Deadline extended for compliance with draft-aid law

By Ginny Lee
Staff Writer

Few delays are expected in the processing and payment of fall semester federal student aid, given a 30-day extension of a grace period for male students to verify that they have registered for the draft before they can receive aid.

On Monday the U.S. Department of Education extended the grace period for the second time, from Aug. 1 to Sept. 1, giving financial aid offices more time to get verification that students have complied with, or are not required to comply with, Selective Service requirements.

Dan Mann, assistant director of SIUC's financial aid office, said Thursday that with the deadline extended, most students can expect no delay in their aid, as had been anticipated when a new law tying federal aid to draft registration took effect July 1.

The University's Office of Student Work and Financial Assistance initiated a mandatory verification policy in early July, following a Supreme Court ruling which temporarily set aside a lower court's injunction that would have barred enforcement of the law. The Supreme Court is expected to hear a government appeal to the lower court's ruling this fall.

The new extension, Mann said, will allow the office to process aid applications and make payments, without the statement on file, until Sept. 1. "It doesn't put quite the pressure and the time limit on our office," he said. "We have a whole extra 30 days to get the students' accounts updated."

"But if students don't have a statement on file by Sept. 1, then their financial aid will be backed out of their BRS accounts," he said.

The extension allows students who are expecting federal loans to wait until they pick up their loans to sign a statement of compliance, Mann said.

But the financial aid office is requiring statements on file before Sept. 1 from students who are going to receive any non-loan type of federal aid, such as the Pell Grant, before that aid will be processed, he said.

The office is encouraging all students expecting federal aid to have the statement on file within the next few weeks.

Mann said that a letter ex-

Amnesty group keeps watch on world's political prisoners

Terceiro Rodriguez, a schoolteacher and labor organizer in Peru, was apparently disturbed about the price of maize, which the Peruvian government had recently lowered. So disturbed was Rodriguez that one afternoon in March he, along with concerned Peruvian farmers, took to the streets in a reportedly peaceful demonstration against the government's action.

Perhaps Rodriguez was rash, perhaps he didn't pause to consider the consequences of his actions — or perhaps he did not realize that in Peru one does not participate in any demonstrations against a government ordinance.

Rodriguez realized soon enough.

According to Amnesty International, an international watchdog organization for human rights, Peruvian police gunned down five of the demonstrators, and imprisoned Rodriguez and 18 other demonstrators on an island, far away from his family and any hope of legal aid.

Such occurrences may seem unthinkable and unusual to many Americans, but according to Michael Bauman they are quite common. The Rodriguez case and several others like it periodically wind up on the desk of the local Amnesty International group in Carbondale, of which Bauman is the chairman.

Amnesty International, based in London, was founded in 1961 to work toward the release of "Prisoners of Conscience" — individuals being interred by foreign governments solely on the basis of their race, religion or ideas.

And since 1977, Carbondale has been the site of one of the 2,000 "adoption groups" scattered across the globe.

"We use the term 'adoption group' because we adopt a prisoner of conscience from a never-ending list maintained by the International Secretariat in London, England," Bauman explained.

The local group is composed of 20 to 25 members, with 10 or 12 active members, Bauman said. Most of the members are faculty from SIUC, with about five graduate student members and one undergraduate.

Bauman said that although Carbondale residents and University faculty and staff members are generally receptive to Amnesty International, the enthusiasm trails off considerably in the surrounding areas.

"Away from Carbondale, no one ever knows AI exists," sighed Bauman. "When they hear of it, they think it's an international group organized to plead for American draft evaders."

Bauman said there is also a noticeable lack of student interest in the group. He attributes this to general student apathy about anything unrelated to schoolwork, as well as the "abstract and vague" quality of the work done by Amnesty International.

"After all, none of us will ever meet Rodriguez," Bauman said. "We just have to go with the belief that something's going on out there. And we never know if we'll be successful or not. But if out of 5,000 cases one prisoner is freed, obviously it's worth it."

Actually, the record is better than that. Since its inception,

Nationwide heat wave kills 33

By Karen Terry
Staff Writer

The heat wave that is scorching the nation has claimed the lives of at least 33 persons and is responsible for more than 300 illnesses.

According to the Associated Press, there have been 15 heat-related deaths in the metropolitan St. Louis area and five deaths across the Mississippi River in East St. Louis.

Most of the victims were elderly people living in neighborhoods where they were afraid to open their windows, the AP reported. Temperatures caused several area have exceeded 100 degrees for three days, capping a 10-day spell in which temperatures have not dropped below 90.

In Jackson County, where the mercury rose to 103 degrees Thursday, no heat-related fatalities have been reported.

And while complaints about the heat seem to be reaching epidemic proportions in Carbondale, most residents seem to be surviving the triple-digit temperatures fairly well.

Four people have been treated for heat exhaustion this week at Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, but no serious weather-related illnesses have been reported, a hospital spokeswoman said Thursday.

The SIUC Health Service, St. Joseph Memorial Hospital in Murphysboro and Jackson County Health Department reported no heat-related complaints, and the city's "cooling-off centers" weren't doing much business either.

Spokespersons at the air-conditioned heat-relief centers in the Carbondale Senior Citizens Center and Carbondale Community Center said that only a handful of people had stopped by to cool off.

The 105 degree temperatures caused several temporary blackouts in Southern Illinois Wednesday, but no reports of power outages in Jackson County were reported to Central Illinois Public Service Co. on Thursday, according to CIPS area supervisor Jim O'Daniels.

The forecast is for continued triple-digit temperatures through the weekend, with a 30 percent chance of thundershowers Friday and Saturday evenings.

Navy to train off Nicaraguan coast

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Thursday that U.S. naval forces soon will flank Nicaragua on both its Atlantic and Pacific coasts for training exercises. Asked if he were planning to blockade the leftist regime, Reagan replied, "I would hope that eventually will not arise."

In his latest verbal barrage at the Sandinista government, Reagan said "it would be extremely difficult" to achieve a settlement of conflicts in Central America while the leftists remain in power in Nicaragua.

Replying to questions during a 15-minute session with reporters at the White House, Reagan denied that he was trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government or conduct "gunboat diplomacy." But he confirmed a report that a naval task force, similar to a carrier battle group already steaming toward Nicaragua's Pacific Coast, would be leaving the Mediterranean to conduct maneuvers in the Caribbean off Nicaragua's eastern coast.

"We're conducting exercises such as we've conducted before here in this hemisphere," Reagan said. "We've conducted them in other parts of the world, and there haven't been too many questions about that or suggesting that we're starting to try to start a war in those other areas."

Asked if he meant to say there was no political purpose in the military maneuvers, Reagan would say only, "We're conducting exercises there, and I think that there's every reason for us to do so with the responsibility we have in this hemisphere."

As to whether the United States plans a naval blockade of Nicaragua, Reagan dodged again. "A blockade is a very serious thing," he replied, "and I would hope that eventually will not arise."

Asked if he would consider a negotiated settlement in El Salvador, meanwhile, Reagan repeated his call for leftist insurgents there to lay down their arms and participate in elections.

Reagan denied a published report that his administration plans to ask Congress to nearly double U.S. economic assistance to El Salvador and sharply increase military aid to the Salvadoran regime in a $400-million Central American aid program next year.

Reagan advises further study before ending Polish sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, wary that the lifting of martial law in Poland may be only a "cosmetic change," said Thursday he is reserving judgment on whether to end U.S. economic sanctions until the impact of Poland's actions can be weighed.

U.S. officials said they will watch closely to see if most of the political prisoners seized since the imposition of martial law Dec. 13, 1981 are released, particularly the leaders of the outlawed Solidarity union movement.

"What we want to be on guard for is having a cosmetic change in which they lift, technically, martial law but replace it with equally onerous regulations," Reagan said when asked about the status of U.S. sanctions during a brief news conference at the White House.

