Students convicted at Strip riot hearing

Rioters facing up to year suspension

By Shawna Donovan
DE Government/Politics Editor

Two SIUC students face suspension from school for a year following their alleged actions in the Oct. 26-27 riots on the Strip, a University spokeswoman says.

The two students, whose names were not released Tuesday, were convicted by the Student Judicial Affairs Board of violating the Student Code of Conduct after their formal hearings, Sue Davis, University News Service director, said.

Any additional information on whether or not the students were charged with criminal violations or if the students admitted guilt was not available.

Davis said the students have a right to appeal the board's decisions. Students have up to five days after the decision was made, according to the Student Conduct Code.

Ingrid Gadoway Clarke, University Ombudsman director, said there are three appeals processes students can go through before actually receiving their punishments.

"Appeals can last up to a couple of months. It's unusual for appeals to last any longer than that," Clarke said. "It really depends on the case."

The two convictions bring the total to nine cases processed since the judicial hearings started three weeks ago. Twenty-seven hearings have been scheduled for the next few weeks.

Five students who completed their cases have been placed on probation. They also were sentenced to attend an alternative to violence workshop at the SIUC Wellness Center and to compose term papers or essays on the workshop.

One student has been given a written warning and was referred to the Wellness Center, Davis said. Another student's case was dismissed because of a lack of evidence from the arresting Carbondale Police officer.

A total of 40 letters were sent to students who allegedly violated the Conduct Code by participating in the pre-Halloween riots on the Strip. Letters still have not been answered by four students. Out of those 40, 35 students also face criminal charges for their alleged involvement.

On Oct. 29, SIUC Chancellor Don Beggs called for strict disciplinary measures, up to and including suspension, for students who have been identified as participants in the Oct. 26 and Oct. 27 riots on South Illinois Avenue. SIUC officials have said those students, whether or not they violated any criminal laws, allegedly violated the Student Conduct Code for participating in the riots.

During the riots, more than 700 people crowded on the Strip and hurled bottles and bricks at police and caused more than $10,000 in property damage.

Thirty-five students were arrested that weekend. Those students and five others who have been identified in videotapes taken that weekend by Carbondale Police were sent letters from the University asking them to appear in fact-finding hearings in

Catholics mourn cardinal

By Dave Armstrong
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Cathy Kennerk said that her memories of her friend will always make her feel a great tie with him—even though he died Thursday.

Kennerk, an SIUC junior in business management from Lynwood and a practicing Catholic, is referring to Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, former archbishop of the Archdiocese of Chicago for the Roman Catholic Church.

Kennerk said that she had met Bernardin through her grandfather, who worked in a church within the archdiocese of Cincinnati. She said she always considered him one of the family.

"Our family had a good tie with him," Kennerk said. "I remember singing for him in church in 1994. I was saddened to learn of his death. He was such a graceful man, even under pressure."

According to the Chicago Tribune, Bernardin left his 10-year position as archbishop of Cincinnati when Pope John Paul II named Bernardin the archbishop of the diocese of Chicago, one of the largest dioceses in the United States.

During his time as archbishop, Bernardin faced many pressures.

According to the church, the Chicago diocese had a deficit of $26.8 million.

Bernardin's next ordeal came when he was accused of sexually abusing Steven Cook. The charges were later dropped.

In 1995, Bernardin underwent surgery for pancreatic cancer, which later recurred in his liver.

Only two months after receiving the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest civilian honor, Bernardin died.

Robert Hudecek, an assistant visiting lecturer/light instructor at SIUC and practicing Catholic, said that Bernardin's death will be a tough obstacle for the church.

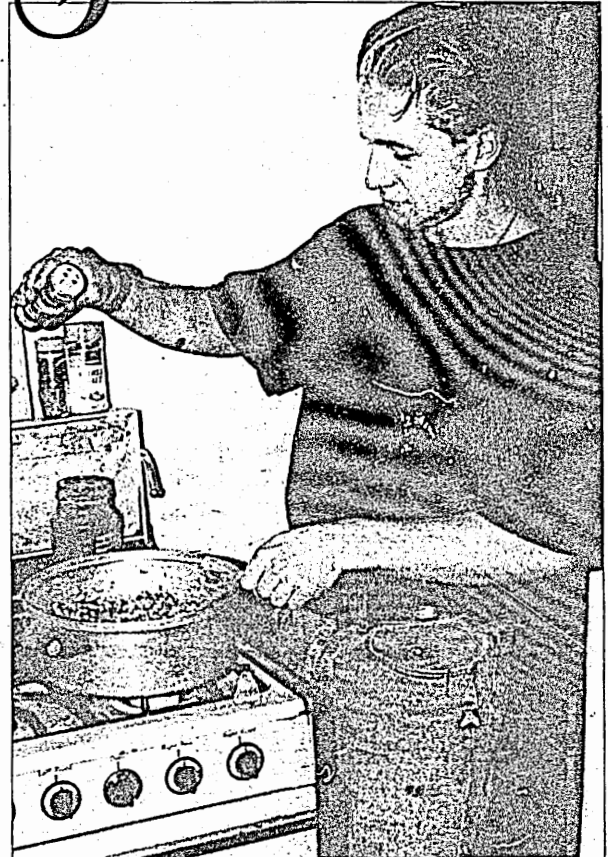

"His death hurt, because there is a lack of good leaders in the church," Hudecek said. "There are a lot of people leaving the Catholic Church because they feel that organized religion constricts individuality. It was a shame to lose someone who brought so many people to the faith."

Bernardin's position as archbishop brought him into contact with many people and sometimes brought him into the Southern Illinois area.

Garth Gillan, a professor of philosophy at SIUC and deacon of the Belleville diocese, said he had a chance meeting with

Students find fast food doesn't cut mustard

By Tracy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Although some college students live off quick-fix meals and fast foods, Paul Clayton said he takes the time to prepare extraordinary meals.

Clayton, a junior in theater from Little Rock, Ark., said he cooks gourmet meals four to five times a week.

"I cook things like butter-garlic shrimp with Alfredo," he said. "It takes me longer than cooking a hamburger, but I find cooking very relaxing."

Many college students have kitchens in their apartments that they rarely use, but some SIUC students take full advantage of kitchens to create their own meals.

Clayton said he learned how to cook while he was living with his parents.

"I try different things, and they always turn out good," he said.

"I usually make up my own recipes," Clayton said because he is a good cook.

He would rather eat his own food than food at a restaurant.

"I get a lot of recipes from the Frugal Gourmet (a cooking show)," he said.

"I take time to cook, and it takes more time than just making a hamburger."

Janet Donoghue, a junior in theater from Alabama, said because she works in the Neighborhood Food Co-op, 102 E. Jackson St., as a baker, cooking is something that is second nature for her.

Officials to present development plans

The City of Carbondale's 20-year development plan is about half done, and residents can learn about it at one of four meetings this week.

The meetings will take place Wednesday at the Thomas School, 1025 N. Wall St., from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., and at the Senior Adult Services, 409 N. Springer St., from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Two more will take place Thursday.

The drafts of land use plans and development policies will be presented at each meeting for citizens' review and suggestions. City staff and the planning consultant will answer questions.

Stipend increases for officers to be considered

The Undergraduate Student Government Senate will consider an increase in stipends for executive officers at its meeting at 7 tonight in Ballroom B of the Student Center.

