Carbondale Post Office set to begin the draft registration

By Scott Canon
Staff Writer

A zero hour comes at 8 a.m. Monday at the Carbondale Post Office for men born in 1960. That's when draft registration for the 1960-1961 draft year will begin to be followed next week for men born in 1961.

Carbondale Postmaster Hubert Goforth said all post offices in the area will distribute registration forms except the main post office on West Main Street in Carbondale.

Goforth said registrants should sign up as soon as possible and fill out the draft set down by the Selective Service System to speed the process and avoid crowd lines.

Men born in January, February and March are scheduled to register on Monday, those born in April, May and June register on Tuesday, those born in July, August and September register on Wednesday; and those born in October and December register on Thursday. Those born in May and June must register on Thursday.

Goforth said that anyone unable to register earlier should do so by Friday.

Goforth said the daily schedule is voluntary but that men born in 1960 are required to register July 21-25 and men born in 1961 must register July 28-Aug. 1.

Registration got the go-ahead Saturday when Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan stayed a lower court order declaring registration unconstitutional because it does not include women.

Brennan's decision means that about 4 million 19- and 20-year-old men must register or face possible prosecution. Maximum penalty for failure to register is five years imprisonment and a $10,000 fine. Right now, the maximum penalty has never been appealed.

Carla Oikonomi, district examiner for the Carbondale Post Office, said the post office is also involved in distributing the registration forms and forwarding them to the Selective Service Agency.

Post office employees will only be able to answer questions on how to fill out the forms. Oikonomi said questions about registration cannot be answered by post office employees.

Registration forms will be accepted from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. during the two-week period at the Carbondale location of the Selective Service. Carbondale Post Office will take the forms from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., the same hours that the Herrin and Marion facilities will be 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The registration forms will ask date of birth, gender, Social Security number, current and permanent address, full name and phone number. There is also a box on the form registrants can check if they want to be contacted by armed forces recruiters.

Registrants will be asked to submit driver's licenses or student identification cards to verify identity. If registrants do not have these, they will be asked to bring two pieces of identification.

The Coalition Against Registration and the Draft is planning to hand out literature informing registrants of the alternatives to the draft. Jill Holpzman, CARD spokesperson, said she said the group will protest registration from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., Monday, at the post office.

Holpzman said CARD members will try to inform men of the importance of their decision to register. She said they will also refer registrants to the draft counseling center at the New Life Center in Carbondale.
Prosecutor says felony cases are up

More than 200 cases were filed by the Jackson County States' Attorney's office in the first five months of this year, compared to 170 in the same period a year ago, according to Schwa rz's attorney. Although the number of cases disposed of — whether through dismissals or negotiated pleas — has also increased, Schwartz said the no-plea-bargaining policy of his predecessor was responsible for the increase.

According to the office, 221 felony cases, compared to 211 in all of 1979, Schwartz said, have been disposed of so far this year. The number of cases filed was not available.

"We deal with everything that comes in the door," Schwartz said. He said his office takes on cases only when they feel they have just a 75 percent chance of prosecuting successfully. Schwartz said the new policy of plea bargaining — negotiations between law enforcement and defense attorneys prior to the entry of a plea — is what led to the higher number of cases disposed of this year. He said the office under Hood still negotiated about 40 percent of its cases. He said the percentage of cases negotiated now is much lower.

Schwartz said the no-plea-bargaining policy of his predecessor was responsible for the increase. He said the limited number of cases the office would take on Schwartz moved up from assistant states' attorney to his job in November. Hood had been elected professor in the University of Chicago, Schwartz said. The charges filed against Anderson were a major factor in the decision, he said.