"If that's true, then the situation has not changed," Reagan said. "I can't answer until we know whether there actually has been any improvement. We've always said ... we're going to go by deeds, not words."

Poland's military and Communist Party leadership has announced that martial law will be lifted throughout Poland on Friday.

But strict new laws and amendments to the Polish constitution give many of the same powers to the civilian government.

"The United States of course will welcome concrete progress to meet the aspirations of the Polish people," said John Hughes, the State Department's chief spokesman.

He said the specific steps taken by the Polish government will be closely studied in consultation with U.S. allies to determine "whether they have any practical, positive impact."

"In particular, we will be focusing on whether the vast majority of political prisoners are being released," Hughes said.

Hughes was asked what the U.S. reaction would be if Poland elects to keep Solidarity's leadership in jail while releasing most other prisoners.

"I cannot imagine that we would not be concerned" also about just who is released, he replied.

Poland's amnesty bill would free violators of martial law and provide for re-imprisonment if they are involved in political protests or strikes.

The amnesty measure covers all women, all people under 21, and anyone sentenced to three years or less. Those with longer sentences would have their terms cut at least in half and possibly revoked.

In recent weeks senior U.S. officials are known to have told Poland's military regime Washington is prepared "to make adjustments" in its set of economic and trade sanctions in exchange for a genuine easing of martial law restrictions.

MX backers fail to stop filibuster

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate proponents of the MX missile failed Thursday to curtail a filibuster led by Democratic presidential hopeful Gary Hart, even though deployment of the nuclear weapon has been affirmed by the House and eventual approval seemed inevitable.

The Senate vote was 55 to 41 on a move by Republican Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. to limit further MX debate, five short of the 60 needed to invoke cloture, the parliamentary state where each senator is limited to one hour of debate.

Baker said he would try again on Friday to shorten the debate, and Republican sources who spoke on condition they not be identified predicted he would win on the second attempt.

Passengers subdue armed passenger

MIAMI (AP) — A man with a knife tried to hijack a Northwest Airlines flight to Cuba on Thursday, but three passengers and a flight attendant overpowered him and he was arrested when the plane landed in Miami, officials said.

Jack Barker, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration, said Flight 714 with 90 passengers and a crew of seven left Tampa at 1:43 p.m. EDT bound for Miami. A 43-year-old man demanded to be taken to Cuba 10 minutes after the Boeing 727 departed.

The incident came one day after federal officials announced new security measures designed to stop the flood of eight successful hijackings to Havana since May 1, including two this week. Most have been committed by Cubans who fled their island nation in the Mariel boatlift and now want to return.

Reagan supports Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration concedes the number of civilians murdered in El Salvador's political violence has risen this year, but still finds that the U.S.-backed government is making a "coordinated and significant effort" to protect human rights.

That finding, sent to Congress late Wednesday, clears the way for continued military aid to the Salvadoran army in its war with leftist guerrillas. Congress has so far approved $56.3 million in arms this year, and President Reagan has requested $80 million more.

The certification was required under a 1981 law that requires the Salvadoran government to make progress on human rights and land reform as a prerequisite for continued military aid.

Doctors achieve first embryo transfer

LONDON (AP) — Doctors in California say they have achieved the world's first two pregnancies resulting from the transfer of an embryo from the body of one woman to another.

Writing in Friday's issue of Lancet, the British medical journal, doctors at the Harbor-UCLA Medical Center said one of the babies is due in about four months.

The other woman is in her fifth week of pregnancy as a result of the non-surgical embryo-transfer technique, an offshoot of so-called "test-tube" baby research, they said.

"To our knowledge, this is the first report of established pregnancies after deliberate in vivo (live) fertilization of donor women, non-surgical recovery of fertilized ova (eggs) and transfer of those ... ova to infertile women," the doctors reported.

The team of obstetricians and gynecologists, headed by Dr.

John E. Buster, said embryo transfer "is especially applicable to cases where patients have declined further surgery, have surgically inaccessible ovaries or have genetic reasons" for not wanting to use their own eggs.

In March, an Australian clinic reported a pregnancy in a woman who received eggs that were donated by another woman and fertilized in a laboratory dish. The woman had a miscarriage after eight weeks. There have been no previous reported successful attempts to fertilize an egg inside a woman by artificial insemination and then implant the embryo in another woman.

In the Lancet article, the identities of the two pregnant women were not given. In each case, the woman's husband supplied the sperm.

Although embryo transfer has been used for years in cattle breeding, fertility clinics had been hesitant to attempt it.

Buster, chief of reproductive endocrinology at Harbor-UCLA, said in an interview last year that the "principal advantage of this procedure is that it is non-surgical."

Professor Ian Craft, director of obstetrics at London's Cromwell Hospital and a leading test-tube baby researcher, said it was "far too soon" to assess the importance of the California work.

He said Buster's team "may yet show that there is a greater chance of fertilization" in the body than in a laboratory dish but more evidence was needed.

In the Lancet article, the doctors said preliminary evidence indicates the success rate of embryo transfer "may be higher" than the 20 to 25 percent now reported with the conventional in vitro fertilization technique which has produced at last 128 babies worldwide since 1978.

Central America? Ask Professor C.L. Canfield

By Kathy McClelland
Staff Writer

A group of 39 Elderhostel participants believes their teacher has just the right mix of background and expertise to be able to help Henry Kissinger in his new role as chairman of a committee studying the conflict in Central America.

And they've asked President Reagan to tap C. Lincoln Canfield, retired professor in foreign languages and literatures, for work on the committee.

"We have been very impressed by the knowledge of Central America shown by Professor Canfield," the Elderhostel participants wrote Reagan. A similar letter was sent to Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Leonard Brickman, a retired dean of adult education at Hofstra University on Long Island, N.Y., said his class of senior citizens has been learning Spanish and Hispanic culture from Canfield during the past two-week Elderhostel session.

During the session, Brickman said, class members came to appreciate Canfield's knowledge and expertise.

"Professor Canfield would be an ideal man to be on the committee. He spent much of his scholastic life in Central America. He taught in the universities there. He has vast expertise in the cultural history of the Central American region," Brickman said.

Canfield said that he was "very complimented" by his students' efforts. At 80, he has retired three times, but has been a visiting professor at Sill-C since 1970. Canfield said if anything comes of the letter-writing, it may be that he would be asked to serve in some advisory capacity to a full member of the committee.

"That's pretty much how they do those things. They have people on the committee. But other people, those with background on a topic, supply the actual information and reports," Canfield said Thursday.

The idea came about when it was announced that Kissinger would head up the committee, Brickman said.

"We all felt that Kissinger really didn't have the experience or expertise in Central America. Certainly he is no match for Professor Canfield. His knowledge is so limited compared to Professor Canfield's," Brickman said.

"We thought we should at least make the president aware of Professor Canfield. We thought we should at least recommend him," Brickman said.

Canfield said his point of view mostly goes along with the administration's position on Central America, "though not completely." And he said he feared that some congressmen are "sort of naive in dealing with Hispanic cultures. There's the tendency to think they're just like us. They see no differences. But it's not like that. It's complicated and there's much instability historically."

Canfield, a Cleveland native, spent his early childhood in the Southwest near the Mexican border. He learned Spanish as a child.

He taught linguistics and dialectology at the University of Guatemala and at the University of Mexico in Mexico City.

He was a consultant to the El Salvadoran government in 1951 and 1952 working with the University of San Salvador on a field study of the country's linguistics. Also, while in Mexico City, he was a consultant for the U.S. State Department. He has been a Fulbright lecturer at the National Linguistic Institute in Bogota, Columbia.

plaining the new law and a statement of compliance will be sent to students with their July 15 statement of accounts from the Bureau's Office. Students will need to fill out the statement and return it to the financial aid office, he said.

"Our office is hoping that by Aug. 15 most statements will be on file," Mann said. "We're really hopeful that the students will sign them and return them as soon as possible. We're interested in both getting students' aid into their accounts as soon as possible and meeting the federal regulations."