A proposed amendment would increase the president's stipend from $1,500 to $1,800; the vice president's and chief-of-staff's salaries from $1,300 to $1,600; and the executive assistant's salary from $200 to $800 for each semester they are in office.

The senate also will consider a resolution calling on the University to provide extended late-night study hours and a campus escort service.

Local man charged with theft

By Brett Wilcoxson

Carbondale Police arrested a local man Nov. 11 and charged him with theft by deception, which is a crime one detective says the suspect brought to this area.

Det. Don Barrett said police arrested Michael Eric Walker, 32, of Carbondale, after finding him hiding in the bedroom of a residence in northwest Carbondale.

"He was found hiding underneath the bed," he said.

Barrett said that during the last several weeks, Walker allegedly has approached many local residents, some of which he knew, and has asked for as much as $500 for fabricated emergencies.

"He would allegedly make up false stories about emergencies in order to 'borrow' money from people — basically taking money from them under false circumstances," Barrett said.

Barrett said one of Walker's stories involved needing money for his wife. Police said Walker is not married.

Police said the number of complaints against Walker keeps rising even after his arrest, as does the total amount of money that Walker allegedly borrowed.

"They're still rolling in, but there're about 16 so far," he said. "So far there's about $1,000 to $1,500 total that I'm aware of."

Barrett said Walker's alleged crimes are covered by the theft statute, which states that a person

Provost candidates share visions, philosophies

International relations and retention are the keys to improving the University, two candidates for SIUC vice chancellor of Academic Affairs and provost said as they were interviewed in an open meeting Tuesday.

John S. Jackson III, the dean of College of Liberal Arts, and Thomas Keon, the dean of the College of Business, both participated in the first of the open meetings in the selection of the vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost. There are four candidates including Keon and Jackson with meetings this week.

Both candidates told their audiences, at about 40 people each, their visions for the position if chosen and their administrative philosophies. Then the candidates answered questions from the audience.

Keon responded to questions mainly about budgeting whereas Jackson touched on many issues.

SIUC praised for building food court

THE RUMORS AND HEARSAY ABOUT BUILDING a food court in the Student Center have been thrown around this campus for the past year. Some people thought that it was going to be built during the summer. And some people thought that it was just a silly pipe dream that would never get beyond the drawing board. Even though the idea still is not a reality because of past contract difficulties, the University still is pushing this idea toward a reality with an increase in its budget. While some of the problems are frustrating, it is good to know that the University is looking forward to a new food court.

Contract bids were up for the project at this same time last year, but the University only received two. In the end, the decision was made not to use either bid, and the project was postponed. Now the University is calling for newer bids on the food court with a Dec. 5 deadline. The new food court would give students and faculty wider selections of food types and restaurants to choose from. It is this wider selection of options that makes a food court so appealing from a student's point of view.

Many students eat on campus, choosing not to go home during the middle of the day because of time constraints. While there are several restaurants in the Student Center at the present time, some students still wish for a wider variety of options after eating from the same restaurants for several semesters. And although it may not seem like it from time to time, that is what the University wants to give them.

There still is a ways to go yet, considering the current contract with Mariott Vending does not expire until May, 1997. But as that deadline moves a little closer, people should expect to hear more about how the new food court will be beneficial to everyone. The University, by moving toward this goal, is doing a good job at listening to what people want and is trying to do something about it.

Diversity retreat positive beginning

COMPLAINTS CAN OFTEN BE HEARD ABOUT how this University needs to be more culturally diverse. Some students complain that meeting and associating with people outside of their own races is almost non-existent on this campus and that something should be done about. Well something is being done about it, and everyone involved deserves to be congratulated for it.

A multicultural retreat took place last weekend at Touch of Nature, which has been an annual event for the past six years at SIUC. The goal behind the retreat was to give students a chance to associate and talk with other people from different cultures to gain a better understanding of that culture and, hopefully, each other.

This is the type of program that needs to be offered more often to students. The University should make more culturally diverse programs open to the students as a way of creating a tighter knit community. If students are taught how to understand themselves as well as other cultures, then the communication gaps that exist between other cultures can begin to break down.

Racial tension is approaching radical new levels in the upcoming years. Some people may think there is no solution to this growing problem. But this type of retreat is an excellent beginning to finding a solution. If more people were to experience this program, and if that information was made available to others, then people may just begin to see a change. And perhaps as people of different races begin to talk to one another, sooner or later, they will begin to listen to them.

News media part of problem

I am writing in response to the Nov. 13 editorial "Senate race shows need for campaign finance reform." As the title suggests, the article is a commentary on the recent campaign for the 58th Senatorial District between David Lucchetti and Barb Brown. In effect, the article surmises that since "it is ridiculous to spend more than $1 million on a legislative campaign in this rural district," state legislators "should follow through with their rhetoric and start working to change campaign finance reform immediately."

Increases in campaign finance reform are indeed a serious problem. Somehow, running for office has become little more than a marketing ploy. Campaign managers scramble to create the best soundbites and photo opportunities for their candidate. In the process, issues are sidestepped, and the general public is assaulted by a barrage of political advertisements.

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out a large amount of funding goes into these political ads. I find it curious that the Daily Egyptian editorial board wrote an editorial calling for campaign finance reform. As any reader of the DE will well remember, the paper was brimming with political ads for weeks up until election day. And these ads weren't free. Media outlets such as the DE are direct beneficiaries of campaign funds.

This makes newspapers part of the problem. As such, the editorial board should help in creating solutions instead of simply criticizing the status quo.

Anne Frank article drew emotion

I am writing to respond to the Nov. 15 Daily Egyptian article about "Anne Frank Remembered" and the discussion that followed. The article touched a raw nerve somewhere in my recesses.

I'm an Army veteran who lived in Germany and Holland for about five years and worked with both the Germans and the Dutch. I have worked with Germans who were once members of the Wehrmacht, and I have worked with Dutch who were oppressed by the Nazis. I have twice visited the Anne Frank House in Amsterdam.

When I read the article, my experiences in touring the Anne Frank House slammed to the surface of my memory like a bird hitting a picture window. The oppression and fear of a young child, her family and friends still permeate the rooms and walls of their hiding place. When you touch the Plexiglas-covered walls, you can almost hear the squeal of the tires from the Nazi troop truck that stopped there that day to arrest them.

You see on the faces of your fellow tourists that they feel it, too. Then, when you walk away after the tour, your heart is heavy and you wonder how you could be a member of the same species of human beings that committed the Holocaust. But, you realize you are, then you wonder from whence the tears came.

As I look at my fellow students, most much younger than I, I often wonder if they realize the awesome duty they have inherited — to prevent another Holocaust. Mr. Thiebault is correct when he said another holocaust could happen here. Look at what the U.S. government did with the ethnic Japanese during World War II. Look at how a lot of people felt about Muslims after the Gulf War. Look into yourself; see how far below your civilized surface hatred and violence lie waiting to emerge.

I avoided the movie to avoid the feelings I describe above. I was wrong. We must remember this dark hour of our history to ensure it isn't repeated.

My thanks for bringing this issue to mind.

Craig A. Griffith

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board. Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 350 words. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department. Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Debt morality confusing

The Nobel Prize-winning economist Milton Friedman has observed that every time you take a dollar out of one person's pocket and put it in another's, you make a moral decision. The most striking evidence of our federal, state and local governments' enthusiasm for such moral decisions is reflected in the ever-growing total tax rate, which has increased from a mere 2 percent of average family income in 1948 to more than 25 percent today.