"I believe that Jimmy Carter was trying to turn the real spoiler in this election," Schwartz said. Anderson was defeated in the primary election and in the general election. "We're not unduly concerned," Schwartz said, "but we're not surprised to see a major factor. Schwartz said the Anderson campaign was successful in getting the independent operating funds. Mayor Richard Fischer has suggested that only energy audits can help the city overcome problems in the city administration complex. Federal arbiter’s unavailability extends police contract dispute

By Tony Gordon

The federal arbitrator picked by city negotiators and the Carbondale Police Officers Association may not begin work on the contract dispute between the two until December. The reason: his schedule.

Because of what CPOA President Joe Coughlin said were prior commitments of the arbitrator, it could be five months before he is able to meet with both parties.

The union and city both agreed to request one arbitrator; one of a list of seven names suggested by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The service approved the request early this month.

At issue is the amount of salary increases currently 7.5 percent for police officer is $14,628. The union has rejected demands that it be given in each of the two years the contract would be gJven in each of the two years.

“If not we will do business as usual,” Coughlin said.

Coughlin said the union is holding out on the salary issue because they need the increase to keep pace with inflation, and also as a matter of principle.

“Our union is going to make a stand on the type of negotiations that the city is trying to con-duct, because the way they do things now doesn’t amount to real negotiations,” Coughlin said.

“They wait to talk money until the budget ceilings are set for the year, then they sit down and say how much we will get and expect us to be satisfied with it because it is all they can offer.”

On Feb. 4, 1980, Coughlin sent a letter to the city council complaining that the city had stalled negotiations of salary increases for the police officers until the budget ceilings were set. Calling that method “bizarre” and “subterfuge” he said the salary negotiations were supposed to have taken place before the city administration.

Coughlin’s letter said the negotiations had promoted antagonism toward the administration among CPOA members.

The union has recently retained Carbondale attorney Paul Schoen, Coughlin said, and will pay his fees from the union dues.

“We are prepared to wait as long as it takes to settle this matter, and the members are all behind our efforts.”

Negotiations for the new contract between the union and city began Nov. 28, 1979. They were broken off on May 2 when the union unanimously rejected the city’s 7.5 percent offer, Coughlin said.

The union voted to request the arbitrator on May 28.

Under the terms of the 1979 contract, the arbitrator will work with both sides in the dispute in an advisory capacity only, and his or her suggestions are not binding on either party.

For those who depend on the Daily Egyptian for information, it should be noted that we have been watching a long series of "non-review" theatrical reviews. I am referring to the reviews in which Zeno MacGarrigle ignored an excellent opportunity to make relevant remarks concerning the musical's direction, music and the roles of individual actors and actresses. MacGarrigle's reviews faulted the Summer Playhouse's production for not representing the real Mr. Eliadis as a "proven lawmaker." The intention is to lump all traditions of pro lifers as right-wing, which is unsafe. It is unfortunate that Mr. MacGarrigle can, somehow, burlesque comedy when it is performed by actors he perceives as nationally prominent performers, but I guess that is the result of his adversarial position. The Summer Playhouse has so many liberal-leaning voters still looking for a viable alternative that an assault on "Pseudolus after Zero Mostel" is not going to hurt them. The reviews are correct. The Citizens' Party consists of more than 1,000 dues-paying members; 114 a year, $10 for low income folks; eight regional organizers in the field; "chapters" in at least one-third of the congressional districts in 22 states, and prospects for getting on the ballot in more than 12 states, including all the major states. The party's vice presidential nominee is LaDonna Harris, an experienced woman political activist who heads Americans for Mad Opportunity. She is the wife of Fred Harris, former U.S. Senator from Oklahoma who sought the Democratic presidential nomination in 1976 as a "populist candidate for the American dream". The "wider, better educated, stronger for small business, the family farms and community initiatives, vigorous action against sexism and racism and a renewed commitment to human rights and home and abroad." The Citizens' Party will be immediately eligible for federal matching funds in federal elections of its campaign costs, and nearly $6 million in federal subsidies over the years until the 1984 campaign. The party is realistic in its objectives for the new election, saying that one out of eight at least 5 percent of America "not to waste their votes, and instead vote for a permanent Citizens' party for the battles of the 80's and beyond."
Draft resistance requires planning

Commentary

Editor's note—The author of this article spent almost five years in the Army, including 14 months as an anti-war writer in Vietnam, where he was wounded in action.

