elected. He said he would be a good choice because he has the time necessary to work on the search committee.

Nascia said the most important quality for the chancellor position is openness to students' needs.

Nascia was the president of Abbott Hall last year and is currently a student life advisor and the Thompson Point representative to USG.

He also has been involved with the Thompson Point Executive Council and the Residence Hall Association.

Musak said Wesselmann was chosen because he is very active on campus and is concerned about student representation on campus.

She said Wesselmann is also concerned about making things fair, as far as funding and publicity, for smaller and often overlooked colleges.

He is involved in the Agriculture Student Advisory Council and the Hotel and Restaurant Student Association.

Wesselmann also is involved in the Education Policy Committee for the College of Agriculture and is the agriculture representative to USG.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police

■ Laura A. Palmer, the manager of Porky's Barbecue at 603 S. Illinois Ave., told Carbondale Police the restaurant was burglarized between 12:30 a.m. and 8 a.m. on Jan. 22.

The offenders allegedly took $150 and a two-foot-tall ceramic pig decorated with clothing, a derby hat, and a chalkboard. Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

■ Janet Schmitt and Wilma R. Maple, employees of American Gas and Wash at 315 E. Walnut, told Carbondale Police they were robbed at gun point at 9:37 p.m. on Jan. 23.

They described the suspect as a 5' 6" black male in his late twenties, weighing about 160 pounds. He was wearing a black ball cap with a red bill, a black double-breasted leather jacket with a flap in front and black denim pants. He had a light mustache and beard.

Schmitt and Maple said the robber kept his right hand in his pocket, indicating a gun and told them to open the drawer or he would shoot. After allegedly taking an undetermined amount of money, the suspect fled west and police think he may have entered a gray Datsun parked on S. Logan Ave. with several other people inside. The investigation continues.

■ Tyrone Cecil Hill, 33, of 415-A S. Marion, and Monty Antonio Graham, 33, of 302 E. Oak, were arrested and charged with armed robbery after the night clerk at William's Quick Mart, at 534 E. Main, identified them as the men who robbed her.

Joann Thomas told police the two men asked her for cigarettes, wrestled her to the ground, threatened her with a knife, then took money from the cash register and fled north. Carbondale police picked up Hill and Graham shortly after the robbery and Thomas positively identified them as the robbers. Hill and Graham are awaiting trial in Jackson County Jail.

■ Dr. Byron Williamson told Police his office, located at 721 S. Lewis Ln., was burglarized between 5 p.m. Jan. 23 and 7:30 a.m. Jan. 24. The offenders allegedly broke the window to his office with a concrete block and without entering the building, pulled an entire computer system through the window. The system was made up of a Gateway brand computer, monitor, modem and CD system worth $3300.

His office was burglarized again in the same manner between 7 p.m. Jan. 27 and 11:45 a.m. Jan. 28. This time a computer monitor and a telephone system worth a total of $3000 were taken. Police are investigating both incidents.

■ Eugene Oats, 24, of 815 E. Jackson, was arrested on a warrant from Jackson County at 7:51 a.m. on Jan. 28 at the intersection of Oak and Wall Streets. Oats was arrested after he flagged down a Carbondale Police officer to ask him if he was watching him. The officer ran a check on Oats that revealed the warrant. Oats posted bond and was released.

■ Edwin Oats Jr., 42, of 815 E. Jackson, was arrested on a warrant from Sinclair County at 11:50 a.m. on Jan. 28 at the Carbondale Police Station at 610 E. College. Oats was arrested after he went to the police station to ask about bail for his brother, Eugene.

Police ran a check on Edwin Oats Jr. and discovered the warrant. Edwin Oats Jr. was taken to Jackson County Jail.

Women's Services offers three new programs

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC's Women's Services will add three new support groups to their list of existing programs this semester.

The new services include an acquaintance rape and recovery group, an African-American women's support group and a body image group.

Deborah Letarte, group and individual counseling assistant for women's services, said their efforts are centered on group work.

"A centerpiece of what we do in women's services are support groups and workshops," Letarte said. "Our services are available for people in the community, and SIUC's faculty, staff and students. "Our acquaintance rape recovery group will be available for anyone who has experienced any form of sexual assault."

Acquaintance rape group

Kim Stark-Wroblewski, counseling and administrative assistant, said the purpose for the acquaintance rape recovery group is to help victims identify what acquaintance rape is.