But taxation is only the most obvious means by which various levels of our government redistribute wealth. Social Security, a federal program, purports to provide for retirees' financial security. But it really is just a glorified pyramid scheme in which a shrinking ratio of workers to retirees will soon require that the government seriously cut somebody's promised pension.

Another example of a non-tax redistribution of wealth occurs at the state level, where many state's bankruptcy codes have made walking away from one's debts both easy and painless. While there may be sound moral bases for laws like those that created the financially troubled Social Security Administration or the quick and easy personal bankruptcy, the effects of such laws are often of dubious moral merit.

One frequently proposed method of saving Social Security from financial foundering is to impose a means test on retirees' benefits. Under such a plan, the hard working and thrifty will get little or nothing while the lazy and wasteful will be rewarded abundantly. In addition to destroying citizens' trust in government by changing the rules in the middle of the game, the government's applying a means test for the collection of Social Security benefits will deter personal industry and frugality, traits generally considered to be good for the individual and for society.

Admittedly, there are large income differences among individuals and occupations that could account for savings differences. Some people work very hard for only a subsistence wage.

Others have their savings craved by medical or other emergencies. However, many others are destitute because they won't work or they won't save.

What moral message does our government send when it rewards such characteristics?

The moral message of monetary redistribution on the state governmental level is equally confusing as pertains to individual bankruptcy laws, which also encourage spending and discourage saving. This year, 1.1 million families will file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy, in the process discharging an average debt of $51,000 while their creditors — and, by extension, all consumers — get stuck with the losses. In bankruptcy-friendly states such as Texas and Florida, escaping from years of imprudent spending requires little more than completing a two-page form. Often the debtor emerges from the process with his house, car, job and even some credit cards.

Because there are now so few material deterrents to declaring bankruptcy, the only other disincentive might be the stigma attached to walking away from one's debts.

But any sense of shame seems to have vanished. In fact, there is now a television game show called "Debt," which allows those running a personal deficit to compete against others in similar straits by answering "Jeopardy"-like questions. Contestants are identified by the dollar total of their IOU's. One recent contestant bragged about how she had gone $8,437 into hock with a three-week vacation to the Mexican coast.

Americans' unwillingness to save could be a sign of moral decay or simply a rational decision to buy for the moment, knowing that our laws subsidize extravagant spending with the hard-earned money of others. For a counter-vailing moral message, consider Victorian England, which sent debtors to prison and, despite a hard-earned economy, had far fewer debtor defaults than does our grossly prosperous country.

2 CENTS WORTH Clothes horse rocking

-by alan schnepp

The other day I was complaining about how Michael Jordan's recent collaboration with the perfume industry is a letdown to the spirit of athleticism.

As I paged through an issue of Rolling Stone earlier today, however, I found an even more saddening connection: rock 'n' roll and high fashion. It dawned on me as I came upon a photo of Dave Navarro, the former guitarist of Jane's Addiction who now plays guitar for the testosterone-loaded Kings of white-boy funk, the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

This particular photo showed Navarro in one of those goofy $1,000 costumes that seem to make up the bulk of fashion shows but are never worn outside of a modeling ramp. It could've come from any snooty designer, but Navarro happened to be attending the opening of Gianni Versace's (Ver-SOTCH-ees for those of you who haven't seen "Showgirls") store in New York City.

Part of the caption beneath photo read, "Do we agree that fashion and rock are getting a little too cozy these days?"

Yes.

One thing we should all be able to expect from rock is a sincere bond to youth and honesty. So where the hell does hanging out with jet-set fashion designers come into that equation?

Back when Jane's Addiction released its eponymous album on the independent "Triple X" label and was playing small, dirty clubs, I wonder if Navarro ever aspired to reach the ramp of a fashion show. My guess is no. I'd bet he was more concerned about rocking out and having a place to crash — things more aligned with the true spirit of rock 'n' roll.

But hey, if Navarro wants to hang out with the filthy rich, it's his choice. Maybe when he starts identifying with that crowd better than the kids his music is for, the Chili Peppers can get a gig at Monaco or play the Christmas party for Sak's Fifth Avenue.

They only come out at night: The Strip offers a single stop for food, fun and entertainment

ARTICLE BY
MIKE THURWANGER
 ADVERTORIAL
 REPORTER

Night life on the Strip. Good food and good friends. Pitchers and partying. For some it's too wild, for others it's not wild enough. At the bar, an old-timer complains that it ain't what it used to be. At a table, shoulders hunch over plans as enthusiastic voices discuss ways to make the Strip even better for the future. And, of course, there's the bar entry age....

In spite of the turmoil, bar and restaurant owners and entrepreneurs are all looking for incentives and activities to attract customers, ways to bring them to the Strip, give them their money's worth and have them coming back for more.

When it comes to the bars and clubs on the Strip, the attractions are a mix of old standbys and new attractions.

"The biggest thing the Strip has to offer is a wide variety of restaurants and entertainment concentrated in a single area. You can walk down here or park the car just once and take advantage of a wide selection of eating and drinking establishments," said Sally Carter, owner of Hangar 9.

A wide selection of live and recorded music meets a wide variety of tastes and styles and is available throughout the week. A quick review of weekly advertisements offers country, rock, rap and alternative music. Jazz and acoustic music shows up occasionally at give away cash, the size of the prize depends on the contest and the amount of response we get. Our customers really seem to enjoy them," said Jessica Betts, day manager at Stix.

At most clubs, weekend afternoons and Monday nights are reserved for the testosterone crowd as fans gather to watch the Bears, Bulls, Blackhawks, Blues and anything else that runs, throws or response to it," said Betts.

You can't talk about the bars without some mention of the liquid refreshments they feature. Here, too, variety is key as bars compete with each other on a number of levels.

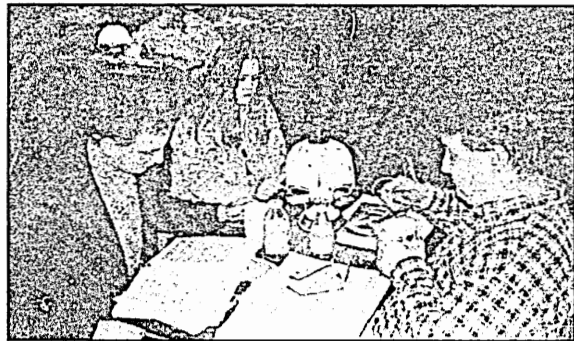

Jodi Melzer, a waitress at Quatro's, said they receive a lot of business on Wednesday nights.

"The only night that we might catch some students walking up town is for 99 cent pitchers," she said.

Exotic drinks with exotic names (some too suggestive for this article) contend for most original as the latest drink trends shift from one blend to another.

Even beer, the old college standby, has gone through some changes and occasionally enters the exotic category. Specialty beers and micro-brews are on tap or behind the counter expanding horizons beyond the traditional mass produced pilsner to the full range of brews from stouts to ales.

Check the label to see the leap from traditional hops brews to nontraditional ingredients featuring recipes based on oats or wheat and introducing honey and fruit flavors. (Whole grains, fruit and honey...sounds like the kinds of things Mom begged you to eat as a kid.) And the labels offer their own special form of entertainment with imaginative graphics and wild names.

the major clubs and even regularly in the local coffee houses that have moved into the neighborhood. DJs add their own style and spin while spinning top hits to keep customers moving to the beat. Add to the mix an occasional dance contest or specialty competition and you've got the makings of an enjoyable evening and an enthusiastic crowd.

