Mayoral candidate John Budslick speaks to Adrienne Cortes, a sophomore in aviation maintenance from Roselle. Budslick took his political messages to the streets of Carbondale Wednesday afternoon.

Mayoral candidates Dillard, Budslick plan aggressive campaigns

JAY SCHWAB
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Count Carbondale mayoral hopeful John Budslick as an example of a candidate aware that campaigning is a 24-hour-a-day endeavor.

Eager to spread his message to the masses, Budslick spent the wee hours Monday morning shuffling students who were returning to town after spring break from the Carbondale Amtrak station to their various dwellings.

Chauffeur Budslick said he asked the students how they spent their time off and talked a little local politics for good measure.

As expected, both Budslick — a longtime Carbondale businessman — and incumbent Mayor Neil Dillard emerged as the mayoral finalists after February's primary run-off. The two will square off in the April 13 general election. Budslick knows defeating the incumbent will not be an easy task.

"It's a hard race — it takes a lot of time, a lot of work and a lot of thinking," he said.

The fact that Dillard garnered the most votes in the primary may not have come as a surprise, but his winning margin turned some heads around town.

Japanese diplomat to address international relations

ERIN FAFOGLIA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Consul General Mitoji Yabunaka, a top United States diplomat representing Japan, will be speaking for the first time at SIUC tonight at 7 in the Student Center Kaskaskia Room.

The lecture titled "U.S.-Japan Relations Today and Tomorrow" will cover topics such as United States and Japan relations, security relations and the present situation in Japan and Asia.

Because SIUC has such a strong Japanese education program, the Consul's lecture will help promote further understanding between the United States and Japan.

Kathy Bury-Swindell, associate director of SIUC-Niigata, has been coordinating the event and said she is extremely excited to have Yabunaka at SIUC.

"The Consul General is a very high ranking Japanese official, and someone of his rank has never been here before," Swindell said.

Swindell said her goal was to generate enough publicity of the event to generate enthusiasm from students and faculty. Thomas Saville, coordinator of Study, Abroad Programs for SIUC, said he is anticipating a positive effect from Yabunaka's visit and lecture.

"We're obviously very happy to have him here, and it will help strengthen our ties with Japan," Saville said.

A reception will follow the lecture in the Student Center Old Main Lounge, which will give the audience a chance to meet Yabunaka.

"We hope everyone will take the opportunity to come to meet and interact with the Consul General," Swindell said.

Yabunaka will arrive this morning and leave Friday. His activities in Carbondale are a lecture in an international politics and economics class and a tour of campus, the city and Crab Orchard Recreation Area. Chancellor Jo Ann Argensinger and various SIUC department chairs, professors and directors will meet with Yabunaka today.

Yabunaka came to Chicago in November last year and has jurisdiction over four states of the Midwest region — Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

Yabunaka's visit was coordinated by International Programs and Services with help from Japanese Student Association and is sponsored by the Office of the Chancellor.

RIISING SUN

"U.S.-Japan Relations Today and Tomorrow" will be tonight from 7 to 8 in the Student Center Kaskaskia Room. A reception will immediately follow in Student Center Old Main Lounge. There is no cost to attend, and it is open to the public.

Cross-Examination Debate Association's annual Nationals tournament.

According to Phillip J. Glenn, assistant professor of speech communication, SIUC's debate team has fared well in competitions for a long time.

"We've won five national titles since the mid-1980s, with the last one being in '96," Glenn said. "I think it's a very excellent extracurricular activity that promotes civic awareness."

The SIUC team demonstrates its talents all year long, culminating with its participation in the Nationals. During this year's competition conducted at the University, SIUC's two debate teams tied for eighth and fifth place, respectively, from more than 200 schools participating within the event.

The topic of debate was the posi-itive and negative aspects of broadening the Civil Rights Act, which prevents discrimination in the workplace. Glenn said this is an ideal topic for debate because of its many dimensions.

"They try to pick topics that are contemporary and multi-faceted," Glenn said. "With this issue, there are several things one could debate about."

The civil rights topic presented a unique challenge to team member James Roland, a senior in speech communication and political science major from Pineville, La., because of President Ted Sanders advised George Bush on education policy, served on cabinet.

KAREN BLATTER
ACADEMIC AFFAIRS EDITOR

When SIU President John "Ted" Sanders is not thinking of the University or trying to relax, one of his favorite pastimes is to spend time on his sailboat. Sanders owns a sailboat that he keeps at Kentucky Lake.

