Buried sign uncovered by student
By Tracy Moss
General Assignment Writer

An emotional message that was sent six months ago to console SIUC students grief over the Pyramids fire will be displayed as a reminder of those that suffered in that tragedy.

Mike Spiwak, president of undergraduate student government, said on Wednesday, he found at the USG office a banner full of signatures from the Notre Dame student body expressing their sympathy for the students who died in the Pyramids Fire.

"No one in our office knew anything about this banner," Spiwak said. "I don't think it was ever displayed.

Brad Cole, who was USG president at the time of the fire, said he knows the student stored the banner displayed for one week. Spiwak said the banner, which was received in December just after the Pyramids fire, is completely covered with signatures from Notre Dame students.

"There are a bunch of tears jerking things written on it," he said. "It is an amazing outpouring of student emotion—it is very powerful."

No one in the USG office had seen the banner.

All SIUC students should be aware that anyone can become the victim of sexual assault regardless of their gender, said a campus safety representative for Women's Services.

In March of this year a while male, sexual assaulted a woman, male acquaintance, while the victim was asleep. Another incident in October of last year involved a black male assaulted against the wishes of a highly intoxicated black female.

Macy Lai, campus safety representative for Women's Services said sexual assaults can happen to anyone, anytime and anywhere.

"A freshman who has left house for the first time feel they are in a safe environment with the university," Lai said. "They should beware because this is not so safe a place."

Lai said one in seven men will be seen.
NBA game arranged for SIUC Arena

By Dan Leahy

Hoops fans in Southern Illinois will have an opportunity to see some of the NBA's stars up close this fall when the Indianapolis Pacers take on the Charlotte Hornets at the SIUC Arena.

Manager Susan Snyder, assistant director at the Arena, said Wayne Morris, the arena's sports director, talked to the Hornets' owner, set the game up. "He approached us and said he was looking for an arena that seats around 10,000," Suazex said. "And we think it's a good idea." The game will be played on October 28th at 8 p.m. Tickets for the game range in price from $10 to $50, depending on the seat. Suazex said she hopes for a sell-out, and has no reason to believe the event won't be a success. "This will be the first NBA game at the Arena since the Bulls played here in the late 70's," Suazex said. "I think it will be very successful." Suazex said while she is not sure on an exact dollar amount, a well-attended game will bring some money to SIUC.

A media-relationships employee of the Pacers said the game should be exciting, as it is their next-to-last game of the season and their stars should receive significant minutes.

If the Pacers officials is right, fans attending the game will get to see such stars as 20-point scorers Reggie Miller and Andre Schrempf for the Pacers. The Pacers are coming off a season which ended with a first-round loss to the New Jersey Nets.

The Charlotte Hornets will enter with three of the game's youngest and brightest standouts in power-forward supreme Larry Johnson, center Alonzo Mourning and guard Kendall Gill.

The Hornets eliminated the Boston Celtics in the first-round of the playoffs, and then gave the Knicks a scare before bowing out.

Possible strike of All-Star festivities planned by Union

The Sporting News

Leave it to Don Fehr. Only the joyless head of the players' association could put a damper on what was otherwise a joyous All-Star show put on by Baltimore and the Orioles' front office.

Like a 200-pound ant arriving at baseball's picnic, Fehr declared that the talks between the union and the major league owners were a Labor Day strike if there were no substantive progress in labor talks between the union and the major league owners.

Responding to another school-yard brat, management negotiator Richard Raelitch said the union was bluffing and that owners wouldn't be scared.

There is talk about the possibility of a players strike in September. According to the strategy, the union would strike to prevent tax owners from declaring an impasse months later and imposing new working conditions such as elimination of salary arbitration.

But to spill all this nastiness at the All-Star Game underscores how the ant eyes were on the post season and the upcoming winter meetings. There are no signs that the players want to strike. The players want new two-back offense, but Ernest Byner, lead blocker and holdout Ricky Ervins and Brooks will get a chance to hit the field together.

The bottom line remains the same. Nothing is going to happen between the union and owners until the owners settle on a revenue-sharing plan. As many as 20 clubs have signed off on such a plan, with the biggest resistance being the biggest fees in baseball.

