Walker criticizes Ogilvie's higher education policy

By Pat Silha
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Dan Walker, candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Illinois, Monday criticized the "meat ax approach" which he said Gov. Richard Ogilvie used in recommending cuts in the state higher education budget.

Rather than demanding that the Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE) reduce its proposals by $22 million, he should have "sat down with them and seen if there were any fat to be trimmed," Walker said.

Walker, who is "taking his candidacy to the people" by walking the length of the state, made his comments at a news conference Monday at the Carbondale Holiday Inn.

Ogilvie's approach "reduces the efficiency of higher education when we should be making it easier for young people to go to college," he said.

Walker said the state payroll—which he said is up a quarter billion dollars since Ogilvie took office—would have been the first place he would have turned to consider budget reductions.

If the state hired on a business-like basis, it could control expenses, Walker said. But, according to Walker's "Parkinson's Law of Politics," expenses always rise to eat up tax increases.

Walker said that in his dealings with SIU students, he has learned their concerns "are not materially different than the concerns other people have."

He said they want the state government to be "responsive to people's needs," and are concerned that education on all levels seems to be second or third in the state's priorities.

He blamed the lack of priorities on "two machines (Chicago Mayor Richard Daley's and Ogilvie's) dealing with one another, and their priorities differ from those of the people."

Walker emphasized he will not accept Daley's support if it were offered.

"I have my hat in the ring and not in my hand," he said.

He said a bill which was designed to further reclamation of strip mined land and, now on the governor's desk, should be sent back to the legislature. According to Walker, the regulatory measures called for by the bill should be done by the State Department of Conservation and not by the Department of Mines and Minerals, as the bill now states.

He also proposed the State of Illinois should stop spending money outside of the state to promote Illinois as a tourist attraction.

He cited "Machine politics" and their relevancy to the people as one of the major issues of the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

Official title not yet chosen for top post

By Pat Silha
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

No official title has yet been chosen for the position that Chancellor Robert G. Laver will fill when he becomes chief administrative officer of the Carbondale campus under the reorganization announced Friday by the Board of Trustees.

James Brown, chief of board staff, said Monday Laver's precise title in the new administrative organization probably will be clarified at the Board's meeting in August.

The Board eliminated the positions of chancellor at the Carbondale and Edwardsville campuses and designated the top post at each campus as president, effective Sept. 1.

John S. Rendleman was named president at Edwardsville, where he is now chancellor.

However, it was not made clear whether Laver will take over the Carbondale position as "acting" president pending the Board's appointment of a president. Laver has been serving as chancellor on an interim basis and has said he wishes to return to the Department of Economics where he was chairman.

Brown said another question yet to be resolved is the status of the office of the system vice presidents, I.P. Brackett and Ralph Ruffner. The answer to this question, he said, may be determined by the course of future decentralization of the University.

The Board also voted to abolish the office of system president and, as of Sept. 1, to dissolve the University Administrative Council (UAC).

The University Administrative Council has been, in effect, the "president" of the two campuses. The office of system president has been vacant since Delyte W. Morris was relieved of his administrative duties and placed on emeritus status by the Board last year.

Brown called the Board action a fundamental change that argues for the immediate operational autonomy for the two campuses.

In making the reorganization move, Brown said, the Board did not anticipate the establishment of two Boards of Trustees for Edwardsville and Carbondale, but "it is difficult to rule out logical possibilities."

Results expected in fall

SIU president hunt underway

The membership of the campus advisory council which will help select the president of SIU's Carbondale campus is expected to be announced next week. Ivan A. Elliott Jr., chairman of the Board of Trustees selection committee, said Monday.

Elliott also said he is hesitant to set a target date for choosing the new chief administrative officer but said he is "hopeful a man could be chosen early in the fall quarter."

At its July meeting Friday, the Board abolished the offices of chancellors of the Carbondale and Edwardsville campuses and designated the top post at each campus as president. The change becomes effective Sept. 1.

At the same time, Elliott announced the formation of the advisory council, to be composed of 10 members chosen as follows:

Three persons representing the faculty to be chosen by the present and immediate past chairmen of the Carbondale Faculty Council and Carbondale Graduate Council.

Three persons representing the students—to be chosen by the present and immediate past presidents of the Carbondale student body and Graduate Student Council.

One person representing the Carbondale campus Civil Service employees and one representing administrative and staff personnel—to be chosen by the present and past chairmen of the Nonacademic Employees Council and Administrative and Professional Staff Council.

One representative of the deans—to be chosen by the Dean's Conference of the Carbondale campus.

One member-at-large—to be designated by Elliott.

The entire council will then elect an executive committee of three persons, two of whom must have academic rank.

Elliott said the details of meeting and interviewing candidates would be worked out by the Board's selection committee and the executive committee of the campus advisory council.

The advisory council will not present candidates of its own for president but will work with the Board selection committee in screening candidates chosen with the help of a Chicago consulting firm, Richard Quaintance and Associates. Quaintance was hired by the Board in June to seek candidates for the chancellorship—before the reorganization move announced Friday.

Elliott, a Carmi banker, said he hoped to have names of the advisory council members chosen by the campus groups by the end of this week and that he expected to designate the member-at-large at the same time.

Elliott said the administrative reorganization did not alter the selection committee's criteria for the post.

Elliott had said earlier that the Board is seeking a man "of exceptional quality," with a doctor's degree in any field, experience in higher education, and ability to "relate to students, staff and faculty."

The selection committee had already moved "in the direction of looking for that type of individual," Elliott said. The administrative change will help the search, he said, because it "clarified in the minds of the candidates the characteristics of the job we are offering."