Sanders' 28-foot boat fits his needs and fills his love of sailing. Being president, he does not get a lot of free time, but whenever Sanders gets to set sail, he truly enjoys his time.

"The purpose of sailing is to put yourself against nature," he said. "When you are sailing you can't think of anything else — you have to be totally absorbed. It is a good therapy."

Judy Hopkins, executive secretary to the president, has been working with Sanders since he arrived at the University in 1995.

She has continuous contact with the president and knows how busy and dedicated Sanders is to his job and responsibilities.

"He gives so much of his personal life to the University," she said. "He can never get away, and he takes his work home with him."

Life as the president of the University is full of meetings and trips back and forth from

THIEVES, MURDERERS:

The History Channel takes a close look at the blood-stained past of Cave-in-Rock.

According to the Bible, Egypt was a place of darkness, superstition, evil and even slavery.

PIRATES

The History Channel will air the hour-long program "River Pirates," which will focus on Cave-in-Rock at 7 tonight.

Simon, a SIUC history professor.

Teaching history since 1964, Simon has taken a special interest in the annals of Southern Illinois, including how Cave-in-Rock became a den of thieves and killers.

According to Simon, the cave has been well-known since the first settlers traveled through the area.

"The cave is on the Illinois side. It's a large natural cave that's 40 feet high, 55 feet wide and 160 feet deep," Simon said. "A lot of people could get in there. Everyone who went by it would mention it if they were keeping a journal."

During the late 1700s and early 1800s about one million settlers left their homes in the East and traveled down the Ohio River toward the promise of unclaimed land in the West. Most settlers never got any further than Cave-in-Rock.

"What happens is the Ohio River narrows," Simon said. "There are safe channels and unpredictable channels so the settlers would hire pilots. Some of the pilots were trustworthy, and some were in league with the pirates. Cave-in-Rock became headquarters for evil characters."

The outlaws who populated the cave were merciless and proved that serial killers is not a 20th-century phenomenon.

The most notorious outlaws were siblings Big and Little Harpe. According to Simon, the brothers were originally from North Carolina but moved west after the Revolutionary War because their father sided with England.

According to Simon, the Harpes' signature killings were characterized by slitting the stomach of their victims, filling them with stones and sinking the bodies in the river.

Fellow outlaws of Cave-in-Rock ostracized the brothers after a particularly gruesome killing in which the brothers tied a man to a blindfolded horse and drove it off a cliff because the Harpes

Student shot while on spring break in Florida

A student at Indiana State University was shot in the face while on spring break in what Daytona Beach police are calling an attempted murder.

Brandon Richardson, 23, has a bullet lodged in the right side of his face, police said. He was in critical but stable condition March 16, only hours after he was shot outside a sportswear store along the oceanfront State Road A1A. Richardson's injuries are not life threatening, and he is expected to recover, police said.

There are no suspects in the case, and police say there appear to have been no witnesses.

Our Word

Budsllick proposal smacks of election politics

Never before have landlord/tenant issues and Select 2000 been such an urgent concern for the City of Carbondale than in the last month. In this time mayoral candidate and Carbondale City Councilman John Budsllick has felt the need to publicly issue a written statement against SIUC's Select 2000 initiative and call for an off-the-agenda vote on three of the six items originally proposed by the Graduate and Professional Student Council at the Feb. 16 City Council meeting.

So what's the urgency? What is so special about this last month that has John Budsllick crusading for student rights more vocally than most of his term on the City Council? Sure, Budsllick has tended to vote for the student interest in his tenure but never with the fireworks he's had recently. But then again it's election time, and for Budsllick this means winning the affection of the student body or being dead weight at the polls.

Two years ago when Budsllick was running for a City Council seat, the students were the lifeblood of his campaign, accounting for more than half his votes as he scraped by incumbent John Yow by only 13 votes. Budsllick denies it, but is it any wonder Budsllick has lit a roman candle with the student body's name on it less than a month before the general election?

As students, we shouldn't be taken in by the warm glow of Budsllick's recent affection without considering the motive behind the smile. If Budsllick is so quick to attach an amplifier to his megaphone and champion the student plight just before the polls open yet outright deny it has anything to do with his mayoral campaign, how much would it take for him to sway back in the opposite direction after the election? If he loses the campaign, will he still be in attendance at the City Council meetings defending students' rights as loudly from the audience as he would in the mayoral chair?

