Representatives of SIUC fraternities and sororities marched from the Student Center to Lingle Hall Monday to protest the alleged actions of an SIUC sports team, leaders of the groups say.

Approximately 40 members from Greek organizations marched to meet with SIUC Athletic Department officials concerning alleged actions of members on the SIUC football team from two separate occasions, some marchers said.

Eight members of the group met with Shawn Watson, head coach of the SIUC football team, for 20 minutes.

Chris Hicks, vice president of the Kappa Alpha Psi, fraternity, said he wanted to make the Athletic Department aware of the situation.

"We're going to make a stand before things get out of hand and escalate to further violence," Hicks said.

Hicks said the latest incident happened Saturday at a dance sponsored by the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity at Lincoln Middle School, 501 S. Washington St.

He said an altercation took place at the dance when some people, who he says were members of the football team, requested to be let into the event for a reduced fee.

Minority admission cases could affect University—officials

By Donita Polly
DE Politics Editor

Although SIU is watching cases around the country that threaten programs which help minorities get into the institutions, University officials say SIU should not be affected by the decisions.

Thomas Britton, acting dean of the SIU School of Law, said all universities across the nation are watching cases like Hopwood vs. Texas, in which the decision could affect affirmative action programs. He said this case is important to watch because it could have implications for other law school admissions.

"These cases raise questions that we should be asking and causes us to review our admission policies and practices," Britton said.

In Hopwood vs. Texas, four white students filed a lawsuit against the University of Texas Law School after they were denied entrance to the school. The students said that their test scores were better than those of minorities who were admitted to the school.

The students claim that the university's affirmative action policy was the reason they were denied entrance.

Originally, a federal judge ruled against the four students, but the students appealed. And the court upheld the lawsuit March 19.

Britton said the Hopwood decision does not apply to the SIU School of Law because SIU's admission practices are in compliance with prevailing federal laws. However, he said the

USG members working on proposals to help WIDB make up budget shortfall

By Dave Katzman

Undergraduate Student Government members have come up with proposals to try to mend WIDB's budget shortfall.

Jemal Powell, USG College of Mass Communication and Media Arts senator and a member of WIDB, said he authored a bill aimed at getting the station a loan from the SIU Board of Trustees.

"(The bill) calls on USG to match the $10,000 WIDB was given by the Chancellor's Office," he said. "The provisions of the bill also call for USG, upon passage, to ask the Board of Trustees for the loan.

"I think this is the only way to solve the problem. We just need to save the station and make sure it is adequately funded."

SIUC Chancellor John Guyon said the $10,000, which came from the chancellor's and vice chancellor's offices, was given to WIDB because it was recognized that the station has academic value and importance as an Registered Student Organization.

Guyon said because of the University's budget situation, it is highly unlikely that WIDB will receive any more money from the administration.

Fund established to assist children of local woman who died in fire

Six-year-old Ashanti Foster and 7-year-old Lanier Britton were left with no material possessions, no home and — most importantly — no mother and legal guardian, after a fire ravaged their home Wednesday.

The Black Affairs Council and Undergraduate Student Government are responding to the tragedy with the Freedom Now Fund to help benefit the two children of Yulanda

Johnson, 41, of Carbondale.

Johnson died Wednesday morning in her home at 915 N. Washington. Johnson, an active participant with African-American campus organizations, is survived by her daughter Ashanti and Lanier, for whom she was legal guardian.

Troy Alim, president of Black Affairs Council, said Johnson has remained an active member of the BAC for more than 20 years. He said she was one of the original writers for the BAC newsletter, "Uhuru-SaSa," which is Swahili for

"Freedom Now."

The Freedom fund will be a week-long effort to provide financial and emotional support to Johnson's children. Those wishing to help are asked to donate new or like-new clothes, toys, shoes or other daily necessities.

"They lost everything in the fire," Alim said. "Being 6 and 7 years old, they at least should have toys to play with to get their mind off of it. They need it as a release."

CHINA HALTS 18 DAYS OF MILITARY EXERCISES — BEIJING—With tensions ebbing in the Taiwan Strait, China on Monday called an end to 18 days of military exercises and generally softened its tough talk that had preceded Taiwan's first presidential elections. Meanwhile, Taiwan's newly elected incumbent, President Lee Teng-hui, avoided antagonizing the government in Beijing anew by keeping a low profile and steering away from sensitive issues touching on independence for Taiwan. Aides to the 73-year-old Lee said the president plans to spend the next few weeks traveling in Taiwan to thank his supporters and does not plan a major speech until his May 20 inauguration. Lee won Saturday's presidential election with 54 percent of the vote. This is good news in Washington, where officials had feared that a boastful post-election performance by Lee could provoke China into new military brinkmanship.

INDIAN FORCES, MILITANTS, FACING STANDOFF — NEW DELHI, India—After a furious firefight that killed at least seven people at Kashmir's holiest site, Indian forces and separatist militants on Monday were locked in a tense standoff at the shrine. Indian troops and police surrounded the domed mosque of white marble on the shore of Dal Lake, while official sources reported that about a dozen armed separatists were holed up inside. Daylong efforts to persuade the guerrillas to come out failed. A similar siege at Hazratbal lasted for more than a month in autumn 1993 but ended peacefully when the guerrillas surrendered. In May 1995, however, another siege by the Indian Army at a second Kashmiri shrine occupied by militants ended in a disastrous fire that razed the old building.

SMALL TOWN OPPOSED TO SALE OF HOSPITAL — COOKEVILLE, Tenn.—The 25,000 or so folks who call Cookeville home are not reflexively opposed to big corporations. To the contrary, none of the seven banks in town are locally owned anymore and they haven't suffered for business as a result. Similarly, you wouldn't know there were any family-owned eateries from the solid wall of fast-food joints that line the stretch of road between town square and the interstate. But the residents draw the line at franchised health care. A proposal to sell the municipally owned hospital has everybody up in arms; locals seem especially concerned about the possibility the facility would go to a for-profit chain. "There is quality here and service second to none," said Cookeville resident Henry Malliet, explaining why he's opposed to the sale of the facility. "We don't feel that the hospital's in such bad shape that it needs to be sold."

NEW VISITORS PREFER BUSINESS TO PLEASURE — WASHINGTON—During his six-day trip to the nation's capital last week, the only sight Ed Branca saw were the interiors of office buildings, restaurants and his hotel room at the Sheraton City Centre. He skipped the monuments and the Smithsonian museums — without regrets. "I'm in Washington to work, not to play," said Branca, who arrived from Las Vegas to drum up business among national associations for his trade show company. Branca, 49, represents a new breed of Washington visitor who is reshaping the region's $14 billion hospitality industry. The number of business travelers to the area has surged along with the growth in private-sector employment at the same time that fewer tourists are visiting Washington.

CLINTON ADVISER AT WAR WITH STAFF, BOOK SAYS — WASHINGTON—The new book by author Elizabeth Drew, "Showdown: The Struggle Between the Gingrich Congress and the Clinton White House," describes the dealings between Clinton and the GOP Congress last year. It portrays Morris as a free-wheeling, senior Clinton adviser who was at war with much of the more liberal White House staff on many policies, who secretly dealt with Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., over the budget and who bragged about his efforts to make Clinton, "comfortable" with his presidency.

USG resolution calls for halt on incinerator

Members urge alternative ways of disposing soil

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Illinois government should stop toxic burning at the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge incinerator because there are safer and healthier methods available, some Undergraduate Student Government members say.