Elliott said he does not know how many candidates have been contacted by Quaintance. However, Quaintance has spent the last 10 days intensively trying to locate presidential candidates and has "at least one" whom he considers an extremely good prospect, the selection committee chairman said.

U-Senate to sponsor governance internships

The Provisional University Senate will have three internships beginning fall quarter, according to William Simeone, Senate president.

Simeone said the internships are open to any junior, senior or graduate student, regardless of major. The only restriction is that intern applicants must be in good academic standing.

Each applicant must submit an application to the Senate Office at 906 W.

Grand Ave. by noon August 18. Someone said the application should include two letters of recommendation, an academic transcript and a letter stating the applicant's interest in University governance.

Someone said the interns will be assigned to various offices and committees of the Senate. Their jobs will probably consist of research and they will be paid in accordance with regular student pay scales. Someone said

Journalist cited as crusader

Publisher receives Lovejoy award

A Kentucky newspaper publisher who was forced out of business by an advertiser's boycott was presented the annual, Elijah P. Lovejoy Award for courage in journalism Sunday.

Ro Gardner, former publisher of the 1,600-circulation weekly Hickman Courier, received the award from Howard R. Long, director of SIU's School of Journalism, at the opening session of the International Conference of Weekly Newspaper Editors (ICWNE).

The Lovejoy award is a memorial to the pre-Civil War editor of Alton who was murdered by a mob in 1837 for his abolitionist editorials.

Long cited Gardner for 16 years of crusading journalism and constructive community leadership, championing the cause of black minorities and "for continuing to serve as the editorial conscience of his community in the face of unjust personal criticism, directed against his family as well as himself."

Gardner took over the Courier in 1954, regularly publishing unpopular articles on local issues, including race relations. His financial troubles began in 1969 when racial strife broke out in a local high school and Gardner took a stand against school officials in favor of black students and parents.

In March, 1970, Gardner left Hickman after dwindling advertising revenues and repeated threats and intimidation to him and his family.

Gardner is now publishing a newspaper in California.

The ICWNE will continue its annual summer session through Friday morning, with panels on consumer protection, CATV, economics and education.

A dinner sponsored by Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalism society, will be held Thursday evening. Guest speaker will be Bruce Bruggmann, publisher of the San Francisco Guardian who is waging a court battle to dissolve monopoly arrangements between the San Francisco Chronicle and the Examiner, a Hearst paper.

Nixon briefs congressional heads on plans behind Red China visit

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon briefed the Congressional leaders of both parties Monday on plans and purposes behind his forthcoming visit to Communist China and asked for restraint in public discussion and speculation about it.

The President told the leaders he would welcome their private views on the summit session—through Secretary of State William P. Rogers, who will set up the procedures.

At the same time White House spokesman, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, said "We welcome any initiative that might offer a solution to the Vietnamese problem."

Apparently the bid to minimize speculation is aimed at dampening undue optimism and raising any false hopes for starting results from the talks Nixon plans to have with Premier Chou En-lai in Peking sometime before next May.

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said after an hour and half meeting at the White House that, "I don't think the President is trying to muzzle anyone at all. He is simply stating the momentous nature of the occasion and the necessity for restraint."

Two Boards not likely for SIU

By the Board's action Friday, Brown said, the Carbondale campus was removed from the situation in which the UAC was the chief authority. He said the UAC had been recognized from the start as "a temporary arrangement to try to get through the reorganization period" and that it did not permit a clear definition of the role of a new chief campus executive.

Brown said the Board's move

Faculty Council convenes today

The Carbondale Faculty Council will meet in special session at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Mississippi Room, Student Center.

Junior college transfer policies, admission policies and committee nominations are scheduled items for discussion.

Board OK's appointment changes

Four administrative change appointments in the office of Dean of Students, Wilbur Moulton, have been approved by the Board of Trustees.

Appointments related to campus housing area consolidation include Jefferson L. Humphrey, assistant dean of student services to head the area which includes University Park and Brush Towers. Will W. Travelstead was appointed assistant dean in charge of the area which includes Thompson Point and Small Group Housing.

Humphrey previously headed the Brush Towers complex area. Both housing centers were involved in administrative consolidations in July.

Appointed as assistant dean of student activities to head the Student Activities Office in the University Center was Mary Arnold. Miss Arnold previously served as assistant dean for sororities and fraternities.

The Board also approved the appointment of Charles Busch as assistant to Edward Hammond, assistant to the chancellor for student relations.

Other personnel actions by the Board include:

Term appointments—Anthony Mullozzi, lecturer, Rehabilitation Institute; Donald Jackson Boon, merely "carries the UAC report another logical step forward."

In its report of June 26, the UAC had recommended that the period of reorganization of the University be extended to June, 1972, and that during the extension the SIU system continue to operate without a president.

It set June 26, 1972, as target date for operational autonomy for the two campuses.

The Board in acting Friday, set December 30, 1971, as completion date for the decentralization.

The UAC had also recommended that it be maintained, but with a membership composed of the two chancellors, one systems vice president, a chairman and the chief of board staff.

Attempted murder charged

Student's condition 'critical'

A Carbondale man was charged with attempted murder and aggravated battery Monday in the shooting of a 20-year-old SIU freshman handicapped by polio.

The shooting victim, Joseph I. Davis of Flora, was reported in "poor and critical" condition from a gunshot wound in the stomach at Doctors Hospital.

The charges were filed against Ernest Ray Bennett, 28, in Jackson County Court and bond was set at $10,000.

Davis was shot with a .22-caliber pistol Friday night at a University parking lot near the Baptist Student Center, according to SIU police.