By Tony Gordon

Staff Writer

It requires a well thought-out plan, you can count on the plan, and if you make one for resistance is right now. You need to get to a country with a strong military service, and if you have the system figured out, the next logical steps might be.

The idea of amnesty floated above the scenes given for the war were too abstract. It was a matter of time before the people who didn't want to fight because they were impossible to hold anything against the people who did want to fight because it was impossible to plant a tree and a different kind of warfare was about. But the next war could prove to be an entirely different can of worms, even in a barrel of oil. If "Joe Sixpack" and "John Doe" stopped fighting in the '60s, and he feels the Army and Marines are needed to keep the Persian Gulf open so he can fill the gas tank every week and not have to mortgage his house to do that, it will be a different battlegame. That war will be something he can relate to, and he may well feel there is no reason to forgive and forget if you decide not to participate. If he does decide to get out one underground, bring your lunch, you could be in for a long time.

The anti-draft and anti-war movement of the 1960s era played a large part in changing this country and stopping that war. But they were no substitute for individual effort of those that sincerely wanted nothing to do with the military or the war. Study that movement and plan your attack on the draft of the 1960s, and you will beat your old brother's black armband, peace sign, and a handful of ramshackle magazines to provide all the answers this time out. Let the law, learn about the times you live in and learn about yourself. If you plan to win.

Because if you think that you can change the world in the next ten years in any way, you're either a fool or you have the world's best sales pitches for office space in lower Manhattan. You're not. So be smart, and beat the system. Go ahead, look it up.

Reagan running blind, and he's proud of it

WASHINGTON—If you are terrified or appalled, as I am, by Ronald Reagan and his thesis of American neutrality, the question about him looms larger than the many others: How far will Reagan go to appease those with whom he has no interest in appealing?

Until now, he has won votes because he has presented himself as a manly anti-war, anti-crowd cowboy quickset on the draw with sure-fire applause for his quick wit.

On Iran: "I believe Americans want a cracker at a decent job, a home, safety in the streets and a good education for their children. All while the Right hasn't a clue and the Left doesn't know the burden of those programs.

On the Red menace: "...the Soviet Union is building the greatest war machine the world has ever seen. It's an armed, negotiated agreements (under which we grow weaker and they grow stronger)."

As was said of John O'Hara, the novelist, it is easy to admire the man's style because his intelligence doesn't get in the way. Except that Reagan is intelligent. He has the curiosity to know that the current problems and confusions bedeviling America help to create odds that overwhelmingly favor the deliverers of simplistic answers as against the raisers of complex questions.

Or at least that is how it worked during the Republican primaries. Reagan's so-called anti-service answers on the press table meant more than laying out a dozen position papers on the press table.

If Reagan has changed, it is that coming into the Republican convention Reagan supporters were arguing that, sure, Reagan has a share of rhetorical excesses, but beneath all the simplistic slogans he has plenty of substance. That was not the case before the primaries. Reagan came from a background of depth, competence and integrity, where did it come from and how did he get it so suddenly? Little in his pre-political years as a movie actor, it seems to be all about the office, and Reagan suggests any sense of public service or idealism. Instead, these were two years of glorifying his resume. He would later take shape in the endless speeches about the bombing feds and the wicked Russians.

In his acceptance speech to the Republican convention last week, Reagan had two choices. Give 'em more of the "inborn dictator" and "bigger slice of the pie" rhetoric and whippers boosters into the kind of frenzy that the Right hasn't felt since Barry Goldwater's songbirds had it jumping in 1964. Or he could pose as thoughtful moderate offering position-paper thoughtfulness about his vision for a new America.