Robert Irby, USG College of Education senator, said he wrote a resolution requesting the government to prevent toxic burning and to educate SIUC students on the hazards of burning polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at the incinerator.

An incinerator is planned for the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge. Soil, contaminated with PCBs, would be burned and disposed. The soil became contaminated during World War II when PCBs were dumped in the Crab Orchard Lake.

Incinerating PCBs releases Dioxin, a cancer causing substance, along with other chemicals, into the air.

"I knew about the issue, but I didn't realize that I could do something about it until I started talking with members of the Student Environmental Center," Irby said.

Cathleen Tracy, SEC program coordinator, said the incinerator will begin burning in May, and will continue for four to six months before stopping.

Tracy said her organization has been protesting the incinerator for eight years. She said the USG resolution would help her organization by supporting the need to stop the toxic burning.

"Through SEC and USG, we can protest and can show everyone that this is an issue that concerns us, and there are other options to the incinerator and we do care about what is happening," she said.

Don Rehmer, USG West Side senator, said SIUC students need to be concerned about what is happening at the incinerator, even if they are only here for two to four years. "This is going to affect every one of us and future years to come," Rehmer said. "Each student at SIUC has a vested interest to see the University continue past the time we are here."

Irby said if the resolution passes the USG Senate Wednesday night, copies will be sent to state and national leaders, including Gov. Jim Edgar and U.S. Sen. Paul Simon. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Illinois EPA, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and Schlumberger Industries, owner of the Crab Orchard incinerator, would also be sent copies of the resolution.

"It would be very hypocritical if a senator or the entire senate votes against this resolution," Irby said. "This is important for the students, the campus and the community and is an issue that needs to be addressed now."

The resolution will be on the agenda at the USG meeting scheduled for 7 p.m. March 27 in Ballroom B of the Student Center.

Saluki Express expansion being drafted by officials

By Erik Bush
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the summer session approaches, city and SIUC Saluki Express officials are busy making plans to expand bus routes to further accommodate students living on the edges of Carbondale, SIUC officials say.

Sean Borman, SIUC transportation clerk, said route restructuring is being done to better serve students living in Carbondale while classes are in session.

Borman said currently, SIUC students living on the west and north sides of Carbondale — west of Oakland Avenue and the North Oakland Avenue area — are not seeing the availability of bus routes when compared to those students residing in the east and southeast areas of Carbondale.

Borman said in an effort to correct this, bus routes will be reallocated from current routes and directed to better saturate the deficient areas.

Jeffrey M. Duke, Student Center assistant director, said the re-routing of the buses primarily is intended to benefit students, and any advantage to Carbondale residents would be secondary.

"It is important to remember the bus service is a student-oriented, student-funded program," he said. "While it is good Carbondale residents can receive the benefits of this service, we are primarily concerned with what the students want. This includes only running the buses while classes are in session."

Borman said not offering routes over breaks is due to the Saluki Express' aim of student service. The decision not to run the buses over breaks came down to whether or not city businesses would take over funding during these periods.

"We offered the Chamber of Commerce a proposal that would have allowed the operation of a business loop during breaks," he said. "It came back that the local business did not want to participate."

Don Monte, Carbondale management, research and analysis manager, said the city recognizes that the bus is primarily for the students, but the time periods for the buses running over break were not

Seniors get jump start on job search

Students use spring break to gain market opportunities, interviews

By Mary Beth Arimond
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Instead of waiting until the last minute to find a job, some graduating seniors are getting a head start.

Todd Voigt, a senior in marketing from Buffalo Grove, said he has been looking for employment since spring break because he wants a job by the time he graduates.

"I wanted to take advantage of the week-long break to interview as much as possible," he said.

"The biggest challenge was to find the time during school to apply for an interview."

Angie Snyder, a senior in speech communication from Murphysboro, said she also has been looking for a job since spring break because traveling for an interview takes up time.

"I needed an extended time like spring break to get things accomplished," she said.

"There could be a conflict in scheduling if I tried to plan three job interviews during an entire weekend."

Snyder said interviewing in March, as opposed to May or June, helped her set up more job interviews than expected.

"Companies have been more flexible with me because they haven't been saturated with résumés from graduating seniors yet," she said.

"I think they won't be able to make time with just anyone come May."

She said applying before summer provides a great chance for students to make contacts.

"My résumé will reach more places and people in my field due to the networking and name-dropping," she said.

Snyder said her interviews showed more about her field.

"I've learned about the kinds of clients the company has, and what each position does day in and day out," she said.

Pamela Person, placement counselor with University Career Services, said students should start looking as early as they can.

"It's never too early to start," she said. "Sometimes students need to take care of more urgent things before they could apply for a job."

"Students will find, on average, they won't find employment until approximately two months after graduation."

Person said many students usually overlook the job fair SIUC puts on.

The University Career Services is hosting a job fair from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday in the Student Center Ballrooms.

Voigt said interviewing in advance helped him narrow down his search, as well as gaining some insight into the process.

"By the time I had a job interview with an engineering consulting company, I realized it wasn't the job for me," he said.

"But I thought it was good experience to see what employers want. Through these interviews, it was good to see what actually goes on in each department."

Paige Preston, a senior in dental hygiene and health care management from Park Ridge, said she is waiting until the middle of July to apply for a job.

"Right now, I don't know where I want to go and what I want to do," she said. "The job market in dental hygiene is great. I could get a job almost anywhere, so I'm not worried about finding a job."

SIUC offers book about Internet use

By Aaron Büttler
DE Online Editor

Understanding the Internet may be an intimidating task to those unfamiliar with the many concepts and systems involved, but help is on the way in a new book to be published by the University.

Herb Donow, University document editor, said after more than a year of research, a book introducing the SIUC computing community to the Internet will be available by fall.

Donow said the book's concept originated with Budget and Resources Director Michael Williams. Donow said although he had never taken on such a project before, he offered to write the book.

"I wanted to make sure anybody could read it," he said. "It's going to be a while before people don't feel they need a book

Education plan has good premise but needs more work

THE TRANSITION FROM CONCEPT TO REALITY can be rough. Even simple ideas that have broad support can become loaded with baggage and turn confusing as people attempt to make them real.

Gov. Jim Edgar's proposal to make education funding less dependent on property taxes is turning into a classic example of this scenario.

Edgar's plan calls for a $1.9-billion tax increase. $1.5 billion of this money would fund property tax relief while the other $400 million would be allocated to elementary and secondary schools. The plan also calls for legislators to put a constitutional amendment on November's ballot that would require the state to fund 50 percent of basic education costs. The state now funds about 33 percent of those costs, an Edgar spokesman said.

Turning away from property taxes to pay for education is a great, if not necessary, idea. Because property taxes come from local sources, the quality of a region's school system has often depended on how wealthy the area's residents are. School districts in regions with sluggish economies, on the other hand, are often underfunded. A system that causes education to fall with an area's economy does indeed need an overhaul.

We agree with Edgar's statement that, "It's unfortunate that the quality of a child's education would be determined by where that child lives."

His plan, however, needs more work.

THE VAGUENESS OF THE PLAN MAKES IT TOUGH to determine the consequences of its implementation. To become a reality, legislators must decide to let the public vote on the amendment this fall. If the plan makes it this far, voters will decide if it should pass.

This will be a hard sell to both the public and the General Assembly. There are no specifics about what taxes will be increased to raise the $1.9 billion, although Edgar's office acknowledges that the state's income tax is a logical starting point. The plan also does not state who will receive property tax relief. Under the plan, these decisions will be made after the amendment is passed.