"We offer a lot of contests with cash prizes that really attract a lot of people. We'll kicks. But sports aren't just for men anymore as the ladies join the crowd and root for their own favorites. And both sexes meet for head-to-head competition at the billiard and pool tables featured at most clubs along the Strip.

For the more cerebral, Stix has introduced its new NTN Interactive Trivia challenge for customers to play and it's free.

"The interactive trivia contests are really fun. Here at Stix, we've gotten a really great

For the more traditional (or the more financially challenged), drink specials still offer a cheap choice for a cold one after class or a salty margarita with friends. Quarter beers and dollar pitchers are still the staple of the college crowd. Though discounted tequila shots and reduced price call drinks are also available.

And this year, a number of the clubs have joined as sponsors of the Fall Safety Challenge, promoting the sensible use of alcohol and offering options to those who don't want to use it at all. Slix advertises a non-alcoholic drink of the week and other establishments along the strip offer their own boozeless concoctions. All the bars support designated drivers, many offering free soft drinks or special discounts as an inducement.

Coffee houses offer another alternative offering sets, patrons socialize catching up on local gossip and global news or order desserts and biscotti to accompany their drinks.

More substantial fare is available all along the Strip, with restaurants offering the full range of options from fast food meant to be eaten on the run to sit-down meals to be consumed at your leisure.

"We had some one call in from Texas and they wanted of ethnic and regional menus that offer something for everyone at a price that even a student can afford.

"We get a nice family atmosphere during the week-end nights," Melzer said. "There are a lot of regulars that come in. We know what they want and they are happy to see that we remember their faces."

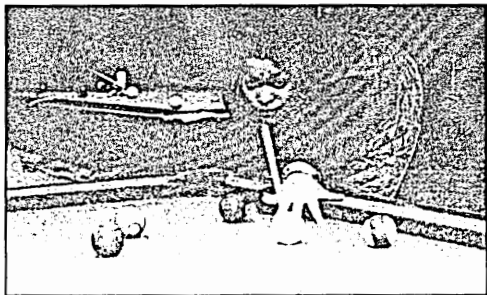

To sweeten the deal, many restaurants advertise regular specials and include coupons to create even more of a bargain. Two-for-one specials and all-you-can-eat buffets round out the enticements.

For those not into the bar scene, the Strip offers a movie after dinner at the Varsity or evening shopping at one of the shops along the Strip.

Places like Rosetta News offer a wide variety of reading material for the night owl in all of us.

Matthew Albert, a senior in finance from Chicago Heights, said drinking at the bar isn't the only option available to students.

"There are plenty of things to do at night around the strip," Albert said. "Sometimes I'll go to dinner and a movie with my girlfriend and then check out some of the new material in at Rosetta on the way home."

Bernardin he will never forget. "I met him at the Shrine of Our Lady of the Snows (in Belleville)," Gillan said. "I was very impressed with his personal manner. Even though he was in such a high position, he was very approachable. He came across as being very personable and humble.

"What was so interesting was that he could take a middle position and help people understand each other. He was such a sensitive and empathetic person."

Some who did not even know Bernardin said they feel like they knew him.

Joe Tillman, a senior in electrical engineering from Assumption, said that while he never met Bernardin, he is going to miss him.

"I know he was a very good man, and he will be solely missed," Tillman said. "He was a very contemporary cardinal. Bernardin opened up a lot of discussions between different factions within Catholics.

"That is what a good shepherd does — tries to balance the two sides. Bernardin had a definite direction he was taking in the church. It will be interesting to see who his successor is."

front of the Student Judicial Affairs Board. Those hearings will determine if a formal hearing is needed, Harvey Welch, vice chancellor for Student Affairs, said.

Joseph Alcorn, a freshman in forestry from Peoria, said he was put on probation for the rest of the semester after his formal hearing last week.

After being charged with reckless conduct by police Oct. 27, Alcorn was charged with violating the Student Conduct Code. He said he maintained his innocence and proved it before the Student Judicial Affairs Board.

Alcorn said he was proven innocent because he was only standing in the middle of the crowd chanting.

"I just told them the truth," Alcorn said. "I wasn't doing anything violent. I was so scared. I did not want to get booted from school."

Alcorn also is required to write a six to eight-page paper on decision making, attend an alternatives to violence seminar and write an essay on the meeting.

"I just told them the truth. I wasn't doing anything violent."

Joseph Alcorn, SIUC freshman

Krista McKean, a freshman in psychology from Normal who was charged with theft during the riots, said her fact-finding hearing last week with the Student Judicial Affairs Board "went fine," and she is scheduled for a formal hearing sometime soon.

She said at the hearings she had to speak for herself even though the board would allow her lawyer to be present at the hearing.

"I had to speak directly to them," McKean said.

McKean said she will use witnesses for her defense.

Elizabeth Hiller, a freshman in political science from Springfield who was charged with theft, had her hearing with the board Monday and said she did not want to talk about her hearing except that she will have a formal hearing later.

commits theft when he knowingly obtains, by deception, control over property of the owner and intends to deprive the owner permanently of the use of that property.

Barrett said he only has encountered one other case similar to this one, and as far as he knows, Walker allegedly created this type of crime in the Carbondale area.

Barrett said Walker, who allegedly has approached residents in various parts of Carbondale, used the borrowed money to feed his drug habit. Barrett said this is not the first time Walker has allegedly committed these types of crimes. He said Walker is on probation for similar crimes.

"Back in the fall of 1995, he did the same thing for the same reason," he said.

Barrett said Walker is not a homeless person. He said that Walker can live with his parents as long as he does not use drugs.

Barrett had advice for people who are approached for money by someone they do not know.

"I would caution residents against giving money to people they don't know," he said. "If it seems there's a real emergency, they can always report the case to police, and they will find help for the person."

"I would caution residents against giving money to people they don't know. If it seems there's a real emergency, they can always report the case to police..."

Don Barrett, Carbondale Police

Police said they believe Walker may have approached residents who have not filed complaints and are asking that anyone who has been approached by Walker under similar circumstances contact the Carbondale Police Department.

Barrett said that as additional reports come in, the state's attorney will be notified for possible prosecution.

Police described Walker as a white male, 5-foot-8-inches tall, about 130 pounds, with blond hair and green eyes.

As of press time Tuesday, a spokeswoman at Jackson County Jail said Walker was still being held in lieu of $1,000 bond.

Candidates

Jackson said his philosophy for how he has run the College of Liberal Arts and how he would run the provosts office would be in the same participatory style.

"We adopted a view that we are there to serve faculty, students, and staff that comes into our door quickly with as much humane treatment, especially for the students, as we can possibly muster," Jackson said.

Keon said he would bring to the position a very open supportive situation with opportunity for input, and much of the day to day activities of the position would be delegated.

"My vision for the institution is one that is strongly entrenched in continuing a quality institution, one that is second in its state, and one that should not in any way erode its research to status," Keon said.

The vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost oversees the mission of the University, tenure a promotion and the academic budget. The provost also plans methods for recruitment and retention.

When questioned about enrollment, Jackson said the University needs to be more competitive when recruiting the best students and to explaining to prospective students why attending SIUC is more advantageous than a community college.