Police said the shooting occurred after a two-car accident involving the two men at University Avenue and College Street.

Heavy crime puzzles police

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Police are trying to solve a weighty problem. Someone stole a 1,500-pound steel wrecking ball from a company that had been razing a church.

Summer quarter—Michael Burt, visiting professor, design; Joseph Felker, staff assistant, Outdoor Laboratory; Larry Franklin, instructor, School of Music; Michael Fredrics, lecturer, School of Music; Martha Harpstrite, staff assistant, School of Music; Katherine Leneil, staff assistant, School of Music; Ernest Lewis, assistant professor, guidance and educational psychology; John Little, staff assistant, School of Music.

Jane Merchant, assistant, design; Carole Propp, staff assistant, School of Music; Wayne Pyle, lecturer, School of Music.

Sabbatical leaves—Robert Knittel, research associate, Community Development Services; Eelin Harrison, associate professor, theater.

Continuing appointments—David Kammler, assistant professor, mathematics; Robert McKay, staff assistant, physics and astronomy.

Police reported that Bennett said he and a companion, Thomas Overton, 26, followed Davis to the University Avenue and Mill Street intersection where they stopped his car to talk to him and later followed him to the University parking lot.

Investigating officers found the Davis car, which is equipped with special hand controls because of his polio-caused handicaps, and the youth's crutches in the parking lot.

Davis was reported to have told his half-brother, James Ross of Beckemeyer, that the two men had accused him of sidestepping their car. Ross reported that Davis had told him the two men pulled him from his car and struck him before he was shot, police said.

Bennett is employed as a taxicab driver but was driving a private car at the time of the incident, police said.

Females have privileges in the 18-year-old set

The recently ratified 26th Amendment lowered the minimum voting age to 18.

This long-overdue step should be the first toward granting 18-year-olds full adult status.

In many states, 18-year-olds are still considered minors—unable to own property, make legally binding contracts or even get married without parental consent. In fact, the only place most 18-year-old males are considered adults is at their local draft board.

Yet, in many of the same states, 18-year-old females are given adult privileges denied to their male counterparts.

Such is the case in Illinois concerning legal age for marriage. A bill that was recently before the General Assembly would have allowed 18-year-old males to get married without parental consent. It was defeated. Yet, under present laws, an 18-year-old female may get married without her parents' permission.

Cases of discrimination exist locally also. At least one Carbondale night club-bar refuses admission to males under 21, while admitting 18-year-old and older females.

Clearly such laws and regulations are unfair, and technically illegal under the 1964 Civil Rights Act. In view of the inequality in treatment of the sexes produced by the spectre of the draft for males, such treatment is an outrage.

This is just part of the problem, however. The enfranchisement of 18-year-olds is good, but more is needed.

If 18-year-olds are expected to act as adults, they should be treated as such. The 26th Amendment is one step. The other necessary steps—extension of adult rights to 18-year-olds and removal of those laws which are discriminatory on the basis of sex—should be undertaken at once.

A start has been made. The effort should not die there.

Evaluation program has promising future

An idea that was conceived at SIU has finally been born.

And rightly so.

The Teacher Course Evaluation Program (TCEP) was launched at the end of winter quarter, 1971, and seems to be approaching its goals.

Structured closely after the evaluation programs being used at such schools as the University of Illinois, Texas and California, the SIU program has set out to evaluate as many courses and instructors at this institution as possible.

The purpose of the program is to provide important information to students concerning both the courses they will be taking and their fellow students' evaluation of the course instructor.

The end result of the evaluation will be published in booklet form each quarter. The booklet will contain such information as the value of the course (as judged by both instructor and student), the teaching and testing methods employed by the instructor and the students' suggestions for future classes.

The advantages of such an evaluation program are two-fold. The students who face the chore of course selection every quarter will be aided in this process. They will know at the time of registration which section of a course to register for. Fewer students will be made unhappy by instructors whose teaching methods they do not like.

Secondly, the booklet will help instructors evaluate their teaching methods as well as the materials being used in the course. And, for instructors who are interested in improving or changing their teaching methods, the booklet should provide steady and reliable feedback.

No one can say that the program will be a sure success, but if one trusts the other evaluation programs being used throughout the country, this program should be one of the best to be undertaken at SIU.

Letters to the editor

Space efforts defended as solution to survival

To the Daily Egyptian

Barry Cleveland's statement of opinion on July 14, 1971, in the Daily Egyptian reflects once again the assinine, typically American belief that money alone can solve any problem. Money is the god of the Universe now, that "somebody's God died."

If America were willing to forsake everything else and spend all of its money on making sure that everyone in the world is sufficiently clothed and fed, then it would most obviously need a method to do it. And of course it should be deadly certain that its methods are not false, that is, what it does, does not eventually make things more intolerable.

Perhaps Mr. Cleveland could occupy more of his thoughts wondering what happened to those social programs which spent hundreds of billions of dollars in the last decade promising to improve mankind's existence, but instead turned out to be a pocket full of mumbles actually making things worse, and think less of looking for scapegoats like the space program which, for a comparatively paltry sum of $30 billion, came up with something (at the very least) positive. Moon rocks.

I believe that it is not an either-or situation: either feed the hungry or travel through space. To paraphrase U Thant: It is not a question of resources anymore, it is a question of choice.

If we choose to do something, it will be done. After we decide to do something we should devise a plan that will work, not just promise. If we on our own can not, then perhaps the ultimate solution to the problem of survival for the species Homo sapiens lies only in space exploration. To seek out a race more intelligent to give us the much needed answers.