We believe Edgar can improve the plan by detailing which taxes would be increased and who would receive the property tax reductions.

Another of the governor's selling points for the plan is that it will make school's more accountable for the state funding. The actual standards for this accountability are (surprise) to be nailed down after the amendment passes.

Two years ago Edgar's opponent in the gubernatorial race, Dawn Clark-Nett, ran on a plan similar to Edgar's. Nett called for a $2.5-billion tax increase that would have allocated $1 billion to education, $1 billion to property-tax relief and $500 million to lower and middle-class tax relief.

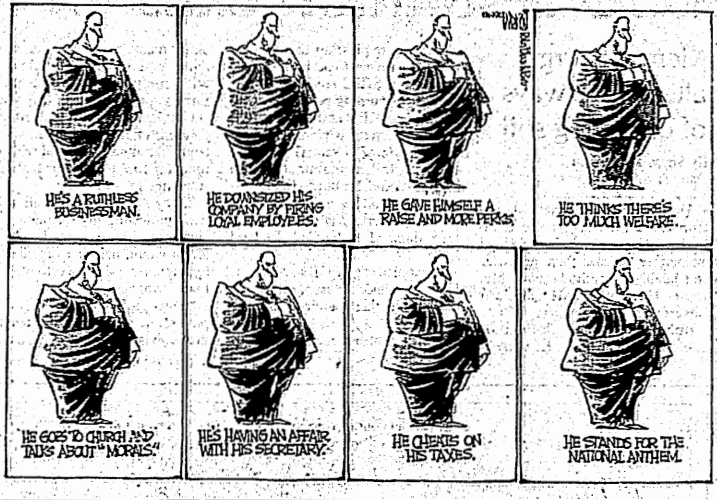

Edgar used Nett's proposal to label her a "tax-and-spend liberal." His strategy worked soundly and he enjoyed a landslide victory.

NOW, TWO YEARS FROM HIS NEXT ELECTION, Edgar is plugging the same idea he used to defeat Nett.

Not so coincidentally, the plan was unveiled only 48 hours after Lt. Gov. Bob Kustra's defeat in the Republican primary for one of Illinois' seats in the U.S. Senate. The week before, Edgar and Kustra staunchly denied reports that the plan was going to call for a tax increase.

If the governor has an idea, we think he should be open about it. He doesn't appear to be doing this with his education plan.

Shifting education funding away from property taxes is a good idea. A $1.9 billion tax increase without specifics is not. We hope Edgar reworks his plan and comes up with something better than he has on the table now.

Opposition to 'Playboy' not realistic

This letter is in reference to Marie Sweeney's letter in last Tuesday's Daily Egyptian in which she voiced her opinion against Kyra Mills' choice to pose for "Playboy."

Here we go again. Again some people are opposed to the women of Southern Illinois posing for "Playboy." Perhaps this time someone can explain things to me. What I want to know is the difference between being hired as a doctor, lawyer, architect, etc. and being hired to pose for "Playboy."

For some reason people attach some kind of nobility to being hired for one's mind, yet they attach a kind of degradation to getting hired to portray the beauty of the human body. It's the same thing. You are being hired for you. People have gifts. Some people have a gift for crunching numbers, some for playing baseball. And some have been given the gift of having real beauty. Take note: I'm not saying that just because someone is being hired for their beauty that they do not have an intelligent mind.

After leaving school and entering the "real world" Ms. Sweeney will, according to her major, be hired as a psychologist. She will be hired for her mind. She will be selling her mind and her services as a psychologist. She, as well as the rest of us, will be putting herself on the shelf. She will be waiting for some employer to buy her mind.

Months ago, Ms. Kyra Mills put herself on the shelf. She has been hired to portray the beauty of the human form. Where is the difference? We are all sold to the highest bidder for our gifts, skills, beauty, intellect, etc. Even entrepreneurs suffer the same fate. Although they have no boss except for themselves, they do indeed sell themselves to their occupation and their clients.

What is the difference between software guru Bill Gates and past "Playboy" model Cindy Crawford? What is the difference between Ms. Sweeney and Ms. Mills?

Foreign-affairs budget cuts suggest retreat

The Washington Post

The reception of the administration's foreign-affairs budget is receiving in Congress is more than cool: It is downright negative, and in ways suggesting differences in kind, not degree, from Cold War budget battles.

It is not simply that the administration, having already pared its requests, faces demands to cut its spending by as much as another third over a prospective seven-year budget-balancing period.

Not is it just that the party-controlling Congress is bringing unwelcome policy amendments onto money bills arriving in a White House of the other party.

What is distinctive is, the unspoken premise behind these moves: It suggests an American retreat from international responsibility.

Granted, you can never justify every dollar of a budget category where increments of intangible access, influence and power are being sought. But this time the cuts are deep to the point of denying the United States the resources it needs to know and affect things of importance to the American interest going on elsewhere.

This is being done, moreover, after strenuous internal "downsizing" in every foreign-affairs agency except intelligence — and without sufficient debate on whether foreign affairs should take a full budget hit in the first place.

The advocates of retrenchment, it turns out, have no particular theory of their case. They make no serious claim that, in a post-Cold War world characterized by recurrent violence and "ever-growing inter-relatedness in economic, immigration, ecological and police-and-security affairs, the United States can safely retrench.

On the contrary, these advocates indicate by their calls to increase military spending (already a dozen times non-military foreign-affairs spending) a basic readiness to exercise high-level vigilance and power. They simply do not want to spend money on intelligent pre-crisis involvement in troubled societies, which they contemptuously and stupidly dismiss as "social work."

Taking a full role in the international organizations and banks, starting with the United Nations, is mathematics to Capitol Hill's spokesmen for disengagement. They enjoy inventing internationalist conspiracies against American sovereignty, ignoring that the United States and its friends remain in a position to dominate these agencies.

For a while it seemed that legislators were demanding reform as the price of restoring some part of our treaty-busting arrears. Now it becomes clear that they wish altogether to dispense with these maligned instruments of American leverage. Your true disengager's favorite international agency is the weather bureau.

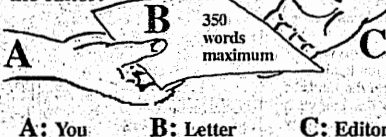

The United States has identifiable interests that compel sensible global involvement — its allies, its values, its economic links, its citizens' connections. Oddly enough, these interests are accepted more or less by common consent when it comes to reinforcing them by our global military reach; they are challenged only when it comes to serving them by our foreign policy.

Grant makes 'new' homes for northeast Carbondale residents

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

She smiles with pride, and she says she thanks the government for her "new" home and God for watching over her.

Louise Miller shows the new floor and new closet space in her remodeled home. She says she and her husband moved into the home, located on the northeast side of Carbondale, in 1947 after it had been built but could not move or afford the repair projects that the house needed.

Now Miller looks at the new bathroom, the new water heater and the new kitchen floor and whispers, "such a blessing."

This blessing came in the form of a federal government grant for remodeling homes in Northeast Carbondale.

The grants are from the Illinois Community Development Assistant Program which is funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

In January, Gov. Jim Edgar gave $350,000 in grants to Carbondale for remodeling 28 homes.

Tom Redmond, Carbondale Development Services director, said Carbondale had received the grants more than 10 years ago and began receiving the grants again in 1995.

"I like to say that I have a new home on the same frame."