First-year players have good shot for Redskins' final list

By Tom Carter, Sports Editor

CARLISLE, Pa.--The Washington Redskins said many of the usual things about this year's nine draft choices. They talked about their future, about their past, about their present. They talked about an adjustment period.

And yet... Carter, the Redskins first-round choice, is expected to be on the field early and often when the Redskins and Dallas Cowboys open the regular season in a Monday night game on Sept. 6. The football teams will be in town, too, so running back Reggie Brooks. Almost from the moment he was taken in the second round, the Redskins said they wanted to get him on the field fast and see if the dazzling speed and moves he showed at Notre Dame translated into big plays at a lower level.

Likewise, linebacker Rick Hamilton and defensive end Sterling Palmer arrived at training camp with high expectations. The Redskins won't be surprised if Palmer is subbing for veteran Charles Mann in a few pass-rush situations early in the season, and Hamilton may be the big middle linebacker they need to defend the run and replace Kurt Goenner.

There's also high hope for Texas-El Paso punter Ed Bunn and Penn State center Greg Miller. Bunn is a strong exhibition game performer, but he could also be a prototype H-back.

There'll surely be some disappointments, but in four seasons since Cwley Casserly took over as general manager, only one player drafted in the first five rounds has failed to make the team. This year, six rookies have very good chances to be on the opening-game roster because, although the Redskins said the expected things about judging this draft sometime in the future, they also went for players who can have an impact immediately.

The top six draft choices, in order: -- Carter. His athletic skills were off the charts when he left Notre Dame after his junior season, which means he's a very young player who should be around a very young time. With Martin Mayhew gone to Tampa Bay via free agency and Darrell Green now 33, Carter was selected with the future in mind. But he was selected with the 1993 season in mind as well.

"I think he's the most talented guy we've drafted since Darrell Green," Coach Richie Petitbon said. "He has all the physical tools to be a top-flight player. He has tremendous jumping ability, speed, the whole package. He's only 20 years old. There is both good and bad... We're going to see him hit York Knicks. I have high hopes he'll be a good player." The down side is that he played mostly zone-coverage at Notre Dame. Defensive coordinator Emmitt Thomas will give him a crash course on man-to-man defense in the next five weeks. -- Brooks: Since the Redskins don't have the starting back to shoulder the workload, Petitbon would like him to take over all his duties. Brian Mitchell has opened camp as the starter at halfback in the new two-back offense, but Ernest Byner, holdout Ricky Ervins and Brooks will get their turns. Brooks started only one season at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

D.C. POOL ATTACK SUSPECT FREED — The U.S. attorney's office, citing weak evidence, dropped its case against a man accused of shooting into a crowd at a District of Columbia swimming pool wounding six children. Charles Kenneth Duvall, 22, walked free after prosecutor William Lawler listed "factual developments" in the case. Although Lawler does not explicitly criticize police, it suggests that investigators and federal agents conducted a faulty investigation.

REPORT CRITICIZES MAYOR'S ACTIONS IN RIOTS — Mayor David N. Dinkins ignored evidence that the Crown Heights riots in Brooklyn had spun out of control and failed to act decisively, a report finds. Mario Cuomo's administration concluded. Even as his own staff told him that the 1991 disturbances were "out of control," Dinkins, Deputy Mayors Bill Lynch and Milton Molten, and former Police Commissioner Lee Brown insisted that matters were in hand.

HOUSING SCARCE FOR FLOOD VICTIMS — Like so many Midwest riverbank towns, Nioa lost its layout during the summer flooding. Just as the evacuation plan called for, virtually all of the suddenly homeless had someplace to go. But in a matter of days, the first surveys made clear that the population of 160 needs long-term accommodations. Nioa will not be habitable again for six months or more and in the western Illinois countryside, the extra housing is not easy to find.

Student services planning children’s summer events
By Karen Ham
Entertainment Writer

In an effort to fill the void in children’s summer activities, three student services have teamed up to provide the children of University students with an afternoon of crafts, games and fun.