"We're including acquaintance rape in our sessions this semester because we are wondering if people who have experienced acquaintance rape have been reluctant to come in and talk about it," Wroblewski said.

"Sometimes victims think rape only means stranger rape, or that rape means being attacked in a dark alley by someone you've never seen before," she said. "The definition of rape certainly goes way beyond that to include a first, second or third date or even someone you know."

Leslie Strategier, campus safety representative for Women's Services, said the acquaintance rape and recovery group is a good place for victims of rape to talk and gain support from other members.

"A lot of victims have a lot of issues of shame, guilt and anger, and this group is a good place to get that out," Strategier said. "We focus on the emotional issues, that it's not their fault and whatever emotional reactions they have are all right."

"Because it's such an isolated thing, people don't talk about being sexually assaulted and that can be a very powerful way to get support from each other."

African-American group

In addition to the acquaintance rape and recovery group, Women's Services will also provide a support group for African-American women as well.

"Another group we will have this semester is the African-American women's service support group, which will be led by and for African-American women in order to help them deal with the issues that are unique to their experiences here on campus," Letarte said.

Body image group

According to Wroblewski, another group which is new this semester will help obese women feel more comfortable with themselves.

"In this society, women tend to be socialized not to like their bodies very much," she said. "What we plan on doing is providing different experiential activities on learning how to feel more comfortable with your own body."

Letarte said although many of the groups are already full for the semester, anyone interested in the sessions should call Women's Services at 453-3655 for information.

Chemicals

because in order to attain a higher crop yield, they would have to pay extra to use extra chemicals.

"Second, it could create a bureaucracy that could be more trouble than it's worth," Goetsch said. "The agriculture sector has always endorsed voluntary action rather than federal regulation."

Goetsch also said it would make more sense for the state to take care of any problems that might arise rather than the federal government.

The IDA has two types of restrictions already in place: label registration and license applications, Goetsch said.

"In Illinois, all chemical products require detailed labels explaining the particular uses of the product in order to be registered," Goetsch said.

The labels are based on research the chemical-producing companies are supposed to conduct to show how their product will not get into the ground water supply, he said.

"Also, farmers have to be licensed to use certain chemicals that have been deemed toxic or leachable." The leachability of a chemical is how fast the chemical will travel through the layers of ground and soil, Goetsch said.

"These farmers have to receive training in issues such as ground water protection and safety so they don't hurt themselves or the environment," he said.

IDA Program Administrator Michael Rahe said the state is developing a generic pesticide plan for the whole state.

"The plan we are developing uses maps based on the local areas that show where the highest percentage of leaching occurs," Rahe said.

Rahe agreed with Goetsch, saying even though the federal government may put mandates on chemical use, he feels the best way to control chemical use is a voluntary.

Goetsch said the plan Rahe spoke of is a generic plan the U.S. EPA asked the states to put together as a contingency for chemical use problems that may develop in the future.

"The EPA will be identifying certain compounds that they consider dangerous," he said. "If a chemical is flagged, then the generic plan is customized for the product, but we will have to follow the plan."

Rendleman said, "You have to remember, the research is narrow. It assumes that federal restrictions are going to happen. If there is going to be a restriction program, I would like to see the most efficient program in place."

Welfare

own communities, unable to support themselves," he said. "Other times they are families who lost jobs and need assistance for a temporary period of time as they find new jobs."

Many working men and women in Southern Illinois lost jobs in the coal industry and were forced onto welfare, Phelps said.

"Unfortunately, the system contains too many cases where able-bodied recipients stay on welfare for years and years, generation after generation," he said. "We must set limits to move them into the job market."

Phelps said the problem with the current welfare system is that it lacks monitoring and follow up.

The Task Force plans to have a framework for reform prepared sometime next week, he said.

Harlem Globetrotters thrill crowd at Arena

The Harlem Globetrotters, the most celebrated basketball team in the world, brought their esteemed magic to the SIUC Arena Saturday night. They thrilled audience members with memorable acrobatic slam dunks and unbelievable ball-handling skills, while Lou "Sweet Lou" Dunbar cracked jokes and humored the crowd to keep the show rolling. He used such antics from grabbing various people to dance to using an audience member's purse to add excitement on to the show. From every smart-aleck remark to the referee to the sky-high slam dunking performance the Harlem Globetrotters were definitely a sight to see.