The DAILY EGYPTIAN is pleased Councilman Budsllick is so supportive of the same three proposed landlord/tenant ordinances we endorsed in an earlier editorial, but that was back in February — where was his call for an urgent vote then?

In fact, it was then that Budsllick agreed with Mayor Dillard and the other City Council members on recommending further discussion among students and landlords before action was taken. That has not happened yet, but Budsllick has changed his mind about waiting.

Does this all mean students shouldn't vote for Budsllick at the general election April 13? Not necessarily, but a vote for Budsllick or any other political candidate must take into consideration the glitz and glamour of election-time pandering made by any of the candidates. Vote, but make an informed decision while looking at the big picture when choosing for whom to vote.

The days of hand-shaking, baby-kissing politicians during election time aren't dead — as students we're just a little too old to kiss.

World Wide Wait wonderful for weirdos

My copy of Webster's New World Dictionary has these two definitions of "web" — "a carefully woven trap or snare" and "a complicated work of the imagination." The example they use is "web of lies." I don't know if the World Wide Web is as sinister as all that, but while surfing it to work on a paper over spring break I often felt snared in some work of the imagination. It's hard to sort out the bombardment of facts, pseudo-facts, tripe, insanity and vanity. Information has to share a lot of space on the Information Superhighway. Why are we so fascinated with it?

One appeal of all computing is that you need stuff. Most of us like stuff, and since we use computers for important things, computer stuff is important stuff. It's created a new brand of small talk. You get to ask people about their "bytes" and "hard drives" which you probably couldn't 20 years ago. This is useful for the guy at the computer store who laughs when you say that you hope the new modern he just installed will make your pathetic 5-year-old computer load faster. Then you tell him he can bite your hard drive.

Even the stubborn few who still haven't gotten computer stuff can't avoid the Internet. Classes require some familiarity with it, and I was recently referred to a company's website by its automated 1-800 number. I assume they thought the recording was too personal. When I went to the site it had the same information as the recording, then referred me to the 1-800 number.

Supposedly, SIUC students have easy access to Internet stuff, but during the brief time that I used the University program I did an experiment. I started to log on, then got in my car and drove to campus. When I arrived at the computer lab, I logged on and called my wife back home. Our computer was still dialing. I honestly hate stuff.

In the library, it's easy to see what appeals to people on the Net. It's easy because I'm standing over their shoulders hoping they'll get annoyed and leave. The last time I had to wait for a computer, four out of 11 were taken by guys using them to meet women. One of them was in a chat room where he had named himself — "I'm not making this up — "Love God."

Anonymity is attraction number two. People like "Love God" have rich fantasy lives thanks to the wonders of the information age. The Internet is a faceless world where we can create ourselves. This is good for a shy computer nerd trying to meet other lonely, intelligent people, or a psychotic looking for lonely, stupid people. You don't even need chat rooms to experience this kind of acting. The web is full of sites devoted to someone's dramatized version of themselves.

In theory, I think the technology for a worldwide exchange of ideas is exciting. And, like all media, it should be an open place to all the freakazoid conspiracy theorists and religious fanatics along with the rest. A place where you can write "bite my hard drive" twice, once for the sheer joy of it. We don't need censors to weed out the valuable stuff from the garbage. We just need to get away from the blind, data-for-data's sake mentality of the media age. There are still pages, not to mention human beings, filled with information.

GPSC president miffed! by fee editorial

Dear Editor,

I was, to put it mildly, not entirely pleased with the tone of the March 24th editorial regarding GPSC's action on the proposed fee increases. The council considered each of the proposed fee increases in turn. Of those we declined to accept, all but one of the proposals called for increases of nominal amounts. The only substantial increase was rejected in the entirety was the athletic fee increase.

Perhaps the reporter on hand that night nodded off during the debate, but each proposal, with the exception of the athletic fee, was discussed in detail, including the likelihood that the departments in question may or may not be able to generate revenues through other means. As for the athletic fee increase, the council opted to reiterate its stance from last year. It has been and remains to be our opinion that the Athletic Department is not subject to the same level of scrutiny that any other program would have to endure. It is not our intention to make continued sacrifices to the proverbial sacred cow.

Finally, our work on fee increases for FY '01 is not completed. The next step is to put our opinion before the BOT in the coming weeks and hope that it does not, once again, fall on deaf ears.