Especially for Children,” targeting ages 6 to 11 is planned for Saturday, July 24. Sponsored by the Student Programming Council, Family Housing and the Craft Shop, the event represents one of the best ways to meet the needs of the diverse University population, said Dave Edwards of SPC.

“We’ve done kids and family programs before and each one’s been a little different.” Edwards said, “There’s a big population of children who’s needs we have to meet, especially because they’re children of students.”

Debbie Good, a field work student and event coordinator at Evergreen Terrace family housing, said students who are parents look for events like this to entertain their children.

“There’s that population out there that needs to feel their kids are having fun in a safe environment,” Good said. “And the kids find a sense of stability and structure in their lives when they work and play with similar kids — it’s also something new to do.”

The event will be set up in a series of stations for the children to explore. Edwards said. The five stations will offer arts and crafts, games, physical activities, thinking workshops and a break station. The “Loony Tunes” movie will also be shown at one of the stations along with snacks and refreshments.

Edwards said the event should draw the maximum capacity.

“We can hold and expect a maximum of 100 enthusiastic, exciting children who are ready to have a good time,” he said.

Good said quality entertainment and educational experiences like these are in demand throughout the area.

“I know of a few really good programs locally, but there can always be room for more,” Good said. “I really don’t think there’s enough stuff for kids to do, especially in the summer. I hope we can try to fill that gap.”

The “Especially for Kids” program runs from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday in the Student Center International Lounge. Students can sign up their children today at SPC offices in the Student Center or at Evergreen Terrace.

SIUC prof to speak in ‘Food for Thought’ series
By Patti Dullik
General Assignment Writer

An SIUC professor will discuss U.S. foreign policy issues as part of a series to promote awareness of American involvement in Guatemala at noon today in the Student Center’s Troy Room.

The Food for Thought lunch discussion series, entitled The World’s Trouble Spots: How is Clinton Responding? How Can You and I Respond to the Injustices and Horror, is sponsored by the University Christian Ministries and Southern Illinois Peace Coalition.

William Garner, associate professor in political science, said he will focus his talk about the foreign policy of the Reagan and Bush years and the Clinton administration and how they have not done anything to clean up the mess created in Guatemala.

“Our government has created conditions of mass poverty and political repression in Guatemala by constantly supporting and financing military dictatorships since 1954,” he said. “Poverty and repression have been created, all in the name of a workable foreign policy.”

Garner said he believes the United States’ foreign policy has not helped with Guatemala’s mass starvation and unemployment and as a result the Communists have acted like flies attracted to the mess largely created and perpetuated by Guatemalan military governments kept largely in place by United

Clinton should give Elders full support

PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON CHOSE the right doctor for the job of aiding our country's health problems when he nominated Dr. Jocelyn Elders for surgeon general.

Dr. Elders has been a controversial figure since her candidacy, however, must endure as ultra conservatives continue to stir up controversy based on unsubstantiated claims.

Their charges are rooted in ideological differences, falling under the guise of ethical concerns, and fail to address the significant issues facing our country for which Elders was nominated.

Because Clinton has become legendary for waffling on topics that create controversy, his continued support for Elders could be instrumental in changing his image as a flip-flop decision maker.

NEARLY THREE IN FIVE AMERICANS believe that he has broken his promises too often, according to an Associated Press poll.

And it is little wonder. From his stance on gays in the military and the Haitian refugee policy to his withdrawal of Lani Guinier, Clinton has demonstrated his inability to stand firm in what he believes.

Elders, former director of the Arkansas Health Department, presents Clinton with another challenge to remain supportive as conservatives reopen debate.

The charges include raising questions about whether Elders should have served as a part-time federal consultant while on the Arkansas payroll to which it was found Elders was not violating any laws. She had been using vacation time from her state job and was doing nothing illegal.

Her nomination also has been sidetracked by such irrelevancies as her husband's failure to pay Social Security taxes for a nurse for his elderly mother.

ONE CONCERN THAT MAY have legitimacy and will be discussed in the confirmation hearings is Elders' position in an Arkansas bank account covered in mismanagement.

These issues, however, should not be used to disguise conservatives' fear of Elders' liberal ideology. The pediatrician supports abortion rights and early sex education for younger students.