*Louise Miller
Carbondale resident*

Redmond said the grants are to rehabilitate homes that do not meet housing-code standards. He said Carbondale and the state have limited the selection of houses to be rehabilitated on the northeast side, but others are encouraged to apply for the grant. "An applicant has to be the owner of the home and meet the income requirement based on the number of occupants in the home," he said. "The houses are prioritized so that the houses that need the most work are attended to first."

Redmond said the city inspects the home and helps the applicant through the process.

Miller said the city officials helped her each step of the way and kept in contact with her throughout the entire process.

Miller said the insulation in her home had deteriorated, and many other areas in her home were not in line with housing codes. The hot water heater hardly worked, and the wiring throughout the home was bad, she said. "I like to say that I have another new home on the same frame," she said.

She said she did not know what to do, and that is when she said God stepped in and helped her. "Where can you go when you have no money to move and no money to fix up your home," she said.

Cleveland Matthews, Carbondale community relations officer, said the city and the state chose the northeast side because it is the poorest section in town.

Redmond said 18 houses were redone in the first year, and nearly 18 will be rehabilitated this year. He said 28 houses are budgeted for rehabilitation for fiscal year 1997.

"Some of the homes have more work than expected, and we do not finish as many homes as we would like to," he said. "Some have what we estimate as a minor plumbing problem, and then we discover after the work begins that all the pipes need to be replaced."

Barbara Scott, also from the northeast side, is waiting to move back into her rehabilitated home.

Scott watches the construction process carefully. She said she is proud of her remodeled home and is eager to move back into the house.

Book questions Marco Polo's travels

The Washington Post

VENICE, Italy—Will these attacks on Italy's contribution to world culture never stop?

First, there was that thing about how the Vikings beat Columbus to America. Then reports that pasta is bad for you. Let's not even discuss the suggestions that Mona Lisa was actually a man. Now a new book says that Marco Polo, the legendary 13th-century Venetian traveler, never went to China; didn't even get beyond Constantinople; made up the rest of the trip, with the help of an imaginative ghostwriter and heavy cribbing from medieval equivalents of Fodor's guides. It's all alleged in a study teasingly titled "Did Marco Polo Go to China?" by Frances Wood, who administers the China department of the British Library. Despite the title's question mark, Wood leaves little doubt about her answer: Polo never visited China.

"I mean it's just too peculiar. You have to ignore too many obvious omissions in the account. The whole thing just seems made up," she said by telephone from London.

In taking on Marco Polo, Wood challenges one of the more enduring myths of the Western world, a tale of adventure known to millions of schoolchildren.

USG's Finance Committee Saturday because the station, which has been off the air since Feb. 22, would require more than $62,000 to repair broken and run-down equipment, Morgan Grammer, WIDB chief engineer, said.

Andrew Ensor, USG Southern Hills senator, said the proposed bill would spread out repayment of the loan over a three or four-year period, depending on which option USG feels is better.

"It's not enough just to turn the station back on," he said. "We need to fix the equipment problem. To do that, we need a loan."

Robert Irby, USG College of Education senator and the student representative of the WIDB Board of Directors, said he is looking to get WIDB money in installments.

"We can't give them the full amount because it would cripple other RSOs," he said.

Irby said his goal is to move WIDB up to priority-one status as an RSO, which would get the station more funding.

"There's no way in hell I'm going to allow WIDB to be shut down as an RSO," he said.

"They're an RSO, so they're for the students. There's no reason they should be shut down."

A! Harper, WIDB general manager, said station members are sending letters to WIDB alumni asking for help, along with participating in fundraising efforts with various credit card companies.

Eric Bottom, USG College of Business Administration senator and chairman of the Finance Committee, told WIDB members to investigate alternative sources of funding, such as bank loans or alumni contributions, before meeting with the committee again next week.

Scott Pfeiffer, USG chief of staff, said the problem is too big for USG to handle on its own.

He suggested that the University contribute more money in addition to the $10,000 it donated to WIDB to assist the station in repairing its equipment.

"To fix the problem, it will take more than USG," he said. Pfeiffer said the situation most likely will come under debate at Wednesday's USG meeting at 7 p.m. in the Student Center.

going to force their way in or stand outside so that no one else would be allowed to enter," he said.

Hicks said members of his fraternity blocked the entrance to the dance and said the outsiders eventually paid the admission fee. But he said fights broke out later.

Police eventually were called on the scene Saturday to help restore order to the dance, and mace was sprayed into the crowd, Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said.

"We received reports of fights breaking out at the scene and two injuries, one of whom was unconscious," he said. "I think the officers responded appropriately and definitely prevented more injuries."

Strom said that no arrests were made after police subdued the altercation.

Alfie Patterson, president of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, said the first incident took place in October at a homecoming party at The Great Skate Train, a skating rink on Rt. 13 in Carbondale.

Patterson said members of the football team paid the admission to get into the party. But he said they later became involved in an altercation.

Watson said he has no comment on either alleged incident until further investigation is made by the University.

"We're working on the situation with integrity and getting to the bottom of the issue," Watson said. "Until we can find out who is responsible for the incident, there's no need to point fingers at this time. We're just tired because we don't want the images of our organizations to be tarnished. The action of the individuals not only has an effect on us, but on the campus and the community as well."

Lesley Batson, a junior in marketing from Toronto who participated in the protest, said her intent was not to give SIUC or members of its athletic programs a bad reputation, but only to have the incidents stop.

Hicks said that the incidents could potentially affect business sponsorships for similar events in the future.

"Things like this can potentially diminish community support for our fraternity," he said.

Hopwood case does set a precedent for states in that jurisdiction.

"I'm not sure practices they found there are what you would find here," he said.

Edward Dorsey, assistant dean for admissions and student affairs for the SIU School of Law, said SIU is different than the University of Texas because it does not lower entrance standards for minority students.

He said the University of Texas created a special admissions board for minorities that lowered standards for minority applicants.

Dorsey said that although he could see someone challenging the SIU School of Law's admission policies, he believes that its policies would hold up in court.

"We treat all applicants the same," Dorsey said.

"We are committed to achieving diversity, and the reason why is that we believe that it will enhance the learning investment for all law students.

"Diversity will expose all law students to different ideas, different viewpoints and other insights that might otherwise escape them."

Patricia Ohlendorf, vice provost and counsel to the president at the University of Texas, said admissions at the university are suspended until Wednesday.

She said the admissions office needed to look at the changes that the case's ruling has created.

"Our policy for admissions will have to be changed," she said.

"We had not expected the opinion to be as broad and sweeping as it appears to be."

"We ended up with a system that, given any number of criteria for admissions, we cannot take race into account."

Ohlendorf said the University of Texas hopes to have the new admission policies decided by the end of the week.

Alim said the campus community should make an effort to keep the memory of Johnson alive for her children.

"She gave so much of herself to our organization," he said. "We hope this helps the children to look back and be able to appreciate who their mother was."

Alim said BAC appreciated her constant involvement with the organization. He said her death will have a definite impact on the BAC.

"It's always helpful when you have someone with experience who is willing to take the time and attempt to install what they have learned in younger people," he said. "Her death will definitely be felt."

Johnson was also instrumental in the recognition of the Black Think Tank as a registered student organization in 1995 and in organizing the SIUC chapter of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People in 1989.

Anthony Muhammad, a junior in business economics from Chicago and president of the Black Think Tank, said Johnson will remain an inspiration for him.

"Even though she worked and had children, she remained so involved," he said. "I don't have any of the hindrances she had, but she will always be a model of motivation for me."