Exhibit of molas attacked for 'outrageous' prices

To the Daily Egyptian

On Wednesday, July 13, I decided to go and see the display of molas (multicolored pictures on cotton cloth) which is located in the showroom of the Home Economics building. To my surprise, I found on display some of the best designed molas I have ever seen, but the thing that struck me the most was the prices of those molas which the visitor can buy I am a native of Panama and I have traveled considerably to the islands of San Blas where the Cuna Indians live and where the molas are made. I have also had a great deal of communication and living experiences with some of these Indians.

I want to inform the SIU community that the cheapest original Mola can be bought in San Blas for $1.50 and I have seen some for which the Indians ask as much as 25 dollars. At the display I saw Molas selling from fifty dollars to the outrageous amount of 135 dollars.

I am quite sure that the Cuna Indians do not need the help of people who develop projects such as the PAN-SAN-CUNA, which is primarily concerned with bringing about "an international awareness of the Cuna Indians and the San Blas Islands where they live, as well as an understanding of the culture which the Cunas developed over a period of many centuries," but is buying molas at a extremely low price in Panama and selling them here in the U.S. for such exorbitant prices. The F. Louis Hoover collection is either profit-oriented, or Mr. Hoover desires to finance his trips to Panama, his research of the Cuna culture, and other costs through the sale of Molas here in the United States.

Half-century of glory related by historian

Imperial Berlin, by Gertud Masur. New York and London: Basic Books, 1970, 353 pp. $10.00.

Reviewed by Helmut A. Hartwig

This book pleases by its clear, large print as well as by a very fascinating group of photographs, which are clustered together in the center of the volume and which date back to Berlin's halcyon years, its approximately half-century of imperial glory. The blurb inside the dust cover offers the claim that Professor Masur's work is "...undoubtedly, the first successful attempt to picture Berlin in its multi-faceted development." Be that as it may, the wealth of "multi facets" is somewhat overwhelming in this book unless the reader is already aware of a great deal of the history of Central Europe, in general, and that of Berlin, in particular. After dedicating Imperial Berlin "to my friends at the Free University of Berlin" and making his "Acknowledgements" the author reveals in his "Introduction" that he is a native of the city in question. (Incidentally, this reviewer can also proudly proclaim: "Ich bin ein Berliner!") Thus Dr. Masur, who concurrently holds an appointment as Professor of History at the (Free) University of Berlin and Sweet Briar College of Virginia, seems most qualified to treat of his subject. This eminent historian is well known not only in Europe and North America but also in South America, where he spent many fruitful years (in Bogota, Columbia; etc.). At this point it might be of interest to mention that he is the author of Simon Bolivar, among many other historical works.

To give the prospective peruser of Masur's Tale of a City some inkling of what is in store for him (or her), let's take a look at the chapter or section headings which follow the Introduction: 1. To the Brandenburg Gate. 2. From Kingdom to Empire. 3. The Boom Years. 4. Berlin Society. 5. "World City? Perhaps." 6. Writers, Journalists, and Scholars. 7. Berlin and the Arts. 8. War and Revolution. Epilogue. Notes. Bibliographical Note. Index.

No Capital City Until 1871

The main fact which Dr. Masur stresses in his Introduction is that Germany, unlike France, Italy, Russia, and other countries, did not have one city to point to as its capital until 1871. It is only with the creation of Bismarck's Reich that Berlin became the capital of Germany; incidentally, a Germany for the first time as a mostly all-German political entity embracing most German-speaking territories (except Austria and German-speaking Switzerland). Earlier there had been many German principalities, city states, and areas run by princes of the Church, loosely tied together, along with non-German regions (parts of all or Italy, Poland, Hungary, etc.), into what was called the Holy Roman Empire of Germanic Nation, toward the end with its emperor permanently residing in Vienna. And so it was only since 1871 that one can speak of "Imperial Berlin," for in that historical year (right after the Franco-Prussian War) the Prussian Hohenzollern king became the imperial ruler of United Germany (as Kaiser Wilhelm I) and his Prussian capital the imperial seat of government. Yet the author of Imperial Berlin starts his story centuries before this crucial year of 1871 and then goes far past the Kaiser's Empire and Berlin's "kaiserliche Periode" by discussing the following era of the Weimar Republic right up to its end, when Hitler's Third Reich burst upon the world scene. It thus becomes clear that the title of this book under review is misleading and was chosen for its "come-on" effect. Actually a more prosaic title, like the "History of Berlin, from its earliest beginnings to 1933," would have been more honest. But if its present title induces more persons to read Masur's book and inform themselves about his and my birthplace, I am all for it.

Boom Years

In the first chapter, called "To the Brandenburg Gate," Dr. Masur rapidly sketches Berlin's story from its humble origins on the bank of the Spree river through its rise to respectable town status under margraves, electors, and kings. By the time the Hohenzollern Frederick the Great (Friedrich II) ruled in Berlin, the then Prussian capital had begun to rival Vienna (Austria's Wien) in size and in general dynamism, due in great part to Prussia's triumph over Austria-Hungary and her allies in the Seven Years War (1756-1763).

Now the "Wiener" Holy Roman Emperors (especially hapless Hapsburg Empress Maria Theresa) could see the handwriting on the wall. The power shift from Vienna to Berlin was coming. Ironically it was Napoleon Bonaparte who dissolved the Holy Roman Empire of Germanic Nation in 1806 and thus created the prerequisites for Prince Bismarck's Second Reich. The Corsican merely delayed the power shift to Berlin by defeating both Prussia and Austria. As soon as he himself was overthrown, Prussia and its capital forged ahead again. In 1866 Bismarck's short war and quick victory over Austria relegated the latter country definitely to second place and the stage was set for the events of 1871 and the advent of the era of Imperial Berlin, at which point Masur's second chapter ends.