Critics charge that her beliefs undermine family values, but she offers the nation solutions grounded in reality. Today's teen-agers are more sexually active than ever before.

Clinton's wisdom is to listen to the critics, but to base his candidate choice on the merit of facts and figures.

Statistics indicate that nearly 40 percent of ninth graders and 72 percent of 12th graders have had sexual intercourse. Most families are aware of these changes and agree that something should be done.

In an address to a group of students, President Clinton told them, "We don't do things for people because we feel sorry for them. We do things for people because we want to help them in the long run."

Clinton's wisdom is to listen to the critics, but to base his candidate choice on the merit of facts and figures.
knowledge that the banner was ever presented to the SIUC student body, the international students or was ever displayed.

Frank Flynn, the Notre Dame student government president, said the University never received any response or thanks from SIUC for the banner.

The Notre Dame student body can relate to the devastation of the Pyramids tragedy because in 1992 the "flying Irish men" and women's swim team were involved in a bus crash which killed two freshmen swimmers and severely injured many others.

Frank Flynn, the Notre Dame student government president, said the Notre Dame students really empathized with the SIUC students because of their own loss.

A lot of students wanted to do something for the SIUC students," he said.

Flynn said the banner was hung in the Notre Dame library by the student government so students could fill it with sympathetic remarks.

"The students felt the banner would be just a small token of their support and condolences to the SIUC students," he said.

Spaw said he will contact the Notre Dame student president to offer his thanks for their support and the banner will be given to the International Student Council for display.

Supercenter store opening brings new jobs

By Jeff McIntire
Business Writer

Wal-Mart opened its first supercenter in Illinois Wednesday near University Place, creating about 300 jobs.

Skip Tinney, director of the new center, said the store employs about 230 workers as opposed to about 530 in the original Wal-Mart.

Community business leaders said the supercenter is one of the largest in the nation occupying about 202,000 square feet.

James Provell, executive director of the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce, said the supercenter is one of the largest in the nation by a difference of about 2,000 square feet.

Wal-Mart officials expect the supercenter to be the beginning of a national trend in Wal-Mart stores.

Skip Tinney, store director at the supercenter, said the supercenter’s opening is an indicator of things to come for other Wal-Mart stores.

“This is the future of Wal-Mart,” he said. “I think in the next 10 years you’ll see many more of our stores becoming supercenters.”

“It’s exciting to be a part of one of the first supercenters because this will be a vehicle for Wal-Mart’s future,” Tinney said.

The supercenter has a deeded full-line grocery as well as many other new services to the merchandise from the original Wal-Mart.

Business leaders in the community and SIUC officials differ on the economic impact of the store.

Although it has many new services, local business leaders don’t expect it to threaten local small businesses.

Provell said the supercenter will not take business away from local merchants.

“I think the draw of the supercenter will be from the surrounding area,” he said. “They will not take business away from Carbondale, instead it will draw more business into the area.”

“Supercenters have always been a regional shopping center,” Provell said. “They have been a vehicle for discount places such as Country Fair and Aldi.”

— Paul Treseott

“‘I would imagine (the supercenter) would take business away from the small businesses. I suspect that the east side Kroger store will take a hit as well as discount places such as Country Fair and Aldi.”

— Paul Treseott

“Demographics show Carbondale can support this kind of center,” he said. “Carbondale has always been a regional shopping center.”

SIUC experts said the new center to create a problem for local merchants.

Paul Treseott, professor of economics at SIUC, said grocers would experience some losses.

“I would imagine they would take business away from the small businesses,” he said. “I suspect that the east side Kroger store will take a hit as well as discount places such as Country Fair and Aldi.”

— Paul Treseott

“Carbondale was chosen as the site of Illinois’ first supercenter because it attracts shoppers from a large region,” Provell said.

“Because Wal-Mart is a volume dealer, they will be able to give better deals on general merchandise,” he said. “Retailers have to adjust to changes in their environment, and Wal-Mart is just another variable thrown in the equation.”

“Though the supercenter just opened, Wal-Mart officials said the store has been active in community service.

Tinney said each district store donated merchandise to National Guardian, working at the sites of the flooding along the Mississippi River.