"We are, in fact, a pretty decent scholarly place," Jackson said. "We just don't have that reputation."

Keon said there is a tremendous budget crisis compounded by the fact that enrollment is down.

"I truly believe if we are going to do something about the enrollment problem, we are going to have to spend some money to help that," Keon said. "The longer we do nothing, the greater likelihood that we could lose even more students."

To improve retention, the University needs to work on the attitude that students are important, and they should be treated in a humane and professional fashion, Jackson said.

Also, he said the Southern Illinois community has been taken for granted in recruitment.

Keon said enrollment deterioration has brought about income shortfalls.

"As we had income shortfalls, there was some desire to come up with a method of redistributing the pain," Keon said. "This new budgeting system is one that can be molded in such a way that can be more adaptable and one that will allow some fluctuation as changes occur in the environment."

Jackson said, if chosen, one of his focuses would be to implement an interactive approach to teaching and an interactive classroom.

"I think we've got to do more to get technology, hardware and software that are available out there integrated into the way we teach our students," Jackson said.

The budget is the key to growth, Keon said. And he said he would focus on the budget as he represented Academic Affairs in a system-wide committee for responsibility centered management.

"As part of that committee, I started to read an awful lot of information about responsibility centered management," Keon said.

He said this budgeting system will reward people for specific activities based on how their budgeting system operates.

Each candidate agreed that the international activities of SIUC have set the University apart from others but need to be improved.

Keon said little has been done to take advantage of international students to broaden education for those students and students in the United States.

"I don't see that we have programs that are necessarily enhancing them as individuals or are specifically dedicated to them," Keon said. "I think it's time for this campus to decide what it wants to do in the international arena, and then I think it should move pragmatically at developing an infrastructure that supports movement in that direction."

Each candidate for Provost will have two open meetings.

The meetings continue today at the University Museum at 9:30 a.m. with a meeting for Margaret E. Winters, associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, and another meeting with Jackson at 3:30 p.m.

Thursday, Donald R. Tindall, an SIUC professor of plant biology, will speak at 9:30 a.m., and Winters will speak at 3:30 p.m.

Friday, a meeting will take place for Keon at 9:30 a.m. and for Tindall at 3:30 p.m.

Magic in the cards...

Cerebral game lures gamers, defies stereotypes

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

When a friend showed Ray Gifford how to play Magic, a collectible card game, he said not only did he fall in love with the game, but he also became addicted to it.

"It is like gambling, and you have a winning hand. And then you get stomped," Gifford, a second-year graduate student in theater from Ukiah, Calif., said. "If you just had one or two more cards, you could have won. So you try it again, and that is why the game is so addicting."

More than 25 gamers, such as Gifford, participated in the "The Cacophony of Cards," a card-gaming tournament sponsored by the Strategic Game Society from noon to midnight on Saturday in the Student Center.

Players said the growing number of people attending tournaments such as the one Saturday is indicative of a new trend in gaming.

Gifford said one reason the games are so popular is the fact it has created a culture all of its own. Players have said when Magic was released about five years ago, the world of gaming changed.

Gifford said because the new cards, such as Magic cards, are collectible items, they appeal to a larger audience than other role-playing games like Dungeons and Dragons.

Gifford said that unlike role-playing games which require a lot of time and experience, the only aspect of card games that prevent a player from being able to compete is the price of buying the cards.

"In Magic, you are only limited by what you can buy and trade for," Gifford said.

"Brand new players can compete against people who have played for years."

A starter pack costs $9, and a smaller pack of additional cards is $3.

While the card games are bringing new people into the gaming world, some players believe they are unfairly stereotyped as eccentrics.

Valerie Brugh, a third-year graduate student in scene design from Buchanan, Va., said the card games have been given a bad social reputation because many people perceive the players to be geeks.

She said just because the games take a great deal of thought that does not mean the people who play it are nerds.

She said the critics simply do not understand the games, so they make fun of them.

"I think people are jealous and contemptuous because the game is very cerebral, and they can't grasp it and play to win," Brugh said. "It is like not getting a joke. They just don't get it."

One player, Cindy Gunnin, a part-time journalism instructor at SIUC and the organizer of the Cacophony of Cards, said the stereotypes might be one reason why so few women play the card games.

She said just like in role-playing games and strategic games, there is a still a gender gap, and women may be intimidated by being the only females.

"It is largely a male-dominated activity," Gunnin said. "If women do not know the five or six females in the Strategic Game Society, then they might feel uncomfortable walking into a room full of guys."

Brugh said the mental challenge of battling against the unknown factors of what the opponent is going to do keeps her playing. She said there are so many possibilities that she is addicted to playing.

"The game is incredibly addicting," Brugh said. "I have more than 200 cards, and there are so many different possibilities I can do with the cards."

For players like Gifford, it is that competition and the strategy involved in the games that make it fun. He said he enjoys the imagination the card games provide.

"Typically, the people who like these games are science fiction or fantasy fans," Gifford said. "If you do not like to use your imagination, then you will not like these games."

Preview MFA show features Scottish artist

By Tracy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The masters of fine arts preview show at the University Museum marks the first time for Grant Creegan to show his work to the public.

Creegan, a third-year MFA student in painting from Scotland, said it is important to have experience in gallery showings.

"This is a good chance to see your work in a gallery setting before the MFA show," he said.

The MFA fall preview is a show for third-year MFA candidates in art and design and cinema and photography to exhibit their work and get a preview of what the thesis show will be like, an MFA student said.

The show, which will be partially on display Wednesday, will last until Dec. 13. The show's official opening is 7 p.m. Friday.

Creegan said he worked on his preview project for three weeks and decided to show two pieces.

"One piece is three dimensional, and I also have paintings here," he said.

The three-dimensional piece is called "inventor's logic," in which Creegan said he criticizes the way that science can bring things down to a small scale at the expense of the bigger picture.

Gail Elwell, a graduate student in fibers from New Plymouth, Idaho, said every piece of art in the preview show is the result of two years of work.

"The pieces in the preview show are the personal selection of the artist," she said. "In the future, I want to make art and sell it. It is good experience having this show."

Elwell is showing a piece called "nerves of steel" made with hand-made paper and wire.

Although Patrick Morrissey will not be displaying his art in this year's exhibit, he said helping set up the preview is good experience.

Morrissey, a graduate student in art from Trumble, Conn., said the number of three-dimensional exhibits in this year's show gives him an idea of the diversity of each year's show. There are 30 total exhibits in the show.

"It's about half and half with three-dimensional and two-dimensional work this year," he said. "Working here, I see that every show changes. People who are going through this university are fairly diverse."

Morrissey said working with the preview helps to give him ideas that he can use for his preview show.

"I am a second-year graduate student, so I won't exhibit my work until next year," he said. "Seeing these shows gives me a better understanding of what I need to do."

Board supports 30 percent property tax hike

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Most Carbondale Park District board commissioners agreed Monday night to support a property tax levy increase plan of 29.3 percent for 1997, though all expressed concern about the raised taxes.

Board President Robert McGlenn said the increase, a "one-year spike," is necessary because of the property tax cap Jackson County voters passed Nov. 5.

Park district taxes on a $60,000 home, now at $167.20, would rise to $205.90 in 1997 and fall to $160.81 in 1998.

Commissioner Sandy Bartelsmeyer said she doubted the public would look at the decrease along with the increase.