At this point, the financial aid office has an estimated 5,000 to 6,000 of the statements on file, Mann said. He estimated that between 12,000 and 13,000 students are scheduled to receive some sort of federal aid.

The statements now on file are those of students who applied for the Pell Grant, Mann said, because that application included an optional statement of compliance which most students signed.

"We figure we have very few statements from people who are receiving loans," he said, since at the time students applied for those loans they were not yet required to verify compliance.

Mann said his office must still obtain statements from the estimated 5,000 students who are to receive loans.

Will athlete aid boost help graduation rate?

MANY SIU-C athletes' off-court academic performances in recent years have been unspectacular, at best — and the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee proposes to do something about it.

The IAAC's concern came last week in the light of a disturbing report which stated that only 47 percent of male athletes and 71 percent of female athletes at SIU-C graduated between 1975 and 1977. Those are not commendable percentages for students — for the men, especially — who function not only as athletes but as representatives of the University student community at other schools.

Why do so many athletes fail to graduate? The IAAC believes that "special problems" exist for the athlete which make it difficult to complete the required curriculum in four years. Athletes are under pressure from coaches and fans to perform at their peak in their respective sports — pressure that may affect their ability to spend time on studies.

YET, WHILE A responsible athlete may find it tough to balance his or her time between studies and sports in order to graduate in four years, that is the extent of time for sports eligibility afforded by collegiate rules. And when eligibility runs out, so does the scholarship money that keeps many athletes in school in the first place.

Therefore, Seymour Bryson, chairman of the IAAC subcommittee that produced the graduation figures, proposes that athletes be given five-year scholarships and summer scholarships to help them complete their studies.

Any program that will produce a considerable improvement in athletes' graduation rates is worth consideration. And considering the pressures placed upon many athletes during their four years of eligibility, a fifth year of scholarship funding could indeed help their chances of graduation — if graduation is indeed what they seek.

A THOUSAND extra years of scholarship money, however, cannot help the student who doesn't want to be a student. Athletes must be encouraged to make significant progress academically while participating in sports, or the extra funds will go to waste.

Charlotte West, director of women's athletics, has indicated valid concerns about awarding additional scholarship funds. "We don't want special privileges. One must be careful for overproviding to select and elite students," she said.

Though the substantially higher graduation figure for female athletes has been attributed to the somewhat less intense competition in women's athletics, it is possible, judging from West's comments, that another factor is involved — perhaps the women are encouraged to study more than just a playbook.

Such encouragement is the key to improving athletes' academic record. Without it, the IAAC might as well let the University spend its money elsewhere.

NEA is right, Reagan wrong on issue of nuclear education

During the Bay of Pigs fiasco I was seven years old and in the second grade. I remember the "bomb drills" and being frightened half to death because I had no idea why I should have to get under my desk and cover my head with my arms or who Castro and the Russians were. I barely knew what war meant.

Now it is 1983 and my son is seven years old and will be in the second grade in the fall. He knows what war is because he watched the news reports last summer about the bombing in Beirut. He became very frightened one day when he saw an army truck and thought the war was coming to Carbondale. Now he has heard a lot of talk about nuclear war but he is not sure what exactly that means. The concept of the earth being totally or almost totally annihilated is almost too mind-boggling for him to grasp.

I am very much for educating people, especially school children, because it is ultimately their futures we are deciding. They should have a say in what is happening and the only way to make that happen is to be informed. I support the National Education Association, the Massachusetts Teachers Association and the Union of Concerned Scientists for having the courage to publish their booklet, "Choices — A Unit on Conflict and Nuclear War." I am absolutely against Reagan in his efforts to stifle education. — Cam McClelland, Word Processing Operator, College of Business and Administration.

Literary praise for the proud, pedaling masses

Colman McCarthy
Syndicated Columnist

WASHINGTON — In the freewheeling world of bicycles, which I enter as a bike-path commuter for half-an-hour's peacefulness in the morning and again in late afternoon, the summer talk centers on bigness.

Automobile companies, after energy-tight years of downsizing, are back to upsizing. Car owners want to uncramp themselves into movable hotels again. The trucking lobby, whose aim is the legalization of road-hogging, is pushing for wide loads to become wider. Then longer.

To my brother and sister cyclists — there are 105 million of us — I offer the suggestion that we have loftier things to discuss this summer than who are our worst menaces, car owners or truck drivers. We should put our feet on the pedals and heads in the clouds and ask: Who better praises us — the novelists or poets?

THE QUESTION is current. James E. Starrs, a law professor at George Washington University and a cyclist who common-wheeled across America three times, has just written "The Noiseless Tenor: the Bicycle in Literature."

If he has covered every transcontinental inch of our country, Prof. Starrs also appears to have gone over every line of prose and poetry written about the bicycle. Novelists who have written about what William Saroyan called "the noblest invention of mankind" range from Ernest Hemingway, Henry Miller and Stephen Crane in America to Vladimir Nabokov, D.H. Lawrence and Samuel Beckett abroad.

ALL WOULD co-sign the testimony proclaimed in widehearted fervor by a character in "The Red and the Green" by Iris Murdoch: "The bicycle is the most civilized conveyance known to man. Other forms of transport grow daily more nightmarish. Only the bicycle remains pure in heart."

For Henry Miller, the bicycle was "my best friend." For Saroyan, "as I rode my bike, music began to happen to me." Bicycling literary couples, who Starrs calls "head over wheels in love," included Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir, and Will and Ariel Durant. When Henry Adams' wife died, and the grief would not go away, he learned to bicycle at 50 "as new means of life. Nothing else offered itself." Leo Tolstoy, at 67 and mourning the death of his seven-year-old son, Vanichka, became a cyclist. He found joy again.

THE NOVELISTS are stirring, but after several hundred carefree miles of thinking about it, I favor the poets as the more lyrical singers of the bicycle. Poetry is the language of graceful metaphors, the bicycle a metaphor for graceful motion. The pairing is natural.

W.H. Auden, Dylan Thomas and Kenneth Rexroth have produced bikish verse. In "Bicycle Rider," Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota wrote a poem to his daughter, Mary, that could be addressed by any parent to a child:

Teeth bare to the wind
Knuckle-white grip on handle bars
You push the pedals on no return.
Let loose new motion and speed.
The earth turns with the multiplied
Force of your wheels.
Do not look back
Feel light on the brake
Ride the bicycle of your will
Down the spine of the world,
Ahead of your time, into life.
I will not say —
Go slow

IN THE 10 years I have been commuting, I have seen cyclists who break traffic laws, scare pedestrians and forget to look at the roadway flowers. These frenetics need a breakthrough to poetry. I know of a cyclist like this, formerly a speeder and scowflaw, who slowed up. It has already produced results: a poem and a new woman friend. He wrote this:

A cyclist's thumb sounds a bell,
a walker's heart rings back a smile.
The bell is soft,
the smile softer.
On the sidewalk between the embassies,
rowed orderly in a disordered city,
They pass on mornings
while feelings stay the day.
They stop to talk.
She of new shoots, he of old growthings.
Neither is different, this new and old.
Shared samenesses, like the miles, lie ahead.

Library doesn't deserve humiliation

This is in reference to the letter in the July 20 DE entitled "Library owes me an apology."

On a couple of occasions, the theft detection machine has mistakenly buzzed for me. On those occasions I was treated very politely and speedily. I also happen to know many of the employees at Morris Library and find it very hard to believe that they would ever act in the fashion described by Mr.

Since Mr. Tsuda says he is not interested in an explanation on book theft frequency, or the justification for the machine, I recommend he take his injured self-esteem and over-inflated ego and find another library to harass. Morris Library does not deserve this humiliation and ridicule. — Todd Benedict Senior, Political Science.

Brehm Prep School meets special needs

Winston Churchill had one. Thomas Edison did, too. And so did Woodrow Wilson.