Kahleelah Musawwir, a longtime friend of Johnson, said Johnson was an outstanding community member and was involved in Carbondale's Eurma Hayes Center, which has various city services such as child care and the Shawnee Health Care Center.

"She had a dynamic effect on children," she said. "She was like the mother of Africa for the children. She was someone who represented history and culture, and she always found time to share that."

Musawwir said Johnson's children are staying with friends of the family. She said the children are handling the tragedy well.

Johnson was awarded honorary lifetime member status of University Housing's Black Togetherism Organization in 1989. She was also the longest active member of the African Student Council.

Musawwir said the fund in recognition of Johnson is fitting because she remained so active on campus.

"I think it's a good thing," she said. "It shows that the individuals involved understand and realize her dedication. It's a dedication to recognize her dedication."

included in the original contract.

"We are happy with the changes," he said. "The expansions to the routes are to provide service to the students currently seeing a lack of it, not the residents."

Borman said a cooperative effort between city and University officials is instrumental for the continued success of the Saluki Express.

"We've had extremely good ridership to date," he said. "It is important we continue to work with the city to address what the students want."

Duke said schedules for the new routes currently are being printed and should be available before the end of the spring semester.

"The new bus routes will coincide with the beginning of the summer session, June 13," he said.

"I am pleased with the efforts. We were able to do this together to better serve the students."

Newborns immune system stronger

Study shows animal, human babies have high tolerance for foreign cells

The Washington Post

For a long time, biologists have regarded the period just after birth as an age of innocence of a very particular kind.

It is a brief moment when the newborn animal, physically free from its mother for the first time, is still defining what is self and what is non-self.

The distinction between self and non-self is crucial, for it is the underpinning of immunity. The body's defense against viruses, bacteria and other dangerous organisms first requires that it recognize those invaders as foreign.

Cells from one mouse were injected into the bloodstream of a second mouse soon after birth.

The recipient became "tolerant" of the foreign cells, and later in life could receive tissue transplants from the donor animal and not reject them. In essence, the recipient animal viewed the donor as "self," thanks to the exposure during the newborn period.

The scientists who conducted these experiments, and propounded the theories explaining them, won a Nobel prize in 1960 for the work.

Could it be that a newborn's immune system is not immature in some basic sense, but merely seems so when tinkered with experimentally?

A study in the journal Science last week asked those questions — and provided answers that begin to chip away at the concept of newborn immune tolerance.

In one study, John Paul Ridge of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and two collaborators were able to induce normal immunity in newborn mice by adjusting the number and mix of foreign cells injected into the young animals.

The researchers exposed female mice to a mixture of cells taken from the spleens of males. They wanted to see if the newborn females always became tolerant of "maleness" — as one would expect — or if under some circumstances they could learn to recognize the male cells as non-self right from the start.

When the experiment is done in adult animals, some of the incoming cells, called APCs (for "antigen-presenting cells"), display their foreign proteins to the recipient's immune system. Once that has occurred, cells in the recipient called T lymphocytes are "primed" to recognize, remember and attack those foreign proteins if they are encountered again.

There is a catch, though. If an unprimed T lymphocyte first encounters an incoming cell that is not an APC, then that lymphocyte is turned off.

It will not be able to remember and react to a foreign protein (or, in generic terms, a foreign "antigen") in the future. It will be tolerant.

Ridge and his colleagues found they could make newborn mice behave like adults if they greatly increased the number of APCs in the mixture of incoming spleen cells.

Increase the number of APCs, and the newborns' T lymphocytes could be primed so the animals would later reject any other cells from the donor animal.

In the experiments, the animals were given about 100 non-APCs for every one of their own T lymphocytes.

This greatly increased the likelihood that every unprimed lymphocyte would be turned off before it could encounter an APC. Tolerance would be the inevitable result.

Adult animals, on the other hand, have many more T lymphocytes. When the experiment is run with adults, there are about 10 T lymphocytes for every non-APC injected.

This increases the chance that some of the T lymphocytes will avoid being turned off by a non-APC and will, instead, encounter an APC and become primed. If that happens to even a few cells, the animal will develop normal reactive immunity against the foreign material.

The study, along with other recent research, suggests that a newborn's immune system may not exist in the special state that was long assumed — and that it may be far more susceptible to manipulation for medical benefit than anyone thought possible.

in hand to (learn the Internet)."

The book's purpose is to give students and faculty the background knowledge necessary to use resources like the Campus Wide Information System (CWIS) and the Internet, Donow said.

"Let's face it, (the University) has spent millions of dollars on the computer labs and CWIS, and we soon will be wiring the dormitories to the University network," he said. "We're not going to make those resources inaccessible to people."

Ainon Mizan, associate documentary editor, said the book has been constructed as more than just an instruction manual.

She said unfamiliar terms are defined and explained, and the book describes the systems through which the Internet is accessed.

"We want to deal with concepts, to make sure that if we talk about something like file transfer, any person who comes across the term knows what it means," she said. "This knowledge will help users understand new applications because they will recognize these familiar terms."

But the book does contain instructions detailing the steps a first-time user must follow to access services like the World Wide Web, e-mail and CWIS, Mizan said.

"Procedures should be explained so that a first-time user can operate an application after reading our instructions," she said. "This section is the core of the book that will give users the ability to learn further on their own."

Mizan said because computer technology like the Internet develops and changes so rapidly, the book is intended not as comprehensive overview, but an introduction to the information systems available, to help those with no prior understanding of the Internet.

"We may not have the last word, but that isn't important," she said.

"Once we've introduced users to Internet access, they can expand their knowledge there."

Future automotive technicians getting high-tech training

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Assistant Features Editor

On a bright Friday afternoon, Marco Wright, a self-proclaimed car buff, spends some time buried under the hood of a car replacing its transmission.

Wright, a senior from Chicago in advanced technical studies, said he always enjoyed working on cars but never imagined he would be fixing them for college credit.

"I started off as an engineering major," he said. "But at the time I heard SIUC was number one in automotive technology, and I knew I could be ensured a job in the automotive industry."

In the 20,000 square feet of classrooms and laboratories located in Cartersville, James White, chairman of the Automotive Technology Department, said students learn different service operations such as brakes, suspensions, engines and automatic transmissions.

Jack Greer, associate professor and program representative for the Automotive Technology Department, said the strength of SIUC's program is reflected by the high number of job placements of its graduates.

"We basically have more job offers than students," he said. "Our job placement is around 90 percent."

Michael Behrmann, assistant professor for automotive technology and coordinator of corporate-sponsored training programs, said more jobs are opening for automotive technicians because of the complex electronic systems.

"No other device has more electronic control than the automobile," he said. "The field requires an extensive knowledge of mechanical, electronic and computer technology. This knowledge needs to be updated whenever a change in technology happens."

Behrmann said the Automotive Technology Department has 100 students in the two-year associate degree curriculum and has about 70 students in the bachelor's programs. He said the starting salary for an automotive technician is between $20,000 and $30,000.

Brent Hochgraber, a senior in advanced technical studies from Quincy, said he

Fellowship winners use award to make changes in curriculum

By C. Kuhlmeier
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Eight recipients of teaching fellowships are using the awards for their research and attempting to improve the undergraduate curriculum at SIUC, an SIUC official says.

The SIUC Undergraduate Teaching Fellowships, which were established to make changes in the undergraduate curriculum, total $60,000 and will be used to pay the recipient's salary for the research period, Margret E. Winters, associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, said.