"Boom Years" is the heading of the next chapter. The victory over France and the creation of a German fatherland brought every kind of speculation to Berlin. The result was a booming economy, a 19th century "Wirtschaftswunder," so to speak. Everything ballooned. The army grew, a new navy arose to protect Germany's expanding trade around the globe, colonies were acquired in Africa, China, and the Pacific area. Bismarck skillfully and artificially (says Masur) propped by encouraging "New Deal" type legislation (long before F.D.R. did it here in the U.S.), placated the Great Powers, took on the Pope the Catholic hierarchy ("Kulturkampf"), the latter only with middling success, and locked horns with the burgeoning Berlin press, as in Spiro Agnew.

In his first two chapters the author went to some pains to provide the reader with the historical events which effected the rise of Berlin from simple village to imperial capital. Hence quite a bit of European history was covered. In the third chapter he begins to concentrate more on Berlin itself. In the fourth chapter he zeroes in on the Berlin society of the imperial era. The most noteworthy sections are those devoted to the rise of socialism and the possible origin of the later so virulent antisemitism. With regard to the latter phenomenon Masur cites Kaiser Wilhelm's II. frankly philosemitic attitude (in a number of instances involving political consultations, for example) while, at the same time, also pointing to the resentment caused among wide circles by the preponderance of Jews in control of banks, large department stores, the press, and the entertainment field. The visibility of the Jews at the top was paralleled at the bottom by the sight of orthodox Jews in their long black gowns, their hairlocks and beards, which irritated others just as today many Americans are by the long gowns, hair, and beards of some of our social protesters.

In the chapter called "World City. Perhaps" author Masur explains why Berlin did not produce politicians of great talent, a fact which subsequently cost Germany dearly, especially after Bismarck's summary dismissal by the young Kaiser in 1890. In "Writers, Journalists, and Scholars" Dr. Masur speaks of the trend away from Berlin among many of the great. Berlin seems to have been avoided by men like Nietzsche, Brahms, or Wagner. One great mind, however, did make Berlin his home, the novelist Theodor Fontane. To him Masur devotes nearly 15 pages. On the whole a permanent Berlin residence did not seem too alluring to most of the outstanding authors, composers, philosophers, etc., according to Masur. On the other hand, resident journalists of note were more plentiful. Very fine newspapers were the result. Yet their political influence in Berlin was negligible. To quote Professor Masur: "In a society as caste-like as that of Berlin, public opinion had a limited influence." But most impressive is the list of Berlin's scholars, among which Masur lumps the scientists. Among the latter were the Nobel prize recipients Max Planck, Albert Einstein, Max von Laue, and Walther Nernst. There are many other scholars, representing many fields. This reviewer can only list a few, such as Imperial Berlin's only great philosopher Wilhelm Dilthey (called by Ortega y Gasset the most important thinker in the second half of the 19th century). Then there are Ernst Cassirer, Heinrich Woefflin, Leopold von Ranke, Theodor Mommsen, Max Weber, Robert Kock (whose work parallels that of Pasteur), Paul Ehrlich, etc., etc. No wonder then that (among other institutions) the University of Berlin achieved world renown, what with all these greats connected with it one way or another.

City's Excellent Museums

In "Berlin and the Arts" Dr. Masur mentions the excellent museums of the city. Then he takes up the architectural scene, which was not entirely laudable. Painting and sculpture in Berlin did not soar to great peaks either. Operas, operettas, and concerts were most competently performed. But it was the legitimate stage that helped Berlin take and keep the lead aesthetically and thus make the city "the true capital of Germany, and a metropolis of the first order."

Masur lists among the topnotch theatrical directors of Berlin the unforgettable Max Reinhardt, who so brilliantly staged (right up to 1933) a gamut of classical and then current or upcoming dramas, among which were those of Nobel laureate Gerhart Hauptmann, a frequent visitor to the German capital during its imperial days and also later during the following eras. This reviewer was disappointed that Masur did not refer to some of the actors and actresses Max Reinhardt helped to prominence, like Emil Jannings, Else Eckersberg, Elsa Wagner, and so forth. But then one cannot cover everything and everyone, as Masur states in his "Epilogue." (By the way, Elsa Wagner, now in her eighties, is still vowing 'em in West Berlin today.)

"War and Revolution" recounts the history of Berlin after the fall of the German Empire in 1918. Although interesting to this reader, who lived through part of this period while residing in Berlin, this last chapter is somewhat of a let-down. Masur's "Epilogue" hints that he is aware of this. It would have pepped up the end of the book, if Masur had been less informative about the post-W.W.I revolutionary intrigues in Berlin and had introduced a more cheerful note by telling of Berlin's theaters, film productions, and sports during the Weimar Republic. Still, Dr. Masur's work is a most praiseworthy effort and this reviewer hopes that it will have many enthusiastic readers. Vivat Berlin! Imperial or not!

More help needed for handicapped

Only a small portion of the handicapped students who attend SIU need attendants to care for them, but even so, Handicapped Student Services can't provide all the attendants needed, according to Richard DeAngelis, staff assistant at the Office of Handicapped Student Services.

DeAngelis says there are two main reasons for the shortage of attendants: Students don't know of this work, and the ones who do, don't want it.

DeAngelis said during the fall, winter and spring quarters there are about 400 handicapped students attending SIU. He said they can be put into three categories of physical limitations—the wheelchair, cases, the blind and those who have handicaps not outwardly visible.

DeAngelis said that although the wheelchair handicaps need attendants more than other handicaps, they may or may not need as much of other kinds of assistance as other types of handicaps.