Scottie Pippen tries his best to get traded away

Los Angeles Times

"Let's see, how did Charlie get out of Philadelphia?"
"Rip his teammates? OK, I've done that."

"Rip the boss? Done that. The fans? Check. Throw furniture? Check. What am I still doing here?"
"How'd the Worm get out of Detroit?"

"Oh, he went stark, raving mad? Dyed his hair, pierced his flesh, tattooed himself into a piece of walking graffiti? I'm not sure I want to go that far, Madonna or no Madonna."

It was just another one of those crazy weeks in Chicago where Owner Jerry Reinsdorf announced he wouldn't trade Scottie Pippen and Pippen, perhaps by way of reply, got himself ejected from a game against the San Antonio Spurs, threw a chair and was suspended for another game.

Pippen, following the example of Charles Barkley and Dennis Rodman, had been making a pain in the neck of himself, calling General Manager Jerry Krause a "liar" daily in hopes of earning a parole.

Pippen has also criticized teammates. Toni Kukoc in particular, called Bull fans racists and insulted several other prominent teams, like the Orlando Magic. That's on top of his famous "No mas" in last spring's New York Knick series.

Pippen is actually a pleasant young man who is well liked by teammates but gets upset when he doesn't get his way. Maybe he learned how a superstar was supposed to act from Michael Jordan, who held Krause in contempt, disregarded Phil Jackson's instructions when he felt like it and once snubbed President Bush.

Jordan, however, had a sense of what he could get away with, and he was, after all, Michael Jordan. Pippen is merely Scottie Pippen.

"A lot of people tend to see the bad in Scottie," teammate Bill Wennington said. "People don't care that he's great on the court, a great teammate, good to be around. That's the stuff that happens every day."

Reinsdorf has his own problems. The owner of the White Sox, he's known as the Father of the Baseball Strike around the union office because of his influence on interim Commissioner Bud Selig.

In basketball, Reinsdorf has presided over the dismantling of a dynasty but hasn't yet devised a way to kill an entire league.

He nurtures the hope of making a trade like last spring's Pippen-for-Shawn Kemp deal, which Seattle agreed to but backed out of when the SuperSonics' fans protested.

"Scottie's outbursts have created the perception that we have to do something," Reinsdorf said last week. "Teams may feel they have us over a barrel. It's going to take a while before they realize we don't

" Teams may feel they have us over the barrel. It's going to take a while before they realize we don't have to do anything."

*Jerry Reinsdorf
White Sox owner*

lose anything."
More likely, it will take Reinsdorf a while to realize 1) he does have to do something and 2) Pippen's price isn't going up.

All Pippen can do for the Bulls is keep them around .500, which means nothing to the fat cats paying higher prices for luxury suites and season tickets in the new United Center.

Reinsdorf has one valuable player, although not as valuable as last spring when the SuperSonics were desperate. Great players are rarely available. But when they are, it is almost by definition a fire sale. Only a star who has become valueless is ever moved. Everyone low-balls the team, which finally has to take the best offer.

Thus, Barkley went for Jeff Hornacek, Tim Perry and Andrew Lang. Only Perry, a lowly sub, remains a 7eer.

Rodman went for Sean Elliott, whom the Detroit Pistons traded back to San Antonio for marginal prospect Bill Curley.

Maybe the Bulls can pry Latrell Sprewell and some No. 1 picks out of Golden State. Maybe they'll have to settle for Tom Gugliotta.

One way or another, Pippen is still on his way out, and the Bulls are still on their way down.

Losses hurt Celtics

The Los Angeles Lakers' only regret after their last game in Boston Garden was they didn't get to dynamite the place afterward.

However, if there's anything worse to Garden fans than losing to the Lakers — on Nick Van Exel's hope-chest three-pointer at the buzzer — it's losing to the Los Angeles Clippers, which the Clips arranged for them five days later.

"This," said mastermind M.L. (More Losses) Carr, "was not an easy game to swallow."

The Celtics are still trying to come to grips with the fact they're no good. The real bad news — there's little they can do about it immediately — is completely lost on them.

The new regime, covering its eyes or its tail, is all blame and hype. After a loss to the Hawks, Coach Chris Ford called his players selfish, suggesting Dominique Wilkins for one.

Responded "Nique, never one to go quietly: "I think it's B.S. It's easy to say this stuff because we've lost the last few games. But as far as being selfish, that's crap."