The store also donated $500 to the local United Way and $1,000 to Julie Claussen of the local Wal-Mart Center.

Claussen said the donations from the local businesses aided in the center’s ability to attract state funding.

“The money we received from local contributors helps us get state money,” she said. “We are very appreciative of local help.”

The old Wal-Mart site will be occupied by an undetermined date by Bud’s Warehouse outlet, another Wal-Mart subsidiary.

Bud’s Warehouse is a goods outlet similar to Sam’s Club.

Sam’s has a membership requirement, while Bud’s is oriented to the general public.

assaulted in their lifetime, while one in three females will be assaulted in theirs.

“A lot of people think it is homosexual men who go around molesting children and raping men when in fact most attacks towards other males are committed by heterosexual males," Lai said. "It has less to do with sex, but is more likely done for domination and humiliation.”

Nelson Ferry, of the SIUC crime prevention unit, said the majority of sexual assaults are acquaintance or date rapes.

He said most of these assaults occur in the victim’s residence or that of the perpetrator.

Ferry said 90 percent of campus rape is planned in the mind of the perpetrator.

“It is a sexual expression of aggression,” Ferry said. “It is the perpetrator’s way of expressing power and control over the victim’s body.”

Ferry said the best way to defeat the perpetrator is to take away that power and control through physical, verbal or passive resistance.

“We don’t recommend people carry deadly weapons like guns, knives, blackjack or brass knuckles," Ferry said. “We do recommend mace because it is legal in the State of Illinois.”

Jeff Harris, counseling psychologist at the Counseling Center, said most people who have gone through a traumatic event like a sexual assault would benefit from talking to a counselor right away.

“Overall the most pervasive thing in response to sexual assault victims usually feel is a loss of control and power in their own lives,’ Harris said. “The major goal of counseling would be to help victims find things to do to help them regain that sense of power and control in their lives.”

Harris said victims should come to counseling because it is a way to assist victims in adapting to powerful emotions and life changing events like sexual assault.

Lai said woman between 18 and 24-years-old are most likely to be raped.

She said that many sexual attitudes are perpetuated by the popular culture.

“You’ll go to a movie and see the tough guy in the case who engages in all these dangerous activities and attracts all the women,” she said. “A lot of men grow up with this stereotype and try to act it out.”

While Garner will concentrate on the United States’ foreign policy, Sister Mary Anthony Mathews, who is currently living and working in Guatemala, will be speaking about the human issues.

She said she will be focusing on her personal experiences such as feeding the oppressed people in Guatemala.

Mathews said during her discussion she will commend various groups, organizations, and individuals for trying to wake up America and protest against the United States taking advantage of Guatemala’s cheap labor and goods.

She said the U.S. is exploiting Guatemala and it needs to come to an end.

“This discussion is important because unless you experience what it is going to be in Guatemala or learn through other people, you don’t believe it,” she said.

Karen Knodt, campus minister for University Christian Ministries, said the presentation will last about 15 minutes and then the floor will be open for discussion.

Knodt said the Food for Thought lunch discussion series was created to provided dialogue and educate students about world affairs while allowing different views.

“It’s about education,” she said. “Getting people to think, to let folks know about issues, without having to take a specific position.

“If they then feel motivated, they can take a stand.”

The lunch discussion series focused on Haiti and Liberia in the beginning of July and will feature a discussion on Bosnia on July 29. Those interested in attending are encouraged to bring lunch.

Lemonheads video sweet, sour

By William Ragan

Editor Entertainment

David Ryan, drummer for the Lemonheads, says in the latest video release, "I hate va/vo format. I hate travelling.

"Two Weeks in Australia" was released this week through Atlantic Vision and incorporates a little of both, showing the sweet side of the band as well as the sour.

But to anyone but the most serious of fans, this patchwork video release is a waste of twenty bucks. The video both documents the Lemonheads’ recent tour down under, where both Ryan and bassist Nic Dalion hail from, and incorporates MTV-style videos.

The bulk of the songs on the video are from the group's hugely successful 1982 album, "Shame About Ray.