They had learning disabilities.

A LEARNING disability is a handicap condition that affects the way individuals process information, the most familiar one being dyslexia, according to Lynne Rocklage, administrative director at the Brehm Preparatory School.

"Students who are learning-disabled have average to above-average intelligence, but they have difficulty understanding the world around them," she said.

Brehm Preparatory School at 1245 E. Grand in Carbondale was designed to meet the needs of learning-disabled students and is the only one of its kind in the Midwest, Rocklage said.

"IT'S SORT of a collective dream," she said.

There are many schools like Brehm on the East and West coasts, but it is difficult for parents to send their child thousands of miles from home, she said. Carol Brehm of Mount Vernon had been sending her 17-year-old dyslexic son to the schools in the East and wanted to have a school to meet the needs of the learning disabled in the Midwest, she said.

Mrs. Brehm and some of the school's staff members, Rocklage said, "shared the dream together and decided to build this facility."

"MRS. BREHM chose to place it in Carbondale because of the closeness to the University and because the town centers around the University."

Historically, learning-disabled students have not been directed toward college, she said. But Brehm has college preparatory training available for students with college as a goal, and five Brehm students are enrolled for the fall semester at SIU-C.

Being near a university helps the students feel at ease in a college environment and let's them know they are no different from any other student,

Rocklage said.

Brehm School will begin its second year of classes in August. Construction began in May 1982 and the school opened for classes in late August.

"WE WERE a cornfield before May 11 of 1982," Rocklage said. "It went up literally overnight."

The school is open to junior high and high school students and some high school graduates who want to further develop their skills before entering a vocation or college, Rocklage said. The students, who range in age from 12 to 21, are not only from Illinois. Currently, Brehm has students from 15 states and Canada.

Brehm's 13 staff members are certified degree instructors and experienced in secondary and learning disability education, Rocklage said.

"We do not have a watered-down academic program. We run a very rigorous academic program," Rocklage said. "It's not a matter of watering it down so they can understand. It's a matter of delivery."

BEFORE STUDENTS are accepted into Brehm, they are given a two-day, in-depth comprehensive psychological test to measure intellectual functioning, academic achievement and, most importantly, the strategies used for processing information, Rocklage said.

"These are not difficult kids to work with," she said. "But they do require a very individualized, very structured instructional program."

That means paying attention to perceptions of sight, hearing, muscle and touch. The more channels that are used, the better the recall and the better the learning, she said. This idea is adapted to the classroom — students are encouraged to take notes in class and to record lectures, making use of two channels.

"WITH ANY student we may try 20, 30, 40 ways to get the information across, but, by jove, we'll find the way," Rocklage said.

About 25 percent of those who apply to to attend SIU-C full-time as a business major in the fall.

the school are not appropriate for Brehm, and in those cases the school will act as a referral to find a place that can meet their needs, Rocklage said.

The new facilities at Brehm offer some things not common at learning disability schools, such as a darkroom, science and woodworking labs, Rocklage said. Students take courses in English, math, social studies, microcomputers, drafting, typing, biology, chemistry, physical education and other content areas, Rocklage said. A regular school day includes six hours of classroom instruction and two hours of evening instruction with a tutor.

THE CLASSROOMS at Brehm are purposely small, Rocklage said, to minimize distraction, but also to serve as a reminder that classes are to be kept small. No more than six students are assigned to one teacher in any content area, but "if a student requires one-to-one, we provide it," she said.

Susan Freiburger, a teacher at Brehm, said that the coursework is individualized to meet each student's needs.

"Our purpose is to increase skill areas that are deficient," she said.

THE SCHOOL emphasizes a "life-skills" curriculum, both in the classroom and in living arrangements. Students learn practical skills such as installation of a wall socket and how to budget and bank.

THE FLOOR plans are the same in Brehm's four dormitories and two classrooms to help minimize space confusion, which can be a problem of information processing, Rocklage said.

Chores in the dormitories are divided and rotated among the students. Teams of students take cooking duties for a week, and they clean the lounges and their own rooms, she said. And as in most dormitories, students personalize their rooms to give a "home-like" environment.

This fall Brehm will be at capacity. Each of the four dorms will have 12 students and a married couple who act as "houseparents."

LAST YEAR the school had about 30 resident students and five "day students" from the Carbondale area. Summer enrollment has been about 12 resident students and 12 day students.

The school is situated on 8½ acres, and long-range plans include expansion to 19 buildings with about 120 students in residence, Rocklage said.

LEARNING DISABLED people can be independent by learning to adapt, she said.

"You don't cure a learning disability. You learn to cope with it and compensate for it. It doesn't go away," Rocklage said.

The small-group setting and individual attention approach to education is expensive, Rocklage said, but it reaps the greatest results.

MANY FAMOUS people have overcome learning disabilities, she said. "We know it can happen," she said. "The entire theory of the program is that education is the most important form of therapy."

New library open for business; patrons seem pleased with it

By William Jason Young
Staff Writer

Carbondale's new public library is now open.

After two weeks of moving the 55,000 volumes and other things to a new building, the library opened its doors this week.

The library has a lower level floor and an upper level floor with a small staircase linking them.

Ray Campbell, director of the library, said that during opening day, an estimated 500 to 600 people visited.

"We anticipate more people to visit the library in the next few days," Campbell said. "It has just been opened for a few days. The new library will definitely attract more people."

Construction began in April 1982 and was completed about a year later. The new facility, costing about $1.4 million, covers 18,000 square feet at 405 W. Main St.

The cost of moving the books and other material was minimal with the rent of only one U-Haul truck and the hiring of two temporary workers for six days, Campbell said. The total cost was $500, he said.

"The library staff helped a lot in the moving," he added. "We were able to minimize moving expenses."

The library has 17 staff members, half of whom work part-time.

New facilities include microfiche and microfilms. The old building had no such facilities, Campbell said.

A new computerized circulation and cataloging system has also been installed. The system was scheduled to be hooked-up to the Shawnee Library System Wednesday, he said.

"We also have carrels for individual studies," Campbell said. "And there's also more space to move around and to browse."

The new parking lot can accommodate up to 50 cars.

New furniture and bookshelves were already in the building as part of the construction contract, Campbell said.

The library operates on a $250,000 annual budget. The biggest share of the budget is for staff salaries, he added.

Most of the visitors to the new library said they like the new facility. Deedra Crumble, 7, said she likes the library because "it's bigger and better than the old one."

"They even give us paper for sketching," Deedra said. "And I also like the new library because it's closer to my home which is just next door." Wilbert Woods, a graduate student in communications, said he likes the new library because it's much more spacious and comfortable than the old one.

the Carbondale group has procured the release of seven out of 13 prisoners around the world, Rodriguez being the most recent.

And how does a tiny body of largely unknown people manage to sway the heavy hands of foreign governments? The secret, according to Bauman, is in letter-writing. "Writing letters is our most useful tool because by doing so we apply international peer pressure to the government in question," Bauman said. "We write letters showing that the incarceration of the prisoner is contrary to their own constitutions, or we remind them of the United Nations declaration of human rights."

"Often, these governments would like to make themselves look better to the rest of the world," he said. "Or they think, 'hey, if this person I've imprisoned can actually cause us to be bombarded with all these letters from other countries, he must have some value,' and they set him free."

When the group is not writing letters, it is sending money. Rodriguez' family received $200 from the group during his imprisonment, which was collected from the $10 annual dues of group members. Any money left over is spent on stationery. Bauman explained that the group is always in need of funds, since the International Secretariat demands a $450 annual assessment, used for research and publications.

Though the Rodriguez case ended happily, not all cases do.

Cervical cancer linked to smoking

CHICAGO (AP) — New medical research bolsters evidence that female smokers have more than three times the risk of developing cervical cancer or other reproductive problems compared with non-smoking women, doctors say.