Unnamed Celtic players — is that you, Nique? — complain about Ford's harsh tone. Ford, another of those Old Celtics, keeps piling it on.

At halftime of the Laker game, Ford snarled the names of the second-half starters and threw the players out of the locker room. They milled around the hallway while Easy Ed Macauley was honored on the court, one of the nightly ceremonies commemorating the Garden's last season. Finally, Xavier McDaniel called them together.

Carr, standing nearby, praised X later for filling the leadership void. "We're not trying to trade him now," Carr said.

Carr, bringing his famous enthusiasm to bear on this front office business, keeps promising "changes," which hopefully will turn out better than his last changes — Wilkins and (Rarely in Service) Pervis Ellison.

Bill Fitch, who won the Celtics a title in 1981, was asked in jest if he was ready to come back.

"Now," Fitch said, "they haven't gone totally down the tubes yet."

Rams considering move to St. Louis

Los Angeles Times

MIAMI—In the city where Joe Namath boldly predicted Super Bowl victory 26 years ago, NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said Friday he was hopeful professional football will continue to be played in the Los Angeles area. But he could not guarantee it.

"I think we will get it done, and I'm optimistic there will be a good, strong representation in Los Angeles," Tagliabue said during his annual state of the league address. "But I don't think I can be like Joe Willie and issue a guarantee."

Tagliabue was responding to a question concerning the Rams' intention to move to St. Louis and the latest rumors involving the Raiders and Oakland, a prospect that could leave Los Angeles without professional football after 1995. Specifically, Tagliabue was asked if the league preferred representation in St. Louis and Jacksonville over Los Angeles and placed greater value on "dynamic ownership" than market size.

"I don't think it's so much a question of leadership, frankly," he said. "It's more a question of economics—some of the issues facing our biggest urban centers and the matter of putting together a financial package that's a real good public sector/private sector partnership."

"I think the Raiders are working hard on that, and we are working with them. A number of people, including the mayor and (Coliseum commissioner) Yvonne Burke and other people in the private sector, have been working on it. It's just complicated when you have a major urban metropolitan center dealing with a wide array of demands, and this is only one of many."

Pro football's future in Los Angeles, Tagliabue said, will depend largely on the feasibility of a new stadium in the area to be funded in part by the NFL. Whether a move by the Rams to St. Louis is deemed in the best interests of the league, which, in Tagliabue's words, is "a big if." Whether the league concurs with the assertion by the Save The Rams task force that the team attempted to drive down home attendance to facilitate a move to St. Louis.

"The group Save The Rams has already been in touch with us," Tagliabue said, "and we will hear their point of view."

"One of the factors that's in our guidelines (on franchise relocation) is: Did the team contribute to the loss of fan interest in a significant way, in a way that was controlled, and did the decline in revenues — if there was a decline in revenues — result from things the team did in terms of the way it (operated)? That is in our guidelines, and it will be considered."

Tagliabue has called a special owners meeting in Dallas on Feb. 16 to discuss the Rams' relocation. He said the owners will either vote then or at their regular meeting in Phoenix in March. The move could be blocked if eight of the league's 30 owners vote against it.

"Could the league block a move? I think we could, if we decided it was not in the league's best interests," Tagliabue said.

"We have tried to tailor our policies and our guidelines to be responsive to some of the court cases that came down concerning proposed franchise moves in the NFL and the NBA in the early and mid-'80s. So the answer to that would be yes."

Tagliabue said the league remains committed to its proposal to help finance the construction of a new football stadium in Southern California to be used by the Raiders and, possibly, the Rams.

According to the proposal, the stadium would be used as a regular Super Bowl site. Funding would be raised through Super Bowl seat licenses.

When New York was great: Mickey, Willie and the Duke

Battle of boroughs: Debate endless among fans as to who was best among three star centerfielders of era.

By Steve Jacobson
Newsday

NEW YORK—On the way to the dinner I caught myself, went back inside and stuck a clean, new baseball in my pocket. Because I'll never be 17 again.

Willie, Mickey and the Duke were going to be at the dinner. I don't make a thing about gathering autographs; I don't like asking favors of people I'm writing about; it's not professional. But—goodness knows—Willie, Mickey and the Duke are at the heart of why I got into this business. And how often will they again be at the same place at the same time?