"You can not under any circumstances make generalizations about handicapped people," he stressed.

DeAngelis said the blind students don't need attendants. According to DeAngelis the blind students here people, called readers, to read their texts and other material for them. The majority of handicapped students who attend SIU have handicaps which are not outwardly visible.

"Their assistance comes in services such as having elevator keys, special parking, privileges and things of this nature," said DeAngelis.

There are two types of attendants who help the handicapped students, according to DeAngelis. There are part-time assistants and full-time assistants. "A part-time wage is three dollars a day, a full-time wage is six dollars a day," he said. "The difference is in the number of times the person needs assistance and what kind of assistance he needs," said DeAngelis. Both types of attendants are paid by the handicapped students, said DeAngelis.

A reader who helps blind students is paid $1.60 per hour by the blind student, said DeAngelis.

A part-time assistant may clean the house, do the laundry and get the student to classes. The full-time attendant will spend much more time with the handicapped student. He may help the student dress, feed him or perform a variety of other duties.

There is usually a problem to get attendants for all the handicapped students who need them according to DeAngelis.

"I wouldn't say it's a chronic problem, I say it's a recurring problem," he said. "It happens every fall quarter and every time we have a new group of handicapped students coming in. Well, then there is usually a shortage of attendants."

Experiments highlight Agronomy Field Day

About a dozen different crop production experiments will be observed and discussed during the Carbondale Agronomy Field Day at SIU Thursday afternoon, says D.R. Browning, superintendent of the Agronomy Research Center.

The field day program will begin at 1 p.m. at the Center on City Reservoir Road a mile southwest of the SIU Campus. Soils and crops specialists from SIU and the University of Illinois will explain the work to visitors during the afternoon wagon tours of the research plots.

Browning says farmers and farm leaders attending the field day will observe and receive information on the latest findings on using herbicides in corn and soybean production, planting dates and row spacing for soybeans and grain sorghums, denitrification loss of nitrogen in corn production, zinc and lime needs of corn, plant growth regulating materials on fescue grass, and rice production by the rice paddy system.

Arnold named as consultant for C3S

By University News Services

Richard T. Arnold, chairman of the chemistry department, has been named a consultant for the College Chemistry Consultants Service (C3S) of the American Chemical Society's division of chemical education.

The C3S program is funded by the National Science Foundation and has as its purpose the continuing upgrading of undergraduate instruction in chemistry at institutions throughout the United States.

Arnold also has accepted a second three-year term as a member of the visiting committee of the department of chemistry at Carnegie-Mellon University, Pittsburgh.

Before coming to SIU in 1969, Arnold was vice president and director of the scientific advisory board of Mead Johnson and Co. of Evansville, Ind. He has served as chairman of chemistry at the University of Minnesota, as scientific attaché in Germany, and as program administrator of the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, Arnold was a Guggenheim Fellow in 1948-49 and received the American Chemical Society award in pure chemistry in 1949.

New retarded child training method used

One effective means of correcting disruptive classroom behavior by trainable mentally retarded children is a technique of "time-out" from a reward situation, an SIU study shows.

William L. Agin, who has taught trainable retarded children for two years, made the investigation as his thesis for the master's degree.

Assisted by a psychologist, who recorded the data, Agin conducted a "time-out" experiment 15 minutes a day for 20 days with a morning class of eight children.

During the first 10 days, the investigators observed and tabulated the children's customary behavior patterns. These included up to 10 acts of physical aggression during one 15-minute test period, up to 122 incidents of verbal aggression, and up to 64 disruptive performances of physical hyperactivity (such as getting up out of the seat, talking out of turn, inappropriate laughter).

At each test period during the second 10 days, Agin gave each child one tiny candy morsel every 60 seconds as a conditioning reward but explained that it would be withheld for unacceptable behavior. Each child who misbehaved was promptly removed from his customary seat, placed in another chair in an isolated part of the room and denied his taste of candy.

By the fourth day of the "time-out" period, the three disruptive acts had disappeared—zero.

"The results showed that severe disruptive classroom behaviors of the mentally retarded child can be significantly reduced by providing consistent and immediate consequences for them," Agin wrote.

Furthermore, it lasts. Two weeks later, he conducted a follow-up test which showed "very little spontaneous recovery of the extinguished behavior," he said.

Study shows mother influences child's duty

Children tend to reflect their mothers' ideas about responsibility, according to an SIU child development professor.

Michael Zunich, chairman of the child and family department in the School of Home Economics, has conducted a "responsibility inventory" among 564 sixth grade children, including 102 American Indians, 162 Mexican-Americans, 148 Black and 152 white. Half were boys, half girls.

The children were asked to fill out a questionnaire of 25 items covering six areas of responsibility—cleanliness, care of clothing, household tasks, playing alone, children's relationship, and performance of activities alone. Each question started "At what age do you think most boys and girls could..."

There was a tendency for the boys to believe that children are about to assume responsibility earlier than girls believed they can," Zunich said. "Substantial agreement existed between mothers and children as to the ages at which one should expect children to take on particular responsibilities."

On the other hand, there was a marked difference between ethnic groups of children. In 21 instances, the American Indian children differed from the Mexican-Americans, Black and White children. In each case the Indians felt the child should be a year older before taking on the particular responsibility.

Examples of these differences included:

Wash hands and take bath without reminder or help from mother—Indian children said at 6 to 7 years of age, others said 5 to 6.

BAS seeks students for theater

By John Towns
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Black American Studies Cultural Resource Center, in conjunction with Ralph Green, a graduate student in theater, is recruiting and organizing students interested in theater, according to Milton Hill, coordinator of the resource center.