Ex-smokers reduce their risks of cervical cancer, while smokers who average a pack of cigarettes a day for more than 12 years are more than a dozen times more likely to develop cervical cancer than non-smokers, the researchers said in Friday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"We can now add cervical cancer to the list of tobacco-caused diseases," said an accompanying editorial in the journal by Dr. Donald F. Austin of the Department of Health Services in Emeryville, Calif.

While several previous studies have suggested an association between smoking and cervical cancer, only two have validated a cause-and-effect relationship, Austin said.

Michael Bauman

Bauman said the local AI has worked on behalf of four imprisoned South Korean students for two years with no success at all. And, in a disturbing case concerning manufacturers in the United States, only Partial success was achieved.

"The group discovered that a business in Florida had an agreement with the South African government to sell them electric cattle prods," Bauman said. "These instruments are a well-known weapon of torture to Amnesty, usually applied to the genital area of the victim," Bauman said.

He said the group wrote of the sale to Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who protested the deal. Although licensing of these deals was consequently stopped, the sale still went through, Bauman said.

Even the U.S. government is monitored by Amnesty International.

"No nation in the world is without political prisoners — all of us have improvements to make. However, if America has any political prisoners, I am not aware of them, because such cases are off-limits to me. As soon as I start speaking about AI, people pipe up. Hey, America has political prisoners too! Members of Amnesty are not allowed to intervene in cases in their own country."

Amnes's International has a policy of non-alignment, so as not to hurt their credibility in any nation. But there is a saying that no organization can be completely impartial, and Bauman said that the same applies to AI, on the issue of northern Ireland.

"No matter how hard you try, you cannot be totally dissolved from government influence," Bauman said, explaining that the lack of an AI policy on Northern Ireland could stem from the fact that the International Secretariat is based in London, and subject to the policies of government there.

However, Bauman said that the reason may also lie in the fact that "there is a hell of a lot of violence involved." It is a firm policy of the organization to reject any case where the prisoner was involved in violence, whether for aggressive or defensive reasons, he said.

For the moment, the AI group in Carbondale intends to concentrate on getting local labor unions involved in the cases of some of the prisoners.

"Many of the prisoners we come across are labor organizers, whose unions were squelched because they were too outspoken," Bauman said. "Our labor unions can add clout to our petitions. They ought to be concerned with labor organizations in Chile or wherever."

And as for Rodriguez, Bauman said that they will have to monitor him for the next six months to make sure he is safe. "They can always grab him again," he said.

Corporations help pay his way

Meet SIU-C's 'Mr. Roboto'

By William Yong
Staff Writer

The second Industrial Revolution is already here, but many people are still unaware of it. It's here in the form of computers and robots.

So believes John McLuckie, Technology Department faculty member, who also says that the computer age actually arrived 20 years ago.

McLuckie's observation on American industry is that the trend is marked by a change towards "CAD-CAM" — computer-assisted design and computer-assisted manufacturing.

Robots are a part of the "CAD-CAM" revolution, he said.

Robots and the technique of operating them are being taught by McLuckie in a new course — Industrial Technology 455. The course was started last semester with 23 students.

The teaching of robotics at SIU-C was made possible by substantial contributions from several institutions. About $14,000 was raised from grants from four companies: American Can Foundation of Connecticut, Deere & Co., Terrin, John Deere and Co. and Caterpillar Tractor Co. The Society of Manufacturing Engineers contributed $10,000 and SIU-C gave $10,000.

Most of the money was used, in 1981, to purchase a $32,000 three-jointed industrial robot designed by Unimation Inc. of Cincinnati. The robot is a Unimate PUMA 500. PUMA stands for "programmable and universal machine for assembly."

McLuckie said that Dale Besterfield, former chairman of the department, was instrumental in getting the money to buy the robot. Besterfield is on sabbatical and will resume the chairmanship Aug. 16.

"The actual cost of the robot is $45,000," said McLuckie, who first taught the course under independent studies. "Unimation gave us a surprise."

Nixon threatened Ford to get pardon, according to article

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Richard Nixon threatened to publicly reveal his claim that President Ford promised a pardon in exchange for the presidency if Ford did not grant him a pardon, according to a report in The Atlantic.

Writing in the magazine's August issue, author Seymour Hersh reports that Nixon telephoned Ford with the threat on Sept. 7, 1974, the day before he was pardoned. Ford denied he received such a call and the White House logs do not show it, the article states.

Hersh wrote that "Nixon's message was blunt, according to those few White House aides who knew of the private call: if Ford did not grant him a full pardon, he, Nixon, was going to go public and claim that Ford had promised the pardon in exchange for the presidency, because Ford was so eager to get it."

Those aides were not identified. Hersh wrote that "Ford was enraged by the call."

Hersh quoted an unidentified former Ford aide as saying "He'd made his decision already and here comes the guy stirring it up. He was very very irritated; he really resented it." The article quotes another unidentified former White House aide as saying Nixon had no "leverage" on Ford. "Going public wouldn't have done him (Nixon) any good."

Hersh also wrote that the question of whether a deal was struck between Nixon and Ford "may never be known, because the men involved have yet to give a full account."

Hersh is the author of a recent unflattering biography of Henry A. Kissinger, secretary of state under Nixon and Ford.

reduction." The robot, which McLuckie nicknamed "Hal" from the movie "2001, A Space Odyssey," is electrically powered and it can rotate 360 degrees. It is attached to a three-foot wide stand and the arm moves in and out as well as up and down. It can extend up to about nine feet high.

The use of robots in manufacturing industries has many benefits," McLuckie said. "They result in better quality products, they are more precise and productive and they don't get injured by machines like humans do."

In addition, the use of robots is cost-effective and increases production, he said.

It may cost $20 per hour, including fringe benefits, for a company to hire an assembly line worker to do a certain job," he said. "The robot, which costs about $6 per hour to operate, will mean a savings of $14 per hour."

In addition, robots work around the clock without holidays, vacations, sick leave, personal days off, coffee breaks or overtime pay, he said. They don't get tired and they don't need to sleep, he added.

The Technology Department owns one industrial robot and four smaller robots. The smaller robots, used for instructional purposes, cost $1,700 each. During each class session, the robots are used for between six and 10 hours.

"Last semester, our main problem was operating with only one computer link-up," McLuckie said. "Now, we have 20 computer keyboards linked to the robots to store and relay information."

The robots are relatively inexpensive to operate and maintain. He said that if a major breakdown occurs, which he does not anticipate yet, it may cost $300 to repair.

Robots are especially suited for use in hazardous job conditions and for repetitious tasks. "Most robots in the United States are utilized in automobile production factories," he said. "Jobs such as spot welding, precision painting and miniature bolt placement are better performed by robots than by humans."

Although there are many advantages in using robots, a robot may take the place of three or more workers, thereby contributing to unemployment. McLuckie said there's nothing much the industries can do about the trend.

McLuckie said he is more concerned about the attitude of American businessmen who he said are too conservative.

"The United States is way behind Japan in the use of robots, computers and automation in the manufacturing industries," he said.

"While Japan put together the concept of automation a long time ago, the United States is just beginning to do the same."

McLuckie recalled a joke he once heard that illustrates his point: Americans always announce they have invented something new. The Russians argue that they invented it six years ago. The Japanese say they will put it on the shelves within six weeks.

"American businessmen look only at the immediate and short-term benefits," he added. "The Japanese always think on a long-term basis."

However, he does not believe that being behind Japan in the use of automation is the greatest threat facing American manufacturers.

"The greatest threat is the cheap labor found in Taiwan, Korea, South America and Southeast Asia," he said. "This is the $1.34 an hour wage that the American economy must compete with."

Playwrights to display talents

By Terry Levecke
Staff Writer

The talents of four SIUC graduate playwright students will be showcased next week in the 10th season of the Playwright's Workshop.

The workshop, directed by theater faculty member Christian Moe, offers not only playwrights, but also directors and actors, the experience of dealing with the developmental process involved in staging new plays.