A long time ago, when I was very young in this business, the New York Yankees and the San Francisco Giants were in the World Series, and after the fifth game, Mantle was standing in front of his locker mocking himself. You have to understand that at the time Mantle was an intimidating figure for a young writer. It was important to be able to write about him at any time, because he was Mickey Mantle. He was the last of the great center fielders from the rich time there were three teams in New York City.

This great nostalgia craze stems from that period.

This time the World Series was supposed to be the showcase for Mantle and Mays, and neither was shining. Mantle told of hearing this one loud fan in the bleachers hollering: "Mantle. We came to see who was best, you or Mays. Now we're trying to decide who's worse."

Then, Mantle said, it sounded as if they were taking a vote. "I turned around," Mantle said, "and this guy hollers: 'Mantle, you win!'"

It was the kind of discussion/argument we had every day growing up. My father was a Giant fan; my good friend Steve was a Yankee fan. I loved the Dodgers. Willie, Mickey and the Duke, those three guys were so good, and no place had ever had that display of greatness at one time. Choose one or the other. You couldn't have more than one, like you couldn't have more than one true girlfriend.

It's said that a sports fan has his deepest roots in the time he was 17 years old. They were images in the three-sided prism of New York only a short time. Snider was a Dodger beginning in 1947. Mantle and "I hope I'm not bragging, but I thought I was the best ballplayer I've seen."

Willie Mays
Giants centerfielder

Mays were rookies in '51. Mays spent most of '52 and all of '53 in the Army. Then after '57 Snider and Mays were taken west. So the era of Willie, Mickey and the Duke—"I saw it on the radio," Terry Cashman sings—was only five full seasons.

But what a time. What a contrast with the time of replacement players about to dawn and baseball lodged in courtrooms instead of dugouts, and on Super Bowl Sunday Jonathan Schwartz has fittingly reined out his 26th annual salute to baseball—no Willie, Mickey and the Duke on WOEW.

I wanted their signatures on the ball, I suppose, because I'd like to have a piece of the time I was 17 forever. I was a freshman on the campus of Indiana University, an ear at somebody's portable radio, when Bobby Thomson's home run beat the Dodgers. I was the sports editor of the Indiana Daily Student when Mays made his catch.

I remember sitting on my bunk at Fort Bragg and reading that the Dodgers had played their last game at Ebbets Field, and realizing I'd never see the Brooklyn Dodgers again. Players couldn't move then, but owners could. When I got to cover the Yankees they were the only team in town and I felt blessed, but still a bit cheated because they weren't the Dodgers.

I saw a lot of Mantle. He was magnetic, and yet ... He would show a flash of wit or insight for a moment and then—one question was too deep—and he'd spin on his stool and leave, you with the reddening back of his neck. He didn't permit himself to be a good guy with us until the last few years.

The Mays I saw with San Francisco was a cranky, suspicious man, not at all like the kid who played stickball in the streets. But boy, could he play. "I hope I'm not bragging a little bit, but I thought I was the best ballplayer I've seen," Mays said when he was voted to the Hall of Fame, and probably he was.

And Snider, he seemed to get the least credit. He hit at least 40 home runs in five consecutive seasons, which neither of the other two did. He hit the last Dodger home run in Brooklyn. "I thought I was as good as Mays and Mantle until I had the knee operation," Snider said years later, and maybe he was. At spring training with the Mets, when he couldn't play anymore, my wife, Anita, noted that he was the most magnetic figure in camp—other than her husband.

What moved me at the Baseball Writers Dinner with an award named for the three of them was that all three felt that sitting together—Willie, Mickey and the Duke—was something special. Mantle said he was glad the Dodgers won in '55 because Duke was "too good not to win one of them." He gave the crown to Mays: "I'd say Willie was the best. I don't mind being tied for second."

Mays said, "Mickey, Willie and the Duke, to me that's New York City, that's not an award for an individual."

I'm glad they understood. Mays wiped the sweat off his face when he sat down. I think more than a few of us wiped at the corners of our eyes. I remembered when I was 17. I couldn't ask for the ball to be signed. I really don't need it.

auto accident.

"That was a turning point in my career as an athlete. Initially, I was angry and I wanted to give up diving. Instead, I used my love for my coach to make me better."

Siracusano qualified for his first

Senior Nationals that season.

"I can see a lot of him in myself," Siracusano said. "I see my performance as a direct branch to Coach Schloen."