Hill said eight productions have been scheduled for the coming year but actors, singers and dancers are needed to carry out the productions.

"We also need people in apparel design or people who can sew well enough to design and make apparel," Hill said.

Green and John Davenport, a senior in theater, will be the artistic directors of the productions.

Students from the Northeast side will also be sought to participate in the productions, Hill said.

"Hopefully, the group will be a sustaining one and able to fill the vacuum in void prevailing on this campus in black arts," Hill continued.

Hill said the organizers want to provide entertainment through a black medium because there is a real need for entertainment in the black community. There is also a great need to help those students who have the ability to develop their talents and express their creativity, Hill said.

Green, who has directed and acted in several productions, appeared as George Payne, a banker from Georgia in "Tobacco Road."

Green's production for his master's degree will be "El Hajj Mali," a play about the life of Malcolm X.

Hill is asking people interested in performing in the production, to meet at 7:30 July 26 in the Cane Theater, University School. The Cane Theater is on the first floor, adjacent to Furr Auditorium.

Affirmative Action cites progress

Trustees support employment program

By Sue Roll
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Affirmative Action Programs at Carbondale and Edwardsville were given support by the Board of Trustees after reports detailing progress made in equal employment at both campuses were given at the Board's meeting Friday in Edwardsville.

Although recognizing that much more needs to be done to correct unequal employment practices for minority groups, the Board said it was pleased with the progress that had been made during the last year.

Chancellor Robert G. Lacey said the difficulties of implementing the policies of the Affirmative Action Program at Carbondale were due to the recession period and the fact that it is harder to institute change at an older campus such as Carbondale.

Explaining to the Board that although great progress had been made but that the employment situation at Carbondale is far from ideal regarding minority groups, Jerry Lacey, compliance officer at Carbondale, said, "I don't offer excuses but I do offer explanations."

Lacey said the progress in hiring civil service employees from minority groups had been very good.

He explained that goals had been set to hire 31 new persons from minority groups for each of three one-year periods.

The program is just coming to the close of its first year, he said, but already 15 positions have been filled from the first year's goal 17 positions from the second year's goal and 12 positions from the third year.

He explained that not all the positions were filled from the first year's quota because some of them were not available, but that the total of 44 new hires from all three one-year groups surpassed in numbers the goal of the first year.

Lacey reported that of a total of 2,120 academic staff positions in the University at Carbondale, 1,636 were male and 484 female.

Of the males, 1,526 were white, 39 black, 62 Oriental, 9 Spanish-American and 60 American Indians. Of the 484 females, 455 were white, 14 black, 13 Oriental, one American Indian and one Spanish-American.

Of 1,676 persons holding administrative positions 752 were male and 924 female. Of the males, 696 were white, 34 black, 18 Oriental, one American Indian and three Spanish-Americans. Of the females, 294 were white, 18 black, 10 Oriental and one Spanish-American.

In analyzing academic ranks from full professor to instructor or lecturer, Lacey reported 1,116 white males, 17 black males, 246 white females and 11 black females. All the black females held the rank of instructor. A further breakdown according to race and sex will not be available until August, Lacey said. Four per cent of the academic faculty is composed of minority group employees, excluding women, he said, with 75 per cent of the faculty being male and 25 per cent female.

Regarding civil service personnel, Lacey said minority groups were represented by approximately 8 per cent of the total work force as of May 1970 and by 10.1 per cent as of June, 1971. He said this figure should be approximately 11.5 per cent to reflect the composition of the community from which the work force is drawn.

Lacey said he was "very happy" about the progress made in employing minority group construction workers for the new Humanities Building. A target was set of 16 per cent.

Lacey said as of July 9, 73 persons were on the job of which 10 were of minority groups, bringing the percentage to 13.4.

After Lacey's report, Edwin Berry, Board member, said it showed progress. "Before the situation was terrible," Berry commented. "Now at least we've progressed to awful."

John Flamer, director of the Affirmative Action Program in Edwardsville, reported that of 1,209 males employed at the University 101 were black, 22 were Oriental and none were American Indian or Spanish-American.

This brings the total minority personnel at Edwardsville to 123, 8.43 per cent of the work force being black males and 1.99 per cent other minorities.

Of a total of 795 females employed at the University at Edwardsville, 115 were black, 4 Oriental and none were Spanish-American or American Indian, bringing the percentage of black females to 14.17 and the percentage of other minorities to 40.

Minority workers who are Civil Service personnel comprise 11.56 per cent of the total work force. Of 322 females, 299 hold clerical positions, 20 are service workers and 3 hold managing positions.

For black female Civil Service workers the breakdown is clerical, 43; service workers, 19; supervisor, 1; and professional, 2, for a total of 65. This is a percentage of 20.60 for black female Civil Service employees.

Of 381 male Civil Service employees, 18 are black bringing the percentage of black male employees to 4.7.

Berry questioned the position of seniority in determining who is to be laid off during tight financial periods, wondering if the blacks would be the first to go.

He also wondered how much priority the Affirmative Action Program would retain during the budget squeeze. John S. Rendleman, chancellor of the Edwardsville campus, said the program would "definitely be a priority, but there will be a squeeze."

Lacey said these reports were in part a response to a request by Berry for information concerning the progress of the Affirmative Action Program.

Athletes to try their diplomacy in Vietnam

By Don McLeod
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Ping Pong diplomacy can open China, a group of America's most prominent athletes think they should be able to turn the same trick in Vietnam.

Athletes like Johnny Unitas and Brooks Robinson have asked Hanoi for permission to visit and discuss American prisoners of war and men listed as missing in action.