Having said that, let me close by saying that the time has come for thoughtful and informed editorial commentary, and GPSC is once again at the forefront in calling for this change.

Equal employment is the real issue in city elections

Dear Editor,

From where I sit in the heartland, the candidates in the current campaign for mayor and city council in Carbondale are not addressing the most important issues facing the Carbondale community. As an African-American, I feel that the two most important issues are race relations and fair employment, meaning fair representation of minorities in the city agencies, SIUC and the Carbondale business sector. The need for a dialogue on these issues can be shown by the recent discrimination case brought against the City of Carbondale Police Department. The city settled, implying that there might be discrimination in the police department. This took place under the Dillard administration. It is my opinion that John Budsllick would bring about a change in racial policies in the city's agencies and promote equal employment for the minorities in Carbondale.

If there is something wrong in the society or the community, candidates should speak out on those wrongs. None of the candidates are significantly doing this. However, I feel that the presence of Corne McDaniel and Carl Flowers on the city council would further the concerns of the African-American community.

If voters wish to make Carbondale a better community, I suggest they vote for Budsllick, Flowers and McDaniel. A vote for Dillard is a vote for the past. In order to attain a better future, it is necessary that there be no voter apathy among African-Americans, students or the general population. A yes vote for Budsllick, Flowers and McDaniel from all three voting sectors will make Carbondale a better community.

The 2,037 votes for Dillard more than doubled the support Budsllick received.

"Like a basketball team that ekes out an 'ugly victory,'" Budsllick said he is not discouraged by the primary results.

"We just wanted to make the cut, and we did," Budsllick said.

"Budsllick, who has relied upon the help of his sons at work to free up campaigning time, said his supporters are as enthusiastic as ever about his chances of unseating Dillard.

"Whether [I win] has yet to be decided, but we are working hard to [examine] where we're going and where we want to be," he said.

For his part, Dillard is putting the primary out of mind.

"The primary has been put aside," the mayor said. "We started the next day 0-0, and this time only one person will come out on top." Dillard has been mayor of Carbondale since 1987, while Budsllick, who owns the Budsllick Management, parlayed strong student support into a victorious bid for a Carbondale City Council seat in 1997.

Like Budsllick, Dillard plans an aggressive campaign stretch drive.

"I'm campaigning every day, but I'm also doing what's necessary to keep up with what needs to be at the mayor's office," Dillard said.

"My wife and I don't have casual evenings anymore," Dillard said. "It's an intense time."

Dillard lists interacting with the people of Carbondale as a part of the campaign he enjoys.

"You really learn what people think," Dillard said. "I want to be available, I want to be open, and I want to be honest."

Dillard said he invites citizens to voice their complaints, but the vast majority of Carbondale residents he has spoken with expressed pleasure with the manner in which Carbondale is being run.

Both candidates said they hope to tap heavily into the student vote. As a councilman, Budsllick was instrumental in the lowering of Carbondale's bar entrance age. He said consistent communication with students would be an important part of his job as mayor, as would his ability to strike compromise.

"Being in business helps me as far as my negotiation skills," Budsllick said. "I've worked on enough deals where I'm able to work out some of the finer points — I can bend a little."

Budsllick's fortunes may receive a boost from the absence of the new high school referendum on the general election ballot. The referendum was approved by voters in the primary.

"I believe that I received a lot of support from the people who came out to vote for the new high school," Dillard said on the night of the primary.

Jake Panici (right), a sophomore in pre-med from Dongola, works together with other SIUC volunteers to finish placing drywall on the ceiling of the house they are building for Habitat for Humanity. Fifteen SIUC students took part in "Habitat for Humanity's Collegiate Challenge: Spring Break '99" in St. Petersburg, Fla. The group worked on two sites throughout the week, performing various jobs at each one.

Lending a helping hand

We think we know ourselves until something like this happens — it brought me back to myself, reality and what I strive to be. Besides learning how to put a house together, I learned there are a handful of us out there helping people and realizing what matters in life.

Sarah Kocher, a sophomore in psychology from Tuscola, hangs drywall with the help of others participating in the Habitat project.

Sitting in a van somewhere between Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., Heidi Royalty spent a few minutes recording her reflections in a journal on her recent spring break trip to St. Petersburg, Fla.

Royalty, an undecided sophomore from Bloomington, along with 15 SIUC students armed with sleeping bags, luggage and toolboxes anxiously gathered in a circle at 6:30 a.m. March 13 at the Newman Catholic Student Center, 713 S. Washington. Together they prayed for safety and guidance as they prepared to embark on a week-long trip 15 hours away from Carbondale.