Siracusano has already qualified for the NCAA Zone Championships in the 1-meter and 3-meter boards. He is also going to Germany for the International Springtag Competition as part of the U.S. team. Siracusano also went to China to compete at the China Open and the Meet of Four Nations. He is goal oriented and looking toward the '96 Olympic Games in Atlanta.

"My goal is to win a gold medal, but I want to take it year by year and see what happens," Siracusano said. "If I died tomorrow, I would never regret my career as a diver."

SIUC men's swim coach Rick Walker was proud of his squad's performances, especially of Steve Munz, for his showing in the 200 backstroke, the 400 medley relay team for their fast finish, and Doug Fulving's time of 21.5 in the 50 free.

"I thought we looked great at the meet against UK," Walker said. "We are five weeks out of conference competition, and we're swimming really fast."

Rob Siracusano continued his stellar performances in the 1-meter and 3-meter diving competitions, placing first in both events.

didn't get the help we wanted and we didn't work hard enough to deny them the ball."

SIUC was down by 12 points in the first half before going on a 19-4 run to close out the stanza with a lead.

"We played very poorly in the first 14 minutes, but then we settled in, got some clearouts for Gilmore and got some points," Scott said.

The Salukis will stay on the road as the team travels to Creighton tonight in a battle of fourth-place clubs.

"I'm not sure if we are a halfway decent team right now," Scott said. "We need to make drastic improvements if we want to go into Omaha and get a win, but we will regroup."

Tip-off for tonight's game against Creighton is at 7:05.

Redbirds topple Dawgs, 94-91; last-quarter defense disappears

'We didn't guard anybody,' says SIU coach Rich Herrin

By Grant Deady
DI Sports Editor

Ouch — this one hurt. The Saluki men's basketball team got ambushed by Illinois State Saturday at the Arena, as the Redbirds pulled off a 94-91 upset win.

SIU (10-9, 5-3) shot a gaudy 66-percent from the field and came back from a 12 point deficit in the final nine minutes to shock the 5,322 fans that rolled out of bed for the 11:05 up-off.

Redbird head coach Kevin Stallings and his troops came into the game with a 9-9 record, but have topped both Tulsa and SIUC within the last 10 days.

"I guess it's nice to win a game when you're not supposed to win," Stallings said. "I don't think a lot of people gave our basketball team a lot of chance to come down here and be successful and I'm proud of the way our guys competed and how they did the things necessary to win."

"We had a stretch there in the second half where we could have kinda folded our tent. Our guys will compete and they've made a lot of improvement from the beginning of the season."

Maurice Trotter anchored SIU's comeback by scoring 12 of its last 14 points, including a clutch three-pointer with 1:24 left to give the Redbirds a 90-87 edge.

BASKETBALL

Saluki swingman Marcus Timmons came back to hit 1-of-2 at the line to bring SIUC within a basket, 90-88, but Trotter responded with a five-foot baseline jumper and two free throws to push the Bird lead to 94-88.

SIUC freshman guard Shane Hawkins then drilled a three-pointer with :22 seconds remaining to give the Dawgs a breath of hope.

SIU's Chad Altadonna missed the front end of a 1-and-1 with :04 seconds left, which gave SIUC a chance to tie with a three-pointer, but Saluki guard Paul Lusk's 22-footer at the buzzer came up short.

SIU coach: "Birds got breaks

Stallings said his team caught a lot of breaks down the stretch after being dangerously close to getting blown out.

"We're understanding more and more what it takes and we feel very, very lucky because some things needed to go right for us and they did," he said. "We got some critical baskets at key times in the game."

"When I looked up and saw them up 12, I didn't think we had control of the game. As a matter of fact, I thought we were getting ready to lose control. It seemed like they were either dunking it on a lob pass or making a three-pointer."

SIUC shot 51-percent from the field on the game, but was just 12-of-24 from the free throw line.

Saluki head coach Rich Herrin didn't blame the loss on his players poor clip from the charity stripe, but rather its defensive breakdown in the second half.

"We jumped out and get the 12 point lead with about 10 minutes to go and then we didn't guard anybody," Herrin said. "If you score 90 points at home, you've got to win, but we didn't score and we didn't defend anybody down the stretch."

SIU played the comeback role in the first half also by tying the game at 45 going into the locker room after being 11 points down.