"We're taking no stand on the war," said Carmela LaSada, coordinator of America's Sports Stars for POWs.

MIAs. "We're just trying to bring peace."

The membership reads like a sports hall of fame: Unitas, Robinson, Arnold Palmer, Joe Frazier, Joe DiMaggio, Ted Williams, Arthur Ashe, Peggy Fleming, Billy Kidd, Bobby Orr, Richard Petty, William Shoemaker, Althea Gibson, Joe Louis, Jesse Owens, Mark Donahue, Bill Muncy, John Petraglia, Don Schollander, Bill Toomey and Jerry West.

"We do not represent any political faction," the group said when it announced its formation last spring. "We are not coming as spokesmen for the American government. Our desire is to speak to the North Vietnamese as one man to another."

They sent a letter to North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong in May asking permission to go over. If they're accepted, they want to send a delegation of about five name stars on the goodwill mission.

Meanwhile, the athletes are working up a program to give a boost to the some 2,000 children whose fathers are missing or captured in Vietnam.

They plan to see that the kids get a remembrance from their favorite sports hero on birthdays, Christmas and other special occasions. They hope a kind of pen-pal arrangement with superstars will give a lift to sagging young spirits.

For the prisoners, the athletes seek some better assurances of their well being, maybe more mail, and hopefully the release of the sick and wounded.

Crockett runs well in televised meet

Ivory Crockett found himself in a very familiar scene—in the 100-meter dash and battling Kentucky's Jim Green for the finish line—at the USA-Pan African games Saturday.

Crockett, two-time AAU 100 yard dash champion and top sprinter on the SIU track team, had only been scheduled to be the leadoff man for the U.S. squad in the 400-meter relay.

But Dr. Delano Meriwether, who came out of nowhere about one year ago to become one of the country's best sprinters, wasn't able to make the trip to Durham, N.C. Crockett filled the second spot on the 100-meter dash for the U.S. team.

Crockett had a fine start but Green's loose style of running came through for him, winning the 100 a shade ahead of Crockett who placed second. Both men were clocked in 10.1.

"It was a real fine race," said SIU track coach Lew Hartzog. "Ivory's running just as well as he did in the springtime."

"A 10 F time in the 100 meters is the same as 9.2 in 100 yards," he said.

Hartzog watched the race with other Southern Illinoisans on a nationally televised replay of the meet Sunday afternoon.

Crockett came back to lead off the 400-yard relay while Green ran the anchor leg giving the U.S. another victory.

Green kept ahead of his African rival despite pulling a leg muscle in the middle of his race.

The Americans won the meet, 111-78, after displaying strength in the field events as well as the sprints.

John Craft of the Chicago Track Club, an instructor at Eastern Illinois University, led the triple jump sweep, traveling 54-1 3/4.

Crockett now travels to Miami to workout before going to Cali, Colombia for the Pan American Games next week.

'Itchy' nabs three more

The SIU baseball team was given another shot in the arm with three more athletes signing national letters of intent.

Two of the newest signees are recent Illinois high school graduates, Rick Keller of Nashville and Ken Wolf of Evanston. Dan Hinzmann of Centerville (Iowa) Junior College also signed.

Hinzmann is a left-handed pitcher who will join pitcher-outfielder Richard Ware of Chipola (Fla.) Junior College who signed earlier.

The signing of these two athletes should add more depth and strength to Saluki pitching for the next season, an arya SIU coach Richard "Itchy" Jones said needed the most help.

"They probably will strengthen pitching and replace the pitching we have lost," Jones said.

Hinzmann, a native of Lake Mills, Wis., comes from the same junior college that sent Duane Kuiper, current member of the SIU varsity team, and Ray Nygard, a former SIU player drafted by the Chicago White Sox last January.

Keller and Wolf are both outfielders. Keller was a member of this year's Nashville state tournament team which won its first game before being eliminated in the next outing. He also played basketball at Nashville which won this year's sectional at Carbondale.

Wolf batted .481 this spring to become the top hitter in Evanston's history. He was named to several all-star teams while in high school.

Cage signee pole vaults, too

Salukis may have two-in-one deal

SIU may have gotten two athletes in one with the signing of Rick Boynton last week.

The 6-2, 175-pound guard who averaged 18.2 points a game with Spencer High School in Columbus, Ga., has signed a national letter of intent with SIU basketball coach Paul Lambert.

But Boynton can jump, too. He pole vaulted in high school, with a personal record of 13-6 making him possible material for the track team.

"Rich is an extremely quick player, offensively and defensively," Lambert said of Boynton's talents.

"He has great ability to score from the outside, but his most impressive attribute is his ability to be an offensive leader."

He pumped in 1,248 points in 88 games for a career average of 14.2 during four years on the varsity squad, the last three as a starter.

Boynton scored 473 points in 26 games this past campaign and had 20 or more points in eight of those games.

Boynton may be the final link in a chain of players Lambert has signed for his freshman team which he said "has the potential to be an outstanding group."

Lambert pointed out earlier that a strong freshman team is a major factor in scheduling.

Tournaments look at a school's wearings in order to estimate how strong a varsity team will be three or more years before inviting them.

Lambert said Boynton and 6-3 Tim Ricci of West Frankfort will probably take over the guard positions while 6-5 A. J. Willis of Rolling Fork, Miss., and 6-6 Felton Chinn, a teammate of Boynton at Spencer, man the forward positions and 6-9 Joe Meriwether of Phenix City, Ala. the center position on next year's squad.

"There are still a few high school all-star games to be played yet and a few players who haven't made up their minds," Lambert said.