Their mission was to continue construction work on houses in St. Petersburg as part of "Habitat for Humanity's Collegiate Challenge: Spring Break '99."

Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit Christian organization dedicated to eliminating poverty housing worldwide. As part of Collegiate Challenge, student volunteers from more than 250 universities travel to work on home sites throughout the United States during their spring breaks.

After loading a U-Haul and packing lunches, the group ate a breakfast of bear claw pastries and orange juice and then piled into three vans for their sunny destination.

Rob Anderson, a senior in architecture from Bloomington, spent the eight-hour drive to Georgia behind the wheel in one van with Jake Panici at his side.

Panici, a sophomore in pre-med from Dongola, served as disc jockey and played a continuous stream of '80s music for the other three passengers.

"It was a long, cold and dreary trip," Anderson said. "We talked a lot — Jake was my sidekick."

After a stop for the night, five pizzas, two televised games of the NCAA basketball tournament and a few hours of sleep in Marietta, Ga., the group continued their trip. They finally arrived at the First Presbyterian Church in St. Petersburg Sunday evening.

After an hour of settling in, Anderson, Panici and other members of the group explored some of the beaches off Tampa Bay a few blocks from the church.

Bridget Barth, a junior in psychology from Madison, Wis., said the view of Tampa Bay from the church was one of the many aesthetically pleasing aspects of the city.

"St. Petersburg is beautiful — it is a nice, clean resort city," she said. "The clear skies and sunshine was nice because they are things we are not used to seeing in Carbondale yet."

Remiko Kitazawa, a senior in interior design from Niigata, Japan, hammers in the final nails, making it possible for another volunteer to continue working on the siding of the house.

With the sound of an alarm clock at 6:30 in the morning, Barth and the others woke up to a quick breakfast and a week of work ahead of them.

According to Barth, the crew spent the week working on two adjacent home sites. The earlier part of the week consisted of hanging sheets of drywall on the walls and ceilings of one house as well as placing siding on the exterior.

The crew also leveled ground, laid the foundation and smoothed out the newly poured concrete on the second site.

"During the trip, I think we did really good work," she said. "With the houses that we worked on we had many different experiences — we weren't stuck doing the same thing each day."

Barth said through the tedious work, friendships developed that did not exist before.

"Working together easily is not something that occurs spontaneously," she said. "I saw different people working well together each day and the friendships happened."

For Anderson, working with other members of the group enabled him to share meaningful experiences.

"I didn't know any of the people that were going on the trip," Anderson said. "By the end of the week I had made 16 new friends."

Unlike previous Habitat experiences, the group was unable to meet the homeowner of one of the houses because of conflicting work schedules. Despite some disappointment, Barth said the work still impacted group members' lives.

"From the neighborhood we were in you could see that the work wasn't something that would have been done if Habitat wasn't there," Barth said.

By the end of each day, the work site was left behind, and the group set forth for a little rest and relaxation.

Barth said some of the highlights of the week were two dinners prepared by David Gardener, a family friend of Habitat faculty adviser John Scarano, and SIUC associate professor Greg Budzban.

After a dinner of ribs and Texas toast Tuesday, Gardener showed the group Madeira Beach and John's Pass, a boardwalk with tourist shops on the gulf of Mexico.

Anderson said the sights off the beach and boardwalk were amazing.

"You could look out into the water and see dolphins," Anderson said. "Coming from Illinois, you don't always get a chance to see that."

Budzban, on sabbatical in Florida, brought the grill, food and a football for the group Wednesday night as they cooked out in a park on the bay.

After the cookout, the group ventured into Beers of the World, a bar in Clearwater, and played games of pool while those 21 and older enjoyed green beer in celebration of the Irish holiday.

Both Anderson and Panici said the trip gave them both opportunities to work for a charitable cause and to relax and have fun.

"It was the best of both worlds — work hard, play hard," Panici said. "Being able to go out in the evening was nice because you knew that you accomplished something during the day."

"That is what made it so much better at the end of the day — knowing you did something for a better cause," Anderson said.

Along with repeat trips to the beach, members of the group also visited the Salvador Dali museum.

"Overall it was fun to go out," Barth said. "It seemed like there was so much to do in St. Petersburg."

For Anderson, the spring break trip far surpassed any of his expectations.