Saluki forward Ian Stewart led the way for SIUC in the first half with 16 points, but scored just two in the second half.

Trotter was SIU's leading point man with 22 as five Redbird players reached double figures.

SIUC (12-6, 5-3) will now prepare for a crucial meeting with Tulsa (12-4, 9-1) at the Arena on Wednesday.

The Golden Hurricane escaped with a 67-65 win over the Dawgs in Tulsa back on Jan. 16.

Drake defeats SIUC, 92-70; Salukis to battle Lady Jays

By Doug Durso
Daily Egyptian Reporter

It seemed as though the SIUC women's basketball team played two different games when the Salukis took on Drake Saturday.

Unfortunately for the Saluki women, when the horn sounded the only thing that mattered was a 92-70 loss to the Bulldogs.

SIUC got hot at the end of the first half and took a 42-39 lead into the locker room, but Drake stormed out in the second half and outscored the Salukis 53-28 in the second half.

Saluki women's basketball coach Cindy Scott said the loss shows her where the squad stands at this point.

"We're not a very good team right now," Scott said. "We need to make major improvements and adjustments."

Drake's shooting and SIUC mistakes were the main reasons for the SIUC defeat.

The Bulldogs, who are second in the nation in field goal percentage, hit 59 percent for the game and 66 percent in the second half, while the Saluki women committed 24 turnovers. SIUC was also outscored 34-24.

With the loss, the Salukis dropped to fourth place in the Missouri Valley Conference (5-3) and fall to 10-6 overall. Drake improves to 10-6 in the league and 14-2 for the season.

SIUC was led by Nikki Gilmore and Heather Slater, who scored 13 points apiece.

Drake had three players score over 20 points, led by Kristi Kinne, who poured in 24, while Trica Wakely and Julie Ritzgers added 21 points.

Scott said the team did not come out to play in the second half.

"We came out extremely flat in the second half, and made some poor decisions defensively," she said. "Kinne and Wakely really

Diver breaks 20th pool record

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Rob Siracusano has a picture of himself when he was about three years old in a swimsuit at the local pool. He was on the diving board, terrified and crying.

Things have definitely changed since then, as Siracusano's diving accomplishments have earned him the honor of being selected as the Daily Egyptian Saluki Athlete of the Week.

Siracusano's most recent achievements include earning his 20th pool record, marked last week at the Salukis' meet in South Bend, Ind., and first place finishes against Kentucky in both the 1-meter and 3-meter boards.

This is nothing new for the Saluki diver, as Siracusano has re-written SIUC record books again and again, holding all cur-

Originally from Long Island, N.Y., Siracusano grew up with a mother that wanted him to learn how to swim, not to dive. Her hope was to keep him busy, off the streets and out of trouble.

"My mom really didn't want me diving, but when she was gone, I would get up on the board and mess around," Siracusano said. "But my brother used to tell me that mom wouldn't take me home unless I dove into the water."

Every athlete has to start somewhere, and Siracusano started his high school career by diving in a pool with six lanes, about one-fourth the size of the SIUC pool. His coach at Calhoun High School, Lester Schloen, made a big impact on his career as a top diver.

Siracusano said that the bond between a diving coach and the athlete he trains is a very close, personal relationship. During his sophomore year at SIUC, receiving the tragic news that his coach, just 27 years old, had died in an

First place finishes were not enough for the Salukis as they completed their third consecutive road trip with a visit to Kentucky. Almost identical scores placed both the SIUC men's and women's swimming/diving teams behind the Wildcats by about 50 points.

The SIUC women's team placed Saluki swimmer Melanie Davis first in the 200-yard breaststroke and third in the 400-yard individual medley. Freshman Andi Dexter also grabbed a first place finish in the 500-yard freestyle, while another freshman, Melodie Dickerson also came up strong, placing second in both the 50-yard freestyle and 200-yard backstroke. The 400-yard relay medley team of Sara Schmidtkofer, Jennifer Bobanic, Davis and Dickerson took second place in the competition.

SIUC women's swimming coach Mark Klumper said the team is starting to swim better and is seeing improvements over the meet against Notre Dame and Purdue last weekend.

"We're still not swimming as well as I know we can," Klumper said. "But it will be nice to be home next weekend against Iowa. The team does well when they compete at the Recreation Center."

On the men's side, Chris Pelant took first in the 200-yard butterfly