However, the central attention is singer-guitarist Evan Dando, a "punkish-but-stoneworn alternative sex symbol for the '90s. And, Dando does the "sensitive artist on the guitar" routine quite well, performing solo on four of the tracks. But what differentiates him from the rest of the plaid-bunnies is his mock-airhead humor.

Directly portion of the video highlights that his "big thing now is lying down," while shots of Dando collecting donations at a field illuminate the screen.

Outfielders may be trouble for Cards

The Sporting News

Caught On The Fly.

They’re in second place, they’re at the Chop Shop this week, they have one outfielder too many. They’ve got three of them; two of them played in the Falcons’ defensive backfield.

We talkin’ about the Cards, of course.

Fly can’t wait to see how Joe Torre copes with a rotation of Brian Jordan, Bernard Gilkey, Ray Knight and Steve Sax.

They all gotta play, and the Braves have shown what can go wrong with the wrong mix.

Torre’s goin’ with the hot hands. That’s the key to the N.L. East race.

Spies say Greg Harris is convinced he’s beat up and Candlestick in the next episode of Parkinson’s.

We’ve Black and Trevor Wilson does L.D. Time, the Guest’s rotation is jiffy.

Harris started this season with a 1.27 ERA in 19 career games against the Braves.

If anyone could bug a Fly, it was Rollon Frederick Stewart.

He had a rainbow on his hair and a John 3:16 sign, and he finagled his way into every camera shot just as a big as play was about to happen.

Now that “Rainbow Man” has been given one, two, three life sentences for being a Dave Kershaw, we can all say this: John 3:16. “We believe in Him should not perish but have eternal life.”

An NCAA committee has recommended the Suncoast, Duns‚, Pan American and Final Four.

Fly figures cies is lining up for the chance to step in as a late replacement.

Fly hopes the director of “Blue Chips” had the cameras runnin’ when Bobby Knight threw Dick Vialle to the floor like a favorite child.

Fly’d rather see than see Bobby Hurley in a Hoosier uniform.

If 3,000-year-old China can treat its people as well as its pandas, then China should be in the 1996 Summer Olympics is valid. It would be a logical way to usher in the next millennium.

But Fly still isn’t sure about a country where they’re “not” tax citizens to support the Olympic movement.

Chesney Sydney is the front runner.

Where were you when the Toree’s goin’ with the hot hands, and his juggling act could be the key to the N.L. East race.

match-fixing scandal broke out in France soccer.

Now Fly knows why it’s called the “Friendly Confines.”

Now that Rick Mahan was hitin’ oh-5-3 in April, the Cubsbies refused to show his average on his electronic scoreboard.

He’d come up and it’d say, “John 3:16, oh-0-2.” Today he’s the next Gabby Hamer, and the Cubsbies are so proud they’re showin’ his average.

Now that San Francisco has the highest paid players in baseball (Barry Bonds at $43.5 million for seven years) and football (Steve Young at $59 million), Fly thinks Chris Mullin should ask for a raise.

Hey, didn’t you used to be Fidel Castro?

Yo, Michael. Fly loves to watch you on the court, but can you gimme a vacation?

Fly spoted you in the All-Star celeb home-run derby, on Connie Chang’s hot seat and then hangin’ around the Americana Senior center.

Were’nt you the guy who needed some time alone?

Batch Hobson and Tommy Lasorda reminded us last week how quickly things change in the major.

Why is that every time Fly hears this Jack Morris is Legal at the age of 38, he thinks back to the other Jack at the ’86 Masters?

Let’s see: A pitcher sneaks onto a Wrigleyville rooftop; the exiled owner tries to sneak a message into the dugout; players skip a mandatory workout without explanation; the top pitching acquisition has a previously known elbow problem; and the top batting acquisition wants to slug it out with the manager. And the team is leazy.

This is why Davey Johnson probably is goin’ to the Show?

Fly’s only fear in life is lifers with swatters, which is why the true identity here is a secret (it ain’t Peter Parker). Fly does claim to buzz somewhere around the Arch, and now that James Crispin is ready to sell the Patays and bring the NFL back to St. Louis (in you face, Bill Badwill), Fly wants to know if there’s an insect Discount on them six-spine.