"Professionally, plays are developed through readings, then productions," Moe said. "That's essentially what we do. It gives the students an idea of what the process is about."

The plays offer a wide variety of themes, such as the experience of growing up in a black ghetto, the shedding of personal inhibitions and trials and tribulations of personal relationships.

The workshop company has 31 members from theater, speech communications and radio-television departments, along with a few visiting theater students. The full scale productions will include costumes, sets and a new stage design, Moe said.

"The Waldrup Fantasy," by Cindy Totten, will be the first play, performed in the Laboratory Theater on July 24 at 3 p.m. Totten is working on her Master of Fine Arts degree in acting and directing.

The play tells the story of a timid librarian who is locked in a department store overnight with a night watchman and two sales girls. The night becomes an experience for the librarian of unloosening inhibitions, indulging in her fantasies and discovering her real self.

Ken McCoy, also a graduate theater student, is directing the play. A directing problem he has to overcome, he said, is to create some action in a script that involves a lot of storytelling.

"I have to find things to organize into a sub-plot, like making a harmony for a melody," McCoy said.

Jeffery Elwell, playwright of "Stepping Out," said producing a play is a combination of "pain and pleasure."

"It feels good when people laugh at lines that were intended to make them laugh, but there's pain in seeing things that didn't come off the way you planned," Elwell said.

"Stepping Out" is a one act comedy "about relationships and suicide," Elwell explained. "It's about jumping from one thing to another in relationships as well as the metaphor of jumping from a ledge."

The plays produced in the workshop have the possibility of going further than the Laboratory Theater, Moe said. One of the plays produced in the '70s made it to the national finals of the American College Theater Festival.

The Theater Department operating committee is considering sponsoring "Break Away" by Leslie Sloan, for this year's festival.

"If it looks good, the department will try to get it sponsored for the festival," Moe said. It would then be entered in the regional competition and if it makes it to finals, it would be performed in the Kennedy Center in Washington.

Shirlene Holmes is directing "Break Away," which tells the story of three black women who have been in prison for 10 years, each on a murder charge, and now up for parole.

For Sloan, seeing a director's interpretation of her play has had a very positive effect.

"She's bringing in a lot of different ideas," Sloan said of Holmes. "She has made the play a lot better."

"The Audition," by Brenda Major, explores two aging black actresses. One is 69 and the other is 71. Both have been in competition with each other for the past 50 years and are now facing their last audition.

While practicing backstage for the audition, the actresses reminisce about the roles they played when they were in their 20s. For the actresses playing the parts, this is a real challenge, Sloan said.

"It's very difficult first to get 20-year-old actresses to play a convincing 70-year-old, and even more difficult to have them revert to their 20s."

The play is funny, but then again it's not, said Major.

"The play explores the types of roles these black women have played, which was a lot of stereotypes," Major said. "They come to realize that their lives have revolved around the characters they've played and they decide to try to become individuals."

Another of Major's plays, "The Last Word," will be aired on WSIU television on July 27. The audience plays an important part in the shaping of the plays, Moe said.

"The audience helps gauge the strengths and weaknesses of the plays," Moe said. "It's also helpful to the actors. It's the kind of thing I think the theater department should be doing." There is a four-day interval between the first and second performance of each play in order to fine-tune it, Moe said.

"The Waldrup Fantasy" will be performed July 24 and 31 at 3 p.m. "Break Away" is scheduled for July 25 and Aug. 1 at 7:30 p.m. "The Audition" and "Stepping Out" will be performed July 26 and Aug. 2 at 7:30 p.m. All performances will be in the Laboratory Theater in Communications Building and are free.

Soviets to release Greenpeace members

WASHINGTON (AP) - Soviet authorities who detained seven members of the Greenpeace environmental movement after they tried to mount an anti-whaling campaign in Siberia have agreed to let them aboard the vessel that brought them from Alaska, the State Department's chief spokesman said Thursday. In Vancouver, British Columbia, meanwhile, Patrick Moore of Greenpeace Canada said the ship, the Rainbow Warrior, will leave Nome, Alaska, at 2 a.m. EDT and rendezvous with a Soviet ship carrying the seven in the Bering Sea, 18 hours steaming time from Nome.

"The Soviet government has agreed to allow the Greenpeace vessel, the Rainbow Warrior, to receive the six Americans and one Canadian presently being held," said John Hughes, the department's spokesman.

In Moscow, U.S. embassy spokesman Rick Ruth said U.S. diplomatic officials were told by the Foreign Ministry that the seven members of the Greenpeace group will be released "as soon as the appropriate arrangements can be made."

Officials wait for victims' accounts of shooting spree

JOLIET (AP) — Investigators hope soon to be able to question two sedated and heavily-guarded survivors of the weekend shooting spree that claimed four lives in Will County.

Without the eyewitness accounts of those victims, law enforcement officials said, they have little to go on. Auxiliary Sheriff's deputy Denis Foley, 50, remained in critical condition and Laura Troutman, 21, in fair condition Thursday at Silver Cross Hospital in Joliet.

Also Thursday, the Joliet Herald News reported that one of the four people killed in an ambush of three cars last Saturday near Lockport had been indicted.

Victim Richard Paulin, 32, of Lemont, was to be tried on felony drug charges in Will County Circuit Court in September, the newspaper said. A co-defendant, Kenneth Overman, 34, of Woodridge, pleaded guilty and was sentenced in June 1981 to a seven-year prison term for delivering heroin to undercover narcotics agents in May 1981, the report said.

The Will County State's Attorney's office, which is overseeing the investigation into last weekend's killings, refused to comment on the charges against Paulin.

Also slain in the ambush were Steven Mayer, 22, of Joliet, a safety patrol officer for Will County; Cathleen Norwood, 25, of Lemont, a passenger with Paulin; and George Kiehl, 24, of rural Lockport.

Investigators are trying to solve the crimes and determine whether they are linked to five other killings in the vicinity since June 25.

"All we've got so far is speculation," said Will County Chief Deputy Ted Kelly.

He said bullets from the ambush slayings, and from the Sunday murder of 18-year-old Anthony Hackett of Emden along Interstate 55 near the Kankakee River, are being studied by a forensic expert to determine if they match.

The Chicago Sun-Times has quoted unnamed police sources as saying that ballistics tests have established a possible link between the ambush slayings and the earlier shooting deaths of a couple in southwest Cook County.

The newspaper reported in Thursday's editions that a spent bullet that killed both Terri Lynne Johnson, 19, of Joliet, and Kenneth Chancellor, 33, of Lockport, on the Fourth of July weekend was too damaged for positive identification, but that its markings were "very similar" to bullets recovered in the weekend slayings.

Power failure leaves officials in the dark

A power blackout that left the Student Center without lights for over four hours Wednesday has been blamed on a short-out in a main electrical line. Physical Plant Director Tom Ingram said Thursday.

Physical Plant employees restored power about 8:30 p.m. Wednesday by connecting the building to another major electrical line, said Ingram, but had not yet found what caused the short-out.

The building was closed at 7:30 p.m. when workers were unable to restore power, which failed at 4:08 p.m.

Ingram said a study was being made to determine whether it would be cheaper to repair the damaged electrical line or replace it with a new one.

Astrology is simply cosmic for this star-gazing 'old hippie'

By Cynthia Rector
Staff Writer

Bob Felix is willing to talk to anyone about astrology.

A homemade advertisement posted in Makanda Java states that he'll chart anyone's horoscope "for free, or for bread if you prefer."

If referring to American dollars as bread sounds like leftover '60s jargon, it's probably fitting.

"It's okay if you want to refer to me as an old hippie," said Felix, who usually wears his long hair tied up in a pony tail.

Felix recently purchased a house in Carbondale, a city he's been "in and out of" for years.