"The week had gone by so quickly, and I was disappointed it ended," Anderson said. "I was even disappointed that the work ceased."

As for Panici, the intrinsic benefits of his spring break far outweighed any materialistic profits that he might have gained.

"I was working Tuesday when I just stopped for a second to think and I realized there wasn't going to be a paycheck at the end of the week," Panici said. "There was a different type of reward, and it made me smile."

The close of Royalty's journal entry summed up the feelings of Panici and most of those on the trip.

For most of the trip I sat back and absorbed everyone and who they are. I came to the conclusion that we are all great people who gave up a week of our time to do something worthwhile.

and where his concerns need to be. Even though Sanders is consistently thinking about the University, he puts high value on his family.

"There is not a lot of free time in this job, but nothing comes before family," he said.

As a father of four and grandfather to six, Sanders always is trying to make time for his family.

Sanders is better known as Ted rather than his birth name of John. The name John is a family name, that has passed down from past generations; but Sanders' parents always called him Ted, short for his middle name Theodore.

Before he came to SIU, Sanders advised the president of the United States on education policy and served as a member of the president's cabinet.

As the acting secretary and deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Education, Sanders got to work side-by-side with former President George Bush from March 1989 to May 1991.

Through the time that Sanders worked with Bush, he was able to gain a deep admiration for him and enjoyed working with him.

"It was absolutely wonderful (working with him)," he said. "George Bush is one of the most wonderful people you could ever meet. He is just as warm and caring as Barbara Bush."

Sanders remembers all of the times he spent in the White House and treasures the memories. He experienced something that some U.S. citizens have dreams of — he got to see the private places of the White House.

He spent many of his days in the Oval Office working with the president. Sanders and his wife, Beverly, also became friends with the Bushs and were able to see the personal living quarters of the president.

"It was the most rewarding personal thing you can ever do," he said.

After serving on the President's cabinet, Sanders was the Chief Executive Officer of the Ohio Department of Education. Then in July 1995, Sanders became president of SIU.

Among Sanders' long list of accomplishments, he received the David G. Imig Award for Distinguished Achievement in Teacher Education in February. Sanders chairs a 36-member task force on teacher education.

Jack Dyer, executive assistant for media services in the office of the President, set up the original press conference that announced Sanders as SIU president and has worked with him since.

Dyer has been able to observe Sanders while he is working hard for the University.

"He has a very analytical mind," Dyer said. "He is able to detach himself emotionally from a situation and analyze it. He is very cool under fire; if there is a crisis situation, he is able to be calm and reserved."

Last year, Dyer went with Sanders to the Senate and House of Representative hearings. There Dyer was able to see the way people interacted with Sanders.

"I was impressed by the way he is able to work with people and the way that people respect him," Dyer said.

When Sanders came to the University, his background was primarily in lower education, but he did extensive work in Washington D.C. in higher education.

"I have always had an interest in higher education," he said. "It was a river that I never climbed before. A lot of what I do in this job is a lot of what I did in my other jobs."

Despite being consistently on his toes, Sanders stays motivated every day.

Sanders knows the importance of his job and how all of his actions affect the students at SIU.

"The students make me want to come work more than anything else," he said. "Knowing that you are part of something that is bigger than yourself, and that you are impacting what people will do in their lives and what you are doing is important and matters. You never know what the issue for the day is going to be."

wanted to hear the dying man's screams as he fell.

Other famous criminals included

Ford's Ferry Gang and the leader of the Cave-in-Rock outlaws, Samuel Mason.

"Samuel Mason opened 'The Liquor Vault and House of Entertainment' which lured river pilots," Simon said. "People were robbed, women were sold as prostitutes there."

According to Simon, Cave-in-Rock was a place people wanted to stay away from during the time the state of Illinois was being born.

"This cave was a place where evil people lived in the early days," Simon said.

its emotional aspects.

"The topic was very relevant to each of us and will be in the future in our careers," Roland said. "We had to deal with issues like racism and sexism in the workplace, and we each took a personal responsibility to address these seriously."

Roland placed seventh in the individual speaking category.

Jeff Metz, a junior in public relations from Glenview, said during the debate he was able to gain knowledge on how such discrimination affects various groups within the workplace.

"This year's topic was emotionally relevant to all of us," Metz said. "It allowed me to understand the different problems minority groups face in this country."

Lecturer and debate director Jennifer Rigdon was confronted with the extra challenge of balancing her duties with coaching responsibilities.