Reagan, with his training as an actor, can be counted on to try for both roles. But he will risk the scrutiny of those who, after the convention, will be asked and examine Reagan's performance, when as governor of California he was entrusted with power that was real.

Some of this scrutiny has already begun. When researchers for one of Ralph Nader's organizations examined Reagan's program for 1980, they found the promises to be "marked by groping, confusion, unforeseen consequences and occasional obfuscation for state and federal laws." In the six years since he left office, Reagan has been consistently trying to be the briskest and best.

It usually doesn't take much to uncover a Reagan distortion or deceptive statement. mint, writing in the Sacramento Bee in June, 1976, told of hearing Reagan say on national television that "In the Commerce Department, we've made a reduction of over 42 trillion rate reductions in its 85-year history," and the Commerce Department said that, in 1982, there were $100 million in figures on his $12.95 calculation. The 42 trillion decisions a year come out to more than $56 million an hour.

They are meant to be believable by Reagan's managers, is just another of the old man's harmless flourishes. It's fine that the election is coming up. But it is Reagan's turn for office. He's running blind, and proud of it—Copyright, 1980, The Washington Post.
Soybean plant is developed that resists new type of worm

By Bryan Hawkinson

A soybean plant that caused about $400,000 worth of damage in Jackson County last year has a new cousin which enjoys plants that were developed to resist its relatives.

But Oval Myers Jr., CIT-C professor of plant and soil science, who discovered the new biotype, said a new soybean plant has been developed to resist the new race.

Myers said the new race is slightly different genetically than other races of soybean nematode.

There are actually four types of the soybean nematode, and the No. 3 type has caused the greatest consternation for Illinois soybean farmers since about 1974. But plants developed to resist the worms are susceptible to the new variety, Myers said.

The nematode invades young roots and inhibits the plant from taking up water and nutrients, Myers said.

New more virile biotypes have also been found in Missouri and Arkansas. Together soybean nematodes caused $10 million damage in Missouri and $850 million damage in the United States last year. Myers said scientists do not know how widespread the new biotype is—only time will tell.

Union for student voice moves closer to reality

By Kevin Knight

Student Writer

A Union for Students, proposed by the Undergraduate Student Organization, moved a step closer to reality recently when the College of Liberal Arts approved the plan.

James F. Light, College of Liberal Arts, wrote a memo to the USO approving the union and added, "Such an organization would be in the spirit of the council of the College of Liberal Arts in the development of organizations to facilitate the expression of student opinion."

The union would be made up of a board, with each member representing one college, according to Robert Quane, USO vice president. He said the board's function would be to collect and report student concerns to the Academic Affairs Commission of the USO.

The board would also deliver the AAC's responses to the colleges, said Quane.

Nominations have been sent to the deans of SIU's nine colleges explaining the function of the union and asking for recommendations of qualified undergraduates for the board by Sept. 1.

USO suggestions on criteria for potential board members include: number of years at SIU, experience with student organizations.

Quane said that currently only district senators for Thompson Point, Brush Towers and off-campus housing on the east and west sides are the only link between students and the USO.
Special police program to end

By Karen Clare

The Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Corrections is giving to Memphis, Tenn., police officers and members of the Juvenile Court staff the opportunity to obtain a master's degree in law enforcement through a special two-year program which will be ending this year.

A funding cutback by the Law Enforcement Educational Administration and the advent of another program in Memphis, like the one here, are two reasons this unique program will end. But for the policemen who are finishing their theses, it has all been worthwhile.

reasons this unique program will end. But for the policemen who are finishing their theses, it has all been worthwhile.

The program, accredited by SIU, is organized so that Memphis police officers and staff from the Juvenile Court can take classes at the police department in Memphis, attend classes at SIU for two weeks in the summer. SIU has many resources that the local university, Memphis State University, doesn't have.