"I think there will be a general public outcry (about the 1997 increase)," she said.

McGlenn anticipated that many who attend the public hearing on the tax increase proposal, scheduled for Dec. 9, will not understand why property taxes may rise after a cap was passed.

"With the tax cap law in effect, the ceiling on the amount you can borrow is set," he said.

He said the district would be maximizing its debt ceiling, which is set by state law, by borrowing more money now. The district now is authorized to borrow more than it has been borrowing.

In effect, the district must borrow and spend more money next year if it ever wants to borrow that amount again under the new tax cap.

Further, George Whitehead, the district's executive director, said the dollar amount of the district's higher debt ceiling will remain the same even if Carbondale's property values increase in the future. In the past, that debt ceiling rose with rising property values.

"It's forcing us to make a decision we would never make," Whitehead said. "We would never talk about raising our bond authorization to the maximum."

proposed an alternate plan Monday that also would maximize the district's debt ceiling but raise taxes by about 19 percent, he said.

Perkins said his plan is one product of a park district task force assembled to develop guidelines for the district. It would take $109,000 in salary money from the district's $260,000 capital improvements fund surplus.

The salaries now come from five different district funds, Perkins said. By reducing those funds by a total of $109,000, and instead taking that money from the district's surplus, the tax increase could be lessened, he said.

"I don't think [other commissioners] want to move salaries out," Perkins said. "I think they want to leave them where they are. I was on the task force, and I understand why we want the salaries moved out. I want to go with what the task force wanted."

Whitehead said Perkins' plan would result in grave financial difficulty for the park district within three to five years.

SOURCE: Carbondale Park District By Jeff Siemers, Daily Egyptian

"He wants to pay salaries out of soft money," he said. "You don't do that, not if you want to keep people around and keep services maintained."

Whitehead said surplus money may not exist every year. That is why projects and purchases that could be postponed in times of financial difficulty are budgeted in soft money, he said.

Though the board took no official action at Monday's special meeting, McGlenn said commissioners must vote on the tax proposal in December, either at the public hearing or at another special meeting.

McGlenn said next year's extra money will be used to buy more equipment for the park district.

"For this coming year, since we're borrowing extra money, I think [the tax increase] will have a positive impact [on the district]," he said.

The public hearing on the tax plan will be at 7 p.m. Dec. 9 at the city hall/civic center, 200 S. Illinois Ave.

Caffeinated water latest beverage buzz

The Washington Post

It is a paradox in a bottle, now available in stores: caffeinated water.

"It seems like an inspired invention to me, frankly," says Mary Ellen Glynn, a deputy press secretary at the White House. She first sampled a brand of caffeinated water named Water Joe while in San Diego for the second presidential debate, then spent the rest of the campaign vainly searching — through eyes heavy from lack of sleep — for more.

"No calories," Glynn explains. "Good for your teeth. Keeps your heart pumping."

It quickly became the beverage of choice on the manic floor of the Chicago Board of Trade, which bars coffee and soft drinks because they might stain.

Cook

"I bake a lot and cook lots of vegetables and pastas," she said. "When I cook, I like to cook a lot of food so I can have leftovers to warm up later."

Donoghue said one of her biggest challenges as a college student is finding a way to cook healthy foods.

"It is difficult to be busy and eat well," she said. "These days, McDonald's just doesn't cut it."

Donoghue said she cooks in bulk because she has roommates with whom she can share her food.

"I find that if I cook enough food to share with my roommates, when they cook, they will share their food with me," she said.

Although Donoghue shares her culinary skills with her roommates, Clayton said he cooks solely for himself.

"I don't cook for my roommates; I only cook for me," he said.

"Food is a matter of personal taste, plus watching what you're doing and not letting the food get overdone or underdone."

Similar to Clayton, Marcus

Housman, a senior in outdoor recreation from Garden Prairie, said he uses gourmet cooking to help him relax.

"I make things like chicken con-don bleu and homemade pizza and homemade bread," he said.

"It's difficult to find time to cook when you're looking at two hours of preparation time, but I don't like the processed microwave junk."

Housman said finding time to cook a gourmet meal has been difficult lately, but he still tries to cook three to five times a week.

"It's very time consuming," he said.

"You're looking at two hours versus two minutes. I don't just like putting something in the microwave. I don't like processed food."

While Jennifer Cornwell said she does not prepare meals that are complex and take a lot of time, she said she still gets a lot of use out of her kitchen.

Anita Thomas, a junior in education from Chicago, said she would rather avoid spending long hours in the kitchen.

"I don't try new things when I'm cooking," she said. "You don't need a recipe book to make the things I make. My motto is keep it simple."

Notre Dame's Holtz bows out after 11 seasons

The Washington Post

SOUTH BEND, Ind.—Lou Holtz spent part of Tuesday morning walking amid pleasant memories and pending milestones — the dormitory where he has addressed incoming freshmen during each of his 11 years as the football coach at Notre Dame, the stadium that has housed most of his 99 victories at the school, the chapel where his grandson will be baptized Friday.

While overwhelmed, the magnitude of it all wasn't enough to overcome a sensation somewhere inside Holtz that resigning as the coach of the Fighting Irish at the conclusion of the season "is just the right thing to do."

Holtz, who said he thought about leaving as long ago as last February, made his decision official Tuesday during a 90-minute news conference at a local television affiliate whose call letters are W-Notre Dame University. Continually expressing thanks at being allowed to work at a school

"I always thought you coached at Notre Dame and then went straight up to heaven."

*Lou Holtz,
Notre Dame football coach*

that has spawned such legendary coaches as Knute Rockne, Frank Leahy and Ara Parseghian, Holtz said, "I always thought you coached at Notre Dame and then went straight up to heaven."

But the 59 year old added later he probably isn't ready for retirement and might be interested in becoming an NFL head coach. Holtz directed the New York Jets to a 3-10 record in 1976, leaving before the conclusion of the season. The Minnesota Vikings and Atlanta Falcons are said to be interested in Holtz.

"The team I coached in the NFL for eight months wasn't good the year before I got there and they didn't go to the Super Bowl the year after I left," Holtz said. "There's something (about his NFL experience) that bothers me, there's some question in my mind. Do I want to do it? Yes. Do I want to do it bad enough that I would leave Notre Dame for it? No."

Holtz said the decision to leave Notre Dame was entirely his and that there was no single factor that motivated him. He notified Athletic Director Mike Wadsworth and university vice president E. William Beauchamp a few weeks ago. The pair said they gave Holtz a week to reconsider but the coach confirmed his decision Monday afternoon. After that, said Wadsworth, "It wasn't our place to try and make him change his mind."

As for Holtz's replacement, Wadsworth said the school has a list of "fewer than a half-dozen" potential candidates. Whoever is hired, Wadsworth said, "must be aware of and fit into the cultural and values of Notre Dame." Among the names mentioned most prominently are Northwestern Coach Gary Barnett, Louisiana State Coach Gerry DiNardo and Wisconsin Coach Barry Alvarez. Barnett confirmed Tuesday in a statement that he has been contacted about the job.

Wadsworth also said that while the school would prefer to hire someone with head-coaching experience, he wouldn't rule out a proven assistant coach such as Notre Dame defensive coordinator Bob Davie.