Finally, Fly wants to know why everyone’s worked up about John Mark’s List? For L.A. Lobos, it all came back against Randy Johnson last week.

Has anyone seen the Phillips lately?

Note Dame, but averaged eight yards per carry. Coaches are uncertain if he has the durability to carry 25 times a game, but the Redskins hope if they put in his hand 10-12 times a game, he’ll hit a couple of home runs.

—Hamilton: Where Carter and Brooks were relatively easy picks.

Hamilton (6-2, 238) was tougher.

He played at Central Florida and he’s now thrown into much tougher competition. But his work in minicamp and this summer has already impressed a lot of people and he could eventually be the first-down middle linebacker. Matthew Millen handled two seasons ago.

“We definitely can see him playing this year,” said Larry Pecoratis, the assistant head coach/defense.

“We’ve already played a lot of people. We think it’s a real plus, when you can get everyone involved in the game, the interest level goes up.

“If you have an injury, you’ve then got a guy coming in to lead already have some experience. If he can play, he’ll definitely get a shot.”

now apparently coming from small-market clubs in the process for even bigger slices of the pie.

The issue should be settled by early August. Talks could then turn with the union. It would be interesting—in a perverse sort of way—to see how much solidarity the free agents would announce asked the players, including those on what co-ell be a dozen declining clubs. It would be a good week 13 or 14 weeks left in the season.

“We looks like someone with complete skills. He could play both run and pass. There’s no way he can be as refined an athlete as you want to play the tight-end. I don’t think so. On normal downs, he’ll be fine.”

—Bunn: He was perhaps the quickest pick of the draft because at a time when there are still many good players left on the board, the Redskins went for a quarterback. It was an indication that they’re serious about upgrading the position.

Kelly Goodborn has held the last two seasons. But it’s also a vote of confidence in Bunn, who led the nation with a 47.7-yard average last season.

There has been speculation inside the organization that Goodborn will stay around at least for the opener because the Redskins don’t want to throw a rookie into a Monday night opener against Dallas.

“This is not true,” a team source said. “If he makes the team, he makes the team. Hey, Dallas is going with a rookie punt.”

—Palmer: Easily the most intriguing pick of the Redskins’ draft because of his overall skills.

U.S. Olympic Festival confusing, unique

The Sporting News

The multihued monster that is the U.S. Olympic Festival begins in San Antonio, Texas, this weekend, and it’s as confusing as ever.

Because it means so many things to so many people, the Festival can be both fascinating and confusing.

The retired and the athletes who have competed in an Olympic Games will be the marquee attraction.

But their competition, for the most part, is still in the developmental stage, building toward the Atlanta Summer Games in 1996 or the Schleicher Winter Games next February.

That’s one of the confusions: The Festival is an off-season summer and winter sports.

Baseball and ice hockey. Swimming and gymnastics. Wrestling and weightlifting. As bright as the U.S. Olympic Committee is, it hasn’t figured out how to stage a multi-sport event into the competition, especially when the Festival is in Texas in July.

For some athletes, the event is an impromptu run-up to the Olympics. For others, such as Mark Lenzi, the 1992 Olympic 3-meter springboard diver, he doesn’t much of a thrill.

“I really haven’t had a break since I’ve been in shape,” Lenzi says. “Just started training again, so I don’t expect to do well... It’s always a fun meet. It’s a blast. I’d like to win it, but for me, this whole summer is pretty much a time when I’m taking it easy.

Compare this, the Festival is an opportunity to try something new.

Mary Ellen Clark, who won a bronze medal at Barcelona, is the first to be on a meter platform diving, will try springboard diving in San Antonio.

There’s this 365-pound wehilifster Mark Henry, who finished 10th in Spain at summer.

It is the future of super-heavyweight lifting in the United States.

Henry’s performance at the Festival in his home state (he is from Stillwater, Texas) will be another mile marker on the road to his ultimate goal of being known as the strongest man in the world.

“I don’t want to be the second-strongest,” Henry says. “The second-strongest doesn’t get as much attention. I’m a ham. I like being out there. I’d like to get my name across, and the only way to get your name across is if you get a lot of attention. By stacking the 1’s, it is important to me.”