Recipients of the award were: Jane H. Adams, associate professor in anthropology; Rhonda H. DeMattei, assistant professor in the CTC Health Care Professional-Dental Hygiene; Thomas J. Johnson, associate professor in the journalism; James B. King II, associate professor in the School of Accountancy; Fern Logan, associate professor in cinema and photography; Pat A. Manfredi, assistant professor in philosophy; Martha P. Raske, assistant professor in social work; and David M. Sharpe, professor in geography.

Winters said the fellowships will allow professors to fully develop innovative ideas and teaching techniques.

The innovations then will be applied to existing classes within the undergraduate program or will be used to introduce new courses into the curriculum, she said.

"Our choices for the fellowships include people with the most exciting ideas with a practical way of creating them," Winters said.

"The availability of resources also determines which of the proposals we accept, but our main goal is to

"The changes may not have an effect now or next year, but down the line, our enrollment will increase."

James B. King II
Associate Professor,
School of Accountancy

help professors make improvements in the field."

Johnson said in order for the projects to be effective, research should be started now.

"Even though the fellowships don't start until May 15, we have to prepare ourselves by starting our research as soon as possible," he said.

King said the research from the fellowship will eventually lead to increased enrollment at SIUC.

"If we are able to generate a different product, it will make a world of difference," King said. "The changes may not have an effect now or next year, but down the line, our enrollment will increase."

King said his project is to develop a more user-friendly accounting course.

"The goal of what I want to do is to make sure that students who take accounting know how it fits into business," he said.

King said if the teachers at the University incorporate the improvements and send students into the workforce with a better education, it will reflect well on the University.

"Students can sometimes be our best recruiting tool," King said. "If they are given the best education possible, they will entice other prospective students to come to the University."

Johnson said the fellowships will help departments decide on how to structure their courses.

"The research money will help us to decide whether we need to scale down or restructure the logistics involved with introducing a new course or change," he said.

Johnson, who is developing a media course which will include a virtual media lab where students turn in their writing assignments by computer, said the fellowship research will enable the University to move in a more computer-oriented direction.

Raske said the fellowships will accelerate the course creation process and will bring those changes more rapidly to the classroom.

"What would have taken me five years to do independently, I can now do in one month's time," she said.

"It is very difficult to do things properly without time and funding, and the fellowships help us in both areas."

Raske said her goal is to research empowerment, or control over one's destiny, and apply it to the social work curriculum.

All of the recipients' projects have a projected date to be incorporated into the curriculum, but most of the projects should be in use within the next few years, Winters said.

Winters said eight out of 26 applicants were chosen. The winners of the fellowships were announced prior to Christmas break.

already has a job offer in the customer assistance program at the General Motors Corporation in Lansing, Mich. He said a college degree is an important tool for getting a good job offer.

"If you want to work on newer, advanced cars, you need to go to school," he said.

"All the major car companies want these students. There was no question in my mind when I was deciding on a school."

Gay awareness programs for teen-agers increasing

The Hartford Courant

One would think there has never been a better time for a kid to be gay or lesbian or bisexual. More than ever before, there are support groups, books such as "The Journey Out" or "Young, Gay, and Proud," and pop culture validations like the gay teen in "My So-Called Life," now on rotation on MTV.

But in some ways, things couldn't be worse.

"Because the issue of gay rights is now very much in the open, it is a tougher time for people who are gay and lesbian," said David LaFontaine, chairman of the Massachusetts Governor's Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth, the only state organization of its kind in the country.

"Unfortunately," he said, "I think gay people have become a target group for people who no longer target racial minorities. We've become the scapegoat of the '90s."

Massachusetts has led the way in gay and lesbian awareness. After a national report on the high suicide rate among gay and lesbian teens, in 1992 Gov. William Weld, a Republican, formed the state commission, and the next year signed a gay rights law. LaFontaine said commission research has led to awareness programs in 100 Massachusetts high schools and to the formation of about 50 community-based Gay/Straight Alliances.

"Kids have been able to graduate high school and go on to college without feeling scarred because of prejudice," LaFontaine said. "If those horror stories we heard at the public hearings are going on in a liberal state like Massachusetts, then the environment must be even more difficult in other states." In fact, it is. Last month in Utah, the Salt Lake City Board of Education banned all clubs from city high schools in order to keep a fledgling Gay/Straight Alliance from meeting.

"Kick Those Butts"

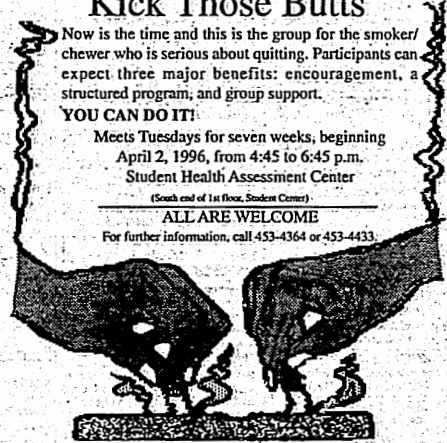

Now is the time and this is the group for the smoker/chewer who is serious about quitting. Participants can expect three major benefits: encouragement, a structured program, and group support.

YOU CAN DO IT!

Meets Tuesdays for seven weeks, beginning April 2, 1996, from 4:45 to 6:45 p.m.

Refrigerator shopping changing

Newsday

If that refrigerator wheezing away in the corner of your kitchen is on the verge of a meltdown, and you're planning to replace the old clunker, shopping will not be the same as you may remember. According to appliance industry figures, refrigerators are replaced, on average, every 10 to 15 years. A lot can change in that time, and, in fact, a lot has changed in only the past couple of years.

Refrigerators have always been the hardest-working appliances in the home, and manufacturers are not about to cut them any slack there. Many models now are shallower than older refrigerators, sacrificing some capacity to make them fit flush with base cabinets and give them a built-in look.

Other examples of the evolution of refrigerators come from Amana Refrigeration Inc. of Amama, Iowa. The company also incorporates an in-line water filter and, like other manufacturers, has designed flexible storage space such as roll-out shelves, and door bins that can accommodate large bottles and gallon containers.

SIUC coach Dan Callahan said U of I has improved its club from last season.

"They're improved very much so (from last season)," Callahan said. "I look at their stats and they're hitting .357 as a team, and that's well above what would be considered average in college baseball."

The effectiveness of both team's offense should play a major role in deciding the victor because of the Illini's high batting average, and the Salukis' opportunistic hitting, which is finally coming together after struggling earlier this season.

The University of Illinois, short-stop, Josh Klimek is having the type of season where he could single-handedly defeat the Salukis, and Southern's hitters started their climb out of an early season slump, according to Callahan.

"He (Klimek) could stop playing today, and you could say he's had a great year. You're looking at a guy who, through 19 games, has 11 home runs and 40 RBI's, and those are All-Conference credentials right out of the gate," Callahan said.

"I don't think it's a situation where you can say they have

"I don't care if you're Tim Kratochvil or a back line guy. If you go 1-for-28, that's a tough slump, and it can be demoralizing. I was happy for Tim."

arrived, but I think it's a situation for (senior catcher Tim) Kratochvil where yesterday was a huge confidence boost.

"I don't care if you're Tim Kratochvil or a back-line guy. If you go 1-for-28, that's a tough slump, and it can be a bit demoralizing. I was happy for Tim."

"He came out of it at the right time, got some clutch RBI's, and had a good day yesterday (Sunday, when he went two-for-four with two runs batted in)."