Wednesday evening, he sat on his porch, looking over his recently planted yard filled with shrubs and flowers of dozens of varieties. He let his fan blow in his face and talked, not about himself, but about his hobby, astrology.

"Astrology is just something I picked up along the way," he said. It's also something he thinks is often misunderstood.

Felix doesn't believe in letting one's astrological charts or predictions rule one's life.

"You should always use your best judgment in a situation," said Felix. "And sometimes the best is limiting the influence of astrology."

Felix will not say exactly how long he's been preparing charts.

but he said the process has become second nature to him.

"It only takes me about 15 minutes to write it down, once I have the information," he said. "There's nothing to it once you've done a few of them."

The information a person needs to give Bob is the time, date and place of birth. The astrological chart is a marking of where the planets were at this moment in time, attaching certain given values to the positions of the planets and the sun and, finally, correlating them with personality traits and strong influences of the individual.

"Astrology, you see, is the study of time," Felix said.

Astrologers view birth as the most influential factor in the formation of a person's traits because it is the moment of the first breath, he said.

In Eastern philosophy and Indian religions "breath is associated with consciousness," Felix said. And so, astrologers assume a person is very vulnerable to environment, including the pull of the surrounding planets, at that time.

"The planets don't have pulls that make us do things; they only give us a general picture of what a given moment is like," Felix said. "It's neither here nor there, as far as religion is concerned."

The fifteen minutes Felix spends charting a horoscope usually follows a standard procedure, however, discussing a horoscope with someone is always unpredictable.

"Sometimes I tell people things that really ring true for them," he said. Usually, people's reactions are positive. Most of the time people are struck by the way things seem to fit in with their own lives.

"Some readings go smoother than others," he said. "Some people are naturally more mature than others, more sensitive, quicker, more confident or whatever."

"There's nothing cut and dried about interpreting a chart. Sometimes you're more clearheaded and insightful than others. That's just how life is."

Bob says he does charts because "they're easy to do and sometimes they're interesting."

Bob says people often ask him if he believes in God. The answer, he said, is "yes."

"But I'm not selling God," he said. "It'd be a little ridiculous to try. I couldn't very easily see myself promoting any sect or method of seeking."

"I tell people to be honest and good and do what they think is right and that's it. One of my most consistent themes is that if you search for the right things, you'll find them."

U of I to fight trademark pilfering

CHAMPAIGN (AP) — The "Fighting Illini" have come out fighting.

Manufacturers and merchants who profit from the sale of team emblems and trademarks without consent from the University of Illinois Athletic Association can expect to hear from the association within the next year.

In the past year and a half it has registered the name "Fighting Illini" and several trademarks with the Illinois Secretary of State's office. The move gives the association control over the use of its athletic name, portrayals of its mascot Chief Illiniwek, and emblems identified with the "Fighting Illini."

Those who make or sell products displaying the team name or emblems must have the association's approval, said Tom Porter, assistant director of athletics at the university.

Porter said the association sold about $400,000 worth of T-shirts, mugs, cups, caps and other items bearing the "Fighting Illini" name and team trademarks in the past year.

But Porter said there is a lot more money to be made.

"We've been losing a considerable amount of money on this. We weren't getting anything for it," Porter said of the businesses that capitalize on the "Fighting Illini" products.

Worldwide spending on products bearing college and university names and emblems exceeded $100 million last year, according to some estimates.

Porter said the athletic association has agreements with 24 manufacturers, primarily in the Midwest, to earn some of the profits made on the "Fighting Illini" name.

"We try to deal directly with the manufacturers," Porter said. "We come to an agreement and then they pay us royalties. Basically it's the same for everyone — six percent of the wholesale (price)."

Porter said the association is near agreement with one of several newer companies specializing in helping colleges and universities fully exploit sports merchandising.

Steve Crossland is executive director of International Collegiate Enterprises, or ICE, of Northridge, Calif. ICE centralizes means for setting agreements with manufacturers and retailers of products displaying team names and insignia.

"Our job is to see that the university receives something for the use of its name," Crossland said.

The former University of Southern California Bookstore director entered the field of sports merchandising rights when he realized USC products were displayed "everywhere" without the university profiting from them.

Crossland said the future will bring more expansion in foreign markets.

He also said that merchandising packages will grow from individual to groups of schools, perhaps in various conferences.

Chicago desegregation ruling causing problems nationwide

Sharon Cohen
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — For a tiny band of Choctaw Indian children in the dirt-poor hills of Mississippi, Chicago's desegregation dilemma could determine when they learn English.

And for hundreds of Iowa children of blue collar workers who got a slow start in life, the course of school desegregation here could decide whether they keep pace with their classmates.

That's the government's argument in a complex legal battle resuming Friday between the Reagan administration and the Chicago Board of Education.

That government is accusing a judge — and indirectly the board — of creating chaos for tens of thousands of children, from the Virgin Islands to Idaho, who are unwitting participants in the battle.

The board's response: the government is responsible for any chaos.

At issue is a Chicago judge's June ruling that the government broke its legal promise to help pay for desegregating the city's schools.

U.S. District Judge Milton Shadur's ruling — now being appealed — directed the government to find more than $14 million for that purpose for 1983-84 and to set aside $250 million for possible distribution in the next five years.

But the ruling stretches beyond Chicago's 432,000 public school students because it also temporarily barred federal officials from spending tens of millions of dollars.

That money — which legally has been available to local school boards for desegregation — has been allocated for projects such as school repairs in the Virgin Islands, community relations programs in Pennsylvania, women's history programs, desegregation planning, reading help for children in Waterloo, Iowa, and hundreds of other programs.

Both sides will appear in court Friday as Shadur decides whether to grant the government request for a stay on his ruling, pending appeal — a step that could free about $55 million in funds against the board's wishes.

The government says the ruling is devastating. It also contends that the judge overstepped his authority and says it will not abide by Shadur's order to also seek extra money to meet its Chicago commitment without hurting other districts.

School board counsel Robert Howard says if anyone is to blame, it's the government.

Federal officials are "going to let these people become hostage," he says. "They're not only being stone-hearted, they're in violation of a court order (to look for extra money)."

"If (Education Secretary T.E.) Ted Bell is sitting on his hands in the face of a court order that mandates action on his part to find money on the part of his students, ... then the responsibility is purely his."

Shadur also has not appeared sympathetic to the government's presenting hundreds of pages of affidavits from schools telling how disastrous a cutoff in funds would be to them.

On Tuesday, he told the government because it hasn't looked for extra money, it "can scarcely lay the resulting impact on other prospective recipients at this court's doorstep. In fact, it can't lay that impact here in any case, for this court looks to the United States only to do what it promised to do but now tells us is a promise that is empty of content."

While the fight over Chicago desegregation may not be resolved soon, the threatened cutoff of money has created havoc for scores of school officials.

Because the government has warned them it may not be able to fund them beyond mid August, schools don't know whether they can fulfill contracts, planning is being disrupted, there may be no money to purchase materials, and there is a fear veteran teachers will look for new jobs.

Although many areas, such as the Choctaw reservation in Philadelphia, Mississippi, receive only a small amount of federal funds, it can mean the difference between education success or failure.

Nearly 90 percent of the children on the reservation speak no English when starting school and a federal program puts a Choctaw-speaking translator in primary-school classes.

First U.S.-born panda lives only 3 hours

WASHINGTON (AP) — After seven years of hope, Ling-Ling gave birth to America's first panda cub Thursday morning, but within three hours the baby died, cradled in its mother's arms.

Ling-Ling clung to her cub throughout the day, as National Zoo workers looked on with sorrow.

The cub, which at first appeared normal, was born in the panda cage at 3:18 a.m. It was the sixth giant panda born outside China.

"At 6:30 a.m., the young panda seemed to stop moving," said Dr. Devra Kleiman, who has supervised the zoo's extensive panda research since 1972.

She said that for hours after the baby stopped breathing, Ling-Ling gently tended the cub, licking it, picking it up in her arms and cradling it against her.