"Since we were the host, it made for difficult logistics," Rigdon said. "I found myself caught between hosting the tournament and coaching the team... which are two different mindsets entirely."

There are no prerequisites for joining the debate team. Glenn said that being on the squad builds skills that are beneficial to other areas of life.

"There are lots of chances for students who aren't debaters to learn those skills for other activities and careers," Glenn said. "Skills include being able to think on your feet, making good arguments, listening well and analyzing issues."

In the future, Rigdon hopes debating will receive more attention from the community.

"It's not as flashy or obviously exciting as a sports event, but in my opinion, it's very exciting and challenging," Rigdon said. "The skills you learn help you to become a better student."

that Jenkins could play in the NABC All-Star game Sunday. If one of the expected 20-24 players fail to show, he is first in line on the waiting list.

"I brought extra clothes just in case," said Jenkins, who is scheduled to return to Carbondale Friday afternoon.

Jenkins earned the right to compete in the event after Saluki coach Bruce Weber submitted a tape of some of Jenkins' best dunks of the year to a selection committee. While at home in Rock Island for spring break, Jenkins received word of the news from assistant coach Rodney Watson.

"I was sitting at home and he called me and said, 'Monte, have you been practicing on your dunks?'" Jenkins said.

The entire Salukis coaching staff will be on hand to support Jenkins compete against the likes of Creighton University forward Rodney Buford, University of North Carolina-Charlotte forward Galen Young and University of Cincinnati guard Melvin Levett.

Levett, nicknamed "The Helicopter" because of his 41-inch vertical leap, is the early favorite to win the contest.

But like Levett, Jenkins believes he can accumulate frequent flyer miles on the court, too.

"If he's 'The Helicopter,' then I'd call myself 'Little Superman,'" Jenkins said. "I can fly a little bit, too. I just want to show America what I've got because they haven't seen me."

Starting off "with basics" is the plan for Jenkins in the first round. Nothing too fancy until ...

"For the next round, I've got a two-hand windmill that nobody has seen yet," Jenkins said. "The crowd hasn't seen it and not a lot of the guys on the team have seen it."

If that propels him into the finals, then it's time for his signature "wheel it" one-hand windmill jam. The name comes from a fan, who Jenkins can only identify as a guy "who always sat to the left of the Dawg Pound during home games."

"He would always yell, 'Monte, wheel it, Monte, wheel it,'" Jenkins said. "He's done it for the past four years, so I'm saving that for last."

The Illini would score three more runs on a Luke Simmons home run in that inning. In relief of Hon, freshman Luke Nelson and Jim Pecoraro followed before giving way to freshman closer Jake Alley.

Pecoraro, who had only pitched in two innings this season after returning from an injury, was able to give the Salukis the help they needed when the Illini started to gain momentum.

Alley gave up two runs in the ninth before shutting down the final two Illini hitters with a runner on second base to earn his fifth save of the season.

"As it turned out we needed all the runs we got and that's a credit to our offense," Callahan said. "Every time they scored it seemed like we countered, and obviously we needed every run."

Sister Sister

Maria and Monica inherit tennis-rich tradition which runs in Villarreal family

PAUL WLEKLINSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

When another little girl stuck her tongue out at 6-year-old Maria Villarreal, she quickly broke down in tears and ran for her mother.

But unlike her bashful older sister, 3-year-old Monica took matters into her own hands. She marched over to the girl and kicked her in the shin.

"She was much bolder than I was," said Maria, who is now 21 and a senior for the SIUC women's tennis team. "It's kind of embarrassing, but that's the way she is."

UPCOMING

• The Villarreal sisters and the Salukis (3-3, 0-1) travel to St. Louis University Friday. They return to Missouri Valley Conference action Saturday morning in St. Louis, taking on Illinois State University at 10. They end the weekend against the University of Wyoming.

While Maria may be less coy today, Monica — now an 18-year-old undecided freshman — is the same "spunky" little girl who kicked a stranger in defense of her sister's honor.

"I asked Maria which one it was because she was crying," Monica said. "Maria pointed to her, so I kicked her."

SIUC tennis coach Judy Auld says Maria's spunkiness is evident on the tennis court as well. Natives of Big Springs, Texas, the Villarreal sisters began their tennis careers as soon as their hands were large enough to hold a racket.

Tennis runs in their family's blood. Their father, Rey Villarreal, was a state champion tennis player in high school and continued playing at Angelo State University in San Angelo, Texas. His brother was also a state champion in high school as well.