Notre Dame (7-2) is ranked 10th nationally entering Saturday's game against Rutgers at Notre Dame Stadium. Holtz, who coached the Fighting Irish to the 1993 national championship, has a career record of 99-29-2 with the school, his victory total second only to Rockne, who won 105 games in 13 seasons before dying in a 1931 plane crash. While Wadsworth said there was no doubt that Holtz belonged alongside his illustrious predecessors, Holtz continually downplayed his importance at the school, saying the furor regarding his plans was "embarrassing."

Holtz said he would have preferred to make his decision at the conclusion of the season but that doing so would have hindered Notre Dame in finding a replacement and being able to compete with other schools in the recruitment of high-school talent.

"When the season's done you can get some sleep, play some golf, rejoin mankind and then get up after a few days and make a decision but you can't do that. ... For continuity's sake I felt the decision had to be made during the season; the worst thing you can do is bring athletes into a school without having a coach there," he said.

Presidents Cup headed overseas in 1998

The Washington Post

The PGA Tour will take the Presidents Cup abroad in 1998, ending, for now, the tournament's relationship with the Robert-Trent Jones Golf Club in Gainesville, Va., the site of the first two match-play competitions in 1994 and this past September.

PGA Commissioner Tim Finchem said Tuesday the event, matching a 12-man team from the United States against an international squad made up of players not eligible for the Ryder Cup, will be held in Australia, South Africa or Japan in the fall of '98.

A final decision will be announced next month, with Australia the leading contender because of the preponderance of players from that country expected to be on the international team, including Greg Norman, the top-ranked player in the world.

The United States has won both competitions, including a stirring victory two months ago at Robert Trent Jones when American Fred Couples made a 40-foot putt in the last match of the day to beat Vijay Singh of Fiji for the deciding point.

All during the week, International Team captain Peter Thomson and many of his players said it was time for the event to go to a rotating schedule every two years, with a competition in the United States followed by one in either Australia, South Africa or Japan.

immediately.

"Marta is a very versatile athlete," she said. "She has some outstanding offensive and defensive skills, and she is also a very effective pitcher."

Meier wrapped up her stellar career with a .450 batting average and 21 RBIs this fall. Brechtelsbauer said Meier, who was considered one of the top defensive catchers and third basemen in the St. Louis area, will be a valuable addition to the Saluki squad.

"Julie will play third base and catch for us," she said. "We'll be losing players at those positions to graduation, so Julie's good bat and defense will fit in nicely."

With senior pitching ace Jamie Schutte graduating this spring, Stremster and Viehhaus will join sophomores Tracy Remspecher and Carisa Winters on the Saluki pitching staff next fall.

Despite the loss of Schutte, Brechtelsbauer said the Salukis' pitching staff will continue improving over the next several years.

"When Jamie (Schutte) graduates, we'll have two freshman and two sophomores on our pitching staff," she said. "We have our best pitching yet to come."

Brechtelsbauer said she plans to add at least two more players before the fall signing period ends this week.

Mets still want Ventura

Newsday

NEW YORK—In the world of "everything is relative," the New York Mets had a good day Tuesday, and did nothing to accomplish it. They signed no one, acquired no one, and none of their players underwent surgery. Best of all, no club in their league signed Albert Belle; not that the Marlins hadn't tried.

So the on-paper difference separating the fourth-place Mets from the third-place Florida Marlins remained unchanged. And now, with Belle's monster contract on the Chicago White Sox payroll, the Mets intend to speak with the Sox about the availability of third baseman Robin Ventura.

After announcing Belle's signing in Chicago, the White Sox said they didn't intend to shed salaries. The Mets will explore the possibility nonetheless.

A deal for Ventura would address the Mets' need for another hitter, improve their defense and deny the Marlins another player they seek. Marlins General Manager Dave Dombrowski said yesterday his club is after a left-handed hitter who would play left-field or third base. While tampering rules prohibited him from saying he has interest in Ventura, other clubs, including the Mets are aware of the Marlins' interest in the 29-year-old third baseman.

The Mets haven't broached the subject of a Ventura trade since last winter, when they considered deals for four third basemen — Ventura, Matt Williams, Dean Palmer and Ed Sprague. After a season in which none of their third basemen distinguished themselves, the Mets see third base as one of three positions where they can accommodate another offensively strong player.

Ventura, a three-time Gold Glove winner, batted .287 with 96 runs, 105 RBI and 34 home runs in 586 at-bats and 158 games with the Sox last season. Batting fifth, behind Frank Thomas and Harold Baines and in front of Danny Tartabull, Ventura established career highs in runs, RBI, home runs, slugging percentage (.520) and games.

Salukis need to find way to increase dwindling attendance

Saturday I had the luck of watching two sporting events.

I saw the Saluki football game in person, and I watched the World Wrestling Federation matches on television. The biggest difference between the two events was the attendance.

I actually could count the students at the football game — in fact I did. There were about 250 students at the football game, not including the actual players and assistants — they would have doubled my attendance figures.

Sure, the football game was about as meaningful as a Jets vs. Saints battle at the end of an NFL season, but even it means more than any wrestling match in history.

So why was the WWF stadium filled to capacity, and McAndrew Stadium was as empty as a pair of pants at a nudist colony?

Maybe it is the beer factor. Fans can drink beer at McAndrew, but only in the parking lot at the pre-game tailgate party. Judging from the capacity crowd at the WWF event and the non-existent crowd at the football game, maybe beer could have made a difference.

The only alcohol in McAndrew is unsanctioned and smuggled through the gates in botas. But nobody puts beer in a bota. They are made for holding wine. Or better yet, some sort of flammable homemade whiskey.

Beer has to be a big seller at those WWF events. At least I pray to the Lord above every night that the people at those events are bombed out of their skulls. If they are not, the world is in a bleak state.

But any time the camera man has his choice of which drunken fan, yelling incoherent comments about nothing in particular—i.e. wrestling, to put on TV, you have a popular event.

We did not have a popular event at McAndrew Saturday. The camera men at the football game would have been lucky to capture a fan yelling, period.

But some fans do not drink. And they need to be lured into attending events through crafty marketing schemes.

The Salukis have tried to have a few pep rallies, but I don't think they have been popular since the Big Band era back in the '30s and '40s. We need to follow the lead of successful sports events, such as the WWF.

I remember when they used to sell little thumb wrestlers that looked like actual wrestlers. I had the little Bob Backlund, Hulk Hogan and George "the animal" Steele, complete with back hair. I also played the WWF video game. Hours of thumb wrestling and mastering the pile driver on the video game inspired me to see the WWF hoopla in person.

I am not saying that little thumb wrestlers that look like Coe Bonner or Damon Jones would inspire fans to flock to McAndrew. Hell, I don't even know if a Sega Shawn Watson Gateway Conference college football game could bring a capacity crowd to an SIUC football game. But I do not think it would hurt.

Some people say that a winning record is the key to bringing the fans.