Dennis Anderson, assistant professor at the center said, "Jay Thurman, a senior scout in the tactical unit in the Memphis Police Department, said he is impressed with the program. Thurman has been attending his final week of classwork at SIU-C.

"I can't say enough about the instructors here or in Memphis. They're fantastic people," he said. "I can't get over the way the instructors at this school have gone out of their way to help us."

As a member of the tactical unit, Thurman said he handles barricades, snipers and hostage situations. But he wants to teach law enforcement at the college level," he said. "To teach, you've got to have a master's or more.

Thurman is doing his thesis on how to pick people for special weapons and tactics units. Thurman said there is no set standard of criteria in choosing SWAT members anywhere in the country. The men in this high pressure job must have certain attributes, and Thurman is doing research to document them.

Leroy Leflore is a probation officer who is getting his master's "to learn more about law enforcement and administration." Leflore expects SIU provided me with the abilities I needed to learn. I plan to go as high as I can in the criminal justice system.

Leflore said that working full-time and going to school is difficult. As a probation officer he handles 15-25 runaways a month, plus his local cases. Most of his runaways, he said, are from Chicago.

"I get them back home as soon as I can. I see to it that they get on the plane, bus or whatever."

Leflore is doing his thesis on causal factors of runaways, what factors play a role in determining if a child will be prone to leave home.

It's developer vs. environmentalist as vote on wilderness bill nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly four years after Congress set out to decide the fate of America's last great wilderness, the Senate is trying to wind up a vote on Alaska that President Carter called "the environmental decision of the century."

At stake, the 106 senators are reporters, state officials are potentially huge, adjoining towns that are badly needed. But environmentalists are also returning to the 1971 law that created a wilderness area of 6.8 million acres in the U.S. States that have no more Alaskans left on them. And there are no more wild regions that stretch for thousands of miles.

After all this time, there's still no guarantee the two weeks of debate that began in the Senate Monday will settle the issue. Votes are assured on amendments that would tear down or add to the Alaska wilderness roadblocks against oil men, hunters and developers. But opponents of the overall bill may try to stall it to death, a tactic used at the end of the 1971 congressional session.

In the meantime, however, Carter has changed the stakes on that gamble. Using his own authority, he has continued to delay the bill for up to a year — a future president. So most environmentalists have given up waiting for Ronald Reagan or someone else more sympathetic to development than Carter.

Top Alaska officials and the Senate's Republican senator, Ted Stevens, are expected to use the bill to achieve their own goals. Like the legislation's provisions ceding millions of acres to the state, and they fear continued land-use uncertainty will speed development.

The legislation itself runs several hundred complex pages, but it will be argued as a question of energy vs. environment. One side contends that Alaska is so big, 379.5 million acres of public lands, it would take a lifetime's development. The other side says that Alaska is so remote, 600,000 square miles that a little development would be a waste of time, a lost opportunity for development.
Chicago machine losing control of blacks

CHICAGO (AP) - Once considered little more than "plantation" lackeys kept in line by the Chicago political "machine" and developing a political force of their own. Even with a black population of 46 percent - and a black city treasurer, school president, transit authority treasurer, school board president, transit authority political bosses, cranked the levers and voted the way they were told. Today, black voters here are coming of political age, wearing themselves from control of the Chicago political machine - and developing a political force of their own.

Even with a black population of 46 percent - and a black city treasurer, school president, transit authority treasurer, school board president, transit authority political bosses, cranked the levers and voted the way they were told. Today, black voters here are coming of political age, wearing themselves from control of the Chicago political machine - and developing a political force of their own.

Black allegiance to the Democratic organization already was waning in the years before the death of Mayor Richard J. Daley, black leaders say, but the strong black support for Mayor Richard J. Daley, Washington says, a testament to the all-black ward leaders and the organizing ability of the Afro-American Patrolmen's Union.