Kalogerou said last year he would have set placing first or second in a meet as a goal, but this year is different.

"Once you go to Nationals (NCAA finals), that's the only thing you consider important," Kalogerou said.

Kalogerou whose performance in the 1996 Indoor National Championships was not as good as he expected, said there is only one person to blame.

"I think I didn't rise to the occasion," Kalogerou said. "I put the blame on myself. When the meet started, I thought I was going to do well."

Perhaps one aiding factor for the Kato Lakatamia, Cyprus native achieving a place at the 1996

NCAA's was support from teammates and coaches.

"That helps (support from teammates and coaches)," he said. "It would be hard to do this on your own."

Perhaps having a fellow countryman on the same team does not hurt either.

Kalogerou said having junior distance runner Stelios Marneros, who is also from Cyprus, on the team helped him adjust easier to life at an American university.

"It helps a lot because you can talk more freely, talk in the same language," he said. "He was here one year earlier than me, so he showed me what to look for and what's important. He's helped me a lot."

As for the future, the business economics major is sure of one thing — he wants to earn a Masters of Business Administration degree. "I'm going to go to grad school,"

"I'm not disappointed with the players, but they could have done better," Daugherty said. "A little luck here and there could have changed our 323."

Daugherty said she had her eyes on one of the trophies for her team Sunday when they were one shot shy of fourth place.

She said they still had an opportunity Monday to gain a trophy.

"The goal was to finish in the hardware, but it's just half time. We still have another round to go," she said Sunday.

Daugherty said Sunday her team missed some critical close shots on the green which caused them to come on fifth place.

"We're so close to being a whole lot better," she said. "We were one shot from being out of fourth place."

Sophomore Stacy Skillman, who had a team low of 84 Monday and 79 Sunday, said the team performed well under the bad weather conditions.

"I can't complain, but I made some mistakes I have to learn from," Skillman said.

Skillman said on Sunday the wind and rain was a factor which effected the mental aspect on the game.

"We're so close to being a whole lot better."

Dianne Daugherty
women's golf coach

"Anytime you have a lot of wind and rain you have to be prepared," she said.

Skillman also said the weather conditions on Monday were brutal, and in order to be successful, a person has to be mentally prepared.

"It was cold and harder to get swings in," she said. "The wind was gusty and was able to take the ball. You may lose about 20 yards off the direction in which you hit the ball."

Sophomore Allyson Lawrence said the 20 minute lay off on Sunday from the match interrupted her groove.

"You're in your own zone when playing, and it's hard to get yourself back into focus of the game," Lawrence said.

Senior Kristen Oglesby said the wind played a greater factor on her focusing on her shots than the rain scored 82.

"It takes much more energy to play in the wind," Oglesby said. "You have to work harder, and think a lot more about how hard it's blowing."

Daugherty said bad weather from last week kept the team from practicing, but should not have affected its performance since the northern schools were unable to practice because of snow.

Orioles improving, but Ripken still baseball's biggest story

The Los Angeles Times

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—It didn't end with that spontaneous victory lap around Camden Yards. It didn't end with Lou Gehrig.

Cal Ripken Jr. pushed the record for consecutive games from 2,130 to 2,153, but it didn't end with the 1995 season.

In the aftermath of a memorable summer and hectic winter, the rites of spring still include a daily onslaught from reporters seeking interviews, fans clamoring for autographs.

"I've received enough attention to last a lifetime," Ripken says in a Baltimore Oriole clubhouse filled with all-stars after a winter of top-dollar spending to keep pace with the New York Yankees in the American League East.

The Orioles now include Roberto Alomar, Randy Myers, B.J. Surhoff, David Wells and Kent Mercker.

The club has a renowned new manager in Davey Johnson and a renowned new general manager in Pat Gillick, lured out of retirement.

The first baseman, Rafael Palmeiro, says, "I've been on good teams, but never one with this talent. It's time to get a (World Series) ring."

Ripken couldn't agree more, saying the focus should be on the team, how it blends, the attempt to win, but is anyone listening?

Much of the focus is still on Ripken, who says the demands have increased 20 or 30 times.

On a team that may now boast the best second baseman and best shortstop in baseball, the second baseman is operating in comparative anonymity.

"I don't mind at all that Cal gets the attention," said Alomar, who left the Toronto Blue Jays as a free agent after rejecting a three-year, $15 million offer, talked in vain to the Yankees and San Diego Padres and agreed to a three-year, $18 million contract with the Orioles, although actual value may be closer to $16.5 million because of deferrals.

"He's the legend," Alomar said of Ripken. "He's the guy surrounded by insanity. Everyone loves him, and I do too. The opportunity to play with him is a big reason I came here."

Another reason is that the market was surprisingly tepid for a five-

"I've received enough attention to last a lifetime."

Cal Ripken Jr.
Orioles shortstop time Gold Glove winner who played on two World Series champions. Some of that had to do with price. Some of it, Alomar has suggested throughout the spring, might have stemmed from a baseball bias against Latin players.

He has found it hard to understand why Craig Biggio, a second baseman with generally inferior statistics to his, was hotly pursued before re-signing with the Houston Astros for $22 million over four years.

Alomar wouldn't discuss Biggio but said, "It's hard for Latin players to get respect. It's not right, but it's never going to change."

Perhaps, but Alomar joins the Orioles with the obvious respect of his new double-play partner, who is pleased at the prospect of continuity. Alomar is the 31st second baseman Ripken will have played with since the streak began on May 30, 1982.

"If you look at the total package, he's arguably the best second baseman ever and the type player who can catapult us from contender to champion," Ripken said.

In the process, there is one thing Alomar can count on: Barring injury or managerial decision, Ripken will always be his right-hand man.

He has now broken the record that couldn't be broken, but "the approach is still what's critical to me," Ripken said. "I want to play every day, and I will play every day if the manager puts me in the lineup."

If the Ripken countdown distracted the Orioles during a disappointing 1995 season, it's difficult to measure. The Orioles didn't hit or execute as anticipated. A highly regarded pitching staff fell apart.

Phil Regan paid the price as manager; Roland Hemond as general manager. The new manager still must cope with the streak.

"The pressure was enormous on both Phil and Cal last year," Johnson said. "I tip my cap to both of them for the way they handled it."

"Cal has done the impossible, and it will probably take a power greater than both of us to make the decision at some point (as to when the streak will end). It's not a concern of mine. I look to Cal for leadership and rely on his experience. I know his goal is to win."

There is another goal as well. Sachio Kinugasa of Japan played in 2,215 consecutive games. A diplomatic Ripken calls it the world record.

Barring injury or rainout, he will eclipse it in Kansas City June 16. The Orioles are flying Kinugasa to Kansas City, then back to Baltimore for a hometown ceremony on June 17. Oriole publicist John Maroon said he doesn't expect the same 700 media requests he received in September, although he is still arranging periodic news conferences in an attempt to blunt the daily assault.

Of the demands since Sept. 6, Maroon said, "Media-wise I feel it's under control, but the fan frenzy is even greater because I think it awakened the average or lesser fan to who he is. He's more than a baseball player now, he's a celebrity. He's Jordan. He's Gretzky."

Baseball officials have suggested he's even more. They credit the style with which Ripken pursued and responded to the record for helping lift baseball from the morass of the labor dispute.

Ripken said he was flattered, but it was more a case of timing.

"People were looking for something positive to cling to and may have rediscovered a feeling and flavor of the game that night," he said.

"I'm proud if I contributed to it, but more than anything, it was a celebration of baseball. The cast changes, but baseball is a constant. No individual is ever the savior."