"We have no theories why the cub died," Ms. Kleiman said at a zoo news conference after the cub's death. "Ling-Ling's behavior was more than adequate to keep the cub alive. But it was hard to tell if she nursed the baby because she was cradling it so constantly close to her."

Ms. Kleiman, the zoo's acting assistant director for animal programs, said the baby was vigorous and active for three hours, squealing and running around.

Harper battles for backup job

By Dan Devine
Sports Editor

Unlike Marvin Hinton at Cleveland, who has dropped into a thin group of wide receivers, John Harper finds himself in the midst of one of the best linebacking corps in the National Football League.

"I fell into a group of well entrenched linebackers," said the ex-Saluki linebacker-defensive end from the Atlanta Falcon training camp. "They got a fine group of linebackers."

Harper, though, still has the upper hand on Hinton in a bid for an NFL job. Fourth round draft picks have more security than free agents.

A 6-3, 235 defensive powerhouse for four years at SIU-C, Harper may have to settle for a backup position on the Atlanta defense. The Falcons returned four veteran starters from last year.

"Our backup positions are up for grabs," said Bob Dickerson, an Atlanta public relations assistant.

Despite a hamstring injury that sidelined him for a few days, Harper has been making progress, said Dickerson. "He's having things to learn, but I don't think they've been disappointed in his progress."

Harper said he was glad to be healthy again. He said he's been concentrating on playing well, and isn't going out of his way to analyze his competition or his situation.

"We really don't know who's got a good chance," he said. "I feel if I work hard I've got a good chance. All I can do is play it by ear. I don't pay attention to the hard parts."

What Harper is paying attention to are the basics, which he said have been the major emphasis of the Falcon coaching staff since camp began July 14.

"Right now we're just learning fundamentals. I'm getting more into the game, mainly just techniques. You use your hands a lot more. It's physical but with your hands and not with your shoulder pads and helmet."

"I want to pay attention, learn as much as I can and be aggressive, be alert," he said.

It was those traits, along with an instinctive ability to get to and crush ballcarriers, that made Harper one of the best defensive players in recent SIU-C history.

He was Missouri Valley Conference defensive player of the year last season even though he was shuttled between defensive end and linebacker and even though an ankle injury reduced his effectiveness for much of the season. Both Harper and Saluki football Coach Rey Lempsey agreed that it had not been the kind of season of which Harper was capable.

Harper said the Falcons were giving no thought to playing him at end this season, a feeling echoed by Dickerson.

"He is a linebacker," said Dickerson.

The Falcons played mostly a 3-4 formation last year but plan on going more with the traditional 4-3 defense this season, said Dickerson.

Harper arrived in Atlanta early this season to work out on his own. He took time out along the way to get married.

"I'm real excited," he said. "Everything's going better."

Hinton sidelined by injury

Marvin Hinton's hopes of sticking with the Cleveland Browns were dealt a blow Wednesday when the ex-Saluki wide receiver separated his shoulder while diving for a pass.

Hinton, a free agent hoping to catch on with a team that needs wide receivers, may miss about a week of practices. Worse, he will miss Saturday's scrimmage with the Buffalo Bills, an important showcase for rookies and free agents.

"It's a setback," said Chuck Fisher, a Cleveland public relations assistant. "They're free agents need to dance every dance they can."

Hinton said he would be out for about a week. Cleveland trainers called it a day-to-day thing but said they didn't expect him to be able to return to practice until Tuesday or Wednesday at the earliest.

Cleveland is scheduled to make its first cuts after Saturday's games. Fisher acknowledged that the injury may place Hinton's status in jeopardy, but he noted that the 5-foot-10 speedster has benefited from four full days of practice.

Hinton was receiving treatment for the injury Thursday and was able to run, do calisthenics and sit in on meetings. In addition to two-a-day practices, the Browns hold 23 hours of meetings per week.

If Hinton survives his first major setback, he will return to practice with added competition. The Browns picked up five-year veteran receiver Bobby Jones from the New York Jets Thursday in a further attempt to shore up their thin wide-receiving contingent.

Brown veteran Reggie Rucker has retired. Dave Logan is out with a broken ankle and No. 1 draft choice Ron Brown is in Europe running track. Brown may pass up a football contract in order to train for the Olympics.

Intramural seasons enter post-season play

Opening round playoff action in softball and 3-on-3 basketball highlighted this week's intramural schedule as more summer sports began post-season play.

Softball and basketball champions will be decided next week, as will racquetball and tennis doubles and mixed doubles winners. Table tennis finals were held Thursday night.

Racquetball and tennis singles closed last week with two finals matches played. In the men's advanced racquetball final, Bob Pechous rebounded for a 5-21, 21-12, 15-2 win over Roger Robinson. In the men's intermediate tennis final, Brian Coughlin overwhelmed Ken Dzwenski, 6-0, 6-2.

In the team horseshoe pitching final, David Huttie and Jeff Levine rallied for a convincing 19-23, 21-8, 23-6 victory over Eric Nitsche and Frank DiBenedetto.

Bears' Gault opts for Olympics

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Willie Gault of Tennessee, a first round draft pick and the last unsigned player on the Chicago Bears roster, told club officials Thursday he is committed to competing in the 1984 Olympics even if it means delaying his National Football League career.

"If I don't get a chance to do both, I'll run track," Gault said during a Thursday stop at the Bears training camp.

Gault, a sprinter who also played wide receiver for the Vols, is awaiting a decision on whether he can retain his amateur status while playing professional football.

He added, however, that he already has informed Bears' General Manager Jim Finks and NFL officials "that I want the Bears to retain rights to me."

Gault visited the camp before he and his wife planned to fly to Europe, where he will participate next month in the World

Track Championships in Helsinki.

And, he added, even a poor performance at those games wouldn't dissuade him from seeking Olympic gold in the sprint, hurdle and relay races.

"I can't base my career on one or two meets," said Gault, noting this wasn't the first time the two sports have caused a conflict. "I've always been three or four months behind in my track training because of football."

The impact of Gault's decision was softened by the signing Wednesday of the club's other first-round pick, Jimbo Covert of Pittsburgh. Also agreeing to terms Wednesday were second-round pick Mike Richardson of Arizona State and veteran defenders Gary Fencik and Jerry Muckensturm.

Covert, who played left tackle at Pitt and was considered by many the nation's top collegiate lineman, signed a three-year pact with an option reportedly worth $1.2 million.

"Most of all, I'm just very happy it's decided," said Covert. "Now I can get down to doing what I've done since I was 9 years old and what I've wanted to do all my life — play pro football."

Covert's agent, Tony Agnone, said the deal became possible when the Bears added performance bonuses.

Richardson, who played cornerback at Arizona State, signed a four-year contract with no option, but figures were not available.

Fencik, an All-Pro performer at the safety spot, agreed to a three-year contract with no option and the details of linebacker Muckensturm's pact were not announced.

Ruthven, homers key Cubs win

CHICAGO (AP) — Tom Verzyer and Jody Davis cracked home runs and Dick Ruthven and Lee Smith combined on a five-hitter, leading the Chicago Cubs to a 3-2 triumph over the San Francisco Giants Thursday.

Ruthven, 7-7, tired in the 93-degree heat and gave way to Smith in the eighth. Smith notched his 13th save as the Cubs snapped the Giants' three-game winning streak.

Ruthven did not allow a hit until Milt May doubled with two outs in the fifth. In the seventh, he lost his shutout as the Giants scored twice on Max Venable's fifth homer, another double by May and an RBI-single by Duane Kuiper.

The Cubs scored a run in the first inning when Ryne Sandberg singled, went to third on a single by Bill Buckner and came home as Keith Moreland bounced into a double play.

Verzyer hit his first National League homer leading off the third and Davis hit his 17th and second in two days in the fourth. Atlee Hammaker, 10-5, was the loser, although he gave up only five hits.