"Our dad played, and he used to coach us," Maria said. "We would just hang around the tennis courts. That's how it pretty much started. He started us when we were really little babies throwing beach balls to us."

Both quickly fell in love with the game and sharpened their skills under the guidance of their father.

"I started playing tennis because everybody in my family played," Monica said. "It was kind of like a family tradition."

Maria, who first played competitively at the age of 14, earned all-state honors in 4A doubles for Big Springs Senior High School before attending Collin County Community College.

There she received first-team NJCAA Division II All-American status at No. 2 doubles and a second-team All-American at No. 3 singles.

Unlike Maria, Monica came to SIUC straight from high school, where she was advanced to the semifinals last spring in singles play at the Texas 4A championships and earned all-state honors as well.

With excellent tennis resumes, Auld knew the Villarreal sisters would fit in well at SIUC — and it did not hurt knowing how successful their father was in his career.

"The father is very athletic. He is a marathon runner," Auld said. "He's very much an achiever himself, so I felt that he would have set the standards even more for the daughters."

"They're both very responsible, very good work ethic, and they're very focused on the court. The big difference right now is, I think that Monica is a little bit more driven as far as tennis."

As successful as both tennis careers have been for each Villarreal sister, one would think it would be a result of a fierce competitive sibling rivalry, but it was not. Tempers flared as competitive drives took over.

So who held the upper hand?

"Maria," Monica said, "because she had the car. She left me in Dallas. We went to Dallas by ourselves for a tennis tournament, and she left me in Dallas."

They had begun a match together, but it ended abruptly when Maria became angry and stormed off the court. She drove away, leaving Monica standing on the court.

Maria denies the incident. "I did not leave you that time," she said. "I left you before then another time."

Trying to dunk his way into the spotlight

Senior guard sees opportunity to showcase high-flying talent.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
SPORTS EDITOR

And they say a dunk is only worth two points.

In SIUC senior guard Monte Jenkins' eyes, a 360-degree jam or double-pump reverse dunk tonight in Tampa, Fla., could be worth a whole lot more in terms of his pursuit of a professional basketball career. Jenkins is among the eight high-flyers competing in the 11th-annual college slam dunk at the Ice Palace, as part of the festivities connected with the NCAA Final Four. The event will be televised on ESPN.

Jenkins — the 1999 Missouri Valley Conference Defensive Player of the Year — has not been invited to any of the NBA pre-draft camps, but a good showing tonight could change that. The NBA conducts camps in Virginia (Portsmouth Invitational), Phoenix (Desert Classic) and Chicago (NBA Pre-draft camp) prior to the June draft.

The Portsmouth camp begins next Wednesday, where fellow MVC standouts Marcus Wilson (University of Evansville) and Rodney Buford (Creighton University) already have been asked to attend.

"If I win this thing, everybody's going to say, 'This guy is a good athlete,'" Jenkins said. "I think it could give me a career a major boost. Maybe I'll get an invitation to one of those camps."

There is also a strong possibility

Crazy ending

Baseball team holds off Fighting Illini after blowing a 9-2 lead

MIKE BJORKLUND
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — In this crazy, mixed-up world, the Saluki baseball team found a way to make it crazier.

Leading 9-2 heading into the bottom of the sixth inning, SIUC found a way to let the University of Illinois-Champaign (9-6) tie the game at 10 heading into the eighth inning.

Salukis	13
Fighting Illini	12

But rest assured, the Salukis would regain the lead and hold on for a 13-12 victory at Illinois Field Wednesday afternoon.

"It wasn't a pretty win by any means, but somebody had to win and somebody had to lose."

SIUC coach Dan Callahan said, "I'm glad we won."

The Salukis jumped out to a five-run first inning on only two hits. Fighting Illini starting pitcher Justin Olson gave up five earned runs, three walks and threw three wild pitches to the six Saluki batter he faced.

After the dust settled, the Salukis found themselves with a comfortable 5-0 lead.

Saluki starting pitcher Jason Fraser threw two perfect innings before allowing the Fighting Illini to score in the third inning.

Fraser struggled on the mound, giving up one earned run, striking out six and walking four Illini batters before leaving the game for freshman Pat Hon in the fifth.

The Saluki hitters continued their torrid pace, connecting for 12 hits. Freshman Jeff Stanek finished the game 2-for-4 with three