Ceballos comes back, but Lakers turn theirs

The Los Angeles Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—This time, Los Angeles Laker players turned their back on Cedric Ceballos.

Stung by a 103-94 loss to the Charlotte Hornets on Sunday night before 17,505 at the Forum, what should have been the easiest outing in a brutal five-game stretch, Nick Van Exel ripped Ceballos in terms rarely used publicly between teammates and Magic Johnson said the episode has him reconsidering his decision to return for 1996-97.

So much for forgive and forget.

"He abandoned us," Van Exel said after the Lakers announced Ceballos' return effective Monday and then lost for the third time in four games.

"This is a time we've all got to stick together. It's going to be hard. We've got a team captain who just walks out."

Will Johnson be next?

He said he will wait until the offseason before making any decision, but just the fact that he now needs time to decide anew the announcement he made three weeks earlier indicates plenty. Mainly, his level of frustration.

"Maybe I won't throw myself back into next season," he said. "I don't know."

"You know what I'm about. It's hard for me to deal with all this. It's just hard for me. I'm too old."

Clearly, the Lakers' two team leaders were not pacified by Ceballos returning earlier in the day for a meeting with management and a press conference to explain that family matters forced his disappearing act. Sympathetic to a personal problem, yes. Buying it, not exactly.

Ceballos, known to separate himself from players, was never exactly a favorite in the locker room to begin with, even if they did respect what he brought to the court. Then they hear about him going off to Lake Havasu? Big mistake at the Lake.

"I thought he'd be out making albums or something," Van Exel said.

That was in reference to Ceballos' extracurricular recording career. Now he's got a new rap, it's just that it comes from teammates.

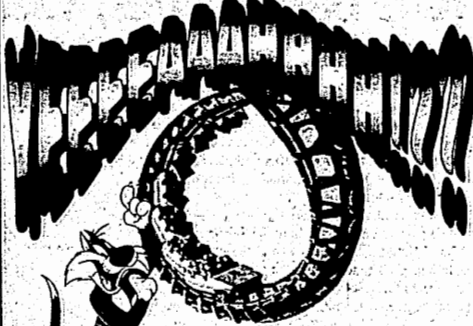

"I think a lot has to come off everybody's chest," said Johnson, who started at small forward for the second game in a row and had 28 points and eight rebounds. "A lot has to come off my chest and my mind."

Making matters worse Sunday, the Lakers also had to go without Vlade Divac, home because of tonsillitis.

That moved Horie Blount into the opening lineup at power forward, his second start of the season; and Elden Campbell to center, although the two positions are interchangeable in Coach Del Harris' system.

Divac's condition worsened as the night went on, so he may not have been along when the Lakers left Monday morning to begin a six-game trip at Orlando.

High jumper springs Salukis to top of MVC

By Jared Driskill
Daily Egyptian Reporter

If Saturday's SIUC track and field Invitational was any indication of things to come for junior high jumper Neophytos Kalogerou, he will play a major role in keeping Southern at the top of the Missouri Valley Conference high jump field.

According to SIUC men's assistant track and field coach, Mike Giesler, both Kalogerou and fellow high jumper Rodney White have the potential to be leaders on the team.

"They both have the ability to do well in the (Missouri Valley) Conference," Giesler said. "And who knows, I think they both have the ability to possibly go to the outdoor National Championships. This being the Olympic year, everyone seems to be doing better because they want to show their stuff."

"Especially for Kalogerou, if he goes 7-3 3/4, he's automatically on the Cyprus National Team," he said. Giesler added that he thinks his team will have a strong one-two performance from Kalogerou and White during the season.

"They're both motivated athletes who train hard and they do things the way they should be done," he added.

According to Kalogerou, now that former SIUC high jump standout Cameron Wright is gone, pressure will not be much of a factor in performing well.

Kalogerou did say Wright will continue to compete unattached in meets throughout the season, so not much has changed since Wright's departure.

"He (Wright) is still around (practicing with the team)," Kalogerou said. "So he's not just going to be jumping at the meets. We (Kalogerou and White) are still doing the same things, so nothing has changed really."

Kalogerou said placing first or second in meets throughout the season would be important to him, but he also emphasized the importance of conference and national meets.

"I think that finishing first or second in a meet is definitely important," Kalogerou said.

SIUC battles foes, weather; places fourth

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Even though the Saluki Invitational at Hickory Ridge Golf Course was plagued by lightning, rain, gusty winds and cold temperature Sunday and Monday, the women overcame the uncooperative weather and placed fourth.

The Salukis shot 323 during Sunday's first round, and 348 in Monday's final round.

Coach Diane Daugherty said she was pleased with her team's performance throughout the tournament. She said Monday's high score was due to the weather, and it should not be considered bad.

The women faced temperatures as low as 34 degrees with a 12 degree wind chill factor, along with a steady rain.

"I think anytime it's cold it's tough to play without feeling in your hands and toes," she said. "I'm pleased that they fought back, they could have blown up but they didn't. They were real troopers."

Daugherty said the members of the team have shared the role of the top 5 scorers throughout the tournament among Skillman, Smith, Zimmerman, Hudgins and Oglesby.

Daugherty said her team played a consistent match, but should have had a better outing Sunday.

SIUC Baseball

Illini looking to avenge last year's sweep

By Chad Anderson
DE Sports Editor

When the University of Illinois (12-7) comes knocking on the front door of the SIUC baseball team today at Abe Martin Field at 2:00 p.m., Illini coach "Itchy" Jones may just want to use his key to the door.

Jones coached Southern for 21 years to a 738-345-5 record, and left six years ago to accept the head position at the U of I.

As close as Jones' ties may be to his alma mater, the Salukis can not become distracted by the friendship between the two coaching staffs, as Southern is still below the .500 mark for the season with a record of 9-10, and the Illini are coming off a four-game sweep of Michigan State over the weekend.

Last season Southern swept the two-game series from the Illini, but

Between the Lines

Saluki softball third baseman Becky Lis has been named MVC Player of the Week.

The SIUC junior batted .556 (5-for-9), with all of those hits being of the extra-base variety (four doubles and a triple).

Lis also scored six runs, drove in three and had four walks, as the Salukis were 3-1 last week.

Former two-time All-Star hard throwing reliever Rob Dibble announced his retirement from baseball Monday.

Dibble, who was in the Chicago Cubs spring training camp as a non-roster invitee, ended a seven-year stint in the majors with a 27-25 record and 89 saves.

Known for his hot-temper, bad-boy image and less than pinpoint control, Dibble spent a majority of his career with the Cincinnati Reds.

He also made short stints with the Milwaukee Brewers and the Chicago White Sox before retiring.

Philadelphia Flyers right wing Mikael Renberg will most likely miss the remainder of the regular season, as a specialist urged him to take the next 10-to-14 days off to rest a nagging strained abdominal muscle.

Renberg, who has appeared in just four games since sustaining the injury on Jan. 22, has 23 goals and 20 assists in 49 games this season.

Todd Martin and MallVal Washington have been chosen to represent the United States as singles players in the upcoming Davis Cup quarterfinals against the Czech Republic next month in Prague.

Patrick McEnroe and Pat Galbraith will compromise the American doubles team.

With the NCAA Tournament on hold until Saturday, the NIT continues its version of March Madness tonight in New York.

In semifinal action, Tulane takes on Nebraska at 6 p.m., and the Alabama Crimson Tide takes on St. John's University an 8 p.m.