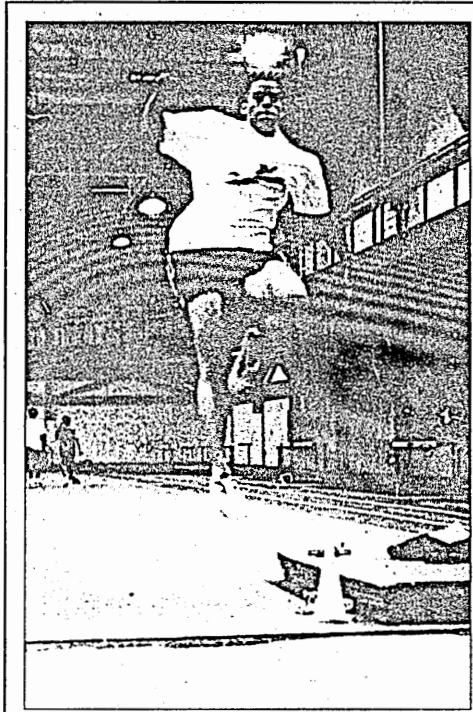

I have to say that I do not agree with that theory. The WWF does not keep records. How can they, when a metal folding chair to the back of the head is the usual outcome of any given match? Who wins? The guy that got hit? Or the guy who did the hitting? It doesn't matter because they don't keep records.

Football season is over, but Saluki fans have another chance to show some support.

The first home game for the Saluki women's basketball team is this Saturday, and the men play their first home game on Nov. 30. I have not seen any Shane Hawkins or Kasia McClendon thumb wrestlers lining the shelves of the toy stores. Sega has not started the production of a Rich Herin or Cindy Scott Jam Session video game. And the last I heard, there are no plans to sell beer at the games.

But hopefully, SIUC Arena will look a little more full than McAndrew did on Saturday. And maybe the fans, i.e. YOU, will make a little more noise in support of the home teams. Or the away teams.

Just show up.

Softball team acquires three St. Louis natives

By Ryan Keith
Daily Egyptian Reporter

After signing two pitchers to national letters-of-intent last season, the softball Salukis added two more hurlers and an infielder to form the nucleus of their spring squad.

The Salukis received national letters-of-intent from St. Louis natives Erin Stremsterfer, from Parkway South High School, and Marta Viehhaus and Julie Meier from Marquette High School. Saluki Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer announced Thursday.

Recruiting players from the St. Louis area against teams like St. Louis University, Bradley University and the University of Missouri-Columbia has proved to be a difficult task in the past, Brechtelsbauer said.

"We've been really successful up there lately," she said.

"We've spent more time up there over the past two years, and we've got an excellent (recruiting) class."

Stremsterfer and Viehhaus will both pitch and play outfield for the Salukis, while Meier will catch and play third base, Brechtelsbauer said.

Stremsterfer, who earned St. Louis Metro and Suburban South Player-of-the-Year honors her junior and senior seasons, compiled a 46-12 record with a 0.57 earned-run average along with 418 strikeouts in 368 innings.

Stremsterfer's offensive prowess also is impressive. She totaled a .450 career batting average with 11 home runs, 43 stolen bases and 81 runs scored during her four-year career.

Brechtelsbauer said Stremsterfer provides the Salukis with a multi-dimensional player.

"Erin can do it all," she said. "We wanted her mainly for our pitching staff, but she also has great offensive output. She has a good bat, and she'll be a bonus to us."

Kerri Blaylock, Saluki pitching coach, said adding Stremsterfer to the squad is a big boost for the program.

"She is a great addition to the team," Blaylock said. "She is a hard thrower with excellent movement on her pitches. We are very excited to have her here."

Teammates Viehhaus and Meier earned all-conference, all-district and all-metro honors at Marquette during their four-year careers.

Viehhaus, who finished her career with seven school records, posted a 17-3 record and a 0.56 ERA while batting .392 with six home runs in only 79 at-bats this fall.

Brechtelsbauer said Viehhaus is similar to Stremsterfer as both an offensive and defensive threat.

"Marta (Viehhaus) is the same kind of player as Erin (Stremsterfer)," she said. "We're mainly looking at her to play the outfield, especially center field. But she is a talented pitcher as well."

Blaylock said Viehhaus is an excellent addition who can pitch and play centerfield for the Salukis

Jones ready for pro play

By Michael DeFord
DE Sports Editor

His Dawg days may be over, but Damon Jones' future in the NFL is just beginning.

With yet another NFL scout in the stands, Jones closed out his two-year Saluki career Saturday against Southeast Missouri State University and is likely bound for the professional arena.

Jones acknowledged the fact that his SIUC days are done, and said it's time to start his football career anew.

"Now that my (college) career is over with, it's time to sit down and get ready for that NFL stuff," Jones said.

Jones leaves SIUC with 99 receptions and 1,542 career-receiving yards, which ranks him third on SIUC's all-time list behind Justin Roebuck's 1,809 and Billy Swain's 1,629.

Though Jones' 431 yards gained this season are somewhat lower than last season's 597 yards, Saluki Coach Shawn Watson said Jones has given the scouts a lot more than receptions to look at.

"He had about the type of year I thought he would," Watson said. "He was a dominating run blocker, and he showed every NFL scout that came through here and saw him that he can be a dominating player."

"He was very consistent in his run blocking, which is why he will be highly sought after player in the draft."

Jones has attracted scouts from the San Francisco 49ers, the New York Giants and the Detroit Lions' organizations since the season began. And he did so right up until its end.

In fact, the Lions sent three scouts to look at Jones at various times throughout the year, their latest scout being former Saluki standout Rick Spielman.

Spielman, who was the Salukis' defensive leader with 105 tackles during the 1985 season, witnessed Jones end his Saluki career Saturday and said the tight end has a great future ahead of him.

"He is very physical and can block very well," he said. "He has a lot of physical ability. He is a good player and has what scouts are looking for."

Jones had 32 receptions and two touchdowns this season, including one for 80 yards. His 431 receiving yards were second to wide receiver Reggie Fowler's 677.

"He has proven that when he gets his hands on a football, he can make some things happen," Watson said. "I think one place he was much more consistent was catches. I think he only had three drops throughout the entire year."

About the only strike against Jones right now is a lack of consistency, Spielman said.

"He needs to play hard on every down," Spielman said. "He needs to mature a little bit, and then he will be just fine."

With the April draft fast approaching, Jones said he will not be wasting any time getting ready for it.

After the college football season closes, Jones will make an appearance in the annual Senior Bowl, which consists of the nation's top senior players and pro prospects.

Jones will also attend several NFL combines before the draft. Combines are a series of workouts the NFL has for its pro-prospects.

"I'm going to start working out and getting ready for the Senior Bowl and represent SIUC," Jones said. "I'm going to try and do the best I can at the combine so I can get drafted as high as I can."

No doubt Jones' career, as well as his life, will take a dramatic turn in April. But Jones said that turn is one for the better.

"My life is going to start all over," he said. "I'm going to be the rookie from now on. I've got to go out and hit the weight room, get faster, then we will see what happens in April."

Jones hopes to begin his new career on a good note by getting drafted as high as the first round.

"They got me at the No. 1 or 2 tight end in the country, and I'm going to try and stay there and get into the first round," he said. "It's going to be real big to go to the Senior Bowl and perform well because it is a nationally televised game. That is big for me."

Given how sought after Jones has been, Spielman was unwilling to say exactly how high in the draft Jones will go. But he did say no matter what happens, Jones is a prime NFL candidate.

"Jones should be a solid draft pick because he has everything a scout is looking for," he said.

Rison sent packing for not producing

The Jacksonville Jaguars have sent four time Pro-Bowler Andre Rison on his way. Rison, who was third among Jacksonville receivers with 34 receptions for 458 yards, signed with the Jaguars in July but never produced the numbers expected of him. Rison was recently picked up by the Green Bay Packers.