The result is that independent - once scorned in the black neighborhoods - are defeating City Hall-backed candidates. In a spate of independent black candidates, independent ward leaders and Robtson, head of the Afro-American Patrolmen's Union, have made some political gains. "What is happening," said the building of a black base upon which can be built a level of achievement up to the mayor's chair."

Washington says the black vote that helped defeat Mayor Byrne into that chair also helped spark a new trend in black politics.

"Byrne's vacation is that you have to go out and do it yourself and you can do it," he said. "The election shot a little nerve juice into some black politicians.

The black community is greatly disillusioned with the Byrne administration, he said. 'We elected Jane Byrne and we see what has happened," Washington said. "We get slapped in the face."

Don Rosc, a political strategist who guided Byrne's campaign, said that although the mayor had overwhelming black voter support, her understanding of the black community is out of the 50s, which is better than Daley's, which was out of the 50s. Daley's "understanding," Rose said, was that blacks were "controllable through the plantation system."

The plantation idea was explained in a comment by the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. that was included in "Boss," a book about Daley by newspaper columnist Mike Royko.

In the book, Edwin Berry of the Chicago Urban League said that King thought Daley regarded black neighborhoods as plantations to which he appointed his people as overseers.

Rose said the image has changed but what's happening now is "just the beginning of a foothold. It'll be a long time before the muscles are really felt."

Some predict that muscle could emerge as early as 1983, with the election of a black mayor. But others say that's not enough time for blacks to unite behind a candidate who can also garner white support - essential before a black sits on the fifth floor of City Hall.

It's not a homogeneous, unified community, said Milton Rakeve, a political science professor at the University of Illinois-Chicago. "If it were they could win everything. I don't think they can put it together."
Bill Torpy, right, a junior in journalism, trades punches with a member of the Cape Girardeau Boxing Club Thursday night at John A. Logan College gymnasium. Torpy lost the fight with 27 seconds remaining in the third round. The image showed Torpy's right eye began bleeding after an unintentional butt to the head.

Four world records fall at Summer Olympics

MOSCOW (AP) — Four world records were set as competition began Sunday in the Summer Olympics. The Soviet and East German teams dominated the medal harvest in the absence of the boycotting Americans.

East German women won world records in the 100-meter freestyle and the 4 x 100-meter medley relay. A Russian pistolshooter and a North Korean weightlifter set the other two world records of the day.

Soviet swimmer Sergey Fisenko won the gold medal in the men's 100-meter butterfly event with a time of 1:59.76.

North Korean weightlifter Han Gyong Si set a world record in the snatch division of the 52-kilogram class by lifting 113 kilograms. But Si got only the bronze medal in the overall event, involving points gathered in both the jerk and snatch.

MURFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Tom Watson, displaying the fierce determination and grinding intensity that has made him the world's greatest player, fired a front-running 2-under-par 68 to grab his third British Open Golf Championship by a comfortable, 4-stroke margin Sunday.

Trevino, who had won this title in 1975 and 1977, acquired the championship of the 109th renewal of the world's oldest and most revered tournament with a 271 total, 13 strokes under par on the Muirfield links.

Only Trevino and Crenshaw had remote chances. No one else finished within nine strokes of the 30-year-old Watson, who finishedtern who the season. He retired 15 consecutive hitters in one stretch, starting in the second inning. Knepper, 8-11, took a five-hit shutout into the eighth inning, but Bonds led off with a double and Templeton followed with a triple into the right field corner. Al Holland relieved Knepper and surrendered Hernandez's game-winning hit.

Watson captures British Open title

Trevino, who won the British Open in 1972 and 1977 and tied for first this time, was third this time at 68.

Watson, armed with a 4-stroke lead when the final round started under gray, threatening Scottish skies and with the temperatures deep into the seater-weather range, stayed in front all the way.

His lead ranged from as many as nine shots to eight as the field hit strokes, more than his previous best. He was not as tranquil as the first day, winning the tournament without a hard fight.
